In the city there was comparatively little damage done, but along the coast, from Halifax to Wilmington, N. C., the tornado played sad havoc with the incoming and outgoing shipping. At Long Branch four vessels were driven on shore, and a fifth foundered a short distance from it; while at Coney Island the chief damage by the storm was at Manhattan Beach and east of it. For miles the beach on the Long Branch shore was strewn with cord-wood, ships' spars and pieces of timber of all descriptions. The track of the New Jersey Southern Railway was washed away in several places. The gale unroofed hotels and private residences, shattered scores of windows, and littered Ocean Avenue with bathing-houses and the summer-houses along the bluff, which were the favorite resort of young people in the Summer season. The iron pier in front of the Ocean House withstood the violence of what is regarded as the fiercest gale remembered on this coast.

The first disaster reported was that of the brig Castalia, bound from Galveston, in command of Captain Elmer, to New York, which went ashore near Life-saving Station No. 3, six miles north of Long Branch. The captain, crew of ten men, and a lady passenger were landed safely, by means of the breeches buoy, by the crew of Life-saving Station No. 3, Captain West.

Another vessel, the schooner E. C. Babcock, Captain Treen, from Virginia, loaded with pine wood, consigned to New York, went ashore near Station No. 4, at about the same time as the Castalia. The captain, his wife and two children, and four seamen, all that were on board, were safely landed on the beach by the crew of Life-saving Station No. 4, by means of the breeches buoy. Captain Treen says that within ten minutes after the vessel struck, the crew of Life-saving Station No. 4 took off his wife, two children and himself. Blackman, the mate of the Ewan C. Babcock, says that eight other vessels left the Delaware Capes at the same time with the Babcock. All but one of them, a schooner, gradually dropped astern. He saw her about ten minutes before the Babcock struck, and he thinks that she is the vessel that foundered off the shore.

The two-masted schooner Lightfoot struck the beach, in front of the Atlantic Hotel, about 7:30 o'clock, and hoisted a signal of distress; but as no help came from the shore, all hands lashed themselves to the rigging. At 9 o'clock the crew of Life-saving Station No. 5 signaled that they were on hand by the firing of a gun. In less than ten minutes Captain Green, of Station No. 5, fired a line across the schooner from a mortar. A breeches buoy was hastily rigged, and the captain and crew of five men were soon safely landed on the shore.

At 11 o'clock a messenger from Station No. 4 brought word to Station No. 3 that a Spanish brig, the Augustine, had come ashore at Monmouth Beach, not more than three-quarters of a mile south of the stranded schooner Babcock. Captain Valentine and the crew of Station No. 3 went to the rescue. The wood comprising the cargo of the Babcock was floating so thickly in the surf that great difficulty was experienced in getting the large lines to the brig. The sailors could not understand the signals of the life-saving crew, and when the brig was within fifty yards of the beach, they abandoned the life-lines and five of them jumped overboard. They were pulled out of the surf half-drowned and taken to Station No. 3 and cared for. The tide went out and two more of the crew were rescued. Two of the life-saving crew picked their way over the driftwood, which was piled high between the vessel and the shore, and climbed aboard. They found Captain Antonio lying on the floor of the cabin with a bullet wound in his head. When it was evident that the brig was coming ashore, the captain called all his men on deck and told them that he had no desire to live longer; he had an interest in the brig, and her loss meant his ruin. He then ran down into the cabin, followed by the cook, and, placing a pistol to his right ear, fired.

As before stated, the chief damage of the storm at Coney Island was at Manhattan Beach and east of it. The hotel building escaped, but the grounds all around it were submerged. One corner of the large bathing pavilion was undermined so that the building settled badly, while the smaller bathing-houses were destroyed right and left. The waves carried away a large portion of the costly wooden bulkhead

NEW YORK CITY.—SCENE OF THE DEATH OF "LADY OGDEN," IN ACT 2D OF THE "FALSE FRIEND," NOW BEING PERFORMED AT THE UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

Digitized by Google

extending over a mile east of the Manhattan Beach Hotel, and when the bulkhead had disappeared, the Marine Railway was very soon washed out. Most of the destruction at Brighton Beach was among the bathing-houses, many of which were broken up and strewn along the beach. The waves reached the Concourse and flooded it in several places, but did it no material harm. Large portions of the beach were washed out all along the ocean front.

The greatest interest was felt in the various piers jutting out into the ocean, and particularly the new iron pier near the Sea Beach Palace. The great structure of iron was put to a terrible strain, and more than once it seemed to be on the point of toppling over into the water. The waves dashed against it with fearful force, and when the gale was at its height, the Coney Island residents assert, blinding sheets of water swept clear over the top of the pier buildings. Most of the heavy wooden "fenders" placed at the outer end of the structure for steamboats to strike against were wrenched off, the main water-pipe was broken, and some small out-buildings on one corner of the pier were swept overboard and destroyed, but the storm could not beat down the pier itself. Engeman's old wooden pier, east of the iron pier, and the Plymouth Rock's new wooden pier on the west, were less fortunate than their iron neighbor. Both were badly wrecked. From 75 to 100 feet of the seaward end of Engeman's pier was torn off and scattered about by the waves.

HIS VERY LAST CHANCE.

IT was pink day-dawn in September as a man emerged from one of the charming villas, by proud humility termed cottages, that peep coquettishly from behind ruches of evergreens bordering the avenue leading to the ocean drive at Newport.

Oh, how white that man's face looked, and blanched and drawn! Round his eyes lay deep, dark caverns, and in his eyes a strange restless light. He turned up the collar of his coat as he flung open the lych gate, and shivered as he turned in the direction of the sea.

Henry Lamerte had attended a hop at the Ocean House. Bessie Bedouin was there, of course; she came with the Philomels, her father being only a dinner man, and had had three hours of earthly paradise. For the piazza is spacious, and full of cunning corners, where the garish gaslight does not penetrate, and the gentle Luna peeps timidly round the corner. Little did Lamerte as he handed the happy girl into the Philomel carriage think!

On the steps of the Ocean House Lamerte encountered half a dozen fashionable young men of his acquaintance, chatting, smoking, and very wide-awake as is the wont of the young swelldom of the nineteenth century towards the small hours.

"Come over to Lentrapp's, old man!" exclaimed one of them.

"Who is Lentrapp?" asked Lamerte.

"Don't know Lentrapp's? Why, when did you arrive?"

"I got over from New York this morning."

"That accounts for it. I'll tell you who Lentrapp is. He's English, was in some cavalry regiment, has no end of money, has taken Tampico's cottage for the season; tools a four-in-hand, rides the best pony, and is the best man at polo: keeps open house, with brandy-and-soda all over the place. That," slapping Lamerte violently between the shoulders, "that's who Tony Lentrapp is, so come along."

"But, I am not acquainted with——"

"Bah! you are of our set. I'll pass your check."

Henry Lamerte was easily persuaded, and a rope of sand led him to the Tampico villa. Lentrapp proved a delightful host—champagne, dashed with London stout, became the order of the evening, and when a game of baccarat was laughingly proposed, the idea was vociferously voted just the thing to spin off a couple of hours. These hours saw Henry Lamerte cleaned out of every dollar he possessed in the world, and with a debt of honor of $10,000. He had not enough of money to pay his board bill, and as to his prospects, they were simply nil. He was an army officer, with an allowance of a thousand dollars a year over and above his pay. It went hard with his mother, the widow of General Lamerte, to take off even this annual sum from her limited means. He had no relations to appeal to in this terrible emergency. The insane desire to show off in company with richer men than himself had led him to play. He played, and lost—lost everything.

Of course, Henry Lamerte, as he fiercely strode towards the melancholy ocean, now thought of suicide. When a man has made this world too hot to hold him, he dreams naturally enough of a cool snug bed underground where he is not likely to be dunned, nor to wince under the unendurable fire of the sneers of men who accuse him of having cheated them. It was a question for Lamerte between death and dishonor. He had but two roads to travel. If he did not pay $10,000 before a certain few hours, he would be posted as a defaulter! He would have to throw up his profession and leave the country; and as he gazed at the distant smoke of an ocean steamer, like a gray feather against the pink sky, he mused with poignant bitterness on the hideous possibility of being obliged to follow in its wake with the brand of shame upon his forehead, provided he elected to relinquish that other alternative.

Henry Lamerte rested himself upon a rock down by the edge of the sea, and lit a cigar. "My last," he laughed, with a dry, grating laugh that, heaven help him, had little of the ring of merriment in it. "Poor mother, poor Bessie! It is lucky that I did not engage myself to her. She will be cruelly stricken when she comes to learn that I have been found dead in my room at the hotel, a pistol in my right hand. Perhaps not; she's going to the hop at Stilmontes' on Friday night; she'll go and dance with that fellow Hipsley, and perhaps say, 'Well, Mr. Lamerte was a nice fellow, and—this is our waltz, is it not?' No," and he flung away his cigar, it tasted so bitter. "She'll never do that; she's good and true."

Dawn was spreading now, and there were some saffron tints on the horizon line heralding the sun's coming. Lamerte, his hands plunged deep in his pockets, sat on the rock in a dreamy way like a man who has nothing to do, waiting for the sun to rise; as it emerged slowly from its bath it covered all the water with gold, and the sky above it became one vast vault of speckless blue. "Now," sighed Henry Lamerte, springing to his feet.

"A fine morning, sir," piped a reedy voice close beside him; then came a fit of coughing, and then blood stained the lips of an emaciated little man, who was trying to inhale a little sustenance into his lungs from the tonic of the morning.

This dying man—for he was only battling against terrible odds, and fighting fiercely to the last—was one of Boston's wealthiest citizens, Mr. Powell Ingalls, of weakly constitution. He had overdone himself by fast living in Europe, for which he had never felt any real inclination. And now that he knew he was doomed to die, he looked back upon his past life as rather a dismal joke from the beginning to the end.

"A very fine morning," he repeated.

"Very," was Lamerte's laconic reply.

"Will you kindly assist me to the seat you have just vacated?"

"With pleasure. You seem to be an invalid," said Lamerte, as he lifted—oh! he was physically a splendid form, and could have raised 250 pounds with ease—Powell Ingalls on to the rock.

"Invalid! I'm past that; I am fairly en route for the next world at express pace. Can I carry a message for you?" with a sickly attempt at a smile.

"I shall, perhaps, be there before you," replied Lamerte, in a tone which the other mistook for banter, for a laugh had accompanied the words.

Dying men are never to be reminded of the freaks of fate by which the strong are often struck down before the weak, and if Lamerte had to win over the dying Bostonian, he could not have proceeded more adroitly.

"You might, indeed," chuckled Ingalls. "A man twice your fighting power, who stopped at the Aquidneck House, Major Morton, and who wanted me, half-joke, whole-earnest, to remember him in my will, dropped dead beside me in the garden on Monday last. It's all a toss-up, all depends on how the cubes are shaken in the dice-box of destiny, and this is how we ought to regard the snuffing out of the wick of life. Mon vieux, they call me rich, with everything surrounding me that renders this fiction called life worth having, and yet I snap my fingers at life, and say adieu without so much as a sigh of regret."

Lamerte let him talk, scarcely heeding a word the other had said. Visions of West Point, of the Lovers' Walk, of the Parade, of hazing, of glorious days spent by the Hudson, came dreamily to him, while the hum of Ingalls's voice, mingled with that of the small, noiseless waves as they kissed the beach of soft, white sand at his feet, served to produce a languor that for a moment compelled him to forget the terrible position in which his own folly had so mercilessly placed him.

Suddenly a thought flashed to his heart, causing it to leap. What if this dying man could help him—save him from death and ignominy?

What if by one stroke of his pen he would open a new career for him, full of—great God!—life! life! If this man was rich, was on the edge of the grave, could he feel for a man in the full flush of youth and strength drifting to an untimely death?

Henry Lamerte gazed scrutinizingly into Ingalls's pinched face.

"Skin and bone," exclaimed the invalid; "a death's head. I was fresh and full of blood and handsome, ten, nay five, years ago. I caused young hearts to throb in my time. I was heartless myself. I jilted women for love of the sport. I was run after for the yellow gold that now cannot give me a full-drawn breath. What a farce the whole thing is! Ah!" and here the racking cough assailed him until Lamerte had to hold him on the rock in order to prevent his tumbling off.

"And who may you be?" demanded Ingalls, when the paroxysm had passed. "You have the straight back of the 'gentleman of the army.'"

"I am in the army."

"West Point?"

"Yes."

"What year?"

Lamerte informed him.

"The army is a poor look-out. A man must be either very fast or very slow to make his life of genteel beggary bearable. You are fast; I read it in your eyes. You have not been to bed, and have come out here to rob the sea-breeze of some of its freshness. Am I right?"

"Right and wrong."

"In what am I right?"

"I have not been to bed."

"Dissipating?"

"Yes."

"Cards?"

"Yes."

"Ah! And you lost."

"I did."

"How much?"

"More than I can pay." Then speaking very fast, so as to make retreat impossible, Henry Lamerte told his miserable story: "I have lost ten thousand dollars. Providence may have thrown you in my way, sir. Can you—will you, lend me that sum? I do not know how long it may be before I shall be in a position to repay you, but I swear to discharge my debt some day if I live."

Ingalls stared very hard at the speaker—not surprisedly, not unkindly.

"My position is this," he said, after a pause; "I cannot command a hundred dollars. My death is being discounted by my kinsfolk, and they have kindly taken possession of all my effects. If I wrote you a check they would ask you to return it on the plea that I am not capable of managing my own affairs."

Poor Lamerte saw that his last chance had gone; that life was now no longer to be played for.

"Forgive me for having troubled you," he almost sobbed. "A drowning man will catch at a straw."

As he was turning away, Mr. Ingalls exclaimed:

"You mustn't despair because the cards have gone against you once. A good man faces luck and beats bad luck down. Some give it a mere souffle, some strike with sledge-hammer force. All is not lost until everything is lost." As he said this, however, Ingalls looked at Lamerte and saw that the man's very soul was steeped in despair.

"If I could help you I would, but—— stay!" he hurriedly added, as his eye fell upon a ring he was wearing—a very large black diamond set within a circle of brilliants, a trinket of great price.

"I believe this is worth seven or eight thousand dollars. It was purchased at Tiffany's about four years ago"—drawing it off his finger as he spoke; "it is better that you should have it than some of my loving relations."

"But——" palpitated Lamerte.

"Go to New York with it to-day, and raise as much money on it as you can."

"But I do not like to accept such a loan," gasped Lamerte, who reddened deeply.

"I can't lend you money," said Ingalls, "and I shall soon be past caring for rings, so that you need have no scruples. The ring is mine. Ah! how my cousin, James Edward Alfred Ingalls, will swear when he finds that it's gone."

"This generosity, this——"

"Tush! Lend me your arm. I reside, I mean I try to breathe, in that cottage over there. Just help me to the door and then go and—live."

Lamerte assisted him to the cottage, and, lifting his hat, left him; but his step was rather unsteady as he went, and a mist seemed to have risen out at sea.

* * * * * *

A few days later and Newport was disporting itself as Newport knows so well how to do. The band was playing in the pagoda beneath the trees opposite the Ocean House, and, seated upon a wooden chair, his feet high upon an iron rail, was the invalid Ingalls, still fiercely fighting his ghastly assailant. His worn hand dropped with fatigue on the arm of his chair, where his fingers beat time with the music.

"I wonder," he thought, and this had been an abiding thought for days, "what has become of him? I wonder he didn't write or telegraph. Could he have proved a rascal after all, and have played me with a vamped-up story of wreck and dishonor. I cannot, will not, believe it. His eyes spoke such a tale of misery as no liar could call to his aid, however vivid his lying imagination. Anyhow, I'm glad my grasping cousin James didn't get the ring, and unless I had thrown it into the sea, it must have come to him."

The concert was drawing to an end when an open hack darted up to the gentlemen's entrance of the hotel, and from it sprang Henry Lamerte.

"I saw you," he cried, as he clasped the invalid's trembling hand in both his—"I was driving out to your cottage. It was only when in New York that I remarked I had never asked your name or address, and I found myself cut off from writing to you."

"Have you squared your account?" asked Ingalls.

"Every dollar of it?"

"Then the ring——"

"Here it is again safe and sound. I have brought it back to you."

"Then you had no use for it?"

"It saved me. Let me tell you how—let me tell you all—and—and don't blame"—this in a very humble and contrite voice.

Ingalls smiled as he trifled with the ring.

"I took the train to New York after I left you," said Lamerte, "and went straight to a fellow who knows a lot about jewels. He told me I would get a clear ten thousand loan, as black diamonds were not to be had for love or money, the Sultan having purchased every stone in the market. I raised the money——" Here Lamerte hesitated.

"Go on," said Ingalls.

"I feel horribly ashamed to——"

"You gambled with the proceeds," interrupted the other.

"I did. I said to myself I will make a supreme effort to let my noble, generous friend have back his ring. I felt that I would win, and in one night I won back my losses and five thousand over; but," added Lamerte, "I have sworn by everything I hold most sacred never to touch a card again, and I will keep my oath, so help me God!"

* * * * * *

The sun was setting in a blood-red haze, the ocean drive was thronged with lordly equipages, the light-ship on Brenton's Reef looked like a painted ship on a painted ocean as it swung lazily at its moorings.

"This is where I met him, darling," said Henry Lamerte, to a young and winsome girl, who nestled closely to his side. "This is where I smoked my last cigar. This is where I thought of what you would think when the——"

"Don't, Henry! It makes me shiver to think of all the terrible agony of those horrible hours," and little Bessie Bedouin covered her face with her hands, as if to shut out the ghastly vision conjured up by the words of her lover.

"Poor fellow! A few hours now, and all will be over."

"It is near the time he appointed for us to come to him. Let us cross over to the cottage."

They found Ingalls stretched upon a low couch, his face turned towards the ocean. That blue which would seem to be the very shadow of death was on his face, and cold drops of perspiration stood in beads upon his brow. By a supreme effort he stretched out his emaciated hand towards the girl.

"I am so glad to see you," he whispered—"glad to have a bright, happy face as my last mirror on earth. And you," to Lamerte, "promise me to be good to this bonnie child, and swear, yes, swear," his voice becoming stronger, "never to touch a card again—swear it to me now, here."

"I swear it," said Lamerte, with a great gulp at the throat.

"And you, my dear child"—to Bessie—"I have a little wedding gift for you. Put out your hand," and drawing the black diamond from his finger, he placed it on that of the sobbing girl's. "Never let this ring away from you; for it will always remind Lamerte of his oath, and now good-by."

He turned upon his side, heaved one great sigh, and on that sigh his spirit went forth beyond the great sea.

Henry Lamerte has kept his vow.

THE LIEDERKRANZ MASKED BALL.

THIS brilliant affair came off at the Academy of Music on Thursday night, February 5th; there was a crowd of gay masqueraders; all sorts of characters were represented, and jollity and fun were the order of the night. Many of the toilets were elegant and picturesque, and the decorations, if not very extensive, were in excellent taste and altogether floral. Large silver baskets and urns, filled with red and white flowers, stood on pedestals at all the doorways opening upon the ballroom, and rows of green plants, with here and there a bright flower, were built up against the proscenium-boxes. Just in front of the green curtain which divided the stage from the rest of the ballroom was placed a huge red velvet throne, and from an immense chandelier hung an electric light, giving increased brilliancy to the ever-changing scenes on the floor.

The company began to arrive soon after nine o'clock, and the two orchestras—one of strings and one of brass—filled the time with exquisite music until the commencement of the fun. The ball was opened on the entrance of the Prince and Princess—understood to be Mr. O. O. Heman and Miss Emeline Faber. The Prince wore a magnificent red velvet cloak and a splendid black mustache. Following the Prince and Princess were two hundred or more persons in various picturesque toilets. The Floor Committee, consisting of sixteen gentlemen and ladies, came last.

After the Prince and Princess were seated on the throne, the Fackel polonaise began, and was exceedingly pretty and effective. At its conclusion the Princess was conducted by the Prince down the length of thirty-two blue-satined young men and women, and, on reaching the end of it, the two started off in a merry waltz, followed by the members of their suite. This was merely the opening or inaugural waltz, for the rising of the curtain, which divides the auditorium from the stage, did not take place until 11 o'clock. As it rises is disclosed a raised platform, with three flights of stairs leading thereto; on each one of these are groups of personages in more or less picturesque costumes. Sweet, plaintive strains of music are discovered by the orchestra in the gallery. This is a double illustration of "Midsummer Night's Dream." Shakespeare's libretto is illustrated in the tableau and Mendelssohn's music by the orchestra. The stairs on the right contain a tableau from "Faust," to do justice to which the orchestra turns from Mendelssohn to Gounod. At the back of the raised platform are five distinct stages, each with a curtain of its own. The music turns from Gounod to Meyerbeer. One of the five curtains rises, and a truly startling scene from the opera of "L'Africaine" is exposed to the admiring audience. Thereafter three of the remaining curtains rise to appropriate music, and illustrate the operatic works of other well-known composers. The middle curtain is still down, and curiosity is excited as to what it conceals. The music becomes sprightly, and at length the curtain slowly ascends, disclosing first a pedestal, then a pair of small slippered feet, then a pair of long black legs, then a quantity of white shirt front, and then the well-known features of Jacques Offenbach. He has a fiddle in one hand and a bow in the other. He stands out boldly against the sky of bright blue, upon which is written "Carnival." He is received with shouts, smiles, bows, he waves his fiddle, and the ball commences in earnest. Dancing was kept up until early morning, many, no doubt, regretting when the finale of the order of dancing was reached.

An Instructive Game.

M. E. LEVASSEUR, a French geographer, has invented an amusing and instructive geographical game, to which he gives the name of "Tour du Monde." It is played on a large terrestrial globe divided into 232 spherical rectangles, each of which has a number, corresponding to a number on a list, indicating gains or losses, in accordance with the nature of the rectangle to which it belongs. The game is played with eighteen flags corresponding to the principal States of the world, from China, the most populous, down to Holland, the least populous. A brass slip, from pole to pole, contains eighteen holes, into which the flags are successively placed by the players at each revolution, commencing at the south pole, and moving northwards. The gains and losses correspond with the nature of the facts indicated in the space above which a flag may stand when the globe stops revolving. Thus London counts thirty, Paris twenty, and so on, according to population. A coal-mine, a Manchester cotton factory, a grain centre, all count for gains; while meeting a Zulu or a lion in Africa, a storm in the Atlantic or Pacific, a crocodile in the Nile, being caught in the Polar ice, etc., count for losses. Thus it will be seen, the new game is calculated to afford considerable excitement as well as instruction.

An Exciting Novel in a Few Words.

AN altogether jovial fellow was the Chevalier de Forges, a rich French noble, Louis XV.'s favorite valet, who had conferred upon himself the titles of "Marquis of the Earthly Paradise, Viscount of the Infernal Regions and Lord of all the Devils," and wanted to have the law of a priest who would not allow him to sign these titles at length on a parish register as witness to a baptism. When the City of Paris laid out the plans for a new market he refused to sell one of his houses, the site of which was needed, went to law with the city, beat it and compelled a modification of the plans, celebrating his victory by having painted on the wall of the contested building a life-sized picture of a sheep shaving a wolf. He went to do his own marketing in his "thousand-crown coat," so called because he had saved 1,000 crowns' worth of other coats by wearing it. Commissioned by a bashful friend to go and ask the hand of a young lady in marriage, finding her pretty and pleasant, he married her himself. Having married her, he naturally fell in love with and abducted a beautiful girl, a young Jewess. Her parents went in pursuit of her, and prosecuted the search with such keenness that it was necessary to take heroic measures. Accordingly M. de Forges went to the Archbishop of Paris and represented that a certain ecclesiastic had been laboring with a young Hebrew woman, and had well-nigh persuaded her to turn from the errors of Judaism and embrace the Christian faith—unhappily her parents were endeavoring to persecute her into steadfastness in the tenets of their religion, and so it would be proper and laudable to furnish her with an asylum. The unsuspecting archbishop thereon found her a refuge in a convent, and thus the pursuers were completely baffled. Only for a time, however, because they found out the chevalier and worried him so excessively, with the assistance of his wife, that he agreed to abandon the girl to them. The girl, furious with him and as furious with her parents, refused to give him back a large sum of money he had intrusted to her keeping, abjured the Hebrew faith and took the vail. Only one thing was now possible to complete this complicated drama—the chevalier had given his ecclesiastical friend, the pretended converter of the girl, a benefice for his assistance in hamboozling the archbishop. Now the honest abbé came upon the scene and eloped with the new-made nun!

Digitized by Google

The Coming Russian Fetes.

THE present year is to be celebrated in Russia as completing the first twenty-five years of the Czar's reign, and the industrial exhibition which is to be held at Moscow in the coming May will doubtless be as popular with the Russians as even that of 1872. But such an anniversary brings with it an ominous suggestion of the grim old proverb, "Evil awaits the Czar of twenty-five years," which Russian history has so strangely verified. Ivan the Terrible's first twenty-five years were brilliantly successful, but after 1566 came the loss of all his Western conquests, the successive deaths of three wives, the murder of his son and heir, and the fastening of a frightful disease upon himself. Peter the Great's Turkish reverses, and the deplorable death of his son Alexis, came after the twenty-fifth year of his reign. The twenty-sixth of Alexander I. a ravaged St. Petersburg with a fearful inundation, while a formidable plot against himself and his own death came a year later. In the twenty-sixth year of Nicholas began the intrigues which led to the Crimean War; and the present Czar, now just about to pass the perilous limit, sees his wife dying by inches, his throne undermined by rebellion, and a foreign war looming on the horizon.

A Brilliant Diamond Robber.

ONE of the cleverest diamond robberies of modern times is reported in a tone of odd complacency by the leading journals of St. Petersburg. About a fortnight ago a handsome equipage drew up at the door of the first jeweler in the Russian capital. Alighting from the carriage, an elegantly-dressed and remarkably pretty young lady entered the shop and requested that some parures of brilliants might be shown to her. Several costly sets were forthwith submitted for inspection, and after some hesitation she selected a rivière and pendants valued at 10,000 roubles, and, stating that she was the wife of an eminent alienist, whose name is a household word in St. Petersburg, requested the proprietor of the establishment to accompany her home with the jewels, in order to settle finally with her husband about their price. The jeweler packed up his diamonds and got into the carriage with his fair customer. Presently they arrived at a large house, and were received at the porte cochère by a Suisse in splendid livery, who conducted them up a brilliantly-lighted staircase into a richly-furnished drawing-room, in which the lady begged her companion to take a seat, and, jewel-case in hand, proceeded to summon "her husband." Entering the doctor's consultation-room in an apparent state of uncontrollable agitation, she informed the latter that she had brought her unfortunate spouse to visit him, in the hope that he would undertake to cure him of the strange monomania under which he had labored for some time past. "My afflicted husband," she said, "is a wealthy landed proprietor from A——, in the government of Minsk; he is quiet and harmless, but has diamonds on the brain. He will talk of nothing else, poor fellow! Will you see him? I have left him in your drawing-room, and am much too nervous to be present while you diagnose his case. Might I, therefore, ask you to accompany me to my carriage before you go to him? It will be such a relief to me to leave him in your care." Her ingenious device was crowned with complete success. She drove off with the diamonds; an interview between the doctor and the jeweler fully confirmed her statement with respect to the latter's alleged monomania, and resulted in his being placed under bodily restraint, from which he was only rescued three days later by one of his partners, who succeeded, with the assistance of the police, in tracking him to Dr. Y——'s renowned private lunatic asylum. No trace has yet been discovered of the gifted lady who accomplished this, in every sense of the word, "brilliant" coup.

How the Boers Measured Land.

IT is not to be imagined that these farms of the Boers are in any way comparable to what we understand in the ordinary application of the term. They are simply huge tracts of country, containing 6,000 acres or more, with nothing but a small beacon of piled-up stones at certain points to mark the line of boundary. In proportion to the amount of land held by each proprietor there is a very small piece under cultivation—at the most ten or twenty acres, and, in the majority of cases, two or three, or none at all. The original method of measuring of these "runs" was somewhat primitive. Starting from the last-made beacon, a Boer would ride in a straight line for half an hour as fast as his horse could carry him, then halt, erect a beacon, and again ride away for half an hour, in a direction at right angles to his first ride, and erect another. The rectangle made by these two lines of ride would contain his farm, so that by this method the Boer who had the fleetest horse obtained the largest tract of land. Within the last few years science, however, has been brought to bear on the subject, and farms are now measured by the theodolite. The introduction of this instrument has caused a great many disputes: farms, the boundaries of which were believed to be perfectly defined, were discovered to overlap one another to a serious extent, and as this is the case all through the country, the land-surveyors are having a pretty good time of it.

Competition in the China Trade.

IN a letter to the Marquis of Salisbury, the Directors of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce have indignantly protested against certain statements in the report of Mr. C. T. Gardner, the English Consul at Chefoo. Mr. Gardner stated that the Manchester merchants, in consequence of heavily sizing their textiles, and attempting to sell glue as cloth, have gained a bad name for their fabrics among the Chinese, causing a decrease in their trade in favor of American manufacturers. Of these allegations the Directors "beg entirely to deny the truth." To the heavy sizing they plead guilty, but they seek to justify the practice on the ground that the demand for heavily-sized fabrics originated in China or India, and that the consumer in these countries often prefers the cheap though inferior fabrics, because they best suit his requirements and means. As proof of this, they assert that the cry for these low-priced goods is increasing, and they declare that, except on the heavy sorts of goods, the attempted competition of America has signally failed. A copy of the correspondence has been sent to Mr. Gardner, who will have the opportunity of stating on what authority he relied. Meanwhile, however, it may be pointed out that others besides Mr. Gardner have made statements similar to those complained of. In the last volume of reports upon the trade of China every one of the English Consuls who commented upon the condition of the cotton trade spoke of the growing competition of America, and most of them indicated this practice of adulteration as one of its causes. That all these gentlemen, residing far apart from each other, and reporting independently, were mistaken, is very hard to believe, and until proof to the contrary is shown it will be safer to trust to the opinions of unbiased persons living on the spot than to inferences drawn by interested manufacturers many thousands of miles away from the markets of which they write. Even if it be the case that the heavily-sized goods are in demand, it by no means follows that the consuls have reported wrongly. It is quite possible that the small dealers, the intermediaries between the manufacturer and the consumer, may prefer the adulterated goods, since they may be able to get a higher profit out of them. But that the consumer should prefer size to cotton is not very credible. Besides, if the article sold is not cotton, it is only fair that it should be called whatever it is, and not put forward under a misleading title.

Salaries of Harvard Professors.

THE salary of $1,800 for the regular college professor dates from the year 1838-39. Before that date it had been $1,500 for a long terms of years. The salary of $2,000 in the Law School dates from 1845-6. In July, 1875, the Corporation fixed the salary of an assistant professor in his second term of five years at $2,500 a year. The institution, in 1858, of the grade of assistant professor, has been of great benefit to the University, because it has been the means of procuring the services of a large number of excellent teachers at a low rate of compensation; but it has also had the effect of diminishing seriously the probable average earnings of the teacher who passes his life in the service of the University. Most of the present professors, who have been long in the service, became full professors before they were thirty years old, and so received the maximum salary offered by the college at an early age. The institution of the grade of assistant professor has made this early accession to a full professorship very improbable. At present a young man can scarcely expect to become a professor on the full salary before he is thirty-five years of age, except by some rare piece of good fortune; and at the existing rate of promotion, he may easily be forty years old before he obtains the salary of $4,000. It is obvious that these new conditions modify very much the meaning of the fact, made evident in the above table, that the regular professor's salary has doubled since 1854. Moreover, although the prices of food, clothing, and fuel have not advanced in proportion to the advance in salaries, the general scale of living in the community at large has greatly changed; so that the relative position of an assistant professor who lived on $2,500 in 1869 was by no means as good as that of a full professor who lived on $2,200 in 1859.

Apache Courtship and Marriage.

WHEN an Apache brave concludes to marry (says the San Francisco Post), either a first or any subsequent wife, the manner of his courtship is the same. He makes no effort to become agreeable to his intended bride—indeed, rarely if ever notices her or speaks to her, except in answer to questions she may put to him. He pays more attention, however, to her male relatives, particularly her brothers, if she has any. Finally, if he becomes satisfied that a declaration will not be rejected, then the whole affair is accomplished in a few hours, and generally in this fashion. At night he takes the presents intended for the girl's parents, who alone are entitled to receive any, and places them near the lodge in which she lives. If the presents are horses they have their trappings also, and are tied with macate near the lodge; if a cow is to be given, a single straw or a cow's horn, which signifies the intention, is tied to the lodge. If the presents are accepted, which almost always happens, the girl goes in the morning and builds a new lodge or hut for herself and husband, and puts the straw in it for their bed. If the man is rich there is some ceremony about the marriage; if poor, very little or none. When the parties are of consequence, one of the orators of the tribe is employed by the bridegroom to place the presents near the lodge and make a speech to the bride's family for him. The orator stands at a distance of several yards, and in his best style makes the declaration for his principal. In this he dilates on his client's qualities—his courage, his skill in hunting, or anything in which he is distinguished. The orator confines himself strictly to the truth in his speech, and promises that his principal will maintain and defend his bride, but at the same time informs her family that he may at some future time take another wife, and even may become tired of her and send her home—all of which are the necessary incidents of Apache married life. He also tells them that while she should remain his only wife, he would be faithful to her, and should expect fidelity, obedience and service from her. When he returned from hunting, foray or play, he wanted his food prepared as soon as possible, and he should expect her always to have a store of food on hand. On his part he would bring her game and spoils of the enemy whenever he could. Her relatives make presents to the parents or family of the husband, and this is all that generally is done. Among these Indians it is considered a great indecency for a man to look at his mother-in-law's face, and still more so to speak to her. If by chance they happen to come close together, one runs in one direction and the other in the opposite one until they are several yards apart.

Promotions in the Prussian Army.

PRUSSIA has been less than nine years at peace, but already the stagnation of army promotion is beginning to excite serious uneasiness. During the last twenty years a comparatively rapid flow has been maintained by the successive large increases of the military forces of the country, and by the losses suffered in two great campaigns; but now fears are entertained that the old state of things, when subalterns were often gray-headed men, must return. Only twenty-three per cent. of the major-generals now in the army can become lieutenant-generals, sixty-nine per cent. only of the colonels can become major-generals, sixty per cent. only of the field-officers of the army can become colonels, fifty-two per cent. only of the captains can become field-officers, while only seventy per cent. of the subalterns can get their companies. In other words, of every 100 lieutenants who receive their commissions, seventy may become captains, thirty-six field-officers, twenty-one colonels, fourteen major-generals and three lieutenant-generals; while, even if lucky enough to arrive at this last rank, an officer will have to serve sixteen years as a subaltern, twelve as a captain, eight as a field-officer, five and one-half years as a colonel, and the same period as a major-general. Assuming, therefore, that an officer enters the army even at the early age of eighteen, he will be sixty-five years old before he becomes a lieutenant-general, sixty when he attains the rank of major-general, fifty-four of colonel, forty-six before he becomes a field-officer, and thirty-four before he gets his company.

Republics in Africa.

A FRENCH democrat traveling in Algeria has just sent home a description of a kind of Utopia, or group of model republics, whose existence has not yet been entirely swept away by the advance of civilization. The information afforded by the writer may one day, perhaps, be useful in the mother country, when the legislators of the future frame a new Constitution. The republics in question, situated in a mountain district, are inhabited by Kabyles, or Berbères, who appear to have enjoyed the blessing of universal suffrage long before it was introduced into France, and who, "thirsting after liberty, organized a system of government on bases so broad that the boldest Communists of 1871 would have recoiled from applying them." We are then told that these microscopic republics form an autonomous federation, and that so severely is universal suffrage practiced that all able-bodied men are obliged to take a direct part in public affairs. There are not two Chambers, but one—the Djema—a vast assembly composed not of the delegates of the electors, but of the electors themselves—so the writer puts it—who meet in a place specially set apart for the purpose, and settle all important questions without tumult. The Djema decide everything without appeal—municipal works, taxes, peace, war, and questions concerning the community at large or individuals. The deliberations of the Chamber, we are told, are seldom troubled, the elders being listened to with respect. A young man who imprudently interrupted their discourse was quickly reduced to silence and fined. The executive power resides in the hands of an Amin, elected, but receiving no salary, and who is aided by delegates. He is generally a man of wealth, and one of his duties is to relieve the poor out of his own pocket. A matter curious to note is that the religious and the civil law are kept perfectly distinct; there is separation of Church and State, and no priestly interference is allowed in the administration of terrestrial affairs.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

View of the Port of Massowah.

Massowah, or Mosaurus, or Mazaurus, a port on Eastern Africa, and which has for some time past been a cause of contention between Egypt and Abyssinia, was visited by H. M. S. Seagull in November and December last for the protection of British subjects, the Abyssinians having demanded the surrender of that port from Egypt, and having threatened to march on the town. Massowah Island, the port of Abyssinia for the last three centuries, was taken possession of by Egypt in 1877; is situated in the southern extremity of Harkiko Bay, and is separated from the mainland by a narrow channel which forms a good anchorage. The island is half a mile long and about four hundred yards wide, formed principally of coral rocks, of no height, and in great decay. Nearly half the island is occupied with tanks and a burial-ground; on the inner half of the town, which is crowded to the water's edge with inhabitants. Like all Eastern places, it possesses a bazaar, which abounds in filth, and altogether is in a wretched condition.

A Turf Market in Ireland.

The want of fuel, as well as of timber for building and other industries, is severely felt in the interior of Ireland, and thousands of families are dependent entirely upon the peat or turf cut from the bogs for their fuel. Our illustration gives a view of one of the ordinary markets for the sale of turf in a small town in the southern portion.

The Sekukuni War.

Sekukuni was the hereditary chieftain of a tribe called the Bapedi, or sometimes the Makatees, a branch of the Bechuana Caffre nation, long ago settled in the mountain country north of the Transvaal. The troublesome and costly warfare against this petty South African potentate has just been terminated by Sir Garnet Wolseley's adroit and successful attack, on November 28th, upon Sekukuni's formidable stronghold in the Lulu Mountains, beyond the Steelpoort River, not far from the gold fields of Lydenburg. The three cities were taken and burned, and on the following day the British engineers blew up the cluster of caves with gun-cotton and dynamite, and after each explosion there came out men, women and children who had sought shelter within their recesses. Sekukuni, with some 600 of his people, took refuge in the Kokoon cave, and withstood a siege until December 2d when he surrendered, and was borne into the British camp on an old-fashioned military stretcher. He was subsequently sent under a mounted escort to Pretoria, where he is now held a prisoner.

Sketches in Afghanistan.

Our illustrations of the military movements that have been proceeding to strengthen the British force in the occupation of Cabul were mostly taken from scenes in the Jugdulluk Pass, which has latterly been superseded by the more convenient route of Lataband. The country south of the Cabul, which has to be passed through before the Lughman boundary is crossed, boasts of a population more fanatical perhaps than any in Afghanistan. They are all nearly Safis, or Caffres converted to Mohammedanism. The country is made up of three large valleys watered by the Pinjshir, Tezan and Ughu rivers, running from the highlands between Kohistan and Kafiristan, and emptying themselves in the Cabul River. Barren ranges of hills shut out these valleys from each other, and it is only near the Cabul valley that there is a break in these gigantic spurs of the Hindoo Koosh. The Safis have always been fit to their own devices, their determination causing Ghilzais, Lughmanis and other neighboring tribes to be wary of interference with them. Their strong towers and fortified villages, often perched on almost inaccessible strongholds, are secure against attack, except, of course, when artillery is brought to bear against them. As will be seen, the "tug-of-war" in the camp at Gundamuk is a variation of the usual military exercise. Here one of the baggage elephants has been tackled by the united strength of a party of soldiers, instead of two opposing bands of men pulling at the rope against each other.

The Ice-blockade of the Loire and Saone, in France.

The exceptionally severe Winter in Europe has given the people of France a new and not a very agreeable sensation. They have seen and felt an Arctic wave. Their illustrated papers give us many views of what is there a rare spectacle. The block of the ice at Saumur attracted general attention, and thousands hastened by railroad to witness it. On the evening of the 5th of January the Loire, which had been whirling down its cakes of ice, flowed tranquilly on. What did it mean? The tidings came full of alarm. The ice had begun to jack at Villebernier, above the bridges of Saumur. Its accumulation there menaced danger far and wide, and the French authorities set to work with energy to save the inhabitants of Ile Souzay, who were menaced with destruction. Channels were cut through the ice to let the water escape, and in some places the ice was broken up to prevent accumulation, and let it float away.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—ABOUT 46,000,000 pounds of sugar were exported last year from the Sandwich Islands.

—TENNESSEE has fourteen Supreme Judges, and they are said to be several years behind time with their docket.

—PREPARATIONS are being made in all the great mining camps for an unprecedented year of activity in mining.

—AUSTRALIA will be able to spare 21,000,000 bushels of her grain crop to Europe this year, and still have enough for her own use.

—THE silver and copper mines of Maine have opened up a new source of industry in that State, which is likely amply to reward her people.

—A NEW elevator with a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels is to be built at St. Louis during the present season, to be ready for use early next Fall.

—THE largest sugar-mill in the world will soon be erected in St. Charles Parish, La. The weight of the mill, including engine, will be 300,000 pounds.

—THE Methodists of Baltimore are raising money for the establishment in that city of a Centenary Biblical Institute for the education of colored people.

—THE Russian Church has 11,572 members and nine church buildings in Alaska and Colorado. The church in San Francisco contains about 200 members.

—THE town of Littleborough-by-Rochdale, containing about seventy-four acres, with a population of about 10,000, has just been sold to a Yorkshire gentleman.

—THE American Board has expended more than $1,240,000 on missions among the Indians, and gathered 50 churches with 4,003 members. The mission among the Dakotas returns 8 churches and 600 members.

—THE American missionaries in Persia heartily endorse an urgent appeal made by native Christians to friends in this country for help of the starving, for whom neither the Government nor wealthy Mussulmans will do anything.

—COLONEL A. P. BUTLER, Fish Commissioner of South Carolina, has just received 20,000 Landlock salmon eggs from Maine. He considers this species a great acquisition to the waters of the State, it being the first introduction there.

—THE Virginia Legislature has passed a resolution authorizing the Auditor to borrow $220,000 to pay arrearages to the officers, expenses of the Legislature, etc.

—ARKANSAS has 3,397 miles of navigable water-course regularly traversed by steamboats. She has eight railroads, having 800 miles of road completed and in operation.

—FOR the fourth time during the present century the Lake of Zurich, in Switzerland, is frozen over. The lakes of Morat, Neufchâtel and Bienne, and the River Aare, are also frozen over.

—GEESE are raised for their feathers in Texas. One goose rancho in Western Texas has 300 geese, whose feathers are plucked every two months, each one averaging a pound and a half a year.

—TENNESSEE has 5,612 public schools and 1,287 private ones. The former are attended by 186,162 pupils, the latter by 35,000. There is an increase this year over last year of 14,000.

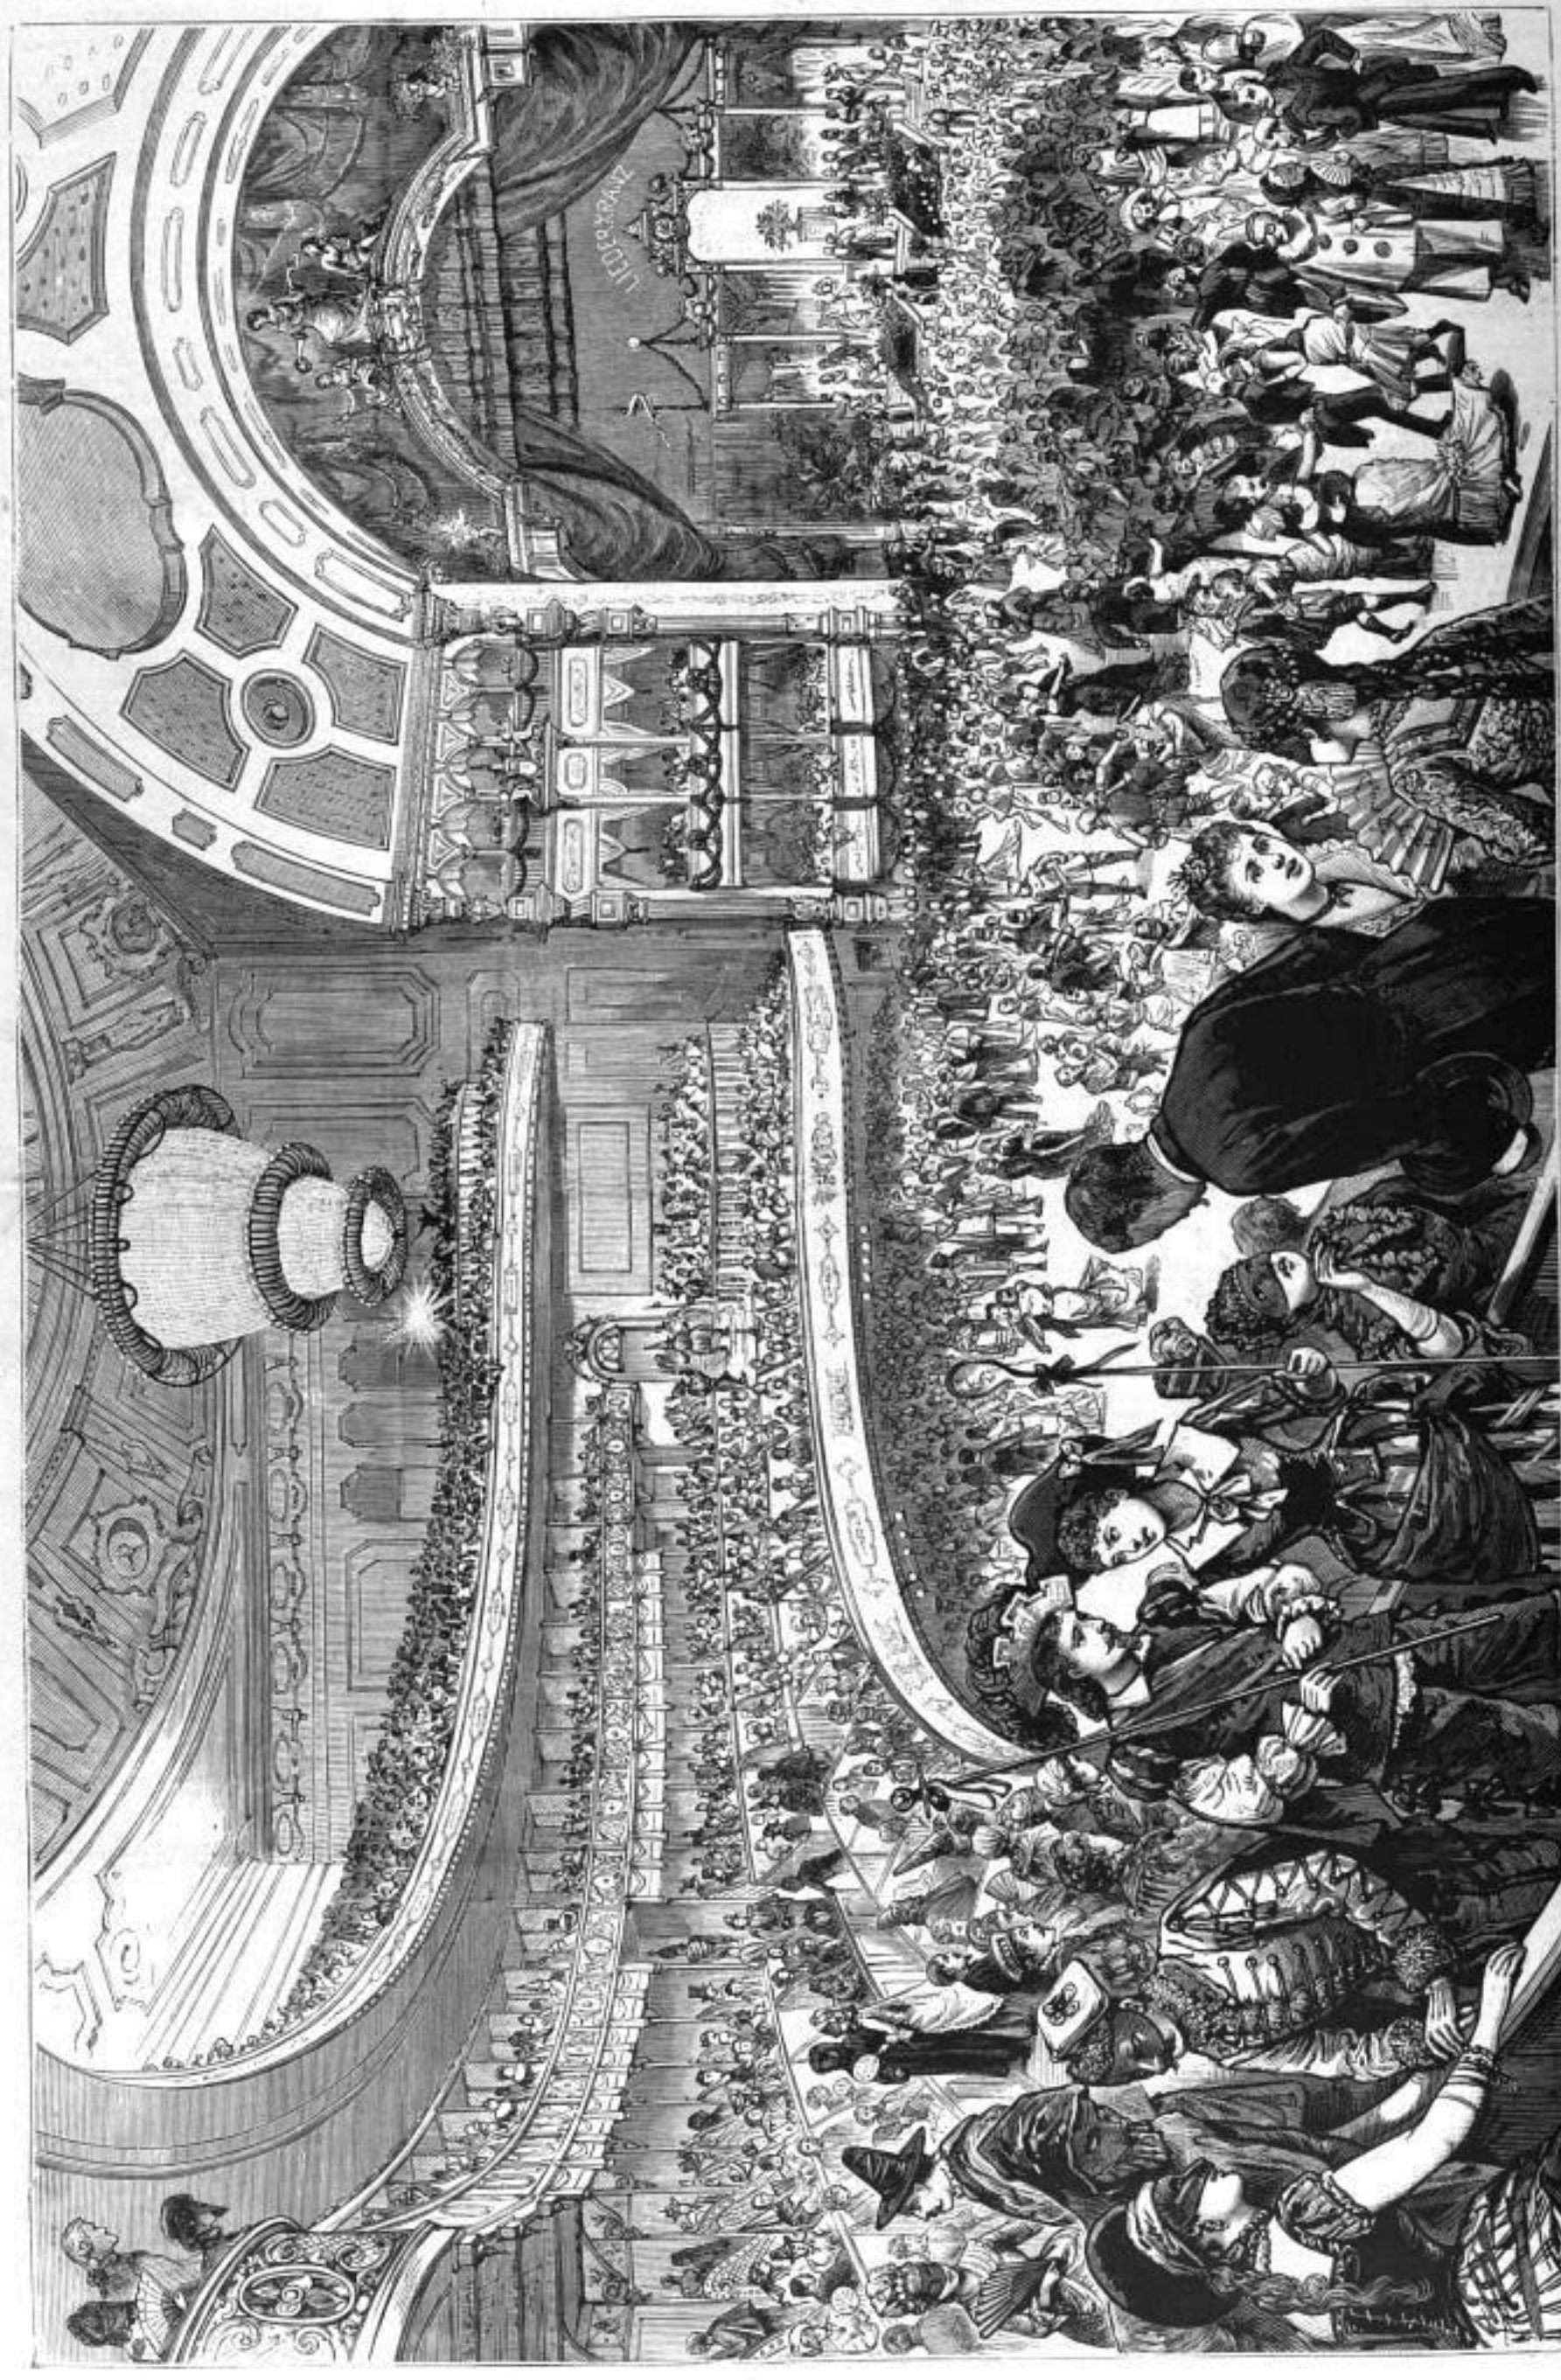
—A PARTY of gentlemen have discovered a mound near Rochester, Missouri, which contains the skeletons of pygmies, with skulls no larger than a man's fist, and the jaws provided with full sets of teeth, showing them to be the remains of grown persons.

—A MOVEMENT has been made in the Massachusetts Legislature to debar all persons from practicing any branch of medicine in that State except those who furnish sufficient evidence of good moral character and the possession of a thorough knowledge of their calling.

—A DISPATCH from Berlin says that steps are being taken to form a Petroleum Boring Company to work the newly-discovered oil wells in the Hanover petroleum region, the present borer yielding an average interest of twenty-two per cent. upon the capital invested, against nineteen per cent. realized in America.

—THE historic island of Jamestown, in the James River, where the first settlers of Virginia made a home, is reported to have been purchased by a Mrs. Malanda Brown, of New York. It comprises 1,400 acres, chiefly covered with orchards. The only buildings said to be on the island are a dwelling-house and a paper-mill.

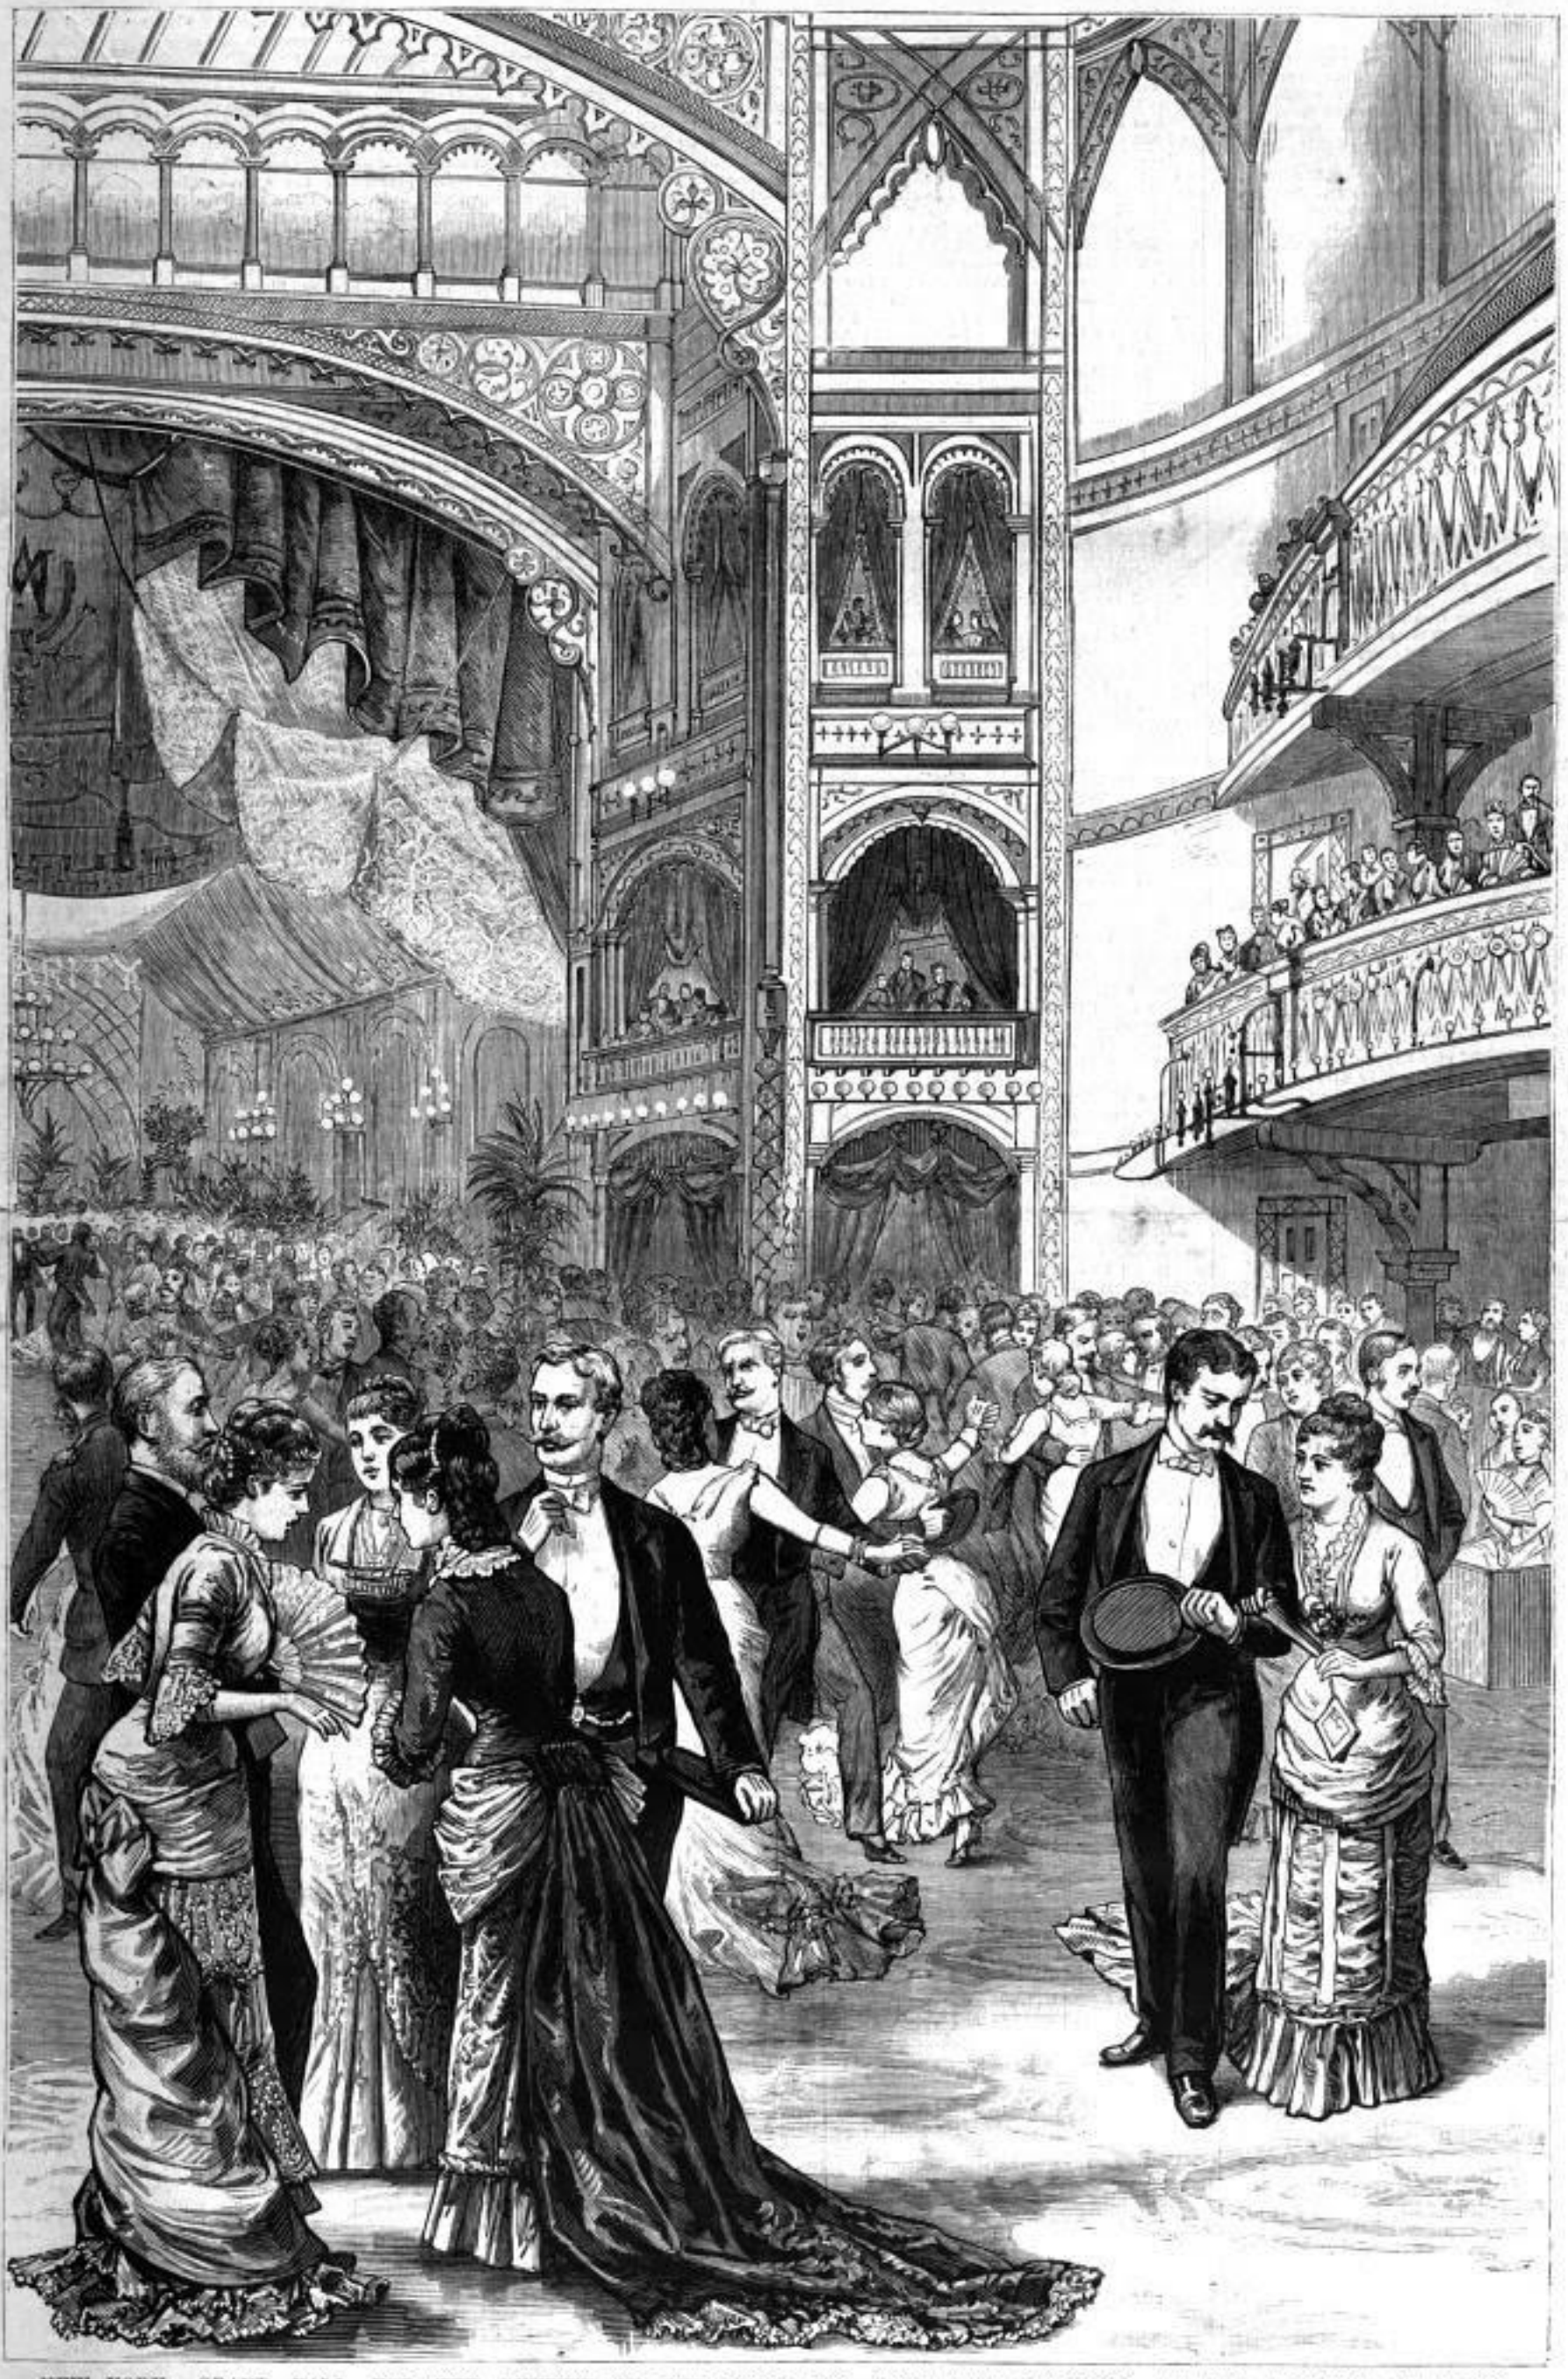
—THE contract for an electric light of 10,000-candle power, to be placed in the dome of the County Court House at Wabash, Ind., intended to light that city, has been let for $1,800. The agreement states that should the light prove unsatisfactory the city shall be at no expense. A guarantee for a perfect light has been given by the company.



—A QUEBEC merchant has experimented successfully in shipping beef to England in the carcass. The animals are beheaded, the entrails are taken out, and the bodies pressed into a small compass and frozen. The hide is not removed until the voyage is over, and it is claimed that the meat is superior in appearance to other imported beef, and keeps longer.

—THE acceptances for the English Spring handicap races are announced. They include Mr. P. Lorillard's horses as follows: The brown gelding Parole, aged; the four years old bay colt Falsetto; and the following three-year olds: Chestnut colts Mistake and Wallenstein; chestnut fillies Sly Dance and Pappoose; bay fillies Geraldine and Nereid, and bay colt Borneo.

—LORD JOHN MANNERS, the English Postmaster-General, will introduce this session a scheme of postal notes in amplification of the money-order system. The idea is to issue notes of 2s 6d, 5s, 10s, 20s, the two first to be charged one penny each, and the two latter two pence each. These notes are to be payable at any savings bank or money order office, and will be sold in books as well as singly, so that the necessity of going to a money-order office every time money is to be transmitted and between certain hours of the day will be avoided. It is a proposal for a small paper currency, and, like the postal savings bank, is sure to be practicable and popular.



—PROFESSOR LOUIS BROWN, an artist of repute at Munich, is working on the most colossal painting, perhaps, ever attempted on canvas. It will represent a general view of the battle of Sedan. The sketch is now finished, and measures sixty feet in length by ten feet in width; the painting itself will be 400 feet by 50, and it is to be exhibited at Frankfort-on-the-Main, it is said, in two years. It is needless, perhaps, to add that a building will be constructed expressly for the purpose. The view of the battle is taken from a commanding spot affording the sight of the whole Valley of Sedan. The artist has selected the culminating point of the action, when the last and most desperate efforts of the French to open a way across the "circle of iron" were frustrated.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—ANNUAL RECEPTION AND MASQUERADE OF THE LIEDERKRANZ SOCIETY, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, FEBRUARY 5TH.—SEE PAGE 454.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK.—GRAND BALL, FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE HOME FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN, FEBRUARY 5TH.—SEE PAGE 461.

Digitized by Google

DIES IRÆ.

DO you think that Love will forget it
When you turn to him in the end?
Do you dream you will not regret it,
And wish he were still your friend,
When round you the darkness closes,
And chill winds harry your roses,
While all that your tiret life knows is
How drear is the way to wend?

Can you trust that your gougd-like bower,
Grown rank in a single day,
Will burst to perennial flower
And fruitage of bliss for aye?
That its glamour and scent will hover,
Round you and your hey-day lover,
'Mid rose-red blossoms wherever
There lowers no sure decay?

Do you deem you will never miss them—
The hands that fondled your hair?
When no warm lips lean to kiss them
Will your quivering lips not care?
And the arms so glad to gird you—
And the heart that only heard you—
And the passionate breath that stirred you
In old days, ah, God, how fair!

To Love you were most disloyal,
And, like Judas, you sold your lord;
You stooped from a throne most royal,
And sinned of your free accord:
And, think you, when years bereave you,
And lovers for lust's sake leave you,
That he will again receive you—
A wanton from ways abhorred?

And I? I may then be, dearest,
More cold than is now your love;
Where the voice of my very nearest
Can thrill not again, nor move.
And the spirit that then sleeps under,
No anguish can rend asunder,
No sunlight, or storm or thunder,
That visits the world above.

Yet, sweet, as I bend before you
In the visions old memories send:
As, in bonds, I still adore you,
And, exiled, am still your friend.
Though these chains may not be riven,
I pray that you be forgiven,
And for all my dire pain shriven
When you turn to Love in the end!

JOHN MORAN.

THE HIDDEN WITNESS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT HUSBAND OF HERS."

CHAPTER XXXI.—FLIX STILL DISLIKES HER.

WHATEVER may happen hereafter, however their paths may diverge, he has had her in his arms. Flix frowns desperately as this thought occurs to him very early in the morning as he makes his toilet in the large, low-ceiled room of the country hotel. And then thought goes back to that other time—the last time; what ages ago?—when he traveled this same road. The tavern in the old Virginia watering-place comes vividly before him—the elfish, beautiful child, with her impetuous whims, her daring, her temper and her tears. How unlike the lovely, helpless girl of last night—and yet, how like! Fainting and falling into his arms! His face is hot—how perfectly in character! Flying off to seek her fortune for nobody knew what, except from a reckless desire to make herself talked about, thought about.

"There's no doubt about her beauty," he murmured—"mother is right there. She's like no other girl I have seen; but what a dog's life she will lead her husband if ever she gets one! She will drive him frantic with her whims."

Very resolutely he tries to think of something else; but in his mirror—in the pale, watery-looking paper that disfigures the wall—in his shaving-cup—wherever he glances, he sees only her face, and is angry with himself that he does.

"Have I lived thirty years heart-whole to be entangled at last by this Bohemian?" he asks himself, and then recollects that he has said more than once that tame women do not please him.

"Pshaw! But a wife—that's different," he soliloquizes. "However, I don't want a wife; and as to fortune, I've plenty of money of my own."

According to appointment, he goes round to Salome's to breakfast. Sylve meets him with a coy manner and demure face—scarcely looks at him, in fact. She has been thinking nearly all night, and has come to the conclusion that she is a fool to fancy she can ever correct those early impressions. Has he not professed to hate her again and again? The words so terribly burned into her memory, and not effaced by absence, have come out in white-heat and scorch her brain. All the old distrust, anger, wretchedness, are coming back again. She bears the light well, and Flix looks at her resolutely to see what fault he can find with her. He can find none whatever, from the soft curve of her brow to the delicious roundness of her dimpled chin. It disturbs him that he thinks of her at all, and that in her soft, gray traveling dress, a little out of fashion, she looks so ladylike, and, if anything, more beautiful than she did the night before in that memorable crimson toilet.

Sylve has written a brief little note to poor Eve, still as Miss Brown, and is quite ready for her homeward going. She looks forward with a strange mingling of pleasure and pain to her journey and her city home. Of Mrs. Forester's love and forgiveness she is sure; quite as sure is she of Flix Forester's indifference. She has had a surfeit of Southern life and of independence, and is quite willing now to be cared for. As for Flix Forester, she will try and hate him as heartily as he hates her, knowing that two can play at that game, and further assured that it will be only play or pretense with her. He is very kind on the road—a thorough gentleman, protecting her from all annoyances, finding her the best seats, keeping her wants supplied, rarely smiling, seldom speaking; while she is proudly reserved and counting up all her faults and freaks in extenuation of his coldness, resolutely thinking of that damaging sentence she read in his day-book with reference to some sad blot on her family escutcheon.

"If it is possible," she says, again and again, "I'm going to hate him," and she begins by dwelling upon every look he has given, every word he has spoken.

The warmth of her reception at Forester mansion is beyond her wildest hopes. Mrs. Forester gathers her to her heart and kisses and cries over her. Again she sits in that pleasant dressing room before a blazing hickory fire, and a pretty-faced servant—all the others have been dismissed—brings in delicious refreshments. Ah, this is better than the homeless feeling that has sometimes made her so wretched—the careless, untidy manners of the careless untidy black servants; the quiet affection even of Salome and Eve Lewin. To be petted, welcomed with open arms—forgiven for the slight she has put upon society in the person of Mrs. Forester. To have shopping suggested, money carte blanche, a carriage at her command; last, not least, to be in the same house with her idol, even though he hated her. To see and wear the elegant little trifles that Mrs. Forester's forethought had kindly provided.

"Well, my dear Flix, and what do you think now? Sylve has been telling me all her adventures; she has really kept school and been earning money for herself. It seems to me she has come back vastly improved. Don't you see her now with different eyes? Come, confess."

"A little sunburned, isn't she?" queried Flix, looking up from his paper and speaking absently.

"Sunburned! Not a bit. Oh, I'm so glad to be spared those tormenting doubts and fears."

"Yes, I daresay she has an unlimited capacity for furnishing her friends with those pleasant little annoyances," he said, going on with his reading.

"You are not changed a bit, Flix. You still dislike the poor girl; and I have reason to think—I mean I believe—that in some way she divined that she was disagreeable to you, and that was the reason she went away."

"Very correct and womanly," echoed Flix, biting his lip.

"Well, you must remember that her childhood was neglected."

"I do. I also remember that she has made our name a by-word, and has disgraced herself."

"You know better, Flix," said his mother, sternly; "she has not disgraced herself nor us. Everybody in our set believes she was sent into the country."

"The butcher and the baker don't, and, as for others, we have been at the mercy of our servants."

"Then you are determined not to like her?"

"My dear mother, are we to have the old uneasiness renewed? What do you care whether I like Miss Sylve de Latude or not? I shall treat her with civility for your sake, I hope. Don't make me wish we had never heard of her again, or put me under the necessity of taking another long journey. It is just as I feared it would be—she brings variance with her."

"Oh, don't say that, Flix, dear; it is all my fault. I suppose I am foolish to love her so, but somehow I have taken her into my heart, as if she had been a daughter born to me. But don't let us have hard thoughts or unkind words between us. If it is impossible for you to like poor Sylve, I at least will accept the situation, and so will she. Luckily she will——"

The sentence was cut short by the appearance of Sylve herself, in a charming morning costume. She colored a little as she answered Flix's grave "Good-morning," but his coldness was more than made up for by Mrs. Forester, who kissed her on both cheeks, and led her to her old seat at the breakfast-table. It was some time before she felt, and could act, naturally, with Flix vis-a-vis, and his picture also on the opposite wall, the latter staring her out of countenance.

CHAPTER XXXII.—READING OF THE MURDER.

"AND how much longer must I stay in this cursed place?"

The voice came from a bed in the private ward of a hospital, whose occupant was a man of powerful build, but whose voice, though peculiar and grating, was as weak as that of a child.

The doctor had not yet gone his rounds—he usually visited his private patients first—but the nurse, a tall, gaunt woman, stood by the bedside with a bowl in her hand. Vintresse had just entered.

"Sure, sir, tell him it's insisted that he keeps still, sir," said the woman, imploringly.

"Major, it will be better for your wound if you keep silence for a few hours longer; the movement of the lips hinders it healing!"

"Oh, the devil take the wound," retorted the other; "will it do if I talk through my teeth, then? But talk I must if it disfigures me for life?"

"Perhaps, if you are very careful," responded young Vintresse, who had finished taking off his gloves. "But you know I am at your service. I have brought a baker's dozen of papers, and can read all day if you like, straight on. There is really no necessity of your talking."

"Isn't there, though? You lie here with your jaws bandaged for a month, and see what you think then. There, I've had enough of that stuff; for heaven's sake take it away;" he had been imbibing nourishment from the hands of the nurse. "God be thanked, she's gone! Why couldn't they send me a good-looking woman while they were about it? She's a female Mephistopheles."

"Because it was impossible to find the two qualities combined, I suppose—beauty and strength. This woman has the arms of a Hercules. She can lift you like a baby," said Vintresse, laughing.

"Well, I'd have paid somebody with a decent face well for looking in upon me occasionally, then," was the response, in a weak, querulous voice, which, coming through nearly closed lips, had an indescribable effect. "Don't you know I'd sell my soul for beauty and luxury?"

"Not quite so bad as that, major, I hope," said Vintresse, smiling; "but come, shall I read you the California papers first?"

"Wait a while, they'll keep; I want to talk a little. Have you seen Forester lately? Do you cultivate him?"

"Most decidedly. I told you yesterday the young lady had been found."

"My daughter, yes. Have you seen her yet?"

"I have not, but I was just going on to say that I shall see her to-night. I have heard marvelous accounts of her beauty, however."

"Oh, yes," trying to smile, and making himself hideous, "she's likely to—to be handsome—little devil! I didn't think she'd have the spirit in her, and yet—ha! ha! ha! One can't always depend upon the stock. If you'll believe me, her mother was like an angel—so I have heard."

"So you have heard!" ejaculated Vintresse, curiously. "One would think you ought to know."

"Yes, one would think so," said the sick man, grimly; "but one's conjectures are not always right. Live with some people ninety-nine years, and you cannot fathom them. You like Forester, then?"

"Very much; he seems one of the most honorable of gentlemen."

"There must have been some reason why the girl ran away," muttered the sick man, moodily; "can he have made love to her, I wonder? He is much older than she, but such things have happened. There'll be no trouble once she sees you," he added, catching the eye of his companion. The young man blushed violently.

"If he cannot interest her I stand a poor chance," he said; "but I think I understood you to say that Mr. Forester is not aware of your relationship."

"No; does that seem strange? Well, it is one of those things one must take on faith. I told you before, I have family secrets, which, in good time, I will explain to you. Why, man, my history unfolded shall make each separate hair stand up on your head. I promise you it would furnish a romance more interesting than anything you have read or can write. Why, man, I've been dead and buried."

"Good God, sir! can you be in your right mind?" ejaculated Vintresse. "Dead and buried!"

"Buried, certainly, with all the honors, and a beautiful young widow following me to the grave, the coffin lowered, the clods cast on, the grave closed up, ay, the worms packed in close with the mold, and yet—here I am, just escaped a second interment by the skin of my teeth. Ha! ha! an apt simile, the skin of my teeth—confound 'em, they interfere with my pronunciation. But we'll let that pass till the time comes to tell you all my history. You have spoken to Forester about me?"

Vintresse drew a long breath; these last words of the sick man had thrown him into a dumb astonishment, from which he could not easily rally.

"I have spoken about you, sir, more than once."

"Well, and what did he say?"

"That he should be happy to serve you, particularly in the interest of Miss de Latude."

"You have not told him of our relationship?" He put his hand out eagerly, catching the other by the sleeve.

"I acted upon your own instructions, sir. If I had told him that, how could I have accounted for the difference in name?"

"True, true," muttered the other; "but I shall soon be able to resume my own name, as I told you, but I don't care to do so till the last moment; there's no urgent need just now, and, to tell you the truth, I'm not particularly in love with my own name. I have seen too much trouble under it. My change of fortune came with my change of name; curious, isn't it? Suppose, now, with the resumption of my old nomenclature my luck turns again? I was never superstitious in my life, but, by the Lord! that idea troubles me sometimes. Pshaw! what nonsense; the fantasies of a sick brain."

"Disobeying orders," said a low voice; and the doctor stood by the bedside, his pale, grave face older than its years, looking down with kindly severity upon his patient.

"Doctor Wilde, good-morning," said Vintresse, shaking hands over the pallet. "I have been wishing you would come to lay your commands upon this refractory patient. He will not be silent, though I have agreed to read, rant, do anything that will serve to interest him."

"For heaven's sake, borrow one of Barnum's monkeys," said the sick man, impatiently; "his antics might possibly amuse me. I want action, action!"

"You want absolute repose," said Wilde, gravely. "The wound in the mouth is very much inflamed this morning. If fever should supervene, I can't answer for your life."

"Well, I suppose I must die some time," muttered the sick man, through nearly closed lips, "but I confess I want one more bout with fortune, and I'm not an old man yet. Doctor, I promise you I'll be quiet—confound my tongue!"

After a little time employed in altering and arranging bandages, writing prescriptions and attending generally to the patient, the doctor left to go the rounds of the hospital.

"I like that young fellow," said Vintresse, "he appears to throw all his heart and soul into his profession. But for all his youth, he seems one overburdened with care or trouble—and yet, I have sometimes wondered why you prefer a physician who is scarcely free from college trammels. Never mind, don't speak! I can imagine all you would say—now for the papers."

Quietly yet carefully he read, skimming the cream of the correspondence, through the dailies and the weeklies for two hours, and yet the eyes of his friend looked from under their thick but well-formed brows, a longing for more. Suddenly Vintresse stopped. He held the paper forward with a pained motion, as if to shield his face which had grown pale and anxious. De Neal noticed the action, and reaching out his hand pulled the sheet away from the reader's face, and, with imperative motions, bade him read aloud what had so surprised and affected him.

"It is really of no consequence, at least to you," said Vintresse, with an altered voice; "it merely brought to my recollection a painful fact with which I—or, at least, not with which I was connected—but I knew the poor fellow well—and—and there are circumstances—at least there were circumstances," he made a dead pause, as if from uncertainty as to how to word his declarations, or from pained feeling.

"Read, I say!" said De Neal, through his closed lips. "What interests you will interest me, of course."

"I beg you will not speak," said Vintresse, with alacrity, "and I will read. I knew the poor fellow to whom this refers intimately well; I knew his family, and into what sore straits they were thrown after his death. This is a letter from some correspondent who signs himself 'Varney.' He makes some reflections upon a murder recently committed and concludes in these words: 'The case is very similar in all its bearings to the murder committed several years ago on the country road in ——, Virginia, the person there murdered being also a peddler, by the name of Ben Lake. Silence and mystery have ever since attended upon all efforts to fix upon the assassin. He, also, had a large sum of money taken from his person, and his character that of a pleasant, jocose, happy-go-lucky New Englander——'"

"For God's sake, stop!"

The voice was so terrible that the young man sprang to his feet. The sight that met his glance astonished and for the moment paralyzed him. De Neal seemed to be looking at some object in the air with staring eyeballs; the veins like great cords stood out almost writhing and twisting upon his pallid temples, his eyes seemed starting from their sockets, his knees were violently drawn up, and he clutched the bedclothes with that tense, terrible grasp with which the victim of some torturing spasm holds whatever its fingers can compass.

"For God's sake, what have I done? What is the matter?"

"Pain, pain! the devil's 'rack'!" gasped De Neal, suddenly shaking from head to foot, while the wound in his mouth began to open, and a stream of blood ran trickling over the pillow.

Vintresse sprang for the bell-cord, sure that his friend was in the agony of death. The ill-favored nurse appeared.

"Find Doctor Wilde—tell him to come here—there is a change, you see—hurry." The nurse cast one affrighted look upon the sick man and disappeared, as Vintresse shouted after her, "Bring any doctor you can find."

"Curse my ill luck!" muttered De Neal, "curse all newspapers and newsmongers, say I. It will be the death of me—a dog's death—a dog's death. Draw down the blind, will you, Vintresse? Wipe the blood away; can't you make yourself useful, man? Tell the girl, tell Sylve, I would have seen her—tell her—but stay—you don't know the whole story. I wish I could have seen her once. Doctor, I have had a shock—a chill, I think—and I can't keep my teeth still if I would. Give me some brandy, quick, quick! Why, I'm cold from head to foot."

"How did this happen?" asked the doctor, as he came hurrying into the room. "Send Smythe here with bandages, and ask Linforth to bring his instruments," he added, in an aside to the nurse. "Hurry, there is every danger. Why, how in heaven's name came this to pass? It was getting on excellently, that wound, this morning, though there was some inflammation. What was it shocked him?"

"He would hear it. I was reading the account of a murder," said Vintresse.

"Then, I am afraid you have killed him."

CHAPTER XXXIII.—FLIX FORESTER IN LOVE.

"TO-NIGHT, dear, you must wear your mother's diamonds."

This was said by Mrs. Forester as she came in to superintend Sylve's toilet with her own hands. The maid who was dressing her young mistress worked as if employed in a labor that she loved, and, indeed, the fair image standing before the tall mirror was beautiful enough to justify the enthusiasm of her attendants, as they both ever and anon let fall some pretty speech complimentary of her beauty. Sylve looked smilingly in the mirror, flashed back the soft lightnings of the lustrous hazel eyes, while her lovely lips smiled in answer to the vision there, and her cheeks flushed like the rosy petals of the sweetest flower that grows. It was, in fact, to her great beauty that Sylve owed the almost adoring affection by which she was regarded by Mrs. Forester. She was attired in white lace falling over the softest and faintest tint of pink, the satin underdress gleaming like roses through tissues of pearl.

"Who did you say was coming here to-night whom Mr. Forester thinks I shall admire so much?" asked Sylve, after adjusting the glittering necklace on her bosom, and preparing to draw over shapely hands and wrists the white gloves that made a delicate finish to her toilet.

Digitized by Google

"Vintresse, I think, was the name," said Mrs. Forester, rising and smoothing out the folds of violet velvet of which her dress was composed.

"Vintresse—the name is French, isn't it? Vintresse—I have seen it somewhere, or else I dreamed it. Ah, now I remember! I did see it in a little prayer-book that Salome's cousin Lily kept as choice as if it were virgin gold. Yes, the very name; and her lover deserted her, poor little thing. Would it not be strange if it was the same person? Do you know, I mean to try and find out?"

"I would say nothing about it if I were you," responded Mrs. Forester. "It would be so awkward for him if it happens to be the same."

"Oh, not to-night, certainly, but if I should become better acquainted with him, I can mention the maid forlorn, and see how he takes it. One can judge from a little what a good deal means."

"Diamonds become you. I am anxious to hear what Flix will say," said Mrs. Forester.

"What, about me?"

"Yes, dear, in diamonds."

"I hope he won't like them!"

"Why?"

"I rather fancy not being admired by Mr. Forester."

"How very foolish for you to talk so!"

"Not at all; he never did like me," said Sylve, her cheeks reddening into scarlet, "and I don't like him, so we're quits."

"You are two silly geese," Mrs. Forester exclaimed, laughing as she rose; "you have made up your minds that you will be like strangers, though living in the same house. You might, at least, condescend to treat him like a brother."

"I will, when he condescends to treat me like a sister. Oh, Mrs. Forester, please don't let us talk about it, for I am in a very pleasant mood at the prospect of meeting this handsome foreigner, you know, and I really had rather not mention Flix—I mean Mr Forester."

"I wouldn't call him Flix, my dear," said Mrs. Forester, with gentle irony.

"No, indeed, not for worlds," retorted Sylve, biting her lips; "that was a slip of the tongue."

"Well, at all events, don't quarrel with him to-night, if you can help it," said Mrs. Forester; "it makes me so unhappy to see you always at swords' points. Don't be angry with me for saying it—come, give me a kiss."

Sylve kissed her with seeming reluctance, for Flix and his doings were seldom far from his mother's thoughts and always on her tongue; and though at any moment, given the right conditions, Sylve could have fallen down and worshiped him, yet his apparently unspoken contempt for her and his punctilious politeness in her presence, so far removed from both friendship and hate—as she thought—made the subject almost forbidding.

"I wish I had asked Amy to bring me my smelling-salts when she went down," said Mrs. Forester, a moment after.

"Let me go; where did you leave it?"

"On the étagère, near the window; but I will not allow you to go; ring for Amy."

"Please let me. I want to take a turn or two down the parlors before the people come," said Sylve. "My train is so very long, I must have a little practice. I will be up in a minute or two."

"Don't trouble yourself; send Amy," said Mrs. Forester, seating herself languidly. Down ran Sylve into the shining, flower-decked room below, a very fairy bower, where mirrors reflected the lights and the roses, the soft white gleam of marbles, the exquisite colors of the paintings upon the walls. Twice she paced up and down, bearing herself regally, and stretching her swan's neck to see how she looked in the mirrors, before she observed Flix standing in the recess caused by the fall of the heavy inner damask curtains. She caught the half-smile that he tried to conceal, and a hot flush crimsoned neck and forehead. For a moment she stood gazing at him, her resentment no ways abated by his now quiet smile.

"Do you see anything so very ridiculous?" she managed to say at last. "I was only practicing my peacock's trail, and I fancy I shall manage it very easily, even if you laugh at me."

"I am not laughing at you, Miss Sylve," he said. "I beg your pardon, it was not at you I was smiling."

"Thank you. I suppose it would not be polite to say I doubt you!" she retorted.

"Most certainly it would not," was his cool rejoinder. "You may rely upon my telling you the truth."

"Always. I rather think I can, no matter how it cuts," she answered, bitterly. "Well, you are my guardian, much older than I am, I suppose you have a right."

It was his turn to flush now.

"I certainly have a right," he said.

"And you exercise it sometimes when there is no call for it," she answered back, struggling with her emotions. "You are always critical, always cold. You make me afraid of you."

"Afraid of me?"—he had come a step forward. "What have I done that I have made you afraid of me?"

"Everything that a man could do to show his contempt for a woman," was her undaunted answer, and her anger only made her more beautiful.

"Miss Sylve," and his voice was altered, "that is a grave charge. I beg you to take it back, or to soften its harshness. I show contempt for a woman—I?"

"Yes, you do. I have seen it in a thousand ways. I don't blame you for disliking me, for I know I am rather a strange girl, and, as a child, gave you a great deal of trouble. And then there are other things"—she hesitated and changed color; "but you must think I care a great deal. I don't, I don't really, only for your mother's sake. She is as good and kind as you are cold and unforgiving, and, perhaps, goes too far the other way and spoils me. That is what makes some things so hard to bear—hard because she is troubled by it."

He stood there looking down upon her, as if revolving in his mind what he ought to say, when suddenly she turned away, spied the little bottle on the étagère, and saying, "That is what I came for," seized it, and walked down the room.

"Miss Sylve," said Flix, and something in his voice startled her.

"Never mind," she said, lightly—"some other time." She would have turned and faced him—longed to do so—but if she had, the brimming tears must have run down her cheeks, and she had rather die than let him see them; so she hurried from the room. He took a few quick steps after her, then paused, and watched the light figure flashing under the full blaze of the hall light.

"It is just as well," he muttered. "At that moment if she had turned I should have compromised myself. God knows what mad words I might have said. I should have placed myself at her mercy, and I do believe she hates me. What was it my mother said when she, too, accused me of hate towards this gypsy? 'I heartily hope some day she will make you sorry.' How the words ring in my ears! Well, mother, your wishes are gratified, if you did but know it. She has made me sorry—sorry that I ever knew her, sorry that we ever found her, sorry to the core of my heart that I am the fool her soft eyes have made me. Yes, at last she has her revenge. I love her madly; but, would I marry her under that cause and stain and double shame? No. And yet there are times when I fear I could not trust myself if she gave me one word, one look, of encouragement; but so secure do I feel in her knowledge of what she considers my dislike towards her, that I am not afraid of betraying my secret. I can at least watch her under the filmy folds of this suspicion, dwell on her gestures, her ravishing smiles, her glances, which are so quickly averted from me. And some day she will marry, and I—— No, no, I shall not be here! I could not; it would kill me to see her given away! Oh, fool that I am! But then there is this excuse for me—I never loved before. I never knew what a terrible tyrant Love can be."

(To be continued.)

WHY NOT HAVE CHEAP SUGAR?

THE general public may have noticed in the daily papers reports from Washington of examinations and statements before Congressional committees in regard to the sugar duties. They have doubtless been bewildered by figures and statistics, Dutch grades and polariscopes. Yet as the good public uses the sugar and pays for it, there seems to be some ground for the suspicion that the public at large are directly interested in the sugar question.

We raise some sugar in Louisiana, and all will be willing to do something to protect the sugar-growers of that State. Beyond that, there is no reason for a high duty on sugar, and the consumer is not aware, we are certain, how fearfully he is taxed on this article of universal necessity—an article that forms a part of the daily purchase and use in the poorest as well as the richest dwellings in the country.

How many people know that sugar that can be bought for less than four cents a pound will cost more than eight cents a pound when landed in Key West, only a few hours' sail?

The refiners who have recently been examined at Washington, and who are the great advocates of dear sugar, say the ad valorem duty on sugar under the present tariff is from fifty-four per cent. to sixty-two per cent.; but we are assured on good authority that this is a very low estimate, and that on many grades it is actually more than a hundred per cent.

Why should people have such an enormous duty put upon a thing of prime necessity? Duties on wines, liquors, cigars, silks, laces, and on luxuries, may be high, but why should the poor be taxed on sugar, as though it were a luxury that only the rich could afford?

This prohibitive duty has produced a strange result. The sugar-planters are not behind the times; they have abandoned the rude old methods for the manufacture of sugar; they have improved the culture of the cane, have fine and costly machinery; they can turn out an excellent quality of sugar, and really do produce it for shipment to Spain; but as it would be ruinous to send such sugar to the United States they are compelled to manufacture poorer sugars for this market.

Is there any sense in our Government thus setting a premium on poor goods and compelling the manufacturers to abandon the production of the best article to gratify a few at the expense of the many? Our duty on Cuban sugar causes the Spanish Government to retaliate and exclude our produce from the island. Spanish vessels go to Buenos Ayres to obtain jerked beef for consumption on the sugar-plantations, when we, under a different system, might send our fresh and salted beef and pork from Texas and the West. Liverpool ships take rice from India to their English seaport, whence Spanish vessels carry it to Cuba, when our rice-fields in Carolina are deprived of that market.

The amount of sugar consumed in this country is enormous. The sugar product of Louisiana forms but a small part, yet it amounted last year to 240,000,000 of pounds, valued at $12,000,000, our whole consumption being about 1,700,000,000 of pounds, for which we pay about $120,000,000.

Our illustration shows the progress of the sugar manufacture in Cuba. In the old time a long line of two-wheeled carts, drawn slowly by oxen, toiled steadily on for days, till a huge pile of cane was raised near the mill. Then the grinding began and went on slowly by animal power, and the juice was boiled in large open kettles to a certain point. After that it was transferred to another set of kettles and boiled to the crystallizing point. The clay process then bleached it by a slow system that required weeks.

Now a movable railroad runs from the sugar-mill to one point after another of the plantation. The estates called Ingenios have improved vastly of late years. Once the number of slaves constituted their wealth, now it is the excellence of their machinery and labor-saving inventions.

Now where the serried ranks of the sugar cane stand, tall, close and strong, their rich, green leaves rustling defiance to the enemy, the field-hands, armed with machetes, begin their toil. With one blow the stalk is cut near the ground, and with a second it is cut about half-way up. The leaves and top are separated to serve as provender for the oxen. When near the railroad the bare, bright sections of cane are carried in baskets to the cars; when the ground prevents the track being run near, these pieces are loaded into ox-carts.

Great economy has been introduced into this part, and the number of hands and oxen is much less than of old, large four-wheeled dumping-carts, built for the purpose in Massachusetts, doing three or four times the work of the old and ruder vehicles.

The overseers long opposed all innovation, and for years looked with contempt on our plows, preferring to tear up the ground with a forked branch pointed at the end and dragged by a chain; but that day is past. The canes, piled into cars, are run up rapidly and dumped into the conductor, which feeds the fine grinding machinery seen in our illustration. There is less handling, and the juice comes out into tanks not exposed, and consequently much purer. It is then pumped up to a defecator, which removes impurities by means of animal charcoal, and the pure sugar-giving juice is then run into the vacuum pan, where it undergoes a boiling, and thence to a second pan, where it receives that which crystallizes the sugar.

For the Spanish market it then goes to the centrifugal and is refined; but as this operation would unfit it for the American market, it is kept as large in grain and as poor in quality as possible, that it may be able to pay our duties, and the refiners here have a margin to make a profit.

The molasses is subject to a process by which it produces an inferior sugar and a second grade of molasses, and even this second grade, which formerly was run out into the ditches, is now manufactured into a still lower grade of sugar.

Instead of trying to produce a fine, clear sugar, with high sweetening qualities, the action of our Government virtually encourages the production of the poorest qualities, for which we pay the highest price. Why not have cheap sugar?

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Shrinking of the water in Tulare Lake, Cal., has uncovered a prehistoric settlement, stone buildings, traces of canals once bordered with planted trees, and other evidences of occupation by an unknown race, being clearly defined as the water subsides.

The Dates of the freezing of the Neva have been carefully observed from 1703. It has never frozen sooner than, in 1805, on October 15th, nor later than, 1740, when it froze on December 28th. This year the date is November 15th; the mean date is November 12th.

A Grant of $50,000 has been made by the Minister of Public Instruction at Paris to the French Committee of the International African Association, in order to enable them to establish two stations similar to those which the Belgian expeditions are about to found in Eastern Africa.

The King of Sweden has expressed his wish that after the Vega has reached Naples, Professor Nordenskjöld and Lieutenant Palander should, on their trip overland, visit several geographical societies on the continent. At Copenhagen they are to rejoin their ship, and with it proceed to Stockholm.

The Officers and engineers appointed to proceed to Algeria for the survey of the Trans-Saharan railway, are leaving Paris by batches. They take with them a number of aneroid barometers specially constructed, which will be verified frequently by boiling water with a hypsometer of very simple construction.

M. Perrier, the head of the French Survey, has been appointed a Member of the Academy of Sciences. It may be remembered that M. Perrier is a commander on the staff, and has just accomplished one of the greatest geodetic feats on record, the connection of the South of Spain with the Algerian province of Oran.

The Well-known Boulak Museum at Cairo has been undergoing repairs, and the fine collection was deposited in a neighboring warehouse under what seemed proper guardianship. But robbers the other day broke in through the roof, and they must have been robbers of a certain rank of intellect, for some eighty or one hundred scarabees of great value pecuniarily, and impossible to replace, as they related to the early dynasties, were abstracted, although they were things of no apparent worth to an ignorant person.

The Annual Prize of 25,000 francs ($5,000), given by the King of the Belgians, for works of a scientific character, is now offered for the year 1881. It will be awarded to the author of the best work on the means of improving seaports, situated upon low and sandy coasts, such as Belgian ports. Foreigners as well as Belgian subjects may compete, as the competition is an international one. The works must be sent to the "Ministère de l'Intérieur," at Brussels, before January 1st next. The prize will be awarded by a jury composed of four foreigners and three Belgians, all of whom are nominated by His Majesty.

The Platinum Group of Metals.—The six metals (of which platinum is the chief) usually found more or less in association, present characteristics of interest beyond their metallurgical utility, which are, perhaps, worth alluding to. It is, for instance, a curious fact that the group should consist of three light and three heavy metals, each division being of approximately the same specific gravity—the heavier having (in round figures) just double the density of the lighter series. Thus we find osmium, iridium and platinum forming the first division, of the respective specific gravities of 22.48, 22.39 and 21.46; whilst ruthenium, rhodium and palladium are represented by the figures 11.40, 11.36 and 11, the average densities of the heavy and light divisions thus being respectively 22.48 and 11.25. The metals of the group also vary greatly in their relative properties of stability. Thus platinum, palladium and rhodium form the first or highest class, not being volatilizable in a state of oxide; iridium, osmium and ruthenium forming a second or lower class, their oxides being more or less readily volatilized. An alloy of 90 per cent. platinum and 10 per cent. iridium is used as the international prototype standard of weight and measure.

Destruction of the Sierra Forests.—Western papers are now pointing out the great risk there is of the magnificent Sierra forests becoming denuded, as they are now and for years have been at the mercy of private greed and public theft. Notwithstanding the ravages of the past there are miles of forests left, and many ravines wherein no chopper's ax has yet resounded. It is not the ax alone that is feared, but the sheep and cattle owned by private individuals that have for years been pastured on the Government lands of the Sierras. The common practice has been for a man having perhaps five or ten thousand head of sheep, to purchase one eagle quarter section from the Government to build his house on, and perhaps to hold the best springs of water. From that central point his flocks and herds roam for miles under the spicy pines and cedars, trampling the soft rich ground until it is like iron, destroying every seed, killing all the young trees, and causing the State a yearly loss in the value of her forests, which is far more than the worth of the whole flock of sheep. A somewhat similar devastation has taken place in New England, where forests have been cut down to furnish charcoal for the manufacture of iron. Every ton of such iron has been dearly bought, and not only the present but future generations will have to pay for it.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

KING HUMBERT has bought land in Abyssinia, and is trying to start an Italian colony there.

MR. JAMES GRANT, a wealthy, childless citizen of Iowa, has brought up in his house, educated and set up in business, fifteen orphan boys.

THE Bey of Tunis has given that city a railroad and waterworks, but cannot yet afford gas. The town is, however, very safe and orderly at night.

FRIENDS of Mr. George H. Stuart are about to establish a national bank in Philadelphia with a capital stock of $500,000, and Mr. Stuart as its President.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S face is getting to be covered with puckers and wrinkles, but his hair is little changed from the youthful raven black. His health is said to be failing.

DR. GERHARD ROHLFS, the eminent African traveler, has returned to Berlin, from his last unsuccessful attempt to penetrate into the centre of the Dark Continent.

HERR ETTER, the Prussian Minister of Finance, has a considerable reputation in Germany as a musical critic, and the second edition of his "Life of Bach" has just appeared at Berlin.

SENATOR LAMAR is reported to be rapidly recovering his health, and it is expected that he will be in Washington in a few days. He is now able to walk about without the aid of crutches.

HITHERTO the property of persons dying intestate without known heirs in the Duchy of Cornwall has lapsed to the Crown, but it is now established that it belongs to the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall.

ON the heels of the charge that Tennyson is a plagiarist comes the statement that he has always made wise investments and his fortune now amounts to $1,000,000. This stamps him as the most truly original of poets.

MR. DAVID MATTHEWS, the builder of the first locomotive ever constructed in this country, now lives in San Francisco. This engine was called "The Best Friend of Charleston," and was built at the West Point Foundry Works.

THE Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce has determined to raise a popular subscription for the purpose of placing a marble statue of Reuben R. Springer in the vestibule of the Music Hall. The statue will be executed by Preston Powers, son of the late Hiram Powers.

THE bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church are all more than fifty years of age. Bishop Scott is 78; Bishop Peck, 69; Bishop Simpson, 69; Bishop Bowman, 63; Bishop Harris, 63; Bishop Foster, 60; Bishop Wiley, 55; Bishop Merrill, 55; and Bishop Andrews, 55.

THE richest youthful heiress of the day in England is Miss Maynard, granddaughter of Viscount Maynard. She has £20,000 a year in land, and large accumulations of money. Miss Maynard made her début at a magnificent ball at her seat in Essex last month.

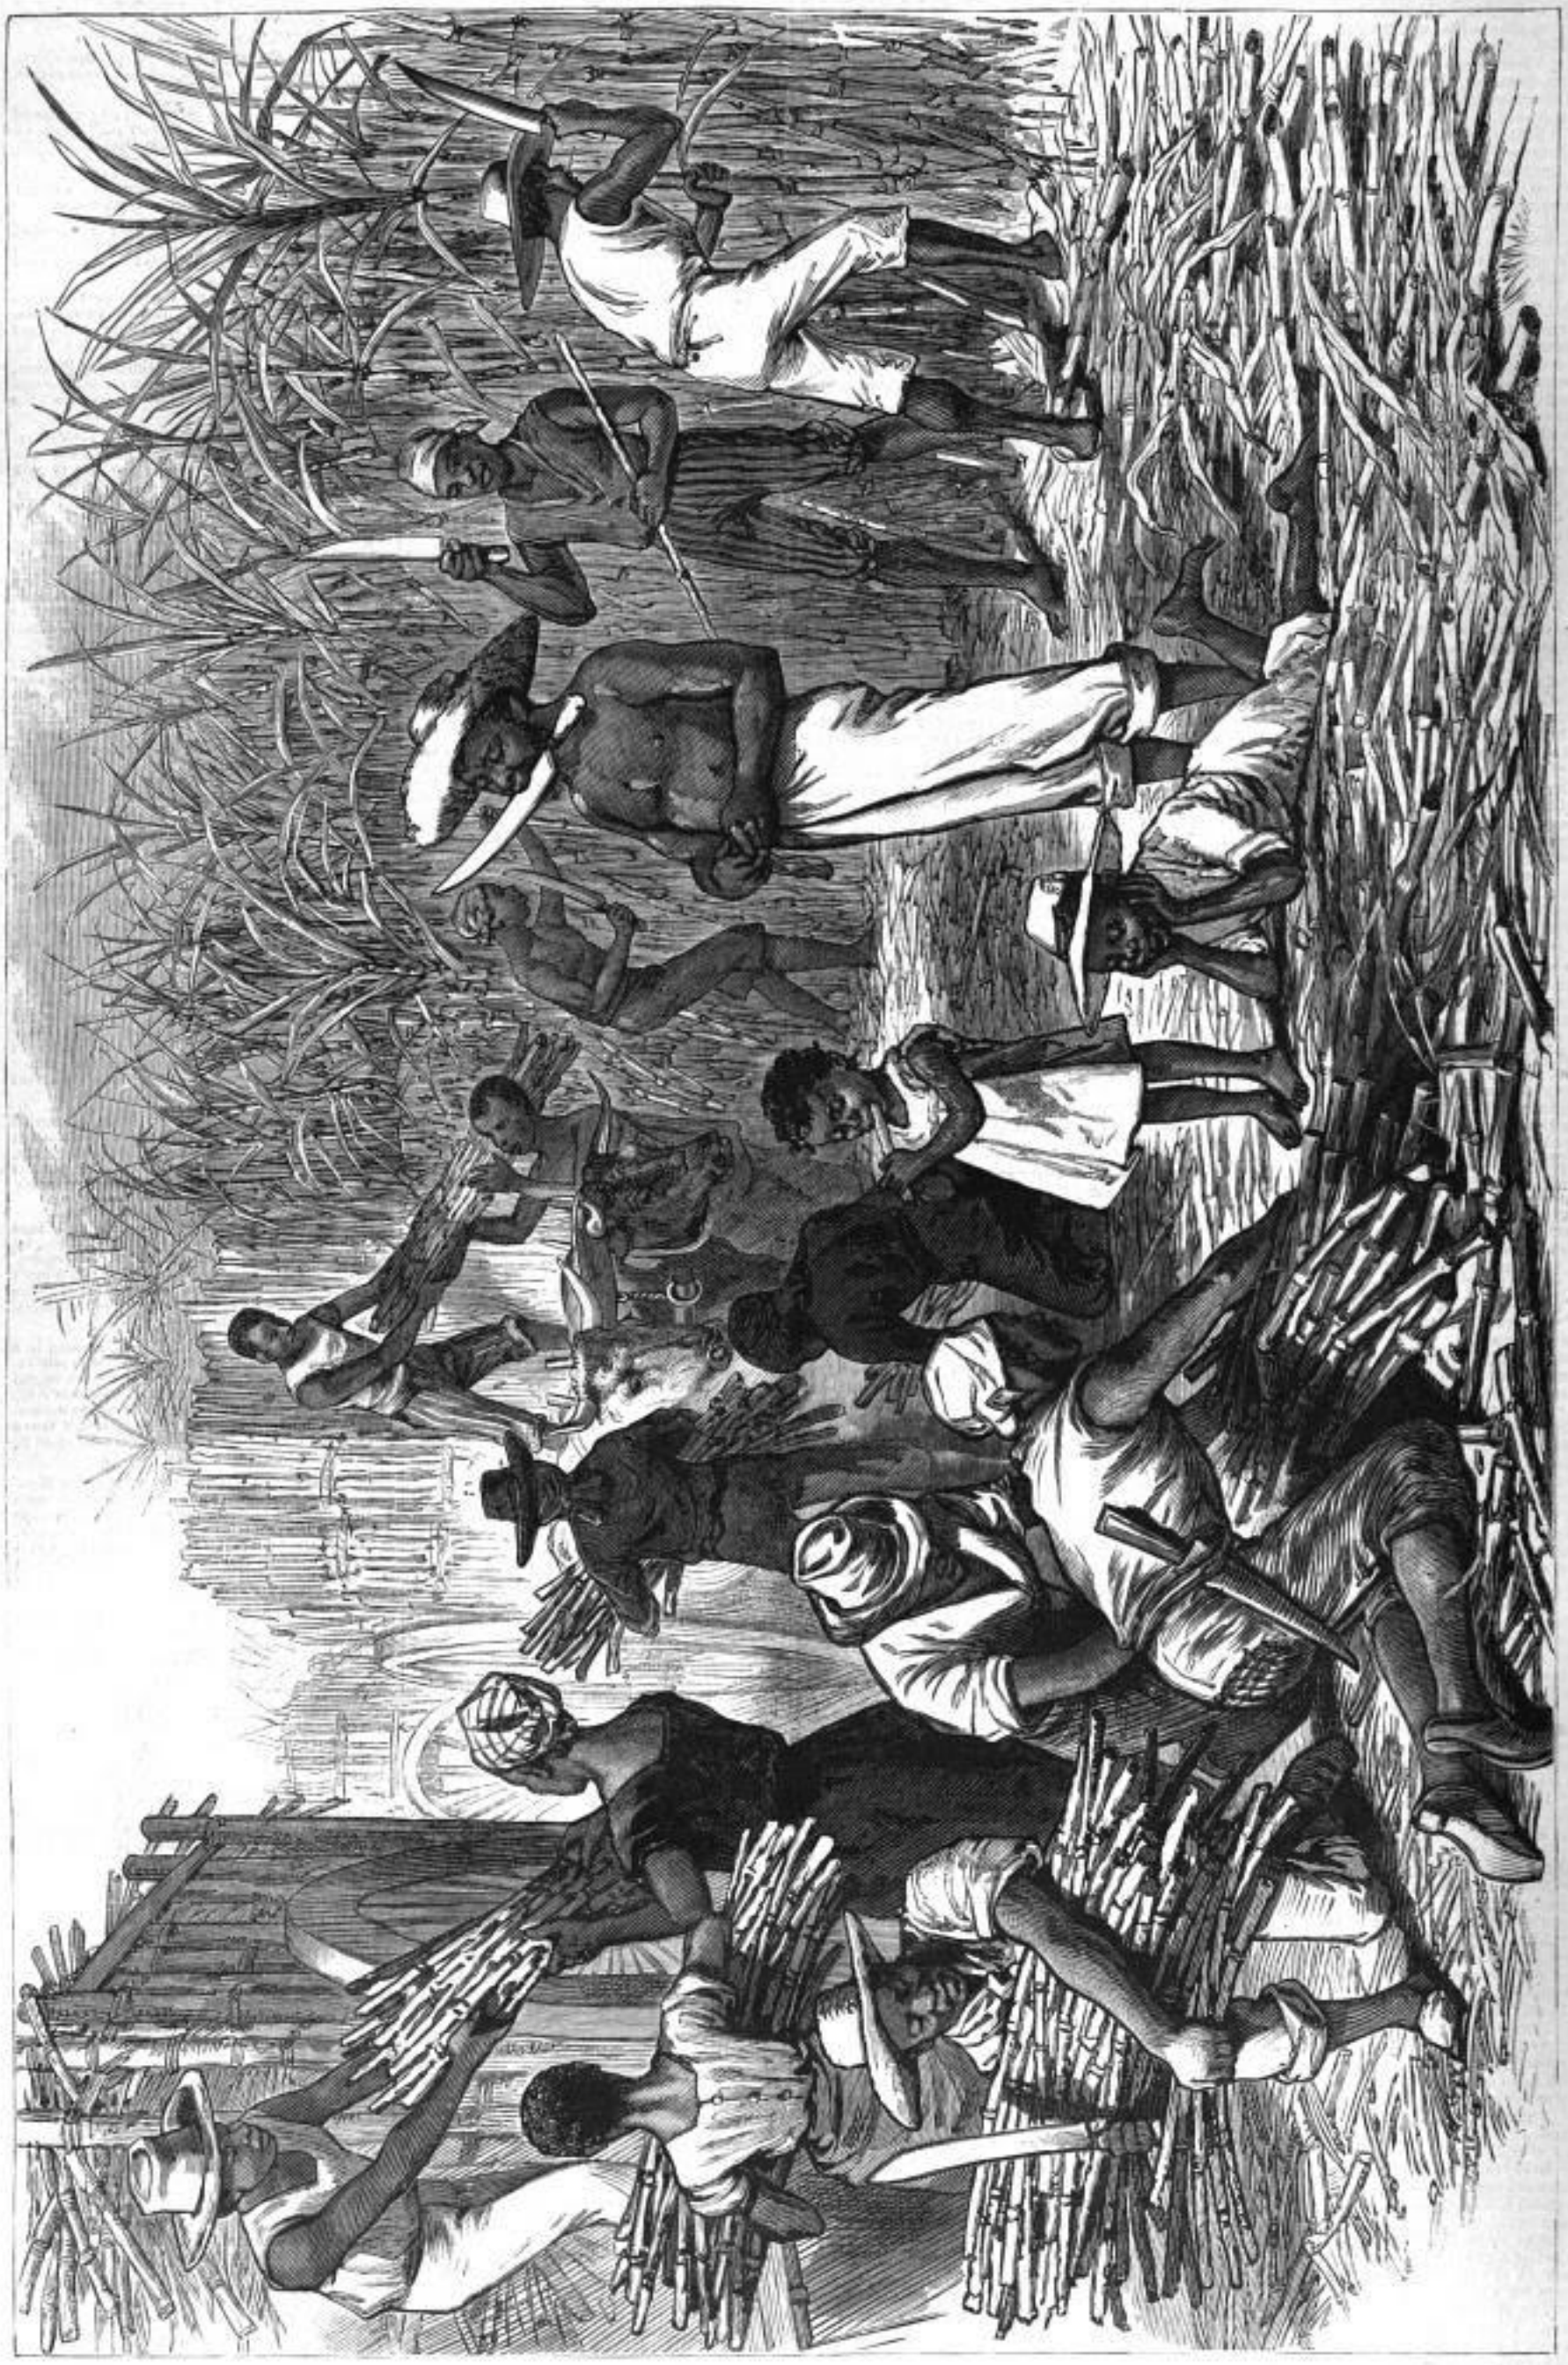
CAPTAIN CAREY is at Malta, and goes by the name of the "Hero." His own brother-officers are very courteous in their behavior to him. At a reception at the Palace, the other day, the appearance of the "Hero" and his wife caused as much excitement as the advent of a professional beauty would have done.

MR. LARKIN J. MEAD, the sculptor, is married to a beautiful Italian lady with whom he could not at first acquaintance talk, neither knowing the other's language. They have a charming home in Florence. Mr. Mead is one of the kindest of men and most generous of artists, always sympathetic and helpful to younger artists.

MR. SAMUEL PLIMSOLL, member of the House of Commons, addressing his constituents at Derby, on February 3d, referred to the loss of life and property caused by the shifting of cargoes, and said that it could be effectually remedied at a trifling expense. The remedy, which he intended to bring before Parliament, was the loading of grain in sacks.

SARAH WINNEMUCCA, the Piute Princess, is a woman of medium height, not very dark, with full, expressive black eyes, a mobile mouth, and much animation when she smiles. She was educated at San José, Cal., and for years has been employed by the Government as an interpreter. She dresses in a dark brown suit with satin trimmings, and a touch of color about it, and wears her hair banged.

THE well-known German newspaper, the Hamburger Correspondent, will shortly complete its hundredth year of life. To celebrate the centenary it will issue some curiosities connected with its own literary history, and among other things it will fac-simile the paper as it was issued when Marshal Davoust was in occupation of the city and caused the paper to be printed in green characters to suit his weak eyes.



THE oldest bishop in the Church of England is Bishop Ollivant of Llandaff, aged 82; the youngest, Rt. Rev. Rowley Hill, bishop of Sodor and Man, aged 44. The oldest prelate of the Irish Episcopal Church is Rt. Rev. John Robert Darley, bishop of Kilmore, aged 80; the youngest, Rt. Rev. Robert Samuel Gregg, bishop of Cork, aged 46. The oldest prelate of the Scotch Episcopal Church is Rt. Rev. Robert Eden, bishop of Moray and Ross (Primus), aged 76; the youngest, Rt. Rev. George Richard Mackarness, bishop of Argyll and the Isles, aged 52.

MR. GEORGE WALKER, who has been nominated by the President to be United States Consul General in Paris, is a Vice-President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, acting President of the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, and President of the Edison Telephone Company. He is a native of New Hampshire, a graduate of Dartmouth, and was a lawyer in Springfield, Mass., previous to coming to this city ten years ago. He has been a member of the State Senate in Massachusetts, and has visited Europe several times on financial missions from the Treasury Department.

THE award of the $1,000 prize of the Cincinnati College of Music to Mr. Dudley Buck, of this city, for his cantata, "Scenes from Longfellow's Golden Legend," is gratifying to his friends. The judges were Mr. Otto Singer, of Cincinnati; Mr. Leopold Damrosch, of New York; Mr. Asger Hamerik, of Baltimore; Mr. Carl Zerrahn, of Boston; and Mr. Thomas was presiding judge. It is stated that Mr. Buck's "Golden Legend" and "The Tale of the Viking," by George E. Whiting, were the strongest claimants for the prize, and Mr. Thomas was called upon to cast the deciding vote, which he did in favor of the "Golden Legend."

THE Princess Louise landed at Halifax on Monday, February 24, accompanied by the Governor-General, who had gone on board the Sarmatian. Guards of honor from the Ninety-seventh and Sixty-sixth regiments were present, salutes were fired from the forts and crowds of people on the wharf cheered lustily. The Princess was received by Lieutenant Governor Archibald, Colonel Drayson, R. A., the Mayor and Provincial Secretary, and other prominent officials. The viceregal party at once entered Governor Archibald's sleigh and drove to the Government House. The reception was most hearty; flags were displayed from many buildings and throughout the city.

Digitized by Google

CUBA.—THE GREAT SUGAR INDUSTRY.—CUTTING AND LOADING THE CANE ON THE PLANTATION OF LAS CAÑAS.—FROM SKETCHES BY WALTER YEAGER.—SEE PAGE 459.

Digitized by Google

HON. PHILIP H. MORGAN, UNITED STATES MINISTER TO MEXICO.

HON. THOMAS C. PLATT.

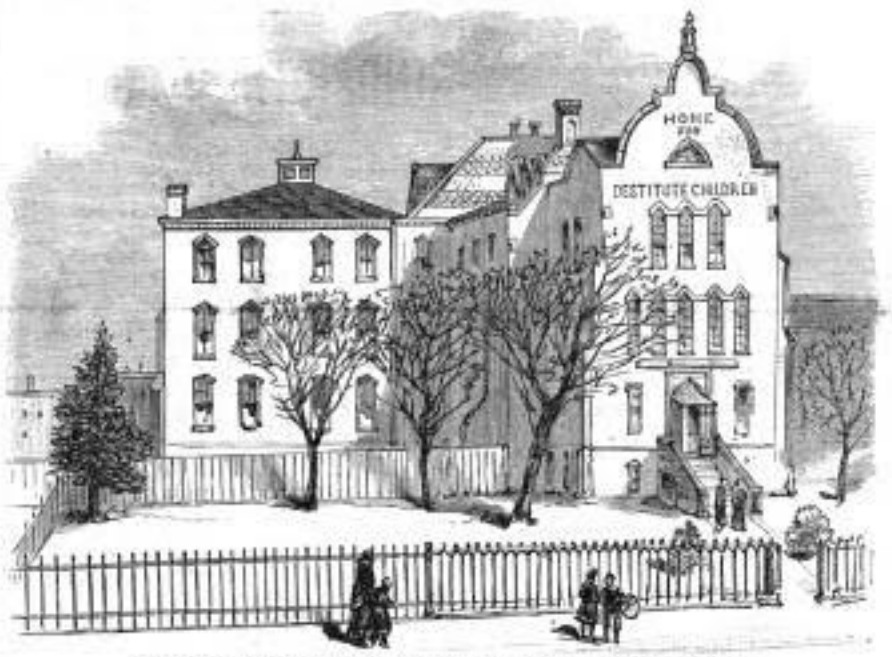
QUARANTINE COMMISSIONER.

EX-CONGRESSMAN PLATT, who has been nominated and confirmed Quarantine Commissioner of the Port of New York, was born at Owego, N. Y., on July 15th, 1833. His early education was at the Owego Academy, then noted as one of the best preparatory schools of the State. Mr. Platt was a member of the Class of 1853 of Yale College, New Haven, but was compelled to withdraw in his junior year on account of serious and continued ill-health. His standing as a student was high, and the scholarly tastes then formed have been since developed, so that, although his life has been one of close attention to business pursuits, he is known to his intimate friends as a gentleman of ripe culture and varied learning. He has always resided at Owego, where he was for years a successful merchant. He has been the President of the Tioga National Bank since its organization, and is also extensively engaged in lumbering in Michigan. He was County Clerk of Tioga for the term commencing with January, 1859, having been elected to the office by a majority in excess of that usually obtained by the candidates of his party even in that strong Republican district. Although several times suggested, and once nominated, as the Republican candidate for Congress, he steadily declined such nomination, until the Autumn of 1872, when he was elected to the Forty-third Congress by a majority of 3,200 over the Hon. Milo Goodrich. The latter was the nominee of the combined Liberal Republican and Democratic parties of the district, and had been the Representative in the Forty-second Congress.

HON. PHILIP H. MORGAN,

UNITED STATES MINISTER TO MEXICO.

PHILIP HICKY MORGAN, the new Minister to Mexico, comes of an old and respected Pennsylvania family, and is a descendant of Thomas McKean, the first Chief Justice of that State. His father, Thomas Gibbs Morgan, came to Louisiana in the early part of this century, and engaged in the practice of law in Baton Rouge, where Philip Hicky Morgan was born in 1825. Arriving at the age when it became necessary for him to choose a profession, his previous studies and natural taste for the study of law decided him to follow in his father's footsteps. He studied law in Paris, having the benefit of such instructors as Troplong and other noted French jurisconsults, and there laid the foundation of that knowledge of the civil law which in after life gave him prominence as an advocate and judge. On his return from Europe he resumed his legal studies, and was soon after admitted to the Bar.



When quite a young man he assisted his father in annotating the Civil Code in the French and English languages, which was published in New Orleans in 1853, and which work was of an immense advantage and assistance to the profession throughout the State of Louisiana. In 1853 he married Miss Beatrice S. Ford, daughter of James Ford, of Baton Rouge, and the year following removed from Baton Rouge to New Orleans. Shortly after taking up his residence in New Orleans, he was elected Judge of the Second District Court, and for four years presided, with marked ability, over that tribunal. In 1866 he was appointed United States District Attorney by Andrew Johnson, then President, and, on the election of President Grant, was re-appointed to that office. He remained only a short while in office under President Grant's Administration, when he resigned. In 1873 he was appointed one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana, and remained on the bench until December, 1876. In the following Spring, 1877, on the inauguration of President Hayes, he was recommended by the President to Ismael Pasha, then Khedive of Egypt, for appointment as Judge of the International Tribunal, sitting at Alexandria, the duties of which position he is now discharging.

In politics Judge Morgan is a Republican of liberal and enlightened views, and his decisions while Judge of the Supreme Court of Louisiana are noted for their great discernment and impartiality.

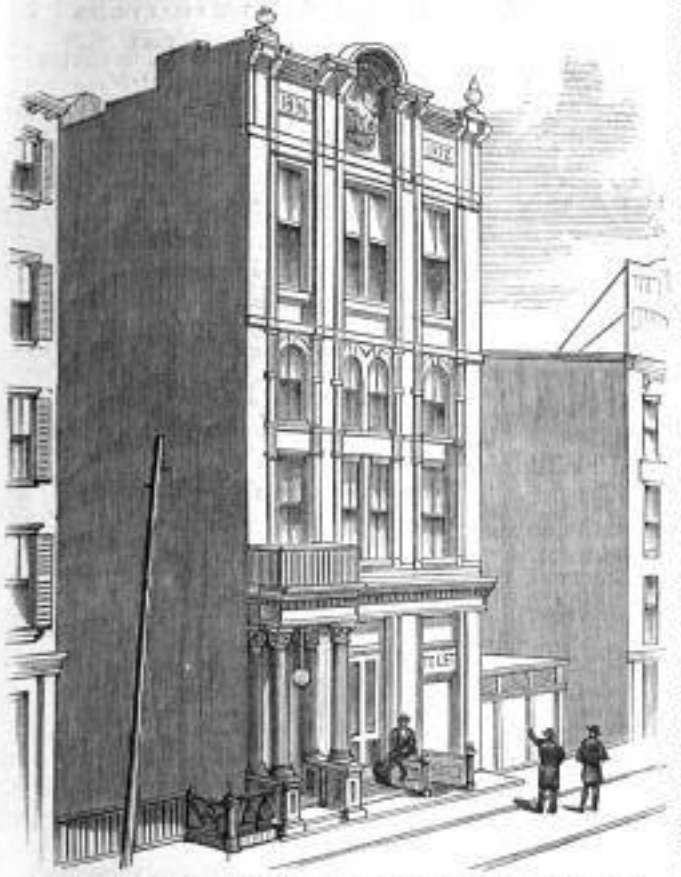
NEW HOME OF THE CALEDONIAN CLUB.

ON Monday evening, January 26th, the New York Caledonian Club commemorated the anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns, and made the occasion doubly memorable by opening the new club-house.

For many years the club had quarters on Sullivan Street, and for its especial use the new club-house has been built out of a sinking fund which the club established at its organization. To this fund were added the proceeds of the annual exhibition games during the Summer, and of the festivals and balls during the Winter. A double lot was secured at Nos. 8 and 10 Horatio Street, fronting on Jackson Square, near Eighth Avenue, and the building, which has been in course of erection for some time past, combines the features of a reading-room and a gymnasium. On the ground floor there is a shop, which is to be let. In the rear of it is an apartment running through two stories, which is intended as a practice-room for the athletes of the club. There are dressing-rooms adjoining, with a bowling-alley in the basement, where is also space for billiard and pool-tables. The club-rooms proper are up-stairs, and are reached by a side door next the shop. Over the shop, extending the full width of the house, and with a lofty ceiling, is the great hall. This is a fine apartment, with a gallery overlooking it. Upon the walls are the standard of the club and flag of Scotland, with other bunting. Back of the chairman's seat is a portrait of Burns in pastel. This room is finished in stucco and natural hardwood, ash being mostly used. Up another story are the reading-rooms and the parlors of the club, with smaller rooms where the checker and chess-players can gather. On the walls in all parts of the building are portraits of prominent Scotchmen, while trophies won by members of the club in caber-tossing, fling-dancing and piping are upon mantels and under cases in every corner. Apartments for a housekeeper and his family are provided on this floor. The exterior of the building is of brick with a heavy finish in light-brown stone, and under the sheet-metal cornice is the inscription, "Caledonia Club," over a lion rampant in gilt, while the numbers 1856 and 1879 tell the dates of the foundation of the society and the building of the new club-house. It is now the finest structure on the square, and is within a few steps of Fourteenth Street and convenient to all parts of the west side. There has recently been a large increase in the membership, and financially the club is in the best condition.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN, BUTLER STREET, BROOKLYN.

THE LATE EX-SECRETARY BORIE.



THE Hon. Adolph E. Borie, Secretary of the Navy under President Grant's first administration, died at his residence in Philadelphia on February 5th, in the seventy-first year of his age. He was born in the City of Philadelphia in the year 1809, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He displayed extraordinary ability as a business man, became a leading Philadelphia merchant and one of the largest importers in the country, amassing the great bulk of his immense fortune in the China trade. He was one of the founders of the Union League of Philadelphia, and took a very active part in the doings of that organization during and since the rebellion. Mr. Borie has always been a most uncompromising Union man, and during the rebellion gave large sums of money to raise troops, and was personally instrumental in placing several regiments fully equipped in the field. He has never, however, been identified to any extent with party politics. The late Secretary of the Navy never held any political office of any description, either local, State or national, and his main actions as a member of the Republican Party have been confined to prevent the frauds that were perpetrated on the people at primary elections. He was a member of the Committee of the Philadelphia Union League who offered a handsome prize for the best essay on the subject of purifying primary or local elections. Mr. Borie took a very active part in the reception and entertainment in Philadelphia of the Southern loyalists who met in convention in that city. He was connected with many business organizations in Philadelphia, being a director of the National Bank of Commerce, a member of the Board of Trade, a manager of the Philadelphia Savings Fund Society—one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the country—and a liberal contributor to various benevolent institutions. During one of President Grant's visits to the Union League House in Philadelphia he remarked something about the liberality of the League during the war, and asked where the money they so freely expended came from, when he was introduced to Mr. Borie as one of the most liberal contributors. Between the two men there started from this point an intimacy which culminated in Mr. Borie being invited into Grant's Cabinet and given the Secretaryship of the Navy. He had been in declining health for a long time, and at ex-President Grant's solicitation Mr. Borie accompanied the party on a portion of the tour around the world, returning to San Francisco in June last. His last public appearance was on the occasion of General Grant's reception in Philadelphia. Mr. Borie was rather below the average height, had a handsome, dignified and expressive cast of countenance, and snow-white beard and mustache. In manner he was polite, refined and affable, and although he belongs to an old and aristocratic family, he was entirely free from ostentation or unbecoming pride.

THE LATE ADOLPH E. BORIE.

DANCING FOR CHARITY.

THE Industrial School Association of Brooklyn was organized in April, 1854, and has since enjoyed a remarkable degree of success. In the first six years of its existence it acquired such prominence, owing to the necessity of the humane labor it had assumed and to the practical manner in which its work was conducted, that it was considered safe to secure ground for the erection of a Home for Destitute Children, an enterprise distinct from its industrial schools. Six lots were accordingly purchased on Flatbush Avenue, running from Baltic to Butler streets, and in 1862 the new building was opened with two days' rejoicings. In 1864 the necessity of increased accommodations became so apparent that a wing was added; and now the Home is so overcrowded that another wing must be provided, together with fireproof staircases and other improvements not contemplated in the original plan. It was to raise the money to defray these necessary expenses that the grand charity ball, given in the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February the 5th, was projected. In addition to the Home proper, of which we publish a view as it now appears, the association has organized and is supporting five industrial schools in various parts of Brooklyn. Schools No. 1 and No. 2 were opened

NEW YORK CITY.—NEW QUARTERS OF THE CALEDONIAN CLUB, ON JACKSON SQUARE.

HON. THOMAS C. PLATT, QUARANTINE COMMISSIONER OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

Digitized by Google

almost simultaneously with the organization of the Society, or within that year. No. 3 was opened and put in working order in 1862, at the opening of the Home.

In January, 1866, a school for colored children was transferred from the care of Plymouth Church to this Association. In 1869 a Home for Destitute Children of the African race was substituted for the school. In 1871 this Home was "temporarily suspended." Subsequently the children who were formerly inmates were boarded in the New York Colored Orphan Asylum. Work in this direction was never resumed, as the Howard Orphan Asylum was appointed for the purpose of caring for this class of destitute children. In the Summer of 1878 the property on which this school building stood was passed over to the use of the aged inmates of Zion Home, at their request.

In December, 1869, a school known as the Border Mission, on Bergen Street, near Flatbush Avenue, was admitted into the care of the Association. In 1871 this school was reorganized and placed on the list as No. 4. In 1875 the school in Throop Avenue was opened as No. 5. It is the youngest in the group, and as such is regarded with peculiar interest.

The ball given for the benefit of the Home proved a most successful and quite profitable entertainment. The Academy of Music was filled uncomfortably at times with a gathering of dancers in elegant toilets. By placing the admission tickets and the boxes at high prices, the committee succeeded in making the company select, and the wisdom of their action was apparent to all.

It was considerably past 10 o'clock when the patronesses of the ball, with escorts, went upon the floor for the opening march, to the music of Barnby's "Rebekah." At that time the interior presented a singularly beautiful appearance. The floor was carpeted, and gave the Academy the appearance of a parlor. Around the floor were built two extra tiers of boxes covered with crimson cloth, which were filled with ladies in brilliant toilets. The rear of the stage had the appearance of a luxurious tropical garden. Huge palms and potted plants formed the background, and in the extreme rear of the stage, behind a mass of beautiful flowers, sat Bernstein's orchestra, which furnished the dancing music. The boxes were all filled, and the seats in the balcony were full of spectators. Flowers were arranged profusely and in excellent taste through the lobbies.

The arrangements for the comfort and convenience of the guests could scarcely have been improved upon. The order of dances contained twenty-three numbers, the round dances predominating. After each dance came a promenade, the music being given by Wernig's Twenty-third Regiment Band, which was placed in the upper gallery. Previous to the opening march selections from Rossini's "William Tell" and from "Fatinitza" were played. The word "Charity," in flaming gas-jets, hung over the stage, and added to the brilliance of the scene.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE "Royal Middy" at Daly's is "booming." Jib-booming, and it bids fair to enjoy a run equal to that of its lawless neighbor, the "Pirates of Penzance." The sparkling music already approaches the barrel-organ.

"Horrors!" as given by Rice's Surprise Party at the Standard, is an admirable bit of mad-waggery.

The Spanish Students, so picturesque-looking, so medieval, so quaint and so handsome, are "drawing the town" to Booth's, where the pièce de résistance, "Humpty Dumpty," is causing side-splitting, genuine laughter.

The "Pirates of Penzance" have nailed their black flag to the mast at the Fifth Avenue, while the Bijou theatre in Madison Square is creating a furore by its charm and its novelty, in addition to the admirable comedy-drama, "Hazel Kirke."

FUN.

THE wind always finds something to blow about.

HASH and mince pie are the mosaics of culinary art.

A TURKEY never finds fault with his dressing. It is thyme this was said for the bird.

AN apparent contradiction: A man living generously and yet giving nothing away.

"HEAVEN lies about us in our infancy," says the poet. Yes, and our neighbors lie about us when we grow up.

"THE will of the people is the will of the caucus." Rather the will of the caucus often proves the won't of the people.

THERE is one thing Congress can take, and the country never protests against it, nor misses it, and that is a recess.

A JAPANESE proverb says, "A beaten soldier fears a reed." But it takes a strap to drive terror into the heart of a boy.

BEGINNING of a judge's charge in Iowa: "Gentlemen of the jury, you must now quit eating peanuts and attend to the case."

"PY SHIMMINY, how dot boy studies de languages!" in what a delighted elderly German said when his four-year-old son called him a pudding-head.

"A SENSES TAKER," said the old lady; "waal, there's me an' Jeremiah, an' Sarah Ann, an' that's all, 'cept Jim, an' he's a fool an' ain't got no senses to take."

PROFESSOR—What is the meaning of the author's allusion to Blanche of Castile, Mr. K.? Mr. K. (feeling his way cautiously)—Well-er-I suppose he is alluding—to some brand of—soap.

SO MANY societies for the promotion of things are established, that Johnnie wants to know why somebody doesn't get up a society for the promotion of boys in school, without making them study so.

A SCHOOLBOY being asked by his teacher how he should flog him, replied: "If you please, sir, I should like to have it on the Italian system of penmanship—the heavy strokes upward and the downward ones light."

A LITTLE boy said he didn't want the soft part of the biscuit. "Some little boys," observed his mother, "would be very thankful to get it." "Then why don't you give it to them?" answered the four-year-old hopeful.

AN old oyster-digger who had caught billions and eaten millions of the delicious bivalve, was delighted with a dish given him at a church fair called "oyster stew." He said it was so new to him—he was sick of oysters.

THE royal family of England has generously contributed £15,000 to relieve the present distress in Ireland. It won't be long, however, before Ireland will be called upon to raise ten times that sum to support the royal family.

"WHY, you'd better knock the door down. What do you want?" "Och, my darling! don't let me wake any of your family. I'm just using your knocker to wake the people next door. I'm locked out, d'ye see, and they've niver a knocker."

AT a performance of the cantata of "Esther" at Dallas, Texas, Ahasuerus was advised by somebody in the audience not to "cut it too fat." The personator of the great Assyrian went to the footlights and said, "This is a religious show, and you'll have to be decent. I'm Ahasuerus just now, but after the show I'm Sam Turner; and if any duffer would like to cut it fat then, I'll give him a mighty lively welcome."

WHAT IS COMPOUND OXYGEN?

IT is a combination of Oxygen and Nitrogen, the two elements which make up common or atmospheric air, in such proportions as to render it richer in the vital or life-giving element. This exact combination, so long sought for by chemists and pathologists, has never before been attained; and its discovery, after long and patient investigation and experiment, marks the beginning of a new era in the healing art. It is now giving back a partial or full measure of health to thousands of suffering men and women who have vainly sought for relief in all the means of cure heretofore within their reach. It acts on scientific principles, and in complete harmony with natural laws and forces. It assists nature to remove obstructions, and restores to her the normal control of all her vital activities. It is not a medicament, but a helper. Our "Treatise on Compound Oxygen," its nature, action, and the results which have followed its administration, sent free. Address, DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1112 Girard St., Phila., Pa.

A RITUALIST curate, who loved his work, was called upon recently to go through many forms and ceremonies at the bedside of a man supposed to be dying. The patient got well, however. "What a pity," exclaimed the curate, on hearing of it, "he was so well prepared to die."

DISTANCE ALL COMPETITORS.

THE dairyman who uses GILT-EDGE BUTTER MAKER will increase his product 6 per cent., improve its quality 20 per cent., and distance all competitors who do not use it. Twenty-five cents' worth of the powder will increase product and market value of the same $3. Can you make a better investment? Sold by grocers, druggists and general storekeepers. Send stamp for "Hints to Butter-Makers." Address, BUTTER IMPROVEMENT CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Bonds and other desirable investment securities, No. 5 Nassau Street, New York, buy and sell all issues of Government Bonds, in large or small amounts, at current market prices, and will be pleased to furnish information in reference to all matters connected with investments in Government Bonds. We are prepared to give information in regard to first-class Railway Securities and to execute orders for the same. Buy and sell all marketable stocks and bonds on commission, at the Stock Exchange or in the open market. Receive accounts of banks, bankers, merchants and others, and allow interest on daily balances; and for those keeping accounts with us we collect United States coupons and registered interest, and other coupons, dividends, etc., and credit without charge. We give special attention to orders from banks, bankers, institutions and investors out of the city, by mail or telegraph, to buy or sell Government Bonds, State and Railroad Bonds, Bank Stocks, Railroad Stocks, and other securities. We have issued the seventh edition of "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," copies of which can be had on application.

FISK & HATCH.

CALIFORNIA WINES.

[From the New York Sun, February 4th, 1880.]

THE surplus export of California wine in 1878 was 2,000,000 gallons. The wine is clean, unadulterated and unmixed. California's wines, wholesome and honest, are sent East by thousands of pipes. Can there be a doubt that if this most important national industry has developed is only let alone, our American pure, cheap wines will utterly drive out of our market the drugged and high-priced French, Spanish, German, Dutch, and Portuguese wines, which are already causes of disease in the United States?

The principal dealers in pure California wines in this city are Messrs. A. WERNER & CO., 306 Broadway, sole proprietors of the celebrated "THE AMERICA" champagne.

PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR, which is so common nowadays, may be entirely prevented by the use of BURNETT'S COCOAINE. It has been used in thousands of cases where the hair was coming out in handfuls, and has never failed to arrest its decay and to promote a healthy and vigorous growth. It is at the same time unrivaled as a dressing for the hair. A single application will render it soft and glossy for several days.

TWENTY-FIVE cents a day buys a $3,000 Accident Ticket to travel with, in THE TRAVELERS.

TO THOSE men who worked Life Insurance successfully, I will pay a salary of $1,200 to $1,800. Send record immediately to H. F. DUCLOS, Superintendent Safety Fund Department, Hartford, Conn. The plan is entirely new and a big success.

ICE-WATER is perfectly harmless and more refreshing with a little HOP BITTERS in each draught.

FOR BRONCHIAL, Asthmatic and Pulmonary complaints, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" manifest remarkable curative properties. Like all other meritorious articles, they are frequently imitated, and those purchasing should be sure to obtain the genuine "BRONCHIAL TROCHES."

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE.—Best relish in use. For family use preferable to all others.

DR. BROWNING'S C. & C. CORDIAL is destined to become the standard medicine for colds, coughs and all conditions resulting from a cold. 50 cents a bottle.

TRUTH is mighty and has prevailed. See its triumph in HOP BITTERS.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ½ and lb., labeled.

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, LONDON, ENG.

MAGIC LANTERN WITH 36 VIEWS 12.00
CATALOGUES FREE THEO. J. HARRACH 809 FILBERT ST PHILA PA

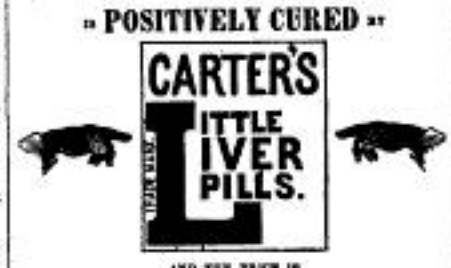
CLEAR HAVANA | Small Cigars, "INFANTES," $11.00 per 1,000. Sample box by mail, 30c. (Agents wanted.) J. M. ANUSZKO, 246 6th Av., N.Y.

One Hundred Years Old.
1780 1880
WALTER BAKER & CO.,
Dorchester, Mass.
Chocolate, Broma & Cocoa
PREPARATIONS
Have been the STANDARD for PURITY and EXCELLENCE for 100 years
Thirteen Medals (First-Class) received at Paris, Vienna, Philadelphia, etc., etc.
SOLD BY LEADING GROCERS EVERYWHERE.
Send for Descriptive Circular and Book of Choice Receipts.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

JUST READY.
Ouida's New Novel.
A Powerful Society Story.
MOTHS,
By "OUIDA,"
AUTHOR OF "IDALIA," "STRATHMORE," ETC.
12mo, 525 pages. Extra cloth, $1.25.



"MOTHS" is decidedly the most interesting story that "Ouida" has written for some years. In the development of an absorbing plot she displays in an eminent degree that rare power which characterizes all her writings.

UNDER THE TRICOLOR
OR,
The American Colony in Paris,
A NOVEL.
By LUCY HAMILTON HOOPER.
12mo. Fine cloth. $1.25.

* For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

SICK HEADACHE
POSITIVELY CURED

AND THEM IS
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them; but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail.
CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

ADELINA PATTI.
ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.
LONDON, ENG., June 16th, 1879.—MESSRS. CHAMPLIN & CO.: Madam Adelina Patti asks you to send her immediately by the next steamer five dozen of your
LIQUID PEARL.
Address, if you please, Madam Adelina Patti at the theatre. By order of Madam Patti. G. FRANCHI.
CHAMPLIN'S LIQUID PEARL is sold by all druggists at only 50 cents a bottle. Beware of imitations.
CHAMPLIN & CO., Prop'rs, Buffalo, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's
LADY'S JOURNAL.
THE
Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal
IN THE COUNTRY,
COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY FROM PARIS,
EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.

ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.
SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive Short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. Its art and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.
FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

NIGHT Scenes: 5 for 25 cts. Sent by mail, sealed. GILBERT & CO., North Chatham, N. Y.

Amusements.

THE NEW MADISON SQUARE THEATRE.
Broadway and West 24th Street.
STEELE MACKAYE.....Manager.
Important improvements in seating, vast lasting, lighting, decoration, and in the double stage, which avoids tedious waits. EVERY EVENING at 8.15, until further notice, and SATURDAY MATINEE at 2.
The New Comedy-Drama entitled
HAZEL KIRKE.
 Box office open 9 A.M. all day. Prices as usual.

FIFTH AVE. THEATRE. SECOND MONTH.
JOHN T. FORD.....Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING AND SATURDAY MATINEE,
D'OYLY CARTE'S LONDON OPERA COMPANY, IN GILBERT AND SULLIVAN'S LAST AND GREATEST SUCCESS, THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE,
Produced under the personal supervision of THE AUTHOR AND COMPOSER.
Seats secured two weeks in advance.
The public are cautioned against ticket speculators.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. HUMPTY DUMPTY.
MARKED EVENT OF THE SEASON.
EMPHATIC SUCCESS.
Every Evening, Wednesday and Saturday Matinées.
ABBEY'S
HUMPTY DUMPTY
and
SPANISH STUDENTS.
200 ARTISTS. 200
Prices—25c., 50c., 75c., $1 and $1.50.
Matinées Reserved, 50c. and $1.
Admittance for children (under 12 years) to Matinées only 25c.
SEATS SECURED ONE WEEK IN ADVANCE at BOOTH'S and ABBEY'S PARK THEATRE.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only theatre under the management of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
EVERY NIGHT AND SATURDAY MATINEE
THE UNIQUE MUSICAL SENSATION
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
 Seats may be secured one month ahead.
A special revival for the WEDNESDAY MATINEES only, beginning with the Matinee February 11th, of GILBERT'S most successful drama of CHARITY, in which Mr. Fisher, Mart Conway, Charles Leclercq, Frank Bennett, Miss Helen Blythe, Regina Dace and Miss Ada Rehan will appear. N. B.—CHARITY will be played only at the WEDNESDAY MATINEES. On Every Evening and Saturday Matinee "THE ROYAL MIDDY" will be acted.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Sole Lessee and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER
Evening at 8. Saturday Matinee at 1:45.
NO PLAY EVER PRODUCED AT THIS THEATRE EVER CREATED LIVELIER DISCUSSION OR WAS SO ENTHUSIASTICALLY HAILED BY THE PRESS AND PUBLIC OF NEW YORK.
THIRD WEEK of THE FALSE FRIEND.
This POWERFULLY INTERESTING PLAY, whose ELECTRIC SUCCESS
Is the best evidence of its EXTRAORDINARY MERITS, Will be presented every evening and at the regular Saturday Matinée until further notice.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner 30th Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
JOHN A. STEVENS'S "UNKNOWN."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
BARTLEY CAMPBELL'S "FAIRFAX."
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS.
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS.
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

STANDARD THEATRE, Thirty-third St. and Broadway.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 24, EVERY NIGHT, and SATURDAY MATINEE at 1:30.
Until further notice, the Society Extravaganza Favorites,
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY
of
OPERATIC EXTRAVAGANZA ARTISTS
in
HORRORS. HORRORS. HORRORS MAGNIFICENT SCENERY, including the
WONDERFUL MOVING SHIP SCENE.
COSTUMES OF RARE BEAUTY.
REMARKABLE NOVELTIES.
SUPERB CAST OF CHARACTERS.
Prices as usual. Seats may be secured two weeks in advance. Carriages ordered at 10:30 P.M.

Digitized by Google

CATARRH

Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal defluxions, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is Dr. M. W. CASE'S

CARBOLATE OF TAR INHALANT

It does not require five minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedial agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT sent. SATISFACTION ALWAYS GUARANTEED. Address,

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS & DEAFNESS.

Circulars, etc., Sent Free.

(When writing for circular, name this paper.)

Dr. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

KEEP'S SHIRTS

ARE THE VERY BEST.

KEEP'S PATENT PARTLY-MADE SHIRTS, only plain seams to finish, 6 for $7.

KEEP'S CUSTOM SHIRTS, very best, MADE TO MEASURE, 6 for $9. Fit guaranteed.

An elegant set of extra heavy gold-plated Buttons presented to purchasers of six shirts.

KEEP'S KID GLOVES (FOR GENTS).

The very best, plain or embroidered, $1.10 per pair.

KEEP'S UMBRELLAS.

BEST GINGHAM, Patent Protected Ribs, $1 each. Warranted. Fifty per cent. stronger than any other umbrella.

REGINA and TWILLED SILK UMBRELLAS.

KEEP'S UNDERWEAR.

Flannel and Knit Shirts and Drawers in White, Scarlet, and Fancy Stripes, from 60c. to $2.50 each.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES

In Gents' Silk, Linen and Cambric Handkerchiefs. Scarfs in elegant designs and effects.

Shirts only delivered free.

Merchants will be furnished with Trade Circulars on application, as we furnish the trade on the most favorable terms.

Samples and Circulars mailed free.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY
631, 633, 635 & 637 Broadway, New York.

SAWING THE LOG.

THE GREAT SUCCESS OF THIS

WONDERFUL, IMPROVED

Labor Saving GIANT RIDING SAW MACHINE is fully demonstrated by the number in use and the present demand for them. It saws Logs of any size. One man can saw more logs or cord wood in one day and easier than two men can the old way. It will saw a two foot log in three minutes. Every Farmer needs one. Township agents wanted. Send for Illustrated Circular and Terms.

Address W. W. BOSTWICK & CO.,
179 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

LADIES WHO prefer a nice quality of Stationery for their correspondence should inquire for Crane's Ladies' Note Papers and Envelopes to match. These goods are presented in Superfine and Extra Superfine Brands, the latter being unsurpassed in Purity, Tone and Beautiful Soft Finish by even the finest foreign production.

DE VENOGE & CIE
CHAMPAGNE
EPERNAY.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOCE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

WITH

FIVE DOLLARS

YOU CAN BUY A WHOLE
IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN

100 Florins Government Bond,

ISSUED IN 1864,

Which bonds are issued and secured by the Government, and are redeemed in drawings

FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY

Until each and every bond is drawn with a larger or smaller premium. Every bond must draw a Prize, as there are no BLANKS.

THE THREE HIGHEST PRIZES AMOUNT TO
200,000 FLORINS,
30,000 FLORINS,
15,000 FLORINS,

And bonds not drawing one of the above prizes must draw a Premium of not less than 200 Florins.

The next drawing takes place on the 1st of March, 1880,

And every bond bought of us on or before the 1st of March is entitled to the whole premium that may be drawn thereon on that date.

Out-of-town orders sent by REGISTERED LETTERS, and inclosing $5, will secure one of these bonds for the next drawing.

For orders, circulars, or any other information, address,

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,
No. 150 Broadway, New York City.
Established in 1874.

N. B.—In writing, please state you saw this in the English Frank Leslie.

☞ The above Government Bonds are not to be compared with any Lottery whatsoever, and do not conflict with any of the laws of the United States.

ELEGANT AUTOGRAPH ALBUM, bound in Gilt, 48 pages, Engraved in Colors, and 44 select Quotations for same, 15c. 12 Photograph Cards, name and photo on, 60c. Send photograph. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

40 ELEGANT Chromo Cards, with name, postpaid, 10 cents. L. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

20 New Style Chromo Cards, 10 cts. Best ever sold. Stamps taken. J. B. HUSTED, Nassau, N. Y.

VICK'S Illustrated FLORAL GUIDE

A beautiful work of 100 Pages, One Colored Flower Plate, and 500 Illustrations, with Descriptions of the best Flowers and Vegetables, and how to grow them. All for a FIVE CENT STAMP. In English or German.

VICK'S SEEDS are the best in the world. FIVE CENTS for postage will buy the FLORAL GUIDE, telling how to get them.

The Flower and Vegetable Garden, 175 Pages, Six Colored Plates, and many hundred Engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 Pages, a Colored Plate in every Number, and many fine Engravings. Price $1.25 a year; Five Copies for $5. Specimen Numbers sent for 10 cents. 3 trial copies for 25 cts.

Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

C. GILBERT'S STARCH

1864—The Original Gift Book Enterprise—1880

Permanently established. THE PHILADELPHIA PREMIUM BOOK CO. (Limited), organized pursuant to Act of Assembly, have completed arrangements with THE LEADING PUBLISHING HOUSES OF AMERICA, which enables them to give to their patrons GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, PARLOR TIDIDITIES, ELEGANT SILK-DRESS PATTERNS, SOLID SILVERWARE, Best English and American Cutlery, and a great variety of STAPLE GOODS of use and value—ALL GIVEN TO PURCHASERS OF BOOKS. All the New and Standard Books at the Lowest Prices. A Gift ranging in value from a Gold Watch to a Pen-knife with each Book at the time of sale. Any Book published, promptly sent on receipt of price. Our New Classified Catalogue for 1880, (a Guide to Choice Reading,) now ready, and will be sent to any address. ☞Send for it! Send for it!!!

N. B.—Books and Gifts free to persons forming clubs. Address Philadelphia Premium Book Company, (Limited). 613 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CATARRH

Asthma and Bronchitis cured at your own home by INHALENE, a healing vapor taken direct to the disease. The most reliable treatment known. Satisfaction guaranteed. ☞ Home Treatment sent on trial, to be returned if not satisfactory. Send for circulars to the HOME MEDICINE CO., S. W. cor. 16th and Arch Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Photos of Actresses 6 for 25c. Special subjects, 3 for 25c. Catalogue of Photos and Books, 3c. FRANK D. TOBEY, 238 State St., Chicago.

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS

Liquid Paints, Roofing, Boiler Coverings, Steam Packing, Sheathings, Fire Proof Coatings, Cements, &c. SEND FOR DESCRIPTIVE PRICE LIST.

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO. 87 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

HENDERSON'S

Combined Catalogue of

SEEDS AND PLANTS

Sent free to all who apply by letter.
Peter Henderson & Co.,
35 Cortlandt Street, New York.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery AND Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 150—166 East Fifty-ninth Street, Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF By sending 25 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage.
Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. Dorman Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

NEW FLORAL AUTOGRAPH ALBUM.

Illustrated with Birds, Scrolls, Ferns, Flowers, etc. (48 pages), covers and edges elegantly gilded; also 47 select quotations—all for 15c., postpaid. (Stamps taken). Agents wanted. Address, G. W. ROCKWOOD, West Haven, Conn.

GIVEN AWAY

New Scarlet Striped Geranium

NEW LIFE!

By mail, paid. To any one sending us $1.25 for 5 plants of this Geranium, we will add a plant gratis. A single plant mailed free for 40c. ☞Our Catalogue containing Colored Plate of above Geranium free. We also send by mail, prepaid, 13 Ever-Blooming Roses, (flowering size, labeled, for $1.25.

UNIONFALLEN GREENHOUSES, Springfield, O.

ELECTRIC BELTS | A PERFECT CURE for premature decay. Send for circular. DR. D. KARR, 832 Broadway, N. Y.

RELIABLE.

DYKES' BEARD ELIXIR Has never failed to force a heavy growth of Hair on the smoothest face, and will do it on the worst. Have more testimonials than ALL other BEARD AND HAIR dyes combined. Sold by druggists, or sent by express, prepaid, on receipt of $1.50. Circulars free. Address, J. L. DYKES & CO., New York, Patchogue, L. I.

OLENT Beautifies the complexion, is nice for the toilet and after shaving. Every young lady and gent should have it. Send 25c. for it to
W. S. SCHERMERHORN, South Schodack, N.Y.

VENUS SAFETY BELT LADIES' BEST FRIEND

Is an indispensable and valuable article that suppliies a want long felt by every lady. It is a useful, fashionable and perfect fitting belt, combining security with ease and comfort. By mail for 60c. 2 for $1. Send waist measure. Lady agents wanted. N. E. Medical Institute, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

TEN PHOTOGRAPHS of FEMALE BEAUTIES, 10 cts. Catalogue free. J. K. DEITZ, Ashland, Pa.

$2 WATCHES. Cheapest in the known world. Agents wanted. Address COULTER & CO., Chicago.

50 Cards, no 2 alike, new style, chromo, motto, mayblo, etc., name on, 10c. H. C. Allen, Northford, Ct.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS! READ THIS! We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. Sole agents wanted now. Sample Free. Address SHERMAN & CO., Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

WE WANT A FEW MORE SALESMEN To Sell to Dealers | Samples free | Send 3c. stamp to insure answer. CIGARS | S. FOSTER & CO., Cincinnati, O.

WANTED—Salesman—for each State. Salary $75 to $100 and expenses. Goods sold by sample. LA BELLE MANUF'G CO., Chicago, Ill.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

IT PAYS to sell our Rubber Hand Printing Stamps. Circulars free. G. A. HARPER & BRO. Cleveland, O

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

Imitation Gold Watches. $3, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D. by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 335 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3696.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, Dr. JAQUES & Co., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

OPIUM and MORPHINE HABIT CURED. Dr. W. H. SQUIER, Worthington, Greene Co., Ind., has been more successful in curing the opium habit than any man living. Send stamp for particulars.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Wallingford, Ct.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

THE POPULAR FAMILY JOURNAL.

Frank Leslie's

CHIMNEY CORNER.

A Constant Succession of New Literary and Artistic Attractions!

This favorite publication has, for the past fifteen years, continuously enlarged its popularity, and is now admitted to be the

LEADING LITERARY FAMILY JOURNAL.

It is the ONLY weekly that gives, with Healthy Fiction, Attractive Novels and Stories, Biography, Travels, Incidents of all Times and Countries, Foreign Manners and Customs, Well-chosen Matter for Young Readers, Examples for the Aspiring Youth of Both Sexes, Natural History in a popular form, the Wonders of Nature, Science, Art, and Human Ingenuity, Adventures with Wild Men and Beasts, Narratives of Daring and Peril, Social Hints, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner

Is that, from week to week, a Library for a Household that forms a perfect museum of attractions, the illustrations being of the highest character.

The following popular writers contribute to its pages: JOHN HABBERTON, Author of "Helen's Babies"; M. ROBINSON, Author of "That Mother-in-Law of Mine," "The Janitor's Daughter," etc.; EMMA W. PERKINS; CHRISTIAN REID; MRS. VICTORIA VICTOR, Author of "The Dead Witness"; M. T. CALLOR; FRANK LEE BENEDICT; J. G. DE FOREST; CORET CARNW, Author of "Belle Hodkin of Ballybuden"; PROF. H. C. DE MILLE, and others of equal celebrity.

Each Number contains sixteen pages, eight of which are embellished with beautiful engravings.

Published every Monday. For sale by all newsdealers. Price, single copies, 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4; three months, $1—postpaid.

A NEW SERIAL STORY,
ENTITLED
"ESTHER'S GLOVE,"
BY R. E. FRANCILLON,
Commenced in No. 767 of the

CHIMNEY CORNER,

Issued Monday, January 26th.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE CHEAPEST RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE PUBLISHED.

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

THE

March Number Now Ready.

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"Esther Brandon's Mission Class," by Hart Lytton; Illustrated. "Amber, Ambergris and Pomanders," by Alexander Grayson; Illustrated. "The Puritan Revolution," by the Rev. Lyman Abbott, 5 Illustrations. "The Persecutions of the Huguenots" Part III. (in France, under Louis XIV.) by Alfred H. Guernsey; Illustrated. "Lost on the Steppes of Tartary"; Illustrated. "The River Tiber"; Illustrated. "The Isle of Patmos"; Illustrated. "The Indian Question," by Rev. H. A. Simons. "History of the English Bible," by Henry F. Reddall. "FRANK LESLIE," by the Editor—Illustrations; The Church of the Divine Paternity; The Rev. E. H. Chapin, D.D.; The Vacant Chair; Medals Presented to Mr. Leslie; The First Wood-cut Drawn and Engraved by Frank Leslie.

Serial and Short Stories, etc.—"Harold Burt, the Night Watchman," a Story of the Great Chicago Fire, Illustrated. "The Story of Annette"; Illustrated. "Be-be, the Nailmaker's Daughter," by the author of "Gideon's Rock" (chaps. X.-XII.) "In Hood and Gown; Or, My Shaker Experience," by E. W. Easterbrooke; Illustrated. "Little Stinger" (chaps. V.-VIII.) "Entertaining an Angel," by D. C. McDonald; Illustrated—etc.

Essays, etc.—"The Motive and Rewards of Christian Life." "Why God Became Man." "The Parable of the Prodigal Son in China." "The Apostles' Creed." "The Children of the Bible" (No. II.—Isaac, the Child of Promise) "Comfort Ye, Comfort Ye, My People"—etc.

Sketches, etc.—"General Cambronne"; Illustrated. "Heroic Women at Bryant's Station, Kentucky"; Illustrated. "Adventures at the Bridge of Icronzes"; Illustrated. "A River Story"; Illustrated. "A Boys' Last Hymn in a Garret." "Gehazi's Covetousness." "Sir Matthew Hale"; Illustrated. "Generosity of the Onondagas"; Illustrated. "Cornish Fishermen"; Illustrated. "I Didn't Think," a Lesson in Obedience—etc., etc.

Poems.—"The Song of Labor"; Illustrated. "Morning"; Illustrated. "Gone," by Alfreton Hervey; Illustrated. "None of us Liveth to Himself." "The Storks"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"Salamanca, Spain"; Illustrated. "An Affecting Anecdote by Dean Stanley." "Some Singular Provisions in the Wills of Old Londoners." "Reasonable Economy." "Washington Relics in the Patent Office." "Ancient Writing Materials." "Home from a Cruise." "Assouan on the Nile." "A Boy's Lawsuit." "Faraday's Lost Cup." "Anecdote of Garibaldi." "The Power of Music." "Anecdote of Stradella"; Illustrated. "Talleyrand and Arnold"; Illustrated. "A Hero in Paris"—etc., etc.

"Editor's Portfolio." "Obituary Notices." "Recreations for Sunday Afternoon." "Music—I Have a Glorious Hope."

128 QUARTO PAGES—100 ENGRAVINGS.

Single copy, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid. Send 25 cents for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

GULLIVER LESSEPS AMONG THE LILLIPUTIANS.

The little people trying to tie down the strong man.

N.Y. Central & Hudson River R.R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BRESLIN & COOKE,

Proprietors.

Now open for the reception of guests

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. The cheapest, largest and best book of the kind ever published. Agents wanted who can devote all their time to canvassing for this work. For circulars, terms and territory, address the publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

MABIE, TODD & BARD,

MANUFACTURERS OF

GOLD PENS,

PENCILS, HOLDERS, CASES, etc.

180 Broadway, New York.

Send for Price-List.

Our Goods are for sale by First Class Dealers in the U.S.

THERMOMETERS,

Spectacles, Eye Glasses, Field Glasses, Opera Glasses, Microscopes, Barometers, Compasses, at greatly reduced prices. R. & J. BECK, 1016 Chestnut St., Phila. Send 3 stamps for Illustrated Catalogue of 140 pages, and mention this paper.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Organs 13 Stops, Best Golden Tongue Reeds, 5 Octaves, Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warrant'd 6 years, Stool & Book $90. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $145 to $1025. Before you buy learn to write me, Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

COLUMBIA BICYCLE,

A practical road machine, indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. It augments threefold the locomotive power of an ordinary man. Send 3-cent stamp for 24-page catalogue with price-list and full information.

THE POPE M'F'G CO.,

59 SUMMER ST., Boston, Mass.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, for any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 18 larger sizes. For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn.

FIRM'S

Can for Explosive Fluids.

PATENTED JAN. 21st, 1879.

P. O. Box 2472, N. Y.

STATEMENT

OF

The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York,

F. S. WINSTON, President,

For the Year ending December 31st, 1879.

Annuity Account.

	No.	Ann. Pay'ts.		No.	Ann. Pay'ts.
Annuities in force, Jan. 1, 1879	53	$80,549 09	Annuities in force, Jan. 1, 1880	49	$18,304 97
Premium Annuities		5,681 63	Premium Annuities		5,289 32
Annuities Issued	2	901 00	Annuities Terminated	6	3,437 44
	55	$27,231 72		55	$27,031 72

Insurance Account.

	No.	Amount.		No.	Amount.
Policies in force, Jan. 1, 1879	91,808	$290,774,315	Policies in force, Jan. 1, 1880	95,423	$298,760,817
Risks Assumed	12,910	38,394,554	Risks Terminated	8,685	30,406,002
	104,038	$329,168,869		104,038	$329,168,869

Revenue Account.

Dr.		Cr.
To Balance from last account	$84,174,076 42	By paid Death and Endowments Claims (matured and discounted)	$7,007,235 27
" Premiums received	12,687,881 32	" " Annuities	25,080 76
" Interest and Rents	4,942,311 70	" " Dividends	3,427,479 00
		" " Surrendered Policies and Additions	3,535,800 45
		" " Commissions (payment of current and extinguishment of future)	668,942 74
		" " Contingent Guarantee Account	302,908 08
		" " Taxes and Assessments	330,328 76
		" " Expenses	700,893 60
		" Balance to New Account	85,365,515 68
	$101,804,269 84		$101,804,269 84

Balance Sheet.

Dr.		Cr.
To Reserve at four per cent	$83,210,134 00	By Bonds Secured by Mortgages on Real Estate	$54,895,134 77
" Claims by death not yet due	603,895 00	" United States and other Bonds	18,917,618 12
" Premiums paid in advance	103,892 64	" Loans on U.S. Bonds	9,100,000 00
" Surplus and Contingent Guarantee Fund	4,390,373 17	" Real Estate	3,822,805 18
		" Cash in Banks and Trust Companies at interest	2,363,337 28
		" Interest accrued	1,307,061 07
		" Premiums deferred, quarterly and semi-annual	809,703 97
		" Premiums in transit, principally for December	99,074 35
		" Balances due by Agents	68,358 07
	$88,460,994 81		$88,460,994 81

NOTE.—If the New York Standard of four and half per cent Interest be used, the Surplus is Eleven million one hundred and forty-one thousand, forty-one dollars and four cents.

From the Surplus, as appears by the Balance Sheet, a dividend larger on policies paying the old rates than that for the previous year, also on other policies in proportion, will be awarded to such as shall be in force at their anniversaries in 1880.

The rates for life insurance in this Company were reduced in 1879.

New York, January 22, 1880.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

FREDERICK S. WINSTON, ROBERT H. McCURDY, WILLIAM BETTS, LL.D., SAMUEL R. SPROULLS, SAMUEL M. CORNELL, LUCIUS ROBINSON, WILLIAM SMITH BROWN, WILLIAM H. POPHAM, SAMUEL D. BABCOCK, HENRY A. SMYTHE, WILLIAM E. DODGE, GEORGE S. COE, JOHN E. DEVELIN, MARTIN BATES, WILLIAM A. HAINES, SEYMOUR L. HUSTED, OLIVER H. PALMER, HENRY E. DAVIES, RICHARD A. McCURDY, JAMES C. HOLDEN, HERMANN C. VON POST, GEORGE C. RICHARDSON ALEXANDER H. RICE, WILLIAM F. BABCOCK, F. RATCHFORD STARR, FREDERICK H. COSSITT, LEWIS MAY, OLIVER HARRIMAN, THOMAS DICKSON, HENRY W. SMITH, JOHN H. SHERWOOD, GEORGE H. ANDREWS, ROBERT OLYPHANT, GEO. F. BAKER, JOS. THOMPSON, BENJ. B. SHERMAN,

Frank Leslie's Chatterbox.

FORTY-EIGHT QUARTO PAGES.

UNRIVALED AS A JUVENILE PUBLICATION.

Published monthly. Single copies only 10 cents. Annual subscription, $1, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's Budget.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE OF HUMOROUS AND SPARKLING STORIES, ETC.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST VARIETY MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD.

96 QUARTO PAGES—NEARLY 100 HANDSOME ILLUSTRATIONS.

Annual subscription price, $1.50, postpaid. Send 15 cts. for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF CHESTER...Thursday, February 12, 6:30 A.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, February 19, Noon.
CITY OF NEW YORK....Saturday, February 28, 7 A.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL....Thursday, March 4, 11:30 A.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $80, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 33 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send for circular to

CHAS. W. COPELAND,
Sole Manufacturer,
BOSTON, MASS.

CURIOSITY FOR THE MICROSCOPE.—Sand from the Oil-bearing Rock of the Bradford Oil Regions, and history of well it is taken from, for 25 cts. L. D. FRENCH, P. O. Box 1684, Oil City, Pa.

NOW READY

Frank Leslie's

ILLUSTRATED ALMANAC

For 1880.

A HANDSOME AND USEFUL ANNUAL.

This BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED RECORD of the year contains FOUR EXQUISITE PICTURES in OIL COLORS: "A WELL-BRED DOG," "A SHOCKING EXAMPLE," "FIRST STEPS," and "UP A DAISY."

NUMEROUS FINE ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD.

Illustrations.

The Double Column in the Naiad's Bath, in Luray Cave, Page Co., Va.
The Late Charles Fechter in the "Corsican Brothers."
The World's Temptation.
At the Brook.
Shooting Logs Down the Sierra.
The Late Napoleon Bonaparte, Prince Imperial of France.
Can She Trust Him?
Imperial Golden Wedding in Castle Chapel, Berlin.
The Grand Altar in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York.
The Storming of Stony Point by Gen. Anthony Wayne.
General Espartero, Duke of Victoria.
Running the Lachine Rapids
Shooting Sea-lions at Fur Seal Islands.
The First Dip.
Attempted Assassination of Alfonso, King of Spain.
The Ameer Mahomed Khan.
Washing Horses at "The Point," Havana.
General James Shields.
Reception of Princess Louise and Marquis of Lorne, at Halifax.
Water-Carriers in the City of Mexico.
Baveno, on Lago Maggiore, Italy.
General Dix.
Criticising Mistress's Portrait.
Brighton Beach, Coney Island.
Mme. Elizabeth Patterson Bonaparte.
Eruption of Mount Etna.
Prince Tewfik, New Khedive of Egypt.
Etc., etc., etc.

The work contains, besides the almanac for 1880, a record of the most important and interesting events occurring during the year 1879; calendars; astronomical notes; carefully prepared statistics (valuable for reference), and a great variety of scientific and other articles embodying a large amount of useful information.

Price 25 cts. For Sale by all Newsdealers.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by Frank Leslie, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,274.—Vol. XLIX.] NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 28, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly, 13 Weeks $1.00.

COLUMBIA KEEPS THE WOLF, FAMINE, FROM THE IRISH CABIN-DOOR.

Britannia—"My Lord Beaconsfield! it is rather too bad that we are to receive another lesson in humanity from America."

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 28, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

J. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

TWO PERILS.

SURELY Congress is to blame.

We narrowly escaped civil war after the last Presidential election because of certain technical difficulties in the way of ascertaining the people's choice. Fraud was charged and proven in the counting of the vote in three Southern States, and a President was finally declared elected with a serious cloud on his title. The late Senator Morton foresaw the difficulty that would take place, and tried in vain to induce Congress to pass a law which would settle all disputes that might arise in counting and declaring the electoral vote of the several States. Some feeble attempts have been made to carry out his plan since his death, but so far Congress has allowed the matter to drift along until we are on the verge of another Presidential election.

Now, what is the prospect?

A certainty that the next election will also be a close one, and that both parties will use every means fair or foul to carry their point. On one side are a hundred thousand "ins" led by able and unscrupulous politicians, and commanding abundant means. On the other side, a countless army of "outs," angered over their disappointment three years ago, and determined that if the presidency can be won by questionable means they will try to do what their opponents succeeded in doing in Louisiana and Florida. The recent attempt in Maine is significant of what is likely to happen when Congress meets to declare the result of the next Presidential election.

Another attempt to carry a Presidential election by the methods adopted in the last contest would inevitably result in civil war. This is our first peril, and the present Congress will be criminally to blame if it does not make some provisions that will secure an honest count of the electoral vote.

This is our domestic peril; but there is a second—a foreign one—equally grave.

When the Merrimac issued from Norfolk and sank the United States wooden frigates off the harbor, there was but one obstacle in the way of that vessel steaming for New York Harbor and laying under contribution the metropolis itself. The obstacle was the little Monitor. At that time we all keenly realized that we had no navy, that the cities on our sea coast were absolutely at the mercy of an ironclad fleet. The surrender of Mason and Slidell to Great Britain, with an apology, emphasized the fact that our great country was powerless on the ocean, and at the mercy of any nation which had ships and great guns.

To-day we are just as badly off. Our navy is a wooden sham, and we have no great guns. We built the first monitors, but it is Europe, and not America, which has the monitor fleets. Rodman and Dahlgren were the first to cast great rifled cannon carrying enormous shot, but the big guns of the period are in the arsenals of the Old World, not of the New.

This state of things is humiliating; for it was a British war vessel which protected our citizens when they got in trouble in Alaska; and when an American in Central or South America is misused, he has to claim to be a British subject to be sure of protection.

These are our two perils—one domestic, the other foreign. Possible civil war, and a coast unprotected by navy or proper defenses.

Will Congress take heed?

THE SANCTITY OF PRIVATE TELEGRAMS.

SENATOR SAULSBURY of Delaware has charge of a Bill looking to the protection of private telegraphic correspondence. The Bill emanates from the Western Union Telegraph Company, and provides that telegraphic communications shall be deemed to be private papers of the parties sending and receiving such messages. It further provides that telegraphic correspondence shall be protected from unreasonable search and seizure, and from production in judicial and legislative proceedings to the same extent as letters sent by the United States Mail. In a written document accompanying the Bill the Company call attention to the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution which affirms the right of the people to be secure in their persons, papers, houses and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, and cites the decision of the United States Supreme Court, made in pursuance of said amendment, that "letters and sealed packages in the mail are as fully guarded from examination and inspection, except as to their outward form and weight, as if they were retained by the parties forwarding them in their own domiciles."

We hold with the advocates of the measure that the telegraphic correspondence of the public should receive the same protection, and enjoy the same sanctity, as correspondence transmitted by mail. The mere act of confiding the contents of a message to a third party—the operator—does not, in our judgment, affect the principle and ought not to affect the law which should govern the matter. In this view we are sustained by eminent legal and judicial authority. Judge Cooley, well known as an able jurist, law professor and text writer, lays down the following principles relative to the law which should govern the case under consideration:

"First. Production of telegraph messages defeats the policy of the law, which invites free communication, and to the extent that it may discourage correspondence, it operates as a restraint upon industry and enterprise, and what is of equal importance, upon intimate social and family correspondence.

"Second. It violates the confidence which the law undertakes to render secure, and makes the promise of the law a deception.

"Third. It seeks to reach a species of evidence which, in the very course of the business, parties interested render blind and misleading, and which, therefore, must often present us with error in the guise of truth under circumstances which preclude a discovery of the deception.

"Fourth. It renders one of the most important conveniences of modern life susceptible at any moment of being used as an instrument of infinite mischiefs in the community. Any one can picture to his own mind what would be the condition of things in any neighborhood if its whole correspondence were exposed to the public gaze."

The principles thus enunciated by the author of "Constitutional Limitations" must have weight with every man who gives the subject serious and honest thought. If Congress can be influenced by an opinion so eminently wise, and so thoroughly in keeping with the principles of republicanism, then the measure proposed by the Western Union Telegraph Company should speedily find a place among the restraining statutes of the country.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

IN spite of patriotic exhortations by the Press, the public declines, or rather forgets, to make Washington's Birthday a joyful holiday. Occasionally a busy citizen on his way down town meets, on the morning of the 22d of February, a group of curious old men, clad in an ancient uniform, and he is suddenly reminded that the Veterans of 1812 are celebrating Washington's Birthday. But the veterans are now a mere handful, and are becoming too infirm to parade except in a Fourth Avenue car or in a barouche; and in a year or two more almost the only visible sign of the 22d of February will vanish with the last of these venerable heroes. We have an immense respect for Washington, and we are glad he had a birthday, but as a rule we are too busy to devote a whole day to remembering it. The day is not endeared to the small boy by fire-crackers, and fathers of families are not reminded of it by appeals to their check-books as they are on Christmas and New Year's. It does not come at a time of the year when it would be celebrated by excursions to the country; and to expect a man to sit quietly at home when business is brisk and to reflect on the virtues of Washington, is certainly unreasonable.

Why, after all, should we celebrate any man's birthday? Washington did great things, but the one act of his life in which he had no active and voluntary share was his birth. Were we to celebrate any one of his victories, or his acceptance of the offices of Commander-in-chief or President, we should have a good excuse for so doing; but what was there in the incident of his birth which was particularly creditable to him? The credit of that affair belongs chiefly to the elder Mrs. Washington, and, probably, could she have foreseen that her son would have become famous, she would have appointed his birthday in Summer when all nature calls on men to come to Coney Island and other cool retreats, and to offer the pleasant sacrifice of clams. What has made Washington worthy of eternal gratitude was his great deeds, not his commonplace and unconspicuous adventures. Surely his birth was in no sense his own act, and, so far as is known, it was not different in any respect from the birth of millions of American citizens.

If we are to celebrate Washington's birthday merely because it was an incident which happened to him, why do we not celebrate other events of his infantile career? He must have been weaned as well as born. Let us, then, celebrate on some set day the Weaning of Washington. Such a festival might be made one of great interest to the infants of America, and might fill them with admiration of their country's Father. A procession of minors carrying empty and reversed nursing bottles would be appropriate to the day, and would be a very impressive and imposing spectacle. Then we might celebrate the First Trousers of Washington. Every flagstaff might bear a miniature copy of that interesting garment; and when our children should ask us the reason of this display of banners, we could explain to them who and what Washington was, and urge them to put on with their first trousers something of the moral greatness wherewith Washington was clothed, and to resolve that no parental rod should ever be invited by bad conduct to a close acquaintance with their first or subsequent trousers. About six months later the First Boots of Washington should have their share of public honor, and still another celebration might be given to Washington's First Tailed Coat. The teething of Washington could scarcely be celebrated for the reason that it was not a solitary but a continuous event, extending over a term of years. There is no doubt, however, that he had the measles, the mumps, the whooping-cough and the chicken-pox, and each of those interesting events would deserve a special commemoration day.

Every reason which justifies the celebration of Washington's Birthday will also justify the celebration of the various other events just mentioned. Like his birthday, they were involuntary, being either the act of ancestors or of nature. Like his birthday, they are inseparably connected with him. If we say that his birthday should be celebrated for the reason that, if he had never been born he could not have become the Father of his Country, we may reply that neither could he have attained that proud eminence if he had not been weaned, or if he had never been provided with trousers and boots. And though it is possible for a man to successfully carry on the business of being fathers of their country without having had the measles, it is very certain that had not Washington recovered from the measles he would never have become famous, and we may therefore properly celebrate his recovery from that and all other diseases.

Of course no one would dream of celebrating Washington's death, but we might very appropriately recall it by solemn mourning ceremonies. To such a recognition of such a day no one could possibly object, but to the celebration of his birthday the severely logical mind may take exception so long as other and equally meritorious acts of his infancy are passed by unnoticed. If the real meaning of the celebration of the 22d of February is a desire to express our gratitude that Washington was born, it would be only fair to pay a little attention to Mrs. Washington, and to express our sense of obligation to that noble woman. It is true that in giving birth to George Washington she had not the least intention of doing anything remarkable, but still, inasmuch as her son ultimately became the Father of his Country, we can do a handsome thing by recognizing her as the deserving grandmother of our country. And while we are thus endeavoring to render justice where justice is due, the father of Washington should not be forgotten. He was, doubtless, a worthy man—for his alleged imbecility in the hatchet affair should not be charged against him, inasmuch as the story is without the least foundation. Beyond a doubt he is entitled to more or less credit so far as the birth of his famous son was concerned, and as he probably underwent a good deal of inconvenience at the period when he was made a father, let us give him all the credit he deserves.

We cannot honor the memory of Washington too much; we cannot follow his example too closely, and never in the history of this republic was there greater need than there is at present that we should remember the teachings of him without whom the birth of our country would have been long delayed. Still, it is impossible to compel a nation to have a holiday against its will, and it is scarcely worth while for the Press to annually lament that Washington's Birthday is treated with comparative neglect. Perhaps the people honor Washington quite as much as they would if they made the 22d of February as intolerable as the Fourth of July with noise, or as unwholesome as Thanksgiving Day with excessive feasting.

M. DE LESSEPS—we mean the American Government—has created "coaling stations" for the United States Navy at the Golfo Dulce on the Pacific, and the Chiriqui Lagoon on the Caribbean Sea. It is not unreasonable to suppose that the coals of our ironclads cruising in these waters may give out about the time the first sod of the new canal will be turned, and that during the construction of the waterway that our navy will occasionally drop in with a Paul Pryish, "I hope I don't intrude?"

AND yet another link of gold to the chain of American charity. The Hebrews of New York have generously resolved upon coming to the aid of famine-stricken Ireland. Such a resolution, adopted by such a wealthy class of the community, means thousands—yea, tens of thousands of dollars.

IN a case appointed to come before the Court of Arches, London, last week, the defendant was a vicar of a place in South Wales called Llanddyvnan-cum-Clanvair-Marhâramerthar. Lord Penzance was too ill to attend, and he is not to be envied when convalescence will enable him to hear of the doings in this unpronouncerable vicarage.

THEY have got petroleum on the brain in Germany just now, and the Frankfurter Zeitung announces that a company, with a capital of 1,000,000 marks, has been formed at Bremen to work the recently discovered petroleum springs in Hanover, while a similar company is forming at Berlin. They say American dollars are mixed up with those marks.

MOST people would think that England is tolerably well provided with railways, yet there are no fewer than seventy-two Bills for discussion by the Committee of the House of Commons. Only half a century ago, and railways were hotly opposed, and Stephenson was being interrogated as to the possibility or impossibility of doing fourteen miles an hour.

GOOD news for the followers of the Prophet; for, according to Dr. Dillinger, the converts to Mohammedanism are on the increase. There have been numerous conversions in China and amongst the Malays, whilst one single Mohammedan college at Sierra Leone is about to send one thousand teachers amongst the African tribes. Pilgrimages to Mecca will become fashionable, and the kissing of the Kaaba "personally conducted" by the indefatigable Cook.

THE Moors are cropping up in the Spanish Cortez as well as the Cubans, and Canovas del Castillo has yet another skein to disentangle. Kabyle chiefs, representing several thousand Moors, have petitioned to be placed under the rule of King Alfonso. Canovas considers that the King's hands are about full enough already, and has declined to receive the petition. He recommends, however, that a conference on the affairs of Morocco generally should be held in Madrid.

THE following dialogue, with its pendant, was heard on the occasion of the opening of the British Parliament:

Cabman: "Cab, sir?"

Gladstone: "No."

Cabman (following up): "Cab, sir?"

Gladstone (angrily): "No. I told you I did not want one."

Cabman (to his neighbor): "Ah, there's that Jew been saying nasty disagreeable things again, and putting the People's William out of temper."

AT the meeting of the Union Bank of Australia (held in London) the chairman, referring to the prospects of the future, said the improved condition of commerce here and elsewhere was a good ground for anticipating a greatly-increased value for Australian wool. In the wheat-producing colonies an abundant harvest was all but assured, South Australia alone showing an estimated surplus of from 250,000 to 300,000 tons. In mining matters, recent advices showed a revival of spirit, and the more settled industries, including that of the sugar-planter, were progressive.

Mr. Biggar has his own notions about Irish volunteers, and to a motion for the second reading of the Irish Volunteer Bill in the House of Commons has moved an amendment: "That, in view of the fact that Government prosecution is now hanging over several earnest and true Irishman for advocating in a temperate manner the amendment of the iniquities of the land laws, it is not desirable to put such power into the hands of the executive as is proposed by such Bill, and that it be read a second time this day six months." It is pretty evident that Mr. Biggar considers that such volunteers as the Royal Irish Constabulary are about a protection enough for the Green Isle.

THREE Parliaments opened in one week—the Canadian, the German and the Norwegian. The Emperor William harps upon the labors of the Berlin Congress, and hopes that its peaceful operations may bear fruit in the immediate future. The principal measures for legislation are, a Bill for establishing biennial budgets, a new military law, a prolongation of the law against the Socialists, and for a commercial treaty with the South Sea Islands. The speech naturally justifies the military law as a measure of security necessitated by the increased armaments of neighboring countries. The Anti-Socialist law having failed to stamp out Socialism, its operations are to be extended. The draft of the Bill for the prolongation of the Anti-Socialist law in Germany shows that it is proposed to extend its operation to the 31st of March, 1886. Prussia's matricular contribution to the Empire is set down at 43,641,753 marks. The revenue and expenditures for the financial year of 1880-81 are each estimated at 798,985,589 marks, the ordinary expenditures at 756,223,930 marks, and the extraordinary outlay at 38,761,650 marks. King Oscar had nothing particular to say to the Norwegian Storthing beyond the fact that he intended to increase the tax on tobacco.

Digitized by Google

NOW that there is talk of England adding to her military armaments, we wonder that nobody recalls the story of the Duke of Wellington, who, at a Cabinet Council, when the remark was made apropos of a proposal to reduce the strength of the English army, that in the event of a foreign force landing on the shores of England the whole population would rise like one man, quietly added, "Yes, and they would be knocked down like one man."

THE passage of the Seed Potatoes Bill through the British House of Commons is a step in the right direction. Whilst it is imperatively necessary to relieve immediate want by instant measures, it savors of statesmanship to look ahead, and this rent in the cloud shows a glimpse of blue sky. If the Home Rule party were a united party the policy of conciliation might stand them in good stead now, but Mr. Butt has joined the great majority and Mr. Shaw's ability is mistrusted. In addition to this, the Obstructionists have the heart of the country with them, and the least indication of conciliation would raise such a whirlwind as would utterly overwhelm the luckless member attempting the experiment.

ILL customs die hard, and the Vendetta appears not yet to be extinguished in Corsica. Particulars received of recent proceedings at San Gavino di Carbini, a town sufficiently obscure to have escaped all mention in the excellent guide-books of Adolphe Joanne, show how, after a feud of twelve months' standing, in the course of which several lives have been taken, two families, respectively named Pietri and Nicoli, have been induced or compelled to sign a treaty. The story, which is narrated at length, bears so much resemblance to a famous incident in Les Frères Corses, the names of the peasants are so commonplace, and the scene of the proceedings is so obscure, that a little hesitation before accepting it is pardonable.

"DELIBERATELY ignoring alike the lesson of the past, the dictates of common sense, and the emphatic protests of the higher officers who had come out with the reinforcements, Lord Chelmsford, having put his First Division to bed, obstinately clung to the policy, or, rather, impolicy, of invading Zululand from round the corner." Thus, Archibald Forbes in the current number of the Nineteenth Century. So much for Buckingham! "Archie" thus sums up the masterly inactivity of General Crealock, another of the Home Guards pets: "For three months General Crealock remained stationary, inspecting latrines, cultivating laying poultry and clamoring for pepper." The gallant general cannot complain of want of pepper after this.

PREPARATIONS for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of the Czar are going forward throughout the Russian Empire, Nihilism to the contrary notwithstanding. His Majesty having succeeded to the throne on March 2d, 1855. The Government intend founding a university at Woronesch. Should this idea be realized, Russia even then would have but one university for every eight millions of its inhabitants. The Times Vienna correspondent says the announcement that the Czar, on account of the ill-health of the Empress, has declined all tenders of the attendance of special representatives from other Courts on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne, is officially confirmed.

THE President has issued a proclamation warning all not to trespass on Indian Territory. It is an old story, but the Government never has succeeded, and never will succeed, in stopping the growth of population by any imaginary lines. For a hundred years we have been drawing these lines, but they have proved a series of successive nullities. Government cannot long keep people out of the territory if they determine to go there; and, in fact, the whole policy of isolation is wrong. The Indians will become civilized more rapidly by being scattered through the whites than by being huddled together with no example before them, except that of the border rough. If they are to be isolated, let us obtain some island in the Pacific and transport them to it.

THE Princess Louise has had one lively day of it in the Dominion, let the remaining 364 be as dull to her as the London society papers allege that they are. The opening of the Canadian Parliament must have reminded her, in miniature, of the grand ceremonial at St. Stephen's, at which her august parent so recently "assisted." An escort of Dragoon Guards, the Laird of Lorne in blue and gold, a royal salute of twenty-one guns, a viceregal ditto of nineteen, guards of honor presenting arms, colors drooped, the ladies—bless them!—in full evening dress, the militia in uniform, the judges in ermine and the bishops in lawn! What more need any princess desire? The members of the Commons were summoned by the Usher of the Black Rod to the House of Lords—alias, the Senate Chamber, and duly appeared with the Speaker at their head, and the viceregal speech was read to them in French and English, not by the Lord Chancellor from the Woolsack, but by the son of the Mac-Callumore, in that short, sharp, clear, incisive utterance so peculiar to His Excellency, and so useful in serving to crisp the dullness of official platitudes. The allusion to the distress in Ireland in Lord Lorne's speech was in the best possible taste, and in much "better form" than that of his mother-in-law's.

WE are to have centennial commemorations this year East and West, although centennial does not express the idea exactly. Boston proposed to celebrate in June the 250th anniversary of the landing of Winthrop and his colony, June 12th, 1630, and the foundation of the City of Boston. It will be essentially a Boston celebration, and a memorial volume is already on hand. In the West, Minnesota, though she cannot claim as ancient a colonial and State existence as Massachusetts, proposes to celebrate early in July the discovery of the Falls of St. Anthony in 1680, two hundred and fifty years ago, by the adventurous Franciscan friar Louis Hennepin, and the exploration of that remote region at that period by Hennepin, and also, it must be said, by Greysolon du Lhut, to whom, perhaps, even a greater meed of praise is due.

FRANCE has at length made out the little bill of the expenses of the late war with Germany, the first item of which dates from Saarbrucken, where the chivalrous young fellow who fell in the South African donga, his face to the foe, received his baptism of fire—and the total reaches the sum of $2,648,410,000, or 13,939,000,000 francs! What that Promenade à Berlin has cost! The increase in the German army has naturally excited considerable emotion in France. The most recalcitrant optimist could scarcely divine pacific symptoms from this unforeseen fact. It is stated that when the Reichstag shall have voted the new contingents the German army will be eight or nine infantry regiments stronger than the French—an advantage of a whole corps d'armée. As regards field artillery, there is a slight superiority on the French side, but both in the cavalry arm and garrison artillery they are inferior to their Teutonic rivals.

"THIRD TERM" is again before the people of the United States. If New York holds in much respect the statesmen who framed her first constitution and who accepted the Constitution of the United States, she cannot tolerate a third term. The Constitution of the United States did not, in the eyes of the men who had guided us through our struggle for liberty, sufficiently guard against possible dangers. New York accepted that organic Act with distrust, and in her convention embodied her fears:

"And the convention do in the name and behalf of the people of the State of New York enjoin it upon their representatives in Congress to exert all their influence, and use all reasonable means to obtain a ratification of the following amendment to the said Constitution:

AMENDMENT.

"That no person shall be eligible to the office of President of the United States a third time."

Cannot New York show the same wisdom in 1880 that she did in 1787?

AND so Great Britain has preserved a masterly inactivity in regard to our little bill for Newfoundland fish. The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs having been interrogated in the House of Commons as to the claim of the Government of the United States for damages alleged to have been done by Newfoundland fishermen in Fortuna Bay to the Massachusetts fishing fleet, etc., stated that no measure had been taken relative to the pecuniary claim which was still under the Government's consideration; that no measure had been taken for abrogating or amending clause 33 of the Treaty of Washington relative to the Canadian and Newfoundland inshore fisheries, and that it was not thought necessary to make any communication for ascertaining the purport of the proviso of the convention of 1818. Mr. Bourke in the course of his reply declared that there was no idea of abrogating or amending clause 33 of that treaty. And yet another application from Mr. Secretary Evarts.

THE missionaries in China are much troubled by a very unpleasant infatuation of the natives respecting their children (says the Court Journal). A missionary lately established an orphanage in Nang Pee, and it would have been imagined, considering the superfluity of Chinese infants, that a good many parents would have been glad to have passed off their inconvenient offspring as orphans, instead of drowning them. This, however, was not the case. The missionary was grieved to find that the popular idea of his labors was that he collected children for the purpose of "scooping out" their eyes and extracting their hearts for "medicine." The officials formed the same highly intelligent opinion of the orphanage, and ordered it to be closed. With much difficulty the missionary convinced them at last that he had no taste for infants' eyeballs, and that, being wholly destitute of the profound medical knowledge of the Chinese, he had no temptation to cut children's hearts out. The question of reopening the institution is under consideration.

SOME of the dailies are telegramed with wise hints about the Ritualists in England and some new arrangement with Rome. None is needed. These gentlemen have two roads. They have only to go to Lemberg, in Austria, which, though a small city, presents the curious spectacle of three Catholic archbishops, all appointed by the Pope and recognizing his authority. The Latin archbishop has unmarried clergy who officiate in Latin and give communion under one kind. The Greek archbishop and the Armenian archbishop have among their clergy both married and unmarried men, and these give communion under both kinds. A married man may be ordained, but once ordained cannot marry. If, therefore, a Ritualist clergyman in this country or England wishes to connect himself with the Roman organization, he can go to Lemberg and be received by Latin, Greek or Armenian. If he is received into the Greek or Armen an branch, the fact that he is a married man will be no obstacle to his ordination, and he can return to his English or American flock and receive them into his new church, and they will be as much Catholics as their neighbors who follow the Latin rite. Ecclesiastically, they would be subject to the Archbishop of Lemberg until such time as their numbers justified the appointment of a local bishop. The only point of difficulty—the use of Greek, Slavonic or Armenian in the Liturgy—could be easily adjusted.

GERMANY explains why she is arming to the teeth, and why she is "naturalizing" Alsace and Lorraine by raising German regiments in the annexed and sullen provinces. The semi-official North German Gazette, referring to the warlike interpretation by French newspapers of the German Army Bill, says:

"The French army estimates for 1870 were barely 800,000,000 francs ($160,000,000), while they now exceed 900,000,000 francs ($180,000,000). The French army is better armed and numerically stronger than the German army. The Russian army has also been considerably increased. From the language in some of the French Monarchical journals it would appear certain that if the parties they represent obtained power they would immediately plunge France into war.

"In view of this danger Germany, though earnestly peace-loving, must, for her own safety, follow the example unfortunately set by her neighbors in their immense armaments. Germany's army is her weapon of defense and not of attack. We would be very glad if the same could be said with certainty of the armies of our neighbors."

There is no use in blinking the question. France means to have it out with Germany sooner or later, and Germany knows this too well not to be prepared for any emergency. Therefore, diplomatic excuses and very thin explanations are simply absurd.

WHILST the Sultan shuts himself up in Yildiz Kiosk, surrounded by place-hunting Pashas, who take care that nothing unpleasant shall reach the royal ears, the country is progressing from bad to worse. Misery, destitution, and famine have it all their own way in the provinces. From Europe and Asia comes the cry of distress; letters from Erzeroum give a fearful picture of the condition of several surrounding districts. At Bayazid people have gone mad from hunger, and many have been poisoned by eating roots and mosses; grain is forbidden to cross the border from Persia and Russia, and the local Governor is grinding three years' taxes from the starving peasantry, his excuse being that the money is required for Constantinople. The Vali, or Governor-General, looks on with folded hands, and estimates that there is enough grain in the provinces to feed all the inhabitants; possibly the quantity exists, but it is locked up in the granaries of the tithe-collectors or speculators, and might as well be in the heart of Africa as far as the people are concerned. But the Governor has ordered a list to be made out of the poorest; judging from experience in such matters, the officials employed will take a month to draw up this list, and by that time the destitute will be dead, and the commissioners—for the Turks can do nothing without a commission—sent to verify the list will report that they have not been able to find the people said to be in distress. The Turks give alms freely to professional beggars, to sturdy cripples and stout impostors; but to organize systematic relief they are incapable. A famine is kismet, and it is wrong to fly in the face of Providence. The doctrine is consolatory for those who can believe in it, but it smacks a little of selfishness. On foreign aid alone must the wretched rely, and turn their imploring eyes to the alleviators of their distress of 1875—the Americans and the British.

A STATISTICAL work on the savings banks of the divers countries of Europe, just prepared by M. de Malarce, with the assistance of foreign statesmen, the scholars, members of the Société des Institutions de Prévoyance, shows that from 1874 to 1878, in four years, among the population of 247,000,000, the number of depositors increased from 12,500,000 to 16,000,000, and the total amount deposited from $1,400,000,000 to $1,900,000,000. The most progressive nations were: France (37,000,000 inhabitants), the number of depositors increased from 2,170,000 to 3,100,000, and the amount from $114,780,000 to $203,000,000; Prussia (25,700,000 inhabitants), depositors increased from 2,059,665 to 2,500,528, and amount from $244,400,000 to $325,000,000; Italy (28,000,000 inhabitants), depositors increased from 676,237 to 1,111,474, and amount from $89,200,000 to $129,400,000; Austria (Cisleithan lands, 20,000,000 inhabitants), depositors increased from 1,263,357 to 1,423,926; amount from $129,400,000 to $324,200,000. In the United Kingdom the number of depositors, which in 1861 was 1,609,103, increased in 1874 to 3,132,493, and in 1878 to 2,408,481, and the deposits from $207,600,000 in 1861 to $324,200,000 in 1874, and to $373,000,000 in 1878. The extraordinary progress of France in the last four years is chiefly attributable, according to many reports of the provincial and communal councils and the late reports of the Minister of Commerce, to the laboring people and the promoters of school penny banks. From 1874 to 1877, 8,033 school penny banks were created; to 1878, 10,400; to August, 1879, 12,000. A Bill prepared for the establishment of post-office savings banks will still more help these institutions. As to the ratio of the number of depositors to the population, there is in Saxony one depositor per 3.5 souls; in Denmark, one per 5; in Sweden, one per 7; in the United Kingdom, one per 10.1; in Prussia, one per 10.2; in France, one per 12; in Austria, one per 14. Great Britain stands first among the great nations of Europe.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE President has issued a proclamation warning persons against trespassing on the Indian Territory.

A COMPANY has been organized at Boston for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad in Egypt.

FRANK LAMMENS and Margaret Meierhoffer were found guilty at Newark, N. J., on February 13th, of the murder of the woman's husband.

THE feast of Mardi-Gras was observed at New Orleans, Louisiana; Mobile, Alabama and Galveston, Texas, on February 10th, with more than usual brilliancy.

THE Republican State Committee of New Hampshire have fixed upon May 6th as the time for holding the State Convention to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention.

MR. FRENCH was elected President of the Police Board of New York on February 12th, by Messrs. Wheeler and Nichols; Messrs. Voorhis and MacLean were not at the meeting.

GOVERNOR HAMILTON of Maryland has sent a message to the Legislature urging the abolition of a number of State offices, in pursuance of pledges made to the people by the Democratic party last Fall.

THE House joint resolution, appropriating $20,000 to enable the United States to be represented at the International Fishery Exhibition, at Berlin in April, 1880, was considered in the Senate, February 10th, and passed.

THE City Hall at Albany, N. Y., was destroyed by fire February 10th, and a number of firemen were injured by the falling of the dome. The judgment record on chattel mortgages and the statue of General Hamilton were destroyed.

TWO Federal vessels have recently sailed under sealed orders, one from an Atlantic and the other from a Pacific port, and it is surmised that their destination is the Isthmus, and that their errand has some connection with the canal question.

PROPOSALS for the sale to the Government of $11,000,000 of bonds for the sinking fund were opened February 11th at the Sub-Treasury in New York. The bids amounted to $11,625,000, and over $11,000,000 were accepted in the afternoon on instructions from the Treasury Department at Washington.

SEVERAL members of the New York Congressional delegation have been in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of the Mint regarding the establishment of a branch United States Mint in New York City. There is a Bill now pending in the House for making provision for such an institution.

ON February 11th the Senate adopted Mr. Eaton's resolution calling on the President for copies of all recent correspondence with foreign governments on the subject of an interoceanic canal, and the House also adopted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for commercial and maritime statistics bearing on the subject.

ON February 11th a syndicate, of which the prominent members are Drexel, Morgan & Co., J. and W. Seligman & Co., Hallgarten & Co., and Winslow, Lanier & Co., took $6,000,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad Company at a price believed to be 99 7-10. The issue is for the building of the Second Avenue Line, and was authorized a long time ago.

THE House Committee on Ways and Means have reached a conclusion as to a bond for refunding purposes. By a vote of 11 to 2, a 3½ per cent. bond was decided upon. By a vote of 12 to 1, the committee fixed the terms of the bonds at forty years, with an option to the Government to pay them in twenty years. Authority was also given the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $200,000,000 of four per cent. certificates, to run not more than five years.

Foreign.

A COMMITTEE on Irish relief has been formed at Paris, under the presidency of the Archbishop.

THE directors and the manager of the late West of England Bank have been indicted for fraud and conspiracy.

FRANCE has asked England to bring forward her new proposals for the settlement of the Greek frontier by a special commissioner.

THE Mennonites, hitherto exempt from military service in Russia on account of their religion, will this year furnish a contingent of 130 men.

THE Governor of Alexandretta, in Syria, has been dismissed for the violent treatment of French sailors during an affray with Mohammedans there.

THE Sultan has entertained Sir Austen Layard, British Ambassador, Lady Layard and the members of the British Embassy at dinner. He treated his guests very cordially.

IT is rumored that Lord Salisbury has proposed a mediation between Greece and Turkey by the appointment of a technical commission which shall decide upon a reasonable and military delimitation.

A CONFERENCE of the Powers on the affairs of Morocco is said to have been arranged, and Spain will not, therefore, receive the petition of the Moors, who asked to be placed under her allegiance.

THE Government at Havana has received a dispatch from Spain saying that a treaty has been signed between China and Spain by which Chinamen can be contracted for for labor in Cuba, as has formerly been the practice.

THE session of the Reichstag was opened on February 12th. The speech from the Throne states that confidence is felt in the maintenance of peace through the labors of the Berlin Congress. The Empire would sedulously and unselfishly, and, conscious of its own power, continue to participate in the endeavor to secure a lasting peace for Europe.

CHINA'S hesitation to ratify the Kuldja Treaty on the plea that its representative overstepped his powers has caused some uneasiness in St. Petersburg, as trouble with China might interfere with the Turcoman expedition. Even if China nominally pre-erred peace, her Viceroy on the frontier, Tso-tsung-t'ang, the conqueror of Kashgaria, who has regarded, very impatiently, the negotiations about Kuldja, seems a likely man to make an expedition on his own account, without troubling his Government for formal permission.

A BERLIN dispatch says: "The conditions of peace between Church and State will probably be the consent of the Vatican to recognize the State's right to control education and the nomination of Catholic priests, and in return for this the repeal of all the other clauses of the Falk laws which have been passed for the purpose of coercing the clergy. The Centre party will probably object to the recognition of this fundamental clause of the May Laws, but as the same prescriptions are enforced in other countries, the Vatican cannot oppose them here."

Digitized by Google

The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 471.

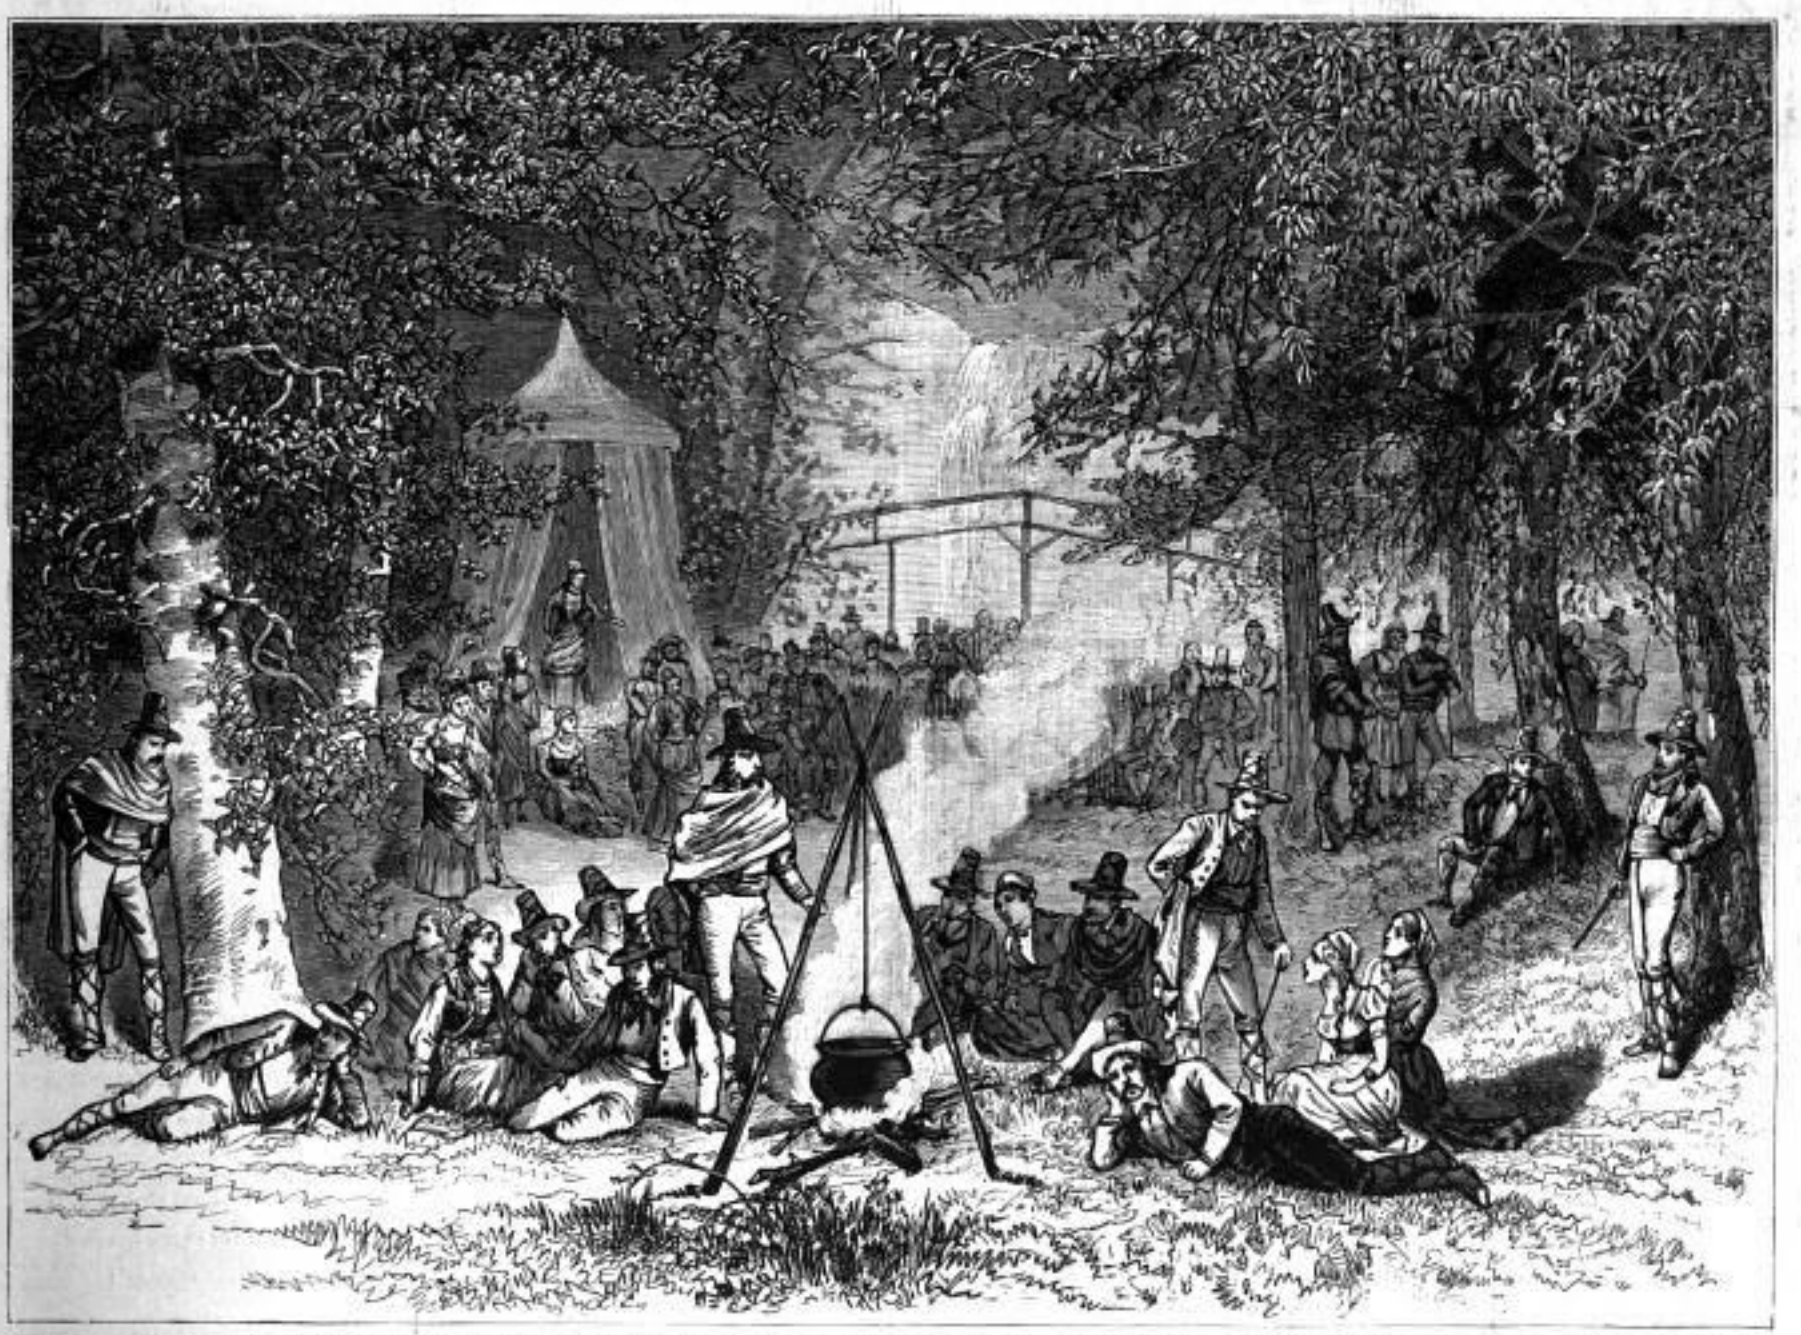
GERMANY.—RECEPTION OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE BLACK EAGLE BY THE EMPEROR.

ITALY.—THE STAIRCASE OF THE QUIRINAL ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

SPAIN.—MANIFESTATION BEFORE THE FRENCH EMBASSY AT MADRID.

AUSTRALIA.—THE SOUTH HEAD BATTERY AT SYDNEY, N. S. W.

MOROCCO.—TAKING TEA WITH THE GOVERNOR OF KARIA-EL-ABBASSI.



AFGHANISTAN.—PREPARING FOR WINTER IN THE SHERPUR CANTONMENT.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—A SCENE FROM "THE ROYAL MIDDY," NOW BEING PERFORMED AT DALY'S NEW THEATRE—"THE QUEEN ENTERING THE STATE BARGE."—SEE PAGE 471.

KENTUCKY.—THE EUTERPE MASKED CARNIVAL AT LOUISVILLE, FEBRUARY 5TH—THE GYPSY ENCAMPMENT, FROM THE OPERA OF "PREZIOSA."—FROM A SKETCH BY C. C. BRENNER, SEE PAGE 471.

Digitized by Google

NOT YET.

OUR day is not yet wholly done,
With scented blooms and songful birds;
Night has not yet obscured the sun,
Or hushed warm kisses and soft words;
But soon, ah, sweet! these things must be,
And we approach the dreamless sea.

Our song is not yet wholly sung
In changing chords, with fullest range—
The lyre not broken or unstrung
By hands untender, rough and strange;
But all songs, love, at length must cease
Where silence is the ghost of peace.

Our tears are not yet wholly shed,
Nor quivering lips yet calm and cold;
The nerves that racked the weary head
May rack and sting us as of old;
But soon those things shall be, my queen,
As though they had not ever been.

Yet ere the sun-glad day depart,
With tuneful music in our ears,
Let us rejoice in life, sweetheart,
Nor dread its bitter, burning tears;
Forget, remember, and forget
The end is—but it is not yet!

JOHN MORAN.

TWO ROADS TO FAVOR.

"WHERE are the trunks? Jupiter, how warm I am! Let me see. Is everything here?—the umbrellas, the air-cushion? My love, you have no idea of the happiness that air cushion will afford. Before the most sublime spectacles of nature, when one is dying with fatigue, one can bring out the air-cushion, seat oneself——"

"Oh, bother—get the tickets!"

"Let me first see that all is here: The umbrellas, one; Flossie's shawl strap, two: Flossie, three; you, my dear, four; your shawl-strap, five; the air cushion, six; the camp-stuff, seven—we are seven——"

"As the little girl in the poem was so fond of remarking," exclaimed Flossie, with a laugh—"'We are seven'; but you forgot to count yourself and your traveling bag, papa."

"Very true," exclaimed Mr. Pettibone, looking about anxiously. "How it does fluster a man. Now, when I am among my spices, I never lose my presence of mind—I am at home. I understand myself."

"But you know you have promised us this trip for two years, and surely it's worth a little trouble."

"Yes, my child—yes, I know it. But, after all, it is better that your education should be completed first. Now you are better fitted to feast your eyes on the grand panorama of nature——"

"Oh, what are you giving us?" snapped Mrs. Pettibone, a thin lady with spectacles.

"Oh, nothing."

"You are making a spectacle of yourself in a railroad depot."

"I am not making a spectacle of myself—I am elevating the ideas of my child. Here, Flossie, is a little blankbook, where you can put down your impressions."

"What impressions?" exclaimed Flossie, examining with interest two young men who were making their way through the crowd in a decided hurry.

"Your impression of all you see."

"And if I don't have any?"

"I will dictate them?" exclaimed Mr. Pettibone, in a pompous manner.

"They will be delightful reading?" said his wife, with a sniff.

The party above consisted of a stout, important looking man, dressed in gray tweed, pedestrian shoes, felt hat, "Murray" in one hand and umbrella in the other. He had a bald head, twinkling eyes, a red face and a very weak mouth. He regarded the other passengers with a complacent look, as one who should say, "Oh, you'll find me affable. I know who I am, and I flatter myself I am known somewhat. I think my note would go on 'Change. Yes, Samuel Pettibone, Spice Dealer, No. 20 Manyrun Street, is not a name wholly unchronicled by fame."

Mrs. Pettibone peered about sharply through her bright spectacles like a female who could not be humbugged. Her hair, of the kind termed "sandy," was screwed up into a hard knot under a drab chip hat. A long blue veil streamed behind, the wind taking liberties with it just at this moment, till it looked like an odd meteor. Her dress—straight, plain, unflounced, untrimmed—bespoke the severe simplicity of her mind. With "gold galore," she cared nothing for gay attire; she was down on shams of all sorts. The young men who fell in love with Flossie—and they were legion—felt a sensation as of cold water trickling down their backs when Mrs. Pettibone approached. Her atmosphere was bracing, but unpleasant as an easterly wind.

But why linger on these two when Flossie—charming Flossie Pettibone!—is waiting to have her portrait taken. We hesitate at the task. What word painting can hint even at the lovely fresh color; the hair that floats away from the coquettish little turban like a golden mist; the childish, yet eloquently tender gray eyes; the tempting mouth; the round white neck; the little, slender little figure; the dainty blue serge dress, pulled back of course and buttoned with gilt buttons; the neat little foot, that even pedestrian shoes do not spoil; the coquettish belt of alligator-skin, with a pouch of the same hanging at her side; the breast of the golden pheasant on her hat that touches her golden hair. Ah! no wonder the two young men, in staring at this vision, tumble over one another, and start back with a cry:

"Great Cæsar! what do I behold?"

"It is—it is my long-lost brother!"

"Show me the plate of strawberries on your left arm?"

And the two rush together again, this time for the purpose of shaking hands.

"Why, Teddy Tadminster, who expected to find you en route for Switzerland? I thought you were grinding at the law."

"And I thought you were slaughtering the innocents—that is, that you were critic for the Plunger, Phil Moran."

"Well, to tell you a secret: I'm in love."

"Why, so am I."

"I'm in earnest—bound to marry her if I can."

"So am I."

"There, how do you like her?—standing by the old girl in gray."

"What—you don't mean—— Good heavens, Phil, do you mean it?—she's mine!"

"The deuce she is!"

"I mean she's the one. The bright particular—you know."

"What—well"—nibbling at his cane moodily—"we can't both have her."

"No—against the law."

"Well, let's have a fair fight, old fellow. The dad's the one to conquer. You see, he has the shekels, and I would not drag the darling down to poverty."

"Nor I, though I love her. Heavens and earth, how I love her!"

"All right, the way is open to us both. We won't let this part us. Whoever wins, the other mustn't sulk. Here's my hand on it." And the two shook hands again.

"What a very remarkable couple of young men," thought Flossie, "they seem to have a mania for shaking hands. But, really, I believe that I have seen their faces before. How delightful, two already! In traveling one can make them so useful. I began to think I was going to be bored. Mamma—imagine!—there are two gentlemen I danced with at the Charity Ball," and Flossie began to direct very friendly glances towards the twain, who, thereupon, took courage and approached.

"Such a surprise!"

"Yes; and going the same way!"

"How delightful!"

"Ah, yes," began Mr. Pettibone, pompously. "I wish to bring my daughter face to face with nature."

"Nature will be charmed at the introduction. I am sure," stammered Teddy.

Flossie had put up a bewitching parasol of deep blue, lined with old gold. The girl's complexion could stand anything, and the yellow light glowed on her face like sunshine. The two young men devoured her with their glances. She dropped her handkerchief—a filmy little thing, embroidered in pale pink and blue, and perfumed with violet. Both flew for it, and two heads filled alone with her image came in collision.

From that time the contest began as to which one should pay the most assiduous court to the old gentleman. All his whims were humored, his self-conceit flattered to the utmost. Philip Moran, who had Irish blood in his veins, distributed his blarney so easily and naturally that poor Ted was sometimes discomfited. He could not go into the "taffy" business with such a candid and innocent air. But, then, Ted had other advantages, he had a straight, beautiful Grecian nose and a lovely dark silky mustache, while Phil's nasal organ was decidedly "tip-tilted," and the hair on his upper lip somewhat off color. Both were, however, nobby-looking young men, and if Flossie did think the softest of Ted's dark eyes, she did not show her preference, being the least bit of a coquette.

What wonderful mornings broke for them amid that glorious Alpine scenery. Did ever sun kindle upon those mountain-tops, snow-crested and pine-girdled, such splendors of dawn? Did ever sunset put such bloom upon the cold snow-fields, till the very glaciers seemed throbbing with a warm heart?

Flossie was wild with delight. They made excursions up the mountains. They gathered the purple heather and fringed gentian and pressed them in the little book Mr. Pettibone had given for "impressions"; and Ted was always the one who suggested tender little lines to write beneath them, while Philip was the daring soul who climbed inaccessible places for bits of odd moss or the white velvety edelweiss. Mr. Pettibone made all these excursions with them, to be sure, and uttered platitudes in the very face of the sublimest scenes with the air of a man who had made a discovery. He wrote in the visitors' book, "When one stands in the presence of Mount Blanc one feels one's littleness"; and he swelled with pomposity as he read this remarkable thought to the rest. In fact, he expanded—bloomed, as it were, in the air of adulation that surrounded him—till Madame Pettibone declared there was no living with him.

As for Flossie, her dream of love made everything roseate and charming. Dear old papa was a funny old darling. Mr. Moran was so entertaining, and Teddy so—ah, what Teddy was the young girl scarcely confessed to herself. She could have said by this time:

"I do not ask thee what thou art,
Nor what thy life in great or small;
Thou art, I know, what all my heart
Must beat or break for—that is all!"

Somehow in the mountain walks she often found herself apart from the others alone with him, bending over some flower, uprooting some fern, looking for the shining threads of ice-cold water, or resting a few moments under a sombre pine-tree. She was startled from these little suspicions of tête-à-tête frequently by her father's call. Having made up his mind to introduce his daughter formally to the beauties of nature, he generally did so in a short oration.

"Ahem! Flossie, my love, stand near me! Do you catch the effect of light there on that shield of snow. See, at the left above that clump of pines. Many an eye would pass over these things lightly, you know, but though I am no artist nothing escapes me. I flatter myself I have a soul capable of appreciating the grand, the beautiful, the sublime. My child, you will never forget that your father led your steps into these solitudes of nature! Ahem! In after years you will remember how we stood here face to face with the grandest——" With these words Mr. Pettibone indulged himself with a tremendous circular gesture, as if he would include the vast panorama about him. His feet slipped, he staggered, fell, and began rolling to the very edge of the precipice. It was Teddy who frantically made a dash at him, and barely escaped being dashed over the slippery edge with him.

"At once there rose so loud a yell,
Above that deep and narrow dell,
As all the fiends from heaven that fell,
Had pealed the banner-cry of hell."

But it was only the combined volume of sound that came from various affrighted throats, and melted into one terrific howl.

"Mercy!—some salts!—some water!—some vinegar!" cried Mrs. Pettibone.

"Oh, papa—papa—how do you feel?" cried Flossie, kneeling by his side.

"I—I am better," exclaimed Pettibone, opening his eyes in a bewildered manner.

"Ah! if it had not been for you!" exclaimed Flossie, raising her beautiful eyes to Ted's face with a glance that almost sent him reeling over the brink, so intoxicating was it.

"Yes; he was nearly over," cried Mrs. Pettibone. "I saw him rolling like an Indian-rubber ball."

"Oh, not quite," faltered Pettibone.

"Yes, you would have gone but for Mr. Tadminster. How can I thank you enough?"

"Oh, I beg——" began Ted, uncomfortably.

"Let me add my thanks," cried Flossie, earnestly. "I will never forget this day—never, while I live!"

Mr. Pettibone felt it incumbent on him to say something by this time. He held out his hand.

"I am not eloquent," he began; "I am a simple-hearted old man; but until this heart ceases to beat, I will never forget you; you will always have a place there."

Poor Ted felt his own heart beating dangerously. He escaped from the gratitude of the company by offering to go for some water. Phil, who had looked on with envious eyes, followed him.

"Well," he growled, "I am conquered. I may as well give up. You have saved the father; you have gotten up a famous adventure. It was not in the programme."

"It was chance."

"Oh! the father is full of gratitude; the mother weeps, and the daughter looks love at you. I'm off—I'll take the evening train for Paris."

"Oh, Philip! then if you are really in earnest, may I beg a favor of you?"

"Speak on."

"If you are really going—if you have made up your mind to give up the contest, I thought—I hoped—but no matter."

"Out with it, man. I don't bear you any ill-will. Providence evidently introduced that precipice on purpose to help you. Kismet! I submit."

"It seems cheeky to ask, but if you could touch on my hopes, my position, to old Pettibone——"

"Oh, the deuce!"

"I dare not do it myself, now. It would seem like asking a reward for my services."

"Do you know that this is rather original—your asking such a service from a rival?"

"Then you refuse?"

"No; I will do it. You are my friend, Ted, although you have beaten me. I have lost my love, let me keep my friend. Confess that I am an obliging rival. I'll go and sound the old man."

Teddy threw himself on the ground and smoked a cigar thoughtfully. As the blue smoke curled upwards, he saw strange things in it—a sweet face with floating, golden hair, a white vail and orange flowers, a pair of red lips made for kissing, a pretty little hand with a plain gold ring shining on it, etc.

Phil, meantime, had sauntered over to the spot where the old gentleman was reposing after his shock. Flossie and her mother had insisted on leaving him to take "a wink of the balmy," but he had no intention of doing so, and hailed Phil as he drew near.

"How do you find yourself by this time?" asked the young man, solicitously.

"Oh, I'm all right. I've taken some rum and water, and, in a few moments, I shall be able to gambol over the sea of ice. How is your friend?"

"He's salubrious! What a good fellow he is."

"Yes. He seems very good-natured."

Phil was rather surprised at the term, and echoed it dubiously.

"We are alone, and I don't mind saying to you that my wife and daughter exaggerate his action immensely," said Pettibone, with a wink.

"You don't say so!"

"Yes; you know these women. How they lose their heads!"

"But, when Teddy grasped you, were you not rolling over——"

"I did roll, that is true. But, with an astonishing presence of mind, I had seized a small pine which grew in the way. I had hold of it when your friend arrived."

"Humph!" thought Phil, "we shall soon hear that he would have saved himself without help."

"Notwithstanding this, I am thankful to him. His intentions were good. I shall show my gratitude in some way. I shall invite him to my house."

"For a cup of tea," thought Phil.

"It appears that this is not the first time such an accident has happened in this place. It's a bad spot. The guide says he conducted a Russian gentleman here, a prince—it was last Summer—and he nearly tumbled in the same way."

"Really?"

"Yes; but the guide drew him back. You see how easy it is. He paid the fellow a hundred francs for it."

"He paid well."

"Yes; I think it was worth that."

"Not a cent more!" exclaimed Phil, with a smile and a reflection that there was no reason for him to go to Paris that day.

He went back to his waiting friend with lagging steps. After all it was hard to throw cold water on such a glowing heart.

"That old fellow is a monster of ingratitude," he said to himself. "He is too conceited to feel himself obliged to any one."

Ted threw his cigar away and sprang to his feet as his friend approached. "Well?"

"Poor fellow!"

"Have you seen him?"

"Oh, yes."

"And talked with him?"

"Yes."

"Well, did you speak of my hopes?"

"No, my dear old boy. I rather gained courage to think of my own. The old man was in such a frame of mind that I decided not to throw up the sponge. It's a fair fight yet."

Ted dropped again to his old lounging place, and his face changed. "Oh, yes; I suppose so;" and the matter ended.

Strange to say, the young man did not seem to have made the least advance in old Pettibone's regard by his really brave and unselfish risk of life in his behalf. It was not in the old fellow's nature to be generous even of gratitude, and a close observer might have noticed that he chafed under the obligation. He showed a remarkable preference for Phil on all occasions, and even invited him to an excursion on the Mer de Glace, in which Teddy was not included.

But as the ladies did not go, and as they still treated him like a hero, the young gentleman did not complain.

Their pleasant tête-à-tête was interrupted about sunset by an abrupt invasion.

"Salts!—wine!—brandy!" cried Mr. Pettibone.

They rushed out to find the old gentleman, with the help of a guide, supporting Phil.

"Oh! what has happened!" cried all, at once.

"A frightful thing. Here, drink some of this—rub his temples!"

"Thanks! I am better," exclaimed Phil, looking languidly around.

"What has happened?" asked Teddy.

"But for the courage of Mr. Pettibone," said Phil, solemnly, "I should have been brought home a corpse—that is, if my body had been found at all."

"You must not talk," exclaimed Mr. Pettibone, rapturously. "Let me tell it. Fancy, my dear, we were upon the Mer de Glace. Mount Blanc rose before us tranquil and majestic——"

"Oh, never mind that!" snapped Mrs. Pettibone.

"The deuce! Will you let me tell this my own way? We were walking along thoughtfully, as all intelligent souls must do in the presence of the grand in nature. Mount Blanc, the monarch of mountains, rose——"

"Well, it rose before! Do hurry and come to the point!" exclaimed Mrs. Pettibone.

"Who's telling this?" answered the old man, testily. "Perhaps you don't care to hear how I marched on silently over those yawning crevasses; how I heard a sudden noise behind me; how I turned and saw that our dear young friend was about disappearing in one of those fathomless abysses——!"

"Well!"

"Listen. With the greatest presence of mind I threw myself forward——"

"Oh!"

"Yes, on the very edge of the precipice. I held out my alpenstock. He clutched. I pulled and pulled, and after a frightful struggle, a superhuman effort, I drew him out. Yes, I saved his life—thank heaven!" And old Pettibone wiped his brow, as if the struggle had been a great strain on him. "Ah, my friends, it is a famous thing to save a man's life," he said, looking about effusively.

"Mr. Pettibone, words are powerless to express my gratitude for such a service," said Phil.

"That's very true!" exclaimed the old fellow.

"But the heart, Mr. Pettibone—the heart!"

"Ah, yes!" exclaimed Pettibone, seizing the young fellow's hand and shaking it. "It is a pleasant feeling that of saving a fellow-being. If it had not been for me you would have been a mass of broken fragments at present—an unpleasant object. You owe me everything—everything! I shall never forget it."

"Nor I."

"Ah, young man"—to Teddy—"you do not know the pleasure one feels in saving a human life!"

"But, papa, he knows all about it, since he saved yours," urged Flossie.

"Oh, very true. Let the host bring me the travelers' book, that I may write down this occurrence."

From that moment poor Ted's star waned. The self-love of old Pettibone was so inflated by the contemplation of his own courage and presence of mind that our hero sank into the background. Phil recalled his heroic action, and he therefore enjoyed Phil's company. In vain Mrs. P. hinted that Flossie had set her heart on the other, a secret she had discovered by the magnetism of her maternity. The old man never ceased sounding the praises of his favorite.

At last Teddy put his fate to the test, and sent a letter to the old gentleman stating his hopes.

"Good! I have done the same," exclaimed Phil. "So far, so good. But I shall win, poor old fellow!"

"She loves me," said Ted; "she has said so."

"But if her father opposes? Do you know, old fellow, you have done nothing but make mistakes."

"How?"

"You see I love you, Teddy. Let me give you some advice for the next time—for the next time, you understand. You have a dreadful fault."

Digitized by Google

"What is it?"

"You like to do good services. You are too fond of putting people under obligation to you. It is an unhappy passion.

"I don't understand."

"You see, I have lived longer in the world than you. Before obliging a man, first find out whether he's a fool or not."

"Why?"

"Why? Because a fool is incapable of supporting for any time the crushing weight that is called gratitude. It is only men of soul that can do that. For example, this Pettibone. The fact of your saving his life makes you really unpleasant to him."

"I'm afraid that is true," said Teddy, mournfully.

"You will see when your answer comes. He will not remember your services for a minute, or, if he does, they will work against you. A small mind hates to be haunted by one who has a right to its favor."

"Then I'd better oblige no one hereafter," growled Teddy.

"No; but find out what style of individual you are obliging. Ingratitude with some people is a kind of pride. 'It is independence of heart,' a philosopher says. You see, I wisely took an opposite course."

"How?"

"I let myself slip purposely into a little crevasse. It was not dangerous."

"On purpose?"

"Don't you understand? To give a fellow like that a chance to save a companion without danger to himself. Ah! that was a master-stroke! Since that day I am his joy, his triumph, his evidence of heroism. When I appear he expands, he inflates himself, he plumes his feathers! I have the hold on him that vanity has on such a man."

"I'm afraid the game is yours!" exclaimed Teddy, mournfully.

"Learn wisdom, my friend," cried Phil, triumphantly. "Men don't attach themselves to you for the services you render them, but for those they render you!"

"Ah, men—but how about women?"

"Well, women——"

"They comprehend what gratitude is. They guard in the depths of their hearts the memory of a good deed——"

"Hum! you may have the women on your side, but on mine I have the pride of old Pettibone, and that is as high as Mount Blanc. Hullo, here he comes!"

The old gentleman looked very grave as he entered and cleared his throat.

"Gentlemen," he began, pompously, "I am happy to find you together. You have both done me the honor of asking the hand of my daughter. I have decided."

Ted drew a long breath. Phil looked confident and smiling.

"Mr. Morgan, my dear friend, I have done you a little service, I believe. I am going to do another."

"Ah, sir!" with effusion.

"Yes; I have something more to give you. It is a piece of advice, Don't talk so loud near an open door!"

"Good heavens!" muttered Phil, under his breath.

"Yes; you have taught me a lesson. I thank you for it. As for you, Mr. Tadminster, you don't know as much of the world as your friend. You calculate less, but you please me more. If you can win my little Flossie I will say, God bless you both!"

"Oh, sir," began Ted.

"And I wish to add that I do not feel that I have yet requited that great service you did me. I shall always rest under that obligation, for," with a withering glance at Phil, "I am not one of those fools who are not able to support that crushing burden called gratitude. I see my little Flossie below. Don't you think it a pleasant day for a walk?"

Ted looked at his friend deprecatingly. He had won—but he felt a sympathetic throb for Phil's disappointment. But one glance at Flossie's upturned face drew him out like a magnet.

"So—so—you listen at doors!" exclaimed Phil, defiantly.

"Sir, your words intruded themselves on my hearing," exclaimed the old man, irately; "but, is it true that you threw yourself down that crevasse expressly——"

"Of course."

"May I ask—I think you owe me a favor—considering this gross deception, that you will not speak of it to any one?"

"Oh, no; there's no object," said Phil, nonchalantly. "My friend and I took different roads to your favor. I would have won but chance knocked me up. I cave!"

In the meantime Ted was telling Flossie a sweet old story, as they took their way through a lonely winding road. The sunset was kissing its roses over the snow, and the girl's cheeks glowed in the warm light so bewitchingly that Teddy kissed her in the grand and majestic presence of the monarch of mountains. But old Mount Blanc had seen that sort of thing and winked at it many a time before.

"THE ROYAL MIDDY."

IF mad, merry music, a gorgeous mise en scène, glittering groupings, capital acting, pretty women and very teeching costumes are the elements that constitute the success of a comic opera, then is "The Royal Middy" a supreme success. The title suggests "Pinafore" and the "Pirates"; it smacks of the briny, of "shiver my timbers," and the mind's eye instantly beholds a dapper young gentleman in the shortest of jackets, the tightest, yet the loosest, of white trousers, a blue cap with a gold band, and an eruption of brass buttons. A royal middy leads one's thoughts to the youthful heir to the throne of England, whose present lies under the imputation of having tattooed his royal and youthful nose; but as this supposed embryo Lord High Admiral who now floats his flag at Daly's Theatre is in nowise related to the Prince of Wales or Admiral Porter, K. C. B., and as his adventures are pretty much of his own seeking, let us take a brief glance at the cause of his appearance before no less a personage than the Queen of Portugal.

The Royal Middy is a very charming little zingara, named Fonchette; she is "awfully spoony" on Lasterle, secretly married to the young Queen of Portugal, and she comes to the Royal Palace only to be thrust into a closet by her lover in order to make way for the Queen, who has given Lasterle a rendezvous. In the closet are the uniforms of the Royal Middies, and Fonchette, to escape discovery, dons one of them. In the second act, owing to circumstances over which she has but little control, she appears at the Royal Naval Academy and assists in a very remarkable game of chess. The Queen becomes fascinated by the Royal Middy, and, like the Grand Duchess of Gerolstein, promotes her favorite with a startling rapidity. The finale to this act, which we illustrate, possesses all the "go" of opera bouffe at its best. The game of chess has ended, and the Queen is being led to the royal barge by Lasterle, not, however, until she casts one long, lingering glance at the "audacious tar." The mise en scène is admirable, the grouping singularly effective, the colors charmingly blended, and the music chic to the last degree. In the final act a "millionario" from Brazil, captivates Fonchette, and the Queen is reluctantly compelled to abide by her first love. The "Royal Middy" bids fair to enjoy a "Pinafore" run.

EUTERPE CARNIVAL AT LOUISVILLE.

THE annual concert and bal masqué of the Euterpe Society, of Louisville, Ky., was given at Liederkranz Hall on Thursday evening, February 5th. The attendance was very large, and the entertainment was a splendid success, viewed from every point. The hall was beautifully decorated with vines and flowers, and the scene was lively when the gay maskers thronged the floor. The concert comprised a scene from "Preziosa," in which Miss Lou. Bornscheidt took the leading rôle, with Mrs. Schueler as Alcalde, and Mr. Louis Young as the Gipsy Chief. All acquitted themselves admirably. The "anvil chorus," from "Trovatore," was the feature of the evening, and was rendered with precision and spirit by a large chorus. The music was under the able direction of Professor Schueler. After the concert the dancing began, and was continued till dawn. Among the more attractive and tasteful costumes worn by the young ladies were noticeable Miss Lou Fleck as Preziosa; Miss Regina Rosch, Buttercup; Miss Mary Leonard, Undine; Miss Emma Fisher, Flower-girl; Miss Lillie Spelger, Ballad-girl; Miss Lena Stine, Queen of Day; Miss Bertha Schack, Spanish Girl; Miss Mary Drexler, Gipsy Queen. The Pfeiffer Quartet were attractively costumed. To Mr. Jacob Lang, President of the society, and Jul. Eschman, chairman of the committee of arrangements, and his aids, much credit is due for the success of the affair. Our illustration shows the gipsy encampment from the opera of "Preziosa."

A RAILROAD ON ICE.

AN ice-bridge railway connecting the north and south shores of the mighty St. Lawrence between Hochelaga and Longueuil, was formally opened on Saturday, January 31st, in presence of hundreds of interested spectators, assembled on both sides of the river, to witness one of the most novel enterprises of the day. For several hours before the train started, the engine "W. H. Pangman," weighing about 50,000 pounds, was the observed of all observers, being gayly decorated with evergreens, streamers and flags of every imaginable hue. Shortly after eleven o'clock the "Pangman," to which were attached two ordinary platform cars, fitted up with temporary seats, steamed out from the Longueuil wharf amidst the hurrahs and continued cheering of the crowd. Upon the cars, which weighed about eight tons each, were about 200 gentlemen, including the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Premier of the Province; Hon. Mr. Paquet, Messrs. C. J. Coursol, M.P.; J. Monaseau, M.P.; A. Quimet, M.P.; B. Benoit, M.P.; M. Bergeon, M.P.; B. Bernier, M.P.; F. Vannasse, M.P.; L. Hurteau, M.P.; Aldermen Thibault, Grenier and Allard; Hon. S. Barlow, President; Mr. H. A. Allen, Superintendent; Mr. A. B. Chaffee, Treasurer of the South Eastern Railway; Mr. W. H. Pangman, President of the Laurentides Railway; Doctors Kay and Mount; Messrs. J. L. Starnes, C. H. Chandler, G. R. Rolland, J. J. Curran, L. A. Senecal, G. B. Rouillard, ex-Alderman Laberge and a host of others.

As the train left the north shore—where, by-the-way, ice is not so thick or so safe as in midstream—but little progress was made, but as the locomotive proceeded onwards a speed of about ten miles an hour was attained. The road appeared to be in good condition, and no jolting or unpleasant sensations were experienced during the trip. At several points along the track air-holes had been bored in the ice, and occasionally water was observed bubbling up, but not in sufficient quantity to cause the least alarm to those on board. When approaching the south shore the train was brought to a standstill, in order to allow Messrs. Notman and Sandham, who were already waiting on the ice with their apparatus, to photograph the engine and cars. After a delay of ten minutes the whistle sounded, and the train in a very short time afterwards entered the S. E. Railway freight shed, which was appropriately bedecked with bunting, etc. The party having alighted from the train, repaired to a temporary depot, where refreshments had been provided.

COASTING AT NEWBURGH, ON THE HUDSON.

IF the scenery of the river Hudson is "beautiful beyond words" in the tender greens of the Springtime, the glowing blossoms of Summer, and the reds, russets and golds of Autumn, it is also surpassingly lovely in its mantle of ice and in its soft fleecy robes of snow. What pinks and blues and grays and whites greeted our eyes as the train flashed past the rock-ribbed Palisades, past the Highlands, whose summits the sun was gilding with glittering sheen and dazzle; past West Point, so clear cut against the full blue sky, and onwards to Fishkill, where the artist and I alighted from the cars to take the ferryboat that crosses the river to the intensely picturesque city of Newburgh.

The sturdy little boat crunched her way through the hummocked ice like some monster crushing sugared sweetmeats. Ever and anon she would be brought to a standstill, as the barriers to her progress became more defiant, but bit by bit she ate her way and landed us with a triumphant snort at Newburgh dock. The moon—sweet regent of the sky—was sleeping white upon the snow as we cautiously threaded the steep streets that lead to Anne Street Hill, the happy hunting-ground of Newburghers who delight in the intoxicating pastime of coasting.

"We used to have a splendid time," observed an elderly gentleman, dragging a coaster after him, "before the city ordinances prevented us from darting down the hill right out into the centre of the Hudson. The high, old-fashioned knee-jumper was the sled used then, and, you bet, we used to travel like greased lightning. Some of the sleds would carry four of us, and when once started nothing could stop us. We cleared everything, and it was not uncommon to shoot between the legs of horses passing a cross street without hurting the animals or ourselves."

"What class of sled do you use now?" I asked.

"Well, sir, in place of the old-time knee-jumper, we work the 'bob, and a pretty dangerous tool it is. It is composed of two ordinary hand sleds connected together by a stout plank, the length of which makes the length of the sled. The rear end is stationary, and the front is movable with a steering gear like that of the truck-tillers used by the good old fire companies. Some of the bobs will hold as many as twelve or fifteen persons. But here we are."

We suddenly debouched upon an open space, hedged in by onlookers. Pushing our way to the front, a strange and singularly animated scene presented itself. Away down-hill stretched the white track, even as a billiard-table, polished as a mirror, and dotted as far as the eye could reach by sleds of every sort, shape, size and description, occupied by shrieking, cheering, laughing, joyous human beings. Men and—bless their hearts!—the fair sex crowded round the starting-point, all madly eager for a dash on the bob. And the excitement of "slowing away" skirts, and of adding one more to the crew, was in itself a most interesting and enjoyable element. "All aboard!" and everybody clutches something with the tenacity of the devil-fish, the steersman grasps his ropes, and they are off like a flash. On, on! We can see them speeding with terrible swiftness down the half-mile slope, while the cheers of the spectators ring out upon the crisp, frosty night air. The centre of the hill is the favorite point of view, for it is here that the "bob" attains its fiercest velocity, and woe to the sled that travels across its track, woe to the amateur who gets decanted—the "bob" recognizes no obstacle, and is bound to slide its nine hundred yards within the briefest possible space of time. It is scarcely necessary to say that in the "bob" centres much of the attraction. Of course other sleds do very good, and very fancy, work, and the races between well-known citizens develop the most lively excitement. Down they come, one after the other, presenting the appearance of an endless chain. Many of them "steer for shore" when the great hoarse cry announcing an approaching "bob" comes booming along the line. Some gain the haven of refuge in good time, others save themselves by scarce a hair's-breadth, while not a few find themselves flung into the silvered snow amid the jeers of the bystanders. In Newburgh, as in Canada, dogs are pressed into sled service, and butcher and baker boys, after delivering their wares up-hill, enjoy the delightful luxury of a slide home. Since Newburgh is all hills, its coasting enjoys a reputation as old as Washington's Headquarters.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

Knights of the Black Eagle.

The reception of the members of the German Order of Knights of the Black Eagle, by the venerable Emperor, at the royal residence in Berlin, forms a pleasant picture of social life in a country popularly supposed to be constantly preparing for war. Prince Bismarck is seen just stepping over the threshold, followed by Count von Moltke, who steps in bold relief, and other favorites of the sovereign of united Germany.

The Steps of the Quirinal on New Year's Day.

The old palace of the Popes presented a gay spectacle on the first day of the year, as the foreign ministers and the high dignitaries of State called to pay the customary honors to the King of Italy. Diplomatists with their many decorations, brazen and grizzled veterans, the men who lead in Parliament or hold positions in the ministry, all were there. In such a scene at Vienna or Madrid, or Paris, the dignitaries of the Church and many of the old nobility would have appeared also and given a variety to the groups; but at Rome the clergy and the mass of the nobles keep entirely aloof from a régime to which they cannot give any hearty support. This social exclusion of the Court and its adherents is sometimes very trying.

The Manifestation before the French Embassy at Madrid on the 18th of December, 1879.

The sympathy manifested throughout France for the ravages and destruction caused by the inundations in Spain was not unappreciated. The exceptional weather which has visited Europe this year has caused immense distress, and we see with awe how much of human life and happiness depends on the changes of temperature and moisture. In Spain, gratitude prompted a large gathering on the 18th of December before the French Embassy, where an impromptu expression of the thanks of the country was made to France in the person of her representative at the Court of Madrid.

The South Head Battery at Sydney.

These works at Sydney, New South Wales, are considered as forming one of the most effective fortifications in the world, for the purpose of defending the entrance to the harbor. The fort is sufficiently elevated, and protected by its peculiar position on the summit of precipitous and inaccessible cliffs, to be out of the reach of attack in front, and of all danger from return fire of any force or vessel attempting the entrance. From below there is scarcely a possibility of landing, and none whatever of scaling the perpendicular, and, in some places, overhanging rock. Front and flank are perfectly secure from the sea. And even from the rear, by which doubtless troops might approach, there is a considerable ascent, and the landing can only be effected from within the harbor, or by means of an open bay not very practicable for shipping; while on the other hand the fire of the battery can be directed in almost any line, from close upon horizontal to nearly perpendicular, against any vessel long before it enters, and long after it has entered the harbor.

Taking Tea with a Morocco Governor.

This illustration represents a recent traveler author and some of the companions of his journey taking tea with the Governor of Kasta-el-Abbassi, a place described as being "made up by the Governor's house and a group of huts shaded by a few fig and wild olive-trees." The Governor came wrapped in a snowy caik that reached from his turban to his feet, and, throwing off his yellow slippers, sat down barefooted on the mattress. Slaves brought jars of milk and plates of sweetmeats, and Ben-el-Abbassi himself made the tea, and poured it out into beautiful little cups of China porcelain, which his favorite servant, a young mulatto, with his face tattooed in arabesques, carried round. After some conversation, in which the Governor displayed absolutely faultless manners, and which was varied by the sudden appearance for an instant of his pretty little daughter at the door behind him, there followed a long interval of silence; then very hearty farewells were taken, the Governor conducting his guests to the door.

Preparing the Shirpur Cantonments for Winter Quarters.

The Shirpur Cantonments, whither General Roberts determined to pass the Winter before he was compelled to retire into them by the present rising of the tribes, are situated very nearly in the same position as those occupied by the British troops in the disastrous campaign of 1842. Then, however, the cantonments were little better than an unprotected range of scattered barracks and houses, whereas now they have been laid out in the form of a spacious rectangle, being well fortified in front, and protected in the rear by some high hills, which were outside the old cantonments, but now are part and parcel of the position. There is a splendid range of barracks, which will protect the troops from the inclement weather of a severe Winter, the ramparts are amply supplied with artillery, and the position is considered, from a military point of view, practically impregnable.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE Mississippi Legislature is holding night sessions.

—THE State of Kentucky paid $10,000 bounty for fox-scalps last year.

—FOURTEEN new gold mines have been discovered in Eastern Siberia.

—UPWARDS of 1,442 persons in the British Empire enjoy hereditary titles.

—FRANCISCAN friars have gone into the wine business extensively at Los Angeles, Cal.

—THE Texas Democratic State Convention is to be held in Galveston on Tuesday, April 20th.

—THE Parisian authorities estimate the damage done by the floating ice in the Paris district alone at $700,000.

—GEORGIA will get a big sum for educational purposes, if the pending Bill to sell public lands shall pass Congress.

—IT is expected that under the re-assessment of property that is about to take place in Virginia, there will be a shrinkage in values of about twenty-five per cent.

—SUGAR made in Louisiana costs $40 per hogshead to produce it, and from one and a half to two hogsheads can be made to the acre, worth from $120 to $160.

—THE Standing Committee of the Society of Friends in Maine are taking steps to oppose the proposed re-enactment of the law providing for capital punishment in that State.

—THE French Government has agreed to the proposal to buy up and pull down the houses adjoining the national library, so as to secure it from the danger of fire. The cost will be 3,100,000 francs.

—THE new Geographical Society of Japan has just published, on a large scale, a map of the City of Yeddo. The names of districts, streets and the like are inserted both in Japanese and Latin characters.

—THE authorities of Gotha have made their report for the year 1879 on the subject of cremation. The first body was treated on the 18th of December, 1878, since when fifteen others have been similarly disposed of.

—ABOUT $1,000,000 are invested and 2,000 persons are engaged in the manufacture of shoes in Auburn, Me., and 4,000,000 pairs of shoes were turned out last year, which was an increase of more than twenty-five per cent. over 1878.

—AT Kolomna, Russia, they have just celebrated the completion, in the machine-shops of that place, of their five hundredth locomotive and ten thousandth railroad car. The first engine was built there in 1868, and is still in active use.

—FOR the first time since the Franco-Prussian war a German newspaper has been started in Paris. It is called the Deutsche Zeitung für Paris, and will be issued daily. It is worth adding that there are in the capital of France no fewer than 50,000 Germans.

—AFTER being a lane for 600 years, Drury Lane becomes a street. It derived its title from the residence of a once distinguished family, long since extinct or sunk into obscurity, Drury House. In a few months the locality will scarcely be recognized, such are the changes being made.

—CALIFORNIA averages higher rates for farm labor than any State in the Union, viz., $41 a month without board, and $2.27 a day for transient help in harvest times. South Carolina is said to pay the least, or an average of $9.83 per month, without board. Transient help is paid for at the rate of 69 cents a day, without board.

—THE Charlottesville (Va.) Chronicle says that $15,000 has been pledged of the $50,000 required for the endowment of the astronomical Professorship in the University of Virginia, upon the establishment of which are conditioned the telescope promised by Mr. Leander J. McCormick, and the sum of $25,000 promised by Mr. William H. Vanderbilt for the observatory.

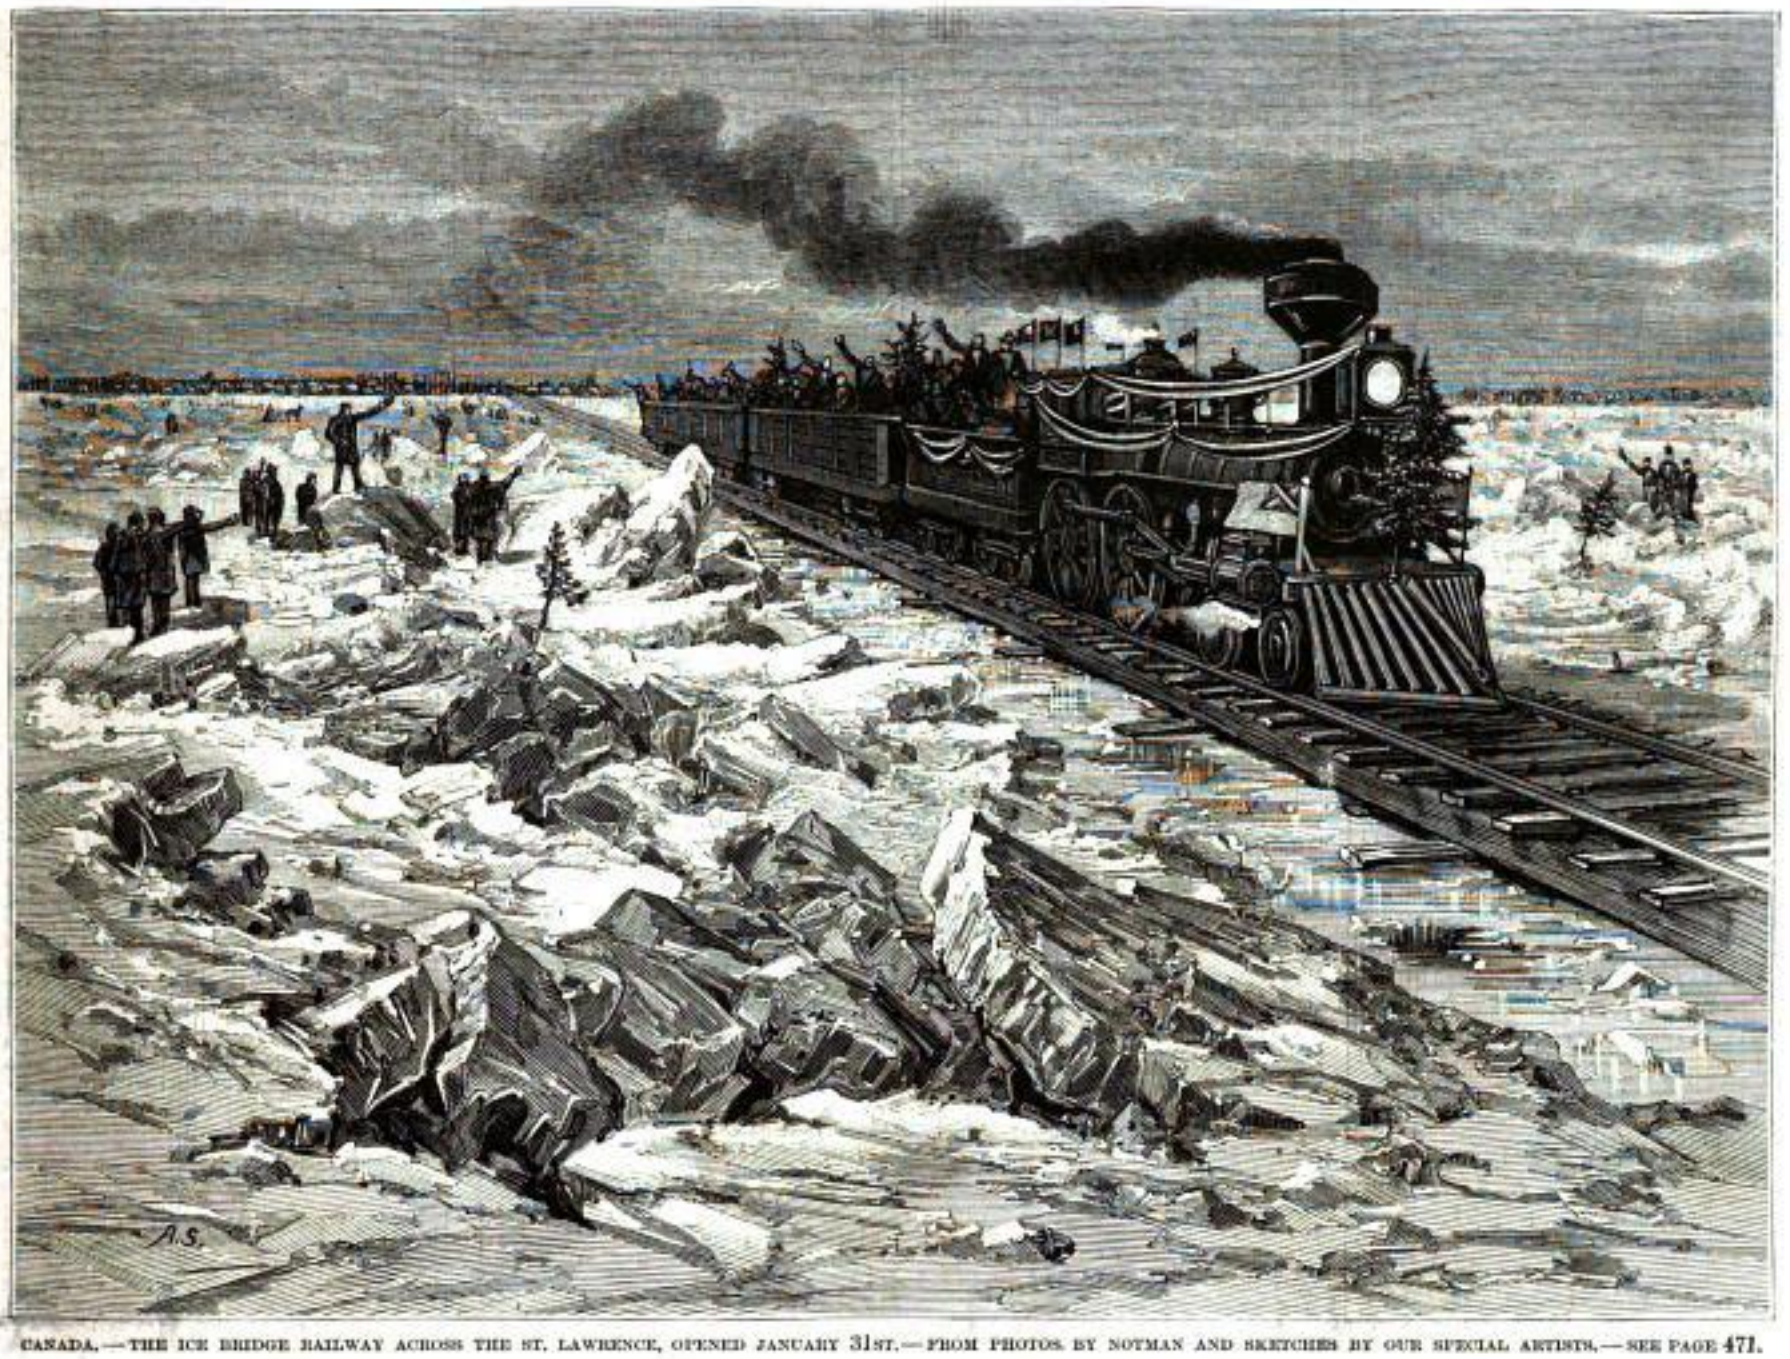
—A RECENTLY published official report of the Italian minister of agriculture, industry and commerce gives some statistics relative to the state of the mining industry in Italy. The principal mineral product is sulphur, of which an annual value of £1,600,000 is produced. Lead comes next, the value of this metal produced in 1877 being £383,600; while that of zinc was £179,000; of iron, £111,000, and of copper, £58,500.

—THOUSANDS of blacks and whites in Louisiana and southern Mississippi are doing a profitable business in the long, beautiful moss which hangs to the ground in festoons in the forests of that section. It is as fine as horse-hair when cured, and the revival of business is making a ready sale for it at good prices. The bark is separated from the moss by exposure to the sun for a month, after which it is washed by machinery and dried.

—A NUMBER of German princes have announced their intention to be present at St. Petersburg on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Czar's accession to the throne, including Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, who represents the Emperor. All the regiments of which the Czar is honorary colonel will send deputations to St. Petersburg, consisting of the colonels in command, some officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of each regiment.

—THE production of beet-root sugar in Europe, according to the statistics furnished by Herr Licht, of Magdeburg, was 1,380,000 tons for 1879, against 1,574,154 tons for 1878. The amount is divided as follows among the various States of Europe: Germany, 410,000 tons; France, 300,000; Austro-Hungary, 365,000; Russia, 225,000; Belgium, Holland, Italy, etc., 80,000. In France the diminution in the production of this article was 192,000 tons.

—AN Alabama paper says that in the town in which it is published there is a poplar tree about eighteen inches in diameter which was standing there ten years ago. A short time afterwards the tree fell and lay prone upon the ground for a considerable period, during which time a part of the top was cut up and used for fuel. No human agency has since interfered with one in any way attempted to move it, and yet it now stands erect and is growing beautifully. It is the only instance ever known of the violation of the statement made in the Scripture that "as the tree falls so it shall lie."



—THE production of wool in the United States in 1879 was the largest in the history of the country. According to statistics prepared by Mr. James Lynch, wool broker, the home clip was 232,500,000 pounds against 211,000,000 pounds in 1878, and 208,250,000 pounds in 1877. Of the yield of 1879 California is credited with 47,000,000 pounds; Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory and Utah with 14,000,000; Colorado and New Mexico with 13,000,000; Texas with 15,000,000; other Southern States with 9,500,000; and the Northern and Western States with 133,000,000 pounds.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK.—COASTING BY MOONLIGHT ON THE ANN STREET HILL, NEWBURGH.—FROM SKETCHES BY JOSEPH BECKER.—SEE PAGE 471.

Digitized by Google

CANADA.—THE ICE BRIDGE RAILWAY ACROSS THE ST. LAWRENCE, OPENED JANUARY 31ST.—FROM PHOTOS. BY NOTMAN AND SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.—SEE PAGE 471.

NEW YORK CITY.—CARNIVAL OF THE CHILDREN AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, FEBRUARY 9TH—THE DANCE OF THE SNOWMEN.—SEE PAGE 475.

Digitized by Google

THE HIDDEN WITNESS

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT HUSBAND OF MINE."

CHAPTER XXXIII.—(CONTINUED).

FELIX FORESTER walked slowly out of the room into the library, and sat moodily down. As for Sylve, she paused a few moments before she entered Mrs. Forester's dressing-room, from which her own opened. Careful as she had been, she had not quite effaced the signs of her recent agitation. Mrs. Forester looked at her narrowly.

"What is it, dear? You didn't see Flix?" she said.

"I did, as I almost always do when I am performing any particularly silly part."

"Well, I hope you didn't quarrel."

"Do we ever meet of late without quarreling?"

"It is very wrong of you, Sylve."

"Why wrong of me?" queried the girl, hotly. "Is not he something to blame?"

"Of course, you are both to blame," and Mrs. Forester sighed. "I wish I knew how to make you more congenial, but I don't."

"It's better as it is—a great deal better as it is," said Sylve, thickly. "When I am my own mistress, you know, why then I can—I can go somewhere out of his sight."

"Sylve, dear, don't talk so unreasonably—Sylve, are you crying? What shall I do to my boy—I certainly will not have him rude! Oh, no, he could not have been rude to you. I will see about it," and she rose determinedly.

"Oh, pray don't speak of it, don't think of it," said Sylve, instantly banishing all traces of tears; "it was no doubt I who provoked a quick answer, and it is all over now. We parted—very—good—friends. Please don't spoil his pleasure for the evening. I dare say he won't—I dare say we shall neither of us think of it again. There, I am all right, and the carriages are beginning to come; we must go down-stairs now, must we not?"

Mrs. Forester assented, and in less than an hour stood receiving her five hundred friends. Sylve was like a humming-bird, darting hither and thither, her brilliancy and loveliness captivating every eye. It was very late, and dancing had been going on an hour when Mr. Vintresse made his appearance. Sylve had not forgotten that he was to be a guest, and singled him out among the many as he stopped to speak to Flix.

"I am glad to see you," said the latter, with a cordial shake of the hand. "And how is the patient to-night?"

"Something better than he has been," was the answer. "He really had a frightful turn to-day, and we thought for a few moments that he was dying. It was a good thing, too, as it has turned out, for it has the effect to keep him silent, and he would talk. Such exertion of the facial muscles, until the mouth wound is healed, is attended with danger. He insisted upon my leaving him to come here to-night, though I wanted to stay with him. But his wishes must not be crossed."

"I am heartily glad to learn that he is better," said Flix. "Let me introduce you to my ward"—he led him to the upper part of the room where Sylve was standing. "Miss de Latude, Mr. Vintresse." bowed and moved away, curiously conscious of Sylve's searching though shy glance in his face, as if wishing to see whether he retained any ill-feeling. Of course Vintresse studied the charming countenance before him as one would study a painting, that he might carry with him the impression of the features with which to make a careful report.

"There's nothing of De Neal's face," he said to himself, "not the slightest resemblance, although he is a fine-looking man, and she is very beautiful, and very likely I shall not lose my heart to her, though I shall certainly do as he wishes. I have gone too far to retract now," and the half sigh he gave—was it to some lost love? Sylve was at once captivated by the elegant stranger so far as to admire his noble form, his handsome features and the grace of his movements. She was quite willing to give him her hand for the next Lancers, and she did not see Flix standing in a recess against the opposite wall watching the movements of this the loveliest couple in the room, who drew upon them indeed many more eyes than his.

"Oh, are you really from California?" queried Sylve, in a pause in the dance. "I am so glad! I have often received papers from there, but I cannot think who could send them, as I have neither friends nor acquaintances in that part of the country. It has really been quite a mystery to me."

"You say you have no relatives there?"

"No, indeed; I am quite sure of that. Indeed I stand alone in the world as far as ties of family are concerned. Both parents died when I was a little child."

"Do you not remember them?" asked Vintresse, anxious to gather all the knowledge he could to carry back with him to the sick-bed.

"Oh, yes: I remember my mother very distinctly. She was not like me; she was a blonde with hair of a lovely color, such as I never seen since. My father was large and dark, with regular and handsome features, and I was very, oh, very fond of him. It was a dreadful shock to lose mamma, because she was my only companion for years. I wanted to die when she did. Fancy being left entirely alone in the midst of strangers who do not care whether you live or not?" she shuddered at the thought of that terrible time.

"It must have been very sad, and I can pity you, for I was left an orphan, though not at so early an age as you were," Vintresse said.

"Indeed, we ought to be friends," Sylve responded, her heart warming towards this man who could appreciate her loneliness.

"We will be friends," he said, with a rare smile—"true friends, close friends."

"There's my hand on it," she responded, frankly. Flix saw the action and drew his lips together.

"They seem progressing finely," he muttered. "Ah, I knew the moment I looked upon his face that he would be agreeable to her—good heavens, why should I care? She hates me—I ought to hate her. I fancied I did—I fancied I did—I did not know my own heart." He turned away, a terrible jealousy consuming him, angry with himself, furious towards Vintresse, though he had no reason to be.

"How were you pleased with my friend," he asked later of Sylve, forcing himself to seem forgetful of their recent variance.

"Splendid!" she cried, her face all alight. "He is such a gentleman!"

"Which I am not, I suppose," muttered Flix, between his teeth.

"You should not force me to make comparisons," she said, a little maliciously. "I never meant to imply such a suggestion," she added instantly, looking hurt as she saw his face darken.

"It doesn't matter at all. If I asked you to let me take you in to supper, I suppose we should be vindictive over the ices and fight about the cake."

"Try me," said Sylve, her very throat crimsoning—"no, don't. I half-promised Mr. Vintresse."

"Give me the last half of the promise then, and, as I am on the spot," he said, "I shall claim the right of possession. Give it me," he repeated, almost sternly.

"Do you really mean it?" asked Sylve, trembling a little.

"Do you think I would beg like a dog if I did not? It is scarcely my way. Will you allow me to conduct you in to supper?"

Sylve was bewildered. Her heart gave a great throb. What did this strange mood impart? She said nothing, but quietly put her arm within his and felt the hurried beating of his heart. She could not have spoken had her life depended upon the act. As they sat down to the table a sudden thought oppressed her. Mrs. Forester was looking towards them with raised brows and a satisfied little smile.

"I see how it is," said Sylve to herself, "his mother has been lecturing him, and he had to promise to be civil. Oh, that was the meaning of his determination to escort me here," and from the delight of heaven she seemed suddenly to fall into the abyss of darkness.

"Now what shall I get you?" he asked, still with that strange preoccupied manner, as if fighting with himself to be civil to her.

"I really don't care for anything," she said, distressfully; "I am not in the least hungry. But I will take a macaroni for the sake of appearances," she added, nervously; "and indeed I should like to go back as soon as possible."

"Ah, I knew it was coming," said Flix, between shut teeth.

"Knew what was coming?"

"One of our pleasant little differences of opinion."

"Then why did you bring me here with you? If we can't help differing we had better let each other alone."

"I prefer to fight it out," said Flix, doggedly. "Now tell me why you won't stay; you must have some reason."

She looked nervously towards Mrs. Forester. "It—it seemed to me—that—your mother—perhaps——" She paused, half-ready to cry.

"Well?" Flix leisurely eat his macaroni, and was not in the least inclined to help her out, though he almost divined what was coming.

"She—did she not ask you to take me out, knowing, or fancying"—she colored violently—"that we had had words."

"Have you learned so little of my character as to think that even my mother could influence me to do anything against my own will and good pleasure?" he asked, in a low voice, looking at her steadily—"anything concerning my own personal tastes and wishes, I mean," he added. Her eyes were lowered, and she did not see the glance he gave her and that caused Lieutenant Styles to remark to his neighbor, whom he was purposely supplying with chicken and jelly, that "Flix Forester was caught at last, you bet!"—that being his favorite word-clincher whether talking to man or woman.

"I—I didn't know," stammered Sylve, losing her presence of mind between vexation at her own stupidity and wonder as to what this unusual attention might mean, and perversely attributing it still to either word or sign of Mrs. Forester.

"You'll have some jelly—or, stay, jelly goes with meat, I believe. Here is boned turkey—very harmless in small quantities."

"Thank you—I—couldn't eat, I'm not in the least hungry. You are not eating either; hadn't we best go into the parlor?"

"Sylve, are you determined to ignore me?" he asked, in a smothered voice—"can't you overcome the habit of resistance and contradiction? You are old enough."

Her hazel eyes opened wide; there were little sparks like glowing fire in their lucid depths.

"I wonder which of us is the ignored party?" she asked, indignantly. "When have you seen fit to honor me with your attentions openly before? How long since has it become the fashion for women to take the initiative?"

"Oh, if my attentions are not pleasing, pardon me: there is my arm, will you condescend to take it?"

"I did not say they were not pleasing," retorted Sylve, angry tears coming up to her eyelids; "you always misunderstand me, you always did, you always will, I suppose. I never knew so thoroughly uncomfortable a person to get on with. I think it would be better if we never noticed each other—I do from my heart."

"Perhaps," he replied, coldly, "it would be quite agreeable to me."

"And more than agreeable to me," she said, with spirit.

"Thank God it has turned out as it has," muttered Flix, as he left Sylve with a knot of merry girls who were volubly discussing the fashions. "Why am I for ever throwing myself in the way of temptation? One would think the trial I have before me a sufficient barrier, and it shall be, by heaven! No more foolishness, I have done with it for ever and for ever—and yet—God help me—I love her, I love her!" he cried, passionately.

It was some time before Sylve could enter into the fun and frolic that pervaded the conversation of the group of young ladies, so utterly was she bewildered with the strange bearing and yet stranger talk of Flix Forester. "Well, I hope I have alienated him for good," she said to herself, an angry spot on either cheek. "I will not bend to his whims; he has lived so long with his mother, has been so much indulged, that it is impossible for ordinary mortals to please him. I pity whoever his wife may be," and the red crept steadily up to the roots of her hair and spread on her throat. Suddenly she was conscious of feeling anything but amiable at the thought of that imaginary person. Oh, why was he so far while so near? Why could they never meet but either some unpleasing incident must thrust itself before them or bitter misunderstandings occur? And all this time she was smiling without heart, and talking without knowledge, as people will whose minds are preoccupied. A voice startled her.

CHAPTER XXXIV.—"MR. FORESTER IS KILLED."

"MISS BROWN," it said. She turned round haughtily, but that moment her countenance changed.

"Pardon me. I have been trying to speak with you for some time. I did not dream of seeing you here."

"Mr. Wilde!" gasped Sylve, the blood tingling to her finger ends. "I—I am sure I as little thought of meeting you!"

"And how long since you were in Virginia?" he asked, in his peculiarly low rich tones. It was quite evident that Raphael had heard nothing about the escapade, and that he believed her still to be Miss Brown, the Yankee school-teacher, from his puzzled looks in finding her so richly attired and so entirely at home.

"It is several months now," she said, "but I have so much to ask, though possibly but little to tell. Will you go with me into the library? We shall not be disturbed." A quick spasm of pain passed over his expressive features as she spoke. He bowed, however, offered her his arm, and together they approached the more subdued interior of the room on the opposite side of the hall. To her annoyance the first person they met on their entrance was Flix Forester, who had ensconced himself comfortably in an enormous chair. He started up with a color in his face as he saw Sylve enter, apparently on terms of intimacy with one he thought an entire stranger to her.

"Ah, doctor," he said, shaking hands with him, "I did not know that you were acquainted with my ward;" bowed, and, with one side glance at Sylve, left them together.

"We can talk here," said Sylve, "and I want to hear so much from the old place. Have you seen Miss Eve lately?"

She waited a full moment for his answer, and noticed that at the question he grew pale.

"I have not seen Miss Lewin since I saw you together," he said, in a low, distinct voice—a voice full of pain.

"Mr. Wilde—or, I suppose I must call you doctor, now—you astonish me!" Her cheek had paled a little, for she saw the consequences of that mad freak of hers in the altered visage, the changed manner, of one who previously had seemed to her the incarnation of joy. What might have happened to that other one, the sweet though proud-spirited girl, whose happiness her thoughtless hand had dashed to the ground? Often as she had felt compunction for that deed, conscience had never stabbed her with the almost mortal pain she felt in looking upon the alteration that grief had made. How could she say "I don't understand," and thus quietly solicit his confidence, when she did understand but too well?

"You do not go there often, I believe," she said, in a low, unsteady voice.

"I shall probably never go there again," he replied, with a gesture and manner that forbade other questions. "But please tell me something about yourself, Miss Brown. If I did not mistake, Mr. Forester called you his ward?"

"Yes, I am his ward. Miss Brown was a silly, dissatisfied girl, who became discontented with her lot in a home where every wish was granted, every indulgence allowed, and who, in a romantic fit, strayed away from home in order to taste the pleasures of independence and the delights of toil. Miss Brown was soon cured of her wish to work unknown and unappreciated, and, when her friends found her, she was quite willing to assume her own name and place. As you introduced yourself to me that time—don't you remember?—so I now introduce myself to you. Miss Sylve Forester—I beg your pardon," and a sudden crimson overspread her at the consciousness of how possibly she had betrayed her most secret thoughts—"Miss Sylve de Latude. And now," she went on recklessly, "tell me something about yourself. How long since you have been a practicing physician? Do you know, I am looking into that superb old kitchen as I remember first seeing it—white and warm in the moonbeams of a Summer's night?"

"It was a grand old place," he said, in a gravely tender voice—"a dear old place. Well"—he seemed to tear himself away from the theme with an effort—"I had heard about this matter—the romantic escapade to which you allude—but I really never dreamed it was you. How very singular! But I am glad to have met you, very glad."

His dreamy voice smote on her heart till it seemed as if the tears must come; so many unhappy things were taking place this evening when she had thought to be as care-free as a princess.

"Do you know Mr. Vintresse?" she asked, at random.

"Oh, yes; I came with him, but there was some trouble outside; a little boy got under the horse's feet, and it took me an hour to attend to him, so I sent Vintresse in without me."

"Do you know him very well? Have you known him long?" she asked, eagerly, and then blushed hotly at his faint and transient smile. "I asked you on—some one's account—some one you cannot know," she went on, blunderingly. "He seems so very nice."

"He is nice," said Raphael Wilde, "a perfect gentleman, but I can tell you nothing more about him. I have only known him since I have been in attendance on his friend, who was so dreadfully hurt about a month ago. It has been a long and dreary confinement to him. I happened to be called in first, as I was there, walking, and attending clinics, and he would not hear of another physician. I have been practicing but a few months," he ended, with a sigh.

"And so it is all over with him," she said to herself, admiring his dark beauty—"all over with her. He will not even let me talk of her."

A few moments after they had left the library she was besieged for introductions.

"Such a splendid dark face! I have seen him before; pray present me."

"And rich, too, they say—a Southern Crœsus. I do so dote upon Southern gentlemen!—they are so perfect in manner!"

"Pray, how did you secure him? They call him the 'melancholy Dane,' and I have heard that he never goes into society. Some say he has had a heart-disappointment;" and so they ran on till Sylve had gratified each and every request. But none of the young ladies could secure him. He either stood by himself, superbly handsome in the fixed, unalterable expression that trouble had chiseled on his face, or he found opportunity to talk with Sylve or with Vintresse, who divided the interest and admiration of the company with the sad-browed doctor.

"Well, what do you think of Forester's ward?" asked Vintresse, finding himself in a corner by the side of Raphael Wilde.

"She is very beautiful and an old acquaintance of mine. I met her in Virginia some months ago."

"Ah!" said Vintresse, smiling intelligently. "She has spirit enough, evidently. Could one manage it in a wife, think you?"

"Such a woman should not be managed, I think, Vintresse," said Doctor Wilde. "Good God! what is that?"

A fearful crash sounded through the rooms; then a woman's shrill shriek. There was a rush, a murmur of voices, a swaying to and fro, a sea of pale, excited, frightened faces. Loud cries of "What is it?" "What has happened?" sounded all over the house. Guests came rushing down-stairs, and servants came rushing up. Loud calls for the doctor filled the air from every direction.

"Where—which way?" shouted Wilde. "I am the doctor," and he elbowed his way through the wild, swaying, sobbing crowd. One sound caught his ear—a woman's voice shrieking:

"Mr. Forester is killed!"

CHAPTER XXXV.—SYLVE'S CONFESSION.

SOME one had asked Sylve for a camellia. There was a bouquet of them, as beautiful and pure as if just blown out upon their stems, in a little high-ceiled room leading from the dining-room that had been used by the card-players. They stood upon a table under a heavy chandelier. To this room Flix had retreated, and perverse fate seemed to take delight in tracking him to his solitudes in the person of Sylve, who did not dream of his presence there. Some noise above, or jar of the ceiling, had attracted his attention, and he was looking up with anxious, strained eyes, as she made her appearance.

"We seem doomed to meet in all sorts of odd places," she said, with a short, unnatural laugh.

"Do you consider it particularly unfortunate?" he asked, in his cool way, looking at her and then directing his eyes upward again.

"Rather," she replied, as unconcernedly, coming forward. "I won't go back without my errand done like a coward," she said to herself.

"What do you want? Don't go near the table," he said, his voice terse, his manner cold.

"But I must, it was just what I came for. I want a camellia."

"I'll get it for you. No; you must do without—not another step forward; the ceiling;" but even as he spoke his warning she retorted:

"You are so selfish, and I won't be tyrannized over. I want a camellia; I wish to get it myself." She was just in the act of lifting the flower when he darted forward with an expression of horror, caught her in his arms as if she had been a child, and threw her with all the force he could muster half across the room, but in so doing he exposed himself to the fall of the bronzed metal-work which came down with a terrible sound, crushing him to the floor. When they found him they saw a piteous spectacle, and Sylve, her dress all dabbled in gore, pulling with might and main at the chandelier, whose pointed ornaments had bedded themselves deep in the floor and partly in the flesh of the unconscious sufferer. "Oh, Flix, my Flix!—look at him, he is dead!" cried the girl, in piteous accents, her eyes starting from their sockets, "and I have murdered him. "Oh, Flix! don't take me away from him. I have been unkind, ungenerous. Oh, let me die with him, let me die with him!" Mrs. Forester had fainted at the first intimation of the accident; now, as the panic-struck crowd filled the room and struggled into the doorways, two or three men on chairs and tables had the presence of mind to stuff whatever they could find into the open gas pipe.

Digitized by Google

"There will be an explosion!"

This cry sent a part of the crowd in frantic haste up stairs and others out of the house, and for several moments confusion reigned unparalleled.

There was no danger, however, and the prostrate, senseless man was rescued from the fearful weight and carried up into the room overhead. Not till the last reveler had gone did Mrs. Forester recover her senses. Her first words were, "Oh, my boy! is it all over with him? Don't fear to tell me, for I shall be with him soon."

"Compose yourself," said Mr. Vintrease, who had been sent in by the doctor. "Mr. Forester is as comfortable as possible, and the doctor thinks there are no very serious wounds."

"Has he spoken? Are you sure he lives? You are not hiding anything from me. Oh, that cry! They said he was killed." Sylve who had been sitting by the bedside, hid her head in the pillows, shuddering all over.

"He has spoken, begged us to tell you that he was quite comfortable—that he would see you early in the morning."

"Who is with him?"

"Doctor Wilde will remain with him till morning. You must not think of going there to-night, it would seriously discompose him. He will be quite ready to see you in the morning," and he left the room. Sylve, feeling herself the cause of all this suffering, sat like a statue by Mrs. Forester's bedside, scarcely daring to think or speak. To his mother's repeated and anxious queries, "How could it have happened?" she could say nothing, only weep silently. It was bad enough to suffer from self-accusation, bad enough to have sundered the last link—it link there was—that held Flix and herself friends. And then what had she said in the face of those spectators?—how had she betrayed herself? She could remember that she had called him "My Flix!" but what other rhapsodical sentiments her terror had given voice to she dared not think. There was one consolation, he had not heard them; she was spared this shame. He had caught her in his arms, and the action with which he had thrown her, though it made her pulses beat with rapture, in that he had saved her life, yet seemed an omen of a full and final separation—he had cast her from him. How did it all happen? Why could he not at the same time fling himself out of the danger? Who can explain these strange things called accidents, and why, though there is perfect self-possession as to some details, others are altogether overlooked or ignored?

"Sylve, child, you were frightened all but to death, I dare say. Though you do like Flix so little, you don't like to see him hurt."

"Oh, please, don't," murmured Sylve, humble as a child. "It is not I that dislike Alix," and a sob followed the speech. Mrs. Forester was still too much absorbed in the contemplation of the accident from her point of view to notice the mournful little speech.

"What could he have been doing in there? He is such a mope for a young man; he hates company so, and this is what comes of it. Do you know anything about it? Did you hear? Was he alone, I wonder? I saw you go out in that direction."

"I—don't—he was not alone," said Sylve, now very red, and determined to keep her secret if possible, if she could do it without the sacrifice of truth, well aware that probably Flix would narrate the whole thing whenever his mother questioned him.

"Do you know that? Who was in there?"

A short pause ensued.

"I was."

"You!" Mrs. Forester raised herself from the couch, and turned quite round so as to face Sylve. "My dear child, why didn't you tell me before? And now I think of it, you were saying some terrible things just as I came out of my swoon. I don't wonder; it was enough to turn one's head; tell me all about it."

Sylve shrank from the request as the sensitive flesh shrinks from hot iron.

"Why will she persist in these questions that are agony to me, when she will hear enough by-and-by to make her hate me, too?" she cried, to herself, and then replied calmly, or tried to, "I went into the room, not dreaming anybody was there. Mr. Forester stood looking at the ceiling."

"Yes, yes," murmured Mrs. Forester, "he spoke of it once; he had doubts, I remember."

"Well, I wanted a camellia; Miss Grace asked me for one. I knew there were very handsome ones there, and as I was going forward he told me not."

"Yes—oh, dear, dear, dear—yes—well go on."

"But—I—I wanted the camellia, you know—I could not understand Besides, I was a little angry, and——"

"Yes, I saw it at supper; don't be alarmed, dear, nobody would understand it as I would, who watch you both with my heart in my eyes, I think. But I'm sure you had words."

"We can't understand one another."

"I know it, dear. Perhaps you can't help it," and she sighed again.

"I don't think we can, or ever shall, and I told him so, and he seemed very angry, angrier than ever—why should I talk of that, though? I would go forward, and in my heat did not probably hear what he told me; and so he caught me and threw me off—and I think the table was in the way of his escape—and——" She shuddered and hid her face again.

"Why, my dear, he saved your life!"

"He did! he did!" sobbed Sylve.

"At the expense of his own, almost. Oh, my dear, you must try to overlook his little failings, try to harbor better feelings towards my boy, my hero!" and the mother's face was all aglow with a fine, sympathetic rose-flame that made it seem like that of an angel.

Sylve was silent.

"Come here, my child," said Mrs. Forester. The girl came reluctantly.

"Promise me you will not say you hate him any more."

"Hate him! hate him! Oh, Mrs. Forester," and her long-restrained feelings gave way in a burst of sobs and tears that shook the very bed.

"Why, Sylve!—why, my darling!" and alternately pressing her to her breast, kissing and calling her pet names, Mrs. Forester divined the reason of this wild outburst. She was at once alarmed and delighted, and made no secret of her surmises.

"I don't wonder, my dear. When a woman feels that a man has put himself in actual peril for her—there, there, I understand. I am his mother."

"Mrs. Forester," said Sylve, in a choked voice.

"Well, my darling, my own girl?"

"If you don't want me to leave you again, if you don't want to kill me," she added, passionately, "never say—never tell—never imagine——" here the words choked her. "Oh, if I could die and go to heaven?"

"There, that is wrong, very wrong; you shall live and be happy. Don't be afraid, my child, trust me as you would your mother—nay, am I not as a mother to you, my sweet Sylve? Everything shall be as you wish—we will punish that refractory child well between us. He shall not see you—no, he shall not lay eyes on you, unless he asks for you—asks like a hungry man starving for a crust. Do you understand me? Don't you think I understand you, thoroughly? Come, there need be no secrets between us. Don't you think," she added, artfully, "that you like my poor Flix a little, after all?"

There was no answer, but Mrs. Forester understood the gesture, that brought her very close; and, stooping, kissed her forehead.

"And you have been willful enough to think he disliked, even hated you?"

"I knew it," half-sobbed Sylve.

"But I could tell you something."

Sylve looked into Mrs. Forester's shining eyes.

"I repeat, I could tell you something, but I won't—till to-morrow."

(To be continued.)

THE CHILDREN'S CARNIVAL.

A CHILD is a man in a small letter, yet the best copy of Adam. He is nature's fresh picture drawn in oil, which time and much handling dims and defaces. We laugh at his foolish sports, but his game is our earnest; and his drums, rattles and hobby-horses but the emblems and mockings of men's business. Thoughts like these passed through my mind as I took my seat in a "well-advantaged" box at the Academy of Music on Monday night, February 9th, to enjoy—yea, thoroughly enjoy—the Children's Carnival. I hold with Elihu Burrit that it behooves us to make the background of a child's life as bright and as happy as possible, for there is not a child in any circle, however well hedged in, on whose head, if spared long enough, the storm will not beat. Adversity may wither them, sickness may fade, a cold world may frown on them, but amidst all let memory carry them back to the radiant brightness of the hours of their childhood. Oh, it was gladsome to behold the young and beautiful mothers of our native land proudly gazing on their young and beautiful children; to see their loving eyes fixed upon the piquant puppets strutting their brief hour upon a real stage, conscious of their gay plumage, and wild with a glowing excitement! Prince Carnival "no bigger than an agate stone on the forefinger of an alderman," the very embodiment of Infant Misrule—what a dimpled little fellow, own brother to Cupid! The Goddess of Liberty—what crimes was I not prepared to commit in her name!—to paraphrase poor Madame Roland. The Four Seasons! all equally sunshiny. The Twelve Months! would that they were twelve times twelve. The Goddess Flora! what a little bouquet in herself in her shell of pearl, drawn by doves and aptly followed by flowers of Spring, May blossoms. But I lost my heart completely to the Ice Queen. I admit the soft impeachment. She smiled upon me. Her Majesty's eyes fixed themselves upon me. Such eyes! A child's eyes! Clear wells of undefined thought. What on earth can be more beautiful! Full of love, hope, curiosity, they meet your own. In prayer how earnest; in joy how sparkling; in sympathy how tender! I kissed my hand to Her Majesty, and I am proud to say she acknowledged my salutation by a most gracious nod. I would fain have held gentle converse with her had she been alone; but, unhappily for my purpose, she was surrounded by a court of tiny toddlers all arrayed in nightgowns, who frisked and pranced, and bounced and whirled, in the wildest abandonment of infantile jollification. I pressed eagerly forward as her tiny Majesty prepared to descend from her chariot, in the hope of obtaining her mite of a hand in the dance; but the Prince—confound his impudence and his luck!—was before me, and I could but admire my Queen in silence. How coquettishly she danced in the Bell dance, reminding me of Sir John Suckling's quaint conceit:

> "Her feet, beneath her petticoat,
> Like little mice stole in and out,
> As if they feared the light;
> But, oh, she dances such a way,
> No sun upon an Easter day
> Is half so fine a sight!"

How merrily the tiny swansdown shoes kept time to the music, and the roses came peeping from her plump little cheeks! Ah, that snowflake dance! The snows of Winter falling around "My life, my love," as she danced on the winds of the frozen North. My inner voice loudly cried, in the poetic words of the Irish ballad:

> "Dance light, for my heart it is under your feet, love;"

but a cruel destiny separated us, and, as I beheld that confounded Prince place her lily-white hand upon the broidered sleeve of his jerkin, I fiercely turned away and thought of "the might have been." May the Children's Carnival flourish.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY OF CUBA.

THE recent visit of General Grant to the celebrated Ingenio, or sugar plantation, of Las Cañas, and the present movement to legislate on the subject of the duty now placed on this article of prime necessity, combine to invest the subject with new interest. We have already given a view of the scene in the field where the hands are cutting the cane. This week our illustration shows the sugar mill at the Ingenio of Las Cañas, belonging to the Messrs. Poey. The old press of former days, with its horse or mule pacing slowly around, has given place to the fine machinery seen in our artist's sketch. Now no expense is spared in this department. The approaching extinction of slavery, the certainty that no additional slave labor can ever be introduced, make the planters vie to economize human labor where possible. Even in our picture there are more men near the mill than would be ordinarily seen on a plantation. Able-bodied men are too valuable, and light work around the machines and at the conductors is done by women. The children, too, have work assigned to them in sweeping and clearing up, which they do regularly at fixed hours every day, time being set for their meals, and in some few of the best-ordered plantations a school is maintained, in which the young negroes are taught the elementary branches and prepared for a better chance in the struggle of life than their parents enjoyed. The little negroes show no disinclination to learn, and some are found even now who can read and write better than white men overseeing them. In our illustration the cane comes in on the right by a conductor not seen from the artist's point of view.

The cane is carried to the mill from the fields in two-wheeled carts, four-wheeled wagons, or in cars on portable railroads—drawn in the carts and wagons by oxen, and in the cars by oxen or mules.

The last method is the most improved: besides requiring less drivers, oxen or mules, there is more rapidity of movement, and the impossibility of hauling cane after heavy rains being no longer an obstacle, as the smooth rails are ever ready. When the cane is carried in cars it is dumped on the cane-conductor, or near to it, as it may be needed or not.

A cane-conductor is a contrivance 40 to 50 feet long and about 4 feet wide, composed of pointed boards as in a treadmill, and worked by chains connected with the machinery of the mill, by which it is made to revolve slowly towards the slide leading to the great mill-rollers.

The carrying of the cane from the ground where it is dumped is generally done by the less robust women, especially nursing mothers who cannot go far away from the children's home (casa de criadas), and who relieve each other by rotation, after they have nursed their babies.

On each side of the slide leading to the mill-rollers stands a man, whose duties are to guide the cane as it leaves the conductor, and to see that the mill is neither choked with too much cane nor grinding with too little. Great care has to be taken that an even, steady supply never fails. Should the mill become choked, there is danger of its stopping or of something breaking; and if not enough cane is passed through, not only is a certain amount of power lost, but that which is ground is not thoroughly pressed, and, consequently, there is a loss of juice.

After the cane is ground, the juice runs into a trough having a strainer, which catches all the fibres and solid matter that may be in it; a woman with a rake is always in charge of this trough, and her work consists in taking out all the fibres, etc., held back by the strainer. (This stuff is given by the negroes to their pigs.)

The ground stalks, or bagasse, as it is called, is carried off in another conductor as it leaves the mill, as shown in the illustration. This conductor, also revolving slowly, but with an upward inclination, carries the bagasse to a sufficient height to allow a cart to stand under and catch the bagasse as it falls.

Though orders are given to those cutting the cane to strip it of all its leaves, still the leaves will come; and the woman in the illustration is gathering them in baskets to carry away to the fires.

TRIAL OF SHEPHERD COWLEY.

THE trial of the Rev. Edward Cowley, Secretary and Superintendent of the Shepherd's Fold, against whom there are twenty-five indictments for cruel treatment of the children committed to his care, began in Recorder Smyth's court on Monday, February 9th. Mr. Cowley had remained in the Tombs since the indictments were found by the Grand Jury, but on Tuesday he was admitted to bail, the Rev. Drs. Dix and Howland signing the bond. The testimony for the prosecution is in the main that developed during the examination before Judge Donohue, and with which the public are familiar. The defense, conducted by ex-Judge Fullerton, opened on Wednesday with a general denial of cruelty, want of care and of nutritious food. We give a character sketch of the accused clergyman as he sat beside his counsel while testimony for the prosecution was being given, with hand to ear to catch every word.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

A Monument of the late eminent naturalist and horticulturist, Freiherr von Siebold, will shortly be erected in his native town of Würzburg.

A French Company intends to cut a canal through the Isthmus of Corinth. Steps have already been taken to obtain the permission of the Greek Government.

The Indian papers state that experiments are about to be made in Cyprus to test the possibility of cultivating mango seeds, as well as the seeds of other Indian fruits and vegetables.

The Japan papers record the fact that an enormous piece of coral was lately dredged up near Tosa. It is stated to have five branches, the stem being 15 inches in circumference and 5 feet in length.

The Next German Anthropological Congress will be held at Berlin early in August next, and will be accompanied by an exhibition, illustrating prehistoric times in Germany. It will be closely followed by a Geological Congress to be held in the same city.

At Vienna a "Verein für Höhlenkunde" has been formed, with the object of investigating caves. Everybody taking an interest in this subject may become a member. The subscription is only five florins per annum. Dr. Franz von Hauer is the president, and Professor Ferdinand von Hochstetter is the vice-president of the new society.

An Interesting Archæological Discovery has been made near Lehmke (in the district of Oldenstadt) consisting of some 1,200 medieval metal plates, so-called bracteæ. Most of them bear the stamp of a lion in varying positions, others that of a figure with sword and standard, and a horizontal key below. The objects in question are now in the possession of the "Kreis hauptmann" of Oldenstadt.

An Ascent of Mount Hekla was made last Summer by a lady, Miss Th. Petursson, daughter of the Bishop of Reykjavik, for the purpose of geological investigations. According to her observations, the temperature at the bottom of the larger craters has of late been considerably, while dense white columns of steam were rising from crevasses and holes which were scarcely visible. The sulphurous odor of this steam was stronger than usual. The observations seem to indicate an approaching eruption of the volcano.

The Authorities of Gotha have made their report for the year 1879 on the subject of cremation. The first body was treated on the 10th of December, 1878, since which time fifteen others have been similarly disposed of. The average time required for the complete incineration of the bodies was about two hours, and it is regarded as most satisfactory that not only has no complaint as to the result been made at Gotha, but a number of other German towns are preparing to follow its example and build crematories.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

IT is again announced that Dean Stanley has consented to the erection of a statue to Louis Napoleon in Westminster Abbey.

IT has been proposed in the Cleveland City Council to erect a bronze or marble statue of the late Leonard Case in Monument Park.

REV. EDWARD PALMER, a Presbyterian minister of New Orleans, has entered upon his ninety-second year, and still preaches animated sermons.

HON. MRS. RONALD CAMPBELL, whose husband was killed in the engagement on the hill of Kambula, will accompany the Empress Eugénie in her pilgrimage to Zululand.

THE composer Wagner is expected to stay four months at Naples. His health is daily improving. "Lohengrin" is likely to be brought out at the theatre during his stay.

AN effort is being made in San Francisco to erect some fitting memorial over the grave of Colonel E. D. Baker, who fell at Ball's Bluff during the early days of the war.

M. VICTOR HUGO will be seventy-eight years old on the 26th of this month, and about the same time he will publish his two new books "Religions et Religion" and "Toute la Lyre." The poet is hale and vigorous.

MR. EUGENE SCHUYLER, the American Consul in Rome, is living in the Altemps Palace, where he is about to entertain M. and Mme. Waddington. It will be remembered that Mr. Schuyler married Miss Waddington's sister.

REV. DR. COURTNEY, the assistant rector of St. Thomas's, in New York, has accepted a call to St. James's Church, in Chicago, at a salary reported to be $12,000 per year. He is to enter upon the duties of his new charge at Easter.

COUNT DE CHATEAUVILLARS, the patron, par excellence, of boating as an amusement in France, has just died at the age of fifty-three, leaving his entire fortune, estimated at about two millions of francs, to the poor and to the Société de Sauvetage.

QUEEN VICTORIA is the owner of a silver-gilt casket, in which are lockets containing locks of hair of thirteen officers who fell at Isandula. Each locket is engraved with an "In Memoriam" and the name of the officer, together with the date of his death. The souvenir was ordered by the Queen.

A GRANT of £300 has been made to Captain Lord Gifford, V. C., Fifty-seventh Regiment, for bringing dispatches announcing the successful termination of the Zulu war home to England, but it has been accompanied with an official note stating that such grants are no longer to be considered as a custom.

M. DUMAS, who is the Chancellor of the French Academy, pronounced the speech in answer to M. Taine, the new member. Everybody was struck by the spirited delivery and eloquence of the venerable perpetual secretary of the Academy of Sciences. The house was so full that even academicians were unable to find room on their benches.

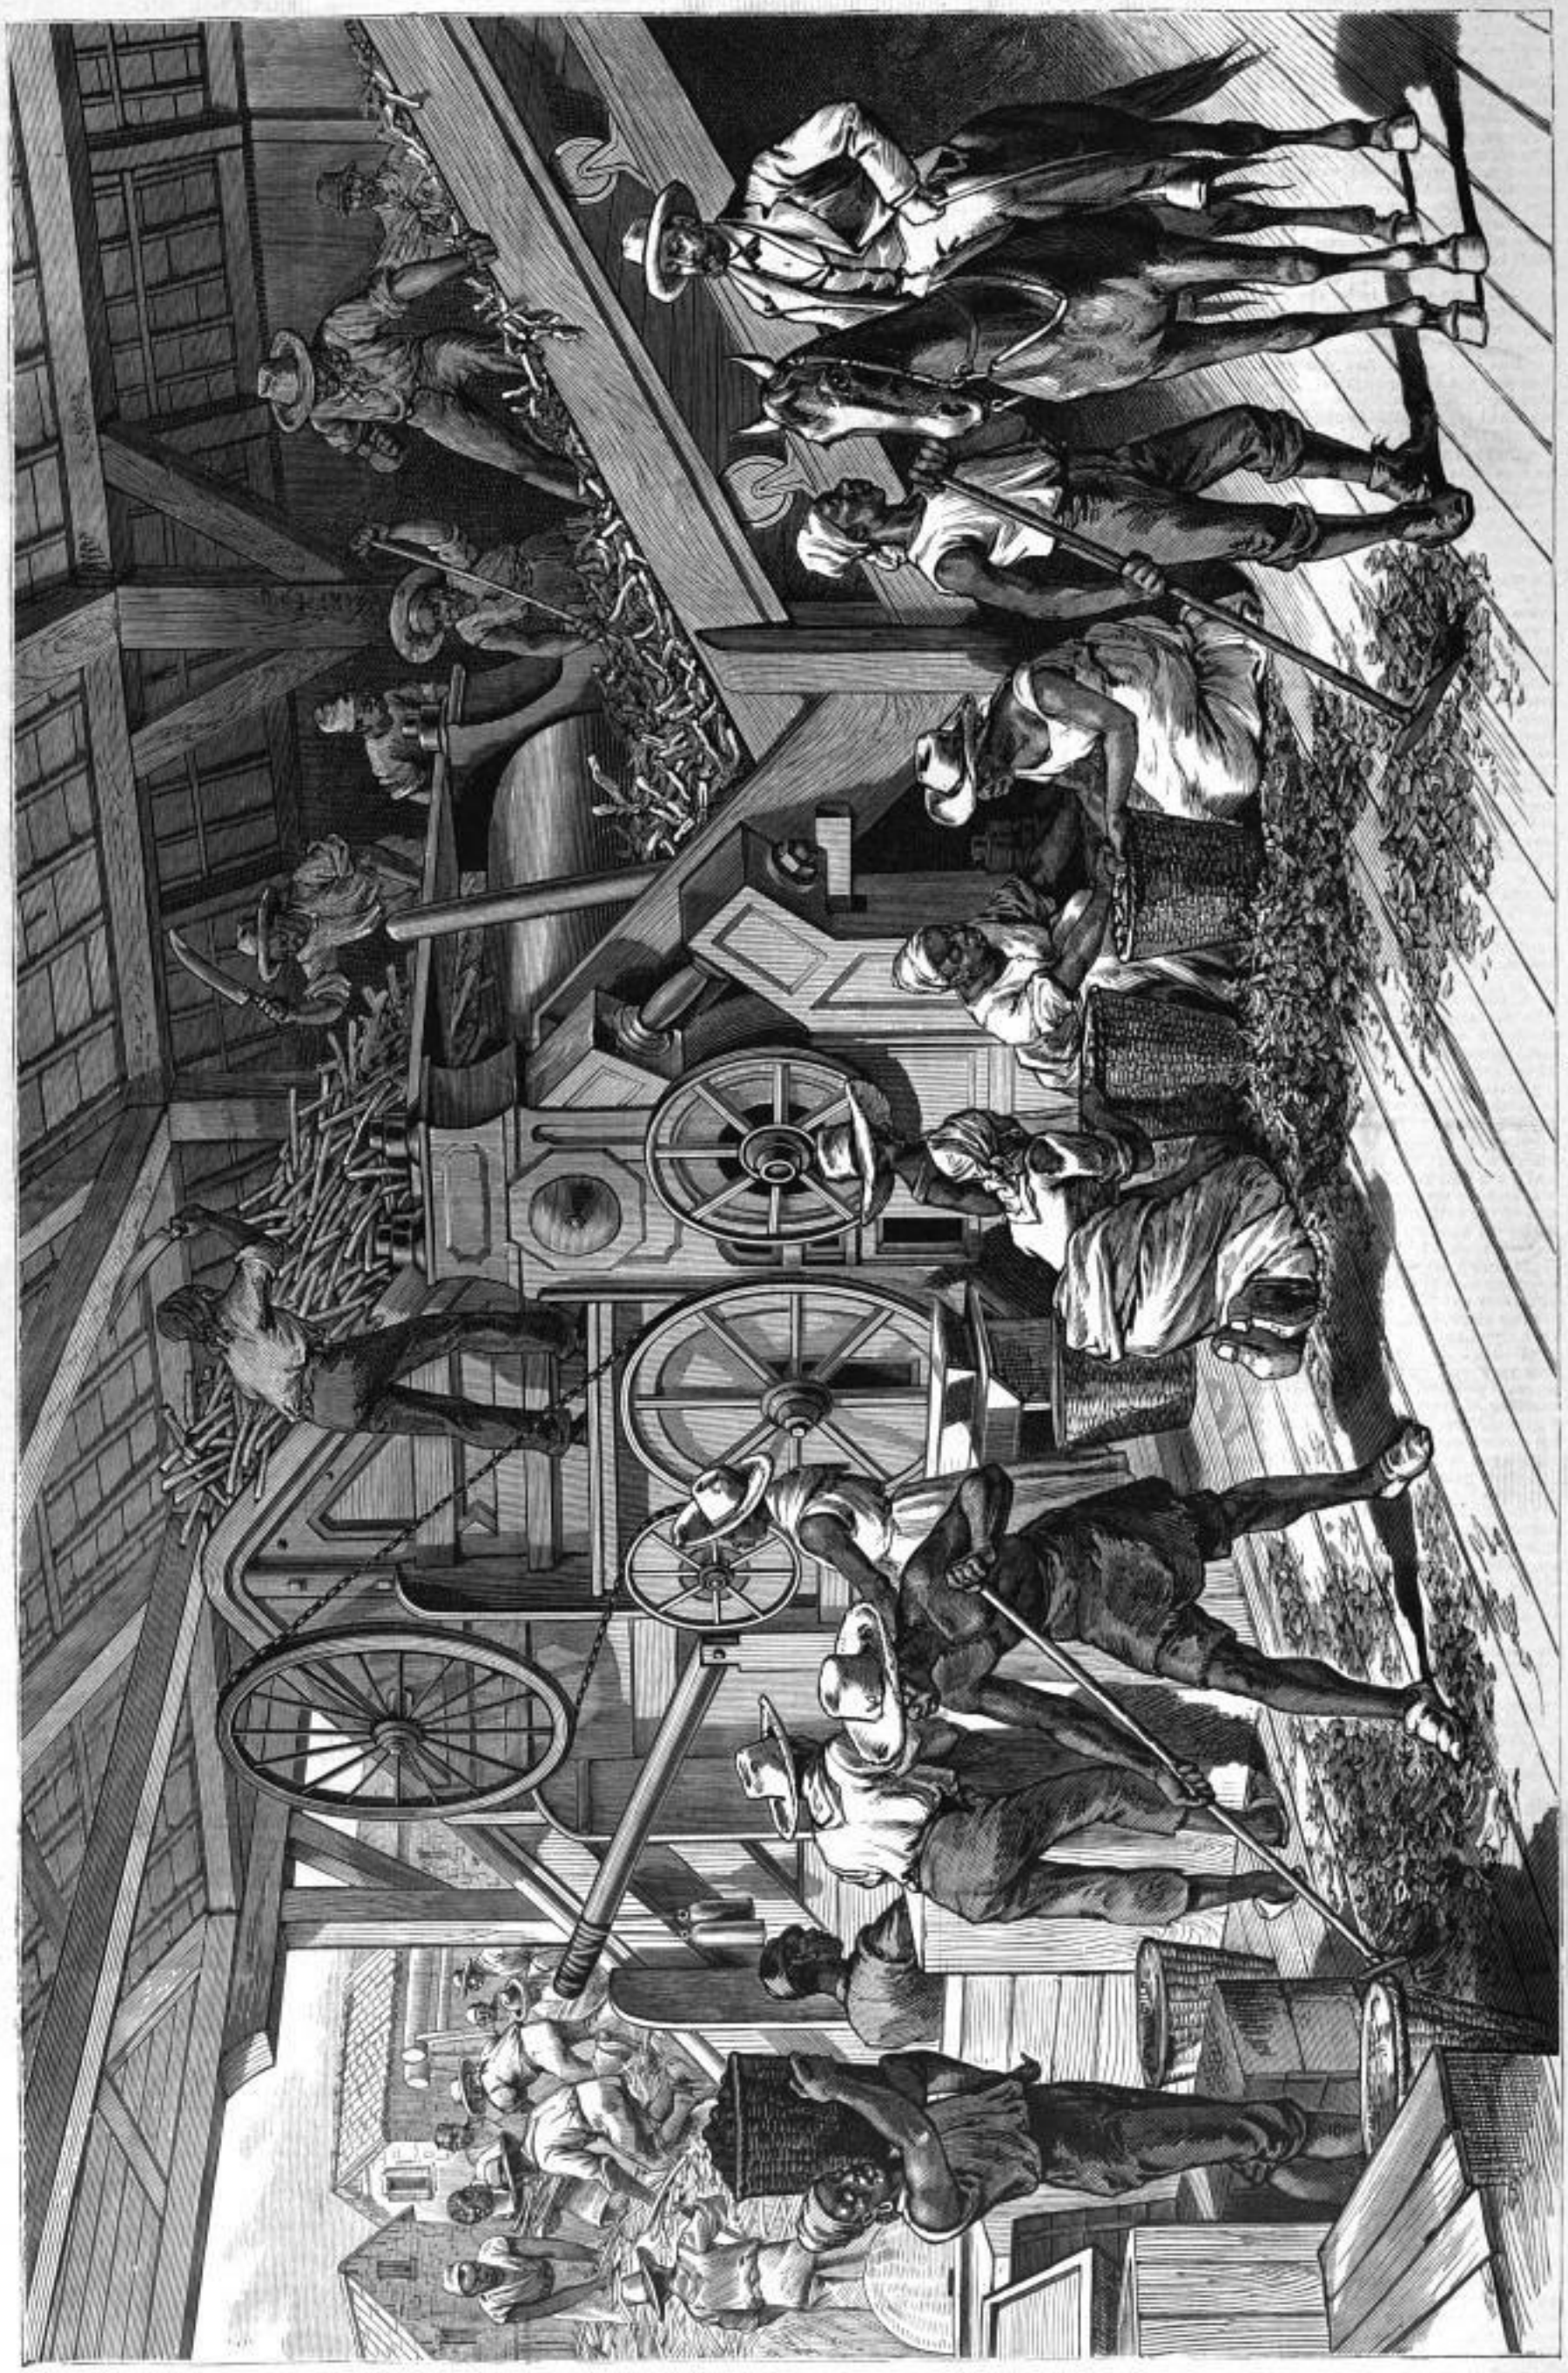
RISTORI is to have a magnificent new house in Rome, which the marquis, her husband, is now building for her in the Via Nazionale. The workmen, in digging almost the last spadeful of the foundations, the other day, came upon a very large deposit of ancient bronzes—some beautiful Greek and Roman statuettes—which are important and valuable.

AFTER five trials, Miss M. Louise McLoughlin, of Cincinnati, has at last succeeded in completing the largest vase ever molded in this country. It is called the Ali Baba Vase, and measures thirty-seven inches in height and seventeen inches in diameter. The vase in the wet clay measured forty-four inches in height and nineteen inches in diameter.

ON February 11th Standing Bear appeared before the Special Committee and told his story of the hardships of the Poncas. He is believed to be the first Indian who has appeared before such a committee since 1778. In that year a Delaware chief went before a committee of the Continental Congress and asked that measures might be taken to educate his people.

SIGNOR BRUMIDI, the venerable fresco artist of the Capitol, is now in failing health, and it is feared that he cannot continue the work of decorating the frieze of the Rotunda. Mr. John La Farge has been mentioned as an artist eminently competent to continue the work, and it has been suggested that a commission be sent to Boston to examine the decorations in Trinity Church and report.

COLONEL PREJEVALSKY has traversed the plains of Tsaidam and struck upon the caravan route between Peking and Thibet, which runs beyond. He was escorted by a Chinese guard. The route through northern Thibet to that city is known, partly from Prejevalsky's own researches in 1873 and partly from Huc and Gabet's journey. But the former part of the colonel's present journey, lying as it does through a region of which extremely little is known, must have yielded most interesting fruit.



JULES EMILE LEMOINNE, just chosen by the Left Centre a candidate for the French Senate, to supply the vacancy made by the death of Jules Favre, is one of the best-known and highest-toned journalists in Paris. He is a native of England, having been born in London of French parents, and received his early education there. He writes and speaks English as well as he does French; has long studied British institutions and manners, and has always had a very positive English side to his character.

BARON KURD VON SCHLOZER, the German Minister at Washington, is a plain, simply-dressed bachelor, who does an immense amount of work. He is as simple in his habits as in his dress. When all the other diplomats went in elegant carriages to make their New Year's call upon the President, Baron von Schlozer walked. He takes a long walk every morning, gets his own mail from the post-office, and does thereafter a hard day's work. He used to be the private secretary of Prince Bismarck.

SPAIN has a remarkable speculator in the Marquis de Santa Cruz di Mondilla. He made a fortune many years ago, and became a large holder of fir-tree lands in the Sierra di Segura, just before they rose from nothing to great value by the railroad being made from Alicante to Madrid. His next venture was in planting vines on such a scale that he is believed to be the largest owner of vineyards in the world. His district is the well-known one of Valdepeñas. His vineyards are plowed, instead of worked by hand, and he raises great quantities of drinkable wine at small cost.

M. PAUL SOLEILLET has once more gone back to Senegambia, and feels sure of not only being able to reach Timbuctoo, but also of crossing the Sahara to Algeria. His expedition is undertaken with a view of determining a suitable line for a trans-Saharan railway. MM. de Choisy and Pouyanne are to explore the Algerian Sahara with the same object in view, and, although the somewhat Utopian scheme of building a railway through a desert in order to reach markets far more accessible from other directions may never be realized, geographical science is sure to profit from these explorations, undertaken at the cost of the French ministry of public works.

Digitized by Google

CUBA.—THE GREAT SUGAR INDUSTRY.—GRINDING THE CANE AT THE LAS CAÑAS PLANTATION.—FROM SKETCHES BY WALTER YEAGER.—SEE PAGE 475.

Digitized by Google

ORTER, EX-MAJOR-GENERAL, U.S.A.

ITZ JOHN PORTER.

Fitz John Porter, which has attracted tion of military men both here and in he was cashiered from the army r, is now invested with greater inter-prove that his action was both honorable and justifiable. This mass of testimony was strengthened by material evidence from Southern and other officers which could not be obtained at the court-martial. Fortified with an immense mass of most valuable evidence, he appealed to President Grant for a revision of the proceedings at his trial, but this was refused. A second appeal met the same result. Meanwhile he kept up his collection of evidence, and, making an appeal to President Hayes, was gratified by the issue of an Executive order for the rehearing so long and earnestly sought. The result of the examination was favorable to General Porter, and Bills were introduced into both branches of Congress for the purpose of making reparation for the injustice under which he has lived for eighteen years. There is a division among the members of the Committee to which the Bill was referred, and reports have been made, representing a majority, a minority and an individual. The case was made the special order in the Senate for Monday, February 16th.

HON. ELI H. MURRAY, THE NEWLY-APPOINTED GOVERNOR OF UTAH TERRITORY.

HON. ELI H. MURRAY.

GENERAL ELI HUSTON MURRAY, the new Governor of Utah Territory, was born in 1843, in Cloverport, Breckinridge County, Ky. At the age of eighteen he left school and joined the Third Kentucky Cavalry as major. On the death of Colonel James Jackson, he became colonel of the regiment, and was with it till the close of the war, though soon after promoted to be brigadier-general, in which capacity he commanded a brigade in Kilpatrick's division on Sherman's march to the sea. Since the close of the war he, for two terms, filled the office of United States Marshal for the State of Kentucky, afterwards retiring to the practice of law, and still later, about six months ago, purchasing a main interest in the Louisville Daily Commercial, which paper he now conducts. He has been Chairman of the State Central Committee; was appointed by the President on the late Board of Visitors to Annapolis, and may be said to be, at present, the most prominent man in the Republican Party of Kentucky.

Personally, General Murray is tall and commanding, being something above six feet three inches, with coal-black hair and beard, and very pleasing face. He has three brothers, who are men of marked ability: Logan C. Murray, President of the Kentucky National Bank of Louisville; David R. Murray, member of the Kentucky Senate, and James Allen Murray, County Judge of Breckinridge County, Ky. Hon. T. T. Crittenden, late member of Congress from Missouri, is his half-brother. The position which he has accepted is likely to prove a very trying one in consequence of the activity of anti-polygamists in Congress and elsewhere.

MAHMOUD JAN, AFGHAN INSURRECTIONIST.

INGTON ARTILLERY MONUMENT TO DICATED ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTH-T NEW ORLEANS.

THE WASHINGTON ARTILLERY OF NEW ORLEANS.

AMONG the ceremonies now in preparation for the celebration of Washington's Birthday in New Orleans, a very noticeable one will be the unveiling and dedication of the monument erected in the Metairie Cemetery to the dead of the battalion of the Washington Artillery. The exercises will take place at three o'clock in the afternoon, and will be witnessed by a large company of people, representatives of the public, military and social life of New Orleans and neighboring cities. The Washington Artillery is to New Orleans what the Seventh Regiment is to New York, the Fifth Regiment to Baltimore, the Ancient and Honorable Artillery to Boston, the Washington Light Infantry to Charleston—an organization of the best men of the city. We publish a view of the new monument and an engraving of the Veteran Badge of the battalion.

VETERAN BADGE OF THE WASHINGTON ARTILLERY OF NEW ORLEANS.

e of being a subject of Congressional From the day of his dismissal, General cted majs, documents and affidavits to

MRS. ASTOR'S "LOVING CUP."

MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR has presented to Dr. Fordyce Barker, in his capacity of President of the New York Academy of Medicine, a beautiful work of art which she denominates a "Loving Cup." At the meeting held on January 15th, Mrs. Astor's letter was read to the members of the Academy by Dr. Thomas, after which President Barker said: "The cup, to which reference is made in the letter just read by Dr. Thomas, I shall now bring before you. Its beauty of design, conceived by the donor of the gift, and its perfection of artistic finish are worthy of the graceful language in which it is offered to us. I am now most happy to offer it for your inspection. Its surface is ornamented by the acacia, symbol of friendship and love. On the front is the seal of the Academy, its motto and the head of Hippocrates. Above is the name of the President and the date of his election, with spaces left for the names of his successors, while on its upper part is engraved a sentiment in which I am sure that all of us will most heartily sympathize. When we adjourn I shall ask you all to make use of this 'loving cup' in the room below. It has already been consecrated by the lips of woman, the aroma of which, let us hope, will ever remain to perpetuate the beautiful sentiment engraved upon it, 'May peace and love be multiplied unto us.'"

"LOVING CUP" PRESENTED TO THE NEW YORK ACADEMY OF MEDICINE BY MRS. JOHN J. ASTOR.

MAHMOUD JAN.

JUST as General Roberts had returned to Cabul and hanged a number of public men, officers, soldiers and "fanatics," for partici-

NEW YORK CITY.—THE SHEPHERD'S FOLD INQUIRY—REV. EDWARD COWLEY LISTENING TO THE TESTIMONY.—SEE PAGE 475.

Digitized by Google

BOOK NOTICE.

THE New York Evening Express has issued a "Statesman's Annual and Almanac" for 1880, which, from its careful compilation and editing, will take high rank among statistical annuals. It is invaluable for ready reference.

Washington Monument.

IT appears from a late official report that the Washington Monument, that great unfinished work of commemorative art, is going steadily forward. The engineers are still struggling with the foundation. There was expended in strengthening it last year the sum of $66,753.90. The cost of this necessary fundamental process so far is $87,903.90. The strengthening fund holds $32,096.10 yet in reserve. If all of it is used, the total amount expended in coaxing the thing to stand up will be $120,000. Meanwhile, cautious and tentative treatment of the superstructure has gone on—or, rather, what will be the superstructure when the foundation has been sufficiently encouraged to bear it, a result which the engineers are confident of accomplishing. In this treatment, $19,356.55 have been expended during the year, or $21,256.45 in all, while $98,843.55 more are available for the purpose. This will not suffice to finish the job or come anywhere near doing so. It is estimated that for 71,071 cubic feet of dressed granite, and 180,778 cubic feet of dressed marble, for iron work on stairs and machinery, for iron and glass roof, and for sealing 366,849 feet, no less than $677,323 will be required in addition to what has already been appropriated. "By the spring of 1883," it is further estimated, the people of the United States will be invited to gaze with admiration, not unmixed with awe, upon the completed shaft, towering to a height of 550 feet, and to decide whether the work of art is worth what it will have cost.

The Empress of Russia.

THE marriage of the Empress of Russia, who now lies ill at Cannes, was almost a romance. In 1831, when the present Czar was twenty-three years of age, a list was prepared at St. Petersburg of marriageable German princesses, and under the care of Count Orloff the Czarevitch went to visit them. He had been to Berlin and the courts of North Germany, and was on his way to Carlsruhe when he arrived at Frankfort. The Prince was about to resume his journey when he received an invitation from the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt to dine at the Palace of Darmstadt. As a matter of courtesy only the invitation was accepted, and after dinner the court adjourned to another room for tea. There the Russian Cupids in search of a wife saw a young lady of sixteen, accompanied by her governess, whose appearance was so charming by its simplicity that he inquired who she was. The Princess Mary was the daughter of his host, but her name was not upon the St. Petersburg list. Presently the royal and imperial personages proceeded to the drawing-room, where Alexander asked to be presented to the attractive girl, and a long conversation with her confirmed his first impressions. Next morning Count Orloff informed the Prince of the arrangements for proceeding to Baden. "My dear count," said the Grand Duke, "we shall go no farther; I have made my choice; my journey is finished." Orloff had not suspected how matters stood, and expostulated. The Princesses of Baden had not been seen, and the name of the Princess Mary of Hesse was not on the list. Alexander would go to Carlsruhe if politeness required, but he had made up his mind to marry none other than the Princess Mary. When the news reached St. Petersburg the entourage of the Emperor endeavored to prevent this marriage; but Nicholas was tenderly attached to his son and would not allow him to be thwarted in an affair of the heart. An old diplomatist, the Count de Reiset, tells this story in his unpublished memoirs. The Czarevitch married the Princess Mary a few months later. Eleven years after this the same writer saw the Czarevna at Krasnoe-Selo, watching through the palace window the first guard of her eldest son at the door of his grandfather's palace. Heavy rain was falling; the little fellow had put on a big soldier's cloak, in which he marched to and fro with difficulty, and the mother's heart was anxious about the exposure of her first-born. Thirteen years later still, and all the careful nursing of the Empress did not suffice to save the life of this same son, who died at Nice, after putting his brother's hand in that of his own betrothed, the Princess Dagmar of Denmark. So there are romances of love and sorrow beneath the etiquette and glitter of courts.

The Iron Trade of 1879.

THE year which has just closed was a most remarkable one in the history of the American iron trade. According to a special report by Mr. James M. Swank, Secretary of the American Iron & Steel Association, more pig iron, bar iron, rails and steel was turned out than in any previous year. The production of pig iron was 2,800,000 gross tons, or half a million more than in 1878; of iron and steel rails, 1,100,000 tons, exceeding the previous year by 331,889 tons. The production of rolled iron was twenty per cent. larger than 1878.

The advance in prices has been considerable. No. 1 anthracite foundry pig has advanced 106 per cent.; cut nails by the keg, 102 per cent.; old iron rails, 89 per cent.; No. 1 wrought scrap, 70 per cent. These are among the highest advances.

Says Mr. Swank, "Such a rapid advance in prices has never before taken place in one year in this country, except during the war; but, if allowance be made for the depreciation in the currency in that period, the present rise is absolutely without parallel."

The year 1879 was remarkable for the new impulse which it gave to the building of railroads. About four thousand miles were constructed during the year, against 2,747 in 1878. The mileage of 1879 was equal to that of 1873, which was 4,082 miles. The greatest mileage in any one year was in 1871, when 7,656 miles were built. The increased demand for new rails was one of the causes of the iron trade revival, but a more potent cause was the sudden demand in the spring by existing roads for rails, cars and locomotives, to meet the requirements of increased transportation of agricultural products, and to compensate for the wear and tear of the hard times.

The business of building iron ships did not improve in 1879, but the manufacture of steel wire fencing was greatly extended during the year, about twenty thousand tons of steel being consumed in this new industry. There was also a large demand during the year for iron pipes and tanks, and pipes for the Bradford region. During the last six months the importations of pig iron, old iron, iron and steel rails have been very large. "This," says Mr. Swank, "should teach our manufacturers that the English policy of piling up iron in hard times, to be prepared for good times, is a safe policy to follow."

Of the prospects of the trade for the coming year the association has this to say: "Experience has taught us that it is not safe to prophecy what any new year has in store for the American iron trade. We will, therefore, simply state what probably every person in the trade already knows, that more furnaces and mills will be running in 1880 than in 1879, and that, as a consequence, our iron and steel production in the new year will be greater than in the old one. After the 1st of April it will be fully equal to the demand in all lines. Whether prices will remain as high as they are or go up still higher no man can find out, nor whether we will build more railroads in 1880 than in 1879. It seems certain that our importations of iron ore this year will be larger than last, large contracts having already been made. Probably 500,000 tons will be imported in 1880, against 300,000 in 1879. The steel blooms bought in 1879, aggregating considerably less than 50,000 tons, have not yet arrived."

FUN.

IT is the cat that fights with éclat.

CÆSAR'S Commentaries—Remarks by the sheriff when making a levy.

FREE trade is all right in its way, but what the young men want after the 31st of December is protection.

THE greatest compliment you can pay a man is to call him "an advanced thinker." It beats the title of "general" all out of sight.

THE principal beauty of the Mormon religion is that the same woman doesn't have to get up first the entire Winter to build the kitchen fire.

A LITTLE girl being asked, on the first day of school, how she liked her new teacher, replied: "I do not like her; she is just as saucy to me as my mother."

THE well-dressed individual, though he may owe his tailor, thinks he cannot be quite familiar with the rugged tramp. The clothes line must be drawn somewhere.

WILLIAM WATKINS, of Madison, remained a bachelor until he was fifty-seven years old, when he married, the other day. The local papers whooped out the head-line: "Another old landmark gone."

THE other Sunday a bright girl of three years attended service at an Episcopal church, where the rector was one of her particular friends. She objected to her mother making the responses, saying: "Don't speak, mamma; don't say anything. Uncle John isn't talking to you."

THERE is a good deal of fraud practiced under the guise of unfamiliar science. A skeptical miner in Arizona suspected that a certain assayer was an impostor, powdered up an old dried potato and gave the dust to him to analyze as a new ore. The alleged chemist said it yielded $40 in silver to the ton.

EXPERIENCE TEACHES.—Belle—"This holly in my hair wants a little relief—it's too red." Aunty—"Well, why not put in a sprig or two of mistletoe, dear?" Belle—"Nonsense, aunty. Why I should have all the young men kissing me." Aunty—"Indeed, no, my dear, they'd do nothing of the kind. I've tried 'em."

A YOUNG mother was giving to her son, age five years, a touching description of the misery into which the prodigal son had fallen. "Far away from home and his kind father, obliged to take care of swine, with nothing to eat but the husks of corn left by them," etc. "Then, why didn't he eat the pig?" was the practical reply.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

NO MAN, however uncleanly, would drink muddy, dirty water. A party which occupies a room for hours, breathing the same air, might be compared to a party of bathers drinking the water in which they bathe. The patient must keep the window of his bedroom open. Night air is fresh air without daylight. In close, crowded rooms, the patient suffering from lung complaints breathes consumptively. By taking these precautions and using DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY and PLEASANT PURGATIVE PELLETS, fully one-half of the cases of lung complaints would be cured in six months. For cough and irritation of the lungs do not always indicate the presence of consumption, although it may result in that disease, and if consumption has already become deeply seated in the system, this is the most efficient course of treatment that can be pursued outside of any institution that provides special facilities for the treatment of this disease. Dr. Pierce's celebrated Invalids' Hotel is such an institution. Send stamp for descriptive pamphlet containing also a complete treatise upon consumption, explaining its causes, nature, and the best methods of treating it, together with valuable hints concerning diet, clothing, exercise, etc., for consumptives. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE is prepared according to the directions of Professor E. N. Horsford, of Cambridge, Mass., the well-known authority on nutritious bread and the cereals. Useful in Dyspepsia, Nervous Diseases, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, etc.

UNHEALTHY or inactive kidneys cause gravel, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and a horde of other serious and fatal diseases, which can be prevented with HOP BITTERS if taken in time.

THE THROAT.—"Brown's Bronchial Troches" act directly on the organs of the voice. They have an extraordinary effect in all disorders of the Throat and Larynx, restoring a healthy tone when relaxed, either from cold or over-exertion of the voice, and produce a clear and distinct enunciation. Speakers and Singers find the Troches useful.

NO MATTER how careful, you are liable to accidents, and should be insured in THE TRAVELERS.

BURNETT'S KALLISTON, as a wash for the complexion, has no equal. It is distinguished for its cooling and soothing properties, removing tan, sunburn, freckles, redness and roughness of the skin, etc., curing chapped hands, and allaying the irritation caused by the bites of musquitoes and other annoying insects.

THE favorite ST. NICHOLAS may be considered one of the most favored hotels in New York, for it not only holds its own against fresh up-town attractions, but is remembered with real affection by its earliest patrons throughout the country. There is no hotel under better management than the ST. NICHOLAS, and years of prosperous business seem only to increase the exertions of its proprietor to preserve this golden reputation. A luxurious table, exquisite neatness, quick and willing service, are always appreciated by guests, if there only for the day.

HALFORD'S LEICESTERSHIRE TABLE SAUCE.—No gentleman's table should be set without it. A genuine relish.

SEND for our Treatise on Kidney and Lung Diseases. Sent free on application.
Excelsior Kidney Pad Co., Toledo, Ohio.

FRENCH SECRETS FOR BEAUTY

Can be obtained free by addressing the JUVENILINE Co., 99 Liberty Street, or P.O. Box 2281, New York City.

TO THOSE men who worked Life Insurance successfully, I will pay a salary of $1,200 to $1,800. Send record immediately to H. P. DUCLOS, Superintendent Safety Fund Department, Hartford, Conn. The plan is entirely new and a big success.

H. W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS LIQUID PAINTS are strictly first-class pure linseed-oil paints, and contain no water. They are the best and most economical paints in the world for structural purposes. H. W. Johns Mfg. Co., 87 Maiden Lane, sole manufacturers.

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ½ and 1 lb., labeled.

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, LONDON, ENG.

The N. Y. Evening Express

STATESMAN'S ANNUAL

And Almanac

FOR 1880.

NOW READY.

Price 50 Cents.

A BLUE BOOK OF THE WORLD.

This book contains more valuable information, presented in a concise, readable manner, than any other book before published, and, as a ready book of reference, no Merchant, Banker, Statesman or Politician can afford to be without it.

For sale by all Booksellers, Stationers and Newsmen, or may be ordered direct from the office of publication.

Address,
N. Y. EXPRESS CO.,
23 Park Row, New York City.

JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

AND THE PRICE IS

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them; but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail.

CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM

GOUT OR GRAVEL. Schlumberger is the only patentee in France. L. A. Paris, 136 6th Ave., N. Y., his only agent for the celebrated French Salicylates, which relieve at once, cure in four days, without dangerous consequences, their purity being controlled according to French laws by the Board of Pharmacy of Paris. Beware—The genuine has red seal and signature of agent on each box. $1, post-paid. Send stamp for pamphlet. Thousands of references.

KEEP'S SHIRTS,

Gloves, Umbrellas, Underwear, Etc.

SAMPLES AND CIRCULARS MAILED FREE.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
631, 633, 635, 637 Broadway, N. Y.

SECRET HOW to become Rich and Watch sent free. FELTON & CO., Agents, New York.

CHEAP MUSIC

Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 22 Park Row, New York.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,

COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

TO THE PUBLIC.
BOKER'S BITTERS.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS
In accordance with the desire frequently expressed, both in the United States and abroad, these Bitters, so long and justly celebrated for their fineness as a cordial, and for their medicinal virtues against all diseases of, or arising from, the digestive organs, will henceforth be put up and sold not only in quart, but
ALSO IN PINT BOTTLES,
for medicinal, family, traveling, and other purposes. To be had at all the principal druggists', grocers', liquor-merchants', etc. L. FUNKE, Jr., Sole Agent, New York, 78 John Street. Post Office Box 1,029.

CANDY

Sent one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

ANGOSTURA BITTERS

An excellent appetizing tonic, of exquisite flavor, now used over the whole civilized world, cures dyspepsia, diarrhœa, fever and ague, colics, and all disorders of the digestive organs.

Try it, but beware of counterfeits. Ask your grocer or druggist for the genuine article, manufactured by DR. J. G. B. SIEGERT & SONS.

J. W. HANCOX, U. S. Sole Agent, 51 Broadway, New York. P. O. Box 2,610, New York.

WORSTED BY MAIL.

Send me 25 cents, and I will send postpaid Forty Knots German Zephyr Worsted. This is BERLIN Wool, best imported. F. W. Gardner, Lynn, Mass.

CLEAR HAVANA Small Cigars, "INFANTES," $11.00 per 1,000. Sample box by mail, 30c. Agents wanted. J. M. ANCHEZ, 2166 6th Av., N. Y.

Amusements.

FIFTH AVE. THEATRE. SECOND MONTH.
JOHN T. FORD.....Lessee and Manager.
LAST THREE WEEKS OF
D'OYLY CARTE'S LONDON OPERA COMPANY, IN GILBERT AND SULLIVAN'S LAST AND GREATEST SUCCESS, THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE, Produced under the personal supervision of
THE AUTHOR AND COMPOSER.
Seats secured two weeks in advance.
The public are cautioned against ticket speculators.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. HUMPTY DUMPTY.

MARKED EVENT OF THE SEASON.
EMPHATIC SUCCESS.

Every Evening, Wednesday and Saturday Matinées.
ABBEY'S
HUMPTY DUMPTY
and
SPANISH STUDENTS.
200 ARTISTS 200
Prices—25c., 50c., 75c., $1 and $1.50.
Matinées Reserved, 50c. and $1.
Admittance for children under 12 years to Matinées only 25c.

SEATS SECURED ONE WEEK IN ADVANCE at BOOTH'S and ABBEY'S PARK THEATRE.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only theatre under the management of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
The Perfection of Music, Spectacle & Comedy
FOURTH WEEK OF THE
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY.
Every Night at 8. Saturday Matinee at 2.
 Seats may be secured for the ROYAL MIDDY one month in advance.
On Wednesday Afternoon, Feb. 18th.
And on each WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON ONLY, will be revived W. S. GILBERT'S best dramatic comedy, as arranged for the stage by Augustin Daly, and entitled CHARITY.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE
Sole Lessee and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER.
Begins at 8. Over at 10:35.

SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:45.
FIFTH WEEK, AND UNLIMITED SUCCESS
of
MR. EDGAR FAWCETT'S
brilliant play
THE FALSE FRIEND,
which, with its magnificent scenery and a CAST OF CHARACTERS made from
THE BEST COMPANY IN AMERICA,
will be presented every evening and Saturday matinee
UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
Seats for
THE FALSE FRIEND
may be procured two weeks in advance.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
JOHN A. STEVENS'S "UNKNOWN."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
AN ARABIAN NIGHT.
CHAS. L. ANDERSON, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS.
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS.
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
SECOND WEEK and great success of
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY
in the musical Extravaganza,
HORRORS. HORRORS.
MATINEE SATURDAY AT 1:30.
Wednesday evening, February 18th, the new Opera Bouffe Extravaganza,
HIAWATHA.
Entire music by E. E. RICE.
New scenery by VOEGTLIN.

Frank Leslie's Chatterbox.

FORTY-EIGHT QUARTO PAGES.
Published monthly. Single copies only 10 cents. Annual subscription, $1, postpaid.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

DR. BROWNING'S
C. & C.
CORDIAL

For Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis,
Tickling or Dryness of the Throat,
Sore Throat, Cold in the Head,
Cold in the Bowels, Asthmatic Coughs,
Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza,
Hoarseness, and Relief of Consumptives.

Dr. BROWNING is a regular graduate of medicine, a skilful pharmacist and a thorough chemist. His "C. & C." (Cough and Cold) CORDIAL is not the result of mere chance, but of long scientific research in chemistry and medicine, as is very plainly seen by the rapidity of its action and its unparalleled efficacy. The expense of its manufacture is at least five times as great as that of any other medicine upon the market, and yet it is sold at the exceedingly low price of 50c. Sample bottles (for a short time only), 25c. For sale by all druggists and by the proprietor.

W. C. BROWNING, M.D.,
1117 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA,

And the early stages of Consumption, are most successfully treated by the use of
INHALENE A Compound of CARBOLATED OIL or TAR
and the most healing Balsams, which, by simply breathing or inhaling, is converted into a cleansing, healing and vitalizing vapor, and takes direct to the disease, where it heals as quickly as the best liniment heals an ordinary sore. It cures—first, by destroying the cause; second, by local application of soothing and healing vapor; third, by purifying, vitalizing and building up the system.

CAUTION Do not be deceived by worthless imitations, advertised by so-called doctors, who charge you a big fee, or two prices for the inhaler and medicines. Order Inhalene, and secure the most reliable treatment at a reasonable price. J. Price Miller, M.D., Physician-in-charge. Office hours, 9 A.M. to 4 P.M. Professional advice by mail. State symptoms. Name this paper. Send for Circular. Address all letters to HOME MEDICINE CO. 35 W. cor. 10th & Arch sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

H.W.JOHNS' ASBESTOS

Liquid Paints, Roofing, Boiler Coverings, Steam Packing, Sheathings, Fire Proof Coatings, Cements, &c. Send for Descriptive Price List.
H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO. 87 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

$10,000. SAFETY LAMP.

Mailed Free for 35 Cts.
Your fee $1.
$10,000 will be paid to any person who can explode a Lamp fitted with our PATENT AIR SAFETY ATTACHMENT.
May use any lamp or burner. Prevents dripping and heating. Send for sample, with size of collar and depth of your lamp.
AGENTS WANTED. S. S. Newton's Safety Lamp Co., 12 West Broadway, New York.
Factory and Office, Binghamton, N. Y.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

Fever & Ague Remedy.
SURE CURE.
Price, 75c. Stamps received. Send for circular.
PODOLSKI, Druggist, cor. 30th and Poplar Sts. Phila., Pa. Mention this paper.

1854—The Original Gift Book Enterprise—1880

Permanently established. THE PHILADELPHIA PREMIUM BOOK CO. (Limited), organized pursuant to Act of Assembly, have completed arrangements with THE LEADING PUBLISHING HOUSES OF AMERICA, which enables them to give to their patrons GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, PARLOR TURKISHES, ELEGANT SILK-DRESS PATTERNS, SOLID SILVERWARE, Best English and American Cutlery, and a great variety of STAPLE Goods of use and value—ALL GIVEN TO PURCHASERS OF BOOKS. All the New and Standard Books at the Lowest Prices. A Gift ranging in value from a Gold Watch to a Pen-knife with each Book at the time of sale. Any Book published, promptly sent on receipt of price. Our New Classified Catalogue for 1880, (a Guide to Choice Reading,) now ready, and will be sent to any address. Send for it! Send for it!! Send for it!!!
N. B.—Books and Gifts free to persons forming clubs. Address Philadelphia Premium Book Company, (Limited), 610 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF By sending 35 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage.
Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

TEN PHOTOGRAPHS of FEMALE BEAUTIES, 10 cts. Catalogue free. J. K. DEITZ, Ashland, Pa.

40 ELEGANT Chromo Cards, with name, postpaid, 10 cents. L. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

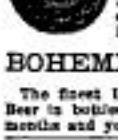
Will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to customers without ordering it. It contains four colored plates, 500 engravings, about 200 pages, and full descriptions, prices and directions for planting 1800 varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, Roses, etc. Invaluable to all. Send for it. Address,
D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

KNOW THYSELF.

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; or, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail, postpaid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."



An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers, by permission, to JOS. S. FISHER, president; W. L. F. INGRAHAM, vice-president; W. PAINE, M.D.; C. S. GAUNTT, M.D.; E. J. DOUGET, M.D.; R. H. KLINE, M.D.; J. R. HOLCOMB, M.D.; N. R. LYNCH, M.D., and M. S. O'CONNELL, M.D., Faculty of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; also the Faculty of the American University of Philadelphia; also Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., president of the National Medical Association.

Address, Dr. W. H. PARKER,
No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.
Central Park Brewery
AND
Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159—165 East Fifty-ninth Street. Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

Imitation Gold Watches.
$5, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 338 Broadway, N. Y. Box 3986.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & CO., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

OPIUM and MORPHINE HABIT CURED. Dr. W. H. SQUIRE, Worthington, Greene Co., Ind., has been more successful in curing the opium habit than any man living. Send stamp for particulars.

FOR BOYS & GIRLS. An elegant Gilt-bound Autograph Album, with Engravings of Flowers, Ferns, Scrolls, etc.; also a select list of quotations, all 15c., postpaid. Agents wanted. E. T. HYDE, Box 34, West Haven, Ct.

PHOTOS—Actresses, 5c. Sporting subjects, 10c. each; 6 for 25c.; 75c. per doz. Catalogue of Photos, Chromo Books, etc., 3c. N. L. WHITNEY, 67 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

50 Pinafore, Chromo, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 50 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

62 Gold, Crystal, Lace, Perfumed & Chromo Cards, name in Gold and Jet, 10c. Clinton Bros., Clintonville, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

50 Cards, no 2 alike, new style, chromo, motto, marble, etc., name on, 10c. H.C. Ades, Northford, Ct.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

A beautiful work of 100 Pages, One Colored Flower Plate, and 500 Illustrations, with Descriptions of the best Flowers and Vegetables, and how to grow them. All for a FIVE CENT STAMP. In English or German.

VICK'S SEEDS are the best in the world. FIVE CENTS for postage will buy the FLORAL GUIDE, telling how to get them.

The Flower and Vegetable Garden, 175 Pages, Six Colored Plates, and many hundred Engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 Pages, a Colored Plate in every Number, and many fine Engravings. Price $1.25 a year; Five Copies for $5. Specimen Numbers sent for 10 cents; 3 trial copies for 25 cts.
Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

NATIONAL
DISPENSARY
419 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

N. D. OZONIZED REMEDIES for all Diseases. Permanently cures Paralysis, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Liver Complaint, Cancers and Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Tumors and all Blood Diseases, Nervousness, Baldness and Grayness, Tape Worm, etc. Our Practice is Eclectic. Patients can be treated successfully at their homes, if they will describe their symptoms carefully. Also, will be provided with Hygeno Board. Electricity a specialty. Ozone Inhalations. Agents wanted. ISAAC M. MITCHELL, M.D., Prop'r.

The Oldest and Best of the Juveniles!

Frank Leslie's
Boys' & Girls' Weekly

A SIXTEEN-PAGE, FOUR-COLUMN PAPER, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

A CONSTANT SUCCESSION OF ORIGINAL SERIAL STORIES,

By popular authors. They are full of animation and brightness; descriptive of stirring adventures by land and sea; altogether free from coarseness and sensationalism, etc., and replete with entertainment and information.

The contents are of a varied character, consisting of Portraits and Sketches of Distinguished Pupils at the Public Schools; Adventures; Articles on Interesting and Instructive Subjects; Talks with Boys about Foreign Lands; Magic and Mystery; Puzzles; Fun for the Boys, etc., etc.

PRIZES FOR THE BEST DRAWINGS.

Three Weekly Prizes are given for the Best Drawing sent in to FRANK LESLIE'S BOYS' & GIRLS' WEEKLY, each drawing to be accompanied by the attestation of the teacher that it is the pupil's own work, without outlining or touching up by any other hand.

Published every Monday, to be had at all the newsdealers', price 5 cents a copy; $2.50 a year, postage free.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's
POPULAR MONTHLY.

The Cheapest and Most Comprehensive Magazine in the World.

THE

March Number Now Ready,

WITH THE FOLLOWING VARIED AND INTERESTING TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"FRANK LESLIE," by Richard B. Kimball; 10 Illustrations. "Manresa"; Illustrated. "The Bleikeller of Bremen"; Illustrated. "The Austriane in the Ice—Kaiser Franz Josef's Land, and the Escape from It," by Godfrey A. Hudson; 14 Illustrations. "The Old Tavern Life in England," by Henry Barton Baker, Author of "Mirabeau," "French Society," etc.; 4 Illustrations. "Dairy Farming in America," by A. S. Fuller; 13 Illustrations. "Why the Wind Blows," by Robert James Mann, M.D., F.R.L.S.; 12 Illustrations, etc., etc.

Serials, Short Stories, etc.—"Not Guilty," by Effie W. Pierce (Chaps. VIII. to X.); Illustrated. "At Miss Twinkledell's," by the Author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's." "An Anachronism," by John Gilbert; Illustrated. "An Adventure on the Yang-tse-Kiang"; Illustrated. "Imara"; Illustrated. "The Burial at Sea," by Walter Edgar McCann; Illustrated. "Annette," by Sue Chestnutwood; Illustrated. "The Next Heir; Or, A Fatal Compact"; Illustrated. "Lindley Hall," by Eleanor Kirk; Illustrated. "Irene"; Illustrated. "A Night of Horror"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Sketches, etc.—"Bluebeard." "The Bicentennial of the Discovery of the Falls of St. Anthony"; Illustrated. "The Mauritius Rebel." "The Battle of Bannockburn"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Poems.—"The Second Wife," by Arthur Matthews; Illustrated. "The Mermaid"; Illustrated. "The Three Wishes," by Francois Coppee; translated by O'Shaughnessy. "Will He Come?" Illustrated. "A Mother's Love," etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"The Heron Feeding Her Young"; Illustrated. "Anchylitis in Infantile Disorders." "The Coldest Town in the World." "But One Book." "Ants." "Recent Progress in Science." "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES—OVER 100 EMBELLISHMENTS.

A Beautiful Colored Frontispiece, "Nature's Own Mirror."

Single copies, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid.

SEND 25 CENTS FOR A SPECIMEN COPY.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS! READ THIS! We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. We mean what we say. Sample Free. Address SHERMAN & CO., Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$250 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—To sell selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS WANTED—$75 to $150 Per Month,
The COMPLETE HOME
Full of PRACTICAL INFORMATION.
The Young House-keeper's GUIDE.
The Experienced House-keeper's FRIEND.
"A book of more practical utility will seldom, if ever, be found outside of inspiration."—Christian Advocate.
NEEDED in every city home BY Rich and Poor, in all country homes. Young and Old. Fine Paper, Clear Type, Beautiful Binding. Splendid Illustrations. Nearly 600 Pages. Low Prices. Sells rapidly.
Address, J. C. McCURDY & CO., Phila., Pa.

LADIES WHO prefer a nice quality of Stationery for their correspondence should inquire for Crane's Ladies' Note Papers and Envelopes to match. These goods are presented in Superfine and Extra Superfine Brands, the latter being unsurpassed in Purity, Tone and Beautiful Soft Finish by even the finest foreign production.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. DORMAN Baltimore, Md. Price-List Free.

ELECTRIC BELTS | A PERFECT CURE for premature debility. Send for circular. DR. D. KARR, 832 Broadway, N. Y.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Wallingford, Ct.

NOW READY

Frank Leslie's
ILLUSTRATED ALMANAC
For 1880.

A HANDSOME AND USEFUL ANNUAL.

This BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED RECORD of the year contains FOUR EXQUISITE PICTURES in OIL COLORS: "A WELL BRED DOG," "A SHOCKING EXAMPLE," "FIRST STEPS," and "UP A DAISY."

NUMEROUS FINE ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD.

Illustrations.

The Double Column in the Naiad's Bath, in Luray Cave, Page Co., Va.
The Late Charles Fechter in the "Corsican Brothers."
The World's Temptation.
As the Brook.
Shooting Logs Down the Sierra.
The Late Napoleon Bonaparte, Prince Imperial of France.
Can She Trust Him?
Imperial Golden Wedding in Castle Chapel, Berlin.
The Grand Altar in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York.
The Storming of Stony Point by Gen. Anthony Wayne.
General Espartero, Duke of Victoria.
Running the Lachine Rapids
Shooting Sea-lions at Far Seal Islands.
The First Dip.
Attempted Assassination of Alfonso, King of Spain.
The Ameer Mahomed Khan.
Washing Horses at "The Point," Havana.
General James Shields.
Reception of Prince's Louise and Marquis of Lorne, at Halifax.
Water-Carriers in the City of Mexico.
Baveno, on Lago Maggiore, Italy.
General Dix.
Criticising Mistress's Portrait.
Brighton Beach, Coney Island.
Mme. Elizabeth Patterson Bonaparte.
Eruption of Mount Etna.
Prince Tewfik, New Khedive of Egypt.
Etc., etc., etc.

The work contains, besides the almanac for 1880, a record of the most important and interesting events occurring during the year 1879; calendars; astronomical notes; carefully prepared statistics (valuable for reference), and a great variety of scientific and other articles embodying a large amount of useful information.

Price 25 cts. For Sale by all Newsdealers.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's
LADY'S JOURNAL.
THE
Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal
IN THE COUNTRY.

COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY FROM PARIS,
EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.

ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. Its art and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

THE EXECUTIVE AX AND THE JUDICIAL SALVE.

Both for the benefit of the finest police in the world.

WHY HE APOLOGIZED.

Senator Gordon regrets having used harsh language towards a gentleman of Mr. Stephens's age and attainments. [Daily papers.]

A. T. Stewart & Co.

ARE OPENING DAILY

An Elegant Assortment of Spring Dress Materials

IN

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL STYLES and COLORINGS

AND WILL OFFER

THROUGHOUT THIS WEEK

The Balance of their Winter Stock

RICH DRESS GOODS

AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BRESLIN & COOKE,

Proprietors.

Now open for the reception of guests

COLUMBIA BICYCLE

A practical road machine. Indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. Send 3c. stamp for 24 page catalogue with price list and full information, or 10 cts. for catalogue and copy of "The Bicycling World." THE POPE MFG. CO., 59 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, MASS.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Cabinet Organs 12 Stops, 3 set Golden Tongue Reeds, 4 Octs., 2 Knee-Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $60. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $143 to $865. Before you buy be sure to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

CURIOSITY FOR THE MICROSCOPE.—Sand from the Oil-bearing Rock of the Bradford Oil Regions, and history of well it is taken from, for 25 cts. L. D. FRENCH, P. O. Box 1084, Oil City, Pa.

Frank Leslie's Budget.

96 QUARTO PAGES—NEARLY 100 HANDSOME ILLUSTRATIONS.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE OF HUMOROUS AND SPARKLING STORIES, ETC.

Annual subscription price, $1.50, postpaid. Send 15 cts. for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

FIRM'S

Can for Explosive Fluids.

PATENTED JAN. 21st, 1879.

P. O. Box 4872, N. Y.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. H. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send for circular to

CHAS. W. COPELAND,
Sole Manufacturer,
BOSTON, MASS.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. The cheapest, largest and best book of the kind ever published. Agents wanted who can devote all their time to canvassing for this work. For circulars, terms and territory, address the publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A KEY THAT WILL WIND ANY WATCH AND NOT WEAR OUT.

SOLD by Watchmakers. By mail, 50 cents. Circulars free. J. Bisch & Co., 38 Dey St., N. Y.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, February 19, Noon.
CITY OF NEW YORK.....Saturday, February 28, 7 A.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, March 4, 11:30 A.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, March 13, 7 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER.....Saturday, March 20, 12:30 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $90, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 31 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N. Y.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 2 sizes larger sizes for business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

Frank Leslie's

POPULAR MONTHLY.

128 PAGES QUARTO. OVER 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Published on the 15th of each month. Price 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE CHEAPEST RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE PUBLISHED.

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

THE

March Number Now Ready.

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"Esther Brandon's Mission Class," by Hart Lytton; illustrated. "Amber, Ambergris and Pomanders," by Alexander Grayson; illustrated. "The Puritan Revolution," by the Rev. Lyman Abbott; 5 illustrations. "The Persecutions of the Huguenots." Part III. (in France, under Louis XIV.) by Alfred H. Guernsey; illustrated. "Lost in the Steppes of Tartary"; illustrated. "The River Tiber"; illustrated. "The Isle of Patmos"; illustrated. "The Indian Question," by Rev. H. A. Stimson. "History of the English Bible," by Henry F. Reddall. "FRANK LESLIE," by the Editor—Illustrations; The Church of the Divine Paternity; The Rev. E. H. Chapin, D.D.; The Vacant Chair; Medals Presented to Mr. Leslie; The First Wood-cut Drawn and Engraved by Frank Leslie.

Serial and Short Stories, etc.—"Harold Burt, the Night Watchman," a Story of the Great Chicago Fire; illustrated. "The Story of Annette"; illustrated. "Bebe, the Nailmaker's Daughter," by the Author of "Gideon's Rock" (Chaps. X.-XII.) "In Hood and Gown; Or, My Shaker Experience," by E. W. Easterbrooke; illustrated. "Little Hinges" (Chaps. V.-VIII.) "Entertaining an Angel," by D. C. McDonald; illustrated—etc.

Essays, etc.—"The Motive and Rewards of Christian Life." "Why God Became Man." "The Parable of the Prodigal Son in China." "The Apostles' Creed." "The Children of the Bible" (No. II.—Isaac, the Child of Promise). "Comfort Ye, Comfort Ye, My People"—etc.

Sketches, etc.—"General Cambronne"; illustrated. "Heroic Women at Bryant's Station, Kentucky"; illustrated. "Adventures at the Bridge of Icononzo"; illustrated. "A River Story"; illustrated. "A Boys' Last Hymn in a Garret." "Gehazi's Covetousness." "Sir Matthew Hale"; illustrated. "Generosity of the Onondagas"; illustrated. "Corinth Fishermen"; illustrated. "I Didn't Think," a Lesson in Obedience—etc., etc.

Poems.—"The Song of Labor"; illustrated. "Morning"; illustrated. "Gone," by Alfreton Hervey; illustrated. "None of us Liveth to Himself." "The Storks"; illustrated—etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"Salamanca, Spain"; illustrated. "An Affecting Anecdote by Dean Stanley." "Some Singular Provisions in the Wills of Old Londoners." "Reasonable Economy." "Washington Relics in the Patent Office." "Ancient Writing Materials." "Home from a Cruise." "Assouan on the Nile." "A Boy's Lexicon." "Faraday's Last Cup." "Anecdote of Garibaldi." "The Power of Music." "Anecdote of Stradella"; illustrated. "Talleyrand and Arnold"; illustrated. "A Hero in Paris"—etc., etc.

"Editor's Portfolio." "Obituary Notices." "Recreations for Sunday Afternoon." "Music—I Have a Glorious Hope."

128 QUARTO PAGES---100 ENGRAVINGS.

Single copy, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid. Send 25 cents for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE WINTER FASHIONS

JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S MAGAZINE

—AND—

Gazette of Fashion,

Universally regarded for nearly a quarter of a century as the

FASHION STANDARD OF AMERICA

FULL AND ACCURATE DESCRIPTIONS ARE GIVEN OF THE LATEST PARISIAN STYLES OF LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S COSTUMES.

Beautiful Colored and Plain Fashion Plates

Are imported monthly from Paris,

EXCLUSIVELY FOR THIS MAGAZINE.

"FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE for January, 1880, is out, and the lady who is fortunate enough to get a copy will need no further information as to what she shall wear or how it shall be made up. Here you have fashions for the home, visiting, carriage and promenade toilets—children as well as grown people—street dresses and bridal toilets, and everything, to the minutest detail, to make the ladies happy. A large number of short, interesting stories complete the book, which has quite a number of good engravings. The subscription is only $3.50 a year, postpaid, which, considering the character and style of the magazine, makes it the cheapest and best we know of."—The Covenant, Phila., Pa.

"FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE needs no special praise at our hands; it speaks for itself, and is a prime favorite in every household where it has ever gained a foothold. Its stories, its poetry, its sketches, its engravings, its fashions—all things about it, in fact—are first-class in their way; and, take it for all in all, we don't know of a lady's magazine in America that excels it, and few that come within cannon-shot of equaling it, in any of the departments we have mentioned. In point of cheapness it outranks them all, quality and quantity considered, its price being only $3.50 a year, postpaid."—Lycoming (N. Y.) Republican.

The readers of the LADY'S MAGAZINE have the earliest information of the constant change in Fashions, as its reports appear simultaneously with those in the journals of Paris.

Each Number is Profusely Embellished.

Published on the 15th of every month. Annual subscription, $3.50, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE POPULAR FAMILY JOURNAL.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner

A Constant Succession of New Literary and Artistic Attractions!

Each Number contains sixteen pages, eight of which are embellished with beautiful engravings.

Published every Monday. For sale by all newsdealers. Price, single copies, 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4; three months, $1—postpaid.

A NEW SERIAL STORY,

ENTITLED

"ESTHER'S GLOVE,"

BY H. E. FRANCILLON,

Commenced in No. 767 of the

CHIMNEY CORNER,

Issued Monday, January 26th.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

[Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Enelard, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,275.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, MARCH 6, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1.00.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, MARCH 6, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

I. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

PREPARING FOR THE NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

IT is among the possibilities that the Presidential nominations of the Republican and Democratic parties may surprise the country. Doubtless there is less uncertainty about the candidate of the former than there is about the candidate of the latter; but in view of the precedents of the past forty-five years, nobody will feel sure of results till the coming National Conventions have completed their work. A glance at the proceedings of previous conventions discloses the instructive fact that general astonishment at their selection of candidates has been the rule and not the exception.

The first National Conventions for the nomination of candidates for the Presidency were held in 1832. Previous to that time they had been brought forward by Congressional caucuses, by State Legislatures, by a general concurrence of the party press, and other methods of concentrating public opinion. In 1832 the conventions readily fixed upon Jackson and Clay as their respective candidates, for the nomination of these renowned chieftains was a foregone conclusion. Since that time there have been twelve Presidential campaigns, in which the two leading political parties have held twenty-four National Conventions. It is worthy of the grave consideration of aspirants to the chair of Washington, that in five of these conventions, after long struggles between powerful rivals, an entirely new name was suddenly thrown into the arena, resulting in a panic and the speedy stampede of all the old hacks, while the fresh man was instantly carried through amid wild applause from every side. In eight of the other conventions, at the close of struggles barely less protracted and violent than those already mentioned, compromise candidates were accepted whose nominations were a genuine surprise to the party and the country. Indeed, the nomination to the Presidential office for the first time of the very man whom everybody was looking for has been rather a rare occurrence.

A few particulars will awaken sluggish memories. In 1836 Mr. Van Buren was the foreordained Democratic nominee, but the Whigs, unable to concentrate upon one man, agreed to run four candidates in as many different sections of the Union, viz., Harrison, Webster, Hugh L. White and Willie P. Mangum. In 1840 Harrison, then Clerk of the County Court in Cincinnati, drove Clay and Webster out of the National Convention so quick that the champions of those eminent statesmen scarcely realized that they had entered the hall.

One of the most remarkable occurrences was that of 1844. A determined effort was made to nominate Mr. Van Buren to compensate him for his disastrous defeat in the famous Hard Cider and Log Cabin furore of 1840. He was supported by General Jackson, Colonel Benton, Silas Wright, and all that type of leaders. But General Cass, Judge Woodbury, and others, allowed their names to go into the Convention and thus prevented Van Buren's receiving the necessary two-thirds vote. After weary ballotings the almost unknown name of James K. Polk carried the convention by storm. In 1848 Clay and Webster were in the vale of years. They had played a conspicuous part in public affairs. For a quarter of a century their eyes had been fixed on the White House. This was their last chance for reaching the goal. Their friends resolved to put forth one more effort for the great Whig leaders. But the prize was snatched from them by General Taylor as the reward for a single victory in the field—a soldier who had taken so little interest in politics that he had never cast a vote in his life. In the same year General Cass, after the expulsion of the Barnburners from the Baltimore Convention, obtained the Democratic nomination. But the haughty Barnburners placed Mr. Van Buren on the Buffalo platform, and rallying around the banner of "Liberty and Revenge," they split the New York Democracy in two, enabling Taylor to capture the thirty-six electoral votes of the State, and thereby secure a triumph. In 1852 the Whig Convention rather surprised the party by presenting General Scott as their Presidential candidate, while the whole country stood amazed when the telegraph informed it that after a two day's conflict between James Buchanan, Lewis Cass, William L. Marcy and Stephen A. Douglas, an obscure brigadier from New Hampshire, named Franklin Pierce, marched into the Convention and bore off the nomination.

The defeat of Scott and the election of Pierce led to a reorganization of parties; but the old precedents in respect to nominations continued to prevail. Fremont's candidacy in 1856, and that of Lincoln in 1860, both of which set aside the founders and leaders of the new Republican Party, excited not a little wonder among the mass of the people. General McClellan's nomination in 1864 belongs to the same class of surprises, while no spectator of the scene will ever forget the precipitancy with which Hendricks, Hancock, Pendleton, Andy Johnson and the rest, fled from Tammany Hall in 1868 at the mention of the name of Horatio Seymour. We will not dwell upon the candidacy of Horace Greeley. It astounded everybody, including the nominee. It stands without a precedent or a parallel. The nomination of Hayes was a stunning stampede like that of Polk, Pierce, Lincoln and Seymour.

This summary of the results of struggles in many National Conventions of former years may dampen the hopes of chronic aspirants for Presidential honors. We commend these familiar historical events to their serious consideration.

WILL IT SUFFICE?

JOHN BRIGHT thinks that the future prosperity of Ireland would be secured by abolishing primogeniture and entails and dividing up the land among the farmers. In other words, he wants to repeat the experiment which proved so successful in France after the Revolution and in Prussia after the Napoleonic wars. In both of those instances the possession of the soil by its actual tillers raised the standard of comfort among the working classes, and added to the prosperity of the nation.

While conceding that the lot of the Irish peasant might be greatly improved by putting him in possession of the land he now tills for others, is it not true that there is another factor which counts against the prosperity of the Irish agriculturist? Is not the competition of the grain fields of our Western States rendering farming unprofitable not only in Europe, but here in the Middle and Eastern States? In other words, if Western grown wheat can be marketed in Liverpool below the cost of production in Great Britain or on the Continent, of what value is the proposed change in the land laws?

Of course the low price of American grain during the past few years has been due to abundant crops and exceptionally low rates for railway freight. But making a liberal allowance for these accidental circumstances, the fact remains that the prairies of America and the steppes of Russia can produce grain in such quantities and so cheaply as to put the farmers of Western Europe at a serious disadvantage.

Still the reform in the land laws proposed by John Bright ought to be taken in hand. It is very obvious that if the farmers were not required to support their landlords as well as themselves, their burdens would not be so great; and then, if grain-growing is unprofitable, stock-raising and the cultivation of the roots may be made to pay better.

In discussing these questions of poverty and abundance, the changes brought about by steam and the telegraph should be kept in mind. It is the swift locomotive and the rapid steamship which is the real enemy of the growers of grain in the Old World, and the readiness with which cargoes can be ordered from vast distances by telegraph deprives the farmer of the advantage he would have in the home market from the rise in price which would naturally come from a small production and little competition.

The Irish problem is important in itself, but a wise solution of it is of the utmost moment to all Europe.

INFANT LABOR.

THERE is a feature of the revival of business that is too apt to be overlooked as we congratulate ourselves and each other upon the evidences of renewed prosperity. We refer to what is known in Europe as the employment of "infant labor." The leading papers in our manufacturing cities are filled with advertisements for girls to work in all manner of factories. The demand is so great that girls of from eight to sixteen years of age, who have been placed in families as domestics or children's companions, are hastening from good homes and wholesome influences into the whirlpool of factory life. There appears to be work in many establishments for children scarcely old enough to be out of their mother's sight. Higher wages are thus received than could be obtained otherwise. But is it right?

Is it just that children, having attained the most impressionable age and standing in the utmost need of moral and educational training, should be forced, for the gain of a few dollars, into a life of premature occupation? Is it just that they should be deprived of the advantages that the laws of God and man have provided for them?

Every child in this country, whether white or black, boy or girl, is entitled to the very best education it is capable of attaining. To deprive children of this right is to do them a permanent injury. The great demand for girls under fifteen years of age made by the factories, and supplied by injudicious parents, is an evil effect of returning prosperity that should be remedied at once. In New England, it is true, as in Great Britain and Germany, there are factory laws quite stringent in character. But they are evaded. The intent of the ordinances is that no children of less than twelve years of age shall be employed in factories; that those who are so employed shall work but five or six hours during the day, having a good resting spell at noon; and that none shall be allowed to work more than nine months in the year. The laws make it incumbent on the parents to send their children to school for a period of three months in each year, and, in some places, employers, before engaging children, must obtain a certificate from their parents or guardians guaranteeing that they have been, and will be kept, at school that length of time each year. No higher duty could possibly fall to the lot of the various Legislatures now in session than the speedy enactment of just but rigid laws for the protection of children, and particularly the girls, now sought for factory labor.

BOSTON is already brushing up for the celebration of the 250th anniversary of its settlement, which occurs on September 17th next.

HUNDREDS of thousands of soldiers, with toothsome recollections of the Cooper Shop Refreshment Saloon, in Philadelphia, during the war, will sincerely regret the death of the founder, Mr. William H. Cooper, on February 14th.

ALTHOUGH it is in Boston that they say it, it really sounds very deceptive, the announcement that the police force will cost for this year $893,685, or $10,000 less than the city authorities were so willing to pay, that they appropriated it.

BELGIAN credit must stand uncommonly high, for the new loan has been covered four times by the amount subscribed, although the public subscription lasted only five hours. The amount required was 69,000,000 francs, at four per cent. interest, issued at 103f. 5c. Bravo Belgium!

LADIES' ambulance associations are being founded all over London. The practice is to receive five lectures from one surgeon, and then to be examined in what they have learned by another. In scarcely a single instance has a lady been plucked, while about six per cent. of the men failed to pass.

WHO would be a baronet, when it is proposed to sell one hundred baronetcies at $50,000 each in order to replenish the depleted British Exchequer and to raise the sum of $5,000,000? Lord Beaconsfield has stigmatized a baronetcy as a "contemptible dignity." Dizzy does hit it off sometimes.

CONSIDERING the material of which many Legislatures are composed, that was not an entirely inappropriate order of Judge Johns, the new Speaker of the Mississippi House, who, when it was necessary to inform the Senate of the passage of a joint resolution, said, "Mr. Clerk, you will at once notify the Sheriff."

THE music of the future is still safe, for Wagner is in excellent health on Mount Pausilippo, in the Villa Angri, on the top of the mountain, which Lablache built and Thalberg inhabited, overlooking the Bay of Naples and Vesuvius. He refuses to be interviewed, and his temper is as complicated as some of his own scores.

NO MORE stuttering and stammering, and hesitations and frantic twistings of napkins for best men when called upon at wedding-breakfasts to return thanks for the bridesmaids. Here is the speech that won the prize from London Truth last week. Let our bashful youths take it to memory: "The position of 'best man' is one of great importance, and the office should not be lightly or carelessly undertaken. His duties are many and his responsibilities not a few; but there is one dear privilege, of right annexed to his appointment, which of itself is sweet recompense sufficient for all his pains. The bridesmaids recognize him as their representative, and, during a few delicious moments, he is identified with them; speaks with their beautiful lips, and expresses their dearest thoughts. Those thoughts are for the moment one, and they form themselves into that single, gracious word—Thanks!"

IT used to be said of Governor Robinson that he was a dummy controlled by Mr. Tilden. Now, because Governor Cornell has performed the very bold act of renominating Mr. Smyth for Insurance Commissioner, we are told that Mr. Conkling is both Governor and United States Senator. Will the good old days ever return when the people will elect to the Executive chair a gentleman who will himself be Governor?

THE English Volunteers are in high dudgeon and threaten to disband—to un-volunteer. The cause of their righteous indignation is the refusal of the War Department to lend them a few of the thousands of the Martini-Henry rifles that are lying useless in the Tower of London. "With war looming up all round us like a Channel fog, you decline to arm us effectively, and thereby to increase the defensive power of our country."

UNDER the new scheme for the better education of the soldiers in our regular army, the Rev. George G. Mullins, Chaplain of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, has been detailed by the Secretary of War as superintendent, with his station and headquarters at St. Louis. Mr. Mullins has been chaplain at Fort Davis, Texas, for five years, and this appointment, made without his knowledge, is highly complimentary to him, being based on the recognition of his excellent educational work among the soldiers at that post.

THAT was a novel ecclesiastical movement set on foot at Brighton, England, by the Bishop of Chichester—namely, a ten days' mission against the frivolities and immoralities of the age. Those engaged in the work, which consisted of services conducted daily in the churches throughout the town, came from all parts of the kingdom. Two or three of the Nonconformist ministers announced special services at their places of worship during the mission. The proceedings were opened by the bishop himself delivering an address at the parish church.

AS CURIOSITY has lately been roused by the paragraphs that have been going the round of the papers, it may be as well to say that little or nothing remains to be discovered in the Vatican Library. Marini, Mai, De Rossi, Corvisieri, the Germans of the "Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum," have explored every inlet of that ocean, and the results of their investigations are tolerably well known to the public. Single documents of great value may still be found, especially in miscellaneous MSS., but the bulk of the literary or scientific treasures of the Vatican Library are no more a mystery to those who have free access to it.

WHILE Denis Kearney is visiting the East, the Rev. Mr. Kalloch, who was elected Mayor of San Francisco by the monarch of the Sand Lots, aided materially by a bullet from De Young's revolver, is carrying on the work of making the Chinese go. Day after day the workingmen visit large establishments where Chinese are employed and demand their immediate discharge, and employers are acceding to the demand. Meanwhile the Mayor, in his ministerial capacity no doubt, blesses the movement from Kearney's platform on the Sand Lots, and in his addresses repeats almost the identical words of the senseless agitator. Verily, a strange way of repaying election obligations.

SETH GREEN has done so much in the pisciculturel line not only for New York State but the country, and in fact the world, that there should be no opposition to the Bill which the Fish Commissioners propose to introduce into the Legislature, asking for an increased appropriation, in order that their useful work may be extended somewhat more in the vicinity of New York. The plan they propose is to build a hatching-house, with pond and nurseries for young fish somewhere on Long Island, where the double advantages could be had of using both fresh and salt water. With such a live Commissioner as Mr. E. G. Blackford to direct the work, there can be no doubt of the great success and benefit of the enterprise.

THE list of imports into the United States reveal some curious facts. Under the head of "Animals, living" we find "Teams of immigrants, $72,060.50." As we regard immigration mainly as transatlantic, it looks comical to find these immigrants driving in with their teams. They are evidently, however, from Canada or Mexico, and show an immigration that must be large and valuable to the country when one item of property alone reaches this amount. Almond shells appear as an import, although it is not easy to see for what purpose. Cinchona barks enter to the amount of two millions of dollars, and brimstone for nearly as much. Our coffee bill runs up to forty-seven millions, while tea figures for only fourteen. Though we ship cattle to other countries we import hides to the amount of twelve millions of dollars. Manuscripts are entered, valued at twelve thousand dollars. All the vanilla is not counterfeit, as the importations are nearly three hundred thousand dollars. We ought to raise raw silk, as our manufacturers pay other countries more than eight millions of dollars. Ladies will perhaps be astonished to see how expensive pets are when it takes more than a hundred thousand dollars to feed the canary birds alone.

Digitized by Google

A REMARKABLE method of rewarding public officers and distinguished citizens for eminent services has been established by the Government of Japan. It consists of no decoration or gift of money, but takes the form of a great national portrait gallery, in which those who sufficiently distinguish themselves in the opinion of their superiors will henceforth have the privilege of seeing their likenesses placed.

THE wind has again shifted, and with it the minds of the House Committee on Public Buildings, Washington. But a brief yesterday, and no report was to be presented to the House for appropriating money for public buildings. Now Baltimore is to have a post-office at the nominal cost of $550,000—the actual cost is not yet estimated—and this little Bill brings the appropriation for new public buildings, voted in the present Congress, up to $12,770,500. We are going ahead.

CONGRESS has at last authorized the compilation of a naval history of the war, as a companion work to that on the military operations, now in course of preparation. These will be invaluable volumes, not only to military and naval men all over the world, but to the students of general and political history. Free access can now be had to the records of each party in that great struggle, and the importance of the subject demands that all this wealth of material should be placed in the hands of a compiler of acknowledged capability.

AFTER a pleasant pilgrimage of nearly eighty years, James Lenox has laid down the burdens of this earth. A life, started in sturdy Scotch stock, evenly followed, illumined by the most unostentatious philanthropy and marked with severe simplicity, has terminated with enviable honor. What magnificent monuments he has left on the old farm which his father bade him keep because he thought a village might spring up there in time! The most fitting resting-place would be a spot in this tract of thirty acres, within easy distance of the Presterian Home for Aged Women, the Presbyterian Hospital, the Philipp's Memorial Church and the great Lenox Library. He has been justly called blessed in his day and generation.

SO MANY versions have been given of the manner in which Jefferson Davis was attired at the time of his capture, that his own statement will possess much historical interest. In a letter dated August 14th, 1879, and presented to the State of Mississippi on the 9th of February last, with a crayon portrait of Mr. Davis, intended as a gift to the State by the late Mrs. Dorsey, he writes:

"It was made after a photographic likeness of myself, which was taken in the identical clothes worn when I was captured. Every article I then had on appears in the portraiture, except a pair of large spurs which were stolen from me after my capture. I had a waterproof "Raglan" and a shawl about my head and shoulders when I left the tent; but on being hailed by a cavalryman, who rode a considerable distance before his comrades, I dropped both the raglan and shawl while advancing on my challenger, and thus appeared before my captors in the exact costume represented in the portrait."

AFTER a decidedly unpleasant experience with officers who were familiar with Indian affairs, President Hayes has come to the conclusion to try a man who does not pretend to any such knowledge. He has accordingly nominated Hon. Rowland E. Trowbridge, of Michigan, to succeed ex-Comissioner Hayt. Mr. Trowbridge was born at Elmira, New York, June 16th, 1821, but was taken to Michigan by his parents when a mere child. He graduated at Kenyon College, Ohio, in 1841. While a student there he made the acquaintance of President Hayes, who was in the class next below him. In 1856, and again in 1858, Mr. Trowbridge was elected to the State Senate, and in 1860 was elected to Congress. In 1864, and again in 1866, he was re-elected, retiring in 1869, after serving six years altogether. Since then he has not been prominent in politics. He is just the kind of man the Indian ring will attempt to defeat. It is high time, though, that integrity and capability should have advanced parts in the apparently interminable problem of the proper treatment of our Indians.

THE affliction of Nihilism is becoming more severe in Russia every day. For the sixth time the melancholy but injudiciously rigid Czar has escaped assassination. Nihilists appear to be omnipresent. Their circulars and warnings are found beneath the royal pillow, on the writing-desk, and in the innermost apartments of the Winter Palace. Mines are laid and dynamite exploded beneath the dining-table of the royal family. The rigid rules of yesterday are succeeded by more rigid ones to-day, and, if occasion demands, will be followed by greater severity to-morrow. The Czar has an immense police force, a good-sized army of regular soldiers, and a spy in every second man and woman, and all employed in the one great inquiry, still the monster of Nihilism will not down at the royal bidding. Bad as the situation has been, it is now infinitely worse. Notwithstanding, he wields more power than any other person on earth, and has every conceivable assistance within the limits of his authority, the Czar has been compelled to send experienced officials to the police of England, Germany and France, beseeching their aid in the search of conspirators against his life. Most unfortunate man! Having searched his broad realms over, and in vain, for the people who mysteriously penetrate even to his bed-chamber, the haughty Czar now seeks opportunities for searching the greater portion of the European Continent in quest of the members of this strange, determined and most insinuating brotherhood. It is no wonder that he can scarcely be aroused from his terrible depression.

THE newspapers are just now giving the details of the romantic life and ignominious death of Pra Preecha, the Siamese nobleman who married the daughter of an English consul. A correspondent of the Siam Weekly Advertiser, in a late issue of that paper, gives the Government's reason for ordering the beheading. The writer says the nobleman was not executed because of his marriage to an Englishwoman, as asserted, but for a series of malversations and offenses against the laws of his country. Out of a long list of indictments, four cases were dealt with, on each of which the accused was convicted. They are serious indeed, being (1) failure to account for more than half a million of government money; (2) fraudulent appropriation of seven and a half catties' weight of gold from the mines; (3) contriving the death of a man who, he feared, would inform his superiors of the last mentioned peculation; and (4) causing two Chinese to be drowned in the river. If, as it is alleged, these accusations were substantiated, they contain just ground for a death sentence; but they do not excuse the cruelty with which its execution is said to have been accompanied, and still less the barbarity of ruining, enslaving, and doing to death innocent members of the delinquent's family.

AN opinion has been expressed recently by the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that an employer, whether an individual or a corporation, will not be allowed to expose an employé to risks and dangers which may be guarded against by due diligence. This was called forth by an appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States in the case of the widow and child of a railroad engineer who was scalded to death by the falling of his locomotive down an embankment. An action for damages was brought against the company, the complaint alleging that the engine had been thrown from the track by reason of a defective cow-catcher, and that the whistle had come loose because it was insecurely fastened. These things were attributed to the negligence of the company's master mechanic or foreman, whose duty it was to see that every locomotive was in good order or condition. The Court further held that the master is bound to exercise reasonable care and prudence with reference to selecting and keeping in order machinery, implements, etc., used by the servants, and when he or his agents are guilty of negligence in this respect he is liable for the damages which may be caused by such negligence.

BISHOP HARE'S testimony before the special Senate Committee on the troubles of the Poncas forms one of the severest bits of criticism that have been made on the management of the Indians by the Government. He said that the Sioux, in making these raids upon the property of the Poncas, violated the regulations against leaving their reservation, but they were so formidable a tribe that the Government was afraid of them, and was not afraid of the Poncas. When Senator Dawes inquired: "So it appears the Government took the Poncas away in order to keep the Sioux from hurting them?" the Bishop replied: "Yes; it may be looked at in that way. You know the Indians have a common saying, 'The better we are, the worse we are off.' Indians who kill and steal are likely to be well provided for." Senator Dawes, who has taken much interest in the touching narrative of Bright Eyes, has introduced a Bill which requires the Secretary of the Interior to cause them to be returned, without delay, to their old reservation in Dakota Territory, and invests them with all the rights, titles and privileges they formerly enjoyed in and to said reservation, anything in the treaty ratified with the Sioux Indians to the contrary notwithstanding.

IF JUSTICE moves tardily, it moves surely, and the hour has at length approached when the Indian will come to be regarded as a man, a brother and a citizen, instead of a mere chattel and incubus. The United States Senate Committee on Territories decided to recommend the passage of a Bill extending the jurisdiction of the United States Courts in civil and criminal matters to the Indian Territory, and providing for the acquirement of citizenship by the Indians, and the allotment of lands under prescribed conditions. The Bill proposes to create a United States District Court for a new judicial district, to be composed of what is known as the Indian Territory, and in general terms provides for extending all laws of the United States over the whole Territory. It is provided that every Indian may become a citizen by making declaration that he has severed his tribal relations, and thereupon he is to become entitled to select homesteads for himself and the members of his family. The tribal lands in excess of the number of acres absorbed by these selections are to be sold for the benefit of the Indians. All the foregoing provisions, except the one for the establishment of a court, are made dependent upon the consent of the Indian councils being obtained therefor, as provided in existing treaties. The mission of Bright Eyes is now pretty well accomplished, and she may return to her people rejoicing.

WHEN a Legislature enacts a law and it becomes necessary for the parties charged with its enforcement to explain and interpret the instrument that the people may understand its provisions, the same would appear to many as a result of very careless legislation. The new Constitution and recent laws of Pennsylvania contain passages aimed against bribery at elections. Under the statute and the Constitution a county sheriff was recently indicted for perjury in having taken the prescribed oath. At the trial in the Court of Quarter Sessions the judge ruled that the defendant was guilty of a violation of the new statute if he paid or promised to pay any one to electioneer for him. The word electioneer was thus defined by the court: "To make interest for a candidate at an election, to use arts for securing the election of a candidate." This interpretation being unsatisfactory to the party interested, the case was taken to the Supreme Court, which held that the court below erred in thus interpreting the law. It declares that the Constitution and the statute strike at bribery, fraud, and every corrupt act incident to an election, but leave the candidate free to use all honest means for the success of his party and the promotion of his own election. Here we have a special statute, a provision in a State Constitution and two opposite rulings of established courts, to force a voter or a candidate to be an honest man. The law certainly is not as stable as were those of the Medes and Persians, and the occasion of special interpretation is an evidence of its faulty and hasty construction.

AGAIN we have the details of a revolting execution of criminals in public. The press and pulpit have protested with all possible vigor against the present system of enforcing the extreme penalty of the law. But scarcely a week passes without its execution, generally performed in a cruelly-bungling manner, and within the gaze of the public. On the theory, however, that if certain men are provided with sufficient length of rope they will hang themselves, it is possible that the increasing horrors of public executions may bring about a most necessary reform. Take the last case reported, for example. Two men were hanged near Little's Creek, in Tennessee, on February 20th. The scaffold was erected within three hundred yards of the public square, and raised seats were constructed directly facing it. A privilege of occupying one of these seats was openly obtained by paying what the reports style "an enterprising showman" one dollar. Further, the dispatches said that the execution was witnessed by "fully ten thousand persons." We need not be assured that "the enterprising showman" reaped a rich harvest. Where one may naturally inquire, was the majesty, the dignity, the justice of the offended law exhibited in this gross display? People went to the square, as they would to the itinerant circus, paid their dollar, took their seats, probably drank whisky, and ate candy and peanuts. For what? To see two miserable fellow-creatures, murderers, it is true, stretched by the neck until they were dead—an exhibition of twenty minutes. Can it be possible, in view of the length to which the authorities went in this case, that people will still assert that public executions serve to deter evil-minded men and women from the commission of crime? A truce to such folly. Let executions, if crime must thus be punished, be carried out in the most private manner, and by the most humane methods. For God's sake, sheriffs, spare us a repetition of the scene at Little's Creek!

NEVER were words uttered more manly or to the point than those of Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, in the House, on February 19th, when Rule 21 of the new Code was under discussion. He opposed the rule because he did not believe that, according to the democratic doctrine of Jefferson, Madison and Jackson, it was ever intended that appropriation Bills should be incumbered with any other legislation than appropriations. If there had been any progress in legislation in this country, it had been in excluding from appropriation Bills other matters as riders. He claimed that opposition to riders on appropriation Bills was a position at which the advanced thought in political science all over the world had arrived, and yet it had been intimated that those opposed to him, politically, want to use the twenty-first rule in order to tack on riders to appropriation Bills—Bills which must pass, or ought to pass—so as to compel the Executive, to force a redress of existing grievances. This was a monarchical doctrine. It came from England, where the withholding of appropriations was a legitimate mode of seeking a redress of grievances. There, powers were not divided as they were here. There, all sovereign powers were considered as inherent in the Crown. Here there was a different kind of Government; here, the several powers were divided into three departments of government—the Legislature, the Executive, and the Judicial—each co-ordinate and co-equal, and each within its sphere exercising sovereign powers. In the Constitution of the United States, the "redress of grievances" was not provided for by withholding the necessary supplies. The redress of grievances in this country was, first, by petition to the Legislative body; next, to the Judiciary, and next to the ballot-box. Under the Constitution, the Executive had the same rightful and constitutional power to veto a Bill as the House and the Senate had to pass it, and the new doctrine of making war upon the veto power through the means of appropriation Bills was not democratic, was not republican, but was anti-constitutional. This noble stand of Mr. Stephens will, doubtless, have much influence when the proposed amendment to the Constitution—providing that general appropriation Bills shall contain nothing but appropriations, and that the President shall have power to disapprove of any separate item of a Bill without thereby defeating the whole Bill—shall come up for discussion and action. Coercive legislation is not only dangerous, but it is iniquitous.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE American Institute of Mining Engineers has had its annual meeting in New York.

THE Massachusetts Republican State Convention will be held at Worcester, April 14th.

THE Pianoforte Manufacturers' Society of New York has resolved not to yield to the demands of the strikers.

THE medical department of the University of the City of New York graduated 203 students on February 17th.

JOHN F. SMYTH has been renominated for Superintendent of Insurance of New York, and a stubborn political fight is anticipated in Albany.

THE National Greenback State Central Committee has selected Harrisburg as the place and March 23d as the date for holding the Pennsylvania State Convention.

THE Republican State Committee of Michigan has decided to call the State Convention to meet in Detroit on May 12th, for the election of delegates to the National Convention.

THE Connecticut Senate has adopted, by a unanimous vote, the resolution ratifying the agreement of the joint commission on boundary lines between New York and Connecticut.

IN the Senate Bills have been passed providing for the transmission of dutiable articles in the mails, for the payment of loss on registered letters, and for the publication of a naval history of the war.

THE Kansas State Central Republican Committee has resolved to call a State Convention to elect delegates to the National Convention, and to nominate Presidential electors, to meet in Topeka on the 31st of March.

THE Rev. Edward Cowley has been sentenced to imprisonment for one year in the Penitentiary and to pay a fine of $250—the full penalty of the law for his offense—for cruelty to Louis Victor and the children of the Shepherd's Fold.

THE Senate has passed a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy either to provide a public vessel to carry the contributions of the charitable to the starving people of Ireland, or to charter a merchant steamer for that purpose.

THE Rhode Island Prohibitory State Convenment at the State House February 19th, Charles E. Carpenter, of Providence, presiding. Albert Howard, of East Providence, was nominated for Governor; Thomas M. Seabury, of Newport, for Lieutenant-Governor; Willard Sayles, of Providence, for Attorney-General; J. M. Addeman, for Secretary of State, and Samuel Clark, for General Treasurer, the three last named persons being the present incumbents.

IN the Committee of the Whole, in the House, on Thursday, February 19th, the Republicans secured for Mr. Stephens an opportunity to make a speech against political riders to appropriation Bills. Mr. Warner's amendment forbidding the employment of these riders was finally adopted, but Mr. Robeson offered an amendment forbidding all amendments which change existing law, and this was adopted by the help of those who were opposed to the Warner amendment. Finally a substitute for the whole clause, providing that amendments to appropriation Bills must retrench expenditures in certain specified ways to be in order, was offered by Mr. Morrison and adopted. The next clause was taken up and amended by providing that the yeas and nays shall be called on the passage of all Bills expending money.

Foreign.

ACCORDING to intelligence published in Buenos Ayres, January 29th, the alliance between Peru and Bolivia has been broken off.

GENERAL GONZALES of Mexico has been accused of intending to erect a new confederacy, to be called the Republic of Sierra Madre.

THE Tarantches in Kuldjá have asked to send a deputation to St. Petersburg to protest against the cession of the district of Kuldja to China.

AN official communication, in which England, Germany and France acknowledge the independence of Roumania, was received at Bucharest February 20th.

"BLOWER" BROWN, Hazael and Day started in the six-day walking match for the championship of England, at Agricultural Hall, London, on the morning of February 16th.

MR. SPURGEON, in his speech in London on February 13th, cautioned the British Government against the fall that was threatened by their oppressive and warlike policy.

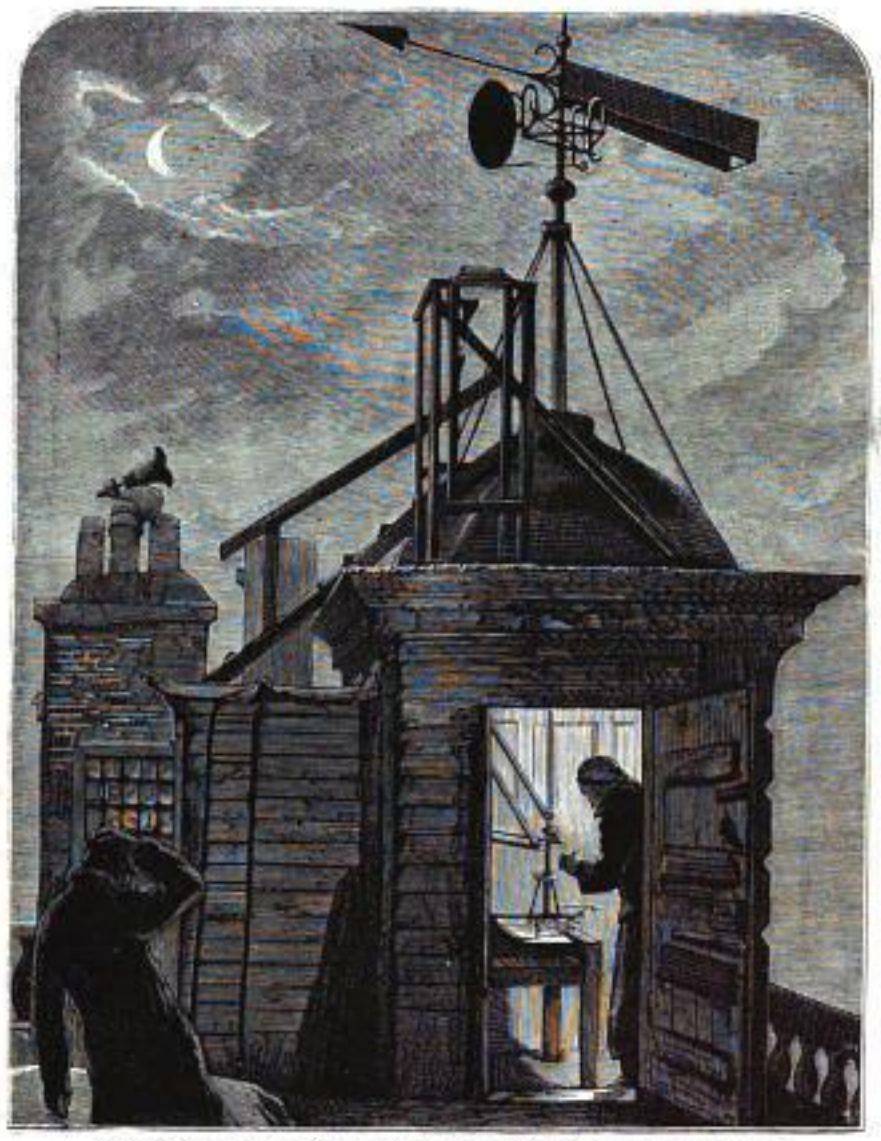
AN attempt to destroy the whole Imperial family of Russia by laying a mine in the Winter Palace on February 17th, resulted in killing five soldiers and wounding thirty-five others.

THE Latin text of the Papal encyclical letter against divorce fills twelve columns of the Osservatore Romano. It argues in favor of the removal of the rite of marriage from all civil jurisdiction whatsoever.

THE Italian official gazette announces the appointment of twenty-six new Senators. The appointments were made to further the abolition of the grist tax, which was opposed by a majority of the Senate.

THE Burmese envoys have failed to produce the evidence of their powers to conclude a treaty which it was announced they had received. The Indian Government, therefore, still refuses to receive the envoys and they remain at Thyetmyo.

IT is said that the object of the Prussian Bill prohibiting foreign vessels from engaging in the coasting trade of Germany except under a treaty, is to enable the Government to make reprisals against Russia and the United States, which refuse this privilege to foreign ships.



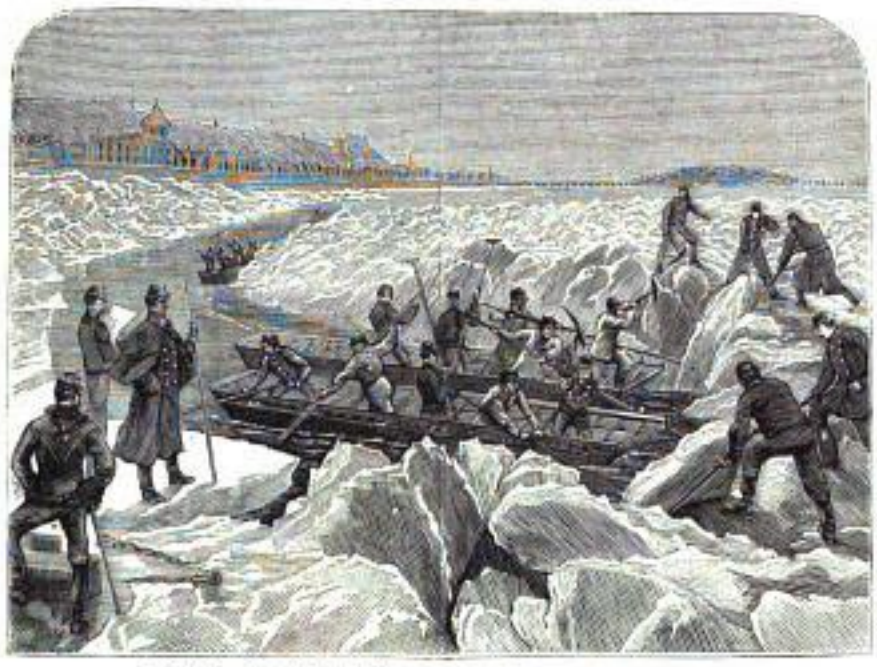
THE Duchess of Marlborough Irish Relief Committee, in order to guard against a famine next year, have purchased $50,000 worth of potatoes for distribution in Ireland. Sir Stafford Northcote has announced that the Government would increase the advance for Ireland to £750,000 instead of £500,000.

A LATE issue of the Agence Rumo confirms the statement that negotiations are pending between England and Persia relative to the occupation of Herat, but says that neither has arrived at any decision. The same paper states that there is nothing deterring the intention of China to refuse to ratify the treaty with Russia for the surrender of Kuldja to China.

PROFESSOR NEVIL STORY-MASKELYNE, of the Mineral Department of the British Museum, has announced the entire success of J. Ballantyne Hannay, of Glasgow, a Fellow of the Chemical Society of London, in producing diamonds. He says Mr. Hannay sent him some crystallized particles presenting exactly the appearance of fragments of a broken diamond, and these fragments easily scored deep grooves in the polished surface of a sapphire.

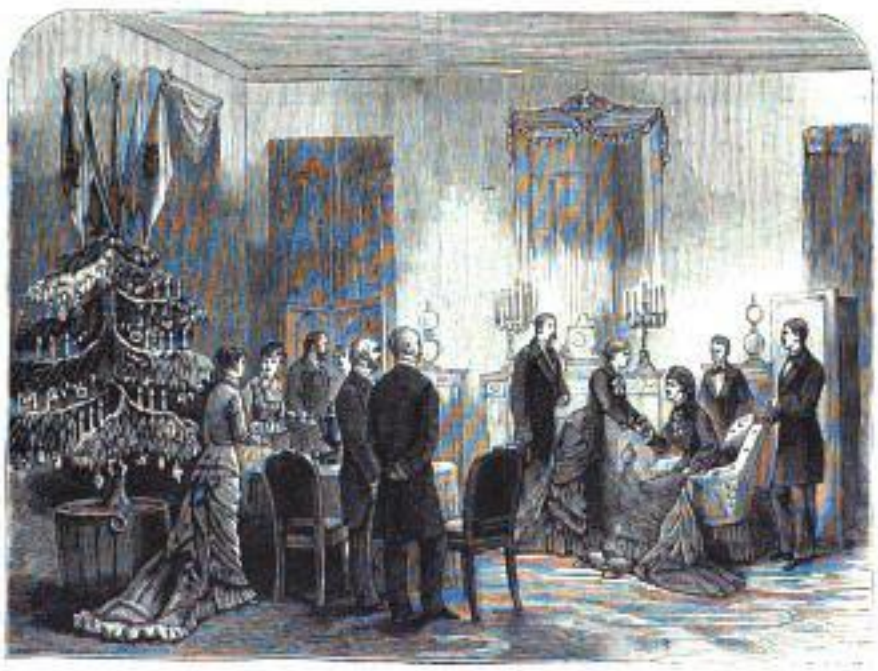
Digitized by Google

The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 7.



ENGLAND.—MEASURING THE WIND AT THE GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.

ENGLAND.—THE LEYCETT COLLIERY EXPLOSION—THE RUSH TO THE PIT'S MOUTH.



ARCTIC REGIONS.—THE DUTCH EXPLORERS SIGHTING FRANZ-JOSEF LAND.

FRANCE.—CUTTING A CANAL THROUGH THE ICE AT SAUMUR.

SOUTH AFRICA.—ENTRANCE TO THE CAVE WHERE SEKUKUNI WAS CAPTURED.

FRANCE.—THE EMPRESS OF RUSSIA DISTRIBUTING GIFTS AT CANNES.

CHINA.—MUNICIPAL BUILDING OF FRANCE IN SHANGHAI.

Digitized by Google

SETH GREEN.

SETH GREEN, the world-famed Superintendent of the New York State Fishery Commission, was born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1817, and began fishing as a business when eighteen years of age. He confined himself principally to the waters of Lakes Ontario and Michigan, and availed himself of all the devices then known for catching fish for market. In 1864 he purchased a portion of Caledonia Creek, and began his remarkable system of artificial propagation. This event in his life, so important to all lovers of fish, both for sport and table, has an interest which is intensified by Mr. Green's own modest account:

"I first conceived the idea of fish-hatching in 1837 while fishing for brook-trout in a stream that was frequented by salmon in Canada. I observed some salmon at work making their nests preparatory to casting their spawn. I watched their operations for two days, and then and there made up my mind that I could hatch fish artificially, and would at some future day attempt it. At this time I never had heard of fish being hatched artificially. I kept the idea constantly before my mind, and took advantage of every opportunity to learn something in regard to it. I did not put my ideas into practice until the year 1864, and as brook-trout offered the best inducements, I commenced my operations with them, in which I was very successful, making many heretofore unknown improvements and discoveries in fish-culture, one of the most prominent being the discovery of the dry method of impregnation of spawn, which I made the first month I was in the business after the spawning season commenced. In the year 1867 the New England Fish Commission, hearing of my success, came to me and prevailed upon me to go to the Connecticut River and attempt the artificial propagation of shad. Many had tried before and failed. After many vexations and trials, among which was the disbelief and skepticism of the fishermen, with which I had to contend, they believing that I was insane, and treating me as such, and after the failure of numerous experiments, I at last hit upon a plan which has proved a great success, and is now, and will continue to be, the means of replenishing our shad-rivers equal to the best they have ever been known."

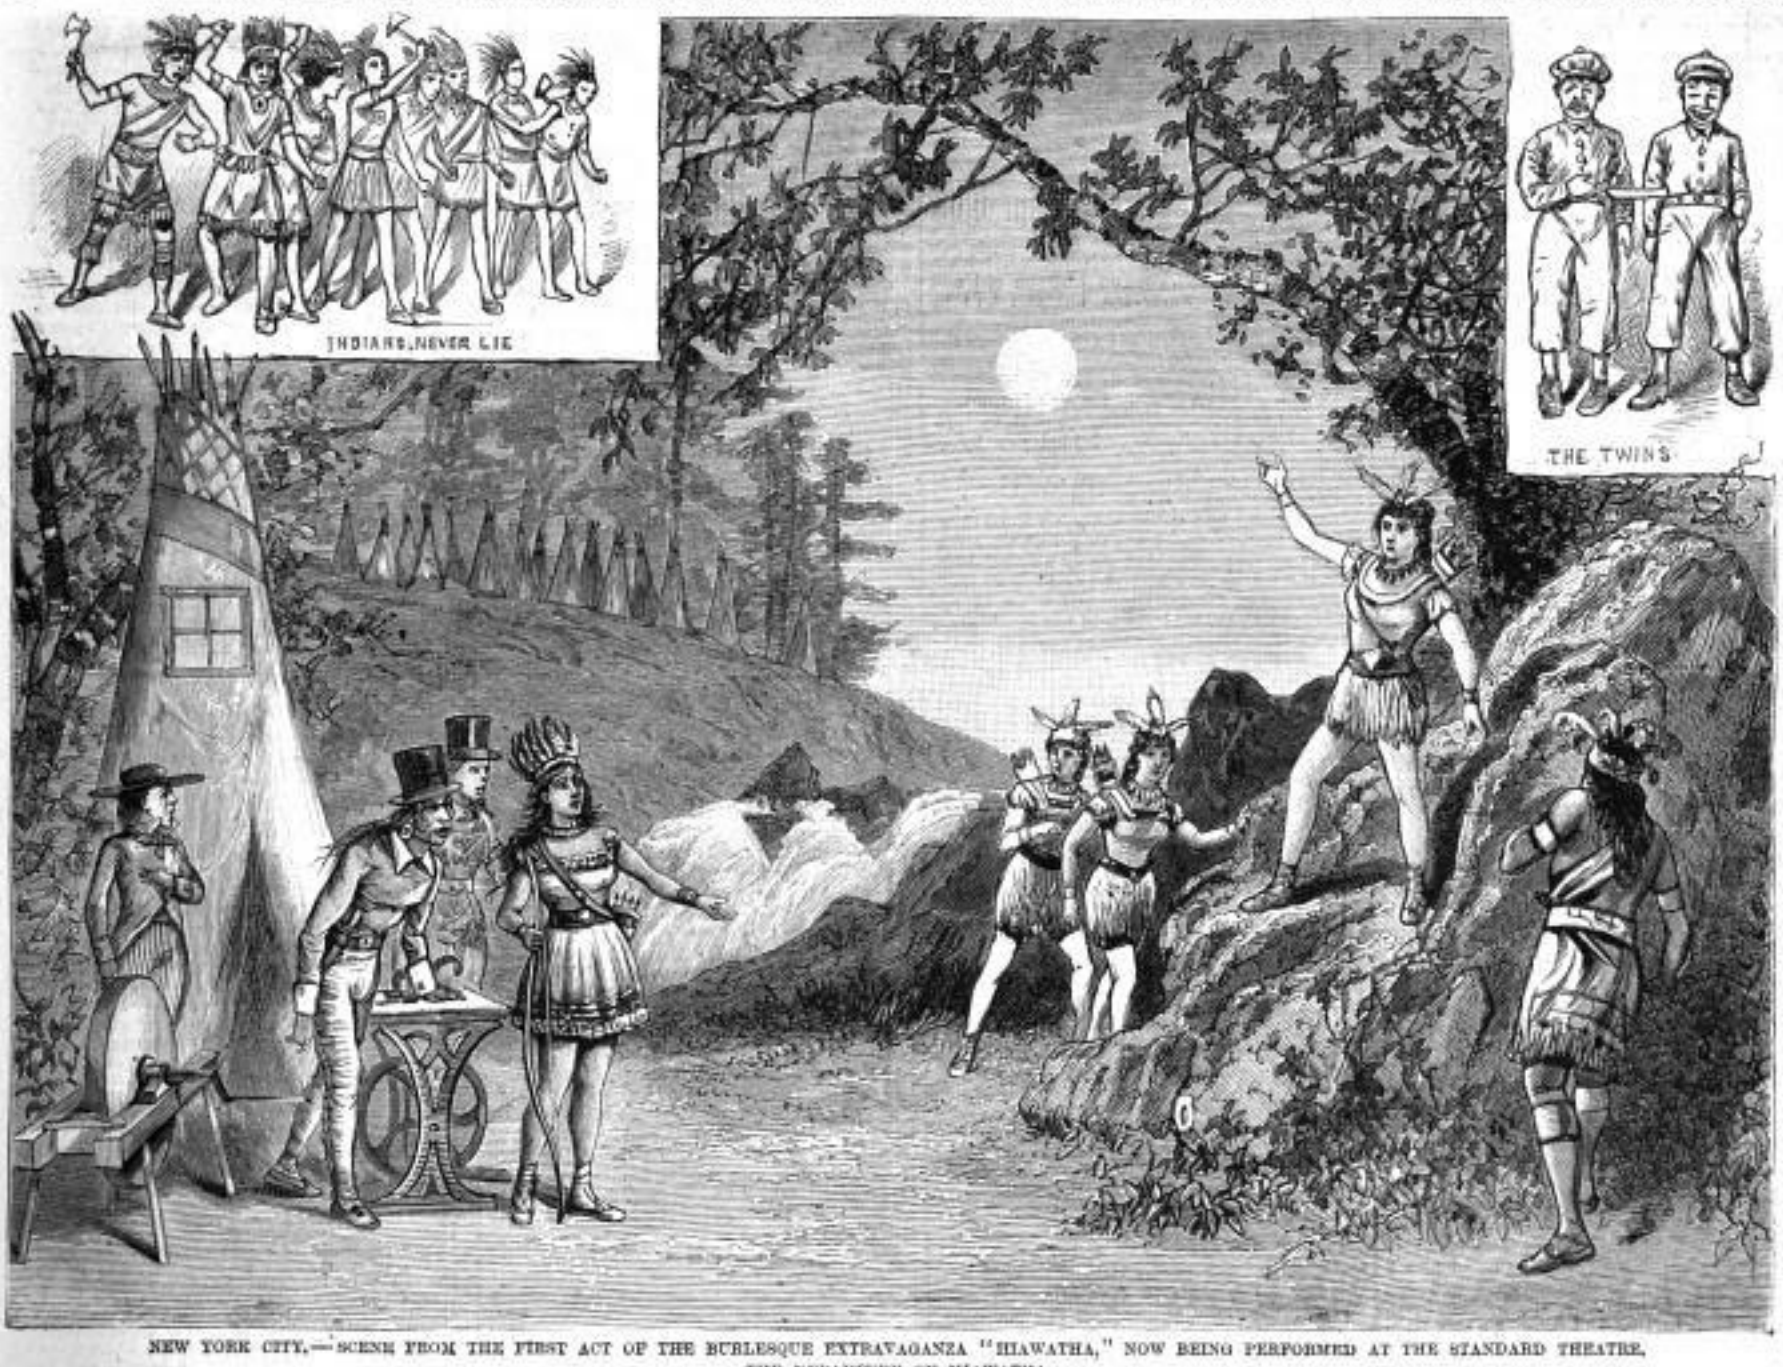
In the year 1868 a Fishery Commission was appointed in New York State, with Hon. Horatio Seymour, of Utica, Hon. R. B. Roosevelt, of New York, and Mr. Green, as commissioners. The first report of the commission was issued March 9th, 1869. The year following, Mr. Green resigned, and was appointed Superintendent, and George G. Cooper, of Rochester, was appointed a commissioner in his stead. After serving a few years, Mr. Cooper resigned on account of ill health, and E. M. Smith, of Rochester, was appointed in his place. About two years ago, ex-Governor Seymour resigned, wishing to be relieved of some of his many cares, and Hon. R. U. Sherman, of New Hartford, was appointed; and, shortly after, E. G. Blackford, of New York, was added to the commission. A detailed account of the work performed by the commission and the many obstacles which have been overcome since its organization would occupy much space, but suffice to say the results of their labors have thus far been very satisfactory, and have been frequently noticed by the newspapers.

We have already duly chronicled, both by pen and pencil, the progress made in this great work, and no one need be told how numerous are the obligations due Mr. Green.

The New York Commissioners now have in contemplation the erection of an immense hatching-house, and the establishment of ponds and nurseries for young fish, somewhere on Long Island, where both salt and fresh water may be obtained in abundance. A fresh encouragement has just been given the subject of pisciculture by Congress, which has passed a Bill appropriating a handsome sum to make an American exhibit at the great Fish Exposition to be held in Berlin in April. Another important step was the passage of a Bill authorizing the construction of an iron fish-hatching steamer of 500 tons burden. This vessel has just been completed under the inspection of the Lighthouse Board. Her construction is in all respects novel, and adapted to the work for which she is designed. This is the first vessel of the kind ever built. Her equipment will consist of all the improved appliances for taking fish, and carrying on board all the details of propagation. Professor Baird is desirous of conveying the American exhibit of the fisheries of the United States to Berlin on this steamer, and expects to have her properly furnished with approved apparatus in time to make the trip.

The artificial breeding of fish long ago attracted the attention of Government in Italy and France, in order to furnish supplies of food to the people. With our immense line of sea-coast on two oceans, with the largest lakes and rivers in the world, we are, in our production of food-fishes, far behind Norway and France, and this is due mainly to the wasteful course pursued in the fisheries, and to the neglect in early times of laws for preserving the fish. As we are nearing the days when an increasing population will find the procurement of food difficult, Mr. Green's plans are of the highest importance.

SETH GREEN, THE FATHER OF AMERICAN FISH-CULTURE.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY GREGG.



"HIAWATHA."

IF we cannot congratulate Mr. Longfellow, we can sincerely offer Messrs. Rice and Childs our most cordial praise for their bright, sparkling and chic burlesque extravaganza, "Hiawatha," now being performed nightly at the Standard Theatre. If "Evangeline" is intensely funny, "Hiawatha" is even more so, and from the ringing up to the ringing down of the curtain, laughter never ceases. It is all "snap" and "go." The music is brilliant and lively, the "business" new, the dresses "considerably fetching," and the acting all round the very best of its kind. The story of "Hiawatha" is so well known, that it will scarcely bear repetition here; not that Mr. Longfellow's plot, if plot it may be called, is religiously adhered to. On the contrary, a new existence is given to "Hiawatha," and a very comical one indeed. To read the poem before repairing to the Standard, would prove but a bootless task, and those who would see "Hiawatha" under new conditions should lose no time in visiting the cozy little theatre where this fun-bristling burlesque booms so successfully.

M. FERDINAND DE LESSEPS.

WHATEVER may be the opinion of Americans about the political aspect of the Panama Canal question, they unanimously agree in paying homage to the energy and indefatigable courage of the illustrious Frenchman who is at the head of that enterprise. M. Ferdinand de Lesseps will certainly retain very pleasant recollections of his visit to this country. All classes of residents have united in honoring him. A great reception at Quarantine by Americans, Frenchmen and Colombians, a grand banquet given by over two hundred of our most distinguished citizens, are but a small part of the numerous attentions of which he will be the recipient.

M. de Lesseps is, indeed, a remarkable man. Few young men are more active than this Southern Frenchman, who, on November 19th last, entered on the seventy-fifth year of his age. His life has been a most useful one. At the instigation of one of his uncles he entered the French consular service and filled several offices at Lisbon, Cairo and Barcelona. In 1848 he was French Minister at Rome and aided with the Liberals, which caused his recall. Four years later, while on a visit to Egypt, he conceived the idea of opening a canal which would unite the Red Sea and the Mediterranean. Said Pasha approved of the scheme, which was fully matured in 1856, when M. de Lesseps received a firman sanctioning the enterprise. Then began his truly herculean task. He met with difficulties on every side. Great engineers, like George Stephenson, pronounced his work wholly unfeasible, just like what Sir John Hawkshaw says presently about the Panama Canal. England saw in the scheme a political move of France, and Lord Palmerston denounced the scheme again and again. Then M. de Lesseps had disagreements with the local Government and with the Porte—to say nothing of the many difficulties of the work itself. However, with the powerful aid of the Emperor Napoleon and with his own indomitable energy, M. de Lesseps carried the works to a successful issue. On August 15th, 1865, a canal was opened, large enough to permit of the passage of steamboats. Precisely four years later the waters of the Red Sea and those of the Bitter Lakes were united amidst brilliant festivals, and on the following November 17th the whole canal was formally opened at Port Said in the presence of the Empress Eugénie, the Emperor of Austria, the Crown Prince of Prussia, and many other dignitaries. The success of this great undertaking has been since then steadily growing, and all monarchs have united in honoring M. de Lesseps. He is now a viscount and Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor in France; Queen Victoria made him an Honorary Grand Commander of the Star of India, and other sovereigns have equally decorated him. Although generally so-called, M. de Lesseps is not and never was an engineer. He is a member of the French Institute and is the holder of innumerable diplomas of scientific corporations. Having obtained the Wyse contract with Colombia for the construction of a canal at Panama, and having last August failed to receive subscriptions enough to commence the works, far from being discouraged thereby, he collected a very able corps of engineers and came to the Isthmus to make a verification of the previous surveys. In a few days he will lay the preliminary report of these engineers before the American public, but a special dispatch from Panama to the World, published a few days ago, contains the principal points arrived at. It has been decided that the work is entirely practicable; that it will cost $170,000,000; that a great dam is to be built at the great bend of the River Chagres, so as to hold the freshets which would otherwise injure the canal; that a subsidiary canal for drainage must be built parallel with the main canal, and that a great breakwater should be constructed at Colon or Aspinwall.

NEW YORK CITY.—SCENE FROM THE FIRST ACT OF THE BURLESQUE EXTRAVAGANZA "HIAWATHA," NOW BEING PERFORMED AT THE STANDARD THEATRE. THE DEPARTURE OF HIAWATHA.

Digitized by Google

As to the political fears entertained here, M. de Lesseps will, no doubt, try to explain them away. At any rate, he is heartily welcome to America, and with him his young wife and the three, out of their seven, children, which they bring along with them.

A FORLORN HOPE.

IT was down at the docks by the North River, New York, where the streets are dingy and narrow and wear a permanently blackened look—where the houses are curiously jammed together, clinging to one another like irregular teeth. Seafaring men stood talking in groups at the corners of the crossings and beneath the awnings on the sidewalks. Every pair of trousers was more or less daubed with tar, and the men bore on their ruddy cheeks the kisses of the suns of every clime under high heaven.

Thews and sinews were to be seen there toiling doggedly and perpetually. Steam-engines of various forms and uses were toiling also after their fashion—hoisting goods, pumping water, driving poles. Horses were dragging enormous loads, calmly, as if they were used to the engines, and cared less than nothing about the noise. The workers were pushing out groins and breastworks and piles and dams, which must have astonished the river as they gradually forced it out of its old landmarks. Here and there might be observed thoughtful looking men standing, watching keenly and with contracted brows the progress of things.

Standing apart, with folded arms and a profoundly discouraged air, a young man was likewise gazing around him. He was broad-shouldered, tall and muscular. He had full blue eyes, a quantity of hair of a tawny red, a large mouth out of which glittered a superb set of white teeth. Naturally his smile was constant, bright and jovial; but now it was considerably overcast. He walked up to the contractor with the air of a man who has made up his mind to a last effort.

"Then there's no chance for me on the job, Mr. Broadlip?"

"I guess not, Berthfield."

The other was silent.

"You see," continued Broadlip, "Podford manages it all, and he has the stamps."

"The position would have just suited me."

"Down to the ground, but you ain't Podford's nephew. It's not the right man in the right place, Joe. But the man is in the place, and right will not turn him out while might keeps him in. It ain't my fault you ain't fixed, Joe, and I'm real sorry. If I was boss I'd fix you right off."

"I'm obliged, Mr. Broadlip. I'll see you at Engledell, Sunday," and Joe Berthfield turned on his heel.

* * * * * *

It was Sunday in Engledell-on-the-Hudson—the quaint old town of Engledell that overlooks the North River from a snug little aerie up in the rock-ribbed Palisades. The cracked bell of the church was clanging forth its invitation to people to enter its open doors. It was an old church. The windows were cobwebbed and dirty, with here and there a pane of stained glass in strange pattern; these were distributed with perfect irregularity. These windows looked on the worn gravestones where the forefathers of those who now stood there slept. Long, tangled, sickly grass twined about the gravestones, and one or two were ornamented with rose-bushes and oyster-shells. Some trees of smoked, dried green slowly grew and slowly decayed by the side of the old church. The bell-rope hung into the body of the building, and a stove reared its unsightly pipe in the centre, supported by iron bars that radiated from it in every direction.

Just as the service commenced a pretty, dark-eyed girl glided down the aisle, with a rather conscious stricken air, opened, with some difficulty, one of the doors and hid herself immediately in one of the pews, her blushing face closely pressed against her hands, which lay on the woodwork in front of her, as she knelt down to say a short prayer. Within just as much time as suggested the idea that he had lingered outside in order not to appear together, Joe Berthfield entered and seated himself in an adjacent pew.

The two behaved very well during the service, taking only stealthily innocent glances at each other and even then at long intervals. But when the service was read and the benediction said, the girl remained a little longer than usual on her knees, and Joe was waiting for her when she arose. They walked silently together out of the church and turned into a broad walk, shaded with trees, which led down, zig-zag fashion, to the river.

As they got further and further away from the departing congregation, Berthfield, being an enterprising youth in all he undertook, possessed himself of her hand, and put his face so close to her hat that she could not choose but look at him. And he looked long, but not apparently making himself the happier for doing so, for at the conclusion he gave a great sigh.

"Hattie, darling," he said, "I've no good news for you. I've been to the dock works at the North River, and the position Broadlip hoped to give me is filled, and there's no chance of another opening. They don't want young, untried hands there, yet they might have given me a trial."

"But, Joe," said the girl, and her voice faltered a little as she spoke, "you know what you wish cannot be. You wish me to marry you and to risk the chances of life. I cannot leave my father. He is aging sadly. I think his poor eyes are growing dim; and now he would rather have all his beautiful music played to him than do it himself. Joe, my great hope is that I may be able to take his pupils for him."

"You would do it well, Hattie. You have a wonderful knack of managing people."

The girl smiled, and in her smile there was a peculiar mocking expression which seemed like a ripple about the mouth. She became grave again.

"He has worked for me, Joe; it is fit that I should work for him."

"But if I could get work near, you need not leave him, Hattie. We could marry and all live together."

"No, Joe; we are too young to fetter ourselves with such uncertain prospects. Alone we may struggle, and if we fall we fall alone, and drag down no other; but were we married, and your employment so uncertain, cares would come on us more quickly than we could meet them. Believe me, Joe, we are best single."

There was no selfishness about the young fellow, yet, man-like, he could not forbear the answer:

"Hattie, you think more of your father than you do of me. My young life——" He stopped abruptly.

"I should be no good wife to you, Joe, if I failed as a daughter. Do not press me more. God knows I am sorely tried already," and the pent-up tears came at last.

Then Berthfield inwardly called himself many frightful names, of which "Unmanly wretch" and "Brute" were the least severe. But he only said, audibly:

"I know, Hattie. Forgive me." And the words were scarcely out of his mouth before he was forgiven, for the warm, round, white hand was again placed confidingly in his. He continued: "The worst is yet to come, Hattie." His words came slowly and as if dragged up by the roots. "I have undertaken to work my way to Japan, and the captain of the steamer has promised to get me work as soon as we arrive. I did hope to have begun higher up, but I've never shirked work, and I'll show that I can do a good and earnest day's work. I've toiled with dust and dirt and oil and what not, and I'll do it again. I know my trade thoroughly. The lowest as well as the highest part of it, and—and—I'm young and strong."

"Yes, it's all true," said poor Hattie; and these four words were all she could say.

"I shall not forget you, Hattie. It may be twenty years before we meet again, but even then I shall be yours only."

Hattie smiled, but this time it was a poor, worn, wan, struggling smile.

"I shall be old and faded then, Joe."

"It does not matter," he returned, with a loving, steady gaze. "You may be old and faded, worn and shriveled, but you will be more to me than any other woman."

A great mist seemed to have come over the river as the girl said:

"We must part now, dear Joe."

They walked on silently for a little time.

"I sail to-morrow, Hattie," he said, as they reached the old church. "I bind you by no promise."

"We have the world before us, and God to aid us, dear heart," she replied.

They stood and gazed sadly on the gravestones; there seemed nothing but an atmosphere of dampness and decay among them, only the warm love and young hope in their breasts; but these triumphed even in the sadness of the hour. He held her in his arms for one last caress, and then released her. In another minute he had gone.

And so they parted with wrung hearts, fearing, as many young lovers have feared, that the hour-glass of time, or the scythe of death, would stand between them in this life.

And the river flowed onwards to the sea.

* * * * * *

Joe Berthfield returned to New York and to the boarding-house, where his worldly goods were packed ready for transit, in a depressed and remorseful state of mind. He was miserable enough, heaven knows, and though he bit his lips until the blood almost came, and clinched his teeth, it was hard work to keep the tears from starting.

It was in vain that he inwardly exhorted himself not to feel this wringing pain in his heart. Nature, not manhood, was uppermost. He could not eat, but lighting a cigar and repairing to his dingy room he leant out of the window to enjoy his only luxury—that of thinking of Hattie Hadwin. He folded his arms tightly across his breast thinking about her, and then he leant out with some romantic idea that the wind would waft her breath to him or that the same moon should look down on both. He had not naturally a genius for self-torment, quite the reverse; but a man in love will do such things.

In his mind's eye he beheld her as his wife, and again he saw her fretted and worn, struggling for her father with adverse circumstances, and sinking quietly but surely, while his arm would be far from her.

Within ten hours from that time Joe Berthfield was engaged at seaman's wages to work under the engineer of the steamship Pekin. At nine o'clock he had passed through the Narrows.

If his heart was heavy his spirit was good, his belief in Hattie's faithfulness, although no vows had been registered, very considerable; his belief in his own, amazingly firm.

"Success is certain till energy fails," said Joe, as he commenced to dump a lot of coal through a stoke-hole.

* * * * * *

It was perhaps ten years after this, that a lady, richly clad in silks and furs, walked up Fifth Avenue, New York, one bright, crisp, Winter's day. She carried a small roll of music under her cloak, and stopped at one of the large palatial houses that face the Catholic Cathedral.

She rang the bell and was quickly admitted into the magnificent parlor. She opened her music, laid aside her wrappings and taking a short, sharp peep into a superb pier-glass set in an ebony frame, revealed the face of Hattie Hadwin.

Tall, gay, handsome and careless, with a bewitching drollery about the mouth, and a rather masterful eye.

Presently the door was opened, and a tall and willful-looking girl, with a pair of flashing blue eyes, almost ran in. She would have embraced Hattie on the spot, but the latter drowned the effort in her own significant way; she laid her hands on the young lady's shoulders saying:

"Well, Julie, how is the voice, and how have you prospered with the song?"

"Oh, Miss Hattie, papa says I am hoarse and that I have a cold, but let me try.

Hattie Hadwin had the knack of making herself particularly charming to her pupils, who all adored her after the fashion of young girls. Miss Julie Van Zutphen was no exception to the rule, so the two sat down and proceeded very amiably for some time. At last the fantasy seized Hattie that Miss Van Zutphen should repeat a certain passage a given number of times as a penalty for the falling short of the mode of performing it.

The young girl's spirit did not bear the burden very meekly—first her pride arose, then mortification did battle with pride, and lastly the spirit of sullenness descended and utterly paralyzed Miss Van Zutphen's vocal powers.

A dreaded pause ensued. Hattie, smiling to herself as the altered intonation fell upon her ear, turned round and met such a full blaze of indignation on the pretty face as made her smile a great deal more.

She then commenced the song herself:

A crimson rosebud into beauty breaking;
A hand outstretched to pluck it ere it falls;
An hour of triumph, and a sad forsaking;
And then, a withered rosebud—that is all.

A maiden's heart that knoweth not love's darting;
A voice that teaches love beyond recall;
An hour of joy, an hour of bitter parting;
And then, a broken heart—and that is all.

She sang it deliciously, and in so doing forgot, or seemed to forget, her surrounding. The invincible spirit of music spoke to her of other things, and, as her fingers wandered over the keys, her face grew very wistful, almost sad, and she no longer remembered even to tease Miss Van Zutphen, who was affected like Saul, in so far that the mutinous demon was in some sort charmed out of her, and she was pondering how she might best descend from a pedestal of pride, and make submission to Hattie without losing her dignity.

The song was finished, and both came back to realities. Hattie did not care about conquering herself, but was wondrously fond of conquering other people. So she devoted an instant to Miss Van Zutphen, and, having ascertained by an almost imperceptible glance that young lady's state of mind, she proceeded to apply the actual remedy. She took the song and gave it to her, saying, very sadly:

"Until to-day I always sang that song with pleasure, Julie, but you have joined to it a less pleasant memory. I hope you will like it better from this moment than I shall."

And she bent over the song, and wrote on the margin with her pencil the single word "revolt."

Julie Van Zutphen gave a convulsive gulp, but said never a word.

Hattie gave two more lessons on the avenue, and then walked quickly home.

Her father, poor in the first instance, became poorer still. An amateur musician, he was compelled to make his pleasure minister to his necessity. His health failed him more than his fortune. As Hattie had said so she had done, and in the matter of a daughter he was, decidedly, a much to be envied man.

When she returned, he was sitting in his chair by the fire, thinking long of her, as the Scotch say. In her eyes he looked each time she came back more gentle, feeble and shadowy than before.

* * * * * *

In quickly told tales like this there is no room, as there is no need, to detail the course of each day which went to make up Hattie Hadwin's life. Hattie was fast growing rich. Work was a law and necessity, but she did her work easily; it suited her, and her gains were sufficient to not only support herself and her father in exceeding comfort, but to enable her to pay periodical visits to the National Park Bank, where she was received with that consideration that bespeaks the entrance of a person coming to deposit, not to draw, money.

She was the fashion. Society liked her, her splendid voice, her gracious manner, her habits and her rich neutral tinted toilets.

No tidings from Berthfield had ever reached her, yet, in spite of it, she grew to appear handsomer and stouter; she was not a-weary because he came not, and, indeed, presented no resemblance to the "Marion of the Moated Grange."

Ten years from the time I last portrayed her she entered her fortieth year. It was a Winter's evening. There had been a driving storm of sleet and snow, with a keen, bitter wind.

The foot-passengers on the sidewalks were whipped, blinded and at last roused by it, the drivers of horse-cars disappeared behind the mountains of wraps, and the homeless poor betook themselves to alleys and doorways for shelter. The sky was sullen and lowering and plainly informed those who consulted it that there was worse yet to come.

I do not think any one could look more comfortable or handsome than Hattie Hadwin as she sat making the hot coffee in the snug study, clad in rich garment of sombre hue, but of exquisite workmanship and finish. Her father, still alive, was seated in the self-same chair. His head was very white and quite bowed on his breast, and his long, thin fingers beat time restlessly. She spoke only a few words to him now and then, and they were caressing and such as might have been used to a child.

At last she settled herself in her own lounging-chair, and, opening a new book, was soon deep in it. Gradually the new book found its resting-place on the floor, and Hattie reposed calmly.

There was a rumbling of hack-wheels close to the sidewalk, and then a halt. But there was no magnetism in the air to warn Hattie of any one being near her more than that gentle, shadowy man which she had tended for so many years. Then footsteps in the hall and a hand on the door.

Even the seven sleepers awakened at last, and, when the door opened, Hattie started to her feet, fully prepared to deny that she had been otherwise than awake.

Then came a face, bronzed, fiery red, full blue eyes, and altogether strange to Hattie - at least, she had seen such in her dreams. A mass of hair, beard, mustache and whiskers of a hue which was pale only beside the face. All this surmounted a figure huge in every way, but especially in breadth.

Hattie stood wondering, and the figure stood wondering also. Like the Ancient Mariner, "he fixed her with his glittering eye," and, as he performed this operation, he drew off wrapping after wrapping, and at length stood confessed as Joe Berthfield, weighing at the very least calculation two hundred and twenty pounds.

Then the blue eyes danced with amusement, the white teeth showed themselves, and a hearty, full, sonorous laugh broke the ice.

"Hattie, do you not know me?" He stepped forward and kissed her, at first lightly on the cheeks, and then putting her back with another glance and another laugh, he followed up that kiss by many others, and they came so fast and warm, that Hattie had not really presence of mind to resist.

"I understand you are still Hattie Hadwin, or you would not have seen me here to-night. So this is your father?"

She led him up to the old man gently.

"Speak tenderly to him, Joe. He is quite childish now." Something in the subdued, womanly tone of Hattie's voice gave Berthfield a choking sensation. However, he cleared his throat and shook hands with Mr. Hadwin.

The poor gentleman looked up with his wan, comprehensive smile.

"You'll be kind to Hattie—you'll be kind to her?" and then he rattled on incoherently.

Hattie had not forgotten how to blush, and at the random speech of her father the blood rushed up in torrents to her hair roots, leaving a transient crimson on her throat and neck.

Apparently this enchanted Joe, for he rubbed his hand, and tugged at his tawny beard, and sat down and watched Hattie as she poured out coffee for him, with the bright, cheerful and trusting look of twenty years before.

"Ah, Hattie," he continued, laughingly, "I swore that were you faded, worn and shriveled, I would still be true; but you have not fretted for me, you have not the assurance to pretend it. Am I absolved from my oath?"

Hattie raised her eyes with a malicious glance signifying, "Et tu brute."

"Yes, I know," he added, surveying rather ruefully his own ample person, "we have both much to forgive."

There was no explanation asked, for none was required—they both felt supremely happy. They had each done their duty, not sadly and sternly, but merrily and well.

THE ARION BALL.

THE annual masked ball of the Arion Singing Society, at the Madison Square Garden, on Thursday, February 19th, was an unprecedented success. By nine o'clock the vast Garden was literally packed with masqueraders, and this promptness led to the opening of the ball proper at an earlier hour than usual. After a preliminary concert, the customary march of the committees began at ten o'clock; the Floor Committee were in the costume of Vasco di Gama; the Lobby Committee dressed like the Marquis de Beaufort, and the Finance Committee in the uniform of the Empress Katherine's body-guard. All these gentlemen, numbering several hundred, moved with the steadiness of military veterans, and looked well in their fine clothes. They performed some evolutions with precision, got more plaudits, and opened the ball by taking partners for a waltz, in which all who were masked could join if they chose. The dancing-floor was by that time possessed by a great number of maskers, among whom clowns of various sorts, including some clever acrobats, were numerous.

The grand procession began moving at half-past eleven o'clock. The first float was a burlesque of the Street Cleaning Department, consisting of a machine of brooms which swept nothing, on the top of which sat a person who was "made up" to look very like Captain Williams. Then followed the historical division: 1609 was represented by a tableau of Hendrick Hudson treating with the Manhattan Indians, all on a scenic platform drawn by Dutch sailors; 1660 by the last days of New Amsterdam, showing Peter Stuyvesant surrounded by dignitaries, and, in a grotto at the rear, Rip Van Winkle and gnomes; 1776 by the bell-tower of Independence Hall, Continental soldiers, Molly Stark, English and Indian prisoners, the Goddess of Liberty and an American eagle; and 1880 by Prince Carnival and his numerous attendants. His Highness rode in a towering and most resplendent chariot, drawn by five horses. All the costumes in this division, indeed, were new and rich.

Digitized by Google

The second half of the procession was of a humorous character. Cleopatra's needle, which resembled a torpedo about to be discharged from a boat, was perched horizontally on a wagon, and was surrounded by dusky Egyptians. Not content with the needle, they had also secured Cleopatra's thimble, which was covered with alleged Masonic hieroglyphics, and which was borne on the end of a stick. Trumpeters and heralds followed this scene from the Nile, and preceded a parody on the ideal tally-ho coach. The team was filled with a degenerate-looking youth in uncouth garments, and a weak-kneed man blew a horn spasmodically. One of the conspicuous figures was "Ulysses, the First," who, astride of an immense elephant, came next, quietly smoking a cigar. The man was "made up" to resemble General Grant. He was supposed to be entering New York in state after his third term. The elephant was a huge affair and was covered with gaudy trappings. Around the team were "other potentates," and boys with elephants' heads on.

After one standard-bearer, with a beautiful daughter of the regiment on either side, the heralds and Floor Committee, all in brilliant and showy military dress, had passed by, Master Arion, personated by F. Beringer, the president of the society, closed the procession. He was seated in a triumphal chariot, accompanied by his nautical orchestra, and was fresh from the musical festival on the Isthmus of Corinth. The chariot held great palms, and over Arion's head was a gorgeous canopy. An electric light placed in the front of the team lighted up the whole brilliantly. Crocodiles and tropical plants were arranged very effectively so as to set off the god in the best manner. The Garden was brilliant with flowers and decorations.

Financial Condition of Russia.

IN discussing the imperial budget of 1878, the Rudi Mir draws attention to several weak points, and puts particular stress on the fact that the unproductive expenses have greatly increased. In 1868 the expenditure of the imperial budget came to 44,000,000 rubles. In 1878 it amounted to 60,000,000 rubles—that is to say, an increase of 50 per cent. in 10 years. During this time especially the unproductive expenses rose from 234,000,000 rubles to 352,000,000 rubles—equal to an increase of 50 per cent. The year 1879 will show even worse results. The expenditure is quoted at 609,000,000 rubles, of which 270,000,000 rubles are fixed for unproductive expenses. The financial position seems all the more precarious when one remembers that many institutions which are necessary for the welfare of the State and of the people have been abandoned from want of funds. Only one of every ten children receives any regular education whatever, and even this is confined to simple reading and writing. The majority of the peasants have no opportunity whatever for laying by capital or for borrowing money to improve the antediluvian state of their farms, which have not progressed for the last 200 years, and in some districts the proceeds do not even pay for the labor expended on the land. In addition to this, the rate of exchange goes lower and lower, and thereby the general wealth of the nation gets less and less. Last, not least, the railways swallow up a minimum of 30,000,000 rubles, which merely go into the pockets of the shareholders.

A Siamese Fable.

A MAN chased by a tiger in a forest one night escaped by climbing a tree, on which lived a monkey and its family. The monkey received the man kindly, and refused to listen to the tiger, which advised it to fling him down while he slept. When the man awoke the tiger retired, and the monkey went to sleep. Presently the tiger returned, and recommended the man to fling the monkey down. The man pondered a while, then gave the monkey a push, and it fell into the tiger's claws. Awakened by the shock and the pain, the monkey laughed aloud. "Wherefore laughest thou, when I am clawing thy body?" asked the astonished tiger. "Because thou thinkest thy claws are near my heart, and thou art wrong," replied the monkey. "Where, then, is thy heart?" "At the end of my tail." The tiger let go its hold, but before it could seize its victim's tail the monkey ran up the tree and was saved. It knew who had pushed it over, but it uttered no angry word. When the day dawned the tiger disappeared, and the monkey went out to gather fruit for its guest. During its absence the man killed its mate and all its little ones, intending to take them home for his wife to cook; when the monkey came back with a throng of its kinsfolk, it found its home made desolate. Still it uttered no angry word—only offered to guide the man out of the forest. They set forth together, the man following the monkey. After a time the man struck the monkey over the head so hard that the blood gushed forth. "Why hast thou done this?" asked the monkey. "Because I wanted flesh for my wife to cook," replied the man. "But if thou hadst killed me," said the monkey, "who would have guided thee out of the forest? Now follow me at a distance; my blood-drops will show thee the way. And when thou art clear from the trees, then thou canst kill me without risk." The man did as he was counseled. When they came near the forest verge, the monkey stopped for the man to come up and kill him. The man killed the monkey. But just as he was leaving the forest he tripped and fell, first into a hole, then headlong right into hell. But no sooner was the monkey dead than it was carried straight up into heaven. There, in a golden palace, it was joined by all its dear ones whom the man had killed. "But where is the man?" asked the monkey with anxious sympathy. "He is in hell," was the reply. "Your Highness must not think of him any more."

An Indian's Eloquent Speech.

IT was definitely agreed upon in the council, on Jan. 26th, between Secretary Schurz and the Piutes, first, that Chief Winnemucca should be permitted to return to the Malheur Reservation, in Oregon, with such of his people as may choose to go there; second, that upon their arrival the Indians are to take up land in severalty, each head of a family to select as a farm a particular tract of land; and third, that such of the Piutes as are now scattered throughout the white settlements at work, satisfactorily earning their own living, are to be permitted to remain where they are.

The Indians repeatedly expressed their approval of these propositions of the Secretary, and old Chief Winnemucca said that, under this policy, in ten years the Government need no longer bother about taking care of his tribe—they would be self-supporting. They asked for the organization of a body of Indian police, such as has been organized lately at other agencies. On this subject young Chief Natchez said: "My father is now old. I will have charge of my people. I will encourage every one to take a farm, as you say. My people work well, and will settle down as white people; and I want to say this, 'If any man among my Indians steals something, or commits any crime against white people, don't send your soldiers with such a rush to our reservation, but just say, 'Natchez, one of your men has done something wrong, will you hunt him up?' I will leave nothing undone but I will get him and give him up to your white people. I am glad I came, because now when I hear the soldiers are coming to drive us to the Indian Territory like cattle, I will know it is not true. My heart is full of gratitude to you, so that I scarcely know how to express it, for you are helping my people. Some one told me it was no use to come to Washington: they are altogether against us: but I shall never believe that again. Your words to me are as if they were heard away over the mountains, for my people are listening, and your words will bring joy to their hearts. I am an Indian man, but where is the white man who can say I have saved three Indian lives? I have here a medal. It was given me for saving the lives of three white men. I have also always been against war. I hunted and found the Bannocks for the soldiers. This medal was all I received, but now it seems to me as if it came from a Divine power. I have my reward. You give my people homes and land where they can live. I don't know, may be you will hear Natchez Winnemucca is on the war path, murdering the whites. When you hear that, come in person, or send some one to have me brought right here, and I will not flinch or tremble when you put the rope around my neck to hang me. Instead of that, in twenty years, or many years, it may be when we are old, or when we are gone, and young men are in our places, some of my people will have been helped by this, so that, getting an education, they will hold high position like yourself. I want to thank you again for my people."

The latter part of the young chief's speech was delivered standing, and with much earnest eloquence.

Bedroom Water-bottles.

A POINT in household sanitation, which commonly receives little attention, and yet is of great importance, is the supply of water to bedroom water-bottles. Ostensibly for use in cleaning the teeth, the water placed in these bottles is almost constantly used for drinking, and yet its purity rarely has the attention which is given to the water placed on the tables. The bedroom water-bottle is usually filled by the housemaid from the same source as the water-jugs, in most cases from an up-stairs cistern, which supplies the water-closet, and the overflow pipe from which it not rarely passes into the drain. Even in well-ordered houses this practice is too often resorted to, in lodging-houses almost invariably. It is a practice fraught with the highest danger—a danger which cannot be too strongly insisted on. We lately heard of a case of typhoid fever contracted at one of the most fashionable South of England watering-places in consequence of the sufferer, being thirsty in the night, having incautiously drunk freely of the water placed in his water-bottle, and which had been taken directly from an up-stairs cistern, afterwards found to be foul. It should be an invariable rule to observe the same precautions regarding the purity of water which is occasionally drunk as of that which is only for drinking purposes; and it is most important that, if the source or quality of the water is doubtful or unknown, only filtered water should be placed in these bottles, and that in no case should they be filled with water taken from a cistern which supplies a water-closet.

The Foreign Commerce of Boston.

THE annual tables of exports from Boston show that the value of goods shipped last year was greatly larger than ever before, exceeding for the first time in the history of the port an average of $1,000,000 a week. The improvement was greatest during the last quarter of the year; indeed, there was a very slight decline in the first nine months, as compared with the corresponding period of 1878, while, for the closing quarter, the exports were valued at $16,500,000, an increase of $4,400,000 over those of 1878. The export trade was, last year, nearly equal in value to the average exports from the whole of the kingdom of Spain, and two-thirds as great as the value of exports from the entire Dominion of Canada. The trade is to a large and increasing amount in raw materials and food with Great Britain. Out of a total of $50,500,000, more than $16,000,000 consisted of meat and other provisions, upwards of $4,000,000 more consisted of live animals to be slaughtered for meat, and $16,000,000 represented grain and flour, a total of $36,000,000, or almost two-thirds of the whole, being thus accounted for as food. Nearly $8,000,000 worth of raw cotton, $1,000,000 for tobacco, and another $1,500,000 for tallow, grease and stearine, bring up the total to $44,500,000, and leave only $11,000,000 for all other goods. The average proportion of strictly manufactured goods exported from the United States is about ten per cent. Boston exports more than this percentage, and has done so during the past year. The value of the manufactures of wool, cotton, iron, leather and glass, together with agricultural implements, carriages, musical instruments and refined sugar, amounts to more than $6,000,000, to say nothing of numerous other articles which would amount in the aggregate to at least $1,000,000 more. Of the goods eighty-two per cent. in value was sent to Great Britain, against seventy-eight per cent. last year. British dependencies took more than $50,000,000 worth of the goods shipped from Boston in 1879, leaving but one-eleventh of the whole for all the rest of the world.

Paris and Italian Theatres.

BESIDES the three opera-houses, there are twenty-three recognized theatres in Paris. The Français, in the Rue Richelieu, has 1,400 seats, and the prices range from 10f. for the best avant scènes to 1f. for the amphitheatre. The Odéon, in the Rue Vaugirard, has 1,700 seats, from 12f. for the avant scènes to 75 centimes for the fifth gallery. The Vaudeville, in the Chaussée d'Antin, has 1,300 seats, from 7f. for the first tier box seats to 1f. for the fourth gallery. The Porte St. Martin, in the boulevard St. Martin, has 1,800 places, from 8f. for the avant scènes to 1f. for the amphitheatre. The Ambigu Comique, also in the Boulevard St. Martin, has 1,900 seats, from 10f. for the avant scènes to 75 centimes for the fourth gallery. The Variétés, in the Boulevard Montmartre, has 1,300 seats, from 10f. for the avant scènes to 1f. for the amphitheatre. The Gymnase, in the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, has 1,200 seats, from 8f. for the avant scènes to 1f. 25 centimes for the fourth tier seats. The Châtelet, in the Place du Châtelet, has 3,500 seats, from 6f. in the balcony boxes to 50 centimes for the third tier seats. The Théâtre des Nations, in the Place du Châtelet, has 1,760 seats, from 8f. for the avant scènes to 75 centimes for the second amphitheatre. The Palais Royal, in the Rue Montpensier, has 1,000 seats, from 8f. for the avant scènes to 2f. for the parterre or pit. The Bouffes Parisiens, in the passage Choiseul, has 1,200 seats, from 10f. for the avant scènes to 1f. for the amphitheatre. The Third Théâtre Français, in the Boulevard du Temple, has 1,100 seats, from 5f. to 50 centimes for the upper parts. The Folies Dramatiques, in the Boulevard St. Martin, has 1,200 seats, from 8f. 50 centimes for the balcony boxes, to 50 centimes for the third gallery. The Renaissance, in the Boulevard St. Martin, has 1,100 seats, from 12f. for the avant scènes to 50 centimes for the fourth gallery. The Nouveauté, in the Boulevard des Italiens; the Fantaisies Parisiennes, in the Boulevard Beaumarchais; the Château d'Eau, in the Rue de Malte; the Cluny, in the Boulevard St. Germain; the Bouffes du Nord, in the Faubourg St. Denis; the Théâtre des Arts, in the Boulevard Sebastopol; the Athenée Comique, in the Rue Scribe; the Nouveau Lyrique, in the Rue Taitbout, and the Folies Bergères, in the Rue Richer, must also be included among the Paris theatres. Besides its theatres, Paris has several regular Winter dancing saloons, or bals. Cremorne, formerly known as the Salle Valentino, in the Rue St. Honoré, is open every evening; Boullier, known in Summer as the Closerie des Lilas, and Tivoli, are open every Sunday, Monday and Thursday; the Château Rouge every Wednesday and Friday; and the Elysée Montmartre, in the Boulevard Rochechouart, every Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

The following details as to the number of seats in the theatres of Rome will no doubt be found interesting. The Apollo accommodates 8,000 spectators; Argentina, 3,500; Nationale (now building), 5,000; Politeama, 4,000; Valle, 1,500; Corea, 2,500; Capranica, 1,200; Circo Royal, 4,000; Manzoni, 700; Rossini, 600; Metastase, 750; Quirino, 850; Sferisterio, 3,000; Ripeta (now building), 2,500; Goldoni, 600; San Carlo a Catinari, 450; Consolazione, 300; Alfieri, 250; Tiberino, 300. Total, 19 theatres, capable of holding 34,500 spectators.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

The Greenwich Observatory.

The picturesque group of buildings on the hill in Greenwich Park, occupied by the Royal Observatory, under the superintendence of Sir G. B. Airy, the venerable Astronomer Royal, contains various apparatus for the scientific purposes of recording meteorological phenomena and those of the terrestrial magnetic currents, as well as for that of scanning the position and motion of the heavenly bodies. One important branch of these observations is conducted by means of the anemometer, a self-acting device for noting the changes in the direction and pressure of the wind. This is located at the summit of one of the two turrets, overlooking the Park and the Royal Naval College, at the north front of the Observatory, and forms the subject of our illustration.

The Severe Weather in France.

A most singular wave of cold has passed over Central Europe this Winter, and the full force of it seems to have been felt in France, where the country has been many feet deep in snow, while the rivers have been more completely frozen over than has been remembered for a great number of years. The Loire in particular has suffered from the frost, and in the portion between Saumur and Angers, where the river is studded with islands and widens only to narrow again, a terrible block occurred. The inhabitants of the Island of Souzay, mostly farmers, were compelled to quit their homes, the island being in danger of being overwhelmed with the great ice floes. Large numbers of military engineers were dispatched by the Government to form a channel by blowing up the ice with dynamite. Much danger is apprehended when the weather breaks, especially as where the block occurs there is an embankment which protects from the river a large and thickly populated valley. This will be completely inundated should, as may yet happen, the embankment give way.

The Dutch Arctic Expedition.

The Barents Sea, as it is now called, lying north of Lapland, between Spitzbergen to the west and Novaya Zemlya to the east, has been pretty well explored; and the Austrian expedition of Lieutenants Julius Payer and Weyprecht, in the steamer Tegetthoff, from 1872 to 1874, resulted in the discovery of Franz Josef Land, to the north of Novaya Zemlya. The recent Dutch expeditions were conducted in a small vessel without steam-power, fitted out by private enterprise, and named after the ancient Dutch explorer. The satisfactory results of the voyage of the schooner Willem Barents in 1878 encouraged its promoters to dispatch a second Dutch Arctic Expedition in the Summer of last year, and in September the vessel sighted Franz-Josef Land.

The Rush to the Pit's Mouth.

In this drawing we have a vivid representation of the intense excitement which so rapidly spreads amongst the inhabitants of a mining village whenever the dreadful sound of an explosion is heard. The poor creatures know too well the meaning of the awful sound, and all start immediately for the pit's mouth, the brave men eager to render what assistance they can, even at the risk of their own lives, and the weeping women and children to learn the fate of their relatives who were at work in the bowels of the earth. Of the sixty-eight men engaged in the Fair Lady Pit, Leycett, England, when the recent explosion took place there, only six survive. The majority of the dead were buried on the Sunday following at the various contiguous places, the funeral expenses being borne by the Colliery Company, and the scene of the disaster was visited by thousand of persons from the surrounding districts.

Sekukuni's Last Retreat.

The cave in which Sekukuni was captured, or, rather, succession of caves communicating with each other, and penetrating far into the depths of the mountain, are capable of holding hundreds of people, but Sekukuni was soon starved into submission, Ferreira's horsemen having prevented the possibility of his taking in with him any supplies whatever. So near, indeed, were his pursuers that the meat which was intended for the use of the King was seized at the entrance to the cave. During the forty-eight hours which intervened between the chief's being run to earth and his submission, all apertures leading to the caves were zealously guarded by Ferreira's men, assisted by the Swazies. Shots were continually exchanged night and day, and it was a matter of considerable risk to the man on guard, who had to be perpetually on the qui vive.

French Municipal Buildings, French Quarter, Shanghai.

When Shanghai was made a free port, concessions were made to the various foreign governments, England, American, French, etc., for the use of the merchants belonging to each nationality who might come there for commercial purposes. The grant was perpetual, subject to a ground-rent of about a dollar and a half for seven of our ordinary city lots. The French concession was nearest to the Chinese city, but little was done to develop it till after 1860. Now it has grown up to be an important little town in itself, lighted with gas, possessing a fire department, theatres of course, and an insurance company. The city government costs $130,000 a year; the common council consists of eight members, with a president. The municipal affairs are well managed, and our illustration shows the buildings erected for the city government. This French Quarter is a great centre of silk trade, no less than 64,810 bales of silk being shipped annually, half directly to France and about one-tenth to this country. A well managed French company sends a steamer every fortnight to Marseilles through the Suez Canal.

The Empress of Russia at Cannes.

During her stay at Cannes, the Empress of Russia, although suffering greatly with consumption, maintained quite a brilliant court. When the days were pleasant Her Majesty spent much time in the open air and in the company of her numerous retinue. Her illness continuing to wear upon her, she determined to return to St. Petersburg to die in the midst of her family, and it was just before her departure that she gave a reception and distributed gifts among her courtiers with a lavish hand. The scene, as shown in our illustration, resembled the Christmas-tree display so familiar to American and German eyes. These gifts will have a priceless value to the hundred recipients as coming from the heart and hand of the dying Empress of all the Russias.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—FAST day has been appointed in Massachusetts for Thursday, April 8th.

—IT is estimated that 3,000 men are employed in the new mines in Maine.

—A COURSE of lectures on journalism is to be given at Michigan University next year.

—THE Boston Board of Brokers has increased the price of admission from $2,000 to $3,000.

—THE State Republican Convention of North Carolina has been called to meet in Raleigh on the 7th of July.

—TURKISH papers say that martial law has been proclaimed there in order to prevent disturbances in carrying out the militia reforms.

—THE American Sunday School Union has organized in the Southwest since the war 2,796 new Sunday schools, with 113,696 scholars.

—PRINCE NICHOLAS of Montenegro is willing to negotiate with the powers in regard to accepting other Turkish territory instead of Gostoje and Piava.

—A CONVENTION of United States quarantine officials has been called to meet in Washington early in May, for the purpose of revising the quarantine rules and regulations.

—SIR POMEROY COLLEY, private secretary of the Viceroy of India, has been appointed Governor and High Commissioner of Natal and commander of the troops in the neighboring district.

—THE announcement in London that the Executive at Buenos Ayres intends to disarm the civil population in view of the approaching election has depressed Argentine Government bonds there.

—AS AN indication of the dislike of the inhabitants of the newly-acquired Russian territory to their present rulers, it is stated since the Russian occupation of the District of Kars, 42,000 inhabitants have emigrated thence.

—IN the British House of Commons, on February 19th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying to a question, said there was no intention of resuming the negotiations regarding the silver question started by the United States and discussed at the Paris Conference.

—THE charter of the Royal University of Ireland is just about to be issued and enrolled, under the provision of the Irish University Act of 1879. It will supersede, in a measure, what were known as the Queen's Colleges at Belfast, Cork and Galway.

—THE Committee appointed by the State grange to investigate the production and manufacture of sugar beets in Maine, has reported that the Sugar Beet Company used last year 9,000 tons of beets, 8,000 of which were grown in the State on 1,100 acres, an average of less than nine tons an acre.

—THE Smithsonian Institution has received from Professor Peters, of Clinton, the announcement of the discovery by himself on February 17th, 1880, of a planet of the eleventh magnitude in 10 hours 50 minutes right ascension, and 13 degrees 22 minutes north declination, with a daily motion of seven minutes north.

—THE Registrar-General has returned 4,653,551 acres in Ireland under the head of "bog and marsh, barren mountain land, water, roads and fences," for the year 1879—an improvement over the preceding year of 8,387 acres gained to cultivation or pasture. Of this enormous acreage of waste, 1,740,291 acres are returned as "bog and marsh."

—HERR LASKER, the Prussian National Liberal leader, who proposes to make a prolonged visit to the United States, has written to a friend in England that he will have to postpone his projected tour, for political reasons. He has been suffering from nervous exhaustion and rheumatism, but is sufficiently recovered to attend to his public duties.

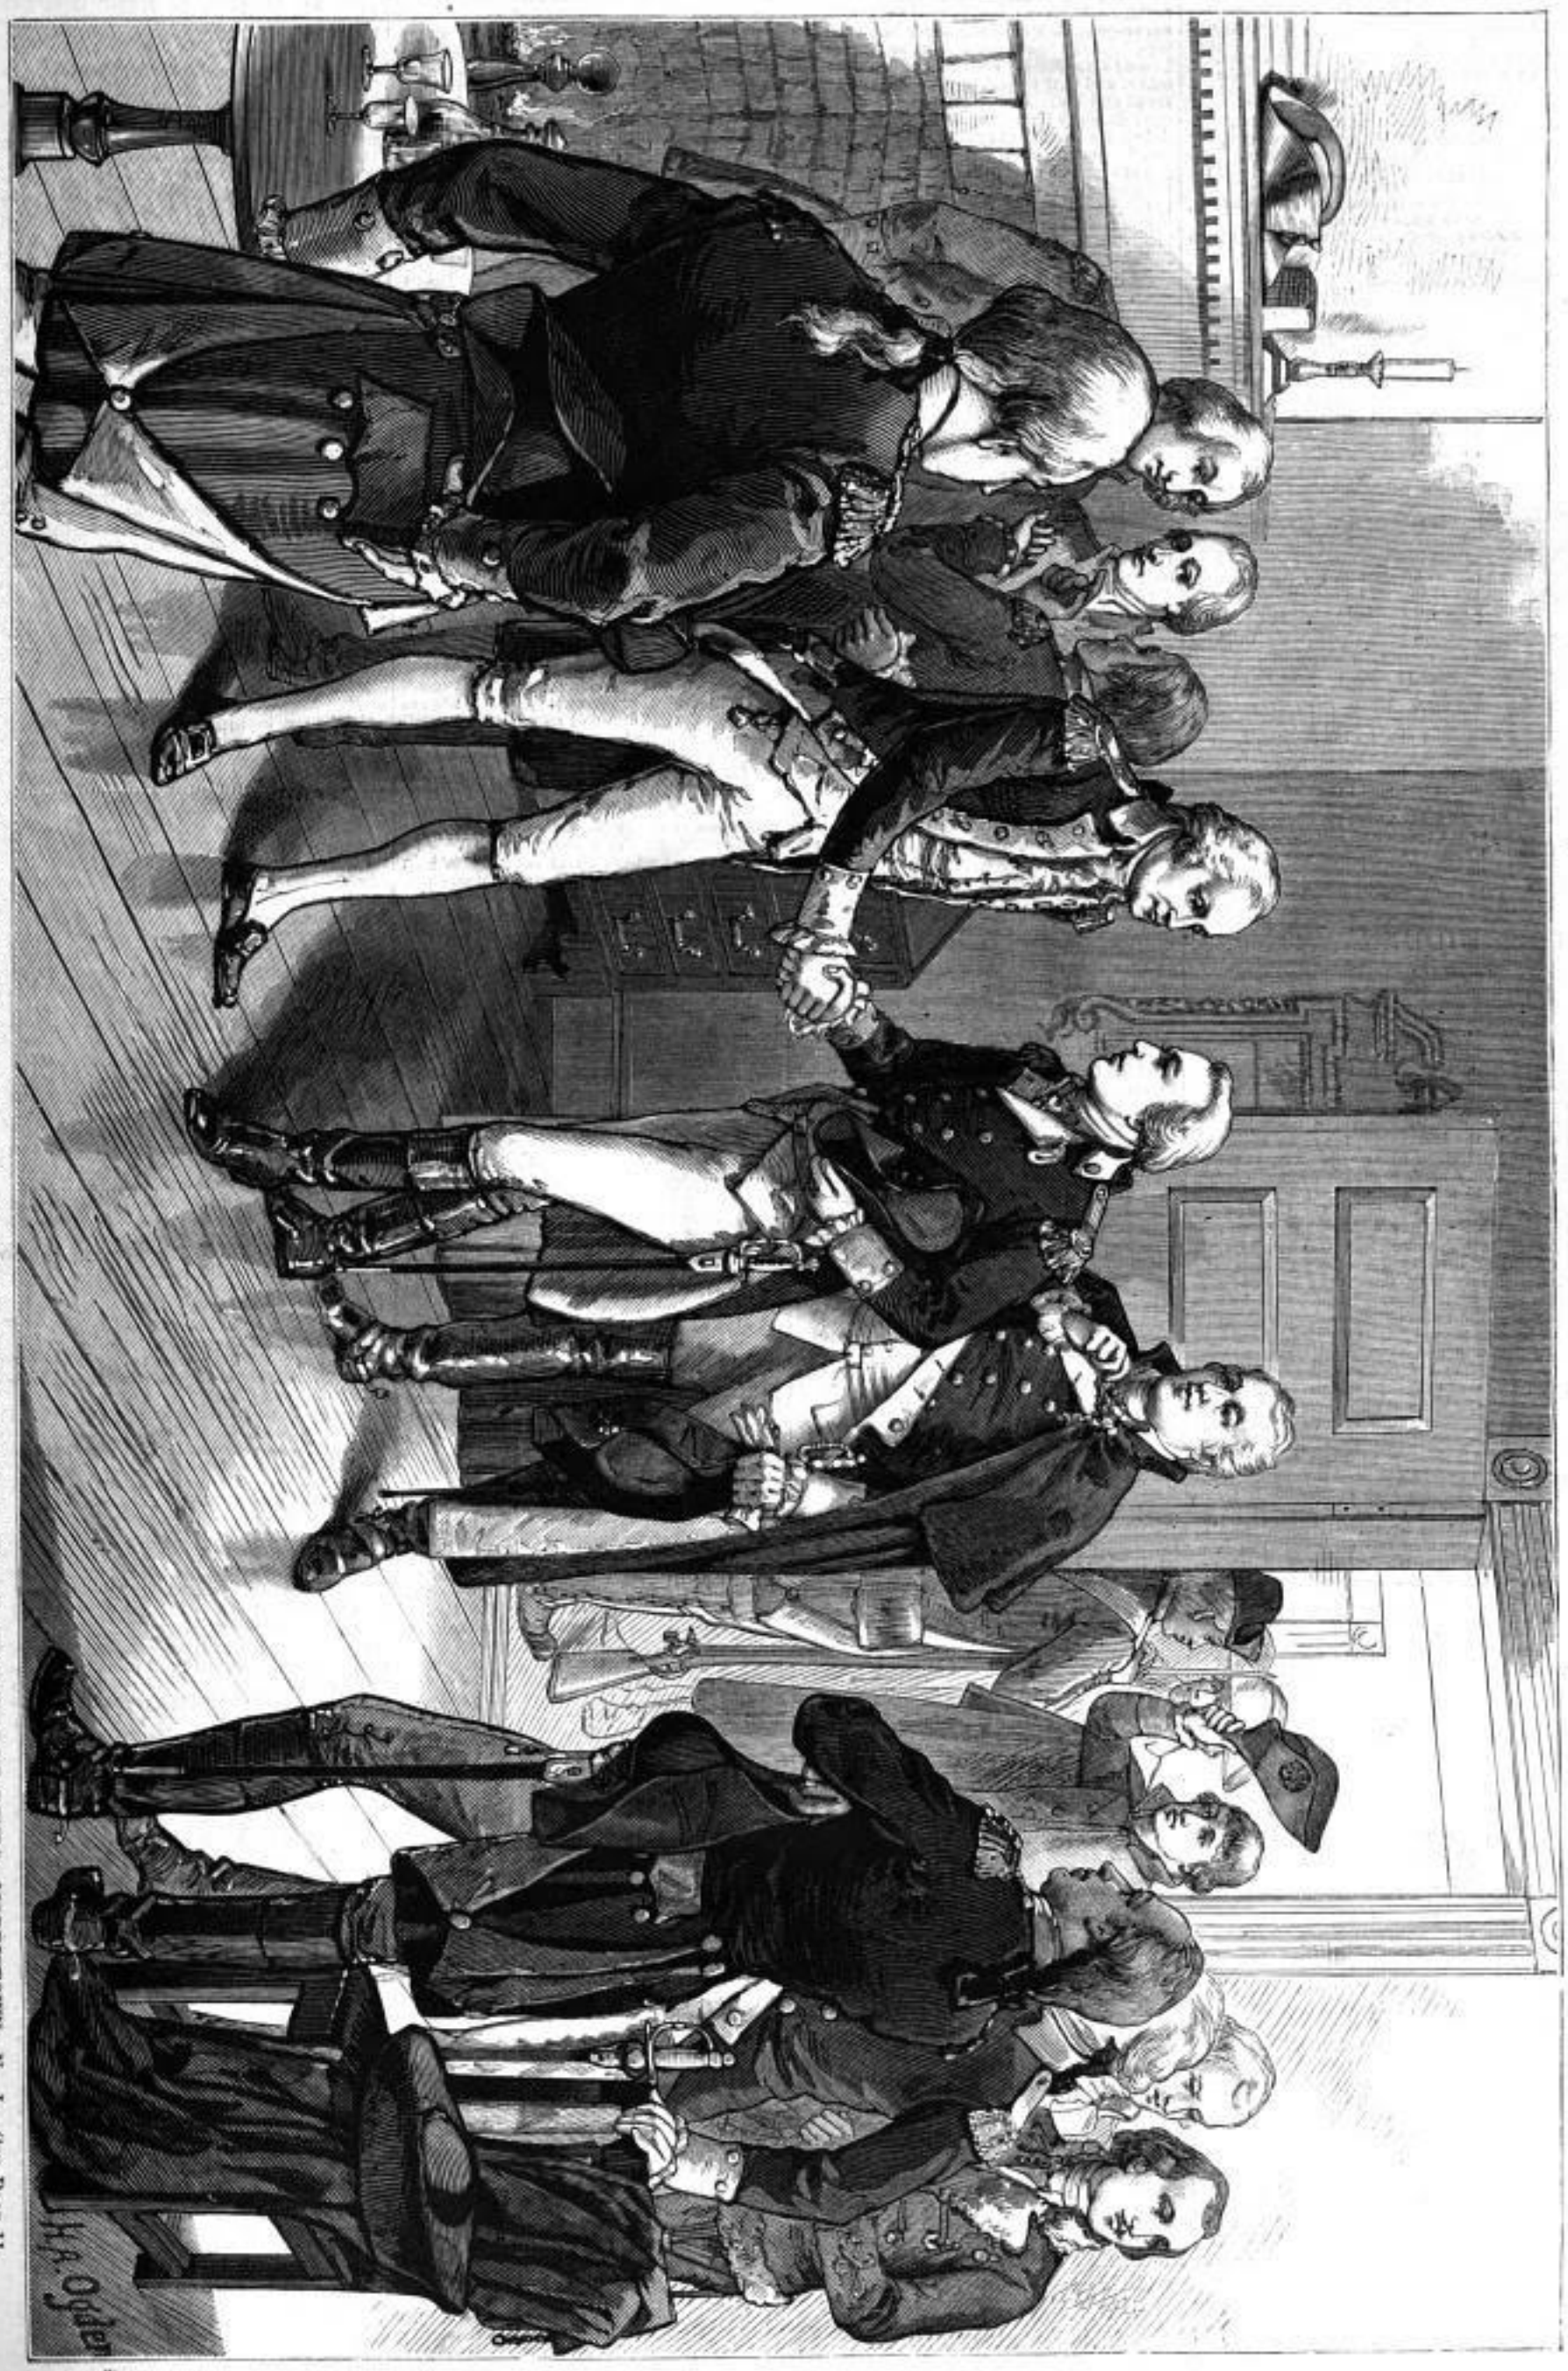
—THE senior wranglership at Cambridge was taken this year by an Irishman, Mr. James Lardner, son of the late Hugh Lardner, of Belfast. He was educated at the Royal Academical Institution and Queen's College of Belfast. His success has caused great rejoicing in academic circles in Ireland. Few senior wranglers have, however, made much figure in after life.

—FOUR prominent men of the Miami Indian Nation—Thomas Miller, First Chief; David Gebso, Second Chief; Charles Welsh and Samuel Gebso—are on their way to Washington, where they go to demand of the authorities that their tribe be made citizens of the United States; that they have their lands set apart to them severally, and that they be allowed to draw all money due them from the Government.

—A CENSUS of the United Kingdom is to be taken next year. Parliament will shortly have to be asked to pass a Bill or Bills to provide for the cost, and to confer upon the Registration Office the necessary powers. The London Times says that "the expense does not approach, for the United Kingdom, that of the American Union, which laid out on the Census of 1870 some £600,000. In 1871 the cost in this kingdom did not much exceed £120,000."

—AN archbishop and two bishops, whose sole crime was connection with the sect of Old Believers, have been in confinement in a fortress in the Province of Vladimir, Russia, for many years. The archbishop has been in prison for twenty-six years, and one of the bishops for seventeen years. The Golos, of St. Petersburg, for directing attention to the case and restoring the supposition that the prisoners had been forgotten, was deprived by the Minister of the Interior of the right of publishing advertisements for a month.

—THE portion of Asia Minor—comprising Batoum, Kars, Olti and Artwin—which has been acquired by Russia under the Treaty of Berlin, is a district very rich in natural productions, and capable of great development under an efficient administration. There is not much agricultural produce, but there is an abundance of wood and metals, and the climate and soil are well suited for the cultivation of silk and tobacco. The natives appear reconciled to the new state of things. They have ceased to emigrate into Turkish territory, and hoards of money which had hitherto been concealed have made their appearance in the towns. Batoum, thanks to its great advantages as a harbor, is increasing in size, while Poti, notwithstanding its dockyard and railway, declines.



—THE Supreme Court of Virginia has delivered its opinion in the case of William Walsh and John E. Brooddus, Deputy Sheriffs of Henrico County, each committed to jail for contempt in refusing to obey the orders of the incumbent, Judge Minor and Judge-elect Waddell, between whom there is a difference upon the construction of the law as to the time of the expiration of office of the one and the right of the other to assume the judicial functions. They unanimously decide in favor of Judge-elect Waddell's side of the question. This case, having been made up as a test one, the decision virtually settles the disputed right of seventy-five or eighty of the newly-elected county judges, elected after January 1st last, to enter upon the duties of office at once.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—ANNUAL MASKED BALL OF THE ARION SOCIETY AT THE MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, FEBRUARY 19TH.—THE HISTORICAL DIVISION OF THE GRAND PROCESSION.—SEE PAGE 4.

Digitized by Google

GENERAL WASHINGTON RECEIVING THE CONGRATULATIONS OF HIS OFFICERS ON HIS BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22D, 1780, AT HIS HEADQUARTERS, MORRISTOWN, N. J.—SEE PAGE 11.

Digitized by Google

CARPE DIEM.

WHERE the fresh, keen breath of the morning hovers,
Now o'er the foam-crest, now o'er the lea,
Hark to the call of the seagulls and plovers
Out from the meadows, in from the sea!

Shall we lie in silence or sail in laughter,
Stroll on the shore or drift on the swell,
Since these idle hours for all time after
Shall by you and by me be forgotten well?

For we know the worth of the cup we drink from,
And fear no dregs as of sharp regret:
No dreaded pangs that we fain would shrink from
Make your lips quiver or my eyes wet.

God wot we twain have outlived the season
When pride of life had no cause to die;
When hope had a magic and mighty reason
And death held a menace—in days gone by.

We can smile to-day in the earth-born hour
That fleets to a dreamless and viewless bourne;
For you are to me but a fragrant flower
Which, plucked and withered, I need not mourn;

While I to you am the sun's caresses
That warm your beauty to perfumed glow;
But when night drops down (as your heart confesses),
What the day brought forth you will scarcely know.

It is well to feel that one cannot sorrow
Over precious tokens with hot tears stained;
It is well to feel that on no to-morrow
Old wounds will rankle in scars retained.

The days are dead when I loved a woman;
No man can shake your soul with a breath.
Were God's ways as ours we were more than human
Nor would know that the end is—only death.

Let us laugh and kiss, for the day flies faster
Than swallows pass when the snows are nigh.
Enfranchised from fear of time's disaster
Eat, drink and be glad before we die.

And so where the breath of the morning hovers,
Now o'er the foam-crest, now o'er the lea,
Hark to the call of the seagulls and plovers
Out from the meadows, in from the sea!

JOHN MORAN.

THE HIDDEN WITNESS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT HUSBAND OF MINE."

CHAPTER XXXV.—THE LILY IN HER HAIR.

NEVER was sick-room more beautifully adorned than that of Flix Forester. The prettiest vases and knickknacks, the finest portable statues, the best pictures; and then the flowers! Fresh from the conservatory every day, they bowered the windows, the tables, the shelves, till the room became a perfect wilderness of sweets. Mrs. Forester made herself a slave to all his whims—read to him, sung to him; soothed him when weary and watched him when asleep. It was just a miracle that he had escaped sudden death, and another that disfigurement was not entailed on him for life. Doctor Wilde came every day, and Flix, who, though he had not forgotten the name, never dreamed that he was the son of the Virginian colonel with whom he had become acquainted at the time of his sore peril, found in him a congenial friend as well as a minister to the needs of the body. Vintresse also was a constant visitor, and he never left the house without also seeing Sylve. He began to act like a man in love, and the girl was so occupied with her own thoughts that she did not perceive to what his devotion seemed tending. Flix noticed the change, however, and drew his own conclusions. When Mrs. Forester was out of the way Vintresse could talk only of Sylve. He often staid to dinner, accompanied her now and then to a concert, sang with her, wrote her poetry, for which, however, he only asked her friendly criticism.

A week passed before Flix spoke of Sylve at all. His mother preserved a discreet silence towards her son concerning the subject of his thoughts, woman-like, deeming that curiosity was the best stimulant to his unspoken desires.

One day, the first he was allowed to sit up, he said to his mother:

"What do you think of Vintresse?"

"I like him," she said, quietly, adjusting the pillow to his head.

"Which will win in the race do you think—Vintresse or the doctor?"

Affecting not to notice his meaning, Mrs. Forester looked up in surprise.

"Race? What race?" she asked.

"After the heiress," he responded, almost surlily.

"Oh! Why, of course, Vintresse, if Sylve fancies him. He is very attentive. As for the doctor, he wants no one."

"If Sylve fancies him," said Flix, with a little sneer. "How can she help it? He is one of those handsome puppets no woman can help liking."

"He is handsome," said Mrs. Forester, quietly, "and—don't speak that way, my dear—very manly; by no means a puppet."

"He is a puppet," growled Flix, pushing his footstool viciously. "However, I've nothing against him, I'm sure."

There was a long silence. Mrs. Forester made a great show of the bright wools she was knitting with, and Flix appeared to be thinking intently, with his brows drawn together.

"Does she appear to like him?" he at last asked, breaking out abruptly; "because in that case I, as her guardian, shall have something to say."

"Really, Flix, I—how can I tell? I cannot see into Sylve's heart, and I am too much with you to take notice of her manner. Of course if any such thing is in progress she will tell me about it in time."

"We know nothing about this Vintresse—nothing whatever; and as Sylve's guardian I am responsible for his character—at least, in a measure. I should not wish to see her throw herself away." He crossed one leg over the other, and fell to picking the strings of the tassel on his dressing-gown.

"I dare say he will show a fair record, my dear. He would not attempt to win Sylve unless he could. And, after all, she is not like one of our own; she is not my daughter, she is not your sister, and she is, I think, quite able to think for herself."

Flix looked at the speaker under his straight brows. She bore the glance demurely, and suppressed the inclination that curled in the corners of her lips.

"Mother, I am astonished at you. This is not the way you are wont to talk. If I had said that now!"

"Perhaps I am coming round to your way of thinking. Sylve has been a great care and trouble, and when it comes pretty nearly to sacrificing your life, you can scarcely expect me to look upon her with my usual affection."

"What do you mean? Who told you she nearly sacrificed my life?" he asked, a dark glow pervading his face, while his eyes flashed and lowered.

"Why, Sylve. I questioned her till she told me."

"That must have been pleasant for her. How did she know there was danger? She misunderstood me, that was all."

"And, oh, Flix, you noble boy! I declare I want to kiss you every time I look at you. How heroically you saved her!"

"Oh, pshaw! that was nothing. I dare say she scarcely remembers it."

"Indeed she does! Indeed," began his mother, eagerly, then stopped short, adding more quietly—"indeed I would not look at the girl if I thought her that heartless. Even though, as I think, she has a quite foolish opinion of your feelings towards her. She insists upon it that you dislike her, and, though I know she is no favorite of yours—and one can scarcely wonder—yet you are not so prejudiced as to feel an unreasoning dislike towards any human creature, particularly a beautiful and helpless girl like Sylve."

It was curious to watch the young man during this little speech. He turned red, then pale, fidgeted with whatever he could lay his hands on, frowned, bit his lip, turned his face away, and burst out at the conclusion:

"Why will the girl persist in that folly. Hasn't she got eyesight? I believe all you women are as blind as bats."

"Why, Flix," cried Mrs. Forester, innocently, "isn't it so? Do you really like her?"

"Like her?—no! I wish you would pull the blinds down," he added—"that is, if you can do any gracious deed for an ill-natured cur like me."

"Oh, Flix!" exclaimed his mother, and bent over and kissed him as she passed. He brushed a tear from his forehead, and moved uneasily from side to side. After a while he exclaimed:

"Why don't Vintresse come—the doctor, or somebody?"

"Shall I read to you?" asked his mother.

"How does Sylve read?" he asked, with a subdued manner. "I think common gratitude—but there, I've made rude speeches enough for to-day."

"Sylve reads beautifully; but I fear she would object to have you for a listener."

"I dare say; she thinks me a bear. But would it hurt her to look in upon me? She has not even paid me the courtesy of inquiring after my health."

"Indeed she has every day—several times a day."

"Of Vintresse, I suppose."

"Perhaps; but of me, certainly. She will not come here, though, without invitation."

"Won't she? That's too good. Will you tell her from me I shall be only too happy to see the young lady?"

"I will tell her."

"If she is not engaged with Vintresse," was the parting shot, as his mother left the room and indulged in a broad, unrestrained smile as soon as the door was shut.

"They are two geese," she murmured to herself: "but I fancy it will all come out right."

Presently there was a tap on the door, and a low voice said "Come in" not ungently.

"Mrs. Forester said I might come," and Sylve, lovely as ever, though the rose tints of her cheeks had paled a little, came in. She held a bunch of lilies in her hand. One snow-white flower gleamed amid the rich tresses of her hair.

"Do you like lilies?" she asked, holding them forward.

"I don't want but one, thank you."

She proceeded to divide them.

"I don't want any of them—please not to disturb them. Pray sit down."

She looked at him perplexed; her cheeks were bright enough now.

"I have taken a fancy to that one in your hair—that is, if—if—Vintresse didn't give it to you."

"He gave me all of them," she said, her hand falling before it reached the flower.

"Then I don't want them—no, not one!"

"But these were for you."

"Thank you"—ungraciously. "If that is the case, you may put them in the stand-vase. I suppose the one in your hair was not intended for me?" grimly.

"Oh, no; that he gave to me," she replied, bending over the vase. He looked at her eagerly as she lifted her head, but she avoided his glance. In fact, she was really uncomfortable.

"You—you are looking nearly well," she said, timidly, seating herself again.

"Oh, yes; I shall be about in a few days;" then with an almost savage aspect that sat strangely upon him, perfect gentleman as he always appeared, he cried out, "I wish you would take that flower out of your hair; it annoys me."

With a motion, lightning-like in swiftness, she had the flower in her hand almost before the request was spoken. He smiled.

"Curious that I should be nervous, isn't it?" he said, with a low laugh. "I think it is because I never recollect having seen you with such an ornament in your hair before."

"I seldom wear flowers," she said.

"Then Vintresse has been here to-day?"

"Yes." Her cheeks flamed under his scrutiny.

"It seems he is making himself confoundedly familiar," muttered Flix. "He don't come to see me, that is certain."

"He excused himself this morning. His patient is well enough to take the air, and rides out for the first time to-day."

"Ha! his patient. I had forgotten his patient! His patient," he repeated, with singular earnestness, and, perhaps unconsciously, he gave her such a glance as caused her to shrink from him and wish herself away.

"The old feud," she thought, bitterly. "He can't be happy in my presence. We shall quarrel again, though I could go down on my knees and thank him for his brave deed. Ought I to do so, I wonder?"

"Does he ever speak of—of that man—the sick man, I mean?" asked Flix.

"Sometimes—seems to be very much attached to him; indeed, one would think he was his father."

"And so he is well enough to be out. Well, I shall be, soon."

"If it hadn't been for me," said Sylve, a strange little quaver in her voice, "you would never have needed to stay in."

"Oh, pray don't mention that. You know"—and he laughed lightly—"there is always a woman at the bottom of all mischief." Sylve looked pained. "We will try and be friends, although I gave you such a vicious push."

"How can I ever thank you? Words will not do it!"

"Words, words," he muttered; "words might mean much, and then again they might mean—nothing. But I beg your pardon," he cried, starting, "have I said anything to hurt your feelings? I trust not; my mind was preoccupied. I have a hard trial before me."

"Do you mean it will be long before you are well again?" she asked, timidly.

"No, no; I wish it was nothing more formidable than that, but the Washaba case is to come on next month, and then"—he drew his breath hard—"there will be some disagreeable work to do. Must you go?"

"I believe I must," said Sylve, gravely.

"I am most truly obliged. Ought we not to congratulate each other? Is it not the first time we have been together fifteen minutes without quarreling?"

CHAPTER XXXVI.—A WOMAN'S LETTER.

A FORTNIGHT passed, and Flix could go down-stairs. Sylve and he were on fair terms, and Vintresse called often, ostensibly upon Flix, but, as was very apparent, really to see Sylve, who felt a warm regard for him. Curiously enough, she had never yet spoken to him of Salome's cousin, in whose story she had taken so much interest, whether because she dreaded to have her suspicions verified, or feared to seem officious and curious, who can tell? Flix seemed quite contented in her society, and had given up saying smart things. He was always uneasy when Vintresse was present, and asked particularly and often after the convalescent. Vintresse seemed always furnished with an excuse when the subject was brought up. His friend had been suffering, or when on the point of coming the weather had changed. The real reason was that he—the invalid—wished before he came, to be assured of the success of his protégé, and still Vintresse had not the courage to propose. It was very pleasant to sing with Sylve, to talk with Flix, to dine at a table where the cuisine was matchless, to watch the nimble fingers of the girl he was trying to win, as they busied themselves with flosses or the needle; but there was something in the young lady's manner that did not reassure him whenever he attempted to introduce the subject nearest his heart. She laughed and chatted and sang, received his flowers, liked his company, but there was that undefinable something about her, an atmosphere that repelled, when his feelings were most ardent.

One morning after Flix had tried all the easy-chairs, and at last stretched himself upon the lounge, the letters came in. Sylve was seated with drawing materials in the bay window, and formed a pretty picture herself, which Flix sometimes looked at in the intervals of reading.

"I wonder if that tiresome Vintresse is coming this morning?" he said, at last.

"I believe he had an engagement to-day with Mr. De Neal," said Sylve, not taking her eyes off the paper.

"The Lord be praised," responded Flix, gravely, "and is my mother gone out? I think she said something about Gray."

"Yes; she is gone also—to get Gray to attend to the garden."

"Have you any curiosity to see this De Neal?" pursued Flix.

"Yes; I think I have some; he—Mr. Vintresse—has told me a great deal about him, his tastes and pursuits, even his whims and fancies and superstitions."

"Ah, he is superstitious, then."

"Rather, I should judge, for a man of his ability. He lived in great splendor in California, and does not like women."

Flix pursed up his mouth and raised his eyebrows at this. Sylve could not see him well from where she sat. Presently he sighed.

"Does your head ache?" asked Sylve.

"Tremendously."

"Can I do anything for you?" She suspended her work.

"Well," he made an uneasy movement "I've been thinking I should like to get at my letters—but it's such a bore."

"Where are they?"

"Here, by my hand. The trouble is to read them. Would you act as clerk?"

"If you will let me—yes!"

"Then roll one of the big hassocks here, and I'll trust you with some of my secrets. There's one in a woman's hand," he added laughing, "all the rest are on business. There are so many claimants for that Washaba tract that between them all they will drive me crazy, I think."

"You ought to be well paid for such wearing business," said Sylve, as she seated herself with a very grave face.

"I mean to be, hoping to have it all in my own hands. Now, letter number one—yes; that's all right," he said, making a memoranda as he laid there, head and shoulders bolstered up. Another and another, Sylve mastered the contents, though the writing of more than one might have puzzled an expert.

"I understand," so ran the last letter but one, "that a new claimant has appeared, and will prove that the property was sold to him in 18—, that he has good papers and intends to walk in and take what he considers his original right. He is a gentleman who for many years has been residing in California, and, if I have been rightly informed, his name is De Neal. I fear we shall have some trouble with him, for he is a man of inflexible will and will fight till his money is gone and our patience exhausted."

Sylve looked up. Flix was gazing intently upon her.

"Did you dream of this?" she asked.

"I have suspected all along," was his answer.

"Who can he be? and what a strange complication! Claimant after claimant appears—do you really think you will ever untangle the difficulties that keep rising so unexpectedly?"

"This is the last one, I hope. The others we have got under our thumb."

"Do you suppose Mr. Vintresse knows of this matter?"

"Of course he does."

"Then why has he never spoken of it?"

"It was not his business."

Sylve was silent for some time, her eyes cast upon the floor. Many thoughts passed through her mind concerning Vintresse, whom she had hitherto looked upon only as a pleasant, interesting gentleman, but now she was forced to see things in a new light. It pained her to think that he must have known quite well about her interests, and that his attentions might not be altogether disinterested. Hitherto she had talked but little of her relations to this great property—scarcely given it a thought, indeed—never having known the want of money; but it might be different with this handsome and gentlemanly stranger, who, she could not but begin to perceive, meant something more than friendliness in his visits. She was just saying to herself that she was glad her eyes were opened, when Flix, who had been regarding her attentively, spoke again.

"Have you no curiosity to see the letter superscribed in a lady's hand."

She smiled.

"It is beautiful writing!" she said; "and it seems to me I must have seen it before. Do you know who it's from?"

"No more than the man in the moon. I could more than count my lady correspondents on my fingers. Read it, please."

She slowly undid the letter, and at sight of the date suddenly changed color.

"Why," she exclaimed, "did you know—this is very curious."

"Well, what am I to understand by that?" he asked, amused at her look of consternation.

"I have seen the writing before."

"It is a begging letter, I suppose."

"It is dated H——, Virginia."

"Ah!" Flix raised himself upon his elbow with a look of interest, and his brow and eye assumed a careworn expression. Sylve read with a strange, eager interest:

"MR. FELIX FORESTER: Dear Sir—Many years ago you were brought, ill and wounded, to my father's house. Do you remember the little girl whose merriment served, perhaps, to while away your hours of pain, and whom you treated with a gentle consideration and affection that she, at least, has never forgotten. We were then in comparative prosperity, and the future to me, an imaginative child, looked all golden as the hills of Paradise. Do you further remember making me promise that if ever I was in any great trouble—you foreseeing that a motherless child has not always the power to command friends—I would apply to you? Dear sir, the trouble has come. My father, Colonel Lewin, whom you must remember, was killed in the war, and left me only the wreck of the house which was once most beautiful as a home. It was nearly ruined by soldiers who took possession during the rebellion, and is now in a state of decay. Only two old negroes, once our slaves, remained faithful to me in my sad fortune. One of them, Father Crow, died over a year ago; the other, by reason of illness, has been obliged to give up work, and is eating her heart out because she can no longer labor for me. I have tried to battle against poverty. I have worked with my own hands planting and hoeing and striving to procure the necessaries of life; but I am, at present, far from well, and Desire, my old nurse, requires more care than I can give her. The neighbors are very kind, but I cannot go to them. One day, while thinking over all my troubles, your name occurred to me, and I remembered you made me promise to come to you if I was ever in a strait. Alas! I am in a sore strait, as the writing of this poor letter testifies. I must put my dear old Dee in some hospital, where she can be cared for till she dies. I must find a place of shelter till my health is better and then such work as I have the strength to do—I don't care what it is; my pride is all gone now. What to do with this place I cannot tell; I fear it must some time be sold for taxes, and I have seen so much trouble here that I do not care. I am past caring what becomes of the homestead, once my father's pride. Will you not advise me? I can get a little money, enough to keep me a few months in some respectable boarding-house, and I promise I will be no clog or burden on you. Please let me hear from you, and believe that no one could feel more sorry than to be obliged to appeal, almost for charity, than the proud Colonel Lewin's daughter. Trusting in your kindness, I am, ever respectfully yours,

Digitized by Google

"EVELINE LEWIN."

"She shall not trust in vain," exclaimed Flix, a bright glow overspreading his face. "Can I forget them—their six weeks' care of me, their generosity and devotion, their splendid hospitality? Why, it is but a poor return to give that child a home and attend to her interests. I remember her—a perfect little beauty, with hair like gold and dewy eyes, blue as the June heavens. Yes; indeed, she shall come here. You'll like her, Sylve; I can promise her a welcome from you."

Strange to say, a keen jealousy shot through the girl's heart as she sat there, and brought the fair vision before her. Once, in mere wantonness, she had tried to injure her, and now the wretchedness she had brought upon the proud, sensitive girl, might all be coming back to fall upon her own head. Doctor Wilde would never renew his attentions—of that she felt sure—and Eve was just the sweet, gentle, saint-like creature in face and seeming, just the gentle, clinging character that she fancied was Flix Forester's ideal. But she forced herself to say:

"You will like her. Perhaps I never spoke of my intimacy with her."

"Your intimacy with Eve Lewin! What do you mean? Ah, when you were in Virginia, you mean, playing schoolmarm!"

"Yes," Sylve, answered demurely, blushing a little. "She is a very sweet and beautiful girl," she added, trying to speak without prejudice."

"She must be. I remember I never was so taken with a child in my life; especially when I saw the contrast," he paused, a deep color flushing his cheeks. Fortunately Mrs. Forester came in at that moment, for Sylve had divined what comparison had suddenly suggested itself in his preoccupied state of mind. She hurriedly escaped to her room provoked, but only with herself, while Flix hoped she had not noticed the slip of his tongue. In a few words he laid the case of Eve Lewin before his mother.

"Of course, my dear, it is my duty to receive this poor child," she said, "as I have always wished to show my sense of the obligation we all felt under to that excellent gentleman—but, indeed, I hope she is not going to be very ill—and, as to the poor colored woman, it does seem hard that, after all her years of service, she should be turned off into a hospital without the care of her mistress."

"Can't we devise some plan?" asked Flix, anxiously, "some way to keep her here, at least for a time?"

"I will see," said his mother. "There is plenty of room and to spare," and so it resulted that one dark, rainy day in early Autumn, Eve Lewin was welcomed by Mrs. Forester almost as warmly as if she had been a daughter of her own. Desire, very weak from her journey, but more solicitious for her mistress than herself, was settled in a comfortable little room at the back of the house where she could be easily cared for, and Mrs. Forester felt herself growing strangely interested in the sweet fair face on which so deep a shadow rested. The first night she saw no one but Mrs. Forester, preferring the retirement of her own room. Almost the first question she asked was if some good quiet boarding-house had been obtained for her.

"Yes, my dear," said Mrs. Forester, smiling, "this is to be your boarding-place."

"But I must pay you, you know. I cannot be dependent."

"We will see about pay," was the answer. "Do you think we forget that your father raised my son almost from the dead?"

(To be continued.)

SCENES AT LAS CAÑAS, CUBA.

A GREAT sugar plantation shows such a diversity in the operations by which the article is at last prepared for our market, that a visitor finds new interest at every step. We have already seen the cane passing through the mill which modern machinists have perfected. As this juice comes out tasteless, it bears with it some impurities, and these are removed by strainers, a woman standing by to remove the matter which might otherwise clog them up.

The juice is then pumped to defecators in the upper part of the building, where, by the application of lime, most of the impurities are removed, and, if refined is to be made, as is the case in the Ingenio Las Cañas, a second cleansing takes place by having the syrup pass through animal coal in filters, whence it is transferred to the vacuum pan, boiled to the point of sugar, and, as seen in the illustration, run off into boxes which are carried by the negroes to the centrifugals where, undergoing the usual purging, the process of manufacture is ended.

The other illustration represents an ox-cart such as is used for carrying the bacasse or refuse cane. It stands under the conductor, catching the bacasse as it drops. This is a one-ox cart, the shafts resting on a yoke fastened to the forehead of the animal, where it is believed to have the greatest strength. These carts, when loaded, are driven by the little negro boys to the open squares, where they are dumped, and the bacasse spread upon the ground to dry for fuel. This is consumed daily, as fast as dried, to make steam. Since the very general introduction of cooking altogether by steam, this fuel has almost entirely supplanted the use of coal. All estates have sheds for storing the surplus bacasse of the day, till needed. Besides the peculiar system of yoking, all the oxen have rings put in the nose by which they are led about with a rope, as seen in the illustration, especially at difficult points, where the surface of the plantation is irregular and the roads steep.

The extent of our trade with Cuba in sugar is very great. From the United States official statistics it is shown that during the six years commencing with 1868, this country has bought Cuban products as follows:

1868 to 1869	$56,976,481
1869 " 1870	53,777,098
1870 " 1871	57,536,935
1871 " 1872	67,364,315
1872 " 1873	77,077,735
1873 " 1874	85,439,097
	$398,059,661

In fact, we take eighty-five per cent. of Cuban products, and Spain only two per cent.

During the same period Spain has bought from the United States as follows:

1868 to 1869	$11,816,030
1869 " 1870	12,879,267
1870 " 1871	13,766,000
1871 " 1872	12,960,841
1872 " 1873	15,117,767
1873 " 1874	15,677,736
Total	$82,219,633

Balance against the United States, $315,839,040.

Here we have these official figures, telling us that the capital and wealth of this country during these six years have been a loser to the amount of $300,000,000. And this in face of the fact that Cuba, in consequence of the retaliatory differential duties levied by Spain on our products, is compelled to purchase in Europe. Great Britain and Catalonia, France and Germany supply the drygoods, much of which could be sent cheaper and better from New England. America and Turkey send breadstuffs to Great Britain; but Spain, excluding herself by her policy, finds no market for her surplus grain but Cuba, which is forced to take it, when, left to her own choice, interest would prompt her to buy it in our markets.

The plantation of Las Cañas, visited by General Grant on the 13th of February, and where our sketches were taken, is reached by rail from Havana, La Union, the nearest station, being seventy-eight miles southwest of the capital of Cuba. The plantation is only a few miles distant from the sea, and is one of the richest on the island. The land is completely covered with cane, the soil being of a deep red color, and is said to be formed of volcanic mud. Two thousand acres are under cultivation, and the annual product is 3,300 tons of sugar and 1,700 puncheons of molasses. The force of negroes is comparatively small, numbering all told only 300, and about one-sixth of these are really free. But there are, besides, 344 coolies.

FEBRUARY 22D, 1780.

THE birthday of Washington recalls an interesting scene which occurred in his headquarters at Morristown, N. J., one hundred years ago. The great commander had settled himself for a while, after his tedious campaign across the State, in the Ford mansion, and had used the apartment on the ground floor and to the left of the entrance as a dining-room. There, on the morning of February 22d, 1780, he was waited upon by the officers attached to his staff and those other ones whom he had summoned for consultation on the future movements of the army. Troubled as was the General, he received the hearty congratulations of his officers in his usual warm but unostentatious manner. He invited them to partake of the simple refreshments he permitted his table to be supplied with. It was a personal meeting, a strictly friendly gathering. There was the leader, happy in the company of those upon whom he depended for advice and the execution of important manœuvres; there was an audience of well-tried soldiers, who for the moment threw off all military reserve, and conversed with the chief as man with man. Shortly after the reserve of friendship had to give way to the sternness of military rule. It cannot be doubted but that just such occasions were the means of increasing the confidence of each one in the other, nor that they occupied many an hour that would otherwise have been controlled by an enervating despondency.

In the day of patriotic speeches, of formal readings of the Farewell Address, of joyous song for the establishment and maintenance of a republican government, do not let us forget the deeds of those whom in fancy we see gathered about the Father of his Country on the birthday one hundred years ago. The peculiarities of the room and the several articles of furniture seen in our illustration will appear familiar to all our readers who have ever visited the headquarters in Morristown, where a myriad of articles of the revolutionary period are guarded with patriotic vigilance.

An Expensive Household.

HIS MAJESTY the Emperor of China is just now in a serious difficulty. Young though he is, he has already to maintain some seventy women of his establishment in various capacities, and, like every other gentleman who has ladies under his protection, the duty devolves upon him of clothing them. This would be a comparatively easy task were the seventy fair ones of a reasonable turn of mind. But, unhappily for the peace of the Brother of the Sun and Moon, their extravagance is pronounced to be beyond all bounds. Two hundred and fifty thousand taels, which is more than one-half of the land tax of the empire, were expended last year in silk, satin, gauze, velvet, red and gilt paper and pearls. It is said that one dress, which is in possession of an empress, was covered last year with seed pearls worked in so peculiar a fashion as to have cost a fabulous sum. With respect to this robe there are great searchings of heart. The empress is aged, though the dress is new. If she die, according to custom, it must be burned, supposing it to be in her possession at the time of her demise. She refuses to part with it, and the idea of this wastefulness, coupled with the prospect of increased extravagance in the coming year, troubles the owner of the vermilion pencil exceedingly. Contemplating the position of this illustrious personage, and remembering that, as yet, he is too young to be practically married, it is curious to speculate as to what his position will be when he arrives at man's estate, and finds himself the lord of seventy additional wives.

International Signaling at Sea.

A NEW system of international ocean and river signaling and rules of road at sea is to be adopted this year. These rules have been promulgated by an Order in Council given by the Queen after correspondence with every maritime nation in both hemispheres, the object sought being to avoid the disastrous collisions which have recently occurred at sea and in the Thames. The Governments acquiescing in the new regulations are France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Netherlands, Austro-Hungary, Greece, Chile and the United States. Besides the usual colored lights, a steamer discerning another steamer or sailing vessel in sight has to sound with the steam-whistle or foghorn a short blast, which will mean "I am directing my course to starboard"; two short blasts will signify "I am directing my course to port"; and three short blasts "I am going full speed astern." In fog, mist, or falling snow, the signals are to be repeated every two minutes, a prolonged blast indicating that the vessel is under way; an ordinary blast, that the vessel from which it proceeds is on the starboard tack; two blasts in succession, "I am on the port tack"; and three blasts in succession, the wind abaft the beam. A vessel in fog, and under way, has to ring the bell every two minutes. Concurrent with the foregoing are ocean signals. The Thames Conservancy are issuing rules of road, which are to take effect on British and foreign ships entering the river Thames. Where steamers are proceeding one up and one down the river, involving a risk of collision, they are to pass port side to port side. If there be no risk of collision they will both keep their course and pass either starboard side to starboard side or port side to port side. In rounding a point, like that where the Princess Alice collision occurred, the steamer going against the tide is to wait under the point until the vessel going with the tide has passed clear. Where a steamer and a sailing vessel are proceeding in a direction likely to involve a collision the steamer has to slacken speed to keep out of the way of the sailing-vessel and let the latter pursue her course. If the steamer cannot possibly or safely get out of the way she is to blow four blasts and slacken speed, and the sailing vessel is to keep out of the steamer's way. A further improvement has been effected by the Board of Trade authorizing some new "urgent signals" on the Thames. A British or foreign vessel signaling "Want Board of Trade officer" may hoist the ensign (of whatever nationality) at the main. "Want police" is signaled by the flag commonly known as "Blue Peter" (being letter "P" of the International code) being hoisted at the main. The calls to be kept up till answered.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The late Leonard Case, of Cleveland, O., left property valued at $1,500,000 for a school of applied science in that city.

An Iron-foundry Man recommends as "a never-failing, speedy remedy" for burns and scalds powdered pine-wood charcoal.

According to Statistics lately published by the Health Department of New York City, it appears that Burlington, Iowa, is the healthiest city in the United States; Stockton, Cal., stands next.

An Illustration of the prolific capabilities of our inventors is the fact that over 240 patents appertaining to the art of soldering have been granted.

The Atlantic Forest, according to Professor Gray, is composed of sixty-six genera and 155 species; the Pacific forest has only thirty-one genera and seventy-eight species of timber trees.

The Brazilian Government has presented to the Legislature a general system of telegraphs to spread all over the Republic, like a network, and to be placed in immediate communication with the public offices.

The Great Building for the exhibition at Dusseldorf, which is to be opened this year, is nearly finished. Every branch of German art and industry, manufactures and commerce, will be represented in the exhibits.

Mr. Tremlett, the British Consul at Saigon, in his report this year, mentions, as a remarkable peculiarity of the natives of the country, that they have the great toe of each foot separated from the others like the thumb of the hand, and it can be used in much the same manner, though not to the same extent.

From Some Recent Experiments it is considered desirable to make telegraph wire of an alloy of aluminum and iron. While the wire can be made much smaller than the present gauge, it will be stronger, of less susceptibility to atmospheric changes, and of much greater conductivity than the ordinary wire.

Two Germans have patented a process for converting ordinary agate into onyx. Lorenz and Callman place the cut and polished agates for a week in a solution of iron in nitric acid only one millimeter deep, and then treat those portions of the stone which are to be white with a solution of equal parts of carbonate and hydrate of potash, dried and burned in an earthen pot until the desired color is obtained.

The Prize offered last Summer for the two best slides illustrating the adulteration of some common articles of food, one slide to illustrate the genuine article, and the other to show the adulterated form actually sold and used, will be awarded at the meeting of the American Microscopical Society next Summer. The donor, Mr. E. H. Griffin, will substitute for the medal promised an objective suitably engraved, if preferred by the winner.

One of the Silk-manufacturing firms of Lyons is introducing the production of photographic impressions on stuffs. They sent to a recent meeting of the Photographic Society several pieces of silk with a variety of photographic pictures printed thereon, including, among others, a number of large medallions representing pictures of the old masters. The length of the specimens thus exhibited is stated as being no less than 134 feet. The process by which they are produced is not given, but it is believed that the prints are made with salts of silver.

In Reporting the Reception of Professor Nordenskjöld and the staff of the Vega at Nagasaki, the correspondent of the North China Herald notes that there was not a single case of scurvy during the whole voyage. This, he learns, was owing to the free use of a curious little berry that springs out of the eternal ice and snow during the short Summer. It bears profusely, and has a taste like the raspberry, but more acid. The fruit is dried, and then mixed with the milk of the reindeer, and it can be carried in a frozen state for thousands of miles. There was also used a curious kind of food, made from the whale's hide, which is pickled and eaten freely during the Winter.

Dr. J. H. Fothergill gives this semi-comic description of the advance of gout from generation to generation: "The consequence of the influx of wealth is that gout is becoming very common in the third generation of the successful merchant. The grandfather lived well and died old, without having had a touch of gout, unless it was in the muscular pains he called 'rheumatics.' The father lived well, probably knew nothing of doctors, swore at his rheumatism occasionally, had Winter bronchitis, and died of acute disease. The present representative of the family has attacks of articulate gout, a great toe that occupies a good deal of his attention, and thickened knuckles—indeed, a full-blown gout."

An Insect which produces a species of india-rubber has been recently discovered in the district of Yucatan, Central America, by an American explorer. It is called "ceen," and belongs to the Coccus family; feeds on the mango-tree, and swarms in those regions. It is of considerable size, yellowish-brown in color, and emits a peculiarly oily odor. The body of the insect contains a large proportion of grease which is highly prized by the natives for applying to the skin, on account of its medicinal properties. When exposed to a great heat the lighter oils of the grease volatilize, leaving a tough wax, which resembles shellac, and may be used for making varnish or lacquer. When burned this wax, it is said, produces a thick semi-fluid mass, like a solution of india-rubber.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

PRINCETON COLLEGE has honored General L. P. di Cesnola, of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, with the degree of LL.D.

MR. WATSON, the astronomer at Ann Arbor, Mich., is likely to be put in charge of the new Lick Observatory in California.

THE municipality of Naples gave a splendid banquet to Professor Nordenskjöld and members of the Swedish Arctic Expedition on February 14th.

IT is said that Mr. Benjamin Moran, American Minister to Portugal, is helpless in consequence of a paralytic seizure some time ago, and it is feared he must abandon his post.

MAYOR RIVARD has been re-elected Mayor of Montreal for another year. An attempt was made by the admirers of Mr. Parnell to bring out an opposition candidate, but it failed.

THE log cabin in which James Buchanan was born now stands on the main street of Mercersburg, Pa., four miles from the President's birthplace, the structure having been moved away years ago.

THE late Martha Somerville, daughter of the famous Mary Somerville, has bequeathed $12,500 to the British Life-boat Institution, for the purpose of forming and maintaining on the coast a life-boat station in memory of her mother.

COUNT ZICHY-FERRARIS, whose crooked management of Hungarian finances was recently the cause of duels and riots at Pesth, has finally been obliged to yield to the pressure of public opinion and resign his seat in the Hungarian Parliament.

THE ex-Khedive has arranged a grand tour which will embrace Rome, Paris and London. But before setting out he has sent an envoy to the Vatican to ask an audience with the Pope. If granted, this will be one of the most noteworthy meetings in history.

ALL the Gladstone family, with the exception of the ex-prime minister, are staunch Tories. Sir Thomas, the elder brother, carries his political differences into his personal relationship with Mr. Gladstone, and does not find time to call upon him when he visits London.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to erect a Roman Catholic Cathedral on the Thames embankment at a cost of a quarter of a million of pounds. Cardinal Manning is chairman of the committee, the Duke of Norfolk vice chairman, and the Marquises of Bute and Ripon secretaries.

THE new Royal Irish Club which is in course of being formed in St. James's Place, London, already includes among its members Lords Dufferin, Charlemont, Londonderry, Ormonde, Drogheda and Milltown. The motto of the club is "Erin go Bragh," and the color it favors is green.

AN archæologist has discovered in a mortuary chamber attached to the Capuchin Church at Modena the tombs of eight princes of the House of Este—among them, Francis I., who died in 1658; Almeric, his son, 1660; Alfonso IV., 1662; Cardinal Rinaldo, of Este; Benedict Philip Armand, 1750, and a son of Hercules Rinaldo, 1764.

QUEEN VICTORIA, in opening Parliament in late years, takes on the appearance of robes of state but not the robes themselves. She wears her ordinary widow's dress, and the royal robes are outspread upon the throne. After she seats herself, it is the office of the Princess Beatrice to pull the corners of the robes over the skirts of her mother's gown.

THE tall, fair and fragile-looking Princess Blanche d'Orleans, is going to marry the Prince de Ligne, who, although not of royal birth, is allied to several reigning families. Princess Blanche is the second daughter of the Duc de Nemours, and is the frequent companion of her father in Paris society. She is the only remaining unmarried granddaughter of Louis Philippe.

ANOTHER instance of the well-directed benevolence of Baroness Burdett-Coutts is mentioned. She has given £250 towards the liquidation of a debt which has weighed down the poverty-stricken fishermen of the Cape Clear Islands, in addition to £600 already contributed by her this year for the same object. The result of this generosity is that eighty local boats will shortly be enabled to engage in the mackerel-fishery.

MISS CHARLOTTE ANGUS SCOTT, the young lady who has just gained so high a position in the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge, Eng., is only twenty-two years old, and the daughter of Principal Scott of Lancashire College. From her earliest childhood she has given evidence of unusual mathematical ability. Her education was carried on almost entirely in her own home until three years ago, when she entered Girton College at Cambridge.

FREEMASONRY would appear to flourish even at the cannon's mouth. Shortly after the occupation of Cabul, a warrant was granted for the opening of the lodge Seaforth, Captain Stewart Mackenzie, of the Ninth Lancers, being installed as first master. The title of the lodge is given because the Earl of Seaforth is head of the clan Mackenzie, to which the captain belongs. Colonel Noel Money, of the Third Sikhs, who was present at the opening, is one of the most conspicuous Masons in India, having taken his thirty-third degree.

CONSTANTINO BRUMIDI, the Italian fresco-painter, who for a long time has been at work upon the interior decorations of the Capitol at Washington, died February 19th, of asthma. He was almost eighty years old, and for several months had been suffering from the effects of a fall from the scaffolding in the rotunda. It was marvelous that he was not killed, for the scaffold from which he fell was sixty feet above the floor, but catching by a railing he held himself up until his rescue. The shock, however, to his nerves was very serious, and he was never able to resume his work.

ADMIRAL S. P. LEE, having refused to sell a plot of land to W. W. Corcoran, the generous patron of the Corcoran Art Gallery in Washington, the latter writes in reply: "Your refusal causes the defeat of my cherished purpose to enlarge the gallery and extend its benefits by the addition of a School of Design, and renders the three vacant lots already purchased for the purpose of no practical use to the institution." The same refusal has made Mrs. Ogle Taylor, of Washington, postpone the gift to the gallery of a fine collection of paintings and other works of art which she owns, and for which there is now no room.

IT is believed that Sir Garnet Wolseley gets the next vacant colonelcy as an exceptional recognition of his services. The dignity will be purely a sinecure, but it will be no empty honor, for the post is worth per annum from £2,200 in the Guards, to £1,000 a year or so in a line regiment. A correspondent considers that when a general has a couple of regiments to tack up his pay or pension he is a fairly comfortable pluralist. There is His Grace of Cambridge with his five colonelcies—the Grenadier Guards, the Seventeenth Lancers, the Royal Artillery, the Sixteenth Rifles, the Royal Engineers—all uniting him the tidy increment of £6,200 over and above his field marshal's income of £3,600, which is independent of his salary of £4,440 as commander-in-chief of the forces.

Digitized by Google

REMOVING THE BAGASSE FROM THE CRUSHING-MACHINE.

BURNING OFF THE SUGAR FROM THE BOILING-PANS.

CUBA.—THE GREAT SUGAR INDUSTRY.—SCENES ON THE FAMOUS LAS CAÑAS PLANTATION.—FROM SKETCHES BY WALTER YEAGER.—SEE PAGE 11.

Digitized by Google

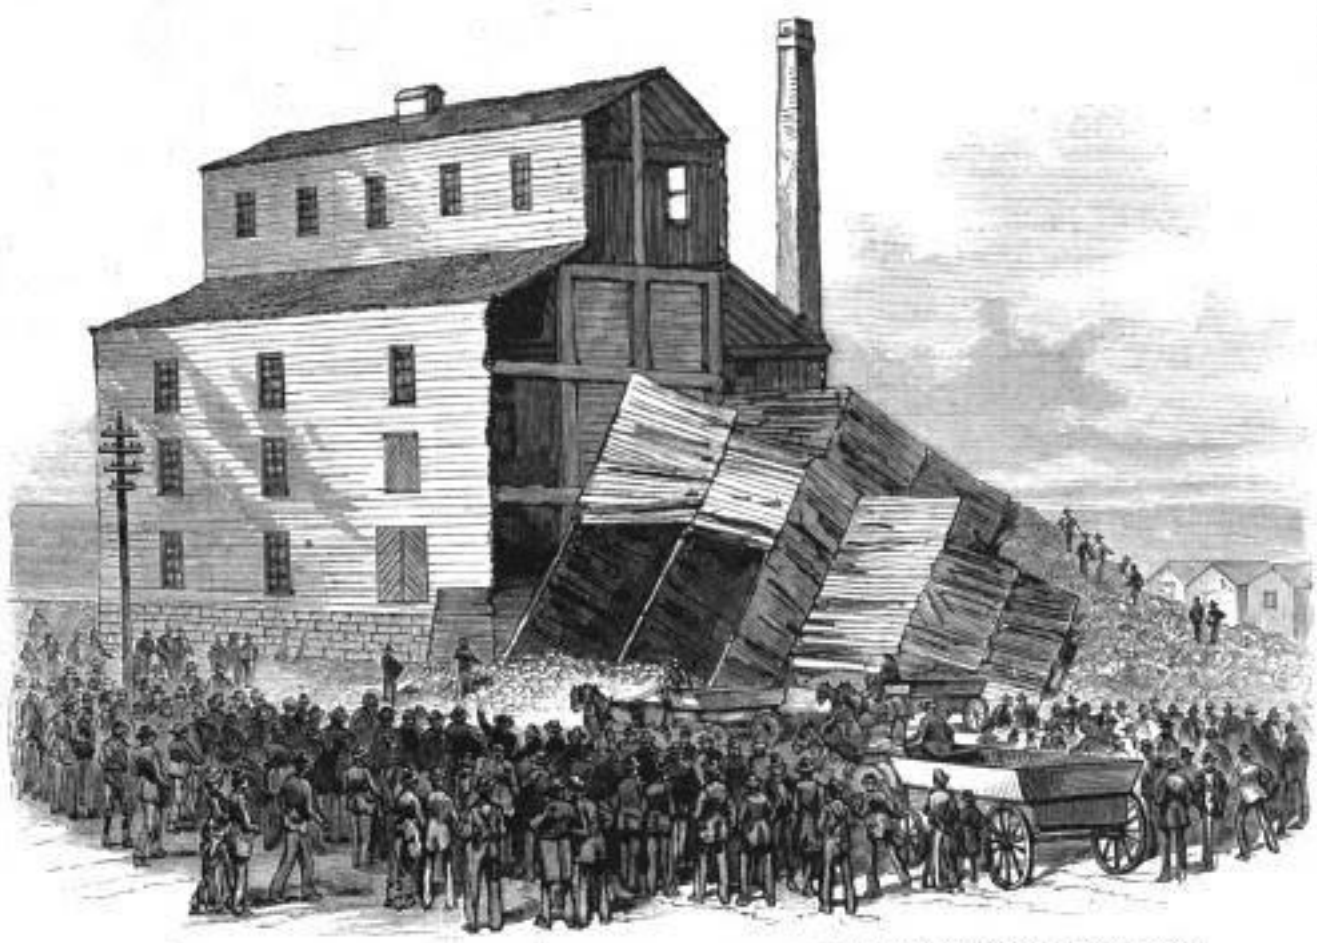
EDWARD E. RICE, AUTHOR OF THE EXTRAVAGANZA "HIAWATHA."

MR. EDWARD E. RICE.

A YOUNG man and yet an old manager is Mr. Edward E. Rice, the talented discoverer of "Horrors," "Surprises," and other comical combinations, and the composer of the side-splitting burlesques "Evangeline," "Hiawatha" and "Conrad the Corsair." Born at Brighton, Mass., in 1848, at a very early period he displayed a startling talent for music, and the boy proved to be father to the man. His first work was "Evangeline," and its phenomenal success induced Mr. Rice to undertake the grave responsibilities and depressing cares of management. He secured a company to perform his own piece, and so well did this project turn out, that he leaped into name, fame and fortune. During the five years of Mr. Rice's management he has been instrumental in developing the talent of a number of actors and actresses, and so highly is an engagement with this gifted entrepreneur esteemed, that to have belonged to the Rice Combination Company has become equivalent to a dramatic diploma. He engages only those in whom he has faith as artists, and his intuitive perception of "true metal" seldom fails him. "Hiawatha," now running at the Standard, is Mr. Rice's latest production, and it gives golden promise.

HON. RANDAL LEE GIBSON,

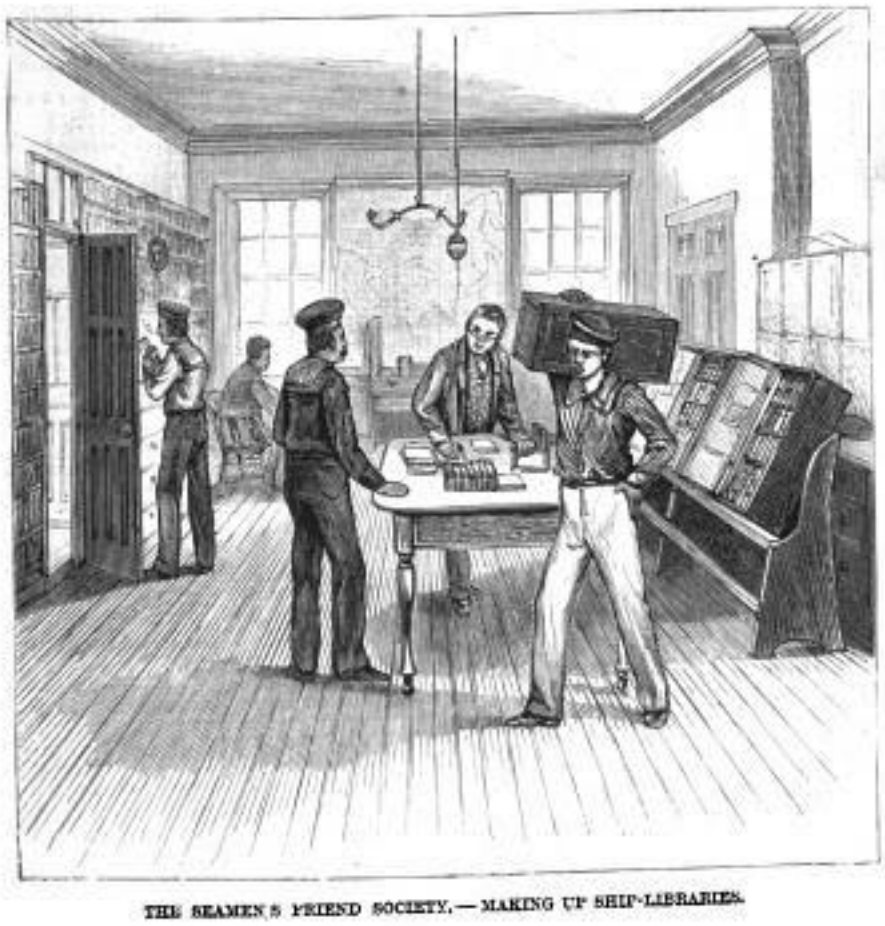
U. S. SENATOR-ELECT FROM LOUISIANA.



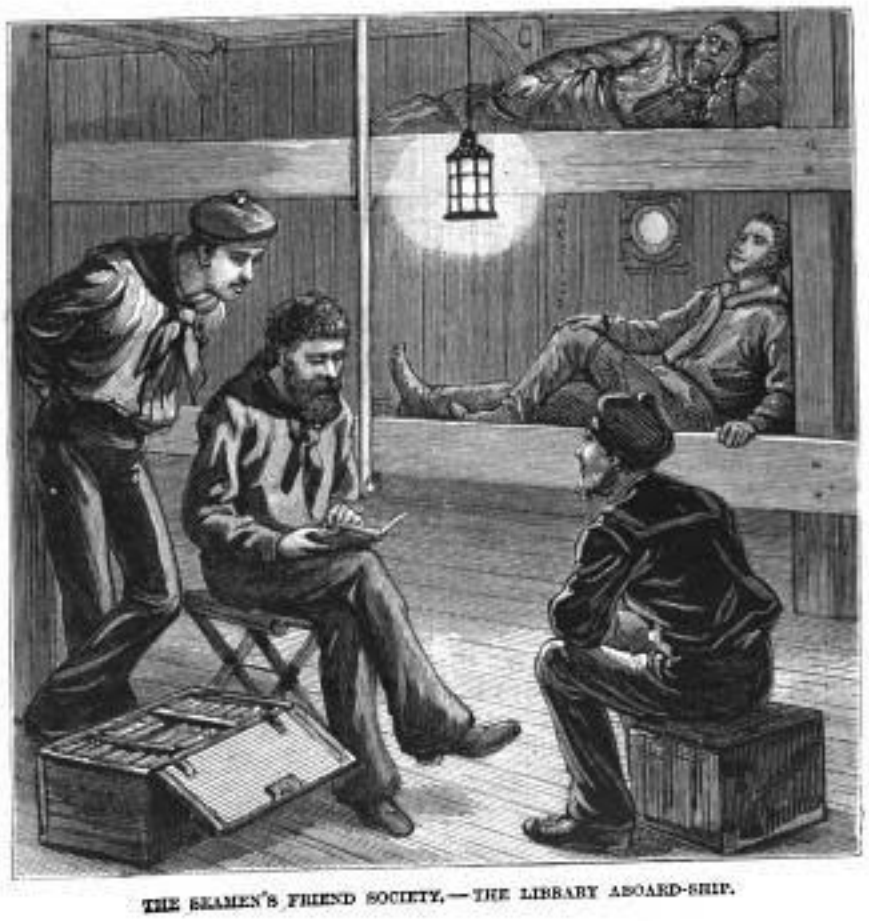
GENERAL RANDAL LEE GIBSON, the newly-elected United States Senator from Louisiana, is at present a Member of Congress, representing the first district of that State. He is the oldest son of Tobias Gibson, and was born at Spring Hill, near Versailles, Ky., September 10th, 1832. There and at Lexington he passed much of his boyhood. He graduated at Yale College in 1853, sharing prizes with E. C. Stedman, the poet, and Hon. A. D. White, the United States Minister to Germany. In New Orleans he studied law, and was graduated at the University of Louisiana in 1855. He then spent three years in study and travel in Europe, and upon his return, he engaged in sugar-planting until the war broke out. Joining the Southern army as a private soldier, he rose through the different grades to the command of a division, and was frequently commended by his superior officers. At the close of the struggle, finding his fortune gone and his father's magnificent estate a wreck, he settled in New Orleans and began the practice of law. He became the counsel for several large corporations, and justified the wisdom of their choice by the sound judgment with which he conducted their business. In 1872 he was elected a Member of Congress, but was denied admission. Two years later, however, he was again elected, and was admitted. He has served continually since. General Gibson has been prominent in matters of general legislation, especially those looking to the amelioration of commerce, as is befitting the representation of a great city. He introduced Bills constituting a standing committee on the levees and improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, proposed reciprocal treaties with Mexico, Central and South America, and earnestly advocated measures for the extensions of our foreign commerce. He was the author of the Bill forming the "Monetary Commission," by which so much was done towards calling attention to the silver question in our national finances. General Gibson has been among the most pronounced of the hard-money men of the South, utterly opposed to all forms of inflation or irredeemable issue. During the present Congress he has served on the Committee of Ways and Means, and has worked sedulously for revenue reform and the reduction of the present oppressive duties levied for protection.

HON. RANDAL LEE GIBSON, U. S. SENATOR-ELECT FROM LOUISIANA.
FROM A PHOTO. BY FASSETT, WASHINGTON, D. C.

AN UNEXPECTED FALL IN WHEAT.



THE "Imperial" grain-elevator, located on the south side of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad track, between Dearborn and State Streets, Chicago, which burst open on the morning of February 12th, under the great pressure of grain, was only completed about six weeks previously, and cost between $90,000 and $100,000. At an early hour in the morning the watchman employed to look after the elevator during the night was sitting in the boiler-room. Suddenly he heard a tremendous crash, and at the same moment the floor beneath him began to sink. He rushed through the door of the boiler-room, and found that both the north and south ends of the immense storehouse had fallen in. Mountains of grain, roofing timber and other débris arose on both sides, completely blockading the railroad track and extending for 100 feet either way. The wrecked building had been divided into three parts, and used as an elevator, oatmeal-mill and engine-house. The elevator was 90 by 100 feet in dimensions, and located in the northern part of the building. The mill was 50 by 75 feet, and occupied the greater part of the southern part of the building. The elevator and mill were, including the basement, six stories in height. The estimated capacity of the elevator, when it was built, was about 150,000 bushels of wheat, which was to be contained in twenty-eight large bins, built in the usual manner. At the time of the accident there was about 123,000 bushels of No. 2 Spring wheat stored in the bins. Although the cause of the accident has not been definitely settled, it is generally attributed to weak foundations. However, since the grain blockade began, all the elevators in Chicago have been filled to their utmost capacity, and it is probable that the quantity of grain stored in this elevator was greater than it could support, even though the foundations were all right.



ILLINOIS.—BURSTING OF THE "IMPERIAL" GRAIN-ELEVATOR FROM OVER-PRESSURE, CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 12TH.
FROM A SKETCH BY ED. A. SPERRY.

SHIP-LIBRARY WORK.

IT was an excellent idea of the Seamen's Friend Society, which has completed fifty years of good work among the seamen of this port, to make up small but well-chosen ships' libraries, and lend them to vessels sailing from New York. The object of these libraries is to give the

THE SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—MAKING UP SHIP-LIBRARIES.

THE SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—THE LIBRARY ABOARD-SHIP.

Digitized by Google

sailors healthy reading while at sea, and especiall to replace the want of that religious influence afforded by church and lecture-room on land.

These libraries are generally absent from the Society's room a year and a half, but not unfrequently the period is much longer. Four years, and even six, are not uncommon, and in two cases a term of thirteen years elapsed before the library was restored. The sailors feel a pride in them, and there are cases where, even amid the hurry, confusion and peril of shipwreck, the tars contrived to save what had been a source of so much consolation and good to them.

The interest in these libraries is not confined to America. In 1874 the Countess of Aberdeen sent £300 in gold to furnish and keep in repair one hundred loan libraries in memory of her son George, Earl of Aberdeen, who was for more than three years a sailor on American vessels, and who was lost at sea six days after sailing from Boston.

Up to the commencement of the present year the Society had sent out 6,729 new loan libraries, comprising 373,268 volumes. Each library usually has gone out at least three times. The books have thus been available to more than a quarter of a million of seamen. Nearly a thousand of these libraries have been placed in the vessels or navy-yards of the United States Navy.

When on a long voyage the books have been pretty well read, the ship will exchange its library with some other ship that it encounters that has been similarly supplied and desires exchange. To meet this, no two libraries are alike. They are put up in neat, strong, stained cases, thirteen inches by twenty-five. The selection embraces biography, travel, adventure, science, history, narrative, etc.

Our illustration shows the Society's rooms, and the giving out of these useful cases

BOOK NOTICE.

THE "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," issued by Fisk & Hatch, New York, has already attained a seventh edition. It is a most convenient and reliable work for out-of-town people desirous of knowing the exact status of the various bonds of our Government, or of determining in which series to make permanent investments.

Leibnitz's Calculating Machine.

TO THE objects presented to the sightseer in the Hanoverian capital a most interesting addition has just been made, in a calculating apparatus, invented by the illustrious Leibnitz. It was, indeed, at some remote period the property of the Royal Library at Hanover; but it had been long lost, and no one knew what had become of it. There was evidence that it had once been intrusted to a certain skilled mechanician in Gottingen to repair, but it had not been looked up, and was supposed to have met with some unworthy fate, as neglected things generally do. Hanover is, however, fortunate in the possession of an ideal litterateur, Herr Counselor Bodemann. Not content with merely taking care of what is given into his hands, he seeks diligently for what has been lost. A short time ago he hunted up some valuable ancient Oriental manuscripts from the rubbish beneath which they were buried, and the present recovery is entirely due to him. A patient search was rewarded by the missing curiosity being found in some obscure corner of the Gottingen Library, and after a little negociation its transfer to its old home was accomplished. The instrument in its time excited the astonishment and admiration of all Europe, the merit of the invention being formally recognized by the Academies of Paris and London. It can readily perform the operation of addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. The great mathematician hit upon the idea of it during a stay in Paris in 1672.

FUN.

"WHO can say that I am not a good man?" asked a tramp of a citizen this week. "Whoever saw me break the blessed Sabbath day, as some men do by working on it?"

MR. BYRON was once knocked up at an unconscionable hour in the morning by a friend. "Ah," he said, "a rose two hours later would have been quite as sweet."

TEACHER (in high at school ——): "Are pro and con synonymous or opposite terms?" Scholar—"Opposite." Teacher—"Give an example." Scholar—"Progress and Congress."

IT is very difficult to find fault with a dear little three-year old who buries his head under the clothes and sings, "Now I lay me down to sleep. Pup goes the weasel."

JUDGING BY APPEARANCES.—Old Scotch Wife: "Losh me! there's a maun drinkin' oot o' twa bottles at ance!" (The old gentleman was trying his new binocular, a Christmas present.)

HE wished his manuscript returned,
But failed in time to ask it,
And felt indignant when he learned
It had climbed the golden basket.

MAMMA—"Well, Johnny, I shall forgive you this time, and it's very pretty of you to write a letter to say you're sorry." Johnny—"Yes, ma; don't tear it up, please." Mamma—"Why not?" Johnny—"Because it will do for the next time."

PASSING AN EXAMINATION.—The following is told of a young gentleman who was passing an examination in physics. He was asked, "What planets were known to the ancients?" "Well, sir," he responded, "there were Venus and Jupiter, and"—after a pause—"I think the Earth, but I'm not quite certain."

YOU can't fool a Quincy girl. When her "fellow" rises from his seat in the theatre between the acts and says: "I'll be back in a moment," she dazzles him with one of her most reliable smiles, and pulling him back with the remark, "I brought some with me," coyly slips into his hand a pinch of cloves or roasted coffee.

A FOUR-YEAR-OLD boy, who has a great admiration for his mother and is determined to be a lady like her when he grows up, said recently, as he was starting for Sunday-school: "Mamma, please tell Jennie not to take off my hat in school." "Why?" inquired mamma. "Because I want them to think I am a girl," said the aspiring infant.

BEAUTIFUL SNOW.

If the thousand and one who wrote "Beautiful snow"
Had only been able in time to foreknow
That the Press would make balls of it at them to throw—
Do you think that they all would have written it so?

A COUNTRY boy, coming to school in the city for the first time, was asked by the teacher where South America was situated. He scratched his head and said: "Down in father's 'taty field." The teacher thereupon corrected him by telling where it was. He looked up with a broad grin and exclaimed: "What yer asked me for ef yer knew yerself."

A SHOP was broken into one night; but, strange to say, nothing was carried off. The proprietor was making his boast of it, at the same time expressing his surprise at losing nothing. "Not at all surprising," said his neighbor. "The robbers lighted a lamp, didn't they?" "Yes," was the reply. "Well," continued the neighbor, "they found your goods marked up so high they couldn't afford to take them."

THE FIRST RESULT.

IN almost every case the first and immediate result of the use of COMPOUND OXYGEN is an increase of appetite and a new sense of bodily life and comfort. Our Treatise sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1112 Girard Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Now, Uncle Pete, I am going to give you something bully. This brandy is twenty-four years old." "Twenty-four years old, boss?" asked old Pete, eying the "one finger" doubtfully; "this yar brandy twenty-four years old? Mighty small for its age, boss—mighty small."

COMMON-SENSE and the science of chemistry when applied to butter-making, reduce the time of churning one-half, increase the product 6 per cent., the quality of the product 10 per cent., and give a rich golden color to the butter the year round. All these improvements, together with many others, result from the use of GILT-EDGE BUTTER-MAKER. Sold by druggists, grocers and general storekeepers.

MY little sickly, puny baby was changed into a great bouncing boy, and I was raised from a sick bed by using HOP BITTERS a short time.—A young mother.

NOTHING will cure a cold or cough so quickly as DR. BROWNING'S C. & C. CORDIAL. For sale by druggists. 50 cents a bottle. Try it.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

IN MALARIAL PROSTRATION.

HAVE used Horsford's Acid Phosphate considerably, and like its effects very much: especially in malarial prostration. G. M. BELL, M. D.
BENTON HARBOR, MICH.

WHERE DOES IT COME FROM?

(From the N. Y. Sun, February 4th.)

OF the 4,500,000 gallons of wine from all foreign countries that entered the United States last year, only 1,300,000 gallons were registered in the French Custom Houses as Bordeaux wines. Not one-quarter of these were honest products of the Gironde vineyards. But fancy labels attached here, and a few drops of flavoring and coloring extracts, sufficed to sell four times the quantity at high prices, and set innumerable dunces to meandering about vintages and talking connoisseur.

PURE, unadulterated wines, from the vineyards of California, are sold in this city by A. WERNER & CO., 208 BROADWAY, sole proprietors of "THE AMERICA" CHAMPAGNE which has attained such unprecedented popularity.

AGENTS wanted in United States and Canada who worked life insurance. Salary, $1,200 to $2,500. An entirely new system; a success. Single agent readily writes one to twenty applications per day. Address, SAFETY FUND DEPOT, Hartford, Conn.

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE.—Relish for Soups, Fish, Steaks, Chops, Cold Meats, Gravies, etc.

ASTHMA.—Jonas Whitcomb's Remedy. Prepared from a German recipe obtained by the late Jonas Whitcomb in Europe. It alleviated this disorder in his case when all other appliances of medical skill had been abandoned by him in despair. In no case of a purely asthmatic character has it failed to give immediate relief. It contains no poisonous or injurious properties whatever; an infant may take it with perfect safety. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Manufacturers and Proprietors, Boston.

FOR Coughs, Asthma and Throat Disorders use "Brown's Bronchial Troches," having proved their efficiency by a test of many years. Imitations are offered for sale, many of which are injurious. The genuine "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are sold only in boxes.

SEE FIRST you're right, then go ahead: and the right thing is to insure in THE TRAVELERS.

THE genuine ASBESTOS ROOFING is the only reliable substitute for tin: it costs only about one half as much, is fully as durable, is fire-proof, and can be easily applied by any one. H. W. JOHNS MANUFACTURING CO., 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y., are sole manufacturers.

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ¼ and lb., labeled.

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, LONDON, ENG.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

CHAMPLIN'S
LIQUID PEARL

"Is an excellent cosmetic."—Tribune. "The best I have ever used."—Charlotte Thompson. "The best I have ever used; for the future I shall use no other."—Lotta. "Far superior to the one I bring over from Paris."—Jonauschek. "Superior to any cosmetic."—Neal Maddox. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a bottle. Beware of imitations. CHAMPLIN & CO., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

Illustrated Catalogue 150 pp. and Lecture, 10c.

MAGIC LANTERNS AND VIEWS

THEO. J. HARBACH, 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

CANDY Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address C. F. GUNTHER, Confectioner, 78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

CLEAR HAVANA Small Cigars, "INFANTER," $11.00 per 1,000. Sample box by mail, 25c. (Agents wanted.) J. H. ADEMAN, 2916 6th Av., N. Y.

SECRET HOW to become Rich and Watch sent free. FELTON & CO., Agents, New York.

LA BELLE CHOCOLATIERE.

One Hundred Years Old.

1780 — 1880

WALTER BAKER & CO.,

Dorchester, Mass.

Chocolate, Broma & Cocoa

PREPARATIONS

Have been the STANDARD for PURITY and EXCELLENCE for 100 years

Thirteen Medals (First-Class) received at Paris, Vienna, Philadelphia, etc., etc.

SOLD BY LEADING GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

Send for Descriptive Circular and Book of Choice Receipts.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,

COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

AND THE PRICE IS

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them; but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail. CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

A Charming New Novel.

WRECKED,

BUT NOT LOST.

By FAITH TEMPLETON.

12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50.

"A pure, bright, healthful story, well written as to style, and of quite artistic, symmetrical construction. Its scenes lie in this country, and they vary from the serious and pathetic to the gay and humorous; while the characters are well-drawn representatives of many types that exist in real life. The writer's name is new to us, but it deserves recognition in the list of promising novelists."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

 For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.,

PHILADELPHIA.

40 ELEGANT Chromo Cards, with name, postpaid, 10 cents. L. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S JOURNAL.

THE

Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal

IN THE COUNTRY,

The Spring Fashions just received from Paris.

COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY,

EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.

ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive Short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. Its art and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

FIFTH AVE. THEATRE. 28th Street and Broadway.
JOHN T. FORD.....Lessee and Manager.
LAST NIGHTS OF THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
D'OYLY CARTE'S LONDON OPERA COMPANY,
in Gilbert & Sullivan's last and greatest success.
Notwithstanding the unprecedented success of this opera,
THE GILBERT & SULLIVAN OPERA SEASON
MUST TERMINATE SATURDAY, MARCH 6TH.
PIRATES MATINEE SATURDAY, at 2 o'clock.
Seats for the remaining nights now for sale.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. HUMPTY DUMPTY.

MARKED EVENT OF THE SEASON.
EMPHATIC SUCCESS.

Every Evening, Wednesday and Saturday Matinées.
ABBEY'S
HUMPTY DUMPTY
and
SPANISH STUDENTS.

200 ARTISTS. 200

Prices—25c., 50c., 75c., $1 and $1.50.
Matinées Reserved, 50c. and $1.
Admittance for children under 12 years to Matinées only 25c.

SEATS SECURED ONE WEEK IN ADVANCE
at BOOTH'S and ABBEY'S PARK THEATRE.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only theatre under the management of
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.

EVERY EVENING AT 8 O'CLOCK
and
MATINEE SATURDAY, THE
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY.

The Perfection of Spectacle, Comedy and Music.

 Seats may be secured one month ahead
Wednesday Matinee at 2, "Charity."

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER.
Begins at 8. Over at 10:55.

SIXTH WEEK AND UNDIMINISHED SUCCESS
of
MR. EDGAR FAWCETT'S
brilliant play,

THE FALSE FRIEND,

which, with its magnificent scenery and a CAST made from

THE BEST COMPANY IN AMERICA,

will be presented every evening and at Saturday matinees
UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
SEATS SECURED TWO WEEKS AHEAD.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.

HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
SALISBURY'S TROUBADOURS.
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Propr & Mgr
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
TONY DENIER'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21st, first production in New York of a NEW and ORIGINAL AMERICAN EXTRAVAGANZA, entitled

HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA.

ENTIRE ORIGINAL MUSIC BY EDWARD E. RICE,
LIBRETTO BY NATHANIEL CHILDS,
SCENERY BY WILLIAM VOEGTLIN, and the full strength of the great

RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.

Frank Leslie's Chatterbox.

FORTY-EIGHT QUARTO PAGES.

Published monthly. Single copies only 10 cents. Annual subscription, $1, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS ROOFING.

The Asbestos Roofing (with white or light-gray Fire-proof coating) is now in use in all parts of the world, and is the only reliable substitute for tin. It is adapted for steep or flat roofs in all climates. It costs only half as much as tin, and can be easily applied by any one.

☞ Note the address, send for samples, and be sure and get the genuine, which is manufactured only by

H. W. JOHNS MF'G CO.,

87 Maiden Lane, New York,

Sole Manufacturers of genuine Asbestos Liquid Paints, Boiler Coverings, etc.

☞ Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

KEEP'S SHIRTS

ARE THE VERY BEST.

KEEP'S PATENT PARTLY-MADE SHIRTS, only plain seams to finish, 6 for $7.

KEEP'S CUSTOM SHIRTS, very best, MADE TO MEASURE, 6 for $10. Fit guaranteed.

An elegant set of extra heavy gold-plated Buttons presented to purchasers of six shirts.

KEEP'S KID GLOVES (FOR GENTS).

The very best, plain or embroidered, $1.10 per pair.

KEEP'S UMBRELLAS.

BEST GINGHAM, Patent Protected Ribs, $1 each. Warranted. Fifty per cent. stronger than any other umbrella.

REGINA and TWILLED SILK UMBRELLAS.

KEEP'S UNDERWEAR.

Flannel and Knit Shirts and Drawers in White, Scarlet, and Fancy Styles, from 60c. to $2.50 each.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES

In Gents' Silk, Linen and Cambric Handkerchiefs. Scarfs in elegant designs and effects.

Shirts only delivered free.

Merchants will be furnished with Trade Circulars on application, as we furnish the trade on the most favorable terms.

Samples and Circulars mailed free.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY

631, 633, 635 & 637 Broadway, New York.

VICK'S Illustrated FLORAL GUIDE.

A beautiful work of 100 Pages, One Colored Flower Plate, and 500 Illustrations, with Descriptions of the best Flowers and Vegetables, and how to grow them. All for a FIVE CENT STAMP. In English or German.

VICK'S SEEDS are the best in the world. FIVE CENTS for postage will buy the FLORAL GUIDE, telling how to get them.

The Flower and Vegetable Garden, 175 Pages, Six Colored Plates, and many hundred Engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 Pages, a Colored Plate in every Number, and many fine Engravings. Price $1.25 a year; Five Copies for $5. Specimen Numbers sent for 10 cents; 3 trial copies for 25 cts.

Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

TAPE-WORM

INFALLIBLY CURED with two spoons of medicine in three hours. Address with stamp,

E. EICHHORN, 4 St. Mark's Place, New York.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE | THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 233 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

20 New Style Chromo Cards, 10cts. Best ever sold. Stamps taken. J. B. HUSTED, Nassau, N. Y.

BUIST'S PRIZE-MEDAL SEEDS FOR ALL COUNTRIES

ESTABLISHED 1828.

BUIST'S Seeds are celebrated in all the markets of the world for their Purity and Superior Quality.

Being exclusively of our own growth, from the Choicest selected Stocks, we can therefore warrant them as represented.

Plant them once you will plant them always.

Buist's Almanac and Garden Manual for 1880, containing 128 pages of useful information on gardening operations, free to all.

Buist's Wholesale Prices mailed to Merchants and Seed Dealers on application. Address,

ROBT. BUIST, JR., SEED GROWER, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

DE VENOGE & CIE CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOCE, General Agent,

37 South William Street, New York.

ELEGANT AUTOGRAPH ALBUM, bound in Gilt, 48 pages, Engraved in Colors, and 54 select Quotations for same, 15c. 12 Photograph Cards, name and photo on, 50c. Send photograph. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

Imitation Gold Watches.

$5, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $1 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 335 Broadway, N. Y. Box 3696.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & CO., 130 W. 4th St., Cincinnati, O.

OPIUM AND MORPHINE HABIT CURED. Dr. W. H. McRAE, Worthington, Greene Co., Ind., has been more successful in curing the opium habit than any man living. Send stamp for particulars.

Photos of Actresses 6 for 25c. Special subjects, 3 for 25c. Catalogue of Photos and Books, 2c. FRANK D. TOBEY, 238 State St., Chicago.

NEW FLORAL AUTOGRAPH ALBUM.

Illustrated with Birds, Scrolls, Ferns, Flowers, etc. (48 pages), covers and edges elegantly gilded; also 47 select quotations—all for 15c., postpaid. (Stamps taken). Agents wanted. Address, G. W. BOCKEMEIER, West Haven, Conn.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF | By sending 35 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage.

Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

RELIABLE.  DYKES' BEARD ELIXIR will, and will do it in the shortest time, force a heavy beard on a smooth face, or whiskers on the cheeks, or a mustache on the lip, or hair on a bald head, or it will cost you nothing. Sent by express, prepaid, on receipt of $1.00. L. DYKES & CO., Box 2918, Philadelphia, Pa.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS! READ THIS! We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. No stock to buy. Sample Free. Address SHERMAN & CO., Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$250 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

WANTED—Salesmen—for each State. Salary $75 to $100 and expenses. Goods sold by sample. LA BELLE MANUF'G Co., Chicago, Ill.

WE WANT A FEW MORE SALESMEN To Sell to Dealers CIGARS! Samples free. Send 3c. stamp to insure answer. S. FOSTER & CO., Cincinnati, O.

IT PAYS to sell our Rubber Hand Printing Stamps. Circulars free. O. A. HARPER & BRO. Cleveland, O.

Frank Leslie's POPULAR MONTHLY.

The Cheapest and Most Comprehensive Magazine in the World.

THE

March Number Now Ready,

WITH THE FOLLOWING VARIED AND INTERESTING TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"FRANK LESLIE," by Richard B. Kimball; 10 Illustrations. "Mantua"; Illustrated. "The Rockefeller of Heaven"; Illustrated. "The Austrians in the Ice—Kaiser Franz Josef's Land, and the Escape from it," by Godfrey A. Hudson; 14 Illustrations. "The Old Tavern Life in England," by Henry Barton Baker, Author of "Mizabeau." "French Society," etc.; 4 Illustrations. "Dairy Farming in America," by A. S. Fuller; 13 Illustrations. "Why the Wind Blows," by Robert James Mann, M.D., F.R.I.S.; 12 Illustrations, etc., etc.

Serials, Short Stories, etc.—"Not Guilty," by Ella W. Pierce (Chaps. VIII. to X.); Illustrated. "At Miss Twiskletied's," by the Author of "That Last o' Lowrie's." "An Anachronism," by John Gilbert; Illustrated. "An Adventure on the Yang-tse-Kiang"; Illustrated. "Imara"; Illustrated. "The Burial at Sea," by Walter Edgar McCann; Illustrated. "Annette," by Sue Chenoweth Wood; Illustrated. "The Next Heir; Or, A Fatal Compact"; Illustrated. "Lindley Hall," by Eleanor Kirk; Illustrated. "Irene"; Illustrated. "A Night of Horror"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Sketches, etc.—"Bluebeard." "The Bicentennial of the Discovery of the Falls of St. Anthony"; Illustrated. "The Matratta Rebel." "The Battle of Bannockburn"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Poems.—"The Second Wife," by Arthur Matthison; Illustrated. "The Mermaid"; Illustrated. "The Three Wishes," by Francois Coppee; translated by O'Shaughnessy. "Will He Come?" Illustrated. "A Mother's Love," etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"The Heron Feeding Her Young"; Illustrated. "Anointing in Infantile Disorders." "The Coldest Town in the World." "Not One Book." "Ants." "Recent Progress in Science." "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES—OVER 100 EMBELLISHMENTS.

A Beautiful Colored Frontispiece, "Nature's Own Mirror."

Single copies, 15 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid.

SEND 25 CENTS FOR A SPECIMEN COPY.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

1864—The Original Gift Book Enterprise—1880

Permanently established. THE PHILADELPHIA PREMIUM BOOK CO. (Limited), organized pursuant to Act of Assembly, have completed arrangements with FIVE LEADING PUBLISHING HOUSES OF AMERICA, which enables them to give to their patrons GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, PARLOR FURNITURE, ELEGANT SILK-DRESS PATTERNS, SOLID SILVERWARE, Best English and American Cutlery, and a great variety of STAPLE GOODS of use and value—ALL GIVEN TO PURCHASERS OF BOOKS. All the New and Standard Books at the Lowest Prices. A Gift ranging in value from a Gold Watch to a Pen-knife with each Book at the time of sale. Any Book published, promptly sent on receipt of price. Our New Classified Catalogue for 1880, (a Guide to Choice Reading,) now ready, and will be sent to any address. ☞ Send for it! Send for it!! ☜

N. B.—Books and Gifts free to persons forming clubs. Address Philadelphia Premium Book Company, (Limited), 610 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HENDERSON'S Combined Catalogue of SEEDS AND PLANTS Sent free to all who apply by letter. Peter Henderson & Co., 35 Cortlandt Street, New York.

LADIES WHO prefer a nice quality of Stationery for their correspondence should inquire for Crane's Ladies' Note Papers and Envelopes to match. These goods are presented in Superfine and Extra Superfine Brands, the latter being unsurpassed in Purity, Tone and Beautiful Soft Finish by even the finest foreign productions.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Everybody wants it. The best persons made by J. F. W. Dorman, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

ELECTRIC BELTS | A PERFECT CURE for premature debility. Send for circular. DR. D. KARR, 832 Broadway, N. Y.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Wallingford, Ct.

50 Pinafore, Chromo, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 80 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

HITCHCOCK'S CHEAP MUSIC

Elegantly printed in full-size sheet music. A great saving to all lovers of music. The "Turkish Reveille," 12 cents; "Fallenitas," 16 pages, 20 cents; "Sea Cadet," 16 pages, 20 cents. Hitchcock's Magazine, 10 cents monthly, or $1 per year. Mailed on receipt of price. Extra liberal terms to dealers. Catalogues free. Hitchcock's Music Store, 22 Park Row, New York.

20 Lovely Rosebud Chromo Cards, or 20 all Motto, with name, 10c. NASSAU CARD CO., Nassau, N. Y.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

TEN PHOTOGRAPHS of FEMALE BEAUTIES, 10 cts. Catalogue free. J. K. BRITZ, Ashland, Pa.

Scroll-Saw Designs.

Send for New Catalogue.

L. H. RUSSELL, Stratford, Conn.

The Oldest and Best of the Juveniles!

Frank Leslie's

Boys' & Girls' Weekly

A SIXTEEN-PAGE, FOUR-COLUMN PAPER, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

A CONSTANT SUCCESSION OF ORIGINAL SERIAL STORIES,

By popular authors. They are full of animation and brightness; descriptive of stirring adventures by land and sea; altogether free from coarseness and sensationalism, etc., and replete with entertainment and information.

The contents are of a varied character, consisting of Portraits and Sketches of Distinguished Pupils at the Public Schools; Adventures; Articles on Interesting and Instructive Subjects; Talks with Boys about Foreign Lands; Magic and Mystery; Puzzles; Fun for the Boys, etc., etc.

PRIZES FOR THE BEST DRAWINGS.

Three Weekly Prizes are given for the Best Drawing sent in to FRANK LESLIE'S BOYS' & GIRLS' WEEKLY, each drawing to be accompanied by the attestation of the teacher that it is the pupil's own work, without outlining or touching up by any other hand.

Published every Monday, to be had at all the newsdealers', price 5 cents a copy; $2.50 a year, postage free.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE CHEAPEST RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE PUBLISHED.

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

THE

March Number Now Ready.

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"Esther Brandon's Mission Class," by Hart Lytton; Illustrated. "Amber, Ambergris and Pomanders," by Alexander Grayson; Illustrated. "The Puritan Revolution," by the Rev. Lyman Abbott; 5 Illustrations. "The Persecutions of the Huguenots" Part III. (in France, under Louis XIV.) by Alfred H. Guernsey; Illustrated. "Lost on the Steppes of Tartary"; Illustrated. "The River Tiber"; Illustrated. "The Isle of Palmos"; Illustrated. "The Indian Question," by Rev. H. A. Stimson. "History of the English Bible," by Henry F. Reddall. "FRANK LESLIE," by the Editor—Illustrations; The Church of the Divine Paternity; The Rev. E. H. Chapin, D.D.; The Vacant Chair; Medals Presented to Mr. Leslie; The First Wood-cut Drawn and Engraved by Frank Leslie.

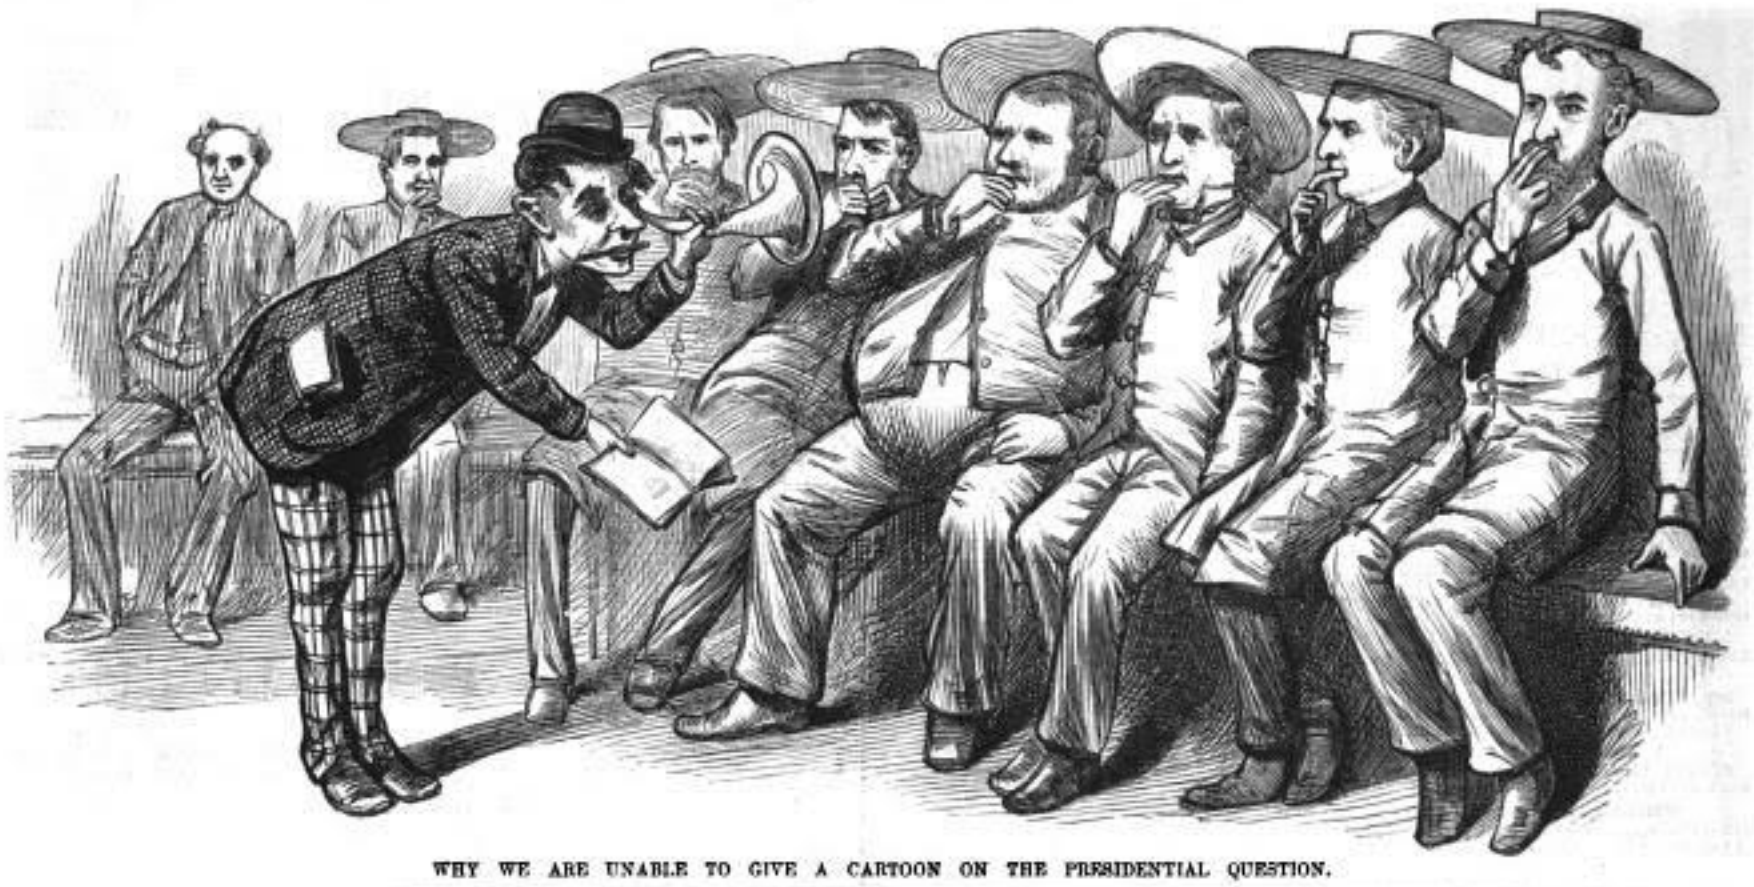
Serial and Short Stories, etc.—"Harold Hurt, the Night Watchman," a Story of the Great Chicago Fire; Illustrated. "The Story of Annette"; Illustrated. "Bebe, the Nailmaker's Daughter," by the Author of "Gideon's Rock" (Chaps. X.-XII.) "In Hood and Gown; Or, My Shaker Experience," by R. W. Easterbrooke; Illustrated. "Little Hinges" (Chaps. V.-VIII.) "Entertaining an Angel," by D. C. McDonald; Illustrated—etc.

Essays, etc.—"The Motive and Rewards of Christian Life." "Why God Became Man." "The Parable of the Prodigal Son in China." "The Apostles' Creed." "The Children of the Bible" (No. II.—Isaac, the Child of Promise). "Comfort Ye, Comfort Ye, My People"—etc.

Sketches, etc.—"General Cambronne"; Illustrated. "Heroic Women at Bryant's Station, Kentucky"; Illustrated. "Adventures at the Bridge of Bonsonio"; Illustrated. "A River Story"; Illustrated. "A Boys' Last Hymn in a Garret." "Gehazi's Covetousness." "Sir Matthew Hale"; Illustrated. "Generosity of the Onondagas"; Illustrated. "Coralish Fishermen"; Illustrated. "I Didn't Think," a Lesson in Obedience—etc., etc.

Poems.—"The Song of Labor"; Illustrated. "Morning"; Illustrated. "Gone," by Alfreton Harvey; Illustrated. "None of us Liveth to Himself." "The Storks"; Illustrated—etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"Salamanca, Spain"; Illustrated. "An Affecting Anecdote by Dean Stanley." "Some Singular Provisions in the Wills of Old Londoners." "Reasonable Economy." "Washington Relics in the Patent Office." "Ancient Writing Materials." "Home from a Cruise." "Assouan on the Nile." "A Boy's Lawsuit." "Faraday's Last Cup." "Anecdote of Garibaldi." "The Power of Music." "Anecdote of Stradella"; Illustrated. "Talleyrand and Arnold"; Illustrated. "A Hero in Paris"—etc., etc.



"Editor's Portfolio." "Obituary Notices." "Recreations for Sunday Afternoon." "Music—I Have a Glorious Hope."

128 QUARTO PAGES—100 ENGRAVINGS.

Single copy, 35 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid. Send 35 cents for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

WHY WE ARE UNABLE TO GIVE A CARTOON ON THE PRESIDENTIAL QUESTION.

PERSIAN AND INDIAN

Carpets and Rugs

A SUPERB and UNEQUALED COLLECTION NOW OPEN, REPRESENTING THE MANUFACTURES OF Akbarwalia, Bangalore, Bhaugulpoor, Cashmere, Daghestan, Deccan, Jubbulpoor, Khorassan, Nepaul, Mirzapoor, Ghiordes, Masulipatam, Etc.

Also EVERY VARIETY and QUALITY IMPORTED and DOMESTIC

CARPETS

Oil-Cloths, Linoleum, Lignum, Mats, Canton Mattings, Etc.

LATEST STYLES, NEW DESIGNS and COLORINGS.

A. T. Stewart & Co.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

MABIE, TODD & BARD.

GOLD PENS.

Pencils, Holders, Cases, etc.

180 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for Price-List.

Our Goods are for sale by First-class Dealers in U. S.

ILLUSTRATED FURNITURE CATALOGUE.

The Mitchell & Rammelsburg Furniture Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, have just issued a mammoth ILLUSTRATED FURNITURE AND DECORATIVE ART CATALOGUE. A book of rare worth to housekeepers, containing about 1,000 Illustrations. Mailed to any address on receipt of 50 Cents.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price-list. CHAS. W. COPELAND, Sole Manufacturer, BOSTON, MASS.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 18 larger size For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. The cheapest, largest and best book of the kind ever published. Agents wanted who can devote all their time to canvassing for this work. For circulars, terms and territory, address the publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THIRTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE, Nos. 346 and 348 BROADWAY.

JANUARY 1, 1880.

Amount of Net Cash Assets, January 1, 1879		$36,213,457.61
Less deduction to cover decrease in value of U. S. Bonds and other assets		$135,966 93
		$36,077,490.68

REVENUE ACCOUNT.

Premiums	$6,182,875.25
Less deferred premiums Jan. 1, 1879	379,539.09—$6,003,036.16
Interest and rents	2,839,875.93
Less interest accrued Jan. 1, 1879	306,223.93—$2,033,652.00—	$8,036,688.16
		$44,114,176.84

DISBURSEMENT ACCOUNT.

Losses by death, including Reversionary additions to same	$1,860,854.22
Endowments matured and discounted, including Reversionary additions to same	1,013,216.22
Annuities, dividends and returned premiums on cancelled policies	2,336,379.97
Taxes and re-insurances	113,608.64
Commissions, brokerages, agency expenses and physicians' fees	626,253.30
Office and law expenses, salaries, advertising, printing, etc.	317,392.81—$6,928,745.16
		$38,185,431.68

ASSETS.

Cash in bank, on hand, and in transit (since received)	$1,861,101.48
Invested in United States, New York City, and other stocks (market value $14,356,192.94)	13,544,071.96
Real estate	4,974,573.68
Bonds and mortgages, first lien on real estate (buildings thereon insured for $14,287,000.00 and the policies assigned to the company as additional collateral security)	15,313,278.85
Temporary loans, (secured by stocks, market value $1,200,000.00)	850,000.00
* Loans on existing policies, (the reserve held by the company on these policies amounts to $3,160,000)	621,403.02
* Quarterly and semi-annual premiums on existing policies, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1880	367,969.02
* Premiums on existing policies in course of transmission and collection (estimated reserve on these policies, $230,000, included in liabilities)	231,625.23
Agents' balances	22,199.23
Accrued interest on investments Jan. 1, 1880	347,999.11—$38,184,431.68
*A detailed schedule of these items will accompany the usual annual report filed with the Insurance Department of the State of New York.
Excess of market value of securities over cost		811,520.95

CASH ASSETS, Jan. 1, 1880 ..... $38,996,952.66

Appropriated as follows:

Adjusted losses, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1880	$225,662.64
Reported losses, awaiting proof, etc.	213,271.31
Matured endowments, due and unpaid	22,780.68
Reserved for re-insurance on existing policies; participating insurance at 4 per cent. Carlisle net premium; non-participating at 5 per cent. Carlisle net premium	34,926,840.82
Reserved for contingent liabilities to Tontine Dividend Fund, over and above a 4 per cent. reserve on existing policies of that class	1,371,482.18
Reserved for premiums paid in advance	16,643.25—$35,876,181.18
Divisible surplus at 4 per cent.		3,120,371.48
		$38,996,952.66

Surplus, estimated by the New York State Standard at 4 1-2 per ct., over $7,000,000.00.

From the undivided surplus of $3,120,371.48 the Board of Trustees has declared a Reversionary dividend to participating policies in proportion to their contribution to surplus, available on settlement of next annual premium.

During the year 5,524 policies have been issued, insuring 17,008,173.

Number of Policies in force	Jan. 1, 1876, 44,661	Amount at risk	1876, $126,134,119
	Jan. 1, 1877, 45,431		1877, 127,748,473
	Jan. 1, 1878, 45,605		1878, 127,901,887
	Jan. 1, 1879, 45,003		1879, 125,434,144
	Jan. 1, 1880, 45,705		1880, 127,417,763
Death-claims paid	1875, $1,524,815	Income from interest	1875, $1,870,658	Divisible surplus at 4 per cent	Jan. 1, 1876, $2,499,654
	1876, 1,547,648		1876, 1,906,930		Jan. 1, 1877, 2,626,510
	1877, 1,638,148		1877, 1,967,457		Jan. 1, 1878, 2,664,144
	1878, 1,667,876		1878, 1,94 8,865		Jan. 1, 1879, 2,811,436
	1879, 1,569,8 54		1879, 2,033,650		Jan. 1, 1880, 3,120,371

TRUSTEES.

MORRIS FRANKLIN, WM. H. APPLETON, WILLIAM BARTON, WILLIAM A. BOOTH, H. B. CLAFLIN, JOHN M. FURMAN, DAVID DOWS, GEORGE A. OSGOOD, HENRY BOWERS, LOOMIS L. WHITE, ROBERT B. COLLINS, S. S. FISHER, WILLIAM H. BEERS, CHAS. WRIGHT, M. D., EDWARD MARTIN, JOHN MAIRS, EDW. A. WHITTEMORE, HENRY TUCK, M. D., ALEXANDER STUDWELL, THEODORE M. BANTA, Cashier.

D. O'DELL, Superintendent of Agencies.

CHARLES WRIGHT, M. D., Residence 109 E. 26th St.
HENRY TUCK, M. D., Residence, 15 E. 31st St.
Medical Examiners.

MORRIS FRANKLIN, President.

WILLIAM H. BEERS, Vice-Pres't & Actuary.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Organs $35 Stops, Most Golden Tongue Reeds & Only 2 Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $100. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $125 to $265. Before you buy be sure to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

CURIOSITY FOR THE MICROSCOPE.—Send from the Oil-bearing Rock of the Bradford Oil Regions, and history of well it is taken from, for 25 cts. L. D. FRENCH, P. O. Box 1686, Oil City, Pa.

THERMOMETERS,

Spectacles, Eye Glasses, Field Glasses, Opera Glasses, Microscopes, Barometers, Compasses, at greatly reduced prices. R. & J. BECK, 1016 Chestnut St., Phila. Send 3 stamps for Illustrated Catalogue of 146 pages, and mention this paper.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

IF YOU HAVE A GARDEN, YOU NEED

ESTABLISHED 1848.

150 pages, Over 300 Illustrations, and a Beautifully Colored Plate of Pansies. Mailed for 10 Cents.

BLISS' ILLUSTRATED AMATEUR'S GUIDE TO THE FLOWER AND KITCHEN GARDEN contains more practical information on gardening than many high-priced books. Our list comprises 3,000 varieties Flower Seeds, 1,000 varieties Bulbs and Plants, 500 varieties Vegetable Seeds, 200 varieties Potatoes, etc. 200 pages, over 600 Illustrations, 2 double-page colored plates of flowers. Price: paper covers, 35 cents; bound in cloth, $1.00.

BLISS' ILLUSTRATED POTATO CATALOGUE. 80 pages. A valuable treatise on the Potato and descriptive list of all the principal varieties grown. Profusely Illustrated. Price 10 cents. B. K. BLISS & SONS, 34 Barclay St., New York, N. Y.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's line routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF NEW YORK....Saturday, February 28, 7 A.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL....Thursday, March 4, 11 30 A.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, March 13, 7 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER....Saturday, March 20, 12 30 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $80, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 51 and 53 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

A POSITIVE, EFFECTUAL and RADICAL CURE.

WRITE FOR TESTIMONIALS.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $2.00.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,

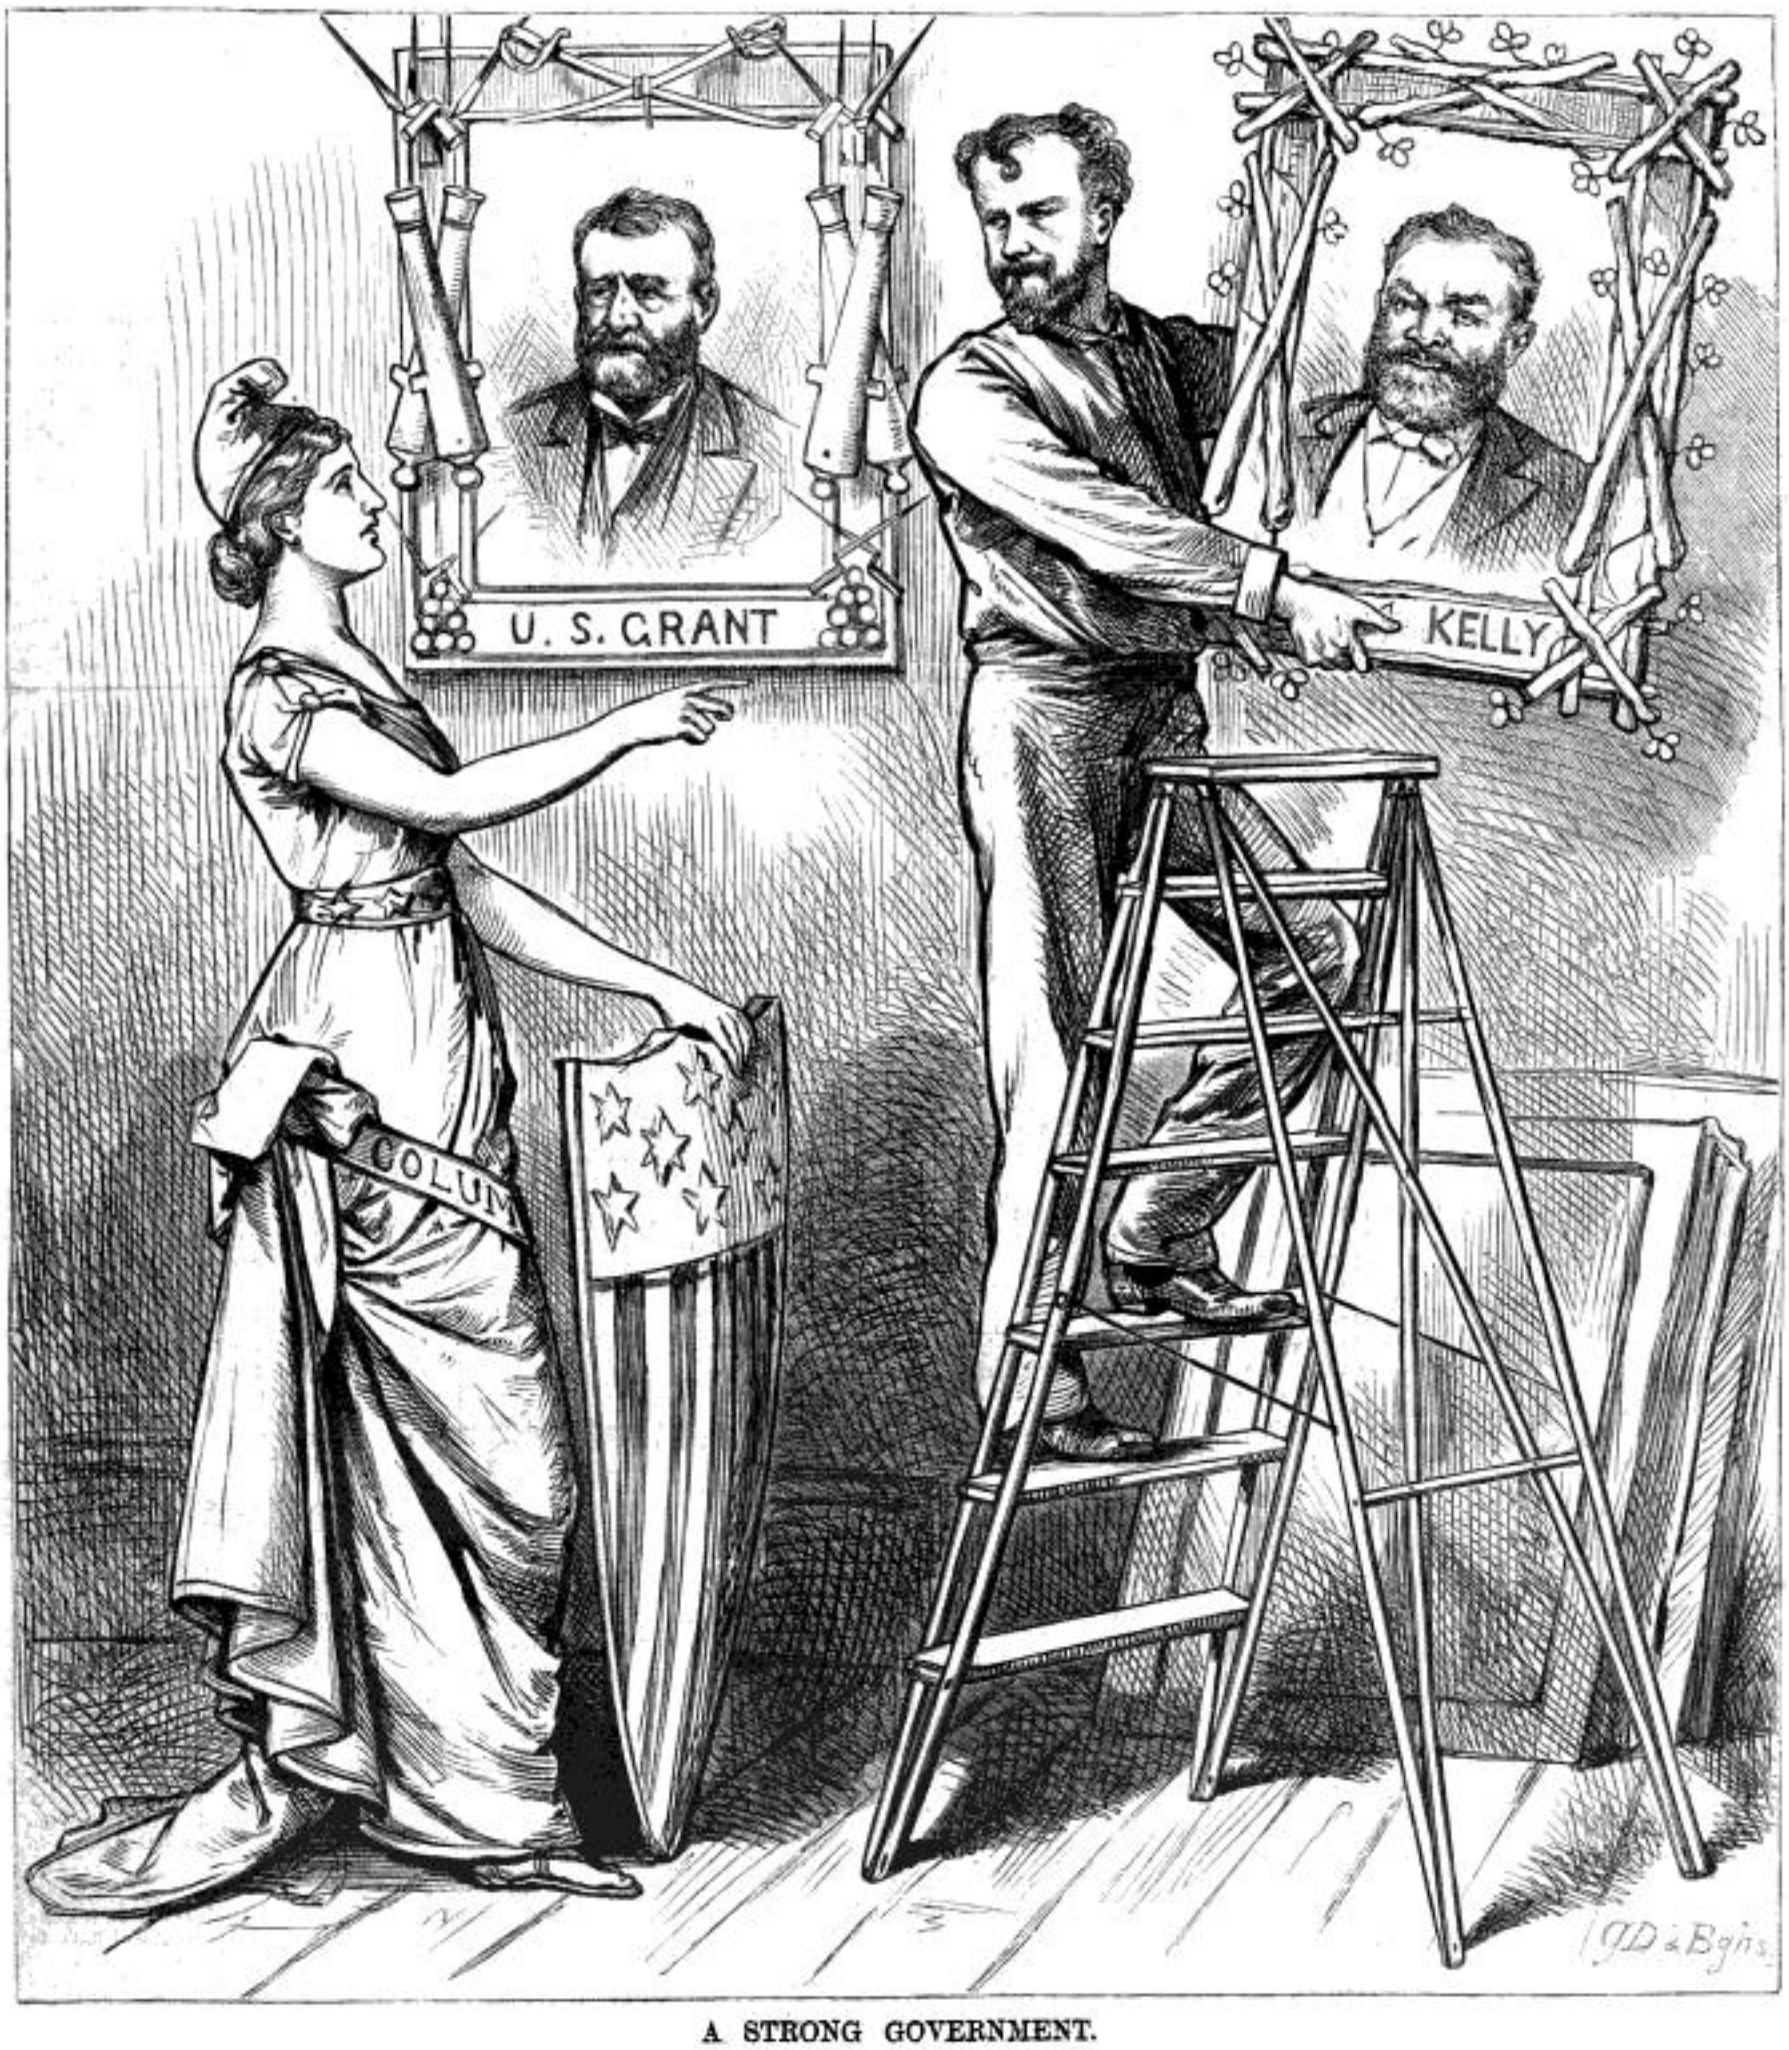
DETROIT, MICH.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BRESLIN & COOKE,

Proprietors.



Now open for the reception of guests

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Ehnland, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,276.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, MARCH 13, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.50 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1.00.

A STRONG GOVERNMENT.

Columbia—"Why, what are you doing?"
Conkling—"Oh, people want a strong Government, and we must give them one—'Bayonets and Bludgeons'—and I do not know a stronger man to go with Grant than my friend Kelly."

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, MARCH 13, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

J. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

TWO STRONG MEN.

THE probability of General Grant's nomination for President is now so generally recognized that Republican politicians are directing earnest attention to the second place on the ticket. This is a matter which is ordinarily left to settle itself, or to be settled at the last moment in the lobbies and the committee-rooms of the convention, according to circumstances, expediency or chance. But this year the belief is daily gaining strength that in some incomprehensible way the machine has already done the work of the Convention, as far as making a Presidential candidate is concerned, and that the independent action of the delegates to Chicago will be confined to the choice of somebody to run second to Grant.

We have no doubt that all serious-minded partisans will agree with us as to the qualifications which the person selected for the second place on a Grant ticket ought to possess.

1. He should be from the East.

2. He should be what is known as a "strong man." The Republican canvass next Summer will be conducted upon the theory that the country is in extreme peril from the plots of conspirators, chiefly at the South, and that the turbulence of the "dangerous classes," particularly in the Southern States, will need repression by a strong hand for several years to come. In a certain contingency that is at all times liable to occur, the Vice-President becomes President. It is obvious that the Republican candidate for Vice-President must also be a "strong man," if the safety of the Union is not to be staked upon the life of a single individual, a mortal at that.

3. He should be able to contribute to the success of the ticket by determining the vote of a great and doubtful State.

We submit that the Hon. John Kelly, of New York, meets all three requirements, and we do not hesitate to recommend him to the attention of the managers of General Grant's political interests, as an available candidate for the second place.

Mr. Kelly is an Eastern man, but his reputation is more than a local one. He is a strong man in the sense that General Grant is a strong man. He has had an almost life-long experience as a political worker, and the methods which he has invariably employed are the methods which are being employed to procure General Grant's nomination, and which will be employed to carry the election. His character has many points in sympathy with that of General Grant. The extraordinary facial resemblance of these two statesmen has frequently been remarked. But the resemblance extends to the inner and more subtile qualities of mind and heart. In both men are found the same bulldog pertinacity of will, the same robust indifference to public opinion when a purpose is to be carried out or a point gained, the same frank persistency in their loves and hates, the same fidelity to a line of action that has once been marked out, the same recklessness of consequences.

The principal argument, however, in favor of Mr. John Kelly's nomination for Vice-President is the powerful influence which he exerts in determining the result of elections in this State. He measured the extent of his power last year when, in order to gratify a personal spite, he succeeded in withdrawing between seventy-five and eighty thousand votes from the regular candidate of the Democratic party, thus electing Mr. Cornell, the present Republican Governor of New York. A moment's thought will show how valuable Mr. Kelly would be as an ally in the third-term campaign. New York is a great State, casting thirty-five electoral votes for President. It is a doubtful State, with the chances perhaps in favor of the Democrats in a Presidential year. But it is an indispensable State for the Republicans to carry, if General Grant is nominated; for, without New York, no manipulation, however ingenious, and no combination, however improbable, of the electoral figures in advance can demonstrate the possibility of making the third term idea a fact. Mr. John Kelly's seventy-five or eighty thousand votes in this State, if delivered to Grant, would be worth more than half a million votes in States that are surely Republican. We see no other way for the third-term managers to secure Mr. Kelly's co-operation in New York than to nominate Mr. Kelly for Vice-President.

It will probably be objected that while Mr. Kelly is in other respects an available candidate for the second place on the Republican ticket, the fact that he has been widely known as a Democratic politician would be an insurmountable difficulty in the way of his nomination at Chicago. On the surface, this objection seems to have some force. But General Grant himself was known as a Democrat up to the day when he accepted a Republican nomination for President. Who can say what the political convictions of General Grant are at this time, or whether he has any political convictions other than the conviction that it is his duty to "work with the party"? On the other hand, who can define Mr. John Kelly's convictions on questions of public polity, or show that his political creed differs in any respect from General Grant's? Moreover, it is by no means certain that Mr. Kelly considers himself a Democrat. The evidence is rather the other way. He did not act with the Democratic party in the last State canvass. He did act with the Republican party, and he succeeded in electing a Republican Governor. He is no longer hampered by any sentimental, moral or practical ties binding him to the Democracy. He is free to accept a Republican nomination for Vice-President, provided it is offered to him.

"Grant and Kelly" would be a strong ticket for the third-term party, for it would include not only one strong man, but two.

REFUNDING SCHEMES.

SO low had the national credit fallen during the days immediately preceding the late Civil War that authorized Government loans went begging at a discount of twelve per cent. At that period the total of the public debt was less than $65,000,000. To-day, with a bonded debt exceeding $1,700,000,000, and a total of interest and non-interest bearing indebtedness amounting to more than $2,000,000,000, the country commands the confidence of foreign and home capitalists and can borrow vast sums of money on the most favorable terms. To such an extent, in fact, has the national credit been improved that the major portion of the bonded debt, originally bearing interest at the rate of six per cent., and a portion at five per cent., has been refunded at the lower rates of four and one-half and four per cent. No country at the present stands so well with the capitalistic world as does the United States. Good faith kept with public creditors and a disposition coupled with an ability to pay have borne their legitimate fruits.

Under this improved condition of affairs the Government will soon again become an applicant for public financial favor. During the early part of the coming calendar year more than $750,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds will reach maturity. The maturing bonds draw five and six per cent. interest, and, as the country must needs negotiate a new loan wherewith to pay, it becomes desirable to obtain a lower rate. In calling Congressional attention to this matter, Secretary Sherman suggested that authority be given, at the present session, to refund the bonds soon to become due in new four per cent. bonds, and certificates, convertible into bonds, drawing a like rate of interest. Such bonds, as he believed, would command a premium above their par value in gold. Touching the subject of refunding at four per cent., the Secretary remarked in his annual report as follows: "The four per cent. consol is now generally known. The rate of interest is as low as will generally maintain the bond at par, and the premium will measure its advance above par at favorable periods. The certificates should bear the same rate and be sold on the same terms as the bonds."

Secretary Sherman should know whereof he speaks. The country has had good cause to respect his opinions. His enlarged experience with the nation's fiscal affairs, his skill in guiding to resumption, and his success in connection with former refunding operations, serve to make valuable his financial utterances. But as the Texan doorkeeper of the House of Representatives once wrote himself down as being a much greater man than "Old Grant," so are there commonplace men in Congress whose vanity prompts them to hold that they are better fitted to deal with financial problems than one who has earned a world-wide reputation as a sound financier. Among this class we may rank Mr. Fernando Wood. This gentleman, by some process, occupies the position of Chairman of the House Committee of Ways and Means. From the very beginning he has antagonized the refunding plan of the Secretary with a scheme of his own. That our New York Representative is a clever and affable gentleman we admit, but candor compels the declaration that we fail to discover in him the elements pertaining to a wise and able statesman. When we say that Mr. Wood is not the man to dispose of matters directly affecting the welfare and future prosperity of quite fifty millions of people, we shall have the indorsement of sound business men in all parts of the country.

Mr. Wood's refundment scheme, in brief, contemplated the issue of fifty year bonds in lieu of those now approaching maturity, the new bonds to draw interest at the rate of three and one-half per cent. per annum. As Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, he has been partially successful in thwarting the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury. That committee has agreed upon a Bill to be known as the "Funding Act of 1880." The first section authorizes an issue of bonds not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of three and one-half per centum per annum, the same to be redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after twenty years, and to be payable forty years from the date of issue. The same section authorizes the issue of $200,000,000 in notes, bearing like interest with the bonds, such notes to be redeemable after two years and payable in ten years. The Bill further prohibits the redemption of such notes to any greater extent than $40,000,000 in any one year. The fourth section amends the Act of February 26th, 1879, and authorizes the issue of $50,000,000 of certificates of deposits, the same to draw three and one-half per cent. interest for one year only, after which time, at the option of holders, said certificates may be converted into 20-40 bonds. The Secretary may issue new certificates to keep up the full limit of $50,000,000, but all surrendered certificates must be canceled and destroyed. The fifth section takes a "shy" at the national banks and enacts that "from and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the three and a half per centum bonds, authorized by the first section of this Act, shall be the only bonds receivable as security for the national bank circulation.

Should this Bill become a law, it will then remain to be seen whether capitalists will consent to pay par for a low interest bond which the Government, at its option, may redeem at any time after twenty years from the date of issue. Secretary Sherman is upon record as saying that four per cent. is about the lowest rate of interest that will generally maintain a new issue of bonds at par. That opinion, we presume, was predicated upon information obtained from those who would naturally be called upon to put the bonds afloat at home and abroad. Mr. Sherman, in a recent conference with the committee, is represented to have admitted the possibility of negotiating a three and a half per cent. loan at par. Now, it is possible that "if the skies were to fall the people might catch larks," but the catching is made dependent upon the falling. So with the proposed three and a half per cent. bonds. If allowed to run the full term of forty years it is possible that investors might consent to take them at par. But they can have no surety that the whole debt will not be extinguished within the next twenty-five years, at least. In a little more than one decade some $600,000,000 of the public debt principal has been wiped out. Growing population and wealth, backed by wise economy on the part of the Government, will enable the country to get rid of its present indebtedness within the period named. The new Bill does not allow any of the bonds, notes, or certificates to be disposed of at less than par. Now, should this Bill become a law, and the loan fall flat in the market what would become of the good name and credit of the Government? The next session of Congress is a short one, and does not commence until December, 1880. On May 1st, 1881, $578,440,351 five per cent. bonds fall due. Two months later $255,216,300 of six per cents. will reach maturity, and call for redemption. Congress might pass a new Act prior to March 4th, 1881, but the Treasury Department could not arrange to meet the $763,656,651 of matured indebtedness on demand. A four per cent. twenty-year loan the country can depend upon with certainty. A three and a half per cent. loan is an untried measure. It may possibly succeed, and again it may not. Should it fail, there will be trouble in Uncle Sam's domain.

But Mr. Wood and his committee may not encounter a smooth passage for their scheme. There are other would-be great men in Congress, all equally ambitious to figure in the world of finance. One of the current plans for refunding, and a favorite one, too, with a number of Congressional Solons, is to issue a three sixty-five bond, that is, a bond bearing interest at the rate of one cent per day on each one hundred dollars. They argue that such a bond would be popular because of the ease with which the interest may be calculated. Secretary Sherman, however, disposes of this argument by saying: "The idea that 3.65 interest is easy to compute has been greatly exaggerated. It would be almost impossible to pay a quarterly interest on a $10 bond at that rate. It would be hard to calculate the interest on a $50 bond. Four per cent. is much easier computed." And so it is, for the quarterly interest on each dollar amounts to exactly one cent.

Still another refunding scheme is that which finds a special champion in Hon. William D. Kelly, of Pennsylvania. He proposes to refund the maturing debt by converting the post-offices of the country into savings institutions, and giving the Government authority to accept deposits in exchange for bonds interconvertible with currency, such bonds to draw interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum on each one hundred dollars. The English system of postal savings banks is adduced as an argument in favor of this plan; but there are grave existing doubts as to the complete success of that system. Furthermore, looking to the state of our politics and civil service, we are bold to assume that such a system could not be made to work successfully in the United States.

But while these and like schemes for refundment find zealous advocates in Congress, there are those holding seats in that body who persistently oppose the further emission of bonds for any purpose whatsoever. Their peculiar crotchet is to pay off the public debt, as it matures, with greenbacks, or otherwise with cheap silver dollars. Notably among the latter is Mr. Stephens, of Georgia. He professes to believe in silver payment of the debt, and to this end would have the Government establish several additional mints to be employed in coining the silver "dollar of the daddies." As a contemporary sagely remarks, "That will do to bring up the rear."

THE UTICA CONVENTION.

SENATOR CONKLING carried several of his main points at the Republican State Convention, recently held at Utica, but by a majority far less than he had anticipated. Nowhere is the political "machine" more completely under the control of its managers than in New York. When the Republican State Committee issued their call for the Convention, they firmly believed that seven-eighths of its members would be in favor of the nomination of General Grant. And even after all the delegates were chosen, and the Grant men had discounted failures in some unexpected quarters, they still claimed that their majority was at least 120. We may judge, then, of the surprise of the followers of Mr. Conkling when, after a long and heated debate, they were able to get a majority of only 37 in favor of Grant on a total vote of 397.

It is folly to attempt to account for this small majority on any other ground than that the sober second thought of the Republicans is rather opposed to the third-term programme. The haughty "machine" managers in New York sneered at Don Cameron's ill success at Harrisburg, where on an aggregate vote of 246 he carried a resolution in favor of Grant by a majority of barely 20; and they at one time boasted that in their Utica Convention there would not be found twenty members who would record their votes against a resolution instructing the delegates to Chicago to support General Grant. But so far from this prediction being fulfilled, we see in Utica, in spite of a powerful speech from Mr. Conkling, and of the whole influence of Governor Cornell, one hundred and eighty delegates registering their names against the nomination of Grant. Not less significant were the proceedings of the Convention in two other particulars. It did not venture to deprive the delegates from the several Congressional districts of the power of selecting their own representatives at Chicago, nor did it adopt the unit rule which requires the seventy national delegates to vote on all questions as the majority shall direct. The result of this is, the election of fifteen or twenty opponents of Grant, who will work against him all the time at Chicago, and the recognized right of each of the seventy to vote for whom he pleases as soon as Grant is out of the field.

DESPITE the Congressional investigation, the colored emigration from North Carolina into Indianapolis continues.

IN spite of the efforts of his counsel, it looks as if the Rev. Shepherd Cowley will have to stand the sentence of the court.

THE Assembly of New York having adopted a resolution to have the illegal expenditures made by savings banks, as traced by the Superintendent of the Bank Department, brought officially before the Legislature, there is a prospect that the public will have a racy bit of reading laid before it by Easter. Don't let anything be smothered in this investigation, gentlemen, for the thousands of poor people who have been fleeced deserve at least the knowledge of how it was done.

Digitized by Google

President Hayes has decided that if Generals Sherman and Boynton wish to fight the war over again, they must do it at their own cost without Government assistance.

The joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland has been approved by the President. Now let there be no delay in gathering the materials so sorely needed.

Friends of woman suffrage in the New York Legislature made the great blunder at the beginning of the session of passing a Bill in direct opposition to the Constitution of the State. In the Senate, on February 27th, Mr. Halbert took the right step when he offered a resolution to provide an amendment to the Constitution with the intention of extending the elective franchise to women to the election of political officers as well as to school officers.

Despite the telegram from the Duchess of Marlborough, who was desirous of cutting out the Dublin Mansion House Relief Committee in the distribution of the Herald Famine Fund, the Herald clings to its original idea: the gentlemen nominated are all to the fore, and the fund will be filtered through the hands of men "sans peur" and "sans reproche." This substantial aid could not have struck Ireland at a better moment, as every information is now collated and all the machinery for distribution in full working order.

Mr. Henry Bergh made an eloquent plea in behalf of dumb animals before the Joint Committee of the Legislature on Vivisection at Albany; but, unfortunately, his bill to prevent this kind of cruelty to animals was reported adversely by the Judiciary Committee of the Assembly on the 27th, and the report being agreed to by the House, of course the Bill was killed. Mr. Bergh is not the man to be discouraged by defeat in his humane labors. In this case he has had the scientific, the medical and the surgical classes opposed to him. It is in the man to keep agitating the subject until he attains success.

Herbert Spencer is a bachelor, and resides at Bayswater (London), where he spends his mornings in literary labor, dictating mostly to a regular amanuensis. In the afternoon he usually goes to the Athenæum Club, a favorite resort, and plays billiards for recreation. In the evening he often meets Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall, Carpenter, or some other member of the philosophic sect, with all of whom he is on close terms of friendship. He feels a deep interest in politics of the larger sort, is substantially at one with Gladstone and John Bright, and earnestly opposed to militarism and every form of "jingo."

After a lively discussion, and direct charges of extravagance and violation of law, the House has passed the substitute for the Star Route Deficiency Bill reported by the Appropriations Committee. The measure, as passed, appropriates $1,070,000, or a little more than one-half of the amount asked for by the Post Office Department. The House had to judge between depriving the public of mail facilities it was entitled to and being imposed upon by a branch of the Post Office Department. It chose to stand about one half the imposition now. It is likely it will get lively satisfaction for the balance ere many weeks.

Congressmen may not be in exact accord with Mr. Weaver or his greenback inflation scheme, but he has the right to present his Bill and explain its measures, so long as he acts in a proper manner. For several weeks he has risen in his seat in the House on Monday—the day set apart by the rules for just such business—and has attempted to secure a consideration of his Bill, but invariably the Speaker has recognized some other member. On Friday last, however, he scored a slight victory, for he had a hearing on the floor, and in that hearing his resolutions were read. Before taking his seat he informed the House that he would be found claiming recognition from the Speaker every Monday morning until he succeeded.

It has been frequently asserted of late that the Mormons are contemplating a movement into Mexico, and mention has been made of the start of an advance expedition. It now appears that the State of Sonora has offered an immense tract of land and especial privileges if the entire community of Salt Lake City will settle there. Already Apostle Thatcher has opened a place of worship, or, rather, a "lecture-room" (where the tenets of the Latter-Day Saints will be explained), in La Calle de San Pedro y San Pablo, right opposite one of the Presbyterian mission chapels. General Murray, the new Governor in taking leave of his Kentucky friends, promised to enforce the laws, however difficult the operation might be. Judging from his past record, he is just the kind of man the leading Mormons hold in fear.

Wednesday, Feb. 25th, proved to be rather an unlucky day for General Grant. In addition to the mortification of the narrow escape at Utica, where a change of nineteen votes in a Convention of four hundred would have exploded the Grant boom, the Republicans of Vermont and Indiana rendered their verdicts against the third term. The State Convention of Vermont elected, by a unanimous vote, a delegation to Chicago who are "first, last and all the time" in favor of nominating Senator Edmunds. All the Congressional districts of Indiana chose their delegates. Every man is instructed to support Blaine, except one, and he is for Sherman. Really, the sky begins to look cloudy for the hero of the Appomatox.

Pessimists see in the withdrawal of Prince Hohenlohe, the German ambassador to France, an intention on the part of Bismarck to strike a blow at the Republic. It is claimed that the Prince's presence in Paris "amounted, in the eyes of all diplomatic Europe, to a guarantee of peace. His departure will have an opposite signification, especially at the present time, when Prince Bismarck seems desirous of making France the scapegoat of his distrust and precautions." An official announcement that Hohenlohe will immediately enter upon the duties of Secretary of Foreign Affairs for a period of six months, and the belief that this is but a preliminary training to prepare him to succeed Bismarck as Chancellor, are more assuring. In view of the fact that Prince Bismarck has for months complained bitterly of overwork, it is more reasonable to suppose that he desires a strong man to succeed him than that he desires another conflict with France. The selection of Prince Hohenlohe for the delicate mission to France was a high compliment to his diplomatic skill.

The husbands of New York may breath a little freely at last. Visions of bills from Madame Crinoline and Mademoiselle Poudre du Riz and Mrs. Kiteflier will no longer haunt the feverish pillow. No longer will it be necessary to frown when a new costume is mentioned, to part with tufts of hair when it comes to be paid for. No! Nous avons changé tout cela. Relief is at hand. A change is coming o'er the spirit of the dreams of our fair women, and Utopia is not so distant as it was a brief season since. A number of New York ladies have formed a co-operative association for the purposes of—dressmaking—yes, dressmaking. This on the plan so successfully adopted in the Mother Country. Our wives and daughters mean to dress in the best possible taste, in the newest fashion, and at a cost that will no longer cause our hearts to drop into our boots at the mere reckoning. This is a move in the right direction, and one that is likely to prove of especial service not only to our spouses, but to their sisters, their cousins and their aunts.

Atlanta, Ga., has been credited with having made more recuperative progress since the war than any other of the Southern cities. While the growth of the new-built city has been a marvel, there are other sections which, in different ways, have displayed an amount of business push that was not known previous to the war. We now have the spectacle, singular as it must be in the eyes of the oldest inhabitants, of cotton being manufactured close to the fields where it is cultivated. In this respect South Carolina is deserving of particular mention. There are now eighteen cotton factories within her borders. This industry has been developed within the last ten years. Only yarns and the coarser cloths, such as brown sheetings, shirtings and drills, have been attempted as yet, but in the last five years the production of these has become most lucrative. The infant industry has everything in its favor—cheap land, cheap labor and cheap fuel. The climate is unexcelled, and there are no strikes. This last is said to be because the operatives are all natives of the soil. In only one of the eighteen factories are negroes employed, and there colored labor is used to great advantage. The cotton mills are worth nearly $3,000,000, and make over 100,000 yards of cloth and thousands of pounds of yarn per day.

What exciting memories does the nomination of Percy B. S. Pinchback to be Naval Officer of the District of New Orleans call up! Appearing in Washington with the credentials of a United States Senator in his pocket, his right to the seat was contested from the start. Year after year did the Committee on Elections consider his case. Did the stock material for partisan discussion run low, the mere mention of the name "Pinchback" was sufficient to rouse latent energies and precipitate debate of the most thrilling character. How many Senators have used him as the subject of the best speeches of their lives? Never was there a dull day in the Senate when the honorable gentlemen were passing the handsome negro from one to the other in the search for evidence why he should and should not be confirmed. He emerged from one revolution into public life; his case served to keep alive the embers of another revolution. During the last few days of the term for which he had been elected he was permitted to be recognized as a United States Senator, and when he returned to New Orleans he carried a handsome sum of money in his satchel. For years he has been forgotten, but now that the President has resurrected him, people will want to read again the wonderful speeches that were based on his case during the long era of Louisiana reconstruction.

The best street cleaners that New York City has ever had have been the storms of wind and rain. When the Police, and Dock, and Health Departments cannot keep our thoroughfares in a sightly condition, there is little hope that the State Legislature can do so. The problem is before the Albany Solons as usual, and a committee sitting in the city have been informed of the difficulties of cleaning the streets, the methods and costs. Nothing of a practical character has been developed by these investigations in years gone by, and it is scarcely probable that the present committee will formulate a plan for removing the obstructions. Commissioner Voorhees hit the nail on the head when he testified that the defects of the present system were in the administration of it. The employés were not always such, he thought, as a private person would retain. In other words, the system is hampered by political patronage. He thought a remedy for that evil, "would be to put those in charge, the Commissioners and others, in such a position that they would not feel constrained to oblige political friends. It requires a great deal of nerve to resist these applications, and that is not found in every person. For example, if a person who has the appointment of employés refuses to appoint a friend of some alderman, I would expect that the alderman would make himself felt in the quarter where the pay of the person who had failed to oblige him was coming from." This is the old story, but none the less true. Large sums are annually appropriated, but the streets continue to reek with filth. If the present committee can devise an operative remedy they will be doing the best possible service to their constituents.

Poor Russia! poor Czar! The public were led to believe in the early part of last week that the Czar and his counselors were preparing an important State document to be promulgated on March 2d, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne. Great hopes were entertained of this promised measure. There were those who held the opinion that the occasion would be a most fitting one for the publication of an edict of more liberal tendency, or a less repressive character, than the many that have been issued of late years. There cannot be question as to the necessity for firmness. But may not a reasonable firmness be compatible with a proper recognition of some of the God-given rights of man? Repressive measures have been enforced with no practical effect. The authorities have appeared at their wit's end to devise means of subduing Nihilism. Each day shows the revolutionary spirit to be more cool, cunning and demonstrable than the previous one. A few days from the time of writing, February 28th, we may have an imperial ukase of the character that has been anticipated. But what have we now? A virtual abdication of power by the Czar, not to the Czarowitch, as the natural successor, but to one of the most successful and, at the same time severe, generals of the army. It seems beyond belief that the Czar, ever jealous of his sovereign rights, should clothe General Melikoff with such absolute, far-spreading and autocratic power. As the head of the Supreme Executive Commission, General Melikoff has the entire empire, all its property and all its people of every grade, class and condition, subject to a stroke of his pen. The Czar expressly decrees that "the head of the Commission is at liberty to adopt any means which may appear to him desirable for the protection of order in the empire, and the orders he may issue are to be unconditionally obeyed." Melikoff is, therefore, the dictator of Russia. The Sovereign goes into retirement; the subject becomes absolute monarch.

Although in operation but a few weeks, the Kearney system of municipal government has already created much consternation in San Francisco. Directly the success of the so-called Workingmen's Party was assured, moneyed men began looking beyond the confines of the city and State for business opportunities; a feeling of insecurity and distrust was developed at once. Thus far circumstances have increased rather than allayed the uneasiness. Both the national and the savings banks show a heavy diminution in the amount of deposits, and it is a matter of common talk that heavy financial operators have for weeks been preparing for removal to New York. We have already heard from one such party, in the organization of a mining board and exchange on February 26th, with a number of capitalists of San Francisco and New York as officers and directors. It is said that many persons who have supported the anti-Chinese movement, but whose business interests have been seriously injured by the reactionary effect of the agitation, say that rather than suffer a continuance of the evil results of the protracted agitation, it would be preferable to have it out once for all, and the sooner the better. Workingmen's Protective Clubs have visited large establishments employing Chinese labor, and demanded the immediate discharge of all the Mongols under threats of serious consequences. A leader named Gannon, on the 24th, intimated that after the round of visitation to the employers of Chinese was finished, there would be less noise and more work. It is but a few days ago that the new authorities declared Chinatown to be a nuisance and ordered its immediate evacuation. In answer to this report, Colonel Bell, the Vice-Consul of China, published a card in which he said that if such a state of affairs exists in Chinatown as was reported, it is the fault of the health officer, who is clothed with full power to remedy the evil. As the Kearneyites talk of extreme measures, it is believed that the better class of citizens are organizing secretly to prevent any riotous demonstration. While the necessity for the formation of a Vigilance Committee is to be greatly deplored, it is but natural that the merchants and other people having large money interests at stake should do something to protect themselves. There can be no doubt but that the incendiary language of the agitators has caused grave alarm. There is danger imminent that might have been avoided had the best class of citizens been half as active in the discharge of their political duties as their opponents were. Mayor Kalloch certainly occupies an unenviable position. He is bound by oath to protect the city and its inhabitants, and at the same time he is obliged to keep faith with the Workingmen's Party which elected him.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

Forty-eight hundred spinners at Cohoes, N. Y., have struck for higher wages.

The Second Avenue Elevated Railroad, New York City, was opened for travel on March 1st.

The Democratic State Committee of Alabama called the State Convention to meet on June 2d.

A Bill to reduce elevated railroad fares to five cents has been considered favorably by the New York Legislature.

Ex-County Clerk Gumbleton has sued ex-Governor Robinson, who removed him, for $50,000 "damages."

The piano manufacturers of New York threaten to discharge all their workmen if the strikers do not resume work on March 12th.

Two employés and the proprietors of a nickel-plating mill at Troy, N. Y., were attacked by strikers and severely beaten on the 27th ult. Four of the strikers were wounded by pistol-balls.

The Bill for abolishing the Board of Police Commissioners of Cincinnati and placing the control of the Police Department in the hands of the Mayor has passed the Legislature and been signed by Governor Foster.

On February 27th the Senate passed the Bill for the admission, free of duty, of contributions from abroad for the Kansas colored emigrants, and, after a long debate, the Five Per Cent. Military Land Warrant Bill was postponed until December.

It is believed that the Bills to provide United States Courts in the Indian Territory and for the allotment of lands to the Indians in severalty will be favorably reported. At the same time it is reported that citizens of Kansas and Arkansas are organizing to invade the Territory in search of gold and silver.

During the trial of the Lewis will conspiracy case at Trenton, N. J., Mrs. Lewis confessed the entire details of the attempt to prove herself the widow of the Hoboken millionaire who bequeathed his millions to the Federal Government, pleading guilty to the conspiracy and accusing Dr. Parks of being the leading spirit in the attempted fraud.

Judge Gilbert has granted a temporary injunction restraining the postal authorities of New York and Brooklyn from giving any registered letters to John Collins, of No. 374 Franklin Avenue, to Delsey his wife, or to their daughters Mamie or Maggie Collins. The application was made by Coudert Brothers, as counsel for Eugene de Zalenkoff, the Russian Honorary Counselor of Marine, who claims that he was swindled by the two sons of John Collins.

Foreign.

On February 24th King Humbert gave a banquet in honor of Professor Nordenskjöld, the Arctic explorer.

Advices have been received of the annexation by Liberia of an important country adjoining the interior frontier of the Republic, known as the Kingdom of Medina.

The Spanish Court of Appeals has confirmed the sentence on Otero Gonzalez, the would-be assassin of the King. A final appeal will be made to the Court of Cassation.

A steamer from Guaymas and La Paz reports that the revolution in Lower California is at an end, some of the revolutionists having fled and others surrendered to the Government authorities.

The Hon. Andrew D. White, the American Minister at the Court of Berlin, threw open the rooms of the Legation to a brilliant Anglo-American throng of guests in honor of Washington's Birthday.

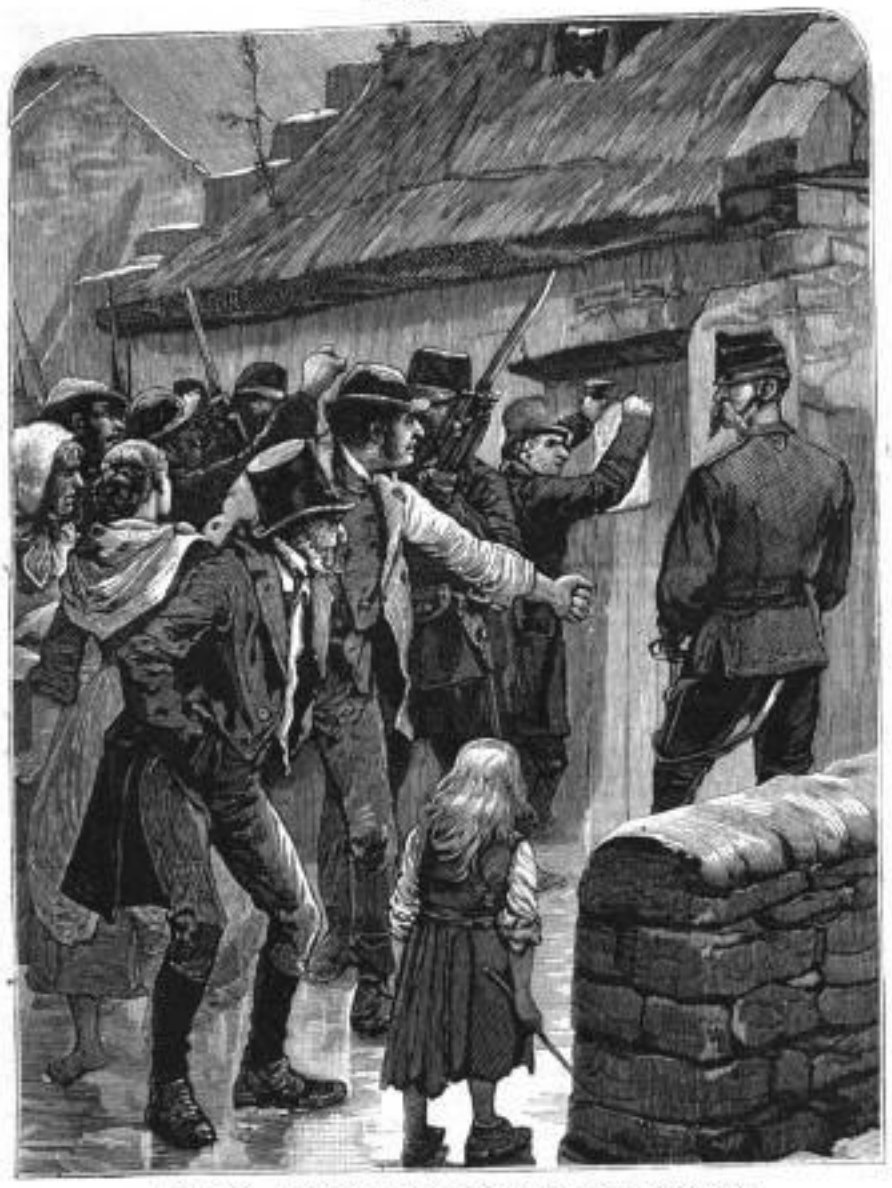
The North German Gazette declares that the purpose of Russia in erecting the fortifications on her western frontier is to cause a belief among the Russian people that a German attack is apprehended.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says that a private telegram from Tiflis reports that Persia is actively assembling troops, and trustworthy information has been received that the Persian army will march on Herat.

A deputation of members of the Canadian Parliament will shortly wait on Sir Leonard Tilley, Minister of Finance, and ask for increased protection on agricultural products. Among other things, they want an additional tax of 2½ cents per bushel on corn, and $2 per barrel on pork.

A large tenant-right meeting near Portadown, County Armagh, Ireland, on February 25th, was attacked by 3,000 Orangemen, armed with bludgeons, who stormed the platform and then dispersed the meeting. The tenant-right men were outnumbered, and twenty of them were seriously injured. The Orange party considered the meeting to be of a seditious character.

In the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, February 23d, a Bill passed its third reading giving the Government the necessary power to appoint a commission to ascertain the value of property at Niagara Falls, in view of a possible arrangement between the Dominion Government and the Government of New York State to form an International Park, as suggested by Lord Dufferin.



The India budget shows a surplus of £119,000 for 1879-80, and the estimate for 1881 shows a surplus of £417,000. The above results are reached after paying from the ordinary revenue all charges on account of famines, the Afghan war and the frontier railways. The war expenditure in 1879-80 was £3,216,000. The total net war expenditure to the end of 1881, including 1879-80, is estimated at £8,750,000.

Dean Stanley received an address with 2,200 signatures on February 24th, and gave audience to a deputation protesting against the proposed erection of a monument in Westminster Abbey to the memory of the late Prince Imperial. Dean Stanley refused to alter his decision in the matter, and said, if he were to give way in this instance, it would open the door for complaints from every party against honors to rivals.

General Luperon has issued a decree in Santo Domingo which is intended to make the island an intermediate station for the Panama Canal Company. Any port the company may select on the island is declared a free port for the company; the vessels chartered by the company are to pay only pilotage and sanitary dues; all materials belonging to the company are to be exempt from import and export duties; and any State grounds needed for storage purposes by the company are to be furnished free of charge.

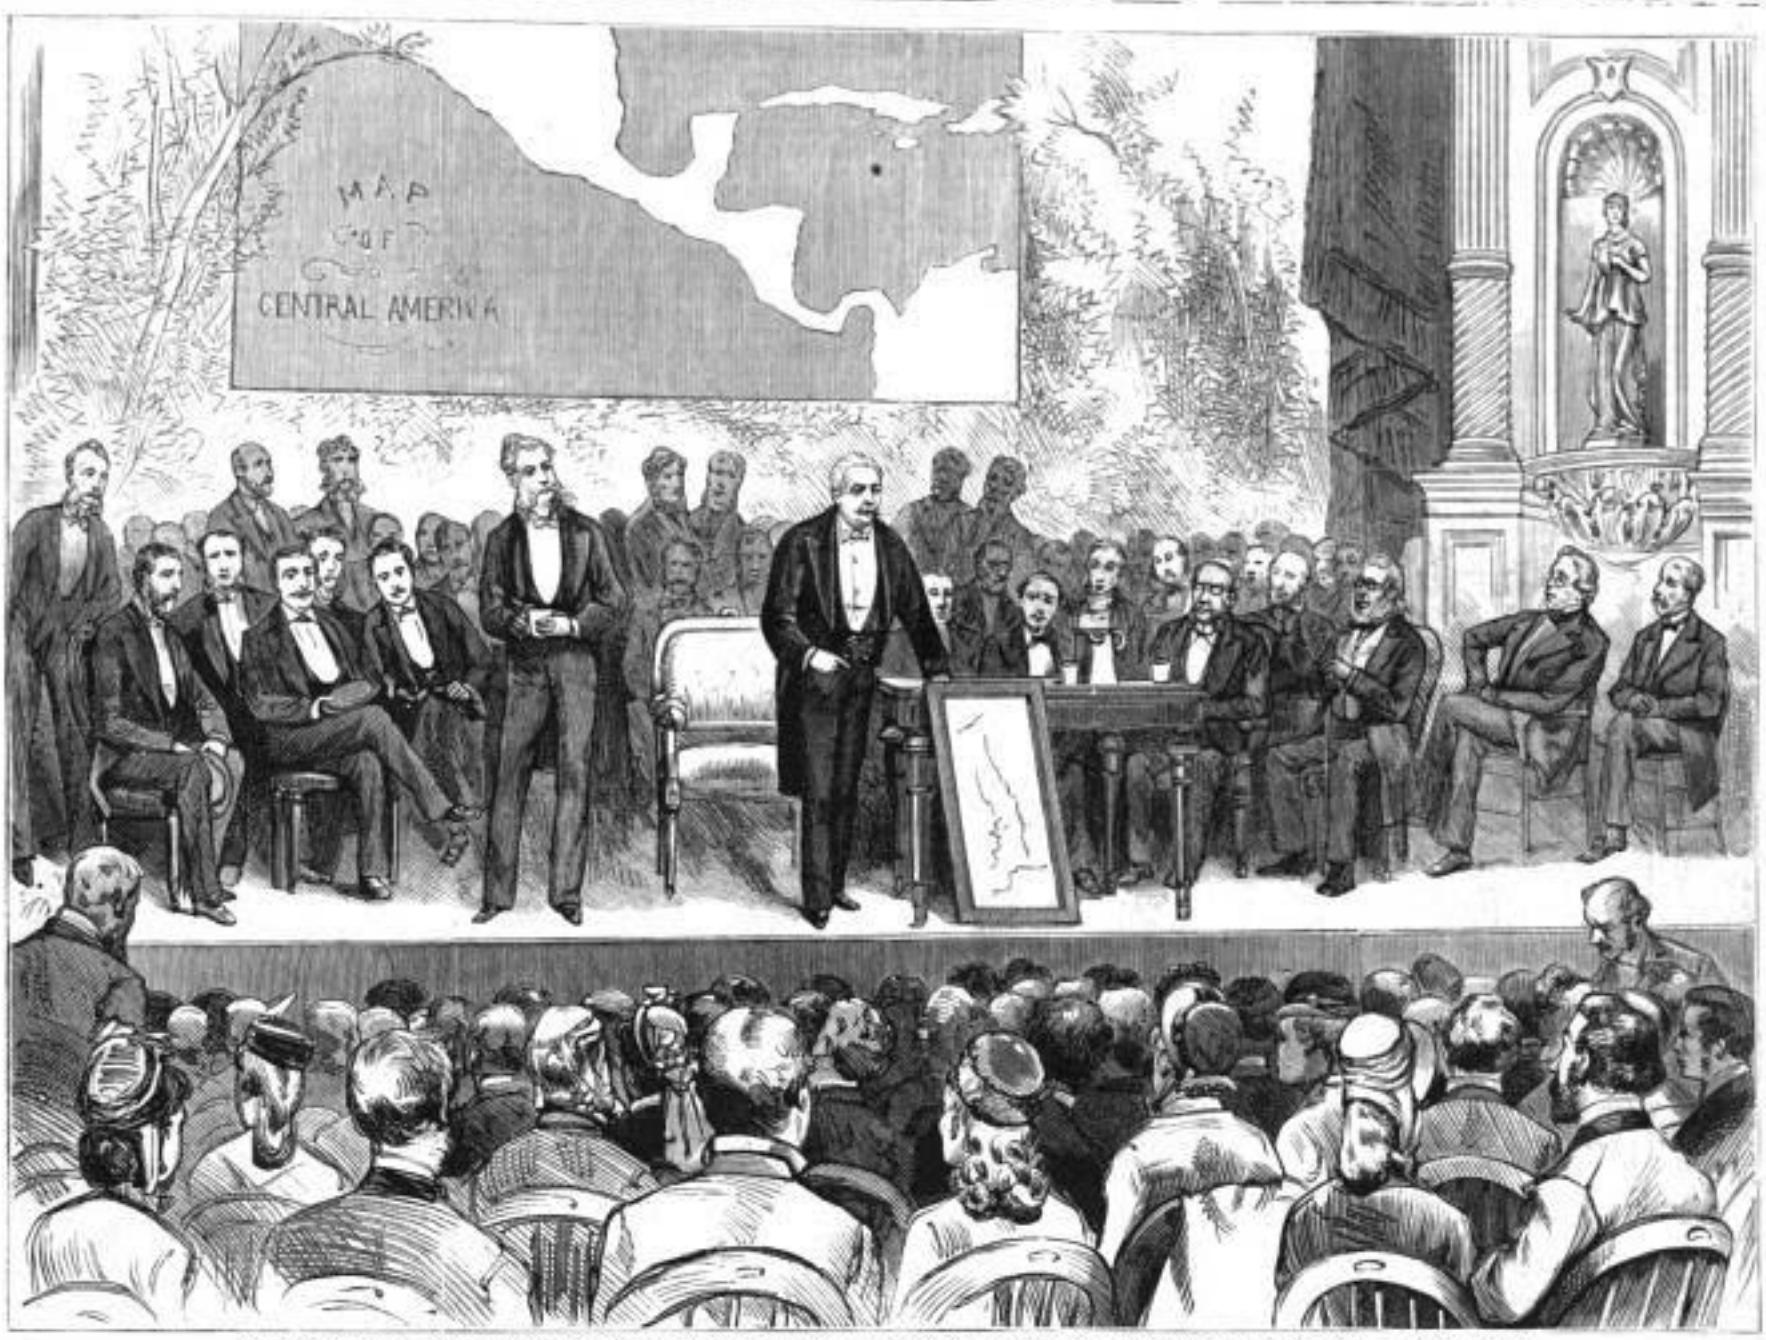
Digitized by Google

The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 23.

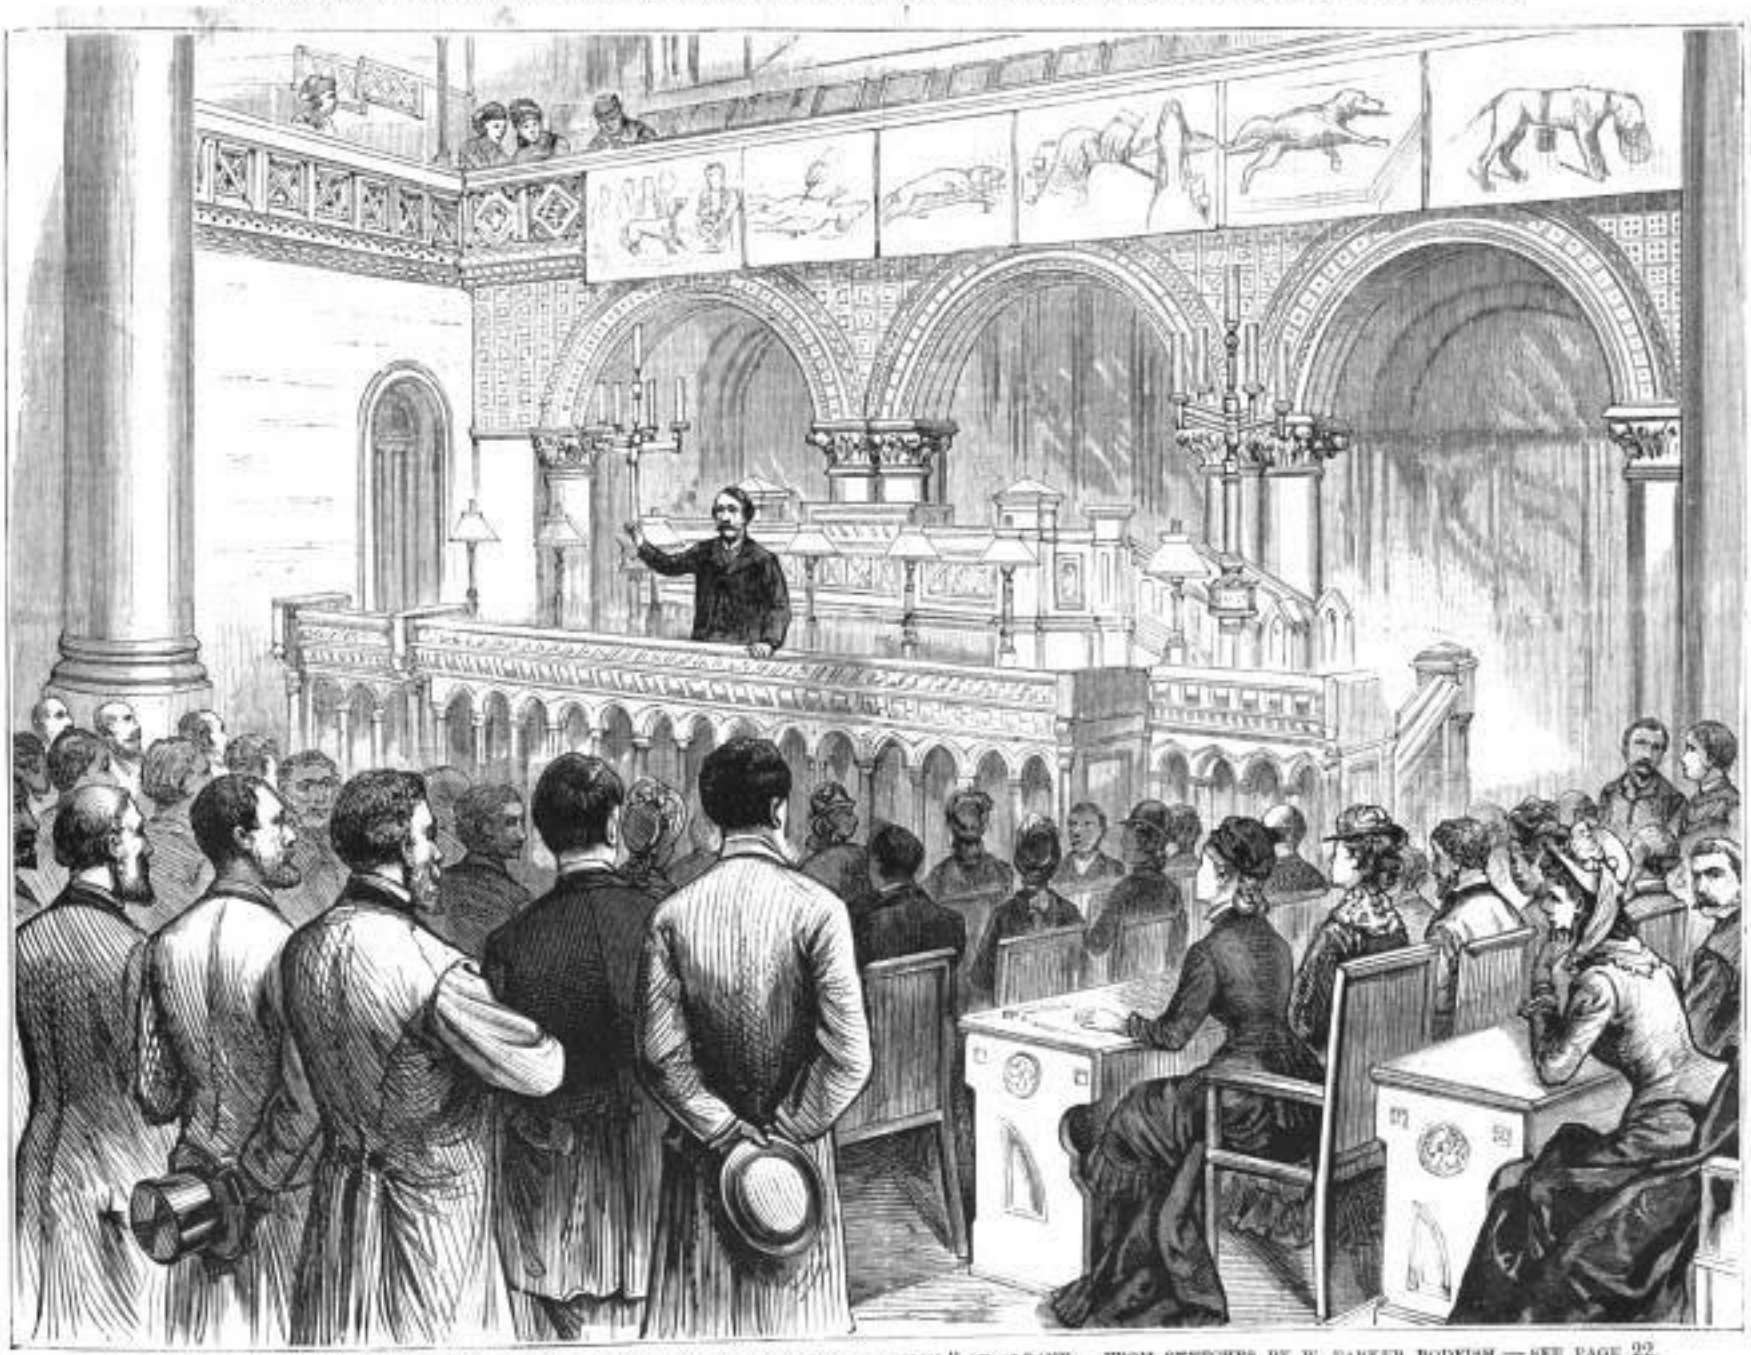
IRELAND.—SERVING A PROCESS NEAR HEADFORD, GALWAY.

ENGLAND.—DRILL OF VOLUNTEER AMBULANCE CORPS AT GUILDHALL.

SWEDEN.—OPENING OF THE DIET BY KING OSCAR II.



ENGLAND.—THE FRONT OPPOSITION BENCH IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS—A LATE SITTING AT THE END OF THE SESSION.



ENGLAND.—QUEEN VICTORIA PROCEEDING TO OPEN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT, ON FEBRUARY 5TH.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—RECEPTION OF M. DE LESSEPS BY THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS, FEBRUARY 26TH.—SEE PAGE 23.

NEW YORK.—HENRY BERGH ADDRESSING A LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON "VIVISECTION," AT ALBANY.—FROM SKETCHES BY W. PARKER BODFISH.—SEE PAGE 22.

Digitized by Google

THE LAST DAY.

A DAY in the late Spring—the Venetian Spring—when the sea and the sky are at one, and earth and heaven clasp each other close. They had come across from the town that slumbrous afternoon, these two, who looked so like lovers to the eyes of the passing fishermen. They had meant to spend together this last hour of happiness over on the Lido, where they had so often walked in days past, for henceforth their lives were to lie apart. They must be lovers, thought the old fishwives, knitting at their cottage doors among their marigold beds, watching the two lithe figures outlined against the dreaming horizon, the man's head bent low as he walked, the girl's face turned upwards to meet his gaze. They were alone, with only the wide, pale channel and its phantom sails on the one side, the sandy dunes covered with flowering furze, shutting out the town and the lagoon on the other.

"Those sails in the distance torment me with their purposeless vanishing and appearing," said Elinor Day. "They remind me of the journey before me. Mr. Egbert, you tell fortunes; tell me mine! Where am I to be five years from to-day? The time is ripe for prophecy." She smiled at him with a dowy tenderness in her blue eyes, and a strange quiver about her mouth.

"I cannot tell you where you will be, but I can easily tell you what you will be," replied Julian Egbert. "I see you as plainly as if your future self were here—a lovely woman, sweet, tender in all her relations, because of intrinsic purity and principle, but with a heart restless, dissatisfied, full of unkept promise—a woman whose pillow will bear the trace of midnight tears, whose waking will be a prayer to bear on to the end her self-imposed and weary burden of a loveless marriage."

"But there you are mistaken," said the girl. "Mr. Wortley worships me. I know that I am doing a wise thing in marrying him. When I engaged myself to him, he seemed to fill all the conditions women demand in their husbands. It is only since I have known you, Julian, that I look at the world with different eyes. Why did I not meet you first, or why——"

"Why am I not Mr. Wortley? you would say," replied the young man, flushing hotly, "why can I not give you the things of this world? The man you are going to marry can give you those—he can never give you content. I know you too well, Elinor. You are an artist to your finger-tips, a poet in your slightest action, and you talk of happiness with a man whose sole interest lies in stocks and bonds and the constant rush and whirl of a business life. Bah! my child, you are wrecking yourself on a hidden reef!"

"You are according me more of a prophecy than I asked for, Mr. Egbert," said the girl, coldly, and attempted to withdraw her small gloved hand from his arm, but he caught at it passionately and carried it to his lips.

A tall, dark figure came in sight, outlined against the sea, in a long black gown, with a high cylindrical hat—one of the priests from the Greek convent in the heart of Venice. He looked at the lovers wistfully, blotting out the sunlight as he passed, like the black presentiment even then entering the brightness of their lives.

"It is strange," continued the young man, "that women, knowing that their lives after marriage are so entirely at the mercy of one man's will, can deliberately throw themselves into that moral bondage for the sake of a few baubles. Time and again have you told me that your tastes were simple, your desires moderate, that you cared little for money and the things it gives, and yet for so slight cause you will pledge yourself to a lifelong lie."

"How can I take back my word?" said the girl, in a strained voice—"how inflict upon a man who loves me as passionately as you say you do, a wound that may cause him great pain, and for what? How am I to know, Julian—Mr. Egbert—that your love for me may not be only a painter's caprice. It is your ideal you love, not myself, and when I belong to you the illusion may fall away from your eyes, the charm from me, just as that bark which in the distance, with its golden sail, seemed like a tropical bird, now that it has reached the shore is only the dingy boat by means of which the poor fisherman earns his living. A clever woman once warned me against marrying an idealist. How am I to know that she was not right?"

"It was some sordid, calculating woman, whose nature had not the depth to feel the pain of a loveless life, or whose experience had embittered her."

He stooped and picked up a shell—a little rosy thing that had drifted over from some far coast—perhaps from Africa and the tropic seas, only to lie and sparkle in the Spring sunlight on the Lido sands. "It is like you, Elinor, delicate and transparent and full of subtle nuances that few men could discern or appreciate, certainly no man whose attrition with the world had made him as smooth and superficial as yonder wave-washed pebble, and about as interesting! Curse him! I hate the very thought of him."

"You are unjust, Julian," said the girl. "It is only your jealousy that blinds you. Look, it is a good face, and there was a time when I felt safe in trusting myself to the care of the man who owns it." She touched a spring in the slender band she wore about her wrist, a plate of gold flew back and disclosed a small photograph—a man of perhaps forty, cheerful, healthy, smiling, evidently of kindly nature and benevolent disposition towards the world, and holding himself to occupy an important place in its economy.

Everything about him was as open, as free, as full of unrelieved high lights as the American life into which he had been born. Had he known why these two stood there on the Venetian seashore, looking long upon his face, would he have cared? It seemed almost as if the crisis which to this girl and this man was the supreme moment of their lives, would have been to his robust nature only one episode the more. He loved Elinor Day in his ready, hearty fashion. Her delicacy and dainty grace of face and manner had won his heart at their first meeting. It was at a ball in Paris. A few waltzes, a few flowers, a few love-gifts, and he had left for home with her kiss of promise on his lips. He had wooed a hundred women in his time, but now he thought of marrying and settling down, and Elinor Day exactly filled his ideal of a wife. It is true her ideas were somewhat crude to his superior judgment, but she was very young, only nineteen, and had passed most of her life in Europe. A little experience of American life under his guidance would soon teach her to regard persons and things in their normal light. Thus Elinor Day, looking out upon life with wide-open eyes, but half understanding her own heart, found herself pledged to mate with a nature as opposite to her own as is one pole to another. Late in the Winter she had come down to Venice, and there she had met Julian Egbert.

"You cannot imagine," said Julian, after a long silence, "how utterly antipathetic that face is to me; not because you belong to him, though Heaven knows that is bitter enough, but because of the repulsion of temperament. The man carries materialist written all over him. Elinor, my child, you are flinging yourself away. Even though you do not care for me, free yourself from this tie for your own happiness."

He caught her hand as he spoke and held it fast, leading her over the pebbles and the sea moss and the wind-scorched, broken furze. It lay passive in his strong clasp, only answering now and then by a little helpless flutter to the firm pressure that was not for a moment relaxed. She was his for that one short afternoon; his for some three brief golden hours, filled with the scent of the sea and the shore, the murmur of waves, the rustling of the long sea-grass and the cries of the seabirds circling above the sand. He would hold the little hand fast to be a memory to him in the long, dreary years that stretched out before him like the sail-flecked horizon.

They left the shore and struck into a side-path between hedges of young green things, slender flowering trees, budding vines. Back from the road stood a small, low-eaved house, with only one room, through the open door of which they saw rows of blue plates against the wall and a little shrine decked with violets and sunlight streaming over the coarse white beds. On the threshold sat a peasant girl in red kerchief and gold beads, fondling a child with a yellow curly head, like the little St. John of the picture. A man at work in the garden stopped and leaned on his spade and looked at the frolicking pair. Elinor felt the strong hand grasping hers tremble, and with a strange impulse she raised her eyes and met her lover's passionate gaze. They passed on through a little grove of straight budding trees, with trunks covered with ivy that stretched its long arms over the ground, entangling the wind-blown violets. Through the tree-spaces the towers of the city shone faint and pale. They stood a moment looking over the lagoon. Suddenly Julian laughed.

"What beauty do you imagine your fiancé would see in Venice? He would probably wonder why they did not pull down these dingy old buildings and put up new."

Elinor smiled in spite of her heavy heart.

"I have no doubt of it. I remember in Paris, the only things he took much interest in, outside the American clubs, were the improvements—the new boulevards and things like that. How large the violets are here."

She stooped and gathered a few, while Julian's eyes followed her as she bent over among the flowers, her lithe shape, her delicate, fair head, and all the thousand little touches of expression in dress and personality that made Elinor Day the ideal of poetic girlhood to this dreaming, enthusiastic man. Framed by the ivy of the trees, she seemed to him like the incarnation of the Venetian Spring—so subtle or ethereal—or some wood goddess just awakened to life. Mr. Wortley had seen in her only a very charming girl, perhaps a little better form than the girls in his own set at home, but too quiet to make much of a sensation in society, and, therefore, likely to make the better wife.

They wandered on to a broad, sunny space, where the new-made earthworks stood dark against the turf, and a jaded artillery horse or two, with a few soldiers, were patiently making their way from one fort to another. Elinor tripped over a low, gray stone half embedded in the turf, and would have fallen but that her companion's strong arm was about her in a flash.

"It is some old Jew's grave," he said, glancing at the strange characters cut into the rust-worn slab. "The other side the hedge lies the ancient burial-place of the Venetian Jews."

The leafless bushes concealed a fence over which the young man sprang lightly, and then, turning, lifted the girl gently from the ground as if she had been a child, carried her some five or six yards, holding her close the while. The color came and went over his handsome face as her stifled protests sounded close to his ear. All the latent passion of the man's nature found an outlet in that swift embrace.

So sudden was the action, that scarcely a moment had passed before Elinor found herself seated upon a vast, worn slab, leaning against one still larger, bearing strange emblems of death and mortality, and carved in Hebrew letters with old-world holy words. All about her stood these mute watchers, some erect, with lichens filling their gaunt carvings, some leaning, weary with their weight of centuries, with grass and daisies springing from their crevices, others almost buried in the turf as if the inanimate stone had learned from the poor dust below the shrinking and self-abasement of the old proscribed race. It was pitiful to see them, gray and hoar, like ghosts in beard and gaberdine, isolated in death as in life. The two young creatures that sat there in the silence, broken but by the lagoon murmur, found at first no words to utter the thoughts that rushed over them. Julian Egbert had thrown himself down at the feet of the woman he loved.

"It is one of those days when one is filled with an intense desire to live," said he, at length, "when the dead of the centuries seem utterly at war with the throbbing hearts of the present. Time was I would have been glad to lie down here on the seashore among the old outcasts and slumber on for ever, but now I must have life at any price, even with despair and misery. I think it is because you are with me, Elinor, and for to-day at least life is complete."

He bent his head until his lips touched her dress. She did not see the gesture, but when he raised his head she was looking down upon him with a fixed, earnest gaze, one that he had never seen in her eyes before, as of the awakening of passion in a woman's soul. He almost trembled under the force of it, so little had he divined the possibilities of this slight girl-nature. Then his heart gave a throb of triumph.

He felt that he had conquered. No words were needed between them. He wound his arms about her as she sat, her head drooped low against the mystical winged figure on the tomb. A bird sang loud in the hedge. An early butterfly fluttered from one grave-grown flower to another. The hum of the great city floated across the lagoon. All things were instinct with life. From the dust of the old dead a new flower had blossomed into being.

HENRY BERGH ON VIVISECTION.

A BILL in relation to vivisection having been presented to the New York Legislature, and a joint committee of both Houses having been appointed to hear arguments pro et contra, on the evening of February 19th Mr. Henry Bergh, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, whose name is familiar in the mouth as a household word, and whose philanthropic efforts have won for him the affection of millions of human hearts, delivered a masterly and thrilling address in support of the Bill, a brief synopsis of which we present to our readers. Mr. Bergh began by saying:

"The existence of animals is incomprehensible to us! Are these creatures merely useless machines? Behold my dog which sleeps there in the chimney-corner—see how agitated he is at this moment—he is dreaming. I call him, and lo! his visions vanish, and he becomes calm. I take my hat, and he leaps and barks—stares at me and studies me, rolls at my feet, runs to the door, continues gay or becomes sad, according as my will exhibits itself. What is it that is passing in his brain? 'Behold!' I exclaim, 'an animal that evidently thinks—wishes—remembers—combines.'

"Yes, there are moments when I am tempted to believe that it is a spirit, for I discover in his intelligence the phenomena which exist in my own, and which establish a correspondence between our purposes and our thoughts—our two individualities meet and comprehend one another, the imaginary relations of men and brutes are extinguished, and I seem to stand face to face with a possessor of a share of that immortal essence which man inherits from his Maker.

"My horse, too; is he only a senseless machine, manufactured for my profit and pleasure, destitute of feeling and reflection? Are those muscles and sinews, which spare me the fatigues of locomotion, mere wheels and ropes of iron, set in motion by art or chemistry, having neither reason nor purpose in view? Is that graceful figure, bent and strained at my command, a senseless mass of thoughtless matter; those gentle eyes, the bright creations of an artist's fancy?

"In 1875 the Queen of Great Britain appointed a commission to inquire into the practice of subjecting live animals to experiments for scientific purposes. The report of that commission was made in January, 1876, and contained 288 pages of double column royal octavo size, and the man addressing you, I am interested in saying, survived the reading of that report in its entirety. Forty-five physiologists, surgeons and physicians appeared before the commission, most of whom were vivisectionists. If the composition of that commission was accidental, it was a remarkable accident.

"Dr. John Anthony, of Middlesex Hospital, one of the witnesses, must be a funny fellow. He is also an ardent vivisector, and entertains strong doubts as to the lower animals being sensible to pain. This luminary says: 'Beetles with a pin stuck through them have walked off without inconvenience to a neighboring insect and eaten him up; and the "Daddy long legs" will part with his limbs and manifest no particular disapprobation. I do not think they experience any pain,' he concludes; 'they live on until the day of their destiny comes,' which, I presume, means vivisection day!

"William Farmer, Professor of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, stated that he had the largest class in Great Britain under his charge; and that he knew of a very eminent man who, by immolating many thousands of animals, hoped to find out the seat of the soul, or the seat of life, and yet even this soulless expert admitted to the commission that 'physiological teaching, up to a recent period, was not practical teaching, but was the result of books and lectures.'

"Thos. H. Huxley, LL.D., F.R.S., one of the commission, in his 'Elementary Physiology' mentions the tremendous discovery that by 'cutting the sympathetic nerve, a rabbit can be made to blush.' But blushing was beyond the power of Huxley for performing this cruel deed.

"The Medical Times and Gazette of August, 1861, flippantly mentions an experiment on a living dog, which consisted in forcing half a pint of boiling water into the stomach 'in order to show that the animal tissue could be disorganized, and that the animal, after giving evidence of great suffering, vomited blood and died.'

"Listen to what Brachet, a French physiologist, says of himself: 'I inspired a dog with great aversion for me by plaguing or inflicting some pain or other upon it as often as I saw it. When this feeling was carried to its height, so that the animal became furious as soon as it saw me, I put out its eyes. I could then appear before it without its manifesting any aversion. I spoke, and immediately its barking and furious movements proved the passion which animated it. I destroyed the drums of its ears, and disorganized the internal ear as much as I could. When an intense inflammation had rendered him deaf, I filled up his ears with wax. He could no longer hear at all! Then I went to his side, spoke loud, and even caressed him, without his falling into a rage—it seemed even sensible to my caresses!' But what was all this to prove? Why simply that if one brute has an aversion to another, it does not feel or show that aversion when it has no means of knowing that the other brute is present.

Mr. Bergh gave a ghastly and lurid description of a meeting of vivisectionists in Paris, and went on to say:

"On the 23d of November I dispatched an officer of the society I represent to attend an exhibition of a similar sort at one of the colleges of the City of New York. It was necessary to employ much stratagem in order to gain admission—recalling to my mind the jealous suspicion of the ancient order of the Inquisition.

"After a short delay the professor appeared upon the platform, and the performance began. A live dog was brought in—said to be under the influence of an anæsthetic—and the experimenter made a deep gash into the breast of the animal, into which he inserted the nozzle of a bellows; but for what scientific purpose my messenger, not being a scholar, could not determine.

"The palpitating creature was then ripped open from one end to the other, so that the entire interior was exposed to view, and the heart taken out and put upon a sort of a plate and passed around among the class to show that it still palpitated, although removed from the body.

Mr. Bergh thus concluded:

"My duty is nearly ended. With a brief peroration I shall ask you to take these facts home with you, and in the solitude of your chambers determine whether these insults to that Immortal Being who made us and our "poor relations," the lower animals, shall go on; whether thousands of young men shall yearly be graduated from our colleges, whose preceptors' hands are daily incarnated with the warm blood of tortured animals, uselessly and wickedly slaughtered, as I have shown, to afford them éclat; and a demoralizing spectacle to a rising generation, to whom you may some day intrust the sacred honor and lives of our families."

GEN. GRANT'S TOUR IN MEXICO.

GENERAL GRANT has traveled round the world, has feasted his eyes upon the picturesque and beautiful in almost every clime, has beheld the marvels of ancient and modern architecture, has traversed viaducts two thousand years old, railways aged but as many hours, and yet the ride which the ex-President has just taken from Vera Cruz to Esperanza, that wild-looking spot at the summit of the Boca del Monte, surpasses all and everything of the kind he has yet seen. Out through the crumbling old walls of the City of the True Cross, heaped across the tawny sands to Soledad, where was signed the convention between Doblado and General Prim; on past Paso del Macho to the San Alego bridge, where all the supreme beauty of Mexican scenery flashed voluptuously upon him: past the bridge, 318 feet long, springing from out a bed of verdure so varied, so glowing, so concentrated, that it would serve for a couch for Titania herself—reds, and yellows, and blues, and greens, and purples, and lichens, and mosses, and ferns—a very tropical glory; past creepers clinging amorously to the half-yielding trees, parasites beautiful as butterflies, and fluttering on the branches as if just alighted and about to take wing again; past the lovely Chiquit Mountains that form the barrier between the interior and the coast; through the frigid country, the home of that small brown bean so dearly loved by the descendants of Cortez and Montezuma; past Cordoba enshrined in vivid foliage, and onwards to the famous Barranca de Metlac, so full of splendor, so full of horror, so grandly Dantesque. Onwards, with the snow-capped peak of Orizaba white, awfully white and still, high against the keen, full, blue sky. Onwards, squirming in and out through mountain gorges, until the valley in which the City of Orizaba lies nestling comes into sight, and the quaint little station, surrounded by menacing mountains, is reached at last.

Orizaba, where the ex-President stopped on the night of the 20th, is eighty-two miles from Vera Cruz. It contains about twenty-two thousand inhabitants. Its streets are narrow and crooked, the houses are for the most part of stonework, and generally of one story high, the roofs being of glazed tiles, tinted in many colors. The most remarkable building is the Lonja, or Exchange, inaugurated in 1872. Orizaba contains handsome churches. Its principal or parochial church possesses a life-size figure of the Saviour, presented to it in 1818 by the illustrious Palafox y Mendoza, Bishop of Puebla and Viceroy of Spain. The suburbs of Orizaba are delightfully picturesque, resembling as they do one vast, glowing garden of the rarest tropical flowers and trees, while the fragrance is a perpetual bouquet. I wandered for hours in orange and banana groves, while my eyes fairly banqueted in color-glory.

The aggregate value of the houses in Orizaba, which number nineteen hundred, is $2,311,289. In addition to the Lonja are the Municipal Hall, the Teatro Lave and La Borda Mill. To Orizaba hie the Veracruzians on the first appearance of the dreaded vomito. It was a favorite residence of the ill-fated Emperor Maximilian, and it was at Orizaba that Marshal Bazaine took leave of the unhappy monarch—a ghastly shadow looming over both. In the direction of the western portion of the city stands Mont Borrego, noted in the annals of the French occupation as the point where the Mexican army, 6,000 strong, was routed on the 19th of June, 1863, by one hundred zouaves, who, under cover of the night, scaled its steep sides like cats, and drove the enemy before them helter-skelter. A rude wooden cross marks the spot upon the summit where two sturdy, baggy-breeched veterans "fighting fell." It was to Orizaba that Cortez with his band of desperadoes hastened in the hope of looting its treasures, of the richness of which the Aztecs gave such glowing descriptions.

The morning upon which the ex-President quitted Orizaba en route to the halls of the Montezumas was fresh and fragrant and perfume-laden with a pure, champagney atmosphere, vivid color in the verdure-clad hills, in the sapphire sky, in the opal-tinted snowcap of the extinct volcano! A few short miles brings us to the Barranca del Infernillo, or Little Hell. The Barranca is a chasm that divides two craggy steeps, whose dizzy depths can scarcely be measured by the eye. To gaze downwards causes dizziness. Bridges span rifts, and gulfs, and yawning chasms; tunnels pierce opposing mountains and rocky promontories. We emerged from the horror of utter darkness to behold grim destruction gibbering at us as we sped along in mid air; a nut, a bolt, or a rail out of place, and what a crash!—the crack of doom. The Indians, in passing, devoutly make the sign of the Cross, and remain in silent prayer, scarcely daring to venture so much as a glance at the awful depths. There is no trace of vegetation in this pass; not a tree, not a shrub, not a fern relieves the sheer black walls of rock. The rays of the sun never penetrate the gloom, and an inky river hoarsely murmurs as it rushes onwards in this dark abyss. What a leap into life and light as we emerged from the horrors of the Infernillo and traversed the plains of La Joya—the Jewel. On our right stood verdure-clad mountains, dappled with bright flowers and crowned by the foliage of forest trees. To the left the valley extending itself to the horizon, rich in color as a Turkey rug. In its midst a silvern stream upon a bed of sand, yellow in the daylight as molten gold, while the glacier-capped Orizaba, flaunting its white mantle in delicate relief against the Italian sky, stood sentinel over the many ranges of the Sierras, in distant and paramount grandeur.

At Maltrata we awaited the arrival of the train from the City of Mexico, and we watched for it high in air, gazing upwards as if at a balloon. Presently we beheld it like a child's toy slowly passing along the verdure-clad summit of the mountain. Now it disappeared behind a jutting promontory only to reappear as it sped across a fairy-like bridge, again to be lost in tufted foliage. Anon the white steam betrayed its whereabouts, and once more it came into view, larger, more defined, but still high upon the mountain's brow. Then, zigzag, it twisted in and out and under and over until it reached the level, and in a few moments clank, clanked into the station. How dusty the occupants of the English-shaped carriages looked! The train was made up of first, second and third class, a special car being filled with swarthy-looking, linen-clad soldiers. A similar escort is provided for every train. The rancheros of this region were wont, in the good old diligence times, to cry "Halt!" in the king's name and to annex the effects of the passengers. If a diligence could be stopped, why not a train? How much greater the plunder! And as these worthies, unwilling to relinquish a "profitable and hereditary profession," were in the habit of causing the train to come to a standstill while they proceeded—always politely—to rifle its occupants, a paternal government stepped forward, and through the support of a military escort restored confidence to those who were compelled to travel between the capital and the coast. After a delay of some twenty minutes, during which I tasted my first tortilla, pulque and dulce, we resumed our journey cloudwards.

Digitized by Google

When I gazed at the rugged cumbres above me, at the black spots which denoted so many entrances to so many tunnels, at the delicate tracery of the iron bridges, at the perpendicular and seemingly insurmountable barriers towering over me, and when I came to consider that thirteen miles of climbing, with an ascent of 2,300 feet, had to be accomplished, then I felt as in the hunting-field, facing a double ditch—I wished myself "well over." Upwards! upwards! upwards! the train, twining like a serpent, skirting steeps on ledges of rock, swinging round curves till the cars leaned horribly over, crossing ravines and chasms and clefts, and diving into the very heart of the mountain, on one side a grim wall of rock, on the other a fall of two thousand feet sheer. Upwards! upwards! upwards! till the beautiful valley of Maltrata lay beneath us a soft and verdant sward in the lap of a giant mountain, and two thousand feet below us till the fields resembled the squares upon a chess-board—the church the queen, the trim white houses so many pawns—or one vast plain with a bunch of daisies in the centre, a few of the wee winsome flowers being scattered here and there. It seemed so strange to be above everything, even above some fleecy clouds that hung suspended over the valley like a dark illusion veil. Orizaba still, however, frowned majestically down upon us, high as we were, and although we soared above the tops of giant forest trees, and until the largest objects in the valley became so dwarfed as to be almost unrecognisable, the volcano still maintained its superb and awful grandeur—still told us that he yet had twelve thousand feet to the good. At Boca del Monte there was a general move in the direction of overcoats and wraps, the altitude being 7,223 feet above Vera Cruz. We passed out of the tierra templada into the tierra fria, and into the region of cacti and maguey. What a change in thirteen short miles! At Esperanza thirty minutes are allowed for refreshment. Apizaco is the next place of any importance on the road, and here is the junction with the line to Puebla. From Apizaco to the City of Mexico the country is one continuous maguey plantation, slightly varied by crops and meadows where the soil permits. In the tierra templada I passed over fields in which as many as sixty plows were at work. Here the trace of a plow was scarcely perceptible. Maguey, maguey everywhere; and where no maguey flourished the plains were clothed with small, lean, wiry horses. We rattled on in a dense cloud of dust through the pulque country—the pulque is the lager beer of Mexico—and when the engine stopped for water, we stopped for pulque. This liquid is to the Mexican what wine is to the Frenchman, potcen to the Irish peasant, and it tastes like sour buttermilk, which it also resembles in color and density.

The dust during my ride from a place called Apam to the capital was simply stifling. In vain we closed the doors, the windows; in vain we turned our backs to the direction from whence it was coming; in vain we stuffed handkerchiefs into our mouths, and muffled ourselves as though the mercury was twenty-eight degrees below zero. It was not to be resisted: it came down upon us like the wolf on the fold; it entered our eyes, our noses, our mouths; it filtered through our garments, clinging to us like the shirt of Nessus; it blinded, it choked us.

The ex-President arrived at the Buena Vista station on the night of the 31st. The depot was illuminated with Chinese lanterns and gayly decorated with American flags. Rockets were sent up as, attended by five hundred of the Rural Guard, each man armed with a blazing torch, General Grant drove to the Minería in the Calle Maravcala, the building prepared for his residence while sojourning in the city. The Rural Guard are a superb-looking set of fellows, their uniforms being intensely picturesque. Fancy a tall, well-knit, handsome, strapping young fellow in a gray felt sombrero, its wide leaf richly laced with silver, a buff jerkin, buff baldrick embroidered in silver, and buff boots up to his hips.

The Minería, or School of Mines, is externally a very imposing stone structure, while internally it resembles a Roman palace. It possesses a very large patio, or open court, surrounded by a colonnade of arches, surmounted by galleries, approached by wide, low stone steps, massive and elegant. Long colonnades give access to numerous halls, each hall being appropriated to some particular purpose. It is here that Young Mexico receives a gratuitous education in the higher branches, especially in the secrets of the vast mineral resources of this teeming country. There is, perhaps, no other country on the face of the globe so rich in its minerals as Mexico. The products of its mines in gold and silver have been estimated at the enormous amount of $8,500,000,000, equivalent to one-sixth of the total estimated wealth of the United States! It was in the Minería that certain wares brought to the City of Mexico by the American Industrial Deputation last year were exhibited.

DE LESSEPS.

THE brilliant, vivacious and ubiquitous Vicomte De Lesseps was the guest of the American Society of Civil Engineers on the evening of the 26th ult., and in the theatre attached to the Union League Club delivered an address which for style, charm, interest and brilliancy should serve as a model for scientific lecturers in general, and those of this country in particular. In one moment M. de Lesseps was not only acquainted with his large audience, but on terms of intimacy with them. He took them into his confidence, and with that delightful entre nous which ever acts so talismanically when spoken at the right half-second. M. de Lesseps spoke of the difficulties encountered in the construction of the Suez Canal, an enterprise in which nobody believed. He made historical references to fresh-water canals in the time of the Pharaohs, and jocularly recalled the edict of Philip II. of Spain, who, jealous of other nations when a scheme to cut a canal at Tehuantepec was proposed, decreed that any person who should speak of an interoceanic canal should be considered impious, and that the penalty would be capital punishment. M. de Lesseps hoped that this would not be his fate. Lord Palmerston fostered England's hostility to the Suez Canal scheme, but the sympathy of America was substantially expressed. Of all the powers at the Geographical Congress, Russia appeared to the greatest advantage, and was thanked in the name of the Congress by M. de Lesseps. A remark was made that the moon always advances, but that Russia stands still. Subsequently in the suite of M. Thiers, M. de Lesseps, in the presence of the English and Russian Ambassadors, remembering the remark, said, in reference to the exhibit made by Russia at the Paris Exposition, that now Russia advances and the moon stands still. M. de Lesseps then spoke of the surveys made by Lieutenant Bonaparte-Wyse and the first Darien exploration of Airato Na Pipé. He took occasion to deny politely but emphatically Admiral Ammen's assertion that Americans were not listened to, and referred to the report of the congress for proof of their having received every courtesy. In fact, M. De Lesseps was remonstrated with because he allowed the Americans so much latitude. After the vote in favor of the Panama Railroad route, M. De Lesseps accepted the control of the enterprise, and to such acceptance he owed the pleasure and honor of addressing the meeting. He had been twenty-nine years in the diplomatic service with his mouth closed; now he proposed to say everything he thought. "When the vote on the canal was taken," said M. De Lesseps, "I had my wife before me as she is to-night, and she was not too well pleased, for you know that such business turns the household upside down." In conclusion, M. De Lesseps said all were at liberty to work on the canal. His experience in the Desert was that if 2,000 persons were hired to work, 2,000 more would come to feed and amuse them. In this case, what's enough for one is enough for two. He mentioned it as singular that the negroes on the Isthmus speak the purest Castilian.

Everybody was charmed with the brilliant little vicomte, and during that too brief address he made more than one friend for the Chagres Canal.

IRISH RELIEF FUND IN WASHINGTON.

MRS. GENERAL SHERMAN, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Madame Maxime Outrey, Mrs. Secretary Sherman, Mrs. Admiral Porter, Mrs. Speaker Randall, and other true and tender ladies of Washington whose hearts responded to the piteous cry from the starving Irish, got up an amateur dramatic entertainment at Odd Fellow's Hall, Washington, on the night of Tuesday, the 24th ultimo. The programme spoke in these tear-laden words:

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.

The proceeds of this Entertainment are for the direct relief of the poor in Ireland, in whose behalf an appellant utters the following cry:

"I appeal to all Christian men and women for help for this district, where we have had most malignant fever all the Spring and Summer of last year, where at present we have actual starvation; where many of your fellow-creatures are obliged to lie all day on their straw beds to try and keep down the pangs of hunger; where there are hundreds of men, women and children who have not one sufficient meal a day, even of Indian meal; there are no potatoes—they are rotten in the ground; there is no turf—it is rotten in the ground; there is no credit to get the coarsest kind of food. In the name of the good God make haste and send help; every little helps; send your little so that you may share in the great work of saving the lives of your fellow-men and women."

The entertainment consisted of the performance of the "Middy Ashore," which was very creditably rendered, and a charming selection of vocal and instrumental music. The hall was tastefully decorated, and thronged with the rank, fashion and beauty of the capital. The diplomatic corps, the army and the navy were prominently represented. General Sherman stood in the front rank, as did Postmaster-General Key. The ushers, seasonably decorated with green ribbons, did their spiriting gently; and if some very attractive and elegantly-toileted young ladies did arrive a leetle late, why, the loss was their own, and the charity the gainer of their dollars.

The toilets were simply magnificent, each member of the committee vying with the other in order to lend especial éclat to the occasion. Never did a committee work with greater energy or greater zeal. The work was done thoroughly and well. For days before the entertainment the charitable ladies who volunteered to bear the heat and burden of the day toiled as though their daily bread depended upon their efforts. Not a single complimentary ticket was issued. Every admission was paid for, and every admission meant a dollar's worth of food towards the starving peasantry of the Green Isle. The work was done with a will, and the result was the handsome sum of $1,500.

Rose Legends.

IN the neighborhood of Jerusalem is a pleasant valley, which still bears the name, "Solomon's Rose Garden," and where, according to a Mohammedan myth, a compact was made between the wise man and the genii of the morning land, which was written, not in blood, like the bond between Faust and Mephistopheles, nor in gall, like our modern treaties, but with saffron and rose-water, upon the petals of white roses. In Paris, in the sixteenth century, an edict was issued requiring all Jews to wear a rose on their breast as a distinguishing mark. In the Catholic Tyrol, in the present day, betrothed swains are expected to carry a rose during the period of their betrothal, as a warning to young maidens of their engaged state. Roses have played and still play an important part in popular usages in other parts of the world. In Germany young girls deck their hair with white roses for their confirmation, their entrance into the world, and, when at the end of life's career, the aged grandmother departs to her eternal rest, a last gift, in the shape of a rose garland, is laid upon her bier. Julius Cæsar, it is recorded, was fain to hide his baldness at the age of thirty with the produce of the Roman rose-gardens, as Anacreon hid the snows of eighty under a wreath of roses. At mid-Lent the Pope sends a golden rose to particular churches or crowned heads whom he designs especially to honor. Martin Luther wore a rose in his girdle. In these instances the rose serves as a symbol of ecclesiastical wisdom. A rose was figured on the headsman's ax of the Vehmgericht. Many orders, fraternities and societies have taken the rose as their badge. The "Rosicrucians" may be instanced. The "Society of the Rose" of Hamburg, an association of learned ladies of the seventeenth century, is a less known example. It was divided into four sections, the Roses, the Lilies, the Violets, and the Pinks. The holy Medardus instituted in France the custom of "La Rosière," by which, in certain localities, a money gift and a crown of roses are bestowed upon the deservedest and most industrious maiden in the commune. The infamous Duke de Chartres established an "Order of the Rose," with a diametrically opposite intention. At Treviso a curious rose feast is or was held annually. A castle was erected with tapestry and silken hangings, and defended by the best-born maidens in the city against the young bachelors; almonds, nutmegs, roses, and squirts filled with rose water being the ammunition freely used on both sides.

State Aid to Paris Churches.

A REPORT has recently been presented to the Municipal Council of Paris, setting forth the cost of certain payments to be made for religious purposes, and of works of repair, etc., to be done in some of the churches of Paris during the present year. The estimated cost is given at 461,573 francs, of which 250,000 francs are for repairs of religious edifices, 160,000 francs towards their support, 47,300 francs for necessary expenditure by the curés, and 20,000 francs for the restoration of the Church of St. Peter at Montmartre. The value of some well-known Parisian churches is also given. St. Eustache is valued at 28,207,384 francs, of which 398,701 francs are apportioned to the works of art and the decorations in the church; St. Roch is valued at 36,852,938 francs; St. Germain of Auxerre at 22,022,800 francs; the Madeleine at 11,477,500 francs; St. Sulpice at 9,200,000 francs; St. Augustine at 7,000,000 francs; St. Clothilde at 5,287,300 francs; St. Germain-des-Près, 4,500,000 francs; Notre Dame de Lorette and St. Vincent de Paul each 3,000,000 francs; and 22 others at and over 1,000,000 francs. The works of art in churches under the supervision of the City of Paris are valued at 6,116,329 francs, of which 3,291,094 francs are apportioned to paintings, 1,776,040 francs to sculpture, and 949,295 francs to stained glass.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

The Opening of Parliament.

It is very seldom that Londoners have a chance of witnessing any state pageantry, so that when it was announced that Her Majesty would open Parliament in person, and that there would be a royal procession of greater proportions than usual, a brisk demand arose for windows overlooking the route, while the crowd in the streets was expected to be so great that barriers were erected at different points in order that the crush might be lessened. The usual good fortune of Her Majesty with respect to the weather attended the day, the fog which had enveloped the metropolis for the previous fortnight suddenly lifted, and the sun shone out brilliantly to welcome the Sovereign as she started on her way to the House of Lords from Buckingham Palace. The royal procession consisted of an escort of the First Life Guards, six state carriages, each drawn by six bays, and Her Majesty's carriage, drawn by the well-known eight cream-colored horses. At the Peers' entrance to the Houses of Parliament Her Majesty was received by a guard of honor of the Second Life Guards and the Grenadier Guards, and the guns of St. James's Park loudly proclaimed the fact that the Queen had entered the House.

Eviction in Ireland.

It is a matter for universal rejoicing that with all the troubles that to-day hang over Ireland her people are free of the danger of starvation. The relief movement both at home and abroad gathers strength every day, money is being contributed with unusual generosity, and the great heart of the world at large is beating to the right tune. An incident of the prevailing dissatisfaction is shown in our illustration, where a process-server, protected by the military force, is tacking a notice of ejectment to the door of a tenant's domicile. While the friends of suffering Ireland in the United States show no falling behind in contributions, the Irish landlords are steadily reducing the rents or remitting a portion of the half-yearly payments.

The Opening of the Swedish Diet.

The Swedish Diet for the present year opened on the 17th of January in the great Hall of the States in the Palace at Stockholm with the usual ceremonies. After divine service in the cathedral in presence of the King, Princes and members of both Chambers, the latter repaired to the Hall of the States, whither the diplomatic corps and the great dignitaries of the kingdom had already proceeded. Soon after, the Queen, accompanied by her youngest son and her ladies of honor, took her place facing the diplomatic corps. The band announced the arrival of the royal cortège, preceded by pages and heralds-at-arms. The Prince of West Gothland, Prince Houtzer, and then the King, in crown and ermine mantle, sceptre in hand, entered, with his council, and took his seat on the throne, surrounded by his sons. Silence at once prevailed and the royal speech was read, as shown in our illustration, recalling forms that have died out in most countries.

The Volunteer Ambulance Corps.

An interesting and novel kind of ceremony took place in the City of London Guildhall on January 26th. It was the presentation of certificates to members of the ambulance classes lately under the charge of Surgeon Farris, Army Medical Department; Dr. Norton, Fourth Middlesex Rifles; Surgeon Egan, Second Middlesex Rifles; Surgeon Daniels, Second Middlesex Artillery; and Surgeon Shepherd, Victoria Rifles. There was, at the same time, a display of their proficiency in the duties. The members of the four classes—250 men—wearing the undress uniform of their various regiments, which comprised most of the principal metropolitan corps, were formed up in the hall on either side, while a guard of honor from the London Rifle Brigade occupied the body of the dais. After going through the ordinary stretcher drill the company was re-formed, and a number of volunteers were laid upon the ground, bearing labels stating the fictitious wound from which they were supposed to be suffering, comprising compound fractures and wounds of the upper and lower extremities from either lance, shell or bullet. To each of these a stretcher party of four men were then marched, who, without loss of time, bandaged the unfortunate in the way possible on a field of battle, a rifle being in one case improvised as a splint for compound fractures of the leg. The certificates, to the number of a hundred and eighty-five, were presented by Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Her ladyship in a few words expressed the pleasure she had experienced in performing a duty that would commend itself to the heart of every woman in the country.

The Opposition Bench in the British Commons.

The Front Opposition Bench in the British House of Commons is occupied by eight or ten of the foremost men among English Liberal politicians of the present day. The most conspicuous figure is that of the Marquis of Hartington, nearly in the centre of our engraving; his full length is in view, leaning back in the seat, with crossed legs, the left hand in his pocket, wearing a white waistcoat and white hat. Mr. Childers, who sits at his right hand, is listening to Sir Vernon Harcourt, who seems to be pointing out something in the paper which he holds. The gentleman holding the paper close to his eyes, who sits at the left hand of Lord Hartington, is Mr. Goschen; while Mr. W. E. Forster, with double eyeglass in hand, lounging in a rather uncermonious attitude, sits at the lower end of the bench, which is shown at the right-hand side of our engraving. Next Mr. Childers, on a level with the Clerk's table and the mace laid upon it, is Sir W. V. Harcourt, with his hat in one hand and his paper in the other. Beyond are seated the oldest and the most distinguished chiefs of the Liberal party, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright and Mr. Robert Lowe occupying the posts of honor, and confronting the Ministerial leaders across the table. Several of the old members appear on an upper bench under the gallery behind. Among the persons of secondary political importance, yet worthy of note, who are seen here in the background, we remark Mr. Henry Fawcett, with dark spectacles, and Sir Charles Dilke standing, at the left-hand side of the engraving, behind the table; Mr. Plimsoll, seated behind Mr. Bright and Mr. Lowe; and Dr. Kenealy, at the back of Lord Hartington. The places occupied by these do not indicate any particular degree of close relation to the leaders of the Opposition party. Most of the seats on the back benches and below the gangway are appropriated by members on each side of the House, at their own free choice; and they are so cushioned to suit their cards in the small brass frames fixed to the backs of the benches, which are visible in our illustration.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THERE are in the capital of France no fewer than 50,000 Germans.

—THE Baptist missionaries in Japan have ordained their first preacher.

—THE Boston Board of Brokers has increased the price of admission from $2,000 to $3,000.

—A NEW political party has been formed in the Roumanian Chamber, entitled the National Democratic Party.

—THE fight in Glasgow over the running of tramway cars on Sunday is substantially over, and the cars will run.

—THE North British Railway has applied to Parliament for power to rebuild the Tay Bridge, substantially on the old plan.

—FOUR Germans, an Austrian and several Frenchmen, have been expelled recently from Lombardy as dangerous revolutionists.

—THE English Congregationalists have 170 churches and 156 ministers in active work in the Australian colonies and New Zealand.

—THE Roman Catholic population of Switzerland is reported at 1,023,450 souls. The clergy consists of 2,313 secular and 378 regular priests.

—THE Italian Government has offered three prizes, amounting to $1,800, for vineyards raised from grafts of American varieties of grape vines, capable of resisting the attacks of phylloxera.

—AN aide-de-camp to the Sultan has been taken into custody for complicity with the Greek who was arrested for having an infernal machine in his possession. The affair appears to have been a conspiracy against the Sultan's life.

—THE Government of Western Australia is prepared to give experienced growers of sugar, coffee or tobacco large concessions of land in some of the fine country to the north of Nichol Bay, recently discovered by Mr. Alexander Forrest.

—FORTY-THREE thousand marks have been subscribed in Finland for a monument of Runeberg, the poet and Protestant pastor, who died last year. It will be erected at Helsingfors, and will be executed by the son of the deceased, a sculptor, in Paris.

—THE committal of insane persons to the lunatic asylum is becoming a frequent occurrence at St. John, N. B. The cause of their insanity is affirmed to have been continual brooding over the destitute circumstances to which they have lived since the great fire.

—A BEAUTIFUL pitcher of hammered silver, ornamented with colored oak leaves in relief, has been packed by Tiffany & Co. for shipment to Japan. It is sent to the Mikado as a present from General Grant, who recently visited that country in his trip around the world.

—A LARGE representation of the friends of the Bible from all parts of the State met in Trenton, N. J., February 25th, to take into consideration the celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the Wicklife translation of the Bible. It was resolved to hold a convention in Trenton some time in September next. Executive and local committees were appointed to carry out the plans.

—A CORPS of gendarmerie has been formed in Cyprus under the name of pioneers, in which all the Turkish soldiers, natives of Cyprus, who were disbanded by the Sublime Porte at the termination of the Russo-Turkish war, are collected under the British flag. No Greeks will be allowed to enlist in the regiment, and no British troops are to be henceforth stationed on the island.

—IN the Cuban Budget Committee of the Spanish Chamber of Deputies, on February 26th, Señor Nocedo proposed that the privileges of the Spanish coasting trade be extended to Cuba, and that the arrangement with the United States by which Spanish vessels are prevented from taking cargo from Cuba to North America be discontinued.

—A COMMISSION appointed to confer with the Canadian Government about constructing four bridges over the rivers St. John and Francis, on the northeastern boundary line of Maine, have reported that their total cost will be $112,000, and that the Dominion will bear half the expense. Congress will be asked to make an appropriation. The bridges will open up a fertile region of 3,000,000 acres with a population of 20,000.

—THE Italian flag has been raised in Africa. The war ship Esploratore has taken possession of the Bay of Assab, in the Red Sea, in the name of the Italian Government. An Italian colony is being founded in those waters, and the aggression has not merely been unopposed by the Sultans and tribes of Darrakil, but they even prepared a congratulatory reception for the colonizers from modern Rome. Captain Amezaga and Professor Sopeto, the leaders of the expedition, are the heroes of the neighborhood.

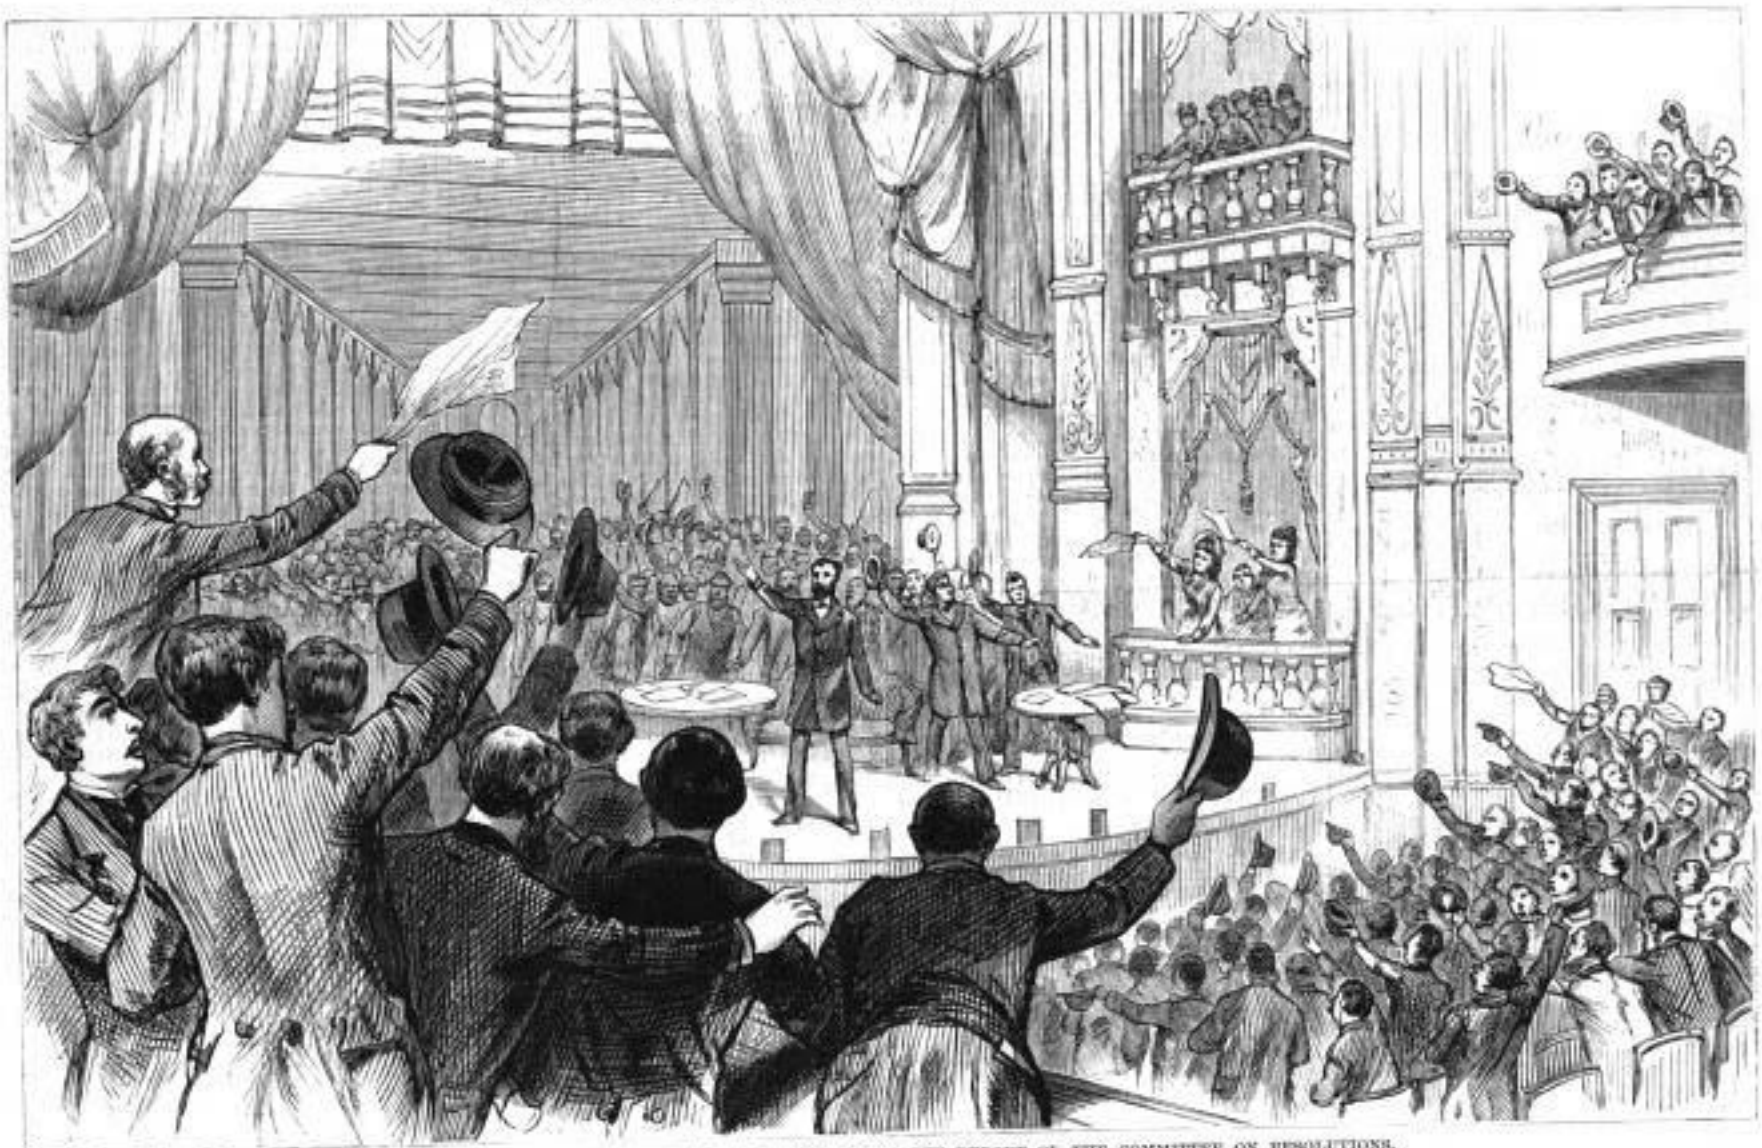
—THE French Academy has elected M. Labiche as a member, vice M. de Sacy, deceased, and M. Maxime du Camp, vice M. Taillandier, deceased. The latter choice is of a somewhat reactionary political character. M. Maxime du Camp is the author of a partisan history of the Communist rising in 1871, which has given great offence to the Republicans. M. Labiche is a prolific dramatic author. The unsuccessful candidates for the vacancies in the Academy just filled were MM. Labouläye and Wallon, Life Senators, and Charles de Mazade, publicist.

—THE Salvation Army of England profits largely by the death of Miss Harvey, an eccentric elderly lady of Leamington, who died recently. Before her death she gave £300 to "Captain" Maycock, of the Salvation Army, who was recently fined and imprisoned for obstructing the streets, and £1,200 more for the local corps. She has likewise left him the house in which she resided, and bequeathed £1,000 to "General" Booth, the chief of the Salvation Army, for the cause generally. During the past few years Miss Harvey has given the Wesleyans some £4,000.

—PRESIDENT HAYES has transmitted to both Houses of Congress a report and draft of a Bill submitted by the Public Land Commission, appointed under the Act of March 3d, 1879. The first part of the report discusses the defects of public land laws. It is proposed to divide the public lands into five classes, viz.: Arable, irrigable, pasturage, timber and mineral; and each class is to be disposed of under laws specially applicable thereto. The commission recommends a sweeping repeal of the existing mineral laws, with a reservation in favor of all vested rights.

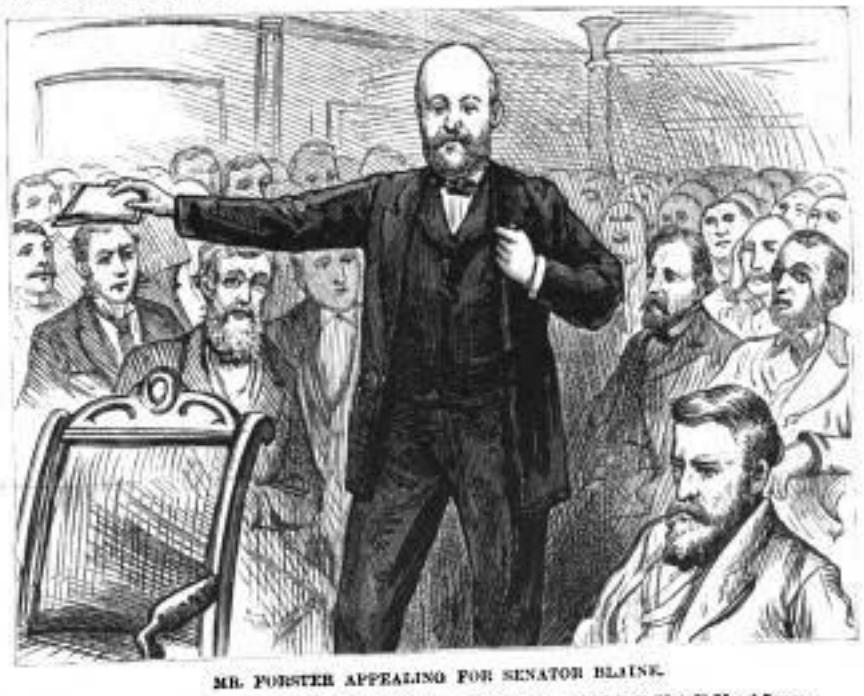
—THE office of Governor-General of St. Petersburg is to be superseded by a Commission of Supreme Control under the independent direction of General Loris Melikoff, who will be invested with the largest powers. The commission will take energetic measures to stop revolutionary machinations. It will comprise delegates of the various departments, who will execute the instructions of their chiefs and facilitate the co-operation of their respective departments in the measures adopted. General Gourko remains Commander-in-chief of the troops of the Imperial Guard in St. Petersburg.

Digitized by Google



DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—GRAND ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN IN ODD FELLOW'S HALL, WASHINGTON, FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE IRISH RELIEF FUND, FEBRUARY 24TH.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. A. OGDEN.—SEE PAGE 23.

Digitized by Google



POPULAR GREETING TO SENATOR CONKLING UPON HIS ARRIVAL AT THE DEPOT.

SENATOR CONKLING ADDRESSING THE DELEGATES ON THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

A HOTEL SCENE—"THIS THING IS SETTLED, GENTLEMEN!"

MR. FORSTER APPEALING FOR SENATOR BLAINE.

NEW YORK.—THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION, HELD IN THE OPERA HOUSE, UTICA, FEBRUARY 25TH.

FROM SKETCHES BY W. PARKER BODFISH.—SEE PAGE 27.

Digitized by Google

POST MORTEM.

THROUGHOUT these woodlands, fresh with meadow-sweet,
No trace abides now of Love's lingering feet:
Yet there your throat felt kisses thick as rain;
Your faintest footfall left there prints of pain.

Had you been cast out and disdained of men,
Had God rejected you—yea, even then
I would have kissed your hair and eyes and mouth
As land that lappeth rain-floods after drouth.

Your many lovers sang your beauty's praise
Through sweet night seasons—through voluptuous days;
While I, your loyalest lover, stood apart,
Life's issues choked from utterance at my heart.

Then pride took hold on you as kindling fire;
Then triumph seized you, and supreme desire,
You said, "The Earth is gladder for my fame";
"Great joy," you said, "is woven round my name."

And so your body was held in your eyes,
That one, soft coming, took you by surprise;
He cast your glory—stubble—to the wind,
And then, departing, left you stunned and blind.

You felt his kisses when your blood was warm—
Poor fluttering dove, a-stride amid a storm!
They fanned within your soul a sudden flame,
That, dying, left foul residues of shame.

I loved you, yet I feared to tell you so:
And now, oh, queen!—oh, darling!—do you know?
Could it have saved you from this bitter death
To hear the passionate outcries of my breath?

The banquet waited till Love should awake,
And shame-shod Lust stole in for surfeit's sake;
The light burned low, his semblance was well feigned,
The holiest was polluted and profaned!

That night I watched you climb the dim-lit stair,
And marked in those loved eyes a strange, set glare;
I had been proud your small, white feet to kiss,
Whose light, glad tread I must for ever miss.

And now I bend above your dreamless head,
Sublime in sovereign pallor; where you bled
I lay my mouth in reverence; on your breast
I place the flowers that matched your beauty best.

And he—I give God thanks for this much grace—
Love, can you hear? I met him face to face:
He felt me like a tiger at his throat,
And hell knows now with how much hate I smote.

Farewell: To desolate moans of sundown seas,
To winds that wail by night o'er moorland leas,
Fate has attuned my soul, and every string
Throbs to these obdurate memories that sting.

Farewell once more, my sacred dead, my queen!
I ask not what life's tortuous plan may mean.
I stand in awe beside your pale repose;
What bodes hereafter? Well—perhaps God knows.

JOHN MORAN.

THE HIDDEN WITNESS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT HUSBAND OF HERS."

CHAPTER XXXVII.—DEE TELLS AN "AWFUL SECRET."

EVE passed an almost sleepless night in her new home. She was very grateful for this unexpected kindness, and chiefly on Dee's account—for Dee had grieved terribly at the thought of being separated from her mistress. She rose early, anxious to see how her old nurse had rested.

"How changed I am!" she murmured, as she dressed the still bright golden hair, and gazed mutely at the white, wan cheeks that told so sadly the story of past suffering. "Well, I shall die young, I suppose, as my mother did—and I wish I may, for there is nothing to live for now."

She sighed as she passed out into the wide, handsome hall down stairs, through a passage that led from the kitchen and into Dee's bright little room. The old woman was awake and looking for her. She had been told that she was to stay, and nothing could exceed her almost ecstatic gratitude.

"I always said he was a gentleman," she said, smiling, "not like that mean no 'count Rafe, what deserted us all in de time of need."

"Hush, Dee! I have told you a hundred times it was no fault of his. Why will you mention his name?"

"Begs a tousan' pardons, missee, but ole Dee hasn't got much memoration left and she forgits."

"Never mind, Dee—there, I have done all I can for you—they will bring in your breakfast by-and-by; Mrs. Forester has some one here who will attend to all your wants."

She went out and turned at random into the first room that presented itself. Sylve was there watering and pruning some plants in pots. She had hoped to meet Eve in this quiet way, and so had sought the breakfast-room early. Eve had dreaded to meet Miss Sylve, expecting to find in her a perfect stranger, as Salome had kept her friend's secret. When she turned, Eve for a moment stood like one transfixed.

"Miss Brown! you here?" she exclaimed. Sylve ran towards her, kissed her quietly, and as quietly explained the circumstances, to all of which Eve listened as one in a dream.

"And is this—can this be possible? You are the ward he spoke of going to find?—you came to us in such a guise! you taught me so kindly—you were my friend and companion. I don't know what to think—what to say! I have thought of you so often and wished I could write, but after you went"—her voice changed—"I didn't care about anything much, and scarcely ever saw Salome, who had first company, and then sickness, and then at last I lived a hermit's life completely, and Dee took all my time—it seems indeed like a dream."

"Sit down," said Sylve, inexpressibly grieved at the change in the beautiful young face; "and how is Dee? I went in to see her last night."

"She is very weak, but no worse than she has been, only the fatigue of the journey tells upon her."

"And the old place—have you left any one there?"

"A tenant who will keep it from falling to pieces, I suppose. If I let him have it rent free, he will improve the premises. But I don't care for the old place any more," she added, in a mournful voice.

"Perhaps something may be done for it," said Sylve; "it was a beautiful location!"

But Eve only shook her head as she repeated: "I don't care for it any more."

Sylve longed to speak of Raphael, to tell her she had seen him, but she dared not. By-and-by she said impulsively, however:

"Eve, I want you to forgive me for ever finding that detestable paper."

The girl shivered, and her cheek grew a shade paler.

"How could you help it?" she murmured. "It was there. I have often thought my father's spirit brought it to light so singularly."

"And I have often thought if I had taken the responsibility and burned it, no harm would have been done," said Sylve.

"That would have been wrong—it is better you did not;" and yet her eyes seemed to say in a sort of mournfully appealing way, "I wish you had."

"And—it is all over?"

"Yes, long ago; but—but please say nothing more about it just yet."

"Then may I, some time?"

"Some time—when I feel stronger."

Flix came in shortly after. He held Eve's hand in both his, and looked at her in such a pitiful way as brought tears to her eyes and the blush into her cheek.

"You were such a little creature when I last saw you; you are not very much larger now."

She smiled.

"I am so glad you remembered my promise," he added; "it was given in all sincerity, and I welcome you—so will my mother."

"She has already received my welcome," said Mrs. Forester, coming in, smilingly; "and now we will sit down to breakfast."

Later in the morning Eve and Sylve were together up-stairs. Flix and his mother had the pretty, cheerful sitting-room to themselves.

"She is not as beautiful as I was led to expect from your enthusiastic description, young gentleman," said his mother. They were speaking of the new arrival. "And then, though she is perfectly neat and nice, her dresses are all out of style. If she has money, we must change the fashion of her dress."

"You cannot tell from her present appearance what she really is—she has suffered so much," said Flix. "I wonder what has become of the little fellow who used to be so jealous of me? Wilde was his name—by-the-way, the same name as our new friend the doctor. I wonder if he is any relation, or, perhaps, the little fellow did not live; they had hard lines in the war time."

"Flix," said his mother, "Hannah wants to speak to you."

He looked up from his paper. Hannah was the girl who had been detailed to wait upon the old nurse.

"Please, sir, the woman wants to see you."

"What woman?" asked Flix, looking perplexed.

"The nagur woman, sir."

"The old nurse," said his mother.

"Me, particularly?" he asked, showing some unwillingness to go.

"You, particularly, sir; and she told me to say it was very important."

Flix rose and went out sorely against his will. He liked to help and oblige people, but did not want to be troubled by them. The little room in which Aunt Dee sat was very bright and agreeable. She had been dressed, and now sat by the window, emaciated but cheerful.

"'Deed, Massa Forester," she said, smiling and holding out a withered hand, "I's been wrastling all night wid de Lord, dat I might git up de courage to tell you somethin'."

"Is it very important, aunty?" he asked, drawing a chair to her side.

"'Deed is it—'deed an' I wouldn't tell anybody but you. I 'members when youn was sick at Massa Cunnel's, and how you did love my little missee!—bless her sweet heart. Didn't you use to hab good times, though?"

"Didn't we!" echoed Flix, gleefully.

"'Member dem runs down dem ar terraces, an' missee's har all flying?"

"Yes, indeed I do."

"'Member when yo' rolled down, an' missee she cry's if she heart would bust?" queried the old negress, with one of her widest grins.

"Yes, aunty, I had a very good time at your place."

"Massa Cunnel's place?"

"Well, the colonel's place."

"You see"—and her face grew solemn—"my mem'ry's growing sort o' desprit—can't call things to mind sometimes—an' I darsn't go 'fore my hebenly Marster, 'deed I darsn't, wid such a secret weighing down my pore soul. I's tried to tell it afore, but wha's de use? Couldn't help nothin', an' ef you don't promise not to worry Miss Eve—'cause thar's no need she knowing it—I can't tell. 'Deed, Massa Forester, it's an awful secret, an' I trembles to tell ye, trembles to 'member what I did; jes yo' listen."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.—THE DEED THAT WAS DONE.

FLIX wondered what was coming, impressed by the solemnity of the old creature's visage.

"You see, Miss Eve's mamma died when she born. Yo' understand dat?"

"Perfectly," replied Flix.

"An de cunnel, he wouldn't set eyes on de pore chile for mos' two years—no, not once."

"Is that possible?" queried Flix.

"Yes, it are possible. Not one minute in all that time did he ever see dat ar chile. Ef I ask him, he grow so white an' angry dat he jes frighten me into fits. He made me keep her all by herself in anoder part ob de house whar he couldn't hear her cry nor set eyes on her no ways. 'Bout dat ar time Massa Colonel wasn't hisself—de bad sperit got into him; he drunk and gamed, and had all sorts o' bad men at his house—'least I calls 'em bad, though they 'tended to be de fustest gen'lemen. One ob dem ar war worse dan de rest. I've 'membered his name, 'cause Mars Cunnel was allays talking 'bout him. It were De Latude. It swings in my head sometimes all day long, jes like a song."

Flix was interested now and leaned forward, intense eagerness in his eye and manner.

"I doesn't s'pose you ever heered of him," she muttered; "well, he jes did what he pleased wid massa, 'cause him were a harnsome, powerful man. Little missee were a sickly child from her birth, and I never thought as she'd grow up at all. I used to take her out riding de back way every day, and when she war jes nineteen mont's ole—I knew de very day, for I kept count—I'd carried her way down de road, and stopped by de great rock whar I'd sometimes stand her on. I'd been a talkin' to little missee, when all at once I seed Massa De Latude standin' right side o' me. T'ought it was de devil sure, for I couldn't see whar he come from. Says he, "'Dee, I've got a big lot o' money for you,' and he showed me lots o' gold pieces.

"'Whe's da' for, massa?' says I.

"'You know de cunnel hates de sight ob dat chile?' says he.

"'Yes,' I tell him, I knew dat.

"'Well, it's a sickly child, and I'm going to 'schange it for a healthier one,' says Massa de Latude.

"Couldn't tell you wha' I felt then, Massa Forester. I loved dat little child; I'd a died fer her. But he talked and talked, and said dat the cunnel knew all about it, an' he had reasons, an' he war actin' as his friend and dat I'd got to do it, an' ef I ever spoke to de cunnel about it he'd 'kill me wid his own hand—de cunnel, you understand."

"Yes, I understand," said Flix.

"Couldn't tell ye how long he stand dar barginning, an', at last, I just gib out. He stepped one side a minnit; but, Lord knows, I couldn't git away den, an' dar wasn't no use screamin' in dat ar lonely place, so in he comes ag'in wid another baby. De Lord forgive me! It was a harnsome child; and so he took my baby and put dat ar one in its place, an', as he went off, I heered him laugh in a way dat jest made my blood run chills. Well, 'pears it war all like a dream, but I got back home an' I put my gold pieces away, an' I thought ef de cunnel wanted to change the chillen 'twant no business o' mine, seein's he never had looked in the face of his own chile, an' mabby never would. I've heered sich things."

"Then the children really were exchanged," said Flix, drawing a long breath.

"'Deed they was, honey."

"And no one ever found it out?"

"No one, honey. Yo' see, I was kind a 'binded on both sides. Ef Mars Colonel did know, an' hed made any bargain wid Mars De Latude, what business ob ole Dee's was it? an' what right hed she to mention it to the colonel? An' ef he didn't know—my blessed hebbenly Master!—he might a' killed me when I tole him for letting his own flesh an' blood go to anoder man. So you sees I was divided 'tween two masters—an' de good book says yo' can't serve two masters. Oh, Lord! what I has suffered on 'count ob dat ting. An' thar was Mars Latude comin' an' goin', an' ebery time he see me his eyes just look like shooting pistols, 'deed they did, sir."

Flix was silent. He recalled that part of the letter written by Sylve's unfortunate mother:

"He often threatened the life of my child, and when I was sick once for several months did succeed in conveying her away from the house, but in a season of penitence had her returned to me, after which his fits of anger were not so frequent."

"And why?" mused Flix; "because he had succeeded in thwarting and deceiving her—the villain."

"How could you keep the secret?" he asked, at last, of the old nurse.

"'Cause, as I tole you, I thought Massa Cunnel knowed it. For, you see, twasn't scarce a week 'fore he asked to see dat chile. Den it seemed to me 'twas all right. An' dar's no tellin' how I learned to love dat ar' little creatur."

"And did you never hint of this to Miss Eve?"

"De Lord have mercy! I wouldn't a did dat for my head," muttered the negress. "But, I tells ye what. I guesses as somebody suspected it. She had a lover, did missee—you 'member dat little boy, Rafe Wilde. Well, he stuck to her till less dan a year ago, and den he stopped all of a sudden. He's here, now, somewher Norf—he's a doctor—an' I guess someways he's fished it out—for he's never come anighst her all at ar time, an' she's jes' breaking her heart."

"A doctor—can it be him?" murmured Flix, to himself.

"Now, I ken die," said the woman, "an' meet my hebbenly Father face to face 'thout fearin'. But, I don't think ye ought to tell de pore child jest now—it might kill her."

"She shall hear nothing from me," said Flix, much excited. He could scarcely analyze his feelings as he left the little room. Things had strangely altered since the morning. Sylve was, in all probability, the daughter of the Southern colonel, and her name was Lewin, while that pallid, sorrowful beauty, Eve, was the daughter of a man perfectly abhorrent to him for many and shameful reasons. As he pondered upon it his head grew strangely light, there was no longer cause of regret concerning Sylve's lineage. He loved her dearly, passionately, but he never could have consented—at least so he told himself—to marry her with that dreadful stain upon her name, even if she could have brought him millions. "To marry her!" Ah, but if she had learned to love Vintresse, as he more than half suspected, and his smothered passion burst out afresh. Every day now he expected a formal call from De Neal, who was, he could no longer disguise it from himself, De Latude, whose shameful history he knew. Thus troubled with perplexed thoughts he hurried on to find Doctor Wilde awaiting him, and the two men went into the library.

CHAPTER XXXIX.—THE FIRST PAGE.—THE SECOND PAGE.

A FEW days afterwards Sylve and Eve sat sewing in the bay window of the sitting-room. Mrs. Forester had gone out. Flix was well enough to attend to business. The girls had been quite silent for some time, when Sylve spoke of a letter she had received from her friend Salome. Her little Yankee cousin was sick, she said, and was obliged to give up school.

"What a sad case," murmured Eve, pausing for a moment, her blue eyes looking wistfully forward, "she will probably die of a broken heart."

"In that case," said Sylve, quietly, "it is not her fault—he gave her no alternative—she submits because she must. She did not drive him off."

Eve was silent for a moment; she understood the force of the allusion, and then letting her face drop in her hands, she cried in a voice full of anguish, though smothered:

"What could I do?"

"I dare say you did what you thought was right," said Sylve.

"No; I didn't consider the right or wrong, not in the way you mean. It—the terrible fact—it was so repugnant to my feelings; it hurt my pride. Why, you can have no idea," she added, the tears making her eyes glisten, a momentary color in her cheeks, "what a depth of intamy we attach to a fact of that kind. I know my poor father would quicker have followed me to my grave than let me be the wife of a son of a slave. No, no!"

"But your father knew it. Why did he not warn you?"

"I have often wondered, and can only explain his silence either by the fact that he considered me too young, or his friendship for Colonel Wilde was overpowering—but no, that could not be. And you know Colonel Wilde trusted to his honor not to betray the secret."

"I did not tell you I had met Doctor Wilde," said Sylve, after a short silence.

"Oh—when—where?" she cried, with clasped hands and rising color, bending forward as she spoke.

"Here"—Eve shrank back—"at a party given by Mrs. Forester. He came in company with that Mr. Vintresse I told you about."

"And—did he—remember?"

"He called me Miss Brown at first, just as you did, and was as greatly surprised at my real name and standing."

"Did he—did he?" and, covered with blushes, she averted her face.

"He spoke of you, yes—said he had not seen you since I had returned. But he seemed so averse to continue the subject that I did not like to say anything further."

"I don't wonder," half-sighed Eve.

"He is very much handsomer," continued Sylve, twisting the knife that she had deliberately thrust into Eve's heart, "and is admired extremely for his melancholy beauty—they call him the Dane, and he is resolute in avoiding the society of ladies. He only came here as a special favor; said he should not probably attend another party this year."

Eve was silent.

"We, you know, do not think so much of the distinction of birth."

"Oh!" cried Eve, with a shudder, "but think, the son of a slave—the disloyalty of Colonel Wilde—the crime!—his father a married man. No, no! I could not marry him if the loss of his love killed me."

"But he is not to blame," ventured Sylve.

"We won't talk of it," said Eve, and as she caught up her work, her face glowing with excitement, and trembling from head to foot, the door opened, and in came Flix Forester and—Doctor Wilde.

Sylve sprang to her feet, a welcome on her lips. Eve's hands fell lifeless, and she looked up with parted lips, wild eyes and hurried breathing.

"I have brought an old friend to see you," said Flix to Eve, coming forward. What could she do but rise—but give the shaking, burning hand to his strong grasp; but feel the exulting, rapturous thrill that even pride could not keep down in the heart that had been, was still, his.

"Sylve," said Flix, "my mother has returned." She took the hint, gathered up her work, and, though Eve rose and implored with eyes and gesture, she bade a smiling good-morning. Eve also made a step forward as if to go. Flix was already gone.

"Pardon me for detaining you," said Doctor Wilde, "I particularly wish to see you alone."

The conflict of her feelings made her sick and faint. The room began to spin round, so she could do nothing but sink helplessly into her chair. Must the old battle be fought over again—the old terror gone through with?

"I am sure you must pity me, for, with the loss of your love, I have the galling sense of an injury done me which is beyond my power to repair. All my life long the shadow of another's wrong-doing will blacken my life. I dare not curse his memory, he was so noble—everything that was great and heroic to me."

Digitized by Google

Eve was silent. Her tongue felt hot—her throat was burning.

"I came to see you because of a dream I had. It may be foolish, but ever since I have felt that it devolved upon me, if the thing was possible, to rescue my father's name from infamy."

"Oh, if it could but be done!" sobbed Eve

"If it could be! That has been my cry for months, bowed down and overwhelmed as I have been with the degrading sense of my position. But I will tell you the dream; it was very simple: I thought my father came to me looking sorrowful, and all he said was, 'Ray, I cannot rest—I cannot rest.'

"'Because you have injured me?' I asked.

"'No, no, I never did. You are my lawful son,' was his reply. 'Look in the box.' You may think it strange that I should attach so much importance to a dream, but when I waked up I could think of nothing else. I reflected that my father was a writer for the press—that he seldom wrote on ordinary note-paper, or, if he did, always on detached pages. So confirmed did this habit become, that he wrote his letters in the same way."

Eve sat looking at him vaguely.

"Oh, is there any way to clear him?" she cried.

"I believe there is. Have you that box still in your possession?"

"Yes—oh, yes! Shall I get it?"

"Have you ever found the secret spring?"

"Never, though I have often tried."

"Will you let me try?"

"Yes—oh, yes!" her face was all eagerness. She looked the blooming girl she had been the year before, as she arose and hurried out of the room. Presently she returned with the box. He took it and looked it over carefully.

"You say Miss Sylve did not know the secret of the false bottom?"

"No; she tried as often and as anxiously as I did."

"Have I your permission to break the box?"

"Anything, anything! Break it—burn it—I have hated it ever since."

He took it to the marble hearth. A few sharp strokes and the box was in fragments, and there lay on the marble a folded paper similar to the one that had caused so much sorrow. Both Raphael and Eve gave a quick cry of apprehension, of relief.

"Here is the other page," said Ray, producing the yellowed paper, which he had all along kept in his pocketbook, and unfolding it. His hands shook, he was deadly pale. He read with staring eyes.

"My poor father! my noble father! How could I distrust him for a moment. Oh, father, father, I ask your pardon before God!" he cried, passionately, falling on his knees as he glanced over the page. "Here, Eve, here is all the letter, as I thought. Read it, and see how wickedly unjust we have been to one of the purest men that ever lived!"

Eve took the paper. She could scarcely read for blinding tears. She caught her breath at the strong thrill and presentiment that rushed through her whole being at the thought that this terrible imputation was as unjust as untrue. This is as the letter stood as a whole:

First Page.

"WILDE COTTAGE, Jan. —, 187–.

"MY DEAR COLONEL:—You know that I have bitter enemies. I have made them all my life, God knows how; but I have also strong friends, of whom you are the chief. If you hear the diabolical story that some of the first-named class have set afloat, put it down as a terrible lie, an unqualified, brazen, cruel, malicious, cursed lie! There, I shall not defend myself any more, but tell you what that gigantic falsehood is, in so many words. They say, then, that Second Page.

Raphael is the son of my wife's favorite slave, Estelle, and I, having taken every pains to conceal this fact, and for fear it might sometime leak out, have caused free papers to be drawn up for him, which I have had since his infancy in my possession.

"And now I will turn to another and a pleasanter matter, for, as you may believe, my blood is on fire at the thought of this dreadful wrong. What would my dear wife say, who loves me so devotedly, if she should hear it? Why, I should feel like killing myself on the spot.

"Am I never to get away from this subject? I send you with this letter instructions with reference to the boy's education. God bless him: he is the idol of my heart. I hope he may make an honorable and useful man, and never hear one whisper prejudicial to his birth and my fair fame. You will take care of that, I am sure. I can safely trust myself in your hands, and my reputation. In most things I think I have been honorable, though I often find it on my lips to say like David, 'I am a sinful man, O God.' If I should fall in the coming struggle, you will know what to do in all respects. I have put my record in your hands. In great haste,

"Your ever loving friend,

"R. T. WILDE, Col. U. S. A."

"Now, what do you say?" Raphael stood there serene, triumphant as a young god.

What could she say? She felt in some way as if she had forfeited his love and respect for ever. That she should have for a moment believed such a thing seemed to her now the unpardonable sin. If only she had clung to him through all, how noble might she have appeared this moment in his sight. It seemed almost as if he read her thoughts.

"But for your prejudice," he said, in a calmer voice—"and how can I blame you for feeling as you did?—I should never have come to the truth. Let us thank God together, my love."

"Oh, not now; you will never feel towards me again as you did in the old time."

"Try me and see," he said, with a laugh that was very like a sob. He held his arms open, and what could she do but suffer him to fold her to his breast. In her life, at least, all was sunshine once more.

(To be concluded in our next.)

THE UTICA CONVENTION.

NEW YORK, following the lead of Pennsylvania, has by its State Convention, pronounced in favor of General Grant as the Republican candidate for a third term of the Presidency. The convention was held on Wednesday, February 25th, in the Opera House, at Utica. Shortly after twelve o'clock General Arthur called the convention to order. The calling of the roll was a tedious procedure, because of frequent objections and motions to refer names of certain delegates to the Committee on Credentials. After this was accomplished, the Hon. Charles E. Smith, of Albany, was chosen temporary chairman, and on taking the chair delivered a brief but stirring address. When he alluded to Grant at Appomattox Court House a handsome banner with the General's portrait on it was unfurled in front of the stage. The temporary organization was soon completed, when the chairman announced the usual committees. A brief adjournment was then taken, and upon reassembling the convention adopted the reports of the Committees on Permanent Organization and on Resolutions. The report of the latter committee was read by Hon. E. W. Stoughton, ex-Minister to Russia. At its close Mr. Forster moved to amend that portion of the resolution pledging the State to Grant by substituting the name of J. G. Blaine. He moved to strike out all that portion of the resolution referring to a third term. It did not seem to him that this important question should be disposed of without hearing from the Republican counties of the State.

A delegate said the majority of the Republicans of Ontario County were opposed to instructions of any kind. They saw justice only in sending an unfettered delegation. They believed instructions wrong in principle and unwise in policy. He moved to strike out the name of Grant and leave the delegation unpledged.

Mr. Forster accepted the amendment.

The question being put on Mr. Forster's amendment, Senator Conkling rose, and, paying no attention to the cries of "platform," delivered the great speech of the convention from the floor. When the applause subsided at the close of the speech, the question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Forster's motion to amend the resolution by declaring in favor of the nominee of the Chicago Convention, whoever he may be, and it resulted in the negative—yeas, 180; nays, 217. The resolutions as reported by the committee were then adopted. The delegates to the Chicago Convention, the Presidential Electors and the members of the State Committee were announced, after which, and at 7:30 P. M., the convention adjourned sine die.

ADMISSION OF A COLORED LAWYER TO THE U. S. SUPREME COURT.

MANY of our readers will remember a series of engravings that were published in the Summer of 1878, illustrating a novel system of silk-culture that had been established in Huntsville, Ala. The founder of this enterprise was Samuel Lowery, a native of Nashville, Tenn., born December 9th, 1823. His father was Elder Peter Lowery, a slave, who purchased the freedom of himself, his mother, three brothers, two sisters and a nephew, and became the first colored pastor of a church in the South, preaching in Nashville from 1848 to 1866. His mother, Ruth Mitchell, was a free woman who added the pecuniary results of her energy to the funds Peter had accumulated for the purchase of his freedom. The amount, $1,000, was paid over forty-seven years ago. Samuel was the only issue of the marriage. At the age of twelve years he was placed at Franklin College, Tenn., where, in spite of his color, he commanded the respect of the faculty and pupils. At the close of the war he began reading law, and was the first colored man ever admitted to the Supreme Court of Tennessee and the Courts of Northern Alabama. In 1868 he removed to Huntsville, Ala., where he opened a school, his daughters, Ruth and Anna, introducing sewing, knitting and needlework among the poor girls, and in their leisure devoting their attention to the care of their silkworms. In the Summer of 1878 Mr. Lowery appeared before many of the agricultural and scientific societies of the North and South with specimens of the silk that had been produced at his school.

The next appearance of Mr. Lowery was in Washington on the afternoon of February 21 last, where he was one of a group of persons engaged in a scene of the most notable character. A motion had been made in the United States Supreme Court before Chief Justice Waite, that the Hon. Joel Parker, twice Governor of New Jersey, be admitted to the Bar of the Court. Mrs. Belva Lockwood, who was admitted to practice before that court by special Act of the last Congress, rose immediately and moved the admission of a lawyer from Alabama, who, she testified upon honor, possessed the necessary qualifications for practice before the Supreme Court of the United States. The lawyer whose admission she moved rose, and proved to be Samuel Lowery.

Mr. Parker and Mr. Lowery then stepped forward to the clerk's desk, placed their hands upon the same Bible and were sworn in together, standing very near to the niche where the bust of Chief Justice Taney, the author of the Dred Scott decision, is placed.

IRISH REMITTANCES TO FRIENDS IN IRELAND.

BESIDES the collections which are going on in all parts of the country at the call of humanity—speaking through the press under the lead of the New York Herald, and through the pulpits in every State—there is another silent stream of money steadily flowing from this country to Ireland. It is a perennial stream, but at present it has swollen like a river when the snows of Winter dissolve on the mountain side under the solar heats of Spring. No people are more devoted to their own than the Irish. As prosperity came to the immigrant here, his or her first thought was for those at home. The money that could be saved was sent to bring out sister or brother, and to give comfort to the declining years of parents whose infirmities unfitted them for a further struggle with the ills which beset the poor man in Ireland.

Knaves and thieves saw in this trait of the Irish a field for speculation. Private concerns advertised and sold drafts on Ireland which the unwary bought only to have them returned as worthless, and to learn that the mother whose wants it was to meet had in fact gone to the poorhouse or perished of starvation. Strong men, who had worked overtime for months to gather what they thus invested, staggered and fell as though struck by lightning when the terrible truth came.

The Irish Emigrant Society in New York, formed to protect the immigrant who lands here little versed in the trickeries that surround him, made it one of its first tasks to open accounts with the Bank of Ireland and keep a deposit there against which they could draw bills that would be cashed without delay in every parish of the island. For years this safe channel has borne to Ireland the millions of dollars sent over by those whose industry and self-denial gave them the means.

The Society rolls up no wealth. All that is made by the sale of the drafts is divided annually among charitable institutions laboring for the good of the immigrants or their children. The profit coming from immigrants goes back to them as a class. At the commencement of the present year the profits of 1879 were sent to the relief of the poor in Ireland through the President, James Lynch, Esq.

Just before steamer day the Emigrant Savings Bank, in whose rooms the Society transacts its business, is crowded with those who bring money or draw it from their savings deposited there in order to buy bills on Ireland. Many, of course, are small—from one pound upwards. The old man and old woman, who show in form and clothing that they have fought a hard battle for life, come to send some of their dearly bought means to those whom hunger stares in the face. The younger, who can still feel reliance on the future which their energy and industry promise, can do more. The aged parent at home must be made comfortable or be brought over. With some letters go means to reach a port and take a passage to this country, where loving hands and hearts are waiting to receive the fugitives from the land smitten by famine.

The great contributor is the Irish servant-girl in America, who, early and late, gives freely of the fruit of her toil to her suffering kindred. The amount of money transmitted by this one agency alone—and it is not the only one of its kind—may be judged by the fact that since its institution in 1842 it has remitted thirty millions of dollars to Ireland. The remittances now are from fifty to one hundred per cent. above the usual average at this season. During the last four months nearly thirteen thousand drafts were sold, amounting to about fifty thousand pounds sterling—a quarter of a million of dollars—carrying relief to every county and every parish in Ireland. The largest amounts went to Cork, Limerick, Kerry, Cavan, Galway, Derry, Sligo, Mayo and Fermanagh. The exact figures are:

	Drafts.	£	s.	d.
November, 1879	1,228	7,677	17	0
December, "	5,177	14,777	16	8
January, 1880	3,433	13,126	2	5
February, "	3,300	13,537	13	3
Total	12,838	£48,619	9	4

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Committee appointed by the French Minister of Public Instruction has awarded the Prix de Volta—50,000 francs—to Graham Bell.

The Death is Announced, at the age of sixty three years, of Mr. David Thomson, Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Aberdeen.

At Geneva an International Exhibition of clocks and watches, and of all machines, implements, utensils relating to clock-making, will be held during May and June next.

The Average Life of a paper wheel under trucks of locomotive engines ranges from 500,000 to 1,641,850 miles, and under dining and palace cars from 794,000 to 868,336 miles.

In the Bernese Oberland, Switzerland, the ground is frozen so hard that before a grave can be dug great fires have to be made in the churchyards, and in some instances, when this expedient proved unavailing, the gravediggers were compelled to use dynamite.

A Mineral White for painting purposes has been discovered, the basis of which is sulphide of zinc, which is fully equal to white lead, being a fine white pigment, with a covering power when mixed with oil twenty-five per cent. higher than that of carbonate of lead.

The French Government have intrusted M. Th. Lécart with a "gratuitous" mission to investigate the ornithology and entomology of the region between the Senegal and the Niger, and MM. Brau de St. Pol-Lias and E. de Lacroix to collect ethnographical specimens in Sumatra.

The Inauguration of the new crematorium at Milan took place on December 26th, 1879, under the presidency of Dr. de Christoforis, who is president of the society. The members of the society now number more than 200. During the three years it has existed forty-eight cremations have taken place.

We Regret to state that General Morin, the well-known director of the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, is lying in a very precarious state in consequence of a severe cold. Great anxiety is felt for him at the Institute, of which he is one of the most respected and popular members. The General is aged eighty-five years.

M. Savorgnan de Brazza, who is now on the west coast of Africa, has been intrusted by the French branch of the International African Association with the formation of their first station, which will probably be located on the upper waters of the Ogowé, where M. de Brazza has already made important geographical discoveries. Captain Bloyet is to be the founder of the other station on the opposite side of the continent.

A New Photographic Process has been discovered in Japan. One of the substances employed in the manufacture of Japanese lacquer has the property of becoming almost as hard as stone under the action of light. A slab covered with this material and duly exposed behind a photographic negative for twelve hours is scraped, when the softer parts are rubbed away, and the hardened portions stand out in a low relief. The slab can then be used as a block for printing.

A New Application of the Ruhmkorff coil has been made in the neighborhood of Marseilles. Instead of using birdlime on the trees which are frequented by birds of passage, a copper wire is wound around the trunk and a decoy attached to a neighboring staff. When the flock has been attracted by the decoy a shock is sent by the commutator, and the birds are more surely stunned than by a rifle. Experiments of a similar kind have also been made by M. Dalmas upon the vines of his country seat. The powerful electric shocks are reported to have destroyed the parasites and their eggs.

M. Brau de St. Pol-Lias, the originator of the "Colons-Explorateur" scheme, has communicated to the French Geographical Society a letter which he has received from Dr. Röss, a missionary in Sumatra, in which he furnishes the geographical results of a journey in the Batak country. His examination of Lake Toba shows that there is no river flowing out at the northeast, as has been previously supposed, and that, contrary to earlier statements, there is a river flowing out of the south end of the lake, which is thought to empty into the sea on the east coast of the island, though its course does not appear to have been examined so far at present.

A New Buoyant Life-saving Rocket is described by the London Engineer as manufactured at the Woolwich Arsenal. Substantially it is the Boxer rocket to a coating of cork. This coating enables the rocket to float on the water with the rope attached after it has been discharged over the sea. The rocket is capable of carrying a one-inch or 1¼ inch coir line a distance of more than a hundred yards, and will then have buoyancy enough to support itself with the line. In case the rocket is badly aimed, or should fall short, it is claimed that the line can always be recovered, and that in many cases the rocket may be picked up by the crew of a wrecked vessel with a boat-hook.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

LADY RANDOLPH SPENCER CHURCHILL, formerly Miss Jerome, of this city, has an infant son.

MR. LEWIS MORRIS, author of the "Epic of Hades," has received a decoration from the King of Greece.

THE King of Portugal has followed up his translation of "Hamlet" by one of the "Merchant of Venice."

THE present Marquis of Anglesey comes into a splendid landed property with an estimated income of $500,000 a year.

LOUIS BLANC, by the death of M. Cremieux, becomes the sole survivor of the Provisional Government of February, 1848.

LEO XIII. has suffered slightly from cold during the present rigorous Winter at Rome, but otherwise his health, it is said, never was better.

THE Queen's speech was written almost entirely by the Earl of Beaconsfield, though Earl Cairns and the Marquis of Salisbury gave him some slight assistance.

COUNT ST. VALLIER, after several interviews with M. De Freycinet and M. Gambetta, has consented to continue in his post of French Ambassador at Berlin.

MR. BRET HARTE has been invited by Sir Frederick Leighton to respond to the toast "Literature" at the annual banquet of the Royal Academy on the 1st of May.

M. JULES FAVRE has not left a fortune as considerable as might have been expected, judging from his renown as an advocate and the high posts he filled. Each of his three children will have about $10,000.

MR. FAIRMAN ROGERS has declined to accept the post of Provost of Pennsylvania University, left vacant by Dr. Stille. It has been offered to the Rev. Phillips Brooks, and he has not yet decided upon an answer.

PROFESSOR ROSCOE, of Owens College, Manchester, says he regards the evidence thus far submitted by Mr. J. Ballantyne Hannay as insufficient to establish the conclusion that he has discovered a process for making diamonds.

MRS. KIRTLAND, of Chicago, has completed a model for a statue of Oliver P. Morton, to be erected at Indianapolis, representing the great war Governor as he appeared ten or fifteen years ago, and it is greatly praised by those who have seen it.

MISS CONSTANCE E. YORKE, daughter of the late Hon. Grantham Yorke, D.D., Dean of Worcester, has within four months of his death married the Hon. and Rev. William H. Lyttleton, a sexagenarian widower of some two years' standing.

MR. ALLEN, the American accredited as Hawaiian Minister to the United States, appeared at the recent diplomatic reception decorated like his peers. He wore across his chest the Hawaiian Grand Order of Knighthood and its broad blue ribbon.

JOHN LEMOINNE, editor of the Journal Des Debats, Paris, was elected a Senator for life on February 22d. He received 142 votes, and 95 votes were thrown against him, of which the greater number were blanks, while about 20 were for various other candidates.

REV. DR. ELSNER, of Samrodt, Prussia, has celebrated a very uncommon anniversary, the sixtieth anniversary of his being made doctor of philosophy by the University of Breslau. He has been pastor in Samrodt fifty-five years, and is eighty-five years of age.

THE statue of the Prince Imperial, which is to be placed in Westminster Abbey, represents a recumbent figure with the hands crossed on the breast and clasping a sword, the helmet at the foot. It will be several months before the monument can be completed.

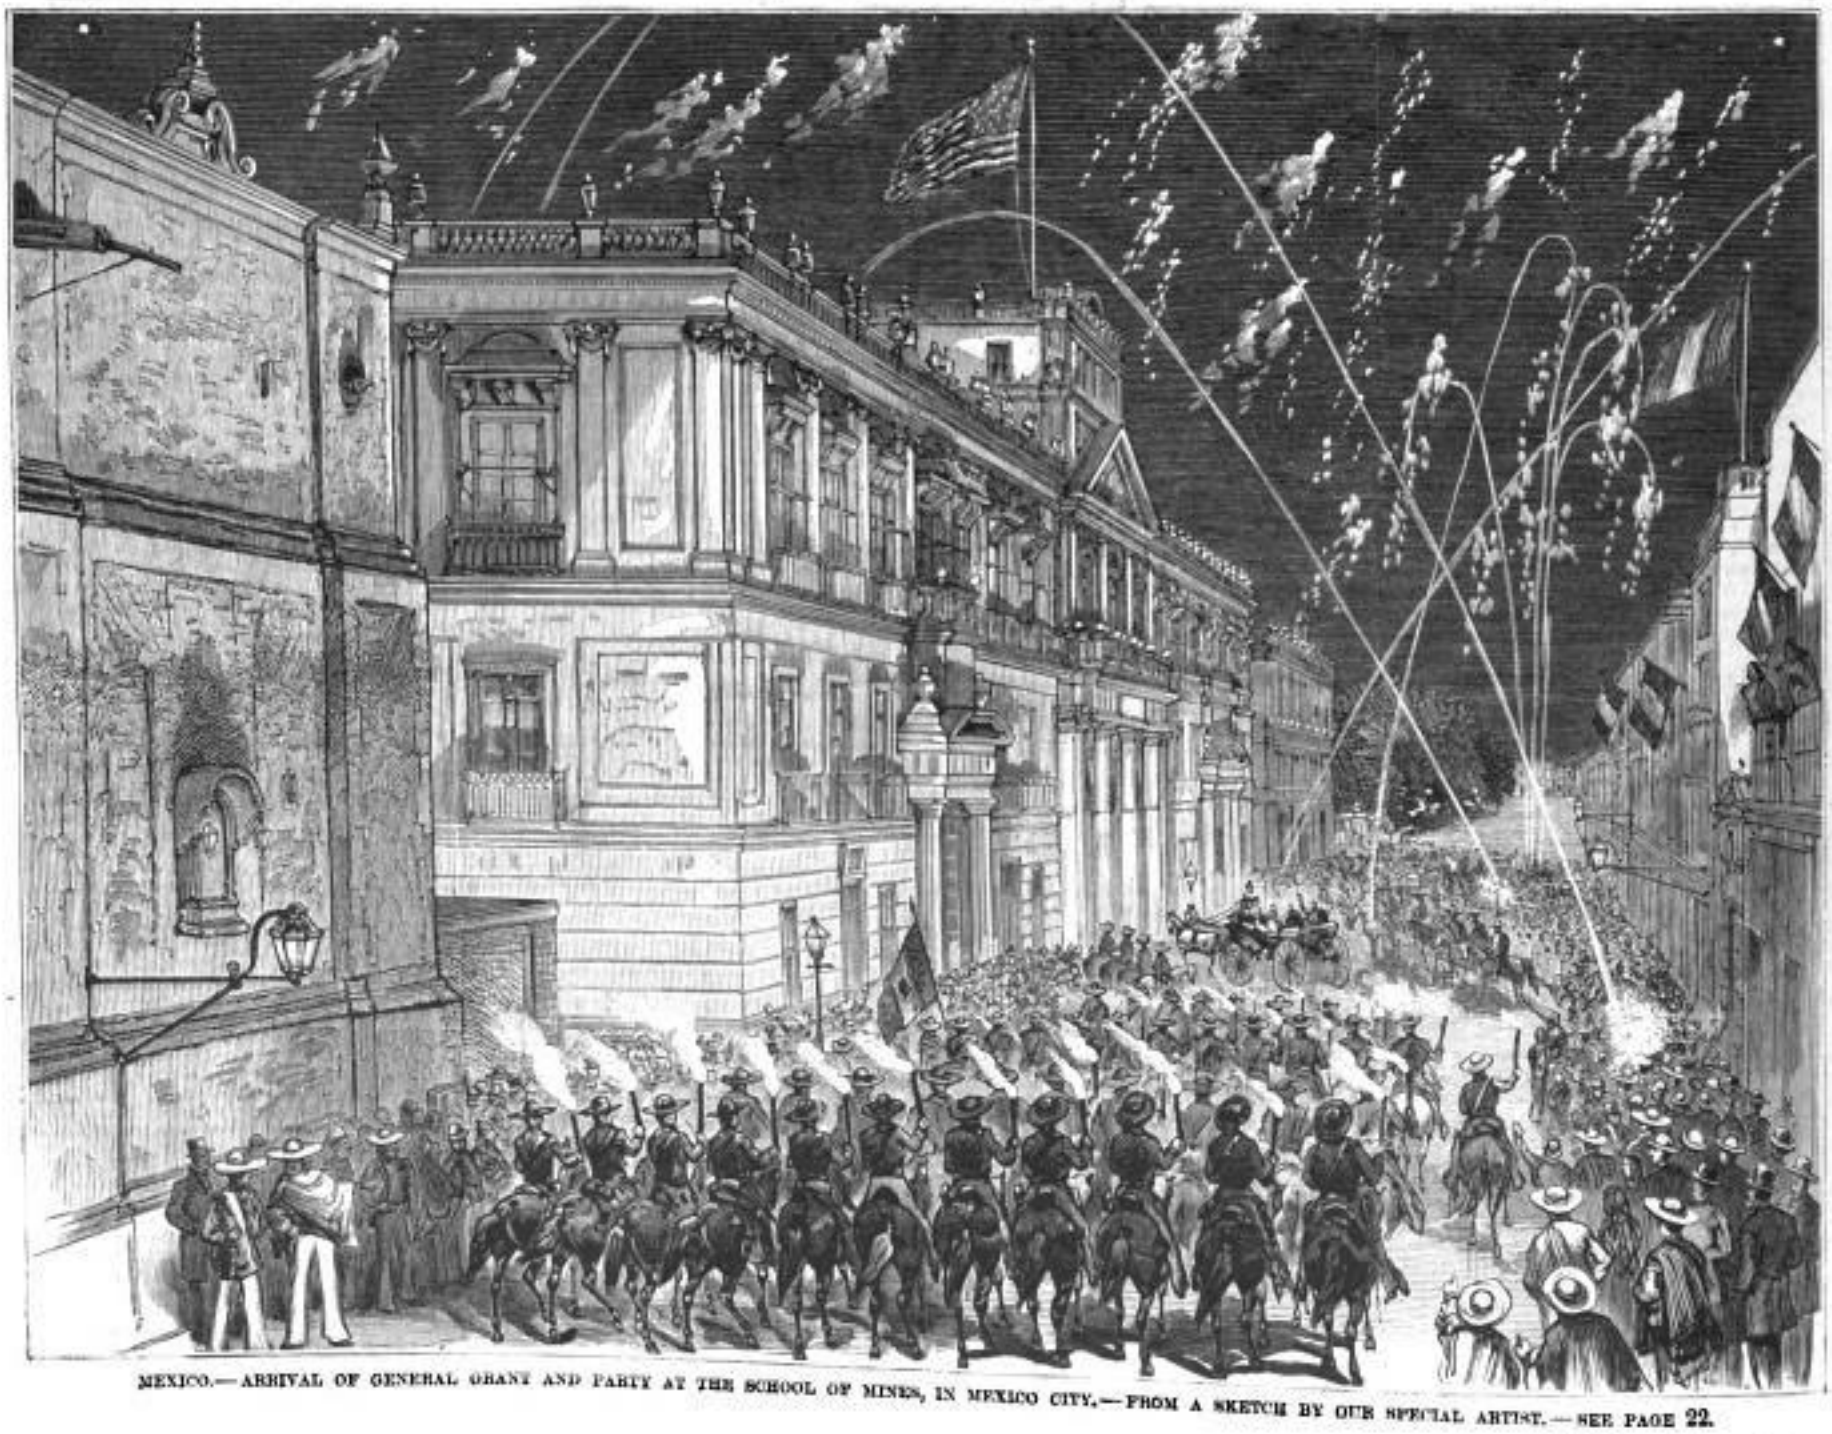
COUNT CHRISTIAN DANNESKYOLD-SAMSÖ, a member of the highest Danish nobility, taking rank immediately after the princes of the blood royal, is mentioned as the possible new Danish Minister to England. His wife was, as a girl, the companion and friend of the Princess of Wales

MRS. MARIE LOUISA ELLIS, for eighteen years inspectress in the employ of the United States Government, and detailed for duty on the Hamburg and German Lloyd line of steamers, has died in New York. She was remarkable for her shrewdness, and through her efforts the Government arrested out many notorious female diamond smugglers.

JOSEPH E. TEMPLE, a retired Philadelphia merchant, has made a gift, amounting in all to $80,000, to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, on condition that the galleries shall be free to the public on certain days of every exhibition week, and that part of the income shall be devoted to encouraging art by giving prizes and buying works of American artists.

THE Belgian Queen still so fondly cherishes the memory of her only son, the Duke of Brabant, who died in January, 1869, that she has never since permitted any Court festivities to be held during that month. Prince Baudouin, the son of her brother-in-law, Philip, Count of Flanders, is the heir to the Belgian throne. The boy is now eleven years old.

THE Emperor William, feeling the weight of his years, extremely dislikes to have his son, the Crown Prince, leave him even for short journeys. His Majesty, who has hitherto borne the fatigue of the court season remarkably well, astonishes everybody by his freshness and vigor. He is said to be far from pleased at the early close of this year's festivities, which terminated rather prematurely, owing to the speedy commencement of Lent.



SIR EDWARD THORNTON, the British Minister at Washington, has now served there twelve years, only one year less than his father, who passed thirteen years in the British diplomatic service in this country. Mr. Edward Thornton, the father, was first vice-consul in Baltimore, and afterwards was in Washington as Secretary of Legation with Mr. Hammond, the first Minister sent to our Government by England. Afterwards the elder Thornton was Charge d'Affaires of the British Legation here.

SIGNOR TURINI.—This distinguished sculptor is engaged upon a bust of the late Frank Leslie. It is life size, and already does it seem illuminated by the bright electric smile which lighted up Mr. Leslie's face as with a flash. The expression, too, is life-like, and the easy carriage of the head is after Signor Turini's happiest method. Signor Turini, who is gold medalist and doubly decorated, is also at work upon other subjects, and a visit to his studio brings one face to face with more than one notability "done in marble."

THE ex-Empress Eugénie's visit to Zululand will be so arranged that she will reach the spot where her son fell on the 1st of June at the very hour of the struggle and death. The Empress, in a recent interview with a French journalist, pointed out that the wounds on the Prince's arm attested the fierceness with which he defended himself. "This movement of covering himself with his arm," she said, "was a habitual, instinctive gesture with the Prince; often in our leisure hours when I played with him in his youth, at the slightest sign of attack he covered his breast with his arm as with a shield."

Digitized by Google

D. C.—ADMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT OF THE FIRST COLORED LAWYER, AT WASHINGTON, FEB. 25.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 27.

MEXICO.—ARRIVAL OF GENERAL GRANT AND PARTY AT THE SCHOOL OF MINES, IN MEXICO CITY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 22.

Digitized by Google

THE LATE CONSTANTINE BRUMIDI.

CONSTANTINE BRUMIDI, the fresco-painter, who died in Washington, D. C. on February 19th, 1880, was born in Rome on the night of July 26th, 1805. At the age of thirteen years he became a member of the Academy of Arts in Rome, and began painting frescoes during the same year. He studied with Podesti, Coghaetti and Capalti, and for many years the four artists worked together in the great palaces of Rome. When Gregory XVI. was Pope, the same young men worked for three years on the third story of the Vatican Gallery. In 1848 Brumidi painted a portrait of Pius IX., who made him a captain in the National Guard. The artist still kept steadily at his work, however, and painted the "Resurrection of Lazarus." At the time of the Italian revolution Brumidi joined the Democratic party, and when the Republic went down before the eagles of France, he came to America. He went to Washington in 1852, and there made his application for naturalization. In 1854 he went to Mexico. Returning to Washington in the same year, he was employed by Quartermaster General M. C. Meigs, then a captain in the army and superintendent of the Capitol building. His first work in the Capitol was on the walls of the room used by the House Committee on Agriculture, which he has declared "was the first real frescoing ever done in this country." Since then all the frescoing work on the interior of the Capitol has been done by Brumidi.

THE LATE CONSTANTINE BRUMIDI, DECORATOR OF THE DOME OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.—FROM A PHOTO. BY BRADY.

The work with which the spacious friese of the Rotunda, nearly four hundred feet in circuit and some ten feet wide, is being filled, is a series of plain fresco-relievo scenes, full-life-size. The beginning of the work is over the west entrance to the Rotunda, with an allegorical group consisting of the Goddess of Liberty, in an erect position, with spear and shield, with an expectant eagle perched at her feet, and the Muse of History sitting at her left, with pen and open book, ready to record the history of the country. Behind this group, on its left, the direction the work takes has just landed one of the Spanish boats, full of officers and men, in the costumes and equipments of their day, with Columbus in the act of stepping down a plank and bearing on his left arm a flag, ready to be unfurled.

Another scene, proceeding to the spectator's right, is Pizarro about to mount his horse for an overland trip to Peru. A cactus bush intervenes, and then comes the scene of Cortez, with his staff, entering the halls of the Montezumas, where he is politely received by the gentle Mexican.

Next comes the Burial of De Soto, at night, in the Mississippi River, the scene consisting of a boat in the edge of the river, and filled with priests and attendants, bearing torches, crosses, etc. A priest, standing at the feet, with an open book-of-rites, is performing the funeral ceremonies.

The scene next in order is Pocahontas saving the life of Captain Smith and the Landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock. Much of this fresco-work remains to be done.

THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

LADY FRANCES ANNE EMILY VANE, eldest daughter of the third Marquis of Londonderry, K.G., was married, in 1843, to the sixth Duke of Marlborough, who, since 1876, has been Viceroy of Ireland. Two sons and six daughters are the issue of this union. Her Grace's name has of late been prominently brought before the public because of the energy she has displayed in initiating a fund for the relief of the Irish distress. In her letter, which appeared in the public journals of December 18th last, she predicted—and her forecast has already been painfully fulfilled—that "in most of the western districts of Ireland there will be extreme misery and suffering among the poor, owing to want of employment, loss of turf, loss of cattle and failure of potatoes, unless a vigorous effort of private charity is got up to supplement the ordinary system of Poor Law Relief." Her Grace proposed to meet this distress by organizing a Central Committee in Dublin, aided by local committees

HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH, WIFE OF THE LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

NEW YORK CITY.—IRISH DEPOSITORS OF THE EMIGRANT SAVINGS BANK WITHDRAWING MONEY TO SEND TO THEIR SUFFERING RELATIVES IN THE OLD COUNTRY.—SEE PAGE 27.

Digitized by Google

elsewhere, and suggested that the money collected should be spent on fuel, food, clothing, especially for the aged and weak, and in small sums to keep out of the workhouse the families of the able-bodied in temporary distress. Besides the "Duchess of Marlborough's Fund," which is intended for the most distressed districts in the South and West, there is also the (Dublin) Mansion House Fund, which embraces the whole country in its object.

The latest letter of Her Grace gives the very satisfactory intelligence that there is no immediate prospect of starvation, although it fully recognizes the prevailing distress.

A Road to Success.

IN modern times the most important part of every dealer's business is advertising it. When trade is brisk he is encouraged to make a still larger investment in publicity, and when it is depressed he rightly can see no better cure than advertising more widely. In point of fact, the first item of expenditure which an experienced dealer increases and the last one which he reduces is the item for advertising. It is a lottery in which there are no blanks, but many gigantic prizes. With advertising so universal and the competition among advertisers so keen it is unnecessary to say that an infinite number of methods have been devised to suit the fancy of those who have anything to dispose of. Perhaps American ingenuity has never distinguished itself more than it has in the invention of advertising schemes; certainly in no other department of the business of daily life has American ingenuity so completely failed to improve upon first principles. Liberal use of the best newspaper mediums of publicity is the one practical thing upon which the sound theorizer and the experienced man of business agree. It must be said, too, that in no other of her schools does Experience charge dull or willful scholars such high tuition fees. Against the disfigurement of natural scenery by painted signs decent people long ago rose in wrath. The credulous dealer who puts his faith exclusively in circulars and handbills has but to follow a postman or an animated sandwich to be convinced that he has been willing to enrich the ragpicker and junkman. The "trade journal" hallucination, being a shadow of real journalism, is probably and naturally the strongest, but manufacturers and merchants are beginning to see that it is buyers they should seek to reach and not rival sellers. The unanimous experience of wise and liberal advertisers—that is to say, of all successful business men—is that of a New York merchant whose creed has been thus epigrammatically formulated: "If what you have to say be strictly true, say it in a good newspaper. Its readers are intelligent, will appreciate a bargain, and of every such customer you make an advertiser." To resort to poor methods when a good method is available is in effect to indicate parsimony or ignorance, neither of which qualities is compatible with business success.—New York World.

The Soko.

WHAT was the Soko? Was it man or ape? The tribes of Central Africa, all along the Livingstone River, from Nyangwe to the cataracts, declared the Soko to be a monkey, and as such hunted it and ate it. They hunted and ate men, too, it is true; but then they distinguished the one from the other, and never mistook men for monkeys. Mr. H. M. Stanley, however, brought home the skulls of two "Sokos," which had been eaten by an affable chief with whom he forgathered one day, and Professor Huxley at once pronounced them to be human. Was Africa in a conspiracy to play off a practical joke upon the great explorer, or is European science wrong in its differentiation of man and ape? The gorilla has long ago been degraded to its proper rank, and the "mam" of Sind turned out to be no nearer a man than a bear. But Central America has now come forward with the Susumeta, and so far as descriptions go at present this animal—or person—would appear to come as near ourselves as the Soko, for the other natives of its forests, whom we call men and women, call the Susumeta human. A European, one Mr. Auguste, of Cay, avers that he saw one killed, and has never been able to shake off the idea that homicide was committed, adding that "the animal" was as much a man as himself.

The Fiji Islands.

THE Islands are situated in latitude 18° south, nearly in a direct line between San Francisco and Sydney, 1,400 miles from the latter port, and about the same distance from New Zealand, Tahiti, Honolulu, the Marshal Islands, Caroline Islands and New Guinea, and half as far from New Caledonia and the New Hebrides, Solomon, Ellice, Samoan and Friendly groups. Amid all these, Fiji is a central point, with the prospect of great commercial facilities when Micronesia—a name including those small islands of the South Pacific—is well supplied with steam-vessels. Five years ago Fiji became a British colony, but the civilized authority was so weak in some of the smaller islands, or districts remote from the seaports, that cannibalism did not cease till two years later. "Long Pig" has ceased to appear on the native bills of fare. There is an orderly Government, with police, courts of justice, public records, and last, but not least, a regular system of taxation. The group has an area of 7,000,000 acres, much of which belongs to the Colonial Government, and is offered for sale at $5 an acre for first-class and less for poorer qualities. The area cultivated by white settlers is 13,000 acres, and no mention is made of the acres sold to white men, belonging to natives, or of unsold of the first quality. The group has 80 islands, making an archipelago 320 miles long by 250 wide. There are 120,000 natives, including 20,000 available for work, but, when employed as laborers, they idle away their time, unless closely watched. Their wages are $20 a year, besides food, clothing and tobacco, costing $20 more, making the total expense less than $4 a month. Natives of New Britain and New Ireland, hired by terms of three years at $20 a year, are more industrious. With such wages, there is no chance for a white man to make anything as a laborer, and there is little opportunity to make much as an employer unless he has $10,000 capital to begin with. The chief exports are cocoanuts, cotton and sugar, and it is supposed that coffee will be largely cultivated. The dried cocoanut, called copra, makes up nearly two-thirds of the exports; one of the 13,000 acres planted by white settlers, 6,000 are in cocoanuts, 2,000 in cotton, 1,300 in sugar-cane, 1,000 in coffee and 250 in arrow-root. We are told that all these can be cultivated profitably. January, the hottest month has a mean temperature of 84°, with a maximum of 99° in the shade, and 160° in the sun; and July has a mean of 73°, with a minimum of 61° three feet from the ground, 55° in the grass, and a maximum of 85° in the shade and 140° in the sun. There is never a month when the heat does not go to 140° in the sun. The coldest month of Fiji is about 20° hotter than the warmest in San Francisco, if the adjective cold can be applied to any month in the former place or warm to any in the latter. Though Fiji has 100 inches of rain in the average year, it has only 130 rainy days, and the climate is generally considered a very pleasant one for those accustomed to the torrid zone. There are no malignant fevers or malarial diseases, and the vegetation is most luxuriant and beautiful. Taken altogether, Fiji will always be considered a tropical paradise.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT BONDS,
And other desirable Investment Securities,
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.

Buy and sell all issues of Government Bonds, in large or small amounts, at current market prices, and will be pleased to furnish information in reference to all matters connected with investments in Government Bonds.

We are prepared to give information in regard to first-class Railway Securities, and to execute orders for the same.

Buy and sell all marketable Stocks and Bonds on commission, at the Stock Exchange and in the open market.

Receive accounts of Banks, Bankers, Merchants and others, and allow interest on daily balances; and for those keeping accounts with us we collect United States coupons and registered interest, and other coupons, dividends, etc., and credit without charge.

☞ We give special attention to orders from Banks, Bankers, Institutions and Investors out of the city, by Mail or Telegraph, to buy or sell Government Bonds, State and Railroad Bonds, Bank Stocks, Railroad Stocks and other securities.

We have issued the Seventh Edition of "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," copies of which can be had on application.

FISK & HATCH.

FUN.

VERDICT in the Cowley case: "We find that Cowley bought a bottle of anti-fat by mistake for soothing syrup."

AMONG men and woman it is the religious ones that keep Lent most faithfully, but the case is different with books.

"Do you use many flowers on your table?" asked Mrs. Murray Hill of a Southern visitor. "Well, yes," was the reply: "we have wheat and rye bread for breakfast, but the old man will stick to corn dodgers."

THE baggage-master of the Central Pacific Railroad says that he recently saw a Chinese cigar manufacturer pasting on his boxes labels on which was printed, "The Chinese Must Go." Asking the Chinaman what he did that for, the reply was, "Sand-lot man he read that, buy the box, smoke my cigar."

A GENTLEMAN who was given to boasting and was apt to make critical comments on the company whenever he was invited out, said to Jerrold, "I dined at the Marchioness's the other day, and, would you believe it, they had no fish!" Jerrold thought a moment, and then replied, "Ah, well, I suppose it was all eaten up-stairs."

PHYSICIANS are a favorite target for the arrow of the wit. Here is an arrow which is still shivering where it struck:

"My dart," cried Death, "I cannot find,
So now I'm quite at sea."
Quoth Dr. Bolus, "Never mind—
There, take this recipe."

A GENTLEMAN who took rather a broad view of things in general recently lost his wife. Seeing him a few days afterwards, and without any badge of mourning, a friend remonstrated, and hinted that when so close a relation was broken, the courtesies of life demanded some recognition of it in the style of dress. "Quite true," he replied, "but, don't you see, Maria was no relation of mine. I only married her, and why should I put on black?"

WHEN a child in a small Bavarian village was being catechised by a priest, and asked how many things are necessary in a service of baptism, he promptly replied: "Three, father." "Ah, you stupid," replied the holy man, "I thought everybody knew that only two are absolutely necessary: first, water, and second, the Bible. Now, young sir, won't you tell us what are the three?" The boy looked up with a bland smile, and answered: "My father, the three are—first, water; second, the Bible; and third, a baby."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

HILLSDALE, MICH.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D.:

I had a serious disease of the lungs, and was for a time confined to my bed and under the care of a physician. His prescriptions did not help me. I grew worse, coughing very severely. I commenced taking your MEDICAL DISCOVERY, which helped me greatly. I have taken several bottles, and am restored to good health. Yours respectfully,

JUDITH BURNETT.

CHILDREN love to take DR. BROWNING'S C. & C. CORDIAL for coughs and colds, because it is so pleasant to the taste. Try it. Price 50 cents.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest Hair Dressing in the world. It kills dandruff, allays irritation, and promotes a vigorous growth of the Hair.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE affords nourishment to the Cerebral and Nervous systems.

AGENTS wanted in United States and Canada who worked life insurance. Salary, $1,200 to $2,500. An entirely new system; a success. Single agent readily writes one to twenty applications per day. Address, SAFETY FUND DEPOT, Hartford, Conn.

COUGHS.—"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" will allay irritation which induces coughing, giving oftentimes immediate relief in Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness and Consumptive and Asthmatic Complaints.

THE ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, Broadway, New York, so long the leading Hotel of the great city, fully maintains its high standard of excellence, and in comfort and luxury has no superior in this country or in Europe. Its location for healthfulness and the convenience of travelers is the very best. On account of its thorough good order, safety, and superior rooms, it is especially adapted for families and ladies traveling without escort, who are treated with every respect and consideration. The proprietor, with his family, resides in the Hotel, giving to it his constant personal supervision; the result is that the ST. NICHOLAS is, in every respect, the Model Hotel.

I HAD severe attacks of Gravel and Kidney trouble, was unable to get any medicine or doctor to cure me until I used HOP BITTERS, and they cured me in a short time.—A Distinguished Lawyer of Wayne Co., N. Y.

HALFORD SAUCE unrivaled by any relish. Intended for family use; recommended by the best families.

NO BETTER investment of a small sum can be made than in Accident Insurance in THE TRAVELERS.

THE great advantage of the genuine ASBESTOS COVERINGS for Steam Pipes, Boilers, etc., over any other forms of non-conducting coverings, aside from their superior effectiveness, is that they are manufactured in convenient form ready for use, and can be easily applied without the aid of skilled labor. H. W. JOHNS MANUFACTURING CO., 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y., are the sole manufacturers.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ½ and lb., labeled.

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, LONDON, ENG.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

TO THE PUBLIC.
BOKER'S BITTERS.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS.
In accordance with the desire frequently expressed, both in the United States and abroad, these Bitters, so long and justly celebrated for their flavorous as a cordial, and for their medicinal virtues against all diseases of, or arising from, the digestive organs, will henceforth be put up and sold not only in quart, but
ALSO IN PINT BOTTLES,
for medicinal, family, traveling, and other purposes. To be had at all the principal druggists', grocers', liquor-merchants', etc. I. FUNKE, JR., Sole Agent, New York, 78 John Street. Post Office Box 1,029.

Rosa N. Carey's New Novel.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
By the Author of "Wooed and Married," etc.
12mo. Cloth, $1.25. Paper Cover, 75 cents.

Those who have read "Wooed and Married" will need no further commendation of this really charming story than the information that it is by the author of that delightful work.

 For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price by
J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Philadelphia.

SICK HEADACHE
POSITIVELY CURED BY
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
AND THEIR PRICE IS
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them, but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail.
CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

READER if you love rare flowers, choicest seeds, address ELLIS BROS., Keene, N. H. It will astonish and please. FREE

$10,000 INSURANCE FOR 35 Cts.
ON LIFE & PROPERTY.
$10,000 will be paid to any person who can EXPLODE A LAMP filled with our SAFETY ATTACHMENT.
Mailed free for 35 cts. Four for $1.
Agents Wanted, Male or Female.
S. S. NEWTON'S SAFETY LAMP CO., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SALESROOM, 12 WEST BROADWAY, N. Y.

CANDY
Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

CLEAR HAVANA
Small Cigars, "INFANTES." $11.00 per 1,000. Sample box by mail, 35c. (Agents wanted.) J. M. ACUNSO, 246 6th Av., N. Y.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.
Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1.
F. CROSBY, 665 Sixth Ave., New York.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM
GOUT OR GRAVEL. Schlumberger is the only possessor in France. L. A. Paris, 134 6th Ave., N. Y., his only agent for the celebrated French Salicylate, which relieves at once, cure in four days, without dangerous consequences, their purity being controlled according to French laws by the Board of Pharmacy of Paris. Beware—The genuine has red seal and signature of agent on each box. $1, post-paid. Send stamp for pamphlet. Thousands of references.

CHEAP MUSIC
Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 32 Park Row, New York.

Fever & Ague Remedy.
SURIC CURE.
Price, 75c. Stamps received. Send for circular.
PODOLSKI, Druggist, cor. Sixth and Poplar Sts. Phila., Pa. Mention this paper.

Amusements.

FIFTH AVE THEATRE. 28th Street and Broadway.
JOHN T. FORD.....Lessee and Manager.
LAST WEEK OF THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
D'OYLY CARTE'S LONDON OPERA COMPANY,
in Gilbert & Sullivan's last and greatest success.
Notwithstanding the unprecedented success of this opera, THE GILBERT & SULLIVAN OPERA SEASON MUST TERMINATE SATURDAY, MARCH 6TH.
PIRATES MATINEE SATURDAY, at 2 o'clock.
Seats for the remaining nights now for sale.

BOOTH'S THEATRE LAST WEEKS.
HUMPTY DUMPTY PRESENTS A NEW BUDGET, NEW FACES, NEW FEATURES, NEW EFFECTS
ABBEY'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
and the only and original | SPANISH STUDENTS | who only appear at this Theatre.
ABBEY & HICKEY.....Proprietors
Every Evening at 8, Wednesday & Saturday Matinées at 2.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
SIXTH WEEK,
And AUDIENCES still the LARGEST and MOST FASHIONABLE in the city. The PERFECTION of COMEDY, SPECTACLE and MUSIC
A CHORUS of SEVENTY, and set of LIVING CHESS FIGURES by THIRTY-TWO CHILDREN.
Seats may be secured for a month ahead.
THE ROYAL MIDDY
Every Night at 8, and Matinee Saturday at 2.
ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY.
Wednesday Matinee, CHARITY, for the Last Time.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.....FRENCH OPERA.
Lessee and Manager.....Mr. MAURICE GRAU.
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 8th.
Return for three (3) weeks only of Mr. MAURICE GRAU'S GREAT FRENCH OPERA COMPANY.
Mlle. PAOLA MARIE, Mlle. LEHOUX BOUVARD, Mlle. ANGELE, M. VICTOR CAPOUL.
A change of opera nightly. The sale of seats commences on THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 4TH, at box office Fifth Avenue Theatre and 111 Broadway.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
FOURTH WEEK
FOURTH WEEK
of
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
EVERY EVENING, AND SATURDAY MATINÉE AT 1:30.
The new American operatic extravaganza,
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. INDIANS NEVER TELL A LIE. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
New and sparkling music by Ed. E. Rice. Libretto, full of fun, by Nathaniel Childs. Beautiful scenery by William Voegtlin.
MATINEE SATURDAY AT 1:30.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Mr. A. M. PALMER.....Sole Lessee and Manager.
Begins at 8. Over at 10:45.
SEVENTH WEEK AND CONTINUED SUCCESS of Mr. Edgar Fawcett's brilliant play,
THE FALSE FRIEND,
THE FALSE FRIEND,
which with its splendid scenes—the most magnificent ever set upon this stage—and a cast of characters made from the BEST COMPANY IN AMERICA,
will be given every evening and at the Saturday Matinees until further notice.
Saturday, MARCH 6th, 8th Matinee of THE FALSE FRIEND.
SEATS SECURED TWO WEEKS AHEAD.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
SALSBURY'S TROUBADOURS.
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Propr & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
HERMANN, THE PRESTIDIGITATEUR.
CHAS. L. ARNDEN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

TWO BRILLIANT SERIAL NOVELS!
"The Magic of a Face,"
A STORY OF SUNNY MEXICO,
BY
NUGENT ROBINSON;
AND
"A STRANGE GUEST,"
BY
The Author of "Guilty Without Crime,"
Begin in No.
774 774 774 774 774 774
OF
Frank Leslie's
CHIMNEY CORNER,
Issued Monday, March 15th.

Digitized by Google

BUIST'S PRIZE-MEDAL SEEDS FOR ALL COUNTRIES

ESTABLISHED 1828.

BUIST'S Seeds are celebrated in all the markets of the world for their Purity and Superior Quality.

Being exclusively of our own growth, from the Choicest selected Stocks, we can therefore warrant them as represented.

Plant them once you will plant them always.

Buist's Almanac and Garden Manual for 1880, containing 132 pages of useful information on gardening operations, free to all.

Buist's Wholesale Prices mailed to Merchants and Seed Dealers on application. Address,

ROBT. BUIST, JR., SEED GROWER, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

KEEP'S SHIRTS,

Gloves, Umbrellas, Underwear, Etc.

SAMPLES AND CIRCULARS MAILED FREE.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
631, 633, 635, 637 Broadway, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF.

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; or, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail, postpaid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers, by permission, to JOS. S. FISHER, president; W. I. P. INGRAHAM, vice-president; W. FAINE, M.D.; C. S. GAUNTT, M.D.; H. J. DOUCET, M.D.; R. H. KLINE, M.D., J. R. HOLCOMB, M.D., M. R. LYNCH, M.D., and M. R. O'CONNELL, M.D., Faculty of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; also the Faculty of the American University of Philadelphia; also Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., president of the National Medical Association.

Address, Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery

AND

Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159—165 East Fifty-ninth Street, Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

WITH

FIVE DOLLARS

YOU CAN BUY A WHOLE

IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN

100 Florins Vienna City Government Bond,

Which bonds are issued and secured by the Government, and are redeemed in drawings

FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY

Until each and every bond is drawn, with a larger or smaller Premium. Every bond must draw a Prize, as there are no blanks. The three highest Prizes amount to

200,000 FLORINS,
50,000 FLORINS,
30,000 FLORINS,

And bonds not drawing one of the above prizes must draw a Premium of not less than 130 Florins.

The next drawing takes place on the 1st of April, 1880,

And every bond bought of us on or before the 1st of April is entitled to the whole premium that may be drawn thereon on that date.

Out-of-town orders sent in Registered Letters, and inclosing $5, will secure one of these bonds for the next drawing.

For orders, circulars, or any other information, address,

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,
130 Broadway, New York City.
Established in 1874.

N. B.—In writing, please state that you saw this in the English FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

The above Government Bonds are not to be compared with any Lottery whatsoever, and do not conflict with any of the laws of the United States.

48 Page Gilt Bound Floral Autograph Album, illustrated with Birds, Scrolls, Ferns and Flowers; also 47 select quotations, all 15c., including agent's card outfit (75 styles), 25c. (stamps taken). E. T. HYDE, West Haven, Ct.

40 ELEGANT Chromo Cards, with name, postpaid, 10 cents. L. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

MAMMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOS—Actresses, 5c. Special subjects, 10c. each; 6 for 25c.; 75c. per doz. Catalogues of Photos, Choice Books, etc., 3c. N. L. WHITNEY, 67 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

H. W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS BOILER COVERINGS.

The Asbestos Steam Pipe and Boiler Coverings are the most durable, effective and economical non-conducting coverings in use. They can be easily applied by any one at a cost of from 25 to 50 per cent. less than are usually charged for inferior coverings.

Note the address, send for samples, and be sure and get the genuine, which is manufactured only by

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,

Sole manufacturers of genuine Asbestos Liquid Paints, Roofing, etc.

Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

Will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to customers without ordering it. It contains four colored plates, 100 engravings, about 200 pages, and full descriptions, prices and directions for planting 1500 varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, Roses, etc. Invaluable to all. Send for it. Address,

D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE | THE FAMILY WASH BLUE, For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 253 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

THE SPRING FASHIONS

JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S MAGAZINE

—AND—

Gazette of Fashion,

Universally regarded for nearly a quarter of a century as the

FASHION STANDARD OF AMERICA

FULL AND ACCURATE DESCRIPTIONS ARE GIVEN OF THE LATEST PARISIAN STYLES OF LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S COSTUMES.

Beautiful Colored and Plain Fashion Plates

Are imported monthly from Paris,

EXCLUSIVELY FOR THIS MAGAZINE.

"FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE needs no special praise at our hands; it speaks for itself, and is a prime favorite in every household where it has ever gained a foothold. Its stories, its poetry, its sketches, its engravings, its fashions—all things about it, in fact—are first-class in their way; and, take it for all in all, we don't know of a lady's magazine in America that excels it, and few that come within cannon-shot of equaling it, in any of the departments we have mentioned. In point of cheapness it outranks them all, quality and quantity considered, its price being only $3.00 a year, postpaid."—Lyons (N. Y.) Republican.

The readers of the LADY'S MAGAZINE have the earliest information of the constant change in Fashions, as its reports appear simultaneously with those in the journals of Paris.

Each Number is Profusely Embellished,

Published on the 15th of every month. Annual subscription, $3.00, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

NATIONAL DISPENSARY

419 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

N. D. OZONIZED REMEDIES for all Diseases. Permanently cures Paralysis, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Liver Complaint, Cancers and Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Tumors and all Blood Diseases, Nervousness, Baldness and Grayness, Tape Worm, etc. Our Practice is Eclectic. Patients can be treated successfully at their homes, if they will describe their symptoms carefully. Also, will be provided with Hygeian Board. Electricity a specialty. Ozone Inhalations. Agents wanted. ISABEL M. MITCHELL, M.D., Prop'r.

The Cheapest Sunday Magazine Published!

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for March is a very interesting number of this attractive household monthly. The great variety of reading matter embraces tales, historical articles, sketches, poems, etc., which are both entertaining and instructive. $3 a year."—Christian Secretary, Hartford, Conn.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE comes again this month replete with excellent reading, and is profusely illustrated. Three dollars a year is a very low rate for the vast amount of valuable family reading, and hundreds of engravings this magazine contains."—Auburn (N. Y.) Advertiser.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE holds its position as the best magazine of its kind in this country, if not in the world. $3 yearly, 25 cents a number."—North Carolina Presbyterian.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for March has a frontispiece portrait of the late publisher of the magazine, which is recognized as an excellent likeness. Much of the material of this number is distinctly religious, and many of the articles are very instructive as well as interesting. Spain, Italy, India, and other foreign lands, furnish subjects for sketches with pen and pencil. Of course, a large part of the magazine consists of narratives, which are of the wholesome type and beautifully illustrated. We recognize the value of periodical literature so attractive and intelligible that it will compete with worthless but showy publications. This monthly has thus far occupied this field with great success."—New York Observer.

"THE March issue of FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE embodies the incidents of the unexpected death and of the funeral services of its late publisher. This large, popular and cheap magazine, profusely illustrated and very attractive to the younger members of the family, with an abundance of more thoughtful papers for adults, keeps up its interest from month to month. The absence of Dr. Deems seems to be well supplied by his substitute. It is published at 53-57 Park Place, New York. $3 a year."—Boston Zion's Herald.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for the present month shows a large and varied table of contents, including many illustrations. It is one of the most acceptable periodicals that reach our table. 25 cts. single copy; $3 a year."—Hamilton (Can.) Christian Advocate.

Each Number Contains

128 PAGES QUARTO, 100 BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS

Published on the 10th of every month. Annual subscription, $3. $1.50 will be received for six months; $1 will be received for four months. 25 cents per number, sent postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Imitation Gold Watches.

$2, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 226 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3096.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & CO., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS! READ THIS! We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. We mean what we say. Sample Free. Address SHERMAN & CO., Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—To best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS WANTED—$75 to $150 Per Month,

The COMPLETE HOME

Full of PRACTICAL INFORMATION,
The Young Housekeeper's GUIDE,
The Experienced Housekeeper's FRIEND.

"A book of more practical utility will seldom, if ever, be found outside of inspiration."—Christian Advocate.

NEEDED in every city home BY Rich and Poor, Young and Old, in all country homes. Fine Paper, Clear Type, Beautiful Binding, Splendid Illustrations. Nearly 600 Pages. Low Prices. Sells rapidly. Address, J. C. McCURDY & CO., Phila., Pa.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF | By sending 25 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

In order to introduce our paper, the Literary Gem, the cheapest and most entertaining Paper in America, we will send post-paid for 3 mos. to any person sending their name and 15 cts. or five 3c. stamps and in addition we will send to each subscriber a beautiful songs, and 8 charming

Look Here.

Instrumental pieces, by the best American and Foreign Composers. These 16 choice pieces, if purchased at 25 cts. each would cost $3.60. This offer may not be repeated, so order at once. Address, CHASE & CO., Publishers, Westboro, Mass.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. Dorman, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

ELECTRIC BELTS | A PERFECT CURE for premature debility. Send for circular. DR. D. KARR, 832 Broadway, N. Y.

OPIUM and MORPHINE HABIT CURED. Dr. W. B. BAILEY, Worthington, Greene Co., Ind., has been more successful in curing the opium habit than any man living. Send stamp for particulars.

20 Lovely Rosebud Chromo Cards, or 20 all Motto, with name, 10c. NASSAU CARD CO., Nassau, N. Y.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

50 Pinafore, Chromo, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 80 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

62 Gold, Crystal, Lace, Perfumed & Chromo Cards, name in Gold and Jet, 10c. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

SECRET HOW to become Rich and Watch sent free. FELTON & CO., Agents, New York.

Frank Leslie's

POPULAR MONTHLY.

The Cheapest and Most Comprehensive Magazine in the World.

THE

March Number Now Ready,

WITH THE FOLLOWING VARIED AND INTERESTING TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

Articles, Descriptive, etc.—"FRANK LESLIE," by Richard B. Kimball; 10 illustrations. "MANTUA"; illustrated. "The Bickelleer of Bremen"; illustrated. "The Austrians in the Ice—Kaiser Franz Josef's Land, and the Escape from it," by Godfrey A. Hudson; 14 illustrations. "The Old Tavern Life in England," by Henry Barton Baker, Author of "Mirabeau," "French Society," etc.; 4 illustrations. "Dairy Farming in America," by A. S. Fuller; 13 illustrations. "Why the Wind Blows," by Robert James Mann, M.D., F.R.I.S.; 12 illustrations, etc., etc.

Serials, Short Stories, etc.—"Not Guilty," by Ella W. Pierce (Chaps. VIII. to X.); illustrated. "At Miss Twinklefield's," by the Author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's." "An Anachronism," by John Gilbert; illustrated. "An Adventure on the Yang-tse-Kiang"; illustrated. "Isaura"; illustrated. "The Burial at Sea," by Walter Edgar McCann; illustrated. "Annette," by Sue Chenoweth Wood; illustrated. "The Next Heir; Or, A Fatal Compact"; illustrated. "Lindley Hall," by Eleanor Kirk; illustrated. "Irene"; illustrated. "A Night of Horror"; illustrated—etc., etc.

Sketches, etc.—"Blockard." "The Bicentennial of the Discovery of the Falls of St. Anthony"; illustrated. "The Mahratta Rebel." "The Battle of Bannockburn"; illustrated—etc., etc.

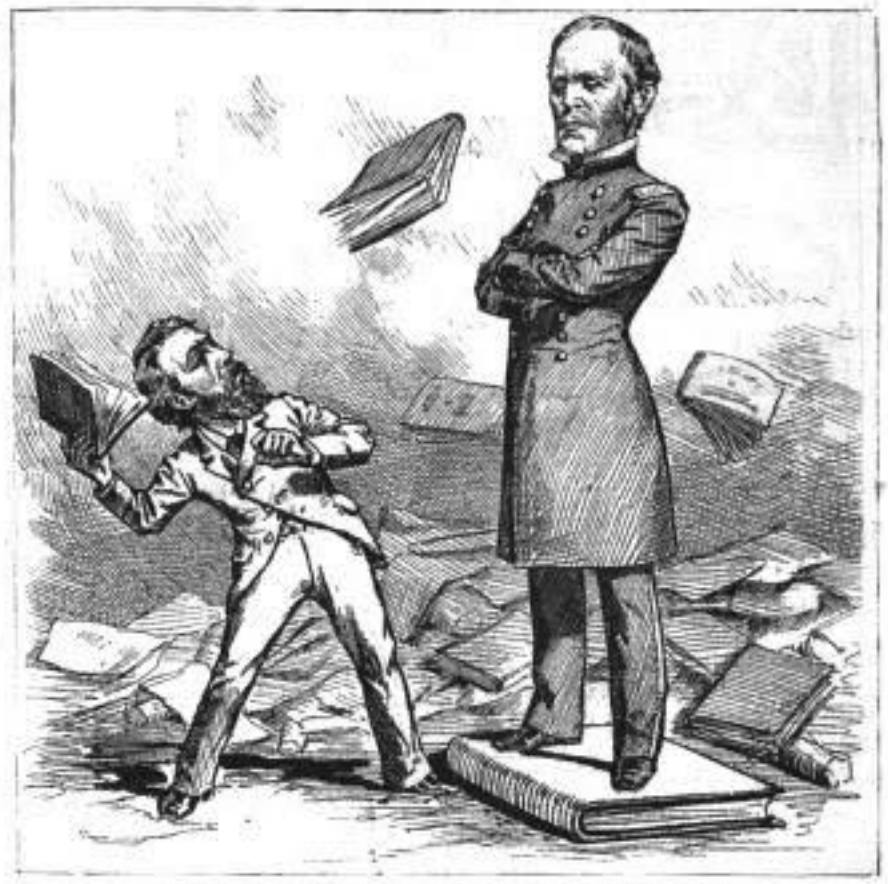
Poems.—"The Second Wife," by Arthur Matthews; illustrated. "The Mermaid"; illustrated. "The Three Wishes," by Francois Coppee; translated by O'Shaughnessy. "Will He Come?" illustrated. "A Mother's Love," etc., etc.

Miscellany.—"The Heron Feeding Her Young"; illustrated. "Ancientine in Infantile Disorders." "The Coldest Town in the World." "But One Book." "Asia." "Recent Progress in Science." "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES—OVER 100 EMBELLISHMENTS.

A Beautiful Colored Frontispiece, "Nature's Own Mirror."

Single copies, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50; four months, $1—postpaid.



SEND 25 CENTS FOR A SPECIMEN COPY.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

THE USUAL WEEKLY DECLINE IN GREENBACKS AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

ANOTHER IMPENDING BATTLE OF BOOKS ON THE WAR.

A. T. Stewart & Co.

HAVE OPENED a FRESH IMPORTATION of Real Valley Cashmere

INDIA SHAWLS

In RICH DARK COLORINGS, INCLUDING MANY NOVELTIES in BORDER SHAWLS For SPRING and SUMMER WEAR,

At Attractive Prices.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. The cheapest, largest and best book of the kind ever published. Agents wanted who can devote all their time to canvassing for this work. For circulars, terms and territory, address the publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BRESLIN & COOKE, Proprietors.

Now open for the reception of guests

COLUMBIA BICYCLE

A practical road machine. Indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. Send 3c. stamp for 24-page catalogue with price list and full information, or 10 cts. for catalogue and copy of "The Bicycling World." THE POPE MFG. CO., 59 SUMMER ST., Boston, Mass.

A KEY WILL WIND THAT ANY WATCH AND NOT WEAR OUT.

SOLD by Watchmakers. By mail, 50 cents. Circulars free. J. BUSCH & Co., 58 Dey St., N.Y.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Upright 18 Stops, 3 set Golden Tongue Reeds, 6 Octs., Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $200. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $125 to $825. Before you buy be sure to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

FIRM'S Can for Explosive Fluids.

PATENTED JAN. 21st, 1879.

P. O. Box 4274, N. Y.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

Frank Leslie's Budget,

96 QUARTO PAGES—NEARLY 100 HANDSOME ILLUSTRATIONS,

Annual subscription price, $1.50, postpaid. Sent 15 cts. for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

ABSOLUTELY CURES Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

A POSITIVE, EFFECTUAL and RADICAL CURE.

WRITE FOR TESTIMONIALS.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $2.00.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,
DETROIT, MICH.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price list. CHAS. W. COPELAND, Sole Manufacturer, BOSTON, MASS.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5). 2 larger sizes For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

---

CURIOSITY FOR THE MICROSCOPE.—Send from the Oil-bearing Rock of the Bradford Oil Region, and history of well it is taken from, for 25 cts. L. D. FRENCH, P. O. Box 1684, Oil City, Pa.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF MONTREAL....Thursday, March 4, 11:30 A.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, March 13, 7 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER....Saturday, March 20, 12:30 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $60, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 33 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

A PLEASURABLE PUBLICATION.

Frank Leslie's

PLEASANT HOURS.

A MONTHLY PICTORIAL JOURNAL of LIGHT, PLEASING LITERATURE.

INTERESTING AND BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED STORIES, COMPLETE IN EACH NUMBER.

PLEASING TALES, ADVENTURES, ANECDOTE, AND MIRTH-PROVOKING ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Pleasant Hours" will prove to be a Delightful Traveling Companion.

For sale by all newsdealers, price 15 cents. Annual subscription, $1.80, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's

BOYS' & GIRLS' WEEKLY.

The Oldest, Largest and Best of the Juveniles.

A SIXTEEN-PAGE FOUR-COLUMN PAPER, Handsomely Illustrated.

EACH NUMBER CONTAINS SERIAL AND SHORT STORIES, STIRRING ADVENTURES, PORTRAITS AND SKETCHES OF DISTINGUISHED PUPILS AT THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, THE ROUND TABLE, THE DRAWING TABLE, SCIENTIFIC AMUSEMENTS, SKETCHES OF EMINENT MEN OF OUR TIMES, TALKS WITH BOYS ABOUT FOREIGN LANDS, ETC., ETC.

CONSTANT SUCCESSION OF NEW STORIES.

The following interesting Serials are now in course of publication:

TRACKED BY A PIRATE; Or, The Adventures of a Young Sponge-Hunter. By ROGER STARBUCK.

THE PHANTOMS OF SPIRIT LAKE. A Romance of Western Life.

TIGHTROPE TOM; Or, The Showman's Ward.

INQUISITIVE CLINTON; Or, He Wanted to Know All About It. By COMMODORE AH-LOCK.

Published every Monday. Single numbers, price only 5 cents, at all the newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $2.50, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE POPULAR FAMILY JOURNAL.

Frank Leslie's

CHIMNEY CORNER.

A Constant Succession of New Literary and Artistic Attractions!

This favorite publication has, for the past fifteen years, continuously enlarged its popularity, and is now admitted to be the

LEADING LITERARY FAMILY JOURNAL.

It is the ONLY weekly that gives, with Healthy Fiction, Attractive Novels and Stories, Biography, Travels, Incidents of all Times and Countries, Foreign Manners and Customs, Essays, Well-chosen Matter for Young Readers, Examples for the Aspiring Youth of Both Sexes, Natural History in a popular form, the Wonders of Nature, Science, Art, and Human Ingenuity, Adventures with Wild Men and Beasts, Narratives of Daring and Peril, Social Hints, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner

is this, from week to week, a Library for a Household that forms a perfect museum of attractions, the illustrations being of the highest character.

Each Number contains sixteen pages, eight of which are embellished with beautiful engravings.

Published every Monday. For sale by all newsdealers. Price, single copies, 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4; three months, $1—postpaid.

TWO INTERESTING NEW SERIAL NOVELS

"THE MAGIC OF A FACE,"

A Story of Sunny Mexico

BY

NUGENT ROBINSON,

AUTHOR OF "THAT MOTHER-IN-LAW OF MINE," "THE JANITOR'S DAUGHTER," ETC., ETC.;

AND

"A STRANGE GUEST,"

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUILTY WITHOUT CRIME,"

Will be commenced in No.

774 774 774 774

OF

FRANK LESLIE'S CHIMNEY CORNER,

ISSUED MONDAY, MARCH 15TH.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the act of Congress, in the year 1880, by J. W. Englands, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,277.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, MARCH 20, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1.00.

GENERAL GRANT'S VISION IN THE HALL OF THE MONTEZUMAS.

Shade of Maximilian—"Beware!"

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, MARCH 20, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

I. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

In the present number we begin a new serial from the polished and graceful pen of Charles Dimitry, an author too well known by efforts in drama and fiction to require any commendation here. "Gold Dust and Diamonds" attracts by its title, and the story turns on a buried treasure, involving dramatic scenes, with plot and counter-plot, in our own and other countries. It is a story that will interest readers of all ages, as the plot, strikingly original in conception, in its working out gives scope to fine delineation of character. All the incidents are well managed and interesting, and the treasure, when found, crowns the happiness of two loving hearts.

"CIVIL RIGHTS" DECISIONS.

THE Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered three very important decisions falling under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and the Acts of Congress passed in pursuance of that amendment for the purpose of affirming the equal civil rights of colored citizens of the United States. By the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment it is declared that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Section 641 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any State court against any person who "is denied or cannot enforce" in the judicial tribunals of the State "any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States," such civil suit or criminal prosecution may, upon petition of the defendant (filed in the State court before the trial or final hearing of the cause), be removed to the next circuit court of the United States that shall be held in the district where the cause is pending. Section 1,977 of the Revised Statutes ordains that "all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses and exactions of every kind, and to no other."

In the case of Taylor Strander vs. the State of West Virginia, as decided by the United States Supreme Court on Monday last, it appears that Strander, a colored citizen of the United States, was indicted for murder in the State court in the month of October, 1874; and when his case came on to be heard he petitioned for its removal to the United States Circuit Court, on the ground that the exclusion of colored citizens from juries by the Act of the State Legislature of March 12th, 1863, was in violation of his right to such "full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens." His petition having been denied by the State courts of West Virginia, it was brought to Washington on a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, which has just decided that his issue was rightly joined, and that the statute of West Virginia, denying to colored citizens, on the ground of color, the right and privilege of participating in the administration of the law as jurors, is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment and of the Acts of Congress passed in enforcement of its provisions.

The case ex parte the Commonwealth of Virginia was a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel Judge Rives, of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, to restore to the State authorities two colored prisoners indicted for murder, and who had been taken by Judge Rives out of the possession of the State officers, and held for trial in the Federal court, on the ground that these prisoners, as a matter of fact, had been denied the privilege of being tried by a mixed jury of white and colored citizens, while the law of the State makes no discrimination under this head on the score of color. The Supreme Court holds that the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment have reference to State action exclusively, and not to any action of private individuals, while Section 641 of the Revised Statutes was intended for the protection of the colored race "against State action and against that alone." And since the constitution and laws of Virginia do not exclude colored citizens from service on juries, and since "mixed juries" are required neither by reason nor law, the Court holds that the action of Judge Rives was ill-advised in the premises.

The case of Judge Coles, indicted in the Federal Court for the Western District of Virginia, upon the charge of intentionally excluding all colored citizens from jury duty on account of their race, color and previous condition of service, and in violation of the Act of Congress of March 4th, 1875, which provides for the punishment of officers who exclude colored citizens from jury duty on the ground of color, came before the Supreme Court on a writ of habeas corpus and of certiorari, alleging that the arrest and imprisonment of Judge Coles were unwarranted, on the terms of his indictment, by the Constitution and laws of the United States. On this statement of facts the Supreme Court holds that the inhibition contained in the Fourteenth Amendment applies to any agent or officer of a State who, by virtue of his office, denies to colored citizens their equal civil rights under the Constitution and laws. The petition of Judge Coles for a writ of habeas corpus is therefore denied, and the case against him is left to be tried on its merits.

We have been thus particular in reciting the issues joined in these several cases because it seems to us that the principles enunciated by the supreme judiciary can be most clearly seen and most intelligently appreciated in the light of such an exposition. And we mistake the effect likely to be produced on the mind of the reader if the mere statement of the cases, considered in connection with the Constitution and laws under which they arise, does not carry with it an approval of the decision which has been reached in the premises. It is the purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment and of the civil rights legislation enacted by Congress to establish and to maintain throughout the United States a perfect equality of civil rights among citizens of the United States without respect of color. It is to this badge of discrimination, and not to uniform and equal discriminations based on age, sex or intellectual qualifications, that the policy of the new legislation of Congress has been directed. Perfect equality before the law having been established by the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment for all citizens of the United States, irrespectively of color, and Congress having enforced that right by "appropriate legislation," the Supreme Court has but declared in those cases that it is among the civil rights of colored citizens not to be excluded from service on juries because of their color alone. How any other decision could have been reached, on the principles of jurisprudence recognized by the common sense of mankind, it passes our comprehension to understand. There is here no question properly raised between the supremacy of the Federal Government and the rights of the States. That question was raised and settled with regard to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States when the States adopted so much of the Fourteenth Amendment as relates to the matter in hand. From that time forth it has not been among the reserved rights of the State "to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." And surely it is to deny to colored persons the equal protection of the laws if, without regard to their character or qualifications, they are excluded from juries on the ground of color alone.

That the majority of the Court, notwithstanding the dissenting opinions of Judges Field and Clifford, have meant to hold the scales of justice with an even and steady hand, would appear from the cogent and clear-cut discriminations with which they have vindicated the action of the Virginia State Courts from the over-forward intervention of Judge Rives. The line which separates the legitimate jurisdiction of the States from the supremacy of the Federal Government is here clearly recognized, and the pretensions of that Federal judge, though assumed in the name of the civil rights of the colored citizen, are shown by the Court to be groundless. The due supremacy of the Constitution and the rightful autonomy of the States are equally upheld by the general drift of these important decisions, while the cause of personal liberty and of a sound national jurisprudence, founded on considerations of universal right and equity, has received a new attestation.

WHERE REFORM IS NEEDED.

NO man can hope to wear the judicial ermine in a Federal court unless he has won some sort of distinction in the legal arena. This only comes after long years devoted to the study and practice of his profession. Every officer in the United States Army and Navy has undergone educational preparation and been subjected to rigid examinations before attaining to a command. Subordinates in the several departments of the civil service, prior to appointment, have submitted to an inquisitorial pumping as to their stores of knowledge. All this is well. Without fitness the judiciary would become a reproach, the naval and military services lose their efficiency, and the civil service go to the dogs.

But there is one branch of the Government where men may enter without preparation or the least sort of fitness for the duties pertaining to their offices. Brains, culture and a knowledge of statesmanship are no longer requisites to a seat in Congress. Take a half-dozen men out of the present Senate and about as many from the House, and those bodies, weighed with reference to their capacity to legislate for the good of the country, will scarcely rise to the height of a respectable mediocrity. This accounts for all the visionary schemes and nonsensical plans which, when framed into Bills, astonish the public or create widespread alarm.

Congress stands charged with the care of every interest connected with the welfare and prosperity of the people. Each House has a Committee on Commerce, on Manufactures, Agriculture, Mines and Mining, Railroads, Education and Labor, and Finance, and yet the mass of members are no more fitted by an experimental knowledge to deal with these several matters than are the natives of Timbuctoo. A man may be a decent sort of pettifogger in a justice's court at home, or he may understand the manipulation of mining stocks, or he may be a respectable clergyman, stone-cutter, cattle-dealer, or what not, but what does he know of the wants of commerce, manufactures, agriculture, mining, transportation, or labor? and how, without previous training and knowledge, can he legislate understandingly with reference to finance, the tariff, and other matters affecting the condition of every man, woman and child in the country?

Does the civil service need reformation? Congress, most assuredly, offers a more inviting field for improvement. The fault lies with the people, and the reforming process must begin at local primaries, and thence be extended to nominating conventions and the polls. Good and competent men can be found associated with all political parties, and these should be preferred to partisan wireworkers and scheming politicians. Let not Congress be overlooked in any plan designed to reform the Government and make it more efficient.

NOTES ON FINANCE AND TRADE.

THERE has been a sharp twinge in the money market, to the great surprise and discomfiture of many people who have put faith in the success of the efforts of Secretary Sherman to make "everything lovely." The attempt to maintain an easy money market by providing the Bulls and Bears of Wall Street with funds to stimulate their speculations is as futile as to pour water down a rat-hole or to allay the thirst of an old toper by giving him an extra "nip." The cry is always for "more!" The demand for money grows with what it feeds upon, and low rates of interest cannot be promoted by encouraging speculation.

Secretary Sherman's course is not only resultless, therefore, as regards its avowed present object, but is full of danger, by promoting complications in the early future. Shall we have another Black Friday? It looks like it. The Federal Treasury should now be strengthening itself against the time when the country will need additional funds with which to "move the crops." The demand for this purpose begins in May. At the present moment all the exigencies of the money market ought to be supplied by the marketing of the great staples of the country—cotton, breadstuffs, provisions, etc. All these are passing to consumption or export with great rapidity, releasing the funds employed in carrying them. The action of Secretary Sherman has not, therefore, the excuse of any present necessity. It is extravagant, also. What business man would pay a premium for his notes, which, in a few months, he may redeem at par?

The danger to which the country is exposed is through the maintenance of speculation at fever heat at a time when the legitimate financial needs of the country are small. When they are larger the increased demands will come upon a money market already exhausted, and the effect can scarcely fail to be a serious crisis. It was so in 1869. When Mr. Boutwell came in as Secretary of the Treasury he was animated with the amiable but wholly unbusinesslike and unneeded purpose of promoting an advance in five-twenty bonds. Everything was shaped to that end, and the result was they rose to 1.20. To accomplish this the balance in the Federal Treasury was reduced extremely low. Speculation was promoted, the premium on gold advanced, and, finally, one day in September, came "Black Friday." Thousands were ruined, the Government disgraced, the financial situation demoralized, and the way opened for the panic of 1873.

We have not now, of course, the element of danger arising from a premium on gold, but, unless much care is taken, we shall have repeated, on a modified scale, the scenes of September, 1869. It is time to call a halt to the speculations on the Stock Exchange. The introduction and manipulation of worthless railway issues ought to cease, and it will cease when Mr. Sherman uses the public funds with better judgment. In merchandise, the "bulge" ceased some weeks since. Cotton, wheat, corn, pork and lard are all lower than in January. There is every disposition to sell these articles as rapidly as possible without accepting too great a reduction in values. An easy money market does not help them. But they will be in great danger, later on, when money will be needed to move the next crops. The relapse in the iron trade has been most decided, and is of great significance, as indicating that the speculation "boom," which began more than two years ago, has about exhausted itself. Legitimate influences begin to assert themselves, and what the business of the country now needs above all is to be left to those influences. It wants neither stimulant nor opiate. Prices are pretty well up, and yet not excessively or oppressively dear. The process of selling is daily relieving the money market. In the meantime the Federal Treasury may see its funds accumulate, without danger or inconvenience, making at the same time due provision for any emergency that may arise in the Summer or Autumn months.

WOMEN AS VOTERS.

THE often-repeated statement that the true enemy of the Women Suffragists is woman, and not the supposed-to-be inimical male, found a curious, almost an amusing, proof of illustration recently at Albany. The occasion was the first reading of Mr. Baker's Bill conferring upon women the right to vote for, and serve as, School Trustees. His plea for the Bill's being promptly acted and voted upon, was the urgent and pressing desire of the women of Syracuse to vote at an election for school officers to be held within a day or so. The Syracuse papers, however, cruelly drew attention to the humiliating truth that, up to a very late hour the night before the election, but one woman had thus far registered her name.

For over a quarter of a century there has been one text which has served the radical woman with an unfailing theme for her bitterest invective. That text has been the determined opposition, the obstinate prejudice, the seemingly ineradicable enmity in the male mind, against allowing women the right to vote, and the jealousy of the opposite sex in permitting women to participate in any of the departments of official life. To such charges the Legislature at Albany made a most pregnant answer. The Bill had the full indorsement of the Governor's sanction. It was carried at its first reading, and before the Bill itself was found to be unconstitutional, through all its stages without opposition. It may almost be said to have been passed unanimously, since there were but three dissenting voices, one of the reporters incidentally remarking that there was no more excitement exhibited, and quite as much indifference, as in the reading and passing of any other Bill.

As a somewhat curious contrast to this pacific condition of the male tyrant is the picture of the woman voters' attitude in Massachusetts. The law allowing women to vote for school officers has now been in operation long enough for it to have determined some test questions. Returns show that, thus far, the interest among women in educational matters is at the best but a lukewarm one. The voting woman, like her sister the radical, seems to be the exceptional woman; comparatively few women present themselves at the polls, and still fewer evince ambitious tendencies to aspire to the onerous duties of official life.

These signs are all the more significant since Massachusetts has not only been, of all the States, perhaps, the one the most prominent in furthering the woman's movement, but is foremost in advancing all matters pertaining to education. She also can justly lay proud claim to possessing by far a greater average of well-educated, earnest-minded and enlightened women than can be found in any other State in the Union. It would naturally be supposed that the women of that enterprising State, once having gained the right to the voting power, would only too eagerly have acted upon that right—all the more, since the matter of education comes home to every woman through her nearest and most sacred interests. It would be thought that, from a woman's point of view, the right to vote for the President of the United States would shrink to the proportions of a matter of secondary importance, compared to the inestimable privilege of a mother's right to cast her vote for those who shall oversee her children's educational career.

Digitized by Google

A prominent writer and thinker on modern affairs has said that but comparatively few enlightened women really take any vital interest in this matter of woman suffrage. Certainly the state of things in Massachusetts goes to prove the justice of such a conclusion. It leads one to conjecture whether, after all, the voting woman as a class really exists—whether she is not a creature still to be evolved—as, indeed, the nineteenth-century woman, with her graces of social refinement, her culture, and vigorous aptitude for independent thought has been the result of many centuries and of various phases of development. All processes of development are necessarily slow, and the political woman has, comparatively speaking, but very recently made her appearance; it will take some time before a sense of duty and a clear perception of the responsibilities of their voting power will develop in women unanimity of sentiment and action on the suffrage question. Women, in spite of their talent for impulse, are really conservative—a conservatism in which the emancipated woman sees only a proof of their bondage in ignorance. But the women of Massachusetts are many points removed from even a suspicion of ignorance; and yet with them, custom, habit and the tradition of centuries have proved stronger than an innovation founded upon a really rational basis of improvement.

The laudable attempt at Albany to offer a fair provision for testing the experiment of women's voting can only be justly considered tested when such length of time shall have elapsed as will allow for the gradual growth and education of the voting conscience among women.

Maine stands true to Blaine. The Republican Legislature has just elected delegates to the Chicago Convention in favor of the nomination of "the favorite son" for the Presidency. The delegation is headed by Hon. Eugene Hale, who so ably managed Mr. Blaine's case in the Cincinnati Convention four years ago.

Ex-Governor Parker, of New Jersey, has the Presidential bee in his bonnet, and, in a recent conversation, is alleged to have remarked that "If the best people of New Jersey will only rally around me, my nomination is sure." It is not to be presumed for a moment that the "best people of New Jersey" will be so cruel as to disappoint the hopes and expectations of the worthy ex-Governor.

A joint resolution has been introduced in the Senate recognizing Indians as citizens of the United States and of the States in which they reside. The resolution originates with a Senator representing a Southern State in which black men are not unfrequently denied their rights as citizens. The latter are certainly quite as fit to perform the duties and exercise the responsibilities of citizenship as the Indians in whose behalf Senator Morgan proposes his resolution.

The House of Assembly at Albany has passed the Bill to reduce the fares on the elevated railroads in New York city to five cents. Only ten votes in all were recorded against the measure. It is understood that desperate efforts will be made in the Senate to defeat the Bill, or so amend it as to destroy its vitality; but its supporters are hopeful of success there as well as in the House. Should it become a law, the fare on the surface railroads will probably be reduced to three cents.

A Washington paper having asserted the other day that a meeting was recently held at the residence of Mr. Tilden, at which that gentleman declared that he should be a candidate for renomination for the Presidency, a member of Mr. Tilden's household has authorized the statement that no such meeting was ever held, and that Mr. T. has never made or authorized the announcement in question. This is possibly true; but it is also true, we suspect, that Mr. Tilden means to obtain the nomination in question if he can do it, and will lose no opportunity to promote his chances to that end.

The reduction in the public debt for the month of February was over five and a half millions of dollars, notwithstanding the fact that over $6,000,000 was paid out during the month on account of pensions. The total revenues during the month were larger than those ever received before during the month of February under the present revenue laws, amounting to very nearly a million dollars a day. The receipts for customs during the month amounted to $16,800,000, while in the corresponding month of 1879 they amounted to only $10,800,000. The receipts from internal revenue last month were over a million greater than in February of last year.

A Bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. S. S. Cox, to promote the efficiency of the Life-saving Service, provides for the award of one month's pay to officers or men for display of extraordinary gallantry in efforts to save life, and authorizes the payment of a pension of $15 per month to the widow of an officer who may have lost his life in the service or from wounds or sickness contracted while in the discharge of his duties, and $12 per month to the widow of a member of a crew. There is no branch of the public service in which greater heroism has been shown than that to which this Bill relates, and the provision here made for the recognition of deeds of special daring in the saving of human life will no doubt command, as it should, the hearty approval of Congress.

The principal event in the United States Senate during the past week, was a three days' speech by Senator Logan in opposition to the Bill to restore Fitz John Porter to the army and grant him an allowance of $60,000. Senator Logan's speech reviewed exhaustively the evidence in the case, and insisted that General Porter had been guilty of a positive disobedience of orders which resulted in the defeat of the Union arms at the second Bull Run Battle. The speech which was provoked by a defense of General Porter by Senator Randolph, his intimate personal friend, attracted more general attention than any other of the present session, the galleries being filled daily, and Senators and army officers manifesting the utmost interest in the discussion. It is not probable that the Bill will pass, unless it shall be made a party matter.

Direct trade between the grain-growing West and Europe has often been the subject of strong editorials, elaborate articles and convincing speeches, but, after all, it seems to amount really to very little. The trade has practically never amounted to anything. The reason is easily seen. Vessels small enough to thread the lake, river and canal systems from Chicago to the ocean cannot carry freight enough to pay for the venture. In 1877 the number of vessels that cleared from ports on our northern lakes for Europe was only three; in 1878 it ceased altogether, not a single vessel leaving from any lake port; while in 1879 it had recovered only to the extent of three vessels. The carrying capacity of six vessels in three years could not have interfered very seriously with the railroad traffic.

Is it not a little curious that our ardent teetotalers should have so long failed to recognize their smallest but most powerful assistant, the Grape Phylloxera, which has been for years, and is still, at work destroying thousands and tens of thousands of acres of the best vineyards of France and other grape-growing countries of Europe? This minute little insect, so small that it can scarcely be seen without the aid of a magnifier, while putting forth no wordy harangues like a Father Mathew or Gough, is all the while quietly sweeping away the great sources of supply of the rare and seductive wines and genuine brandies, and doing it as thoroughly as the most enthusiastic advocate of teetotalism could desire. The teetotalers' badge could appropriately bear the motto, "All Hail! Saint Phylloxera."

The Alumni of the United States Medical College know how to do the "correct thing," and to do it well. "Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "a dinner lubricates business," and the dinner by which the business of this flourishing institution was lubricated on Friday night at the New York Hotel proved in every way worthy of the élan of the diners. From the terrapin soup to the canvas-backs, from the cromesqui de foie gras to the suprême de volaille aux truffes, from the speeches to the asides, everything was in "good form." The chair was ably filled by Dr. F. L. Pond, and the vice-chair by Dr. R. A. Gunn, the Dean of Faculty, who, if he be not a good fellow amongst kings, is of a verity a king among good fellows. About 130 persons sat down to dinner, the ladies, "doctors fair as Portia," serving in every sense to add additional charm to this really enjoyable réunion.

There is to be no reform in the tariff at the present session of Congress, both parties being evidently indisposed to take up the subject on the eve of the Presidential election. At a recent meeting of the Ways and Means Committee, it was determined, by a vote of seven to six, to postpone the consideration of the Bill to revise the duties on sugar, the Bill reducing the duty on steel rails, and the Bill providing that the duties on cotton and wool, cotton and woolen goods, earthenware, hemp, jute and flax goods, metals and wool, shall not in any case exceed fifty per cent. ad valorem. These Bills embody the most important modifications proposed in the present tariff, and their postponement will seriously disappoint a large number of people who believe that the best interests of the country would be promoted by essential changes in the tariff laws.

It is not at all probable that there are many persons in this country who know that many of our wild ferns, or brakes, as some of them are called, are edible, and are worthy of attention as an article of diet. Most of our larger indigenous species contain more or less starch, and when properly prepared are very palatable. In Japan the young, tender shoots are called sorabi, and are gathered and prepared somewhat as we gather and prepare asparagus; and later in the season the roots or subterranean stems are dug and crushed, the starch extracted by steeping in water, afterwards dried and kept for use. In some of the hilly regions of Japan the people live almost entirely upon the fern-shoots and the starch obtained from the roots. There are numbers of wild species of ferns in the United States closely allied to those of Japan, and without doubt equally as valuable for food.

Up to this time the Democratic majority in Congress has carefully avoided a revival of the partisan discussions of the extra session. But they evidently do not mean to abandon the position then assumed as to certain pivotal questions. It is stated, for instance, that the Marshals' Deficiency Bill, proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, contains a provision forbidding any money therein appropriated to be used to pay marshals for duties performed under the Election laws; and as this was the feature which caused the heated and protracted discussion at the extra session, it can scarcely be otherwise than that the consideration of this Bill will lead to another partisan contest. The Bourbons among the Democracy are evidently just as incapable now of learning wisdom from experience as they were six months ago, and if they still persist in their blundering course, disaster will as surely overtake the party in the next election as that election shall come around.

Count de Lesseps has received little encouragement in his canal project from the authorities in Washington. Both the President and Secretary of State are said to be determined to favor no enterprise which is prosecuted under the control and protection of a foreign government. It appears that the United States are bound by treaty with Colombia to guarantee and protect the territorial rights of that government if a canal is built, and this guarantee is of such a nature as to cover the whole ground, and make it impossible for a foreign power to interfere in any way. It is understood that the Interoceanic Canal Committee of the House will soon bring in a resolution on the general subject, and that the President will shortly thereafter make a communication in the matter to Congress. But while the Monroe Doctrine will be asserted by Congress and the Administration, it is not probable that the assertion will be made offensively, though it will be sufficiently clear and distinct to satisfy M. de Lesseps that he cannot look for much encouragement from official quarters here in aid of his enterprise.

In a letter to the New York Chamber of Commerce, Secretary Evarts, who has shown great interest in the extension of our export trade with the more remote peoples of the East, suggests that it would be well for the Chamber to "establish a kind of industrial museum, in which samples, obtained through United States consulates in the Eastern and African countries, as well as through the direct efforts of our shipmasters, might be open to the inspection of the manufacturers of New York and the neighboring States." Mr. Evarts fortifies his suggestion by the statement that our consuls frequently report that consignments of goods, made up at much expense for the supposed needs of a foreign market, have proved unsalable because not responding to the traditional tastes and wants of the people to whom they were offered in trade or barter. These consular officials, also, not unfrequently send samples of the goods having a ready native sale, with prices annexed, showing the tastes of the natives as to pattern or material, and a knowledge of the facts thus communicated might often be of convenience and value to exporters. This suggestion of the Secretary is an eminently practical one, and will no doubt receive the early and favorable consideration of the Chamber of Commerce.

The Governor of Virginia has entitled himself to the commendation of all honest men by his veto of the Bill passed by the Legislature practically repudiating the State debt. In his message giving his reasons for disapproving the Bill, he says that it "eliminates more than $13,000,000 of hitherto acknowledged principal of debt by one stroke of the pen. It eliminates one-half of the promised interest upon the residue; indeed, it proposes to pay no certain amount of interest, but only such sum as may be in the Treasury after future General Assemblies have disposed of what may seem to them proper; it then eliminates nearly all that may be left, by subjecting it to State, city and county taxation, and thus the holders of the State's obligations abroad and at home are treated worse than civilized nations in these latter days treat a public enemy." He adds, in conclusion:

"We may say, as we have ever done, that the State of Virginia does not mean to repudiate; but these declarations will not avail. The charges will be brought and fixed. Virginia's history will be stained with a deadly virus, which no efforts of ours or of those who will come after us can erase, and for which no future repentance can ever atone. With these views and convictions, I cannot put my signature in approval to this Bill. I respectfully return it to your honorable body in which it originated, because I believe it to be in violation of the Constitution of the State, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, in violation of the spirit which has ever moved and inspired the traditions of the Commonwealth and made her name so dear to her own citizens and so honored among men."

A two-thirds vote is necessary to pass the Bill over this veto, and this, it is confidently asserted, cannot be obtained.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

The Five Cent Fare Bill passed the Assembly of New York on March 8th, by 83 votes to 10.

A tornado in Indiana and Ohio on March 5th resulted in the loss of considerable property and several lives.

The Florida Republican State Convention is to be held in Gainesville, Alachua County, on Wednesday, May 12th.

The California Senate has killed a Bill to compel foreign insurance companies to maintain a deposit in that State.

Mr. Windom has introduced a Bill into the Senate to establish national savings banks which shall invest all their deposits in Government securities.

A dinner was given to M. de Lesseps at Delmonico's, on March 1st, by many of the prominent citizens of New York, at which the Rev. Dr. H. S. Storrs presided.

At a special election in Hartford, Conn., March 1st, Charles C. Strong, Republican, was elected City Treasurer over John H. Brocklesby, Democrat, by a majority of 791.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company have received a proposition from Pacific railroads to renew the contracts on business to San Francisco, the steamship company to receive a monthly subsidy of $110,000.

The subject of Alaska was before both Houses of Congress on the 5th, a Bill for its organization as a Territory being reported in the Senate, and a resolution for a census of its people being offered in the House.

Isaiah C. Hanscom, ex-Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, who had been ill for some weeks past, died March 5th, at his residence in Washington, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

In the Iowa Senate and House on March 1st the Oleomargarine Bill was amended and passed, so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in the State under heavy penalties by fine and imprisonment.

Both Houses of the General Assembly of Virginia have passed a Bill repealing the Moffat Bell-punch Liquor law and re-establishing a license system, which is to go into operation on May 1st. The vote was nearly unanimous.

On March 1st the United States Supreme Court rendered decisions in several cases involving the constitutionality of statutes, among them the Judge Rives and Tennessee cases. It is held that colored jurors must have equal rights and protection with white jurors.

On March 1st both Houses of the General Assembly of Virginia passed and sent to the Governor for his approval the Bill to re-establish the public credit, generally known as the Riddleberger Bill. It reduces the principal of the State debt from $23,000,000 to $20,000,000 by eliminating the capitalized war and reconstruction interest, and fixes the rate of interest at 3 per cent. The Bill was opposed in both Houses by the conservatives, and was carried by the Readjusters, aided by most of the Republican members.

On March 3d, Secretary Schurz had a conference with Chief Ouray, the Uncompahgre and White River Utes, at which the Indians virtually agreed to accept the terms of the Government and cede their reservation. A soon as a definite understanding is reached, Schurz will submit the details of the agreement to Congress. It is thought that the White River Utes will be removed to the Uintah Reservation in Utah, upon lands to be allotted them there, and that Ouray and the Uncompahgres will be settled severally on land on the Grand River, in Utah. At a previous interview the Southern Ute delegation consented to give up their present reservation.

Foreign.

The German Army Bill was introduced in the Reichstag on March 1st, and General Von Moltke spoke in favor of its adoption.

A late report from Rio Janeiro announces that the Chilian fleet has attacked Arica. The commander of the ironclad Huascar was killed during the engagement.

The Paris Globe asserts that France has entered into negotiations with England and the United States with a view to terminating the war between Chili and Peru.

The Vatican is dissatisfied with the conduct of the Brazilian Government, and is indisposed to approve the ecclesiastic proposed by the latter for the Bishopric of Olinda.

A decree has been published fixing the force of the Spanish army for the year 1880-81 at 90,000 men for Spain, 33,000 for Cuba, 10,000 for the Philippine Islands, and 3,395 for Porto Rico.

A new anti-slave trade convention has been concluded between Great Britain and Germany whereby co-operation between the war-vessels of the two Powers in the suppression of the slave traffic is assured.

At Ashton-under-Lyne 10,000 cotton weavers have struck work, in consequence of the refusal of their employers to grant an advance of 5 per cent. in their wages, which advance the spinners recently obtained.

The British Consul at Salonica has received a letter from Colonel Synge, saying that the colonel and his wife are well treated. The chief of the brigands has disappeared, and negotiations for their release are consequently interrupted.

With a view to affording Prince Bismarck further relief from his arduous duties, Count von Stolberg-Wernigerode, at present Vice-President of the Council of Ministers, is about to be appointed Prussian Premier in his stead.

President Diaz gave a banquet in honor of General Grant in the National Palace on March 26. All the members of the Cabinet, diplomatic corps and many others persons were present. After the banquet the festival, already announced, took place.

The Cuban debt is stated officially to be about $123,816,415 in gold, and $43,300,076 in bank bills. According to the last advices received at Havana, nothing definite has been resolved upon regarding the loan for the Island of Cuba. Nothing will be settled upon before the project of the estimates for Cuba are finished and laid before the Cortes.

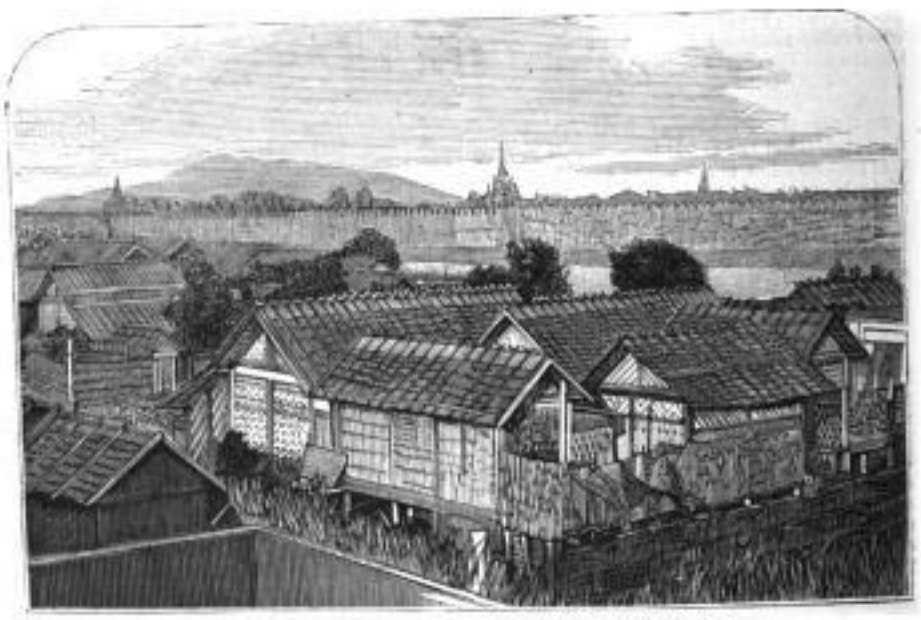
On March 3d General Malikoff, Chief of the new Supreme Executive Commission, was fired at by a young man with a revolver when alighting from a carriage, at his residence in Grand Morskaia Street. The assassin attempted to fire a second shot at General Melikoff before he was seized, but was prevented by a blow from the General. The bullet passed through the back folds of General Melikoff's cloak. The prisoner was tried the following day and hanged the next.

Digitized by Google

The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 39.

AUSTRALIA.—A MAORI TANGI, OR WAKE.

AUSTRALIA.—A NEW YEAR'S DAY SCHOOL PICNIC.



RUSSIA.—DESCENT OF THE POLICE ON A NIHILIST PRINTING-OFFICE.

RUSSIA.—TRANSFERRING NIHILIST PRISONERS TO THE STATE PRISON.

AUSTRALIA.—AN OLD DANCE IN THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE, SYDNEY.

INDIA.—THE CITY WALL OF MANDALAY, BURMAH.

AFGHANISTAN.—YAKOOB KHAN, EX-AMEER, ON HIS WAY TO INDIA AS A PRISONER.

INDIA.—FOX-HUNTING AT MUSTUNG, BOLAN PASS.

Digitized by Google

THE RUSSIAN ANNIVERSARY.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the Czar's accession to the throne was celebrated on Tuesday, March 2d. Although the occasion occurred during the Lenten season, it was observed, in St. Petersburg with all the heartiness of carnival days. All the members of the Council of the Empire, including the Chancellor, Prince Gortschakoff, proceeded, at 11:30 o'clock, to the Winter Palace, and presented a congratulatory address to the Emperor. At 10 o'clock vast crowds assembled before the Winter Palace. The troops were massed in the central quadrangle of the palace and the immediate vicinity. The Czar appeared on the balcony of the palace, where he remained twenty minutes saluting the multitude amid great enthusiasm. After the Czar had received the congratulations of the enormous crowd at the palace, he drove out in an open carriage, and was loudly and continuously cheered in the crowded streets through which he passed. No disturbances whatever occurred. The Czar honored himself and the occasion by granting pardons to prisoners, remitting arrears of taxes owing by the rural population, and awarding orders of distinction.

In New York the anniversary was fittingly commemorated in the Russian-Greek Chapel on Second Avenue. The Rev. Father Bjerring was attired in rich vestments of cloth and gold, with a violet-colored inner robe and a hat of the same color, recently sent to him from St. Petersburg as a mark of distinction. The service was conducted in the Russian language, except the Scripture lessons, which were read in English. The liturgy of St. Chrysostom, which is usual on festival days, was sung by the male choir, and prayers were offered for the Emperor and the imperial family and for the Russian army and navy. The prayers for a long reign, sound health, constant victory and final salvation for "the pious and divinely preserved Alexander Nicolaivitch," were frequent and earnest. A prayer for the peace and sanctification of the Church and of the world was also offered, and the President of the United States and the Czar were conjointly remembered in the petitions. A Te Deum closed the service. Among the worshipers present were His Excellency Nicholas Shishkin, the Russian Minister at Washington, and his wife and two sons. The Minister was attired in his official court costume, with the insignia of his position on his breast and shoulders. As the representative of the Emperor, he occupied a position within the chancel. Mr. Kartschewsky, the Russian Consul-General, and Mr. Stern, the Vice-Consul in New York, and their wives; Mr. Peterson, the Secretary of the Russian Legation; Mr. Stoughton, late United States Minister to Russia, and wife; Mrs. President Barnard, of Columbia College; Albert Bierstadt, who has recently returned from Russia; Commodore Baldwin, United States Navy, and wife; a few of the foreign consuls in New York, and a score or more of well-known American ladies, were also present. Many leading clergymen and laymen of this city sent their congratulations on the Emperor's long and useful reign and the preservation of his life, and their strong condemnation of the Nihilists' attempts to kill him.

The present year is to be celebrated as completing the first twenty-five years of the Czar's reign, and the industrial exhibition which is to be held at Moscow in the coming May will doubtless be as popular with the Russians as even that of 1872. But such an anniversary brings with it an ominous suggestion of the grim old proverb, "Evil awaits the Czar of twenty-five years," which the Russian history has so strangely verified. Ivan the Terrible's first twenty-five years were brilliantly successful, but after 1558 came the loss of all his Western conquests, the successive deaths of three wives, the murder of his son and heir, and the fastening of a frightful disease upon himself. Peter the Great's Turkish reverses, and the deplorable death of his son Alexis, came after the twenty-fifth year of his reign. The twenty-sixth of Alexander I. ravaged St. Petersburg with a fearful inundation, while a formidable plot against himself and his own death came a year later. In the twenty-sixth year of Nicholas began the intrigues which led to the Crimean War: and the present Czar, now just about to pass the perilous limit, sees his wife dying by inches, his throne undermined by rebellion, and a foreign war looming on the horizon.

ALEXANDER II., THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

THE CHINESE AGITATION IN SAN FRANCISCO.

THE recent action of the health authorities in examining that portion of San Francisco known as "Chinatown," and reporting it a public nuisance that should be at once abated, has again brought the Chinese question into prominence. The Board of Health, on February 2d, on motion of Mayor Kalloch, appointed that gentleman, with Dr. Henry S. Gibbons, Jr., and Health Officer J. L. Meares, a committee to investigate the condition of Chinatown, and to recommend to the board what measures should be taken for the preservation of the city's health. After securing the opinion of L. Murphy, the City and County Attorney, as to what legally constituted a nuisance, and the powers of the board to abate or remove nuisances, the committee made what it claims to have been a critical investigation of Chinatown, extending over a period of two weeks. On Saturday, February 21st, it presented its report, and it was upon this that the action of the board was taken. Following is a condensation of the report. It describes in detail many of the filthy surroundings of the Chinamen. Taken as a whole, it presents one of the most disgusting pictures of low life imaginable, and the sanitary possibilities which it portrays are alarming. According to the document, the first thing which impressed the committee upon visiting Chinatown was the unnatural crowding together of thousands of persons of both sexes in spaces which should properly accommodate but hundreds of one sex. In a contracted territory as that included in the Chinese quarter, 30,000 people could not exist under the most favorable circumstances, if they were by nature the most cleanly of the human family—which the Chinamen are far from being—without detriment to their own health and endangering the health of the city. But, added to the evils arising from packing human beings like sardines in a box, much more baneful influences were found at work in the habitations of the Asiatics. They were literally reeking in filth and drenched in immorality.

In recommending the abatement of the nuisance, the report says: "We utterly repudiate the idea of being moved by any race prejudice or class hatred in this matter. The Chinese are living quite as decently and cleanly as any people could do who have to live under similar circumstances. The fault is in conditions, and the conditions are under our control."

This action, taken in connection with the hotheaded harangues on the Sand Lots, the enforcement of the demands of the Workingmen's Party upon employers for the immediate discharge of all Chinese help, and the rumors that the merchants were organizing a vigilance committee for the protection of their persons and property, added greatly to the fear of riots and bloodshed. The feeling of uneasiness was also increased by a report that the Common Council had ordered the Chinatown shanties vacated, and by a subsequent one that this order had been rescinded.

In the midst of all the excitement, the meetings of the Workingmen's Party on the Sand Lots were kept up. On the night of Saturday, February 21st,

NEW YORK CITY.—COMMEMORATION OF THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE CZAR'S ACCESSION TO THE THRONE, IN THE RUSSIAN GREEK CHAPEL, MARCH 2D.

Digitized by Google

Mayor Kalloch addressed a large meeting, and, in the course of his remarks, said: "The Chinese must go. Peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must. The Asiatic invasion must be stopped. And if trouble comes in consequence of this determination it will not come as our opponents desire or plan. We shall scarcely allow them to select the grounds and weapons, too, as they are now trying to do. You will all find out, some time, whether anybody else is fooling or not; that I mean business when I say the 'Chinese must go.' But we must bide the time. We must keep level heads on our shoulders. Reckless or revolutionary spirits who would precipitate events by acts of lawlessness must be put down by all the force of power. We have undertaken a great work. We have to revolutionize the labor movement of a State. We have to uproot a fortified system of slavery. We have to overcome the prejudices of piety and the criticisms of cant. We have to resist the sentimentalism and become indifferent to the anathemas of the East. We have to fight the accursed spirit of corporate greed and individual selfishness. We have to beat back the barbaric hordes of paganism. Such a work cannot be done in a day. In its prosecution we must welcome help from all parties, and affiliate with those that will help us most."

On Sunday, Kearney spoke at the regular weekly mass-meeting of his followers in his usual vein, using such expressions as the following:

"When the collectors pass their hats to-day, please to contribute as liberal as you can in order that we may be able to erect a gallows upon these sand lots for the purpose of punishing traitors, whether they reside on Tar Flat or Nob Hill.

"I claim it is much better to hang a dozen or fifteen men than to throw the whole State into a revolution. I hold, and always have held, that the workingmen were the only law-abiding citizens in California."

"I know of but two parties in the State—the W. P. C. and Republican. Workingmen, your only salvation is in capturing the government as workingmen. If the workingmen of California and the Democrats of the East and South should nominate the same man for President, that has nothing to do with our future movements in this State. The workingmen of California are bound to capture this State at the next election. At the last election we killed the Democratic party, and at the next election we will kill the Republican party, and upon the ruins of both will be built a party whose mission will be to make laws for man and woman, thereby bringing in the new civilization. If it had not been for the Workingmen's Party the Chinese question would not have been settled for fifty years to come, but kept here by the old parties as a menace to the people."

Kearney concluded by calling on the people to watch the movements of the Legislature very carefully. He had been up there for two weeks lobbying for the people, but everything he introduced they knocked the stuffing out of.

During the past week nearly 200 Chinese from San Francisco arrived at New York, and began to settle a colony in Mott Street, paying higher prices for the best property than could be obtained by other tenants. They remain very reticent and will not state how many more are coming.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DEMITRY.

CHAPTER I.—THE OLD MANUSCRIPT.

THE time was the afternoon of a delicious May day, and the place was the vicinity of Madison Square, in the City of New York.

At the parlor-window of a dwelling in one of the streets leading from the square sat a handsome young woman of stately bearing, looking out thoughtfully upon the passing people.

Three years had elapsed since Colonel John Waring, who had spent the better part of his life, after his graduation from West Point, as an officer of dragoons on the frontier of Texas, had returned to New York, his native city, to die. He returned a widower; his wife, a lady of an ancient Mexican family, named Davila, whom he had met and married in New Mexico during his earlier years of service, having died many years previously, leaving two children, twins, a son and a daughter, to his fatherly care.

It was this daughter, Manuela, who, on this bright May evening, was gazing from the window into the street, as described in the beginning of this chapter. The house was the residence of her aunt, her father's sister, to visit whom she had left her home near Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande del Norte, in New Mexico.

A casual observer might have judged Manuela Waring, at the first glance, to be a woman more given to commanding than obeying. This impression would have been due probably to the effect produced on the spectator's mind by the noble proportions of her figure, her erect carriage and the firm curves of her shapely lips; but indicative of strength of character and robust physical health as these attributes undoubtedly were, they were at least counterbalanced by the womanly softness of her large violet eyes and the feminine grace of her movements.

Her face, oval in shape, was handsome, but of the heroic cast—like that of the typical Minerva. Her hair, brown, luxuriant and lustrous, covered a head of classic mold, and her complexion, shaded by the suns of her native clime, was a clear olive. Her form was in perfect harmony, neither her hands nor her feet being too small for her height; and her manners and gestures united the vivacity of the woman who had been bred in the unrestrained freedom of border life with the polish that had come with mental culture.

As she thus sat at the window watching the people pass, a slight but perceptible flush suddenly reddened her cheek, and she drew back, involuntarily as it were, in her seat.

A young gentleman had appeared within the range of her vision, and the sight of him seemed to have brought the color to her face. At all events, as he passed from her view and approached the front door, she straightened herself from her semi-reclining position, and sat with a look of expectancy in her eyes.

The bell rang, and a minute later a servant entered the parlor and handed her a card.

She read on it the name of the visitor, Mr. Reginald Grey; and when he made his appearance, she rose and shook hands with him with a frank ease of manner.

"So you have returned from Charleston?" she said. "When did you arrive, Mr. Grey?"

"Last night. You are very well, I hope?"

"Very well, as you see. But you?—you look troubled. Has anything vexatious occurred during your absence?"

He seated himself beside her on a sofa.

"How quick you are to perceive any anxiety in your friends," he exclaimed. "The fact is, something has occurred to annoy me."

"Won't you take me into your confidence? That is," she added, with a smile, "if the matter be one on which you care to speak to a comparative stranger."

"'A comparative stranger,' Miss Waring? Yes, we are comparative strangers to each other, it is true, but yet I feel, I know not why, that I can rely on your interest, if not your sympathy, in what concerns me."

"Do not exclude the sympathy, and then you will do me justice."

He was silent for a moment, and so was she. Her eyes were turned towards the open window, and there was a warm light in them which seemed in keeping with the glow that lit her cheeks.

Reginald gazed at her with an admiration of which she was not aware; or did she know by some mysterious intuition that his eyes were fixed on her with the expressive look that filled them?

"Miss Waring," he said, finally breaking the silence, "do you remember a certain lady whom I pointed out to you the day we rode in the park—the Italian lady, I mean?"

"The Marchesa di Lupo—wasn't that the name? I recollect her very well. Rather a handsome, though bold-looking, woman, but a fine rider. She rode most gracefully, I remember. You know I am a judge of equestrianism, for much of my life has been spent in forts and cavalry encampments."

"Ah!" he said, gallantly; "had you lived in the days of the Amazons and among them, you surely would have been their queen?"

She laughed lightly.

"Am I to regard this as a compliment?" she asked. "You know what the modern idea of the Amazon is?"

"I was not thinking of the modern misuse of the term," said Reginald, with what might have seemed an unnecessary earnestness. "When I spoke, my mind was dwelling on the thought of one of those free, brave, handsome women of antiquity who astonished men by their valor and conquered them with their beauty. You, I am sure, are courageous—more so than the majority of your sex."

"Yes; my early associations were in the camp where, with my brother Melchior, I rode by my dear father's side in his marches. You probably are right, Mr. Grey. I should have made an admirable Amazon!"

It was in such a moment as this, when memory recalled the dangers and excitements of the frontier amid which her life as a young girl had been passed, that Manuela Waring deserved the appellation of "Manuela the Superb," that the officers of her father's regiment had in the old days conferred on her. As she spoke, a red spot burned in either cheek, and her soft eyes flashed, investing her, to Reginald's eyes, with a strange beauty.

The enthusiasm with which she had spoken passed away as rapidly as it had come, and before Reginald had recovered from the sensation of renewed admiration which her bearing and her words had aroused, she brought back the conversation to the point at which the digression had occurred.

"But you were speaking of the Marchesa di Lupo, what about her? Has she anything to do with your annoyance?"

"Everything."

"Everything? I do not understand you."

"Let me explain. Just before my departure from the city, two weeks ago, I left in her hands a certain manuscript, concerning which I had spoken to her on the occasion of a previous visit and which she wished very much to examine. I took it to her one evening with the intention of calling for it the next day. But about that time my mind was diverted from the subject by the receipt of a letter that compelled me to leave the city without delay for Charleston. One of my first thoughts on my return was of the manuscript. I called to see the marchesa this morning, and to my astonishment I found her gone."

"And she had taken your manuscript with her?"

"Yes; the worst of it is, that the people of the house have not the slightest knowledge of where she is. She left suddenly, it appears, and said nothing about her destination. I can't call in the police in the matter," he added, with a smile, "and yet——"

"And yet what, may I ask?"

He paused for a moment, and then continued: "You may think the statement fantastic, but that paper was, once at least, a clew to hidden riches, and unless circumstances may have brought about their discovery, accidentally or otherwise, within the past two hundred years, it is still the finger-post to the spot where lies concealed a wealth that would make its finder rich to his heart's content."

"You begin to interest me. Then, with the paper in her possession the marchesa will hold, equally with you, the secret of the treasure?"

"No; not altogether. The clew to the locality is lost. That portion of the sheet on which is written the name of the place where it was, or is, hidden, has been eaten away by moths."

"Then the manuscript is of no use either to you or to anybody else, Mr. Grey?"

"In its present condition, it certainly is not."

"How unfortunate—if you ever are to obtain possession of it again! If the marchesa is to retain it, however, it is perhaps better that it should be so. Now tell me where you obtained this relic of the past."

"The story is simple enough. A few months ago I chanced to step into a second-hand bookstore on Nassau Street. I took down from a shelf a certain ancient volume, bound in vellum. Opening it, I found that it was a work on ecclesiastical law, written in the French language and published in Paris in the year 1662. The book took my fancy and I bought it for a trifle, and placed it among my other books. There was no name written in it by which its former possessor might be identified. Three weeks since, while turning its pages with more attention than I had given to it previously, I noticed in the narrow space between the back and the binding what seemed to be a slip of brown paper, which at the first glance I imagined to be a part of the binding. Brushing away the dust that had accumulated there, and which partly filled the opening—the dust of two centuries perhaps—and looking closer into the space, I became satisfied that it was a detached bit of paper, faded with time and yellow with age. With much care and some difficulty—for it was held tightly between the vellum and the back of the leaves—I drew it out. My surmise was correct. It proved to be a fragment of a sheet of old-fashioned writing-paper, about four inches wide and eight inches long, folded four times. I opened it, and saw that it was closely written over."

He paused for a little while. Manuela's attentive look indicated the interest with which she followed his recital.

"Continue," she said. "You saw that it contained writing. What more?"

"The writing was as fragmentary as the paper itself. What the moths had spared the wearing effect of the folds had defaced. The language was French, and the ink lines had almost disappeared. Two hundred years probably have elapsed since they were written. The man who wrote them seems to have been a prisoner in a castle called San Juan."

"Do you remember the substance of what was written in the paper?"

He took a memorandum-book from his pocket.

"I have here," he said, "an English translation of what remains, which I noted down at the time. I will read it to you. You will see that the blanks are as frequent as the words. Listen:

"'In Prison.

"'DEAR BROTHER CLAUDE:

"'. . wait 'of the church of the Pueblo, the name of which you know well, . . treasure in gold dust, diamonds and other precious stones, ... Brazil in the year 1678, when . . . . . the persecutions of the Viceroy Oliveira . . . . . value of three hundred thousand louis d'or, and . . of Fra Pablo, the Franciscan friar, . . stay at the pueblo, as a means of securing its safety while I should remain there, I hid . . . . . a man's height from the ground. The good padre himself removed . . . the wall is composed, and in this receptacle . . leaden box that contains . . . . completed, we repaired the wall, marking . . . . with the inscription juris datea meese, which . . Fra Pablo into the adobe. Then, having . . . . . time, no trace . . . . . abandonment of the pueblo it is necessary to recapitulate. In order . . . jury of the heathen, who, . . . Evil One, threatened . . we left the place one night suddenly and secretly. I could not venture . . . . the wall. Fra Pablo, alas the venerable man, my old and good friend! was . . alone survived with the secret. It was impossible thereafter for me to return. The danger . . . . . and while awaiting an opportunity to recover the treasure . . . . . I was put under arrest in D . . . . certain words uttered in a moment of exasperation against his Catholic Majesty, and brought . . . this Castle of San Juan. I shall never depart from my cell alive, my brother, I feel it. Go, then, to the church . . . . . my legacy to you and your children! I am childless. And to you, now that the path is open, I give it with . . . benediction. I will send this letter at the first opportunity by a trusty hand, hoping . . . . . my jailors. Remember . within the wall of the church, behind the inscription, the box . . . May heaven bless . . . Farewell, my brother—farewell!

"'ST. EVRE . . . . . LLE.'"

Reginald closed the memorandum-book slowly. Manuela, whose eyes, hidden by her hand during the reading, had been turned towards the floor, looked up for an instant.

"Is that all?" she asked in a low tone.

"That is all. You see that the key to this secret, even supposing that there ever was anything in it, is irretrievably lost. There was no address on the letter, indicating the person to whom it was written. There are a few milestones, as it were, on the road; but what do they amount to? Nothing, practically nothing. Brazil, a vague date, the pueblo, the multilated signature of the writer, Father Pablo, the threatening heathen, the Castle of San Juan, but which Castle of San Juan of the many of that name? The mystery lies somewhere in the New World, in one of the Spanish American countries, but where?"

"Ay," murmured Manuela, still gazing abstractedly downward, "where?"

CHAPTER II.—IN WHICH REGINALD REACHES A CONCLUSION.

AS REGINALD GREY is destined to prove the most active participant in the events of this story, it is proper that the reader should become better acquainted with him.

In age about twenty-five, he was of medium stature and of athletic build. His hair was brown with a tinge of red in it when the sun shone on it, and his hazel eyes, keen and searching in their expression, had in them at times a choleric look. His beard, when he wore it, which was seldom, was of a more pronounced reddish hue than his hair. In character he was determined and obstinate in pursuit of a purpose, especially when he deemed himself in the right; and, altogether, he was a young gentleman who had a very high opinion of his own dignity.

Rich, and possessed of a liberal education, he had studied law, and had been received at the Bar; but so far he had made no efforts to secure clients; and although removing from his ancestral home in South Carolina, he had selected New York as the scene of his future career as a lawyer, the day had not yet come, in his opinion, when he was to "settle down to the drudgery of work," as he termed it. In the meantime he had devoted himself, since his graduation, to travel and observation. He had been to Europe several times, and once he had journeyed around the world.

In the preceding chapter mention has been made of the Marchesa di Lupo. He had met her in society six weeks, or two months, previous to the opening of this story. She was a woman of fascinating manners, the widow of a certain Marquis di Lupo, of Milan, and was traveling in the United States for pleasure. Before making Manuela's acquaintance he had paid her some attentions in a desultory sort of way; and in this way was it that he had confided the manuscript to her keeping.

When Reginald, after leaving Manuela, reflected on the abstraction of the manuscript—for thus he regarded it—by the marchesa, his disappointment at its loss was somewhat softened by the thought that if the document was valueless to him it was equally valueless to others into whose hands it might fall. But the indifference in the matter of the manuscript did not extend to his feelings with regard to the unceremonious manner in which the marchesa had disappeared, without even leaving a note for him informing him of her departure. His vanity was wounded by this neglect, especially as, during his acquaintance with her, he had flattered himself that he had aroused in her a certain tender feeling.

Like most young men of his age, Reginald was given to flirtation, and, like most young men, he not unfrequently was deceived in his own estimate of the effect of his attractions. His impulsive nature caused him to chafe under the reflection that his ignorance of the marchesa's present place of abode compelled him to remain inactive; for had he known where to find her, his first act would have been to seek her and demand the return of the manuscript. That done, and with a few melodramatic accessories thrown in for effect, he would have been content to leave her to work out her destiny.

On the day following his visit to Manuela a circumstance occurred which, while it threw some light on the marchesa's movements and on the question of his chances of regaining possession of the manuscript, also introduced into the course of events a new complication.

This circumstance was the receipt of two letters, written on the day previous—one addressed in the marchesa's handwriting, with which he was familiar, and the other in a writing which was unknown to him. Both letters were dated "New York, on board the Ville de Paris."

The marchesa's note contained these lines:

"MON CHER MONSIEUR GREY—I assure you that I have a great regret that I now remember, for the first time, that in parting from New York I have locked up your droll old letter in my writing-desk, which is at present in one of my trunks in the care of the steamer on which I am about to leave for Europe. It is, therefore, impossible for me to have access to the trunk. The steamer departs on the instant. What a pity, my dear Reginald—you will pardon me for calling you by your poetic Christian name—that the moths would not permit to the old prisoner of the fortress of San Juan to tell where his diamonds and gold could be found! Alas! that you were so near one great fortune, and that now all is lost! Pauvre ami! I have much sympathy for you. Adieu, mon ami!

"MARIETTA DI LUPO."

The other letter, which Reginald tore from the envelope with rather a hasty motion, the tone of the marchesa's note having incensed him, ran as follows:

"M. REGINALD GREY—Permit me to say to you that I feel myself offended at your endeavors to make yourself agreeable to Madame la Marchesa di Lupo when she was in this city. She amused herself with you, and you, poor innocent young man! you did not perceive it. I do not permit to any man the privilege of writing to Madame di Lupo, and you, Mr. Grey—you have written four letters to the marchesa since you have had the honor of her acquaintance. Know, sir, that that lady has told me all. Know, also, that she is to be my wife, and that, in pretending to aspire to her favor, you have insulted me. As I depart at once for my post in Milan, I cannot say to you, personally, what contempt I have for you; but if you will come to Europe at some future time, and will present yourself before me, I shall prove to you that you have made a great mistake in presuming to address Madame di Lupo as 'charming Marietta.' LUIGI VELLANI, of Milan.
"Captain of Cavalry in the Army of His Majesty, Victore Emmanuele."

If the reading of the marchesa's pert note had offended Reginald, the perusal of Signor Luigi Vellani's letter inflamed him to fury. For a few seconds he gazed at it in a sort of stupor, while a hot flush mantled his face.

"The rascal!" he exclaimed finally, recovering the use of his tongue, and with all the anger of which his nature was capable stirred to activity. Then, rising from the sofa on which he had been lolling—he was in his room at the time—he walked excitedly to and fro, still holding the obnoxious missive in his hand.

"Confound the fellow's impudence!" he again burst forth, looking down at Vellani's letter as if unable to realize the full extent of the Italian's impertinence. "To write to me as if I were his valet! A precious pair truly! One goes off with my manuscript, pretending that she had forgotten all about it, and the other invites me to visit Italy in order that he may express to me, in a personal interview, his contemptuous opinion of me! If I only had the rascal here——"

He did not finish the sentence, but the quick gesture with which he threw the letter on a table testified mutely to the treatment that its writer probably would have received had he chanced to present himself at that moment.

Several minutes elapsed before he ceased walking. At first the only impulse that his countenance expressed was one of rage; then a thoughtful look came over his face and he seemed to be absorbed in his reflections. At last to this look succeeded an expression of deep resolve, and, bringing his hand down violently on the offending epistle, he exclaimed:

"I'll do it, as sure as my name is Reginald Grey! We shall see, Signor Vellani, whether or not you will prove as good as your word. The sooner this business is settled, the better."

Digitized by Google

Whatever may have been the conclusion he had reached, and which was expressed in these emphatic words, Reginald evidently was resolved to act promptly on it.

He placed the two letters in his pocket, put on his hat, and left the room, going down-stairs into the street.

From his lodgings, walking briskly, he made his way toward Madison Square.

"Now," he said, "I must go and see what Manuela thinks of it. It seems to me that I can hear her say, 'You are right in pursuing this course.' Ah, there are few women in the world like her—so resolute, so truthful and so honest! And, then, as for beauty, I do not know a woman to compare to her. I wonder whether——"

Here he fell into a brown study, turned his gaze downwards, and abstractedly continued on his way until he reached the house of Manuela's aunt.

(To be continued.)

TALKS ON TIMELY TOPICS.

ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEWS WITH EMINENT PUBLIC MEN.

—No. 16.—

INTERVIEW WITH M. DE LESSEPS.

The Chagres Canal.

THE corridor leading to the apartments of M. de Lesseps at the Windsor Hotel was crowded with bright, intellectual-looking, closely-cropped, nattily-booted foreigners, speaking every language under the sun; with speculative Americans, canal stock in their cent. per cent. glances; with well-dressed apoplectic mankind, invitations to dinner written upon their countenances; with superbly attired ladies bent upon visiting the wife of the eminent engineer; in fact, King Sues was holding a levee and his faithful subjects of all degrees were hieing unto the Presence Chamber. I had had the honor of meeting M. de Lesseps under the shadows of the Pyramids, again in Paris, and, yet again, in the Emerald Isle, at the Seven Churches, in the sweet County of Wicklow, where we sat, cheek-by-jowl, for a long Summer's day on the same side of an Irish jaunting-car. I found him on this, my present visit, not a whit changed. The same marvelously bright eye, the same earnest voice, the same sympathetic chuckle, personally magnetic as ever, erect, impulsive, and, if anything, younger.

M. de Lesseps was almost eclipsed by the enfolding forms of three of his children, Matthieu, Ismael and Consuelo, alias Totone, a tiny fascinatress of seven. These children take you into their confidence at once. They tell you in French or English their likings and dislikings. They speak of their brothers and sisters in Paris—two sets of twins, by-the-by—and interest you in the highest possible way without your being aware of the fact. Matthieu is ten years of age, and Ismael nine. They are swarthy, black-eyed, lithe, and their raven hair is combed over their foreheads in front, and allowed to descend to their necks behind. Ismael has his mother's eyes. Totone is Madame de Lesseps in miniature. I was greeted right graciously by His Majesty of Suez, and after a delightful chat anent the delightful chat on that outside car when he told me the romance of his marriage—quæ rescas!—we came to the burning question of the hour.

"I have come here to tell the truth, and nothing but the truth," he laughed. "I want people to question me in every possible way—to cross-examine and badger me. I have always heard it stated that Americans were fond of asking questions. They have a fine opportunity now if they wish to take advantage of it," and he laughed joyously.

"The very day after the Congress of Engineers asked me to take charge of the question, I sent in my acceptation. I felt all the responsibility, and I also felt that I should go on, and this, too, after the fashion of you Americans—right away! My work has now commenced, and, mark you, it is not work to be done for any particular nation—it is work to be done for all the peoples of the world."

"After accomplishing Suez, you will succeed in any enterprise."

"Didn't Suez look gloomy?"—with a most expressive gesture—"dark as Erebus. The most celebrated members of the Institution of Engineers, both in France and in England, pooh-poohed and absolutely laughed at me. I was a visionary, building a castle of shifting sand. I took the Nile into my confidence, and old Nile believed in me. We had no water, no houses, no shade or shelter; all, everything, was barren, of no use, burnt sand, a great plain of sand. Well, a couple of thousand camels and well-organized gangs of men soon put things into shape. We dug our canal, we invented excavating instruments which will tell even better at Panama than at Suez. We built our harbor on piles in the Mediterranean; and the Suez Canal, see what a supreme success it has been."

"What is your plan for the Chagres Canal?"

"I will tell you. The route begins at Colon, and follows the valley of the River Chagres."

"Is not this valley subject to floods?"

"It is; and as these floods would prove awkward to navigation at certain seasons, we propose to erect reservoirs for the purpose of holding surplus water."

"It is in connection with these reservoirs that the dam so much spoken of is to be constructed?"

"Yes. There are three reservoirs in existence, however, that contain more water than this dam will be called upon to maintain—the great dam at St. Etienne, in France; the dam at La Gillappe, in Belgium, and the dam at Alicante, in Spain. The dam at Alicante is three hundred years old, and it looks as though it would stand for ever. It will be as easy to erect a dam at Panama as at Alicante—ay, and a better one. It will be as easy to make deep cuttings and as easy to blast rocks. Besides, the climate is in our favor. I found the temperature moderate, not much over twenty-seven degrees centigrade, and in Summer, in Egypt, we had forty, and as high as fifty degrees. Panama, too, is extremely fertile—it is a botanical garden. The place is full of game, upon which the workmen could subsist, and the supply is the first question with an army, whether of navvies or of soldiers."

"A close approximation of the cost was laid before the Paris Conference, M. de Lesseps?"

"This is the estimate of cost that has been adopted at the Paris Congress:

	Francs.
Excavations (sidings included) above water:
Earth, 27,350,000 c. m., at 2.50 francs	68,750,000
Rocks of mean hardness, 925,000 c. m., at 7 francs	6,775,000
Hard rocks, 27,734,000 c. m., at 12 francs	332,808,000
Excavations of rocks, where pumping is necessary, 6,409,000 c. m., at 15 francs	115,362,000
Dredging and excavating under water:
Mud and alluvial soil, 12,000,000 c. m., at 2.50 francs	30,000,000
Hard soil capable of being dredged 300,000 c. m., at 12 francs	3,600,000
Excavation of rocks under water, 377,000 c. m., at 35 francs	13,195,000
Dam of Gamboa; length, 1,600 m., maximum height, 40 m	100,000,000
Channels for the regulated flow of the Chagres and for the Obispo and Trinidad rivers	75,000,000
Tide-lock for the Pacific side	12,000,000
Breakwater in the Bay of Limon	10,000,000
Total	767,000,000
Add for contingencies	76,000,000
Total	843,000,000

I am induced, however, after most careful consideration, to fix the capital at 600,000,000 francs, or $120,000,000."

"What is your estimate of the tonnage to pass through the canal annually?"

"My minimum estimate is six millions."

"What is your proposed tariff?"

"Three dollars per ton, or $18,000,000. Others have arrived at a minimum of eight millions of tons, which, at $3, would yield $24,000,000."

"How do you propose to raise the money, and what proportion is to be raised in Europe, and what proportion in America?"

"One-quarter of the entire capital has to be paid up, according to the laws of France, before the company can be legally incorporated. Of the entire sum of $120,000,000, one-half, or $60,000,000, is to be taken up in the United States. The remainder will be obtained in Europe."

"Suppose the United States fails to take up $60,000,000?"

"Well, anything left will be taken up in Europe."

"To what do you attribute the failure of last year in the raising of the money?"

"That was in November, and the failure is due to three distinct causes. Number one: The public were in comparative ignorance about the whole scheme; in fact, they had not been informed of what was proposed to be done, at what cost, and what results. Number two: It was alleged that this country was utterly opposed to the scheme, in fact, hostile to the project as then proposed; and, number three, the financial organs were hostile to us, as we had not extended to them the customary fees."

"You propose to complete the work in six years?"

"We do; but it could be done in five years. In fact, General Wright considers six years too long a period."

"You have secured neutrality for the canal, have you not, M. de Lesseps, from Colombia?"

"Absolute. The Articles provide for the most complete neutrality. In fact, this clause is in the verbiage of the Suez Canal clause."

"Do you consider that you have routed all opposition on the part of this country?"

"Not all. Despite the welcome which has been accorded me, and of which I will ever retain a pleasant remembrance, I do not conceal from myself that the opposition has not completely disappeared. Although it has appeared from the beginning under several forms, it seems to me that the real and dominant cause consisted in certain political fears that international complications might arise prejudicial to the just influence exercised by the great republic of the north over the other republics of the centre and of the south. These fears are none the less real because they are chimerical, and it would be improper not to take due notice of them. It is for the purpose of doing something towards their removal that I have presented myself before the American public, to seek to convince them, first, that the Panama Canal will be constructed entirely as a private enterprise, without any governmental intervention, and that the canal, once finished, far from hurting the influence of the United States of the North, will, on the contrary, give it a greater importance through incalculable development of its commerce, of its navigation and of its intelligent industry."

After expressing his intense admiration of all that he had seen in New York, and his appreciation of the go-ahead character of the people of the United States, we strayed back to Egypt, France and Ireland.

The Russian Church in Japan.

THE Russian Church is, it appears, making many converts in Japan. According to the Moscow correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, the great influence which is now exercised in that country by the Russian mission is chiefly attributed to the universal respect with which its chief, Father Nicholas, is regarded in all parts of the country, even in distant regions where no European has hitherto set foot. Father Nicholas is thoroughly conversant with both the Japanese and Chinese languages, and he is supplied with ample funds by the Russian Government. The American bishops meet with much sympathy among the higher classes, but their influence is far inferior to that of the Russian missionaries in the country generally. As for the Roman Catholics, they are decidedly unpopular. The other day the people broke the windows in the house of one of their missionaries, who had interfered with too much zeal in the family affairs of a Japanese.

A Clever Operation.

A CURIOUS occurrence has lately taken place at the London (England) Gardens. One of the lions was observed to be in a state of great tribulation, rolling about, and trying to get something out of his mouth with his paws. Upon examining the animal to see what was the matter, Mr. Bartlett found that a great bone had become a fixture in the poor brute's mouth. The difficulty was to remove it, as the lion was in fearful temper. This was done by getting the lion into a "shifting den," where his face would not be very far from the bars. It was then ascertained that the object in the lion's mouth was the spongy, round bone—as big as a cricket-ball—which forms the hip-joint of the horse. The lion had had part of a haunch of horse for dinner, and in amusing himself with the bone first got his upper large canine tooth into the soft part of the bone, and biting on it, the corresponding canine tooth in the lower jaw came through so far into the bone that it nearly met with the point of the upper tooth; the jaw thus became fixed. The animal was thus prevented from taking food or water. Mr. Bartlett, with a great deal of tact and manœuving, managed to get this bone out of the lion's mouth, and luckily he did so, as it was found that the long projecting portion of the bone was pressing hard upon the lion's tongue. This is the third clever operation in dentistry that Mr. Bartlett has performed—first, removing a big tooth from the hippopotamus; second, operating on the base of the tusk of the big elephant; third, taking a horse's leg bone out of the lion's mouth.

A Physician's Mistake.

DR. CLÉMENCEAU, the eminent Parisian physician, is also a member of the French Legislature. He is a brisk and busy man, keenly cognizant of the fact that "time is money," and, the other day, while he was in attendance at his Montmartre consulting-room, two men simultaneously solicited an interview with him for the purpose of taking his advice. One of them, admitted to his presence, and asked, "What was the matter with him?" complained of a pain in his chest, whereupon he was ordered to take off his shirt, and Dr. Clémenceau subjected him to a careful examination. Before the doctor, however, sat down to write his prescription, he rang the bell and ordered his servant to show the other patient into the consulting-room. As the latter entered the doorway, Dr. Clémenceau, without looking up from the desk at which he was writing, said to him, "Just undress yourself, too, if you will be so good. We shall save time by your doing so." Without a moment's hesitation, the second visitor proceeded to take off his clothes, and, by the time the doctor had finished writing his receipt, taken his fee, and dismissed the preceding patient, was stripped to the waist ready for inspection. Turning toward him, the doctor observed, "You are also suffering from pain in the chest, are you not?" "Well, no, doctor," the man replied. "I have called upon you to beg that you will recommend me to the Government for a place in the Post Office."

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

A New Year's Day Picnic in Australia.

This sketch illustrates one of the numerous and pretty scenes that may be witnessed in the large cities like Sydney and Melbourne during the holiday season. It conveys the idea of bustle and animation, the delight of the youngsters in anticipation of a pleasant outing, and the calmer serenity of the maturer members of the party. It is, in a word, the picture of an occasion of which we never tire, and which we may soon be able to enjoy again.

Maori Tangi, or Wake.

The proceedings which take place at a Maori Tangi, as depicted by our New Zealand artist, strongly resemble those of a Celtic wake. The body of the deceased, whose death is lamented, is laid out, decorated with feathers. Two of the relatives sit on either side of the head, gently fanning away the flies with feather fans. The lamentable howls of the "keeners" complete the resemblance to a wake.

Nihilists in St. Petersburg.

Two St. Petersburg sketches give some idea of the seething caldron of revolution in the heart of Russia. Our illustrations show the reception met by the Russian gendarmes on their breaking into a suspected house, No. 9 Bapernaja (Sapper Street), at 2 A. M. on the 30th of January. The sight that met them after receiving and returning a volley of firearms showed the value of the domiciliary visit. It was the office of the National Will, a Nihilist paper, with library, type, press and an edition ready to issue. The Nihilists fought desperately; one of them, Deutsch, an old army officer, and a great Nihilist leader, finding escape hopeless, blew out his brains; the rest were captured. The other illustration shows the prisoners carried off in the Black Maria, each one with a gendarme facing him with sabre drawn, the whole cortège surrounded by Cossacks to prevent a rescue.

Yakoob Khan on his Way to India.

On December 1st, Yakoob Khan, the ex Ameer of Cabul, set out from the British camp at Sherbar for India, being strongly escorted throughout his journey in the event of any attempt at rescue being made by any of the tribes through whose territory the troops had to pass. The road between Jagdallok and Jumrood was guarded by some 11,000 men. Yakoob Khan traveled throughout on horseback, with an officer on each side of him, and appeared quite pleased at the prospect of visiting India even as a state prisoner. He is tall, wiry-looking, youthful man, of aquiline features, and speaks English very well, considering the little intercourse he has had with the British officers.

Fox-hunting in Mustung.

Mustung is a large town situated in the Khan of Khelat's dominions, some thirty miles to the northwest of the Bolan Pass. Round it are extensive tracts of sandy ground, covered with stunted shrubs and bushes, in which foxes are plentiful. A day for a hunt having been arranged, the Jemadar, a native official, collects from the neighboring villages a number of beaters who bring their dogs with them. The Jemadar takes the lead to the hunting ground, where the hunters are formed in a line. As soon as the leader spies a fox, he raises a shout, and the entire party, men and dogs, dash away after the fleet creature. When the object of pursuit is run to ground, or gains a hole, the line is reformed for a chase after another.

An Old Dance in a New Country.

One of the most successful of the entertainments given by Lord Loftus on his arrival at Sydney, as Governor of New South Wales, was a soirée and ball on the occasion of the opening of the Exhibition. The pretty ballroom and reception-hall at Government House were thronged with perhaps the most brilliant assembly Sydney has ever seen. The Governors of South Australia and Tasmania and suites, the representatives of the many European nations at the Exhibition, also several distinguished guests from all parts of the great Australasian world, were present. The youth and beauty of New South Wales made the rooms brilliant with the latest modes from London and Paris. So perfect were they in costume and pretty in face and figure, that a stranger could scarcely realize that he was fourteen thousand miles away from the European centre of fashion. The heads of the war-ships Wolverine and the Diamond played the latest things in waltzes, etc. Towards the end of the entertainment, Commodore Wilson, the most popular of Her Majesty's officers at that station, especially at a dance, started dear old "Sir Roger de Coverley" out of compliment to the Motherland; and never was this old romp more spiritedly or energetically gone through than by the gallant brothers and charming sisters of the new country.

Mandalay, Burmah.

Any person who has seen the Schway-ta-Choung, a dirty stagnant back-flow which runs past the place where the British Residency used to stand, on a morning or on a sultry evening, would not be surprised to learn that Mandalay is one of the chosen abodes for cholera, small-pox, and virulent fevers. Eastward from this long creek, suburban Mandalay extends up to the city wall, of which we give two views. The moat is at least a hundred feet broad, and is covered with lotuses. The wall, which is composed of dull red brick, is elegantly crested in a wavy design, and at intervals there are small look-out houses, adorned with the serrated ridges, the many roofs, and the elaborate carving which are characteristic of Burmese palaces and kyoungs. No boats but those belonging to the King are permitted to float in the moat. Urban Mandalay, when looked down upon from a height, presents a scene filled with sharply adorned palaces and monasteries, and regularly laid out streets, bordered by the usual kind of ordinary Burmese residences. Within the wall at the most there are six other walls, and the exact centre of the city is occupied by the royal palace, where King Theebaw and the two white elephants reside. The atrocities which signalized the commencement of Theebaw's reign were committed in the compound attached to the court-house, situated on the eastern side of the city and within a short distance from the great wall that surrounds the moat.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE University of Brussels has for the first time admitted a lady as a science student.

—IN New England alone there are now over 2,000 freight cars being built for various roads.

—THE directors of the Philadelphia Academy of Music have opened a free school for the training of opera singers.

—THE Rhode Island Senate has passed a Bill to prohibit pigeon-shooting for sport or as a test of marksmanship, and it is now a law.

—OSHKOSH, Wis., has the largest match factory in the world. It cut up 2,000,000 feet of logs into matches, and used $200,000 worth of revenue stamps during 1879.

—TWO COMPANIES of United States troops have been sent to Caldwell, Kansas, to assist in preventing the contemplated invasion of the Indian Territory. These are additional to those sent to Coffeyville.

—THE German Government is about to revive the scheme for cutting a canal navigable for war vessels between the Baltic Sea and the German Ocean. The scheme is warmly supported in military circles.

—THE coinage at the American Mints in February was as follows: Gold, $94,120 pieces, worth $5,844,850; silver, 2,301,600 pieces, worth $2,209,740; minor coinage, 2,301,200 pieces, worth $24,399.

—THE United States Consul at Buenos Ayres announces that the nations invited to take part in the Centenary Exposition can have until March 31st next to signify their acceptance of the invitation, instead of December 31st, as originally notified.

—A BILL is being vigorously pushed in the Legislature of Iowa providing for a State Commissioner of Immigration, at a salary of $1,000 per year and $5,000 for the expenses of the commission, and also for honorary Commissioners, to serve without pay.

—THE recent severe storm caused heavy losses of stock in the Malheur, Jordan, Reynolds Creek, and other Winter ranges in Idaho and Eastern Oregon. It is estimated that the aggregate loss in these and adjoining valleys already reaches nearly 20,000 head, and losses still continue to occur.

—THE New Jersey Sabbath Union has issued a circular containing the Sunday laws of New Jersey. The Union is composed of clergymen and influential residents of the State, and was formed to resist the efforts of the "anti-Sabbath men" of Eastern New Jersey, who strive to modify existing Sunday laws.

—THE United States Consul at Bremen predicts a large emigration from Germany to the United States in 1880, owing partly to the contemplated increase of the Imperial Army. The number of emigrants in 1879 from Bremen to New York was 26,250; in 1878 it was 20,746—an increase of 5,504, or more than 26 per cent.

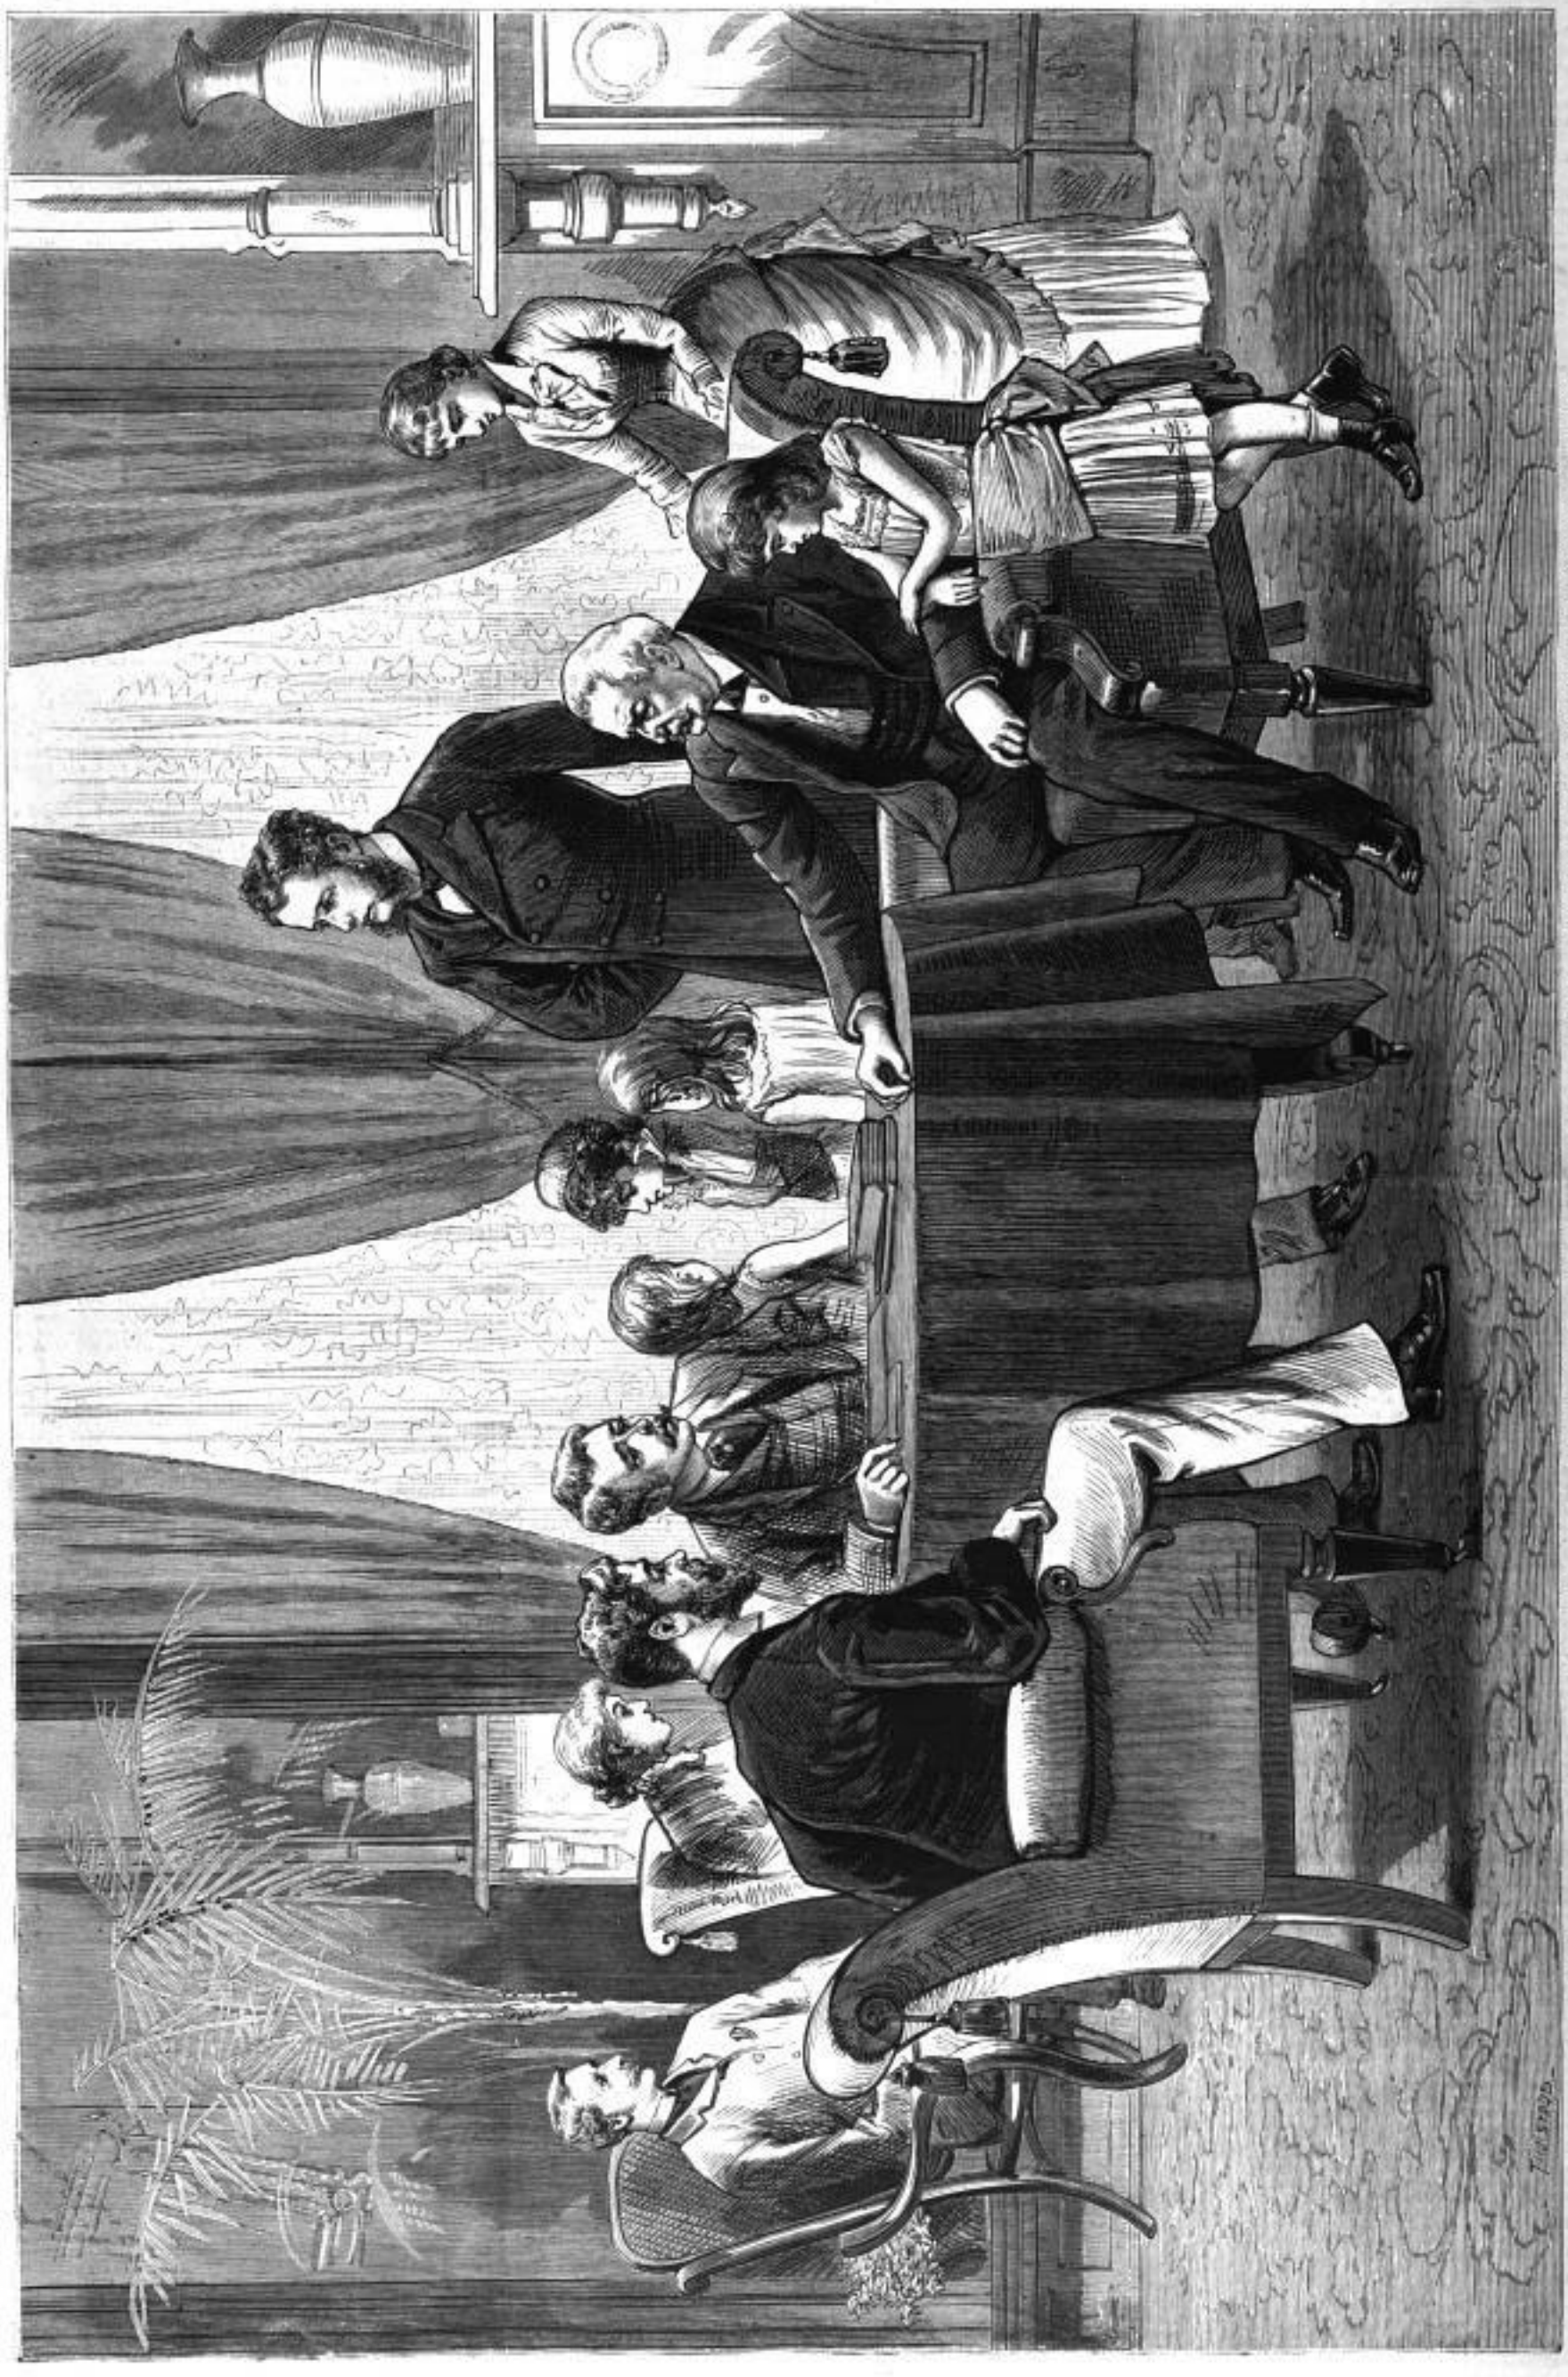
—SENOR DEPRETIS, Italian Minister of the Interior, has addressed a circular to the Prefects, enjoining them to prevent all manifestations of the party called Italia Irredenta, organized for the freedom of the Trentino, and to furnish the Government with particulars as to the committees of that party now in existence.

—To convince his Mohammedan neighbors of his friendly feeling, the Czar has granted them permission to erect a mosque at St. Petersburg. It will be situated in the central part of the city, near the Newski Perspective in Tolstowo Street, where there are already a number of edifices belonging to religions tolerated nowhere else in the empire.

—AS EVIDENCE of the enlightened condition of the Japanese as compared with their neighbors in China, it is interesting to learn from the Hiogo News that the duplex system of telegraphy with the Morse instrument has been in successful working for some months past on one of the longest of the Government lines, that between Yokohama, Kobe and Nagasaki.

—THE amount of iron ore produced in the Lake Superior Mining district in 1879 was 2,414,182 tons, valued at $6,423,503. Adding the 39,582 tons of pig iron produced, the value amounts to $7,413,115, against $6,634,432 in 1878. There were 289,099 tons more ore produced in 1879 than in 1878. The output in 1879 was 246,803 tons greater than in 1878, the largest previous year.

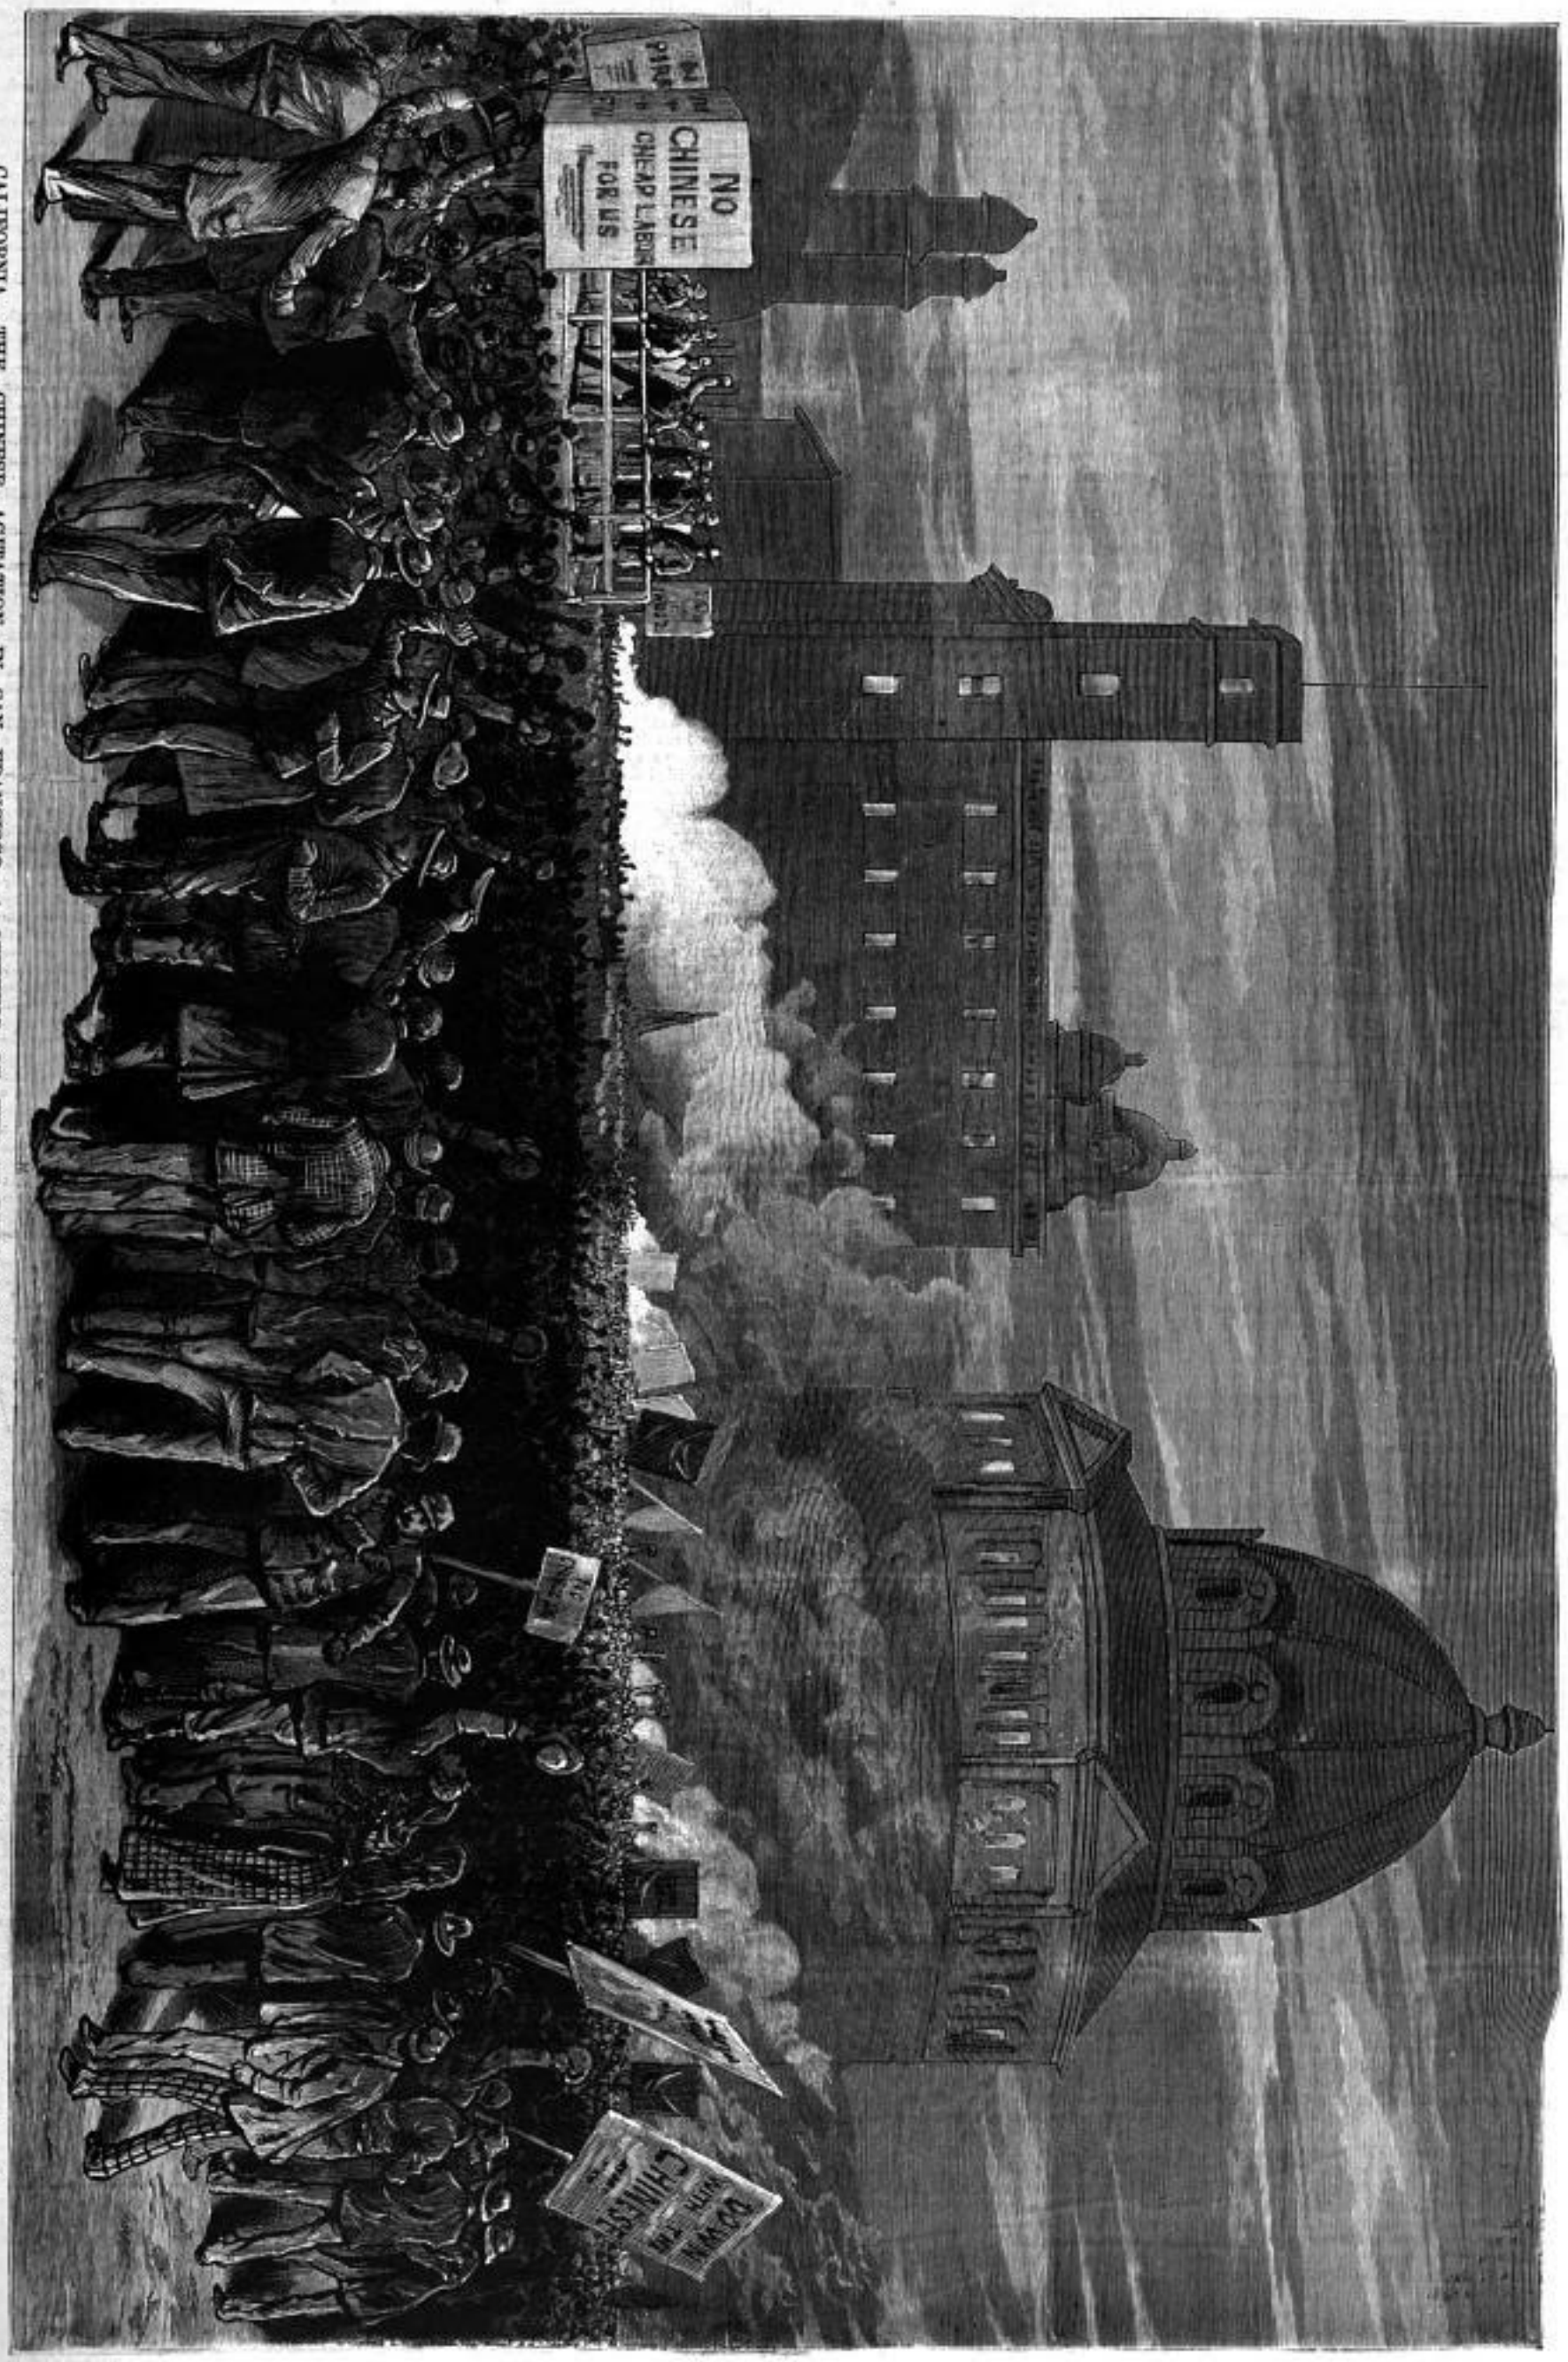
—THE work of piercing Mount St. Gothard was satisfactorily completed at nine o'clock on the morning of February 29th, amid great rejoicing. Mount St. Gothard is part of the Alpine range, and separates Lucerne from Lago Maggiore. The tunnel and the railroad connected therewith are being constructed at the expense of Germany, Italy and Switzerland. The tunnel is designed to facilitate railroad communication between all these countries.



—DURING the past five years $353,018,255 worth of property has been destroyed in this country by fire. In 1875 the loss was $78,102,285; in 1876, $64,630,603; in 1877, $68,265,850; in 1878, $64,315,900, and in 1879, $76,703,700. Of the States, New York leads in big figures. Her loss in 1876 was $14,090,000; in 1877, $11,456,400; in 1878, $9,397,600, and in 1879, $15,793,200. Pennsylvania comes next with a total loss in the four years of $28,123,500.

—A PETITION signed by numerous persons, including prominent Government officials, is in circulation, the object of which is to urge action towards preserving the natural beauties of Niagara Falls from the encroachments of speculative persons. The Falls being within the territory of Canada as well as that of the United States, the petition is addressed to the Governor-General of Canada, so that he, in connection with the United States Government, may take the necessary precautions in the premises.

—THE Russian railway system presents one novel and striking feature. The companies are bound to maintain at each station, at their own cost, a mounted Cossack gendarme, who is armed with a Berdan and revolver, and forms part of the very powerful "railway police force" of Russia. Recently the companies have had to maintain from three to six of these gendarmes at their principal stations, and the total cost of the force, falling upon the shareholders of the Russian railway companies, now amounts to 650,000 roubles, or over $400,000, per annum.



—THE following is the programme which the Indian Government will enforce unless unforeseen accidents prevent: (1.) Herat and Afghan Seistan to be placed under Persian rule. (2.) Southern Afghanistan, with Candahar as the capital, to be a dependency under British protection. (3.) Eastern Afghanistan to be a dependency under British protection, with the capital at Cabul; these two dependencies to be garrisoned by Hazard, Kizilbash and other native levies under English officers. (4.) Portions of Afghan territory to be annexed to Khelat and Cashmere. (5.) India retains Kurum, Khost and Khyber to Jelalabad. Finally, there is a strong inclination to form Merv into a state under an Anglo-Persian guarantee.

Digitized by Google

ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEWS WITH EMINENT PUBLIC MEN ON LEADING TOPICS OF THE DAY.—SEE PAGE 39.

NO. 16.—INTERVIEW OF OUR ARTISTIC CORRESPONDENT WITH M. DE LESSEPS.—THE CONSTRUCTOR OF THE SUEZ CANAL DISCUSSES IN THE FAMILY CIRCLE AT HIS WINDSOR HOTEL, NEW YORK.

CALIFORNIA—THE CHINESE AGITATION IN SAN FRANCISCO—A MEETING OF THE WORKINGMEN'S PARTY ON THE SAND LOTS.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. A. RODGERS.—SEE PAGE 37.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S "VACANT CHAIR."

Lines Suggested by the Engraving in the ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER of February 7th.

Is there a home in this fair land
Where stands no "Vacant Chair"?
Mayhap, ye say, "There was a time—
So brief, alas! yet still a time"—
When no such thing was there.
But now, ah! bitter tears attest
How vain the idle boast;
"No fledgling flown from this dear nest";
"No 'elder' gathered to his rest";
"No darling loved but lost."

"A Vacant Chair." The thought to me
Hath much of tender grace.
Vacant? how? where? gone out to sea?
Discarded? dead? or wandering free?
Yet none to fill the place?
"A Vacant Chair" means some one gone—
Ay, gone! Ah, woe is me!
And some heart left to mourn alone,
To break, or harden into stone
In its dumb agony.

"Our Vacant Chair." Our sad eyes dwelt
On it with tenderness.
The form we knew and loved so well
Hath gone for aye! and sooth to tell,
No more our eyes shall bless.
Henceforth it is a sacred thing:
Stop! leave it gently there,
Though but an old, ungraceful thing,
Such tender memories round it cling.
It is our Vacant Chair.

"That Vacant Chair." How many eyes,
Like mine, have rested there?
At first, in sorrowful surprise,
Till slowly gathering tears arise
To mourn that Vacant Chair.
We thus incredulously gaze
Upon that sacred spot,
And feel that awe and dumb amaze
We feel when vacant place betrays
That some loved one is not.

From north to south, from strand to strand,
We love and mourn for thee;
In every home throughout the land,
In every heart shall ever stand
"A Vacant Chair" for thee,
Frank Leslie! Dear familiar name,
By sorrow made more dear;
Thy many friends for thee shall claim
Mayhap a richer meed of fame
Than this—a woman's tear.

MRS. SALLIE C. BALLARD MAYNARD.

THE HIDDEN WITNESS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT HUSBAND OF MINE."

CHAPTER XI.—THE STORY TOLD TO SYLVE.

FLIX FORESTER came down to breakfast one morning looking so worn and haggard that his mother could do little else than watch his face with eager eyes all through breakfast.

"My dear," she said, when all had left the room but herself and her son, "let me feel your head." He laughed with assumed lightness.

"Are you afraid of the fever?" he asked.

"It is so prevalent and so dangerous—yes," was her reply. "And yet your forehead is cool."

"My rest was broken—there was a cry of fire in the night; the dogs barked till their throats must have ached. I noticed you kept your eyes on me all mealtime. What an anxious little woman it is!"

"Because I have only you, Flix," was the low answer.

"Believe me I appreciate your kindness," he said, his own voice lowered. "I don't laugh at what I might consider your over-anxiety on account of your big boy, now. By-the-way, what a change has taken place in Miss Eve's countenance? She is very lovely."

"Very. I could have wished—but there, I won't vex you. How very sweet and womanly she is!—just my ideal of a perfect character. If poor Sylve——"

"My dear mother, don't, please, make it your business to slander 'poor Sylve,' as you call her. Your opinions about her seem to have undergone a change of late. Sylve is herself. Pray consider that we each of us have an individuality of our own."

The astonishment manifested by his little mother was so well simulated that Flix continued, turning to the fireplace and winding up his watch so violently that she feared for the spring.

"You are very likely to have her off your hands soon;" and, putting up his watch, he left the room hurriedly.

"Confound him!" he muttered, as he entered his study and paced up and down, his face in a glow, looking forward with gloomy contracted brows and troubled eyes. "And I dare say the girl loves him. He has spoken to her and she did not repulse him. No, of course not—why should she? The fellow is young and handsome, confound him!" and he struck the floor venomously with his heel. "Well, the form must be gone through with. My pride will bear me up, though. I did hope——" His voice broke. He went over to the mantelpiece and leaned his head on his hand. "I have been a fool!" he muttered. "I do believe I have loved her ever since she asked to black my shoes"; and he laughed feebly. "But come, since it must be done, it must, and here is the place and now is the time." He stirred the fire in the open grate till it seemed to sing as it glowed, drew up a crimson armchair, placed a hassock on the white lamb's-wool mat, and then rang the bell. A servant came.

"Is Miss Sylve at home?" he asked.

"She is in her room, sir," was the answer.

"Tell her I wish to see her at once if she is at liberty."

Sylve tried to look demure and a little shy as she entered the library, but her heart failed her, and she walked in as quiet and apparently calm and rosy as if she did not feel like a culprit conscious of some great offense. How pleasant the fire looked, and the dark polished wood of the fine old library, and the richly bound books shining in all their varied brightness, and the soft, thick carpet, over which the light of burning sea-coal, quite as beautiful as that of hickory, cast a glowing and vivid radiance.

"How nice the fire feels!" said Sylve, making a feint of holding her hands out for warmth.

"Yes, it is, rather," replied Flix, absently, and with no idea of coherence, not noticing that Sylve smiled and blushed.

"You wanted to see me about something," she said, for Flix stood leaning his elbow on the mantelpiece, looking down upon her, and the silence was becoming oppressive.

"Yes. Have you no idea what it may be?" She looked down, blushing, and sighing unconsciously.

"I suppose I might guess—if——"

"You know, of course," he said, almost sternly, "Mr. Vintresse has proposed for your hand." She was still silent, though neck and brow were crimson. "He said you sent him to me."

"What else could I do?" murmured Sylve.

"Of course—I am your guardian—it was the right thing;" and there was a ring of bitterness in his voice. "He is a very handsome man, and on some accounts a desirable match for you. He, doubtless, expects to be wealthy, but I am afraid his hopes in that direction are destined to failure. Still, if you love him—after all, that is the main point"—his voice shook a little—"you will not mind that he is not a rich man, will you? He says he can earn an honorable living and take good care of you."

"And did you give your consent?" asked Sylve, in a low voice.

"No, I did not give my consent; I think it is never best to be in a hurry about matters that pertain to the welfare of a human life. I did not give my consent because—because—well, it is of no consequence why—that is—I must know first whether you love him. If you do, that is sufficient."

"And you will be glad to be rid of so unpleasant a responsibility," she murmured, bending a little lower, a quiver in her voice.

"What right have you to assume that I consider it as such?" he asked, indignantly.

"We have never been the best of friends, you know," she said, tremulously, "and I caused you so much trouble. It would be curious if you were not glad to be rid of me."

"Curious!" he repeated, walking a few steps and coming slowly back; "it would be something more than curious if I should."

"You have done everything for my comfort; don't think I forget that," she went on, the tears dropping slowly from her lashes; "and if I have not seemed grateful, it is because the early loneliness and isolation of my life have made me different from others who have had superior advantages."

"The question is"—and the voice was hoarse with feeling—"are you very fond of this man?—do you love him sufficiently to become his wife? If so, there is an end of it—he has my sanction, and you—my blessing."

"And if I said No," murmured Sylve, timidly, "should I be a burden? Would you consider me—that is, might I not still live on here, now that Eve's circumstances are changed, and she is going to leave Forester House?"

"Sylve," he said, with a gasp, "does that mean that you don't care for him?"

"Because I have felt before now that I was an—an annoyance, and it is very hard for you, in your own house—I mean that there are elements of discord," she went on, growing incoherent, "and I fancy Mr. Vintresse likes me very much, and I dare say, in time, I should get to like him—no, not very much, I can't say that—still I should be independent, I should not run the risk of troubling you. I——"

"Sylve!" She started; he was leaning on the chair-back, his hand just touched her shoulder, and there was something almost awful in the deep tones of his voice. "Don't repeat those words; don't speak of being an annoyance and a trouble. Listen, for I am going to tell you something which no other woman has ever heard from my lips—which no other woman ever shall hear. I do not think you perfect by any means. I know your faults, as you perhaps know mine. For some time I have been in possession of a secret which may not interest you. It is this—that no living being will ever hold that place in my heart which you hold at this moment and have held for years. I never knew what love was till I saw you—I never cared to know, for I am not a man of quick impulses or passions. I hope this is not treason to poor Vintresse, though it may be very disagreeable to you. Even if I cannot take his place as a lover, and I do not for a moment flatter myself that I can, I beg you will not marry him unless you love him. It would be too cruel, and you must never consider yourself a burden here. My mother's very heart-strings are wound about you. Stay here till some one comes more worthy of your heart than I; I shall not be in your way, for my business calls me to be absent often——"

"Flix—Mr. Forester!" He paused on the instant, there was such absolute pain conveyed in the tones of her voice. She slowly rose and faced him.

"Oh, what shall I say?" she exclaimed, her hands coming together, appealingly.

"Accept the conditions," he responded; "never hint again as long as you live that you may be an incumbrance."

"But that is not what I mean," and her face, red to the roots of her hair, fell into the clasped hands. All suddenly a light seemed to break in upon him. He bent over and tried to unclose the hands from the blushing face.

"I said I was not a romantic or a passionate man," he began again; "but at this moment I am a curious one. Great heaven! if I might but interpret these signs as my heart longs to do! Sylve, you—do—not—hate me. Is it possible that you can love me?"

"I don't know when I have not loved you," she said, with a sob. Then with something that sounded between laughing and crying, "I loved your picture when I was at the old Windmill Heights school," and whatever else was said was whispered in the arms that held her close, close—and by lips that were very near his lips.

"Now, what if I were to say," he exclaimed, when he had released her, "that you are not Sylve de Latude at all—that there is no fortune coming to you."

She listened utterly incredulous till he had told her all—the story of Nurse Desire, his suspicions concerning her pretended father, and his designs for unmasking the villainy that he had discovered.

"I, Eve Lewin! I the daughter of the Virginia colonel—unfortunate and impoverished! She the heir to all this wealth? It takes away my breath to think of it! Oh, are you sure of all this?—are you quite certain? I have been so proud to feel that all my fortune would come through your exertions—might be shared by you."

"You are infinitely more precious to me as Eve Lewin," he said, smiling. "And as for the money, it would have been only an additional burden, and I am rich enough for both."

"And there is no stain upon my birth, now?" she murmured.

"None whatever. Your mother was a pure, good woman; your father, whatever his faults, a chivalrous gentleman; while this other man, who would have claimed you as his child, is"—he bent his head lower and whispered the word—"a murderer!"

She recoiled with a cry of horror.

"And Eve—Miss Lewin, must she bear that fearful stigma?"

"Not if it can be averted through my efforts," he replied. "She need never know anything of this dreadful suspicion, shall not hear of anything further than the change of name. She will not be much disturbed, I think, she is so soon to be married; and the fortune—do you not feel a pang of regret at the loss of this princely income?"

"Not one," said Sylve, "only I am so bewildered, so sorry for poor Eve, so—so glad for myself," she added, looking up into his splendid face that was full of admiring worship.

CHAPTER XII.—THE MURDERER CONFRONTED.

SYLVE had written a little note to Salome—who had given her consent to stand as one of Eve's bridesmaids—to beg her to bring her cousin. At first Salome pleaded the girl's failing health, but yielded when Sylve said that a change might do more for her than the most skillful doctors. "And perhaps," she added, "she may find her runaway lover here. But, pray, say nothing to her about that, and please use the bank-note I send you in making her look as pretty as a picture."

Eve, to whom her real name had not been disclosed, Flix thinking it more prudent to wait till just before her marriage, was to be given away by Mr. Forester, the wedding to take place at Forester House. The ceremony was to be conducted with great splendor; Mrs. Forester took the matter into her own hands. It could not be a very public affair, as the parties on both sides had so few friends or relatives. Doctor Wilde had lost the care-worn look that earned for him so much compassion from excitable young ladies, and was his handsome, generous self again, while Eve looked radiant and had regained her wonted light-heartedness. Wilde had promised to restore the old homestead, and they were to pass their Summer vacations in Virginia.

On the day of the wedding Mr. Vintresse and Mr. De Neal sat talking together in the private parlor of their hotel.

"You are sure of her, then?" said Mr. De Neal.

"Reasonably so; she sent me to her guardian; he was very kind and very favorable. I am to receive his final answer to-day. You will go with me, of course; there can be no better time than now, and as it must be done, it might as well be over with."

"I hate it, cursedly," answered the other. "I don't know why I have such an aversion to meeting this Forester. It strikes me he ought to have called before now, and as to the girl—well, it is very certain that familiarity has not bred contempt in my case, for I haven't seen her for over twelve years. Nor," was his innermost thought, "do I care to. I only want the money which she believes to be coming to her."

"Well, Vintresse," he said, after a few moments of thought, "perhaps I had better go. They are probably all in a flurry over this wedding, and, on the whole, it may be the best time." The two sallied forth, Vintresse in high spirits, De Neal uncomfortably depressed, his horror of his mission growing more unbearable as he neared the lawyer's house. "Ten to one he won't be at home," he thought, ringing the bell.

But he was at home. The two gentlemen were conducted into the library, where Flix sat before the fire at a small round table busily arranging papers. He met his visitors with some ceremony, seated them, and immediately began a conversation that led easily to the business which one of them at least had in hand. For an hour or more Flix was, or pretended to be, deeply interested in the letters and documents which were rapidly opened and explained, but he had all the time been growing paler.

"Do you know," he said, at last addressing De Neal, "that your voice is familiar to me?"

"Ah, indeed!" responded the other, who had been gradually losing his suspicions.

"And I never heard it but twice in my life," continued Flix, moving uneasily. "The first time it was under circumstances so peculiar that it has haunted me all my life."

"And the second time," said De Neal, looking him full in the face.

"Oh, that was in an omnibus some days, or perhaps, I should say weeks, before you met with that accident. I then recognized you by your voice."

"I don't remember that I have ever seen you," said De Neal, searching his recollection.

"Not to know me, I am quite sure. But your real name is not De Neal—it is De Latude."

"Yes; I have just told you that," said the other.

"And Miss Sylve de Latude is your daughter. You are ready to swear that?"

"I am ready to swear that."

"Perhaps you would also like to know where I first heard your voice," continued Forester, while Vintresse listened with some interest.

"It does not matter; however, I am willing to listen," said the man, somewhat surprised.

Forester fixed his keen, witness-reading eyes on De Neal.

"I have never forgotten the date," he said. "It was on the 23d of June."

"Th—the 23d," muttered the other, looking forward helplessly.

"Yes; you may remember you took supper at a small inn on the country road to H——, in Virginia. I might assist your memory by adding that Ben Lake, a well-known dealer in jewelry and fancy goods, took tea at the same place—he never did again."

The man before him said not a word, but continued his fixed stare at Flix. Vintresse, on the contrary, grew as pale as ashes, started forward and exclaimed in unmistakable accents of horror:

"My God—that man!"

"Mr. De Latude," said Flix Forester, very calmly, "you are well known to me. The particulars of your history are these: You married the daughter of Anne De Roosevelt and lived very unhappily with her. There came a time when, goaded to madness by your insults, she raised her hand against you. You fell forward, apparently dead, as she thought, killed by the blow. You were buried, and on the same night rescued from the clutches of death by a trio of country students. These you had no difficulty in pledging to secrecy, because they knew that the penalty for violating private graves in that part of the country was a terrible one. You escaped and led a strange, lawless life, gaming and reporting in another part of the country. Finally, you met with this peddler on the 23d of June. You accompanied him on the road. You sat down on a broken stone fence in the moonlight; the time might have been between nine and ten. You told him this history that I have been repeating to you, and then and there——"

"Hold!" cried De Latude, both hands outspread, his face white and livid, the scar from lip to eye purple, and having the appearance of a freshly bleeding wound. "It is false as hell!"

"And then and there you murdered him!" continued Forester, remorselessly. Latude fell forward all in a heap, with blazing eyes and laboring breath. Vintresse had risen and retreated backwards, his face a picture of horror.

"Long before this," continued Forester, his voice unchanged, "you had prevailed upon the nurse of an infant daughter of Colonel Lewin, by bribes and threats and false reasons, to exchange her charge for your own child, so that really the young lady I have had under my charge is not your daughter, but the child of an honorable Virginia gentleman, thank God!"

"Vintresse, will you stand by and see me traduced!" cried De Neal, his face distorted with every diabolical passion. The young man was quite silent. This charge was the clew and the key to many strange vagaries in De Neal's career which he never before understood. There was such an air of truth and conviction rightly placed in all Forester did and said, that he was forced to believe.

"Mr. De Latude," said Flix Forester, "I could have you this moment arrested for the murder of Ben Lake; but for the sake of your innocent, unoffending daughter, I give you twenty-four hours in which to leave the city. I have no personal animosity in this matter, though the second time I heard your voice and thought of that fiendish deed, I hated you and could have branded you with infamy. You had better not speak; denial will do you no good. I was lying directly behind you, thrown from my horse, helpless and speechless, but with all my other faculties perfect. Great God, what a night it was! And now our conference is ended. You know what is before you. I will bid you good-day. You, Mr. Vintresse, will be kind enough to remain a few moments."

"You give me twenty-four hours, do you?" asked De Neal, in a tone of bravado, rising. "It will take less time than that to get out of your clutches. I don't say what I shall do, but I do say that you shall answer for this before many days. For I distinctly tell you I deny everything," and with that audacious falsehood on his lips he strode from the room.

"Oh, this is too terrible!" cried Vintresse, in agonized accents.

"I am very sorry for you, Mr. Vintresse," said Flix, much moved.

"And I have been the intimate companion of that man, who murdered the best friend I ever had in my life, the father of——" He paused, shutting his lips desperately.

"Your friend!—what, the peddler?" ejaculated Flix.

"My friend, an honest, high-hearted, generous fellow, open-handed and as good a man as ever lived. Yes, he aided my poor mother when she was left utterly penniless; he did everything for me till I came into my sixteenth year. And Lilly—little Lilly! Oh, Mr. Forester, I despise myself! I, too, have acted a traitorous part. I—no, no, I cannot see Miss Sylve."

Digitized by Google

"It is not Miss Sylve who wishes to see you," said Mr. Forester, smiling, "it is Miss Eve Lewin."

"I know—I cannot—I, of course, give up all hope of her hand. I could not marry her now if I were free to do so. No, no! Let me earn back a portion of my old self-respect, and I will search for that poor child—sweet, winsome—— Pardon me, Mr. Forester, I scarcely know what I am saying."

"I would still advise you to see Miss Eve," said Flix.

"For one moment, then, to tell her she is free."

Salome, Sylve and the fragile little New England flower, Lilly Lake, sat together in the bay-window of the breakfast-room. They had been talking of old times. Suddenly the door opened, and young Vintresse entered. One look, one wild upflinging of the hands, one shriek of mortal fear, or pleasure—which?—and Lilly flew down the long room and fell a senseless burden into the outstretched arms of Vintresse, who held her like an automaton while he cast bewildered glances about him.

"Mr. Vintresse, lay her on the sofa," said Sylve, coming forward. "Sweet little creature! Do you know I have suspected this for a long time?" as she stood over the helpless Lilly, chafing her hands. "Oh, Mr. Vintresse, if you have ever loved this pure little angel, you can never be pleased with any one less fair."

He knelt by the side of the couch, and the first face she saw as she came out of that joy-swoon was that of one she had mourned so constantly and given up long before as dead, or utterly lost to her.

Vintresse did not return to the hotel. He stood up at the wedding that night, pairing off with Lilly, whose beauty was something almost unearthly, her happiness was so complete. As for Mrs. Forester, she asked for nothing more to fill her cup of joy than the declaration made to her by Flix, that there would soon be another wedding, and she should have Sylve—the names were not yet changed, remember—for a daughter, after all.

"The wedding shall be grander than this one, Flix," she said, kissing him. "We will have all the world here."

Early the next day Flix received the following note:

"DEAR MR. FORESTER—On my return last night to the hotel I found Mr. De Neal's room-door locked. Thinking he did not want to be disturbed, and as it is a custom of his at times, I retired. This morning I waited for him till nine. We found no indication of his having risen; and, finally, the door was burst open. It was as I had feared. He was not asleep, but dead, probably by his own hand. That will shortly be decided, as the body is under examination now. On the table at his side was a note directed to me. It contained only these words:

"'DEAR VINT—It is all true. I had a presentiment of how it would end. I cannot even say God have mercy on my soul. Say it for me, will you? Believe that you were the only person beside your mother that I ever loved in all the wide world. Farewell for ever.

"'DE LAUNE.'"

Aunt Desire, after her mind was unburdened of the secret she had guarded so long, began to improve in health. She lived to see her darling a happy wife and mother; and her lot was an enviable one in that splendid home. Nothing was ever breathed into her sensitive ear about the father whose career had been so infamous. The property that came into her possession, after all proper proofs were attained, was used for the benefit of others as well as for herself. Nurse Dee could never feel towards the real Eve the love she had delighted to bestow on the false one; but Sylve, in her beautiful home, found the almost adoring affection of husband and mother all that her heart could wish.

THE END.

REV. GEORGE G. MULLINS, U. S. A.

THE subject of education in our army is one which has for some years past attracted the attention of the superior officers. They recognize that a well-informed soldier fights better, is more amenable to discipline and in every way better and more useful than an ignorant or brutish one. Recently the subject has taken a well-defined shape, and schools have been organized wherever there is an army post. In time of war, of course, this cannot be done, but in peace, when the soldiers remain for long periods at one post or encampment, the project becomes not only practicable but easy. It having been decided to establish a system of general supervision over the schools, Special Order, No. 34 of the War Department, directed Chaplain George G. Mullins, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to report to General McCook for duty as assistant in charge of education in the army, with station at St. Louis, Mo. Chaplain Mullins has been detailed on account of his special fitness for the work, and it is believed by those who know him that he will render service of great value in his new field. He is still a young man, but has had much experience as an educator. He was ordained as a minister when but a boy, having been one of the youngest persons ever graduated from the Kentucky University. He has been an enthusiastic worker in educating the troops in the Department of Texas for the past five years, and has a good name in the army. He is a Kentuckian by birth and of Scotch-English descent, with the fair hair and blue eyes of his English, and the pertinacity and good sense of his Scotch, ancestors. During his experience in Texas he worked hard in the effort to arouse the ambition of the troops there to get at least an elementary education, and he devised an especial method of instruction adapted to the peculiar wants and necessities of soldiers. A great enthusiasm was aroused, and the results were exceedingly gratifying. Chaplain Mullins's new mission is to see that schools are established in every post, garrison and permanent encampment; provide that a uniform system of instruction be adopted; open reading-rooms and post libraries, and see that they are kept well supplied with reading matter, and have a general supervision of the entire system of education in the army.

OPENING OF THE SECOND AVENUE "L" RAILROAD.

THE Second Avenue line of the Manhattan Elevated Railway and the branch from Chatham Square to the City Hall were opened for travel on Monday, March 1st. The Second Avenue road, for the present, will be operated only to Sixty-fifth Street, and none of the stations along the line are completed. The ticket-sellers sat in temporary pine boxes, resembling the boxes which ornament the street corners on election day. The platforms were crowded with carpenters and other workmen engaged in constructing the stations. At Chatham Square an arrangement was effected to obviate the necessity of the crossing of the two tracks. The Second Avenue cars pass down the old Third Avenue track to the South Ferry, while the Third Avenue coaches are taken directly to the City Hall. A high bridge connects the two stations, and over this bridge passengers who wish to be transferred can pass without giving up their tickets. A Third Avenue passenger, wishing to go to the South Ferry, leaves the car at Chatham Square, crosses the bridge, and takes the Second Avenue down train; while a Second Avenue passenger, desiring to reach the City Hall, is transferred in the same manner to the Third Avenue line. This system practically abolishes the danger of collision, except among the passengers themselves on the narrow stairways leading to the bridge.

The stations now in operation on this line are at Sixty-fifth, Fifty-fourth, Forty-second, Twenty-third, Fourteenth, Eighth, First, Rivington, Grand and Canal streets, Chatham Square, Franklin Square, Fulton Street, Hanover Square and the South Ferry. A large force of workmen are employed along the line, and the arrangements for comfort and rapid transit are being completed as fast as practicable.

THE OLD CAPITOL PRISON.

THE Old Capitol Prison, at Washington, D. C., has in its time played many parts—from a Senate chamber to a boarding-house, from a prison to a palatial residence. Formerly the temporary Capitol it is now a handsome and imposing building, occupied by three of the leading families of Washington society. After the burning of the Capitol by the English, this temporary substitute was erected in 1814, at the time when Henry Clay was Speaker of the House. The building was next converted into a boarding-house, and Calhoun died in that portion of it which was formerly used as the House of Representatives. We now find it a prison, and the annals of the war recall the long list of eminent state prisoners confined within its walls. Here Mrs. Surratt awaited her trial, and many others paid the penalty of treason. But years have cycled into eternity, making war but a memory, peace the reality. The elegant home of Judge Advocate General Dunn, Judge Field and ex-Governor Lowe form another trinity of human greatness found within the historic walls of this building of checkered career, presenting a delightful contrast between "now and then."

Of the many eminent names recorded in the prison ledger for political offences stands Mrs. Rose Greenhow, widow of Dr. Robert Greenhow, and aunt of Mrs. Stephen A. Douglass, who, after eighteen months' imprisonment with her little daughter in the Old Capitol, was sent to Richmond, and, subsequently, by the Confederates, to Europe as "special envoy." That the Old Capitol Prison may long continue in its present condition should be the wish of all who love not the "shiftings of rugged blasts."

A Jewess Faithful to her Race.

A JEWESS, who has been always actively and intelligently devoted to the interests of her people, died recently in France in extreme old age. This celebrated lady was the wife of Isaac Adolphe Crémieux, to whom she was married in 1837. She influenced her husband, who was a lawyer, to defend the cause of the Hebrews in Turkey and Asia Minor. In 1840 she accompanied her husband to Egypt, and obtained the acquittal of certain Jews of Damascus, who were accused of assassinating a Catholic priest and dipping their unleavened bread in his blood. When her husband entered Parliament in 1842 it was generally believed that she influenced him in his crusade against Guizot. In 1848 it was also believed to be by her impulse that her husband went to the Tuileries to warn the royal family of their danger, and to assist them in their flight. Crémieux was soon afterwards elected Minister of Justice, and in that office introduced the Bill for the re-establishment of divorce. The unpopularity of this action brought both husband and wife into most unwelcome notoriety. They were lampooned in the newspapers and pictured multitudinously in the most frightful caricatures, where the husband was presented as hideously ugly and the wife as the typical strong-minded blue-stocking of that epoch. After his imprisonment by Louis Napoleon, Crémieux retired to private life, and, with his wife, was almost forgotten until he resumed his seat in the Chamber of Deputies in 1869. He immediately began to agitate the question of the naturalization of the Jews of Algiers, and the world of Paris again ascribed his work to the influence and devotion of this faithful Jewess. In 1870 Crémieux made his famous appeal to the women of France in behalf of the suffering soldiers in their armies, and his wife, feeble from old age, set a worthy example by going in person from house to house, asking for aid, until she had collected half a million of francs for the French prisoners of Germany. This was the last public act of the life of devotion which has just closed in peace and honor in extreme old age.

The Bulgarian Parliament.

IN a recent number of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, some interesting details are given on the present position of Bulgaria. Of the session of the Bulgarian Parliament for November and December it says: "The Assembly at Sophia contains very few intelligent heads; even from among the mass of half-educated there are scarcely twelve persons who are the least capable of expressing an opinion on a Bill, or, indeed, on any serious subject which requires some intelligence and ripe judgment. All the rest were boors, who in the sittings partly gave utterance to wretched nonsense (as the Voivode Debo Zekof), partly slept, and outside the Assembly saved fourteen out of the fifteen francs daily allowance for onions and bread, in order to add to their household wealth by the purchase of oxen, etc. Besides these are fifteen Turkish Deputies from the east of the country, who do not understand Bulgarian, and who sit like statues, unconcerned with what is going on. These Turks also make a fine thing out of their allowance. One of these (Osman Effendi, of Tesluki), attends his colleagues as servant, and earns daily a few piastres in addition to his 15 francs. Every morning and evening this bright specimen of a Parliamentarian could be seen with large water-cans and bundles of wood, in white turban and dirty burnoose, wandering through the streets of the Bulgarian capital—a representative of the people!" There was nothing like a regular debate. Each spoke as often as he wished, sometimes 30 times in a sitting. Unpopular speakers were simply howled down, and the wishes of the Ministers and other disliked individuals, summarily annulled. By a bare majority of voices were certain of the chief Opposition shouters, who had not attained the regulation 30 years of age, declared to be of that age, and thus the chamber was in a position, unconcerned before the whole of Europe, to decree the greatest nonsense by a simple majority of voices. After the foolish and thoroughly fruitless session had cost the improvished country 120,000 francs, the Assembly was dissolved, and "many of the country Deputies were compelled to wander home on foot, since they had lost all their allowance at cards, and they had all too surely counted on the continuation of the golden time till Christmas."

A California Gold Story.

THE most singular manner of being struck with a fortune in prospecting occurred above Spring Gulch, recently. Mr. Snow, late of San Francisco, now prospecting in the vicinity of Sonora for other parties, was out on a quartz hunt with Dr. Drake, of San Francisco. They were returning home, it being stormy, when Snow (who was riding a horse belonging to John Neale, of the Spring Gulch Mine), along the trail, was suddenly missed by his companion. Snow's horse had slipped off the bluff, and down he went at an angle of 45 degrees, horse, rider, and ride (which he gripped firmly in his hand), rolling over and over in the snow, until he brought up against a mass of stone standing up out of the snow, its top covered with moss. He was not hurt, as the cold, soft cushion had saved his bones from the hard ground beneath. Scrambling up against the rock, he noticed that it was a quartz lode, and that where the horse had accidentally kicked off the moss something glittered. His eyes "bulged" out, but he did not stop to brush them off, his hands were too busy clawing off the moss. Darkness coming on, he had only time to break off a few specimens, which are filled with pure ore. One small piece, exhibited in Sonora, was estimated to be three-quarters gold. Tons of it are apparently still awaiting its owner. Snow says the vein is about 30 feet thick, and in his impulsive generosity he gave away several shares of his vein soon after. He told us that he "would not look at $25,000 for his interest." It is, without doubt, the richest mass of quartz ever discovered in that county, except the Divoli bonanza, recently opened in Sonora. Of course, he told us to keep it out of the paper; but that caution we find to be getting monotonous. Mr. Snow is very well known in San Francisco as an actor of merit, and a gentleman well deserving the good fortune he has "tumbled to." Some men are born rich, others have riches thrust upon them, but Mr. Snow has drifted through air and snow, right slap up against a pile of richness that would make old Rothschild's keen eyes turn green with envy.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

An International Exhibition of plants and flowers will be held at Wiesbaden during the approaching Summer.

Professor Conrad, of the Arkansas Industrial University, is attempting to make for it a complete collection of the minerals of that state.

A Russian Explorer, Poliakow by name, has lately returned from an exploration of the Grotto of Kungur (a mountain of the Ural chain) and of Mount Ataral. After diligent researches he has found no trace whatever of the so-called "diluvial" man.

J. Ballantyne Hannay has written to a firm of diamond dealers saying that his discovery will not affect their business, as the cost of producing very small quantities of boart is so great as to relegate the process to a mere laboratory experiment.

Some Sanitary Reforms are really being effected in Memphis. All the rotten wood pavement, which is to be replaced by stone; a new system of sewerage will be completed before hot weather, and the Health Board possesses greater powers than heretofore.

It is Proposed to hold a loan exhibition in the City of London to illustrate the treasures in the goldsmiths' work and plate, pictures, and other artistic objects of interest, possessed by the various guilds and livery companies. From these sources could be formed an exhibition of great historic and artistic interest.

The Famous Museum of Boulaq, in which so many interesting remains of ancient Egypt are preserved, is threatened with destruction. The Nile has almost begun to undermine its walls, although a few years ago an attempt was made to divert the current by surrounding the building with a solid stone embankment.

The Total Population of Greece is 1,679,000 souls, against 1,457,000 in 1870. The increase per annum has accordingly been 1.60 per cent. From 1860 to 1870 the annual increase was 1 per cent. The official report hence draws the conclusion that national prosperity is augmenting, but it is very probable that the later census was more thorough than its predecessor.

Workmen boring a well near Athens, Ga., have found a perfect iron wedge, such as rail-splitters use, in the middle of a solid blue granite rock, forty-six feet below ground. There is many a scientist who will wish that he had been one of the workingmen. Like the frogs that are and sometimes to jump from the centre of a rent rock, the wedge was in a perfect state of preservation.

The French Minister of Public Works is going to ask the Chamber of Deputies to vote a sum of 2,400,000 francs for the submersion of 17,000 acres of vineyards in the two Departments of the Aude and the Herault. It is estimated that these vineyards are worth, on the average, about $750 an acre; so that if the experiment is as successful in destroying the phylloxera as it is believed that it will be, the gain will be represented by a total little short of $15,000,000.

A Universal Exhibition of art and manufacturing products will be opened on May 1st next in the Palais du Midi, Brussels, by the Permanent International Exhibition Society. Foreign artists and manufacturers debarred from taking part in the special exhibition to be held during the fiftieth anniversary celebration of Belgian independence, which is restricted to Belgian subjects alone, will thus be able concurrently to exhibit their products in the Palais du Midi.

The House Committee on Agriculture has learned that an aggregate of $554,237.50 has been expended upon the Botanical Gardens under the direction of the Committee on the Library, and that the salaries of the officers and laborers have never been fixed by law. It began with an appropriation of $1,200 in 1843 in the Civil and Diplomatic Bill for the care of the specimens brought home by the exploring expedition under Captain Wilkes. The publication of the results of this expedition was in charge of the Library Committee and the matter has ever since remained there.

St. Louis is having a new sewer made through solid limestone rock, twelve feet below the street level. Near the substratum of the rock the workmen have come upon two human feet, firmly planted in the rock. The calf of the left leg can be traced, but the other foot possesses only a part of the ankle. They occupy natural positions, as if the creature that owned them had been standing erect in the mud that hardened into limestone. No traces of the body are visible. Persons who have seen the fossils do not doubt that they are intimately related to some departed human being.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

LORD SALISBURY has been seriously pulled down by an outbreak of Roman fever, a disease he contracted a number of years ago.

M. GRIMAUD DE CAUX has been appointed Chancellor of the French Legation at Washington, D. C., and M. Knecht Chancellor of the Consulate at San Francisco, Cal.

IT is announced by the commission appointed to superintend the erection of a statue of Victor Emmanuel in Rome that it has thrown open the competition for it to the whole world.

COLONEL CAMMARDOFF, who, while in company with the Chief Dragoman of the Russian Embassy recently, was fired upon and wounded by two persons, has died of his wounds.

SURGEON-GENERAL WILLIAM MAXWELL WOOD, United States Navy, retired, died March 2d at his residence at Owing's Mills, Baltimore County, Md., in the seventy-second year of his age.

THE Czar's body-guard is on duty day and night. Anybody entering the bedroom or the library of the sovereign would have to pass 200 Cossacks. Two soldiers sleep at the foot of his bed every night.

THE Hon. John A. Cuthbert, of Mobile, is still practicing law in that city, although ninety-one years old. He was an officer in the war of 1812, and was elected to Congress from Georgia in 1819.

MR. JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, the new counsel for the Tichborne claimant, has expressed himself as confident of proving the innocence of his client and the truth of certain new evidence recently discovered.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, formerly Under-Secretary for India, and at one time Governor of New Zealand, has been appointed Governor of Bombay, vice Sir Richard Temple, whose term of office has expired.

MRS. BETSEY HENDERSON, of Boston, celebrated her one hundredth birthday on Sunday, February 29th. The Rev. Dr. Miner, of whose church she is a member, preached a memorial discourse in the morning.

IT is reported at Rome that Count Corti, the Italian Ambassador at Constantinople, will be transferred to Paris, and that Baron Blanc, the Italian Minister at Washington, will succeed Count Corti at Constantinople.

THE Biennial Musical Festival Association of Cincinnati, Ohio, upon the recommendation of Theodore Thomas, has effected a contract with Miss Amy Sherwin, the young soprano from Tasmania, to sing at the next festival.

COUNT DE SAINT-VALLIER, French Ambassador at Berlin, gave a dinner at the Embassy on March 1st, which was attended by the Emperor and Empress of Germany, Princess Bismarck, the principal court dignitaries, Prince Hohenlohe and others.

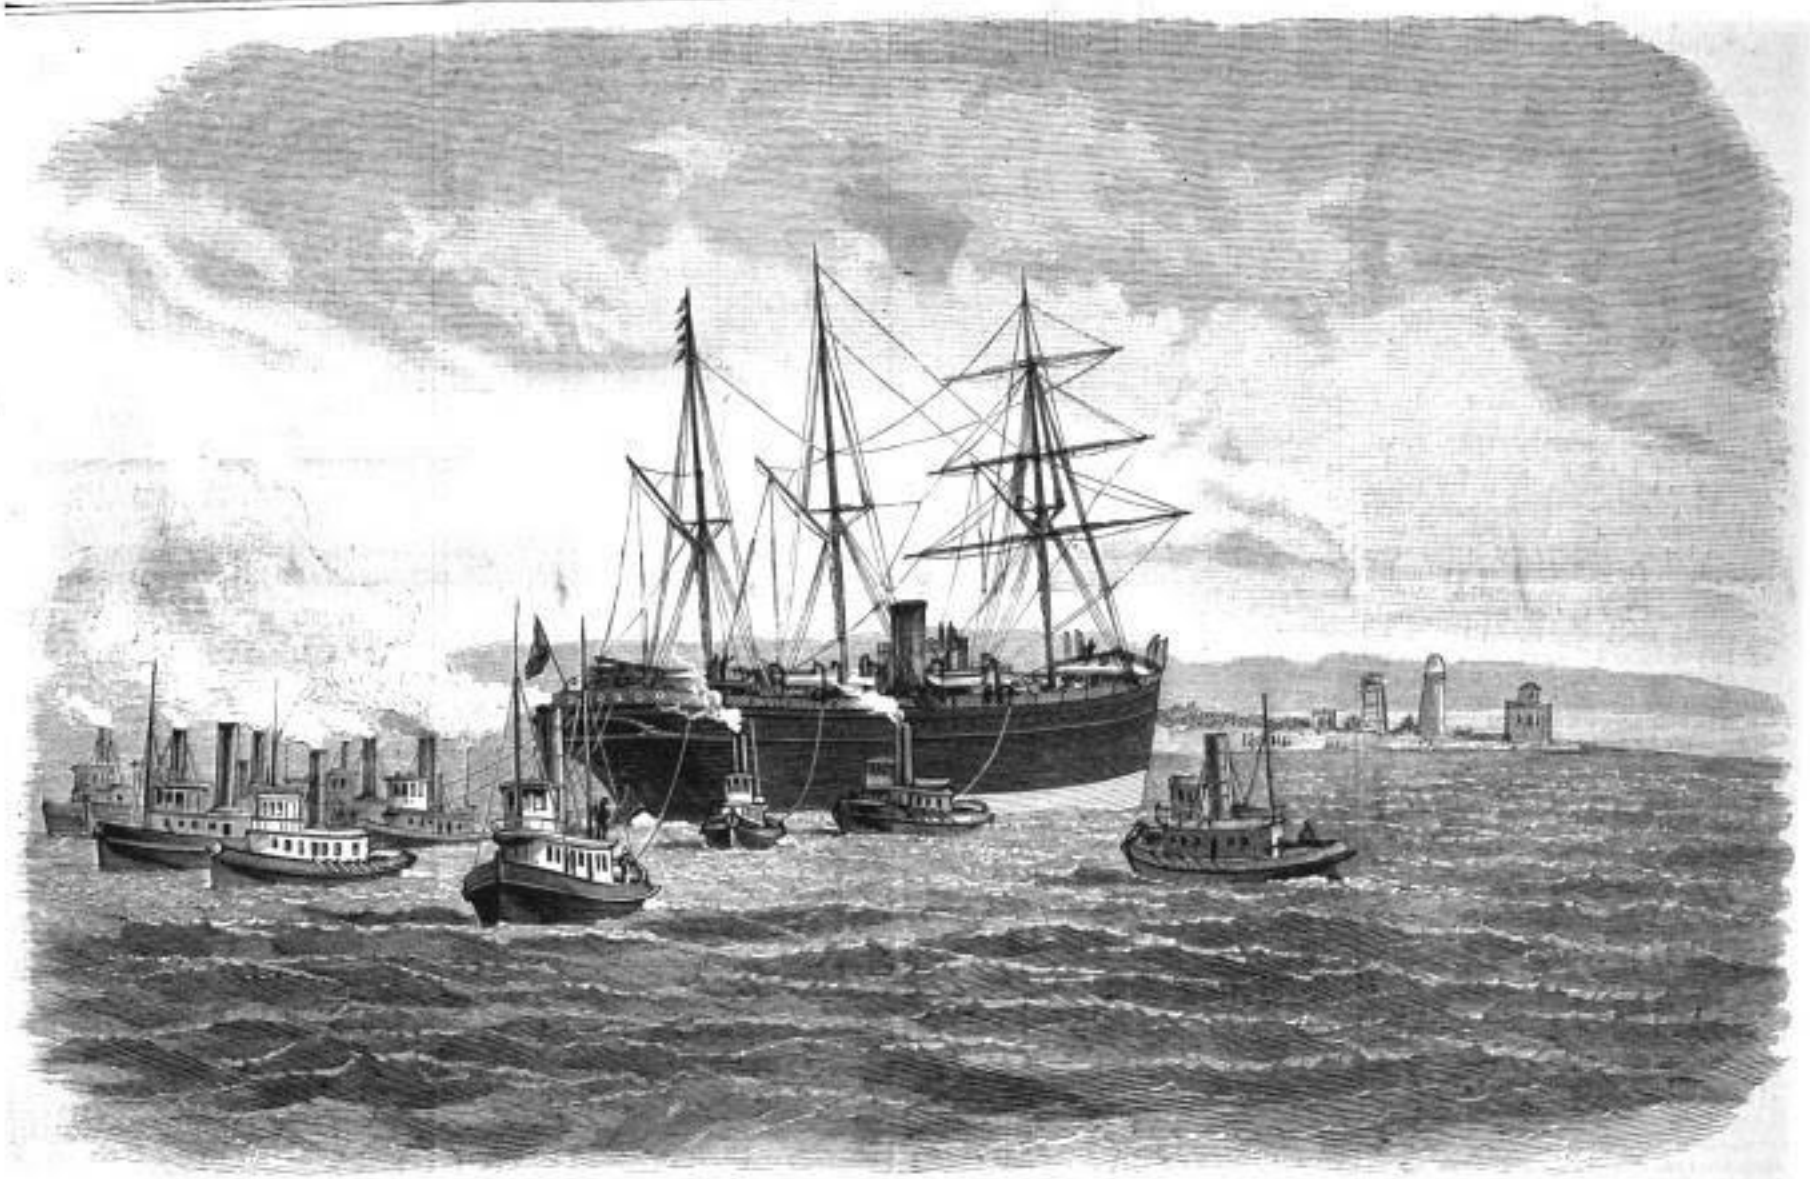
JOHN COX, the Pennsylvania abolitionist, whose house before the war sometimes concealed as many as twenty runaway slaves in one night, and whose golden wedding was celebrated in verse by Whittier and Bayard Taylor, has just died at the age of ninety-four.

ON the appointment of Sir A. T. Galt as Canadian Resident Minister at London, the Canadian Government will retain Mr. Annan as Chief Emigration Agent for the Dominion, in order to afford every facility for emigration during the prevalence of the agricultural depression in the United Kingdom.

PRIVATE advices from Berlin state that the Emperor William, while at dinner with Count de St. Vallier, expressed the most friendly sentiments toward the Ambassador of the French Government, and said there was no ground for anxiety as to the continuance of good relations between the two countries.

THERE is a custom in Bavaria which renders it obligatory upon every Prince of the reigning house to perform at least one day's active duty as a private soldier in the royal army. The Sultan of Turkey has gone a step further, and ordered one of his sons and a nephew to enter as privates in a regiment of body-guards. This is an unprecedented event in Turkey. Shade of the Prophet! what next?

CAPTAIN DANIEL R. BRUEN, the oldest citizen of Newark, N. J., and the oldest Freemason in the State, died March 3d, in his eighty-fifth year. He was a member of St. John's Lodge for over fifty years, was at one time Grand Master of the State, and occupied a number of honorable positions. He was born in Newark in 1795, and, until he became advanced in years, pursued several kinds of business.



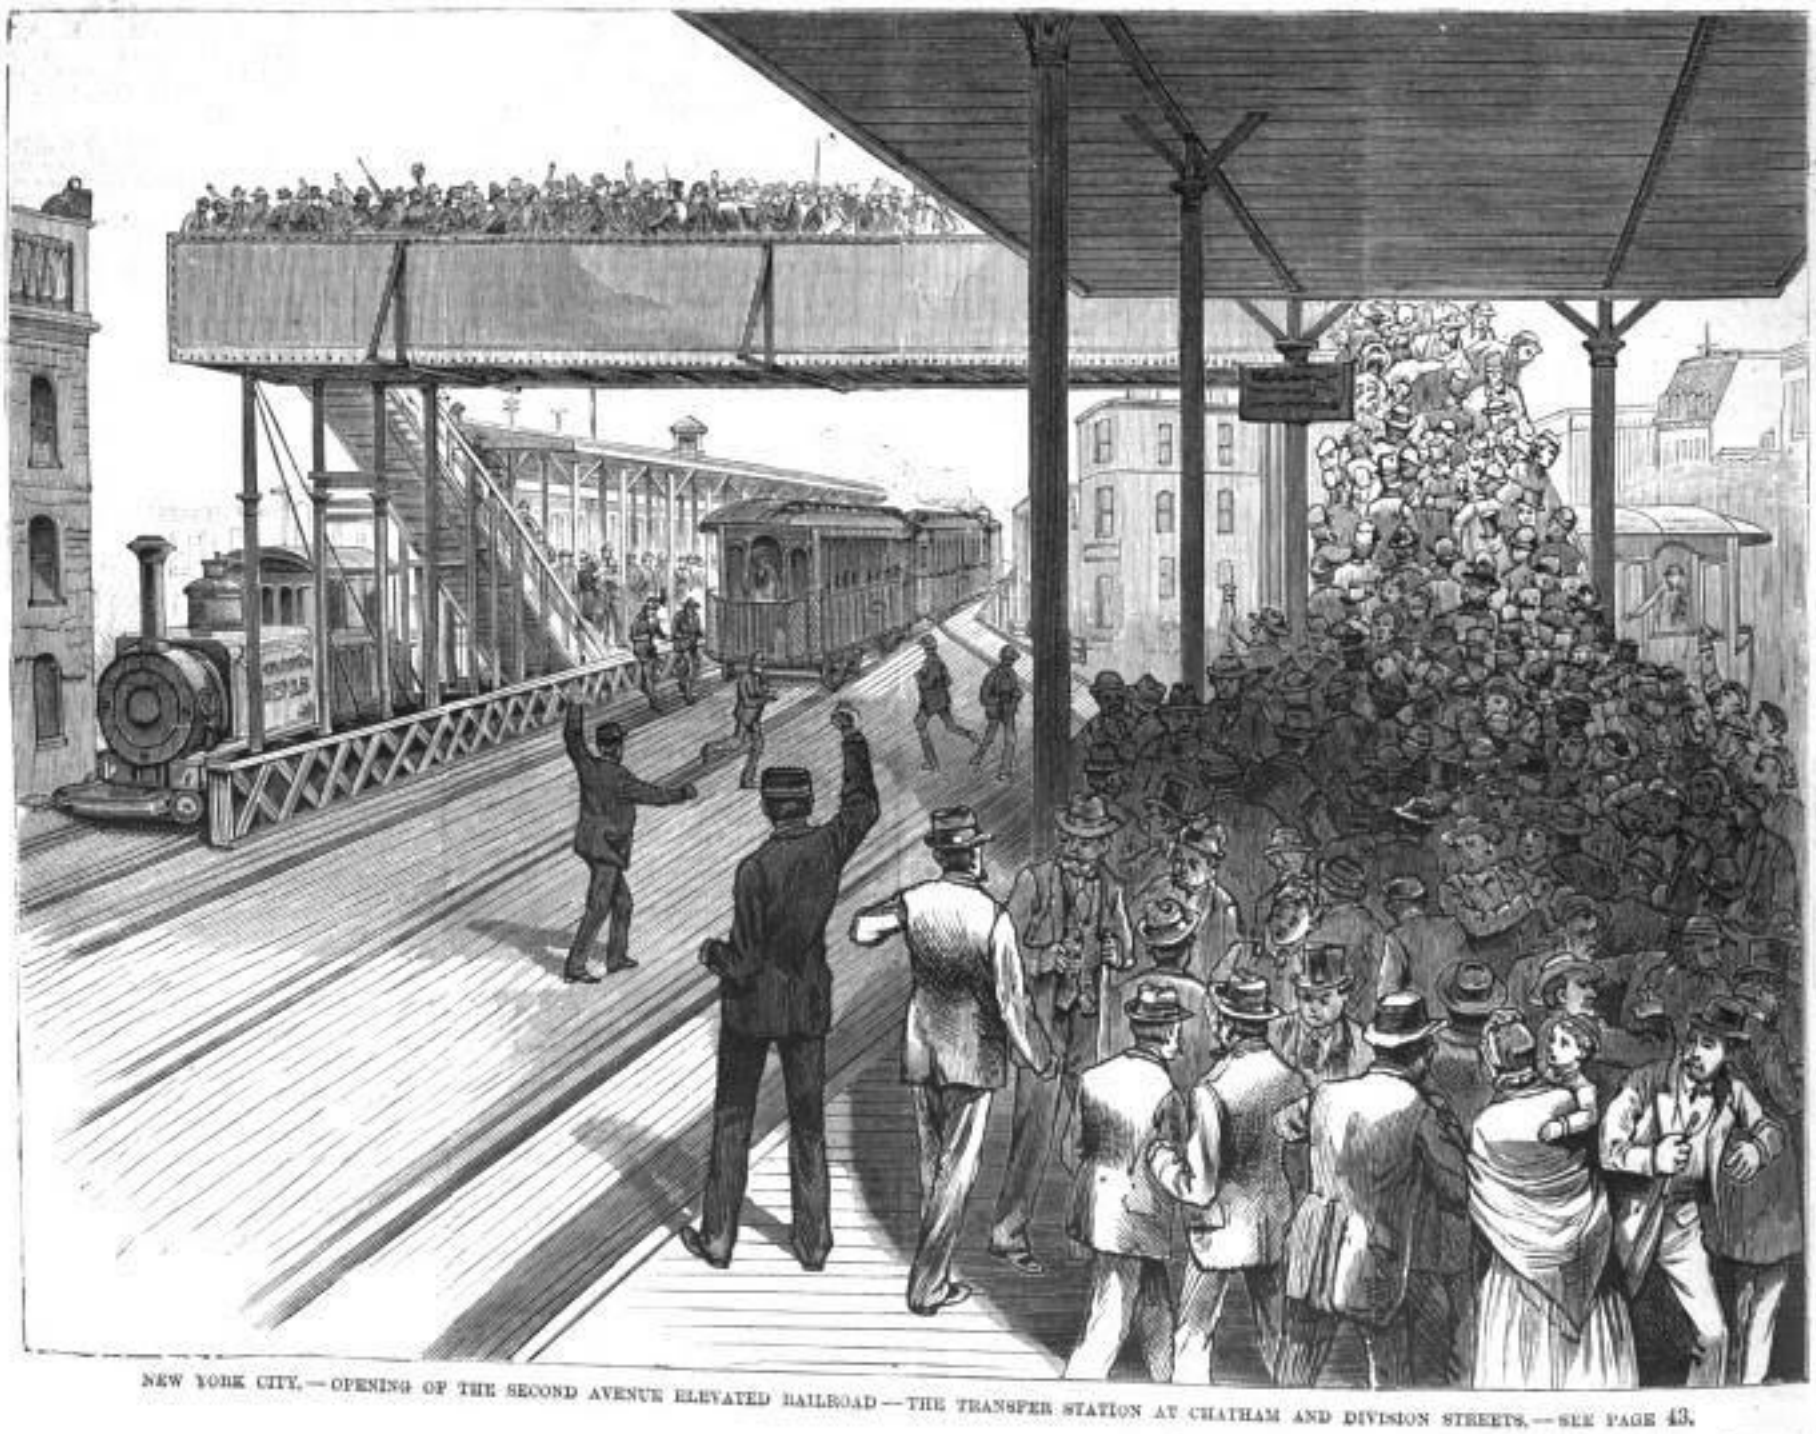
THE Emperor of Austria has lately been the recipient of a unique present. It consists of a suit of clothes made from the wool of an alpaca sheep that eleven hours previous to their delivery was still alive. The animal, a superb specimen of its kind, was slain at 6:11 A. M. Four hours and thirty-three minutes were employed in reducing the wool to cloth. In two hours and twenty-five minutes the latter was ready for the tailor, who employed the remaining four hours in making the suit.

IT gives the Austrian Empress great pleasure to see her children ride well. Her only son, the young Archduke Rudolph, is one of the best and boldest riders in Austria or Hungary. A foreign potentate lately complimented him on his horsemanship. "How could I be a bad rider?" he said; "am I not a Hungarian and the son of my mother?" His father, the Kaiser, is also an excellent horseman. Their youngest daughter, the charming little Archduchess Valeria, gratifies her mother also by the wondrous progress she has made in the riding-school, though only twelve years of age.

COUNT BALZARINO LUTTA, First Secretary of the Italian Legation to Washington, came to New York from Washington to be treated for cancer in the right side of his neck. On December 27th, 1879, he was taken from the Clarendon Hotel to St. Vincent Hospital, in Eleventh Street, where he died March 3d. His friend, Count Morello, of the Spanish Legation, was with him when he died. Count Lutta was of an old and noble family in Milan, Italy. The body was taken to Washington by the Italian Minister, Baron Blanc, and by Count Morello. It is to be placed in a receiving vault in Washington until the wishes of Count Lutta's relatives in Milan are learned.

FEBRUARY 17th was the sixty-third anniversary of the reigning sovereign of Holland, who ascended the throne on the death of his father, March 17th, 1849, and is, therefore, in the thirty-first year of his reign. The Queen of the Netherlands, née Princess Emma of Waldeck Pyrmont, attained her majority in August last, and the only issue remaining of the King's former marriage is Prince Alexander of the Netherlands, now de facto Prince of Orange and heir apparent to the throne. Prince Alexander is in his twenty-ninth year; he has recently, both in newspapers and pamphlets, admitted his inability to take part in any affairs of State, and serious apprehensions are entertained in Holland that the Orange-Nassau dynasty will shortly die out.

Digitized by Google



NEW JERSEY.—GROUNDING OF THE STEAMSHIP "NEVADA" OFF SANDY HOOK—THE FLEET OF TUGS DRAGGING HER OFF THE ALLEGED NEW SHOAL.

GROUNDING OF THE STEAMSHIP "NEVADA."

ON Sunday, February 29th, no less than sixteen steamships and thirty-five sailing-vessels arrived in the port of New York by way of Sandy Hook, all reporting unusually severe weather and a variety of accidents. The experience of the steamship State of Nevada, of the State Line, from Glasgow for New York, has given rise both to curious speculation and official inquiries. On the night of the 28th she got aground about a mile northeast of the point of Sandy Hook, and a quarter of a mile south of the ship channel. She struck on the bar at about 11:30 A.M., during a fog, at nearly high water. Word was telegraphed to the company's agents, and he immediately made arrangements to send her assistance.

The authorities at Castle Garden, being notified that she had a large number of emigrants on board, also sent down the tug Virginia Seymour. Telegrams were also sent to the office of the company at the foot of Canal Street, and the tug-boats Hudson, Baltic, and W. H. Chesey went down. All worked together in attempting to free the steamship until 7 P.M. without any prospect of success. The vessel seemed to be badly stuck, although there was plenty of water. At 8 o'clock she began to move slightly, and there were prospects that she would come out at high water. A damper was put on this theory, however, at 9 o'clock, when the officers at the docks received a telegram asking for further assistance, saying also that the steamer would probably have to stay at Sandy Hook until morning. At 10:30, however, the twelve tugs succeeded in hauling her off, and she reached Quarantine safely and without having met with any damage. At Quarantine the pilots said that the pilot of the Nevada in the fog probably mistook the black buoy off the point of the Hook for the black buoy off the false channel and steered a steamer Constellation, then under sailing orders for Havre, France, with goods for the Paris Exposition. Upon the return of the Constellation, Ensign Reynolds was placed "upon waiting orders" until October, 1879, when he was again ordered to the same ship, for transfer to the United States Flagship Trenton, in the European Squadron, where he is now on duty. It was while en route to the Mediterranean that the rescue of the crew of the Olive was made, on November 24th last. The following report from Captain Wilson to the Secretary of the Navy not only explains a most gallant action, but is a handsome testimonial to a plucky youth:

NEW YORK CITY.—OPENING OF THE SECOND AVENUE ELEVATED RAILROAD—THE TRANSFER STATION AT CHATHAM AND DIVISION STREETS.—SEE PAGE 43.

Digitized by Google

ENSIGN L. K. REYNOLDS, U. S. N., THE HERO OF THE BARK "OLIVE" RESCUE.

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP Trenton,
Toulon, France, Feb. 3d, 1880.

HON. R. W. THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to make the following report, in order to render tardy justice to a deserving young officer.

In my report of the rescue of the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olive, I neglected to mention the gallant conduct of Ensign L. K. Reynolds.

Ensign Reynolds had charge of the first whaleboat, and was the only one who communicated with the bark.

The second whaleboat, owing to the heavy sea, failed to get within hail.

After making two trips and bringing to the Constellation nine of the crew of the Olive, he (Mr. Reynolds) volunteered to return and bring off the three men remaining on the bark.

Before leaving in the last boat I directed Mr. Reynolds either to scuttle or fire the bark, to secure her sinking, as she was in the track of vessels and dangerous above water. Owing to the heavy sea running, Ensign Reynolds could not go alongside the bark, but jumped overboard, swam to the vessel, fired her in two places, swam to his boat again and returned to the Constellation, with the last of the crew of the Olive.

To the good judgment and skillful handling of the boat by Ensign Reynolds is due the fact that no accident happened either to the rescued or rescuing party. Very respectfully your obedient servant,

HENRY WILSON, Captain Commanding.

REV. GEO. G. MULLINS, CHAPLAIN, U. S. A., ASSISTANT IN CHARGE OF EDUCATION IN THE ARMY.—SEE PAGE 43.

THE UNITED STATES FISH-HATCHING STEAMER "FISHHAWK."

IN speaking of Seth Green, the father of American fish-culture, two weeks ago, allusion was made to the action of Congress in making an appropriation for a United States exhibit at the forthcoming Fish Exposition in Berlin, and in providing for the construction of an iron steamer to navigate our waters and carry on the hatching of table fish. We take pleasure this week in presenting a view of this vessel, the Fishhawk, as she has been named, which has just been completed by the Pusey & Jones Company, of Wilmington, Del. Her construction is in all respects novel, and adapted to the work for which she is designed. This is the first vessel of the kind ever built. Her equipment will consist not only of all the improved appliances for taking fish, but also for their propagation on board. She is rigged as a fore-and-aft schooner, is 146 feet 6 inches long, on a seven-foot water-line, and measures in breadth of beam, molded, 27 feet, and in depth of hold, amidships, 10 feet 9 inches. She has an iron hull, covered with 3-inch of yellow-pine plank, and is furnished with a twin screw—that is, two propelling screws, right and left, one under each counter, each screw being driven by one inverted cylinder surface-condensing engine, 22-inch diameter of cylinder, and 21-inch stroke of piston.

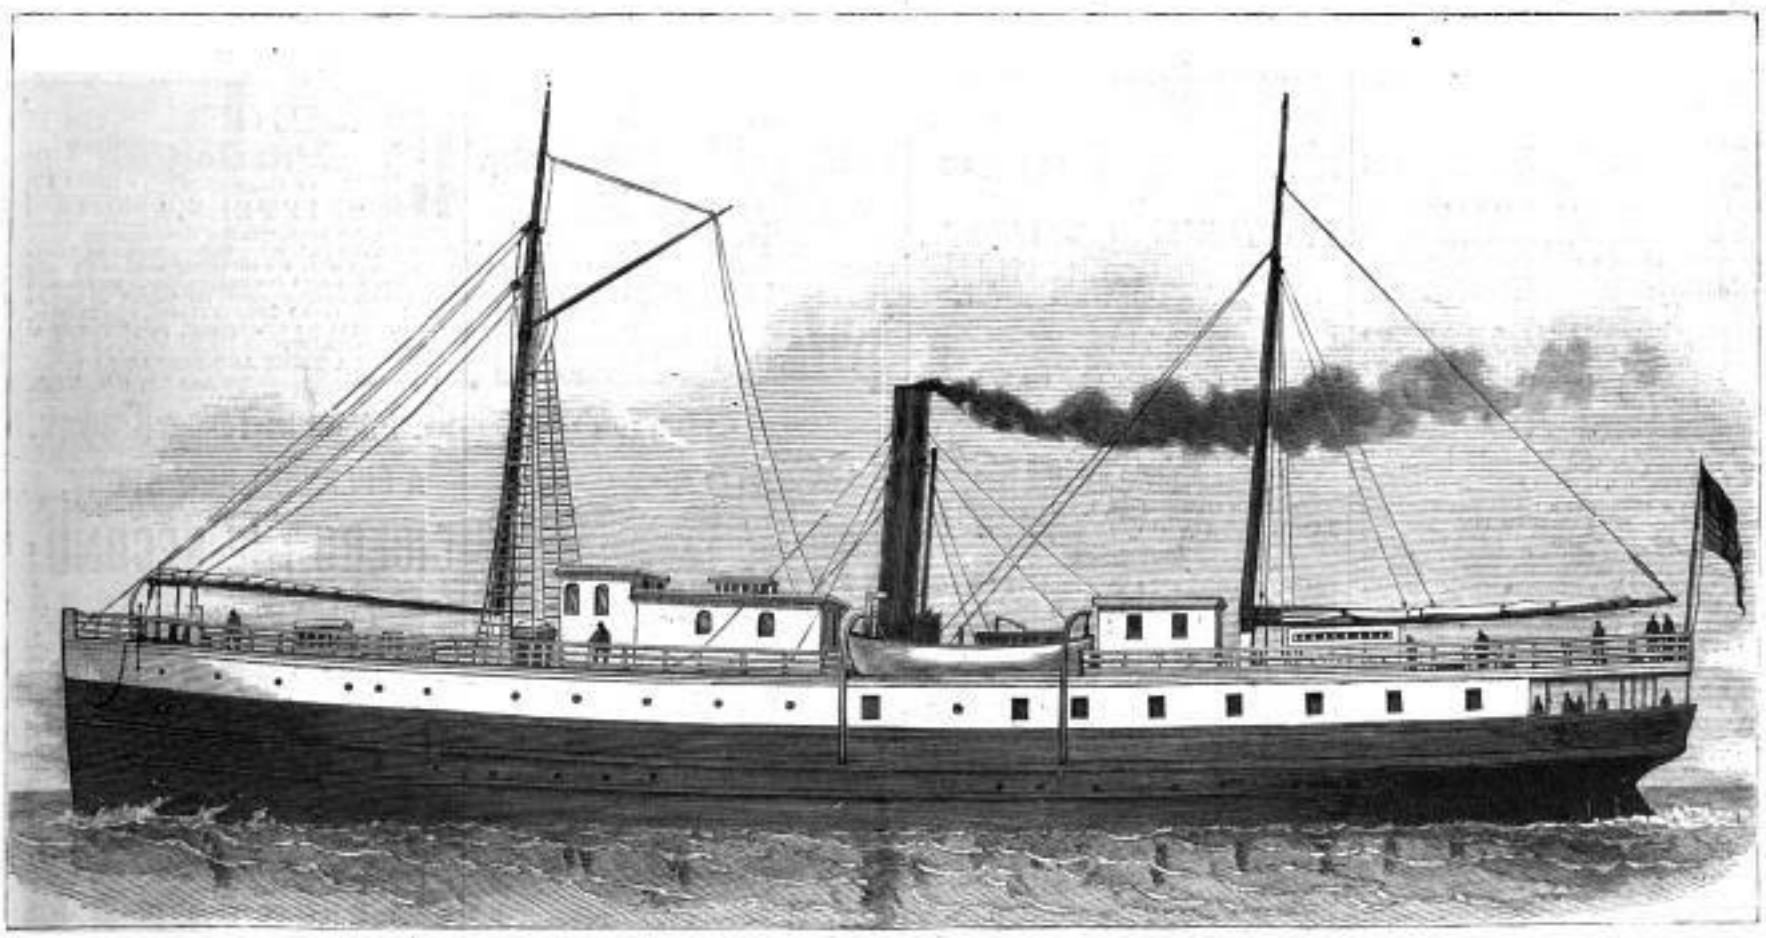
The Fishhawk has been built under the supervision of Lieutenant Tanner, United States Navy, who had the Speedwell in charge last year at Provincetown, when she was in the service of the United States Fish Commission. This method permits not only of great extension in hatching fish, but adds to the facilities of transporting eggs or young fish. The fish can be caught by the men employed in the service, and, once the eggs secured, the hatching can be accomplished on shipboard by means of apparatus where power is wanted, such as for obtaining a constant flow of water, or motion. It is also possible, by means of a steamer, to secure eggs in certain rivers or bays, hatch them, and carry them hundreds of miles to other points of delivery or distribution. To accomplish this, and to make room for such special apparatus, there is an open space on the main deck of the Fishhawk, 40 by 27 feet. Here will be placed the conical-shaped vessels, through which will pour continuous streams of water, which movement is absolutely necessary when shad eggs are to be matured. Cylindrical vessels with wire bottoms, by means of projecting beams, which stand out from the sides of the vessel, plunge these vessels containing the eggs into the water, and little too far west. The purser reported that the accident was a mistake of the pilot, and that it was not so foggy as it might have been at 11:30 A. M., when the Nevada went on. Another reason assigned for the disaster was that the late storms had formed a shoal off the Hook which was not known until the steamship ran upon it.

At the meeting of the Board of Pilot Commissioners, held on March 3d, depositions were made by the captain and chief officer of the steamship concerning the grounding. Pilot Lyons also made a statement. Neither Pilot Lyons nor his comrades believe that the shoal off Sandy Hook was appreciably increased by the gale of February 3d. The general belief is that the buoys 3 and 5½, however, are too far inshore. The Secretary was instructed to write to Commodore Clitz and the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and inquire as to what, if any, changes have recently taken place in the shoal off Sandy Hook. Judgment on the pilot was suspended until the report is received.



ENSIGN L. K. REYNOLDS, U. S. N.

ENSIGN LOVELL K. REYNOLDS was born in Keokuk County, Iowa, January 31st, 1857. At the age of nine years his parents moved to Wilcox County, Alabama, where he has since resided when off sea duty. His preparatory education was chiefly in the schools of Montgomery, Ala., and Lookout Mountain, Tenn. He graduated at the age of nineteen from the United States Naval Academy, in what is known as the "Centennial Class," June, 1876, standing number seventeen in a class of forty-two.

After graduation as midshipman he served in the Atlantic squadron, and was assigned to the staff of Admiral Stephen D. Trenchard, commanding the squadron. Subsequently, the young Ensign was detached and ordered to report for duty to Captain James A. Green, commanding the United States

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—PRESENT APPEARANCE OF THE OLD CAPITOL PRISON, WASHINGTON.—SEE PAGE 43.

THE IRON FISH-HATCHING STEAMER "FISHHAWK," JUST COMPLETED FOR THE UNITED STATES FISH COMMISSION.

Digitized by Google

withdraw them by means of a peculiar cam, which movement will be given by machinery. An agitation is necessary for shad eggs, with change of water, and as these eggs are heavier than water, the vessels containing them are lifted slowly, so as not to break the tender eggs, and plunged again into the water more suddenly. The same method will be tried with the eggs of the cod, only as these eggs are lighter, and they require to be buoyed up, the reverse movement will be employed. The Fishhawk will be roomy enough to carry some twenty officers and hands, with additional space for such complement of men as may be requisite for securing spawning fish.

The Fishhawk, equipped as she is for this special work, marks the most notable advance that has yet been made in practical fish-culture, and, no doubt, her plan of construction and methods employed in hatching fish, looking towards the production of fish-food in the future, will be copied by other countries. The vessel is amply provided with lifting engines, as no small part of her duty will be to work dredging apparatus.

The Spanish Succession.

JOYFUL expectations are entertained in the royal palace at Madrid, and the ceremonial authorities of the Spanish Court are already being eagerly consulted by the Great Officers of the Household, in order that no ancient rite or prescription of etiquette may be omitted when Queen Christina shall perform the important function of assuring the direct succession to the crown of the Two Castiles. Doubtless, all time-honored ordinances will be rigidly observed upon that auspicious occasion; and it is interesting, apropos of the "coming event," to read the account of the ceremonial performed at the birth of King Alfonso himself, furnished to the Czar by Prince Michale Gallitzyn, then Russian Ambassador at the Court of Queen Isabella. His Excellency wrote as follows: "On the 28th of November, 1858, I was awakened suddenly at three o'clock in the morning by a royal halberdier, who brought me an invitation to betake myself without delay to the royal palace. Within half an hour I entered Her Majesty's private cabinet, where I found numerous grandees and Ministers already assembled. A few minutes later the doors of the cabinet were thrown open, and the King Consort, Don Francisque d'Assisi, entered the room, bearing upon a golden salver the new-born infant, Don Alfonso. Thus all present were enabled to assure themselves that an heir to the throne had really come into the world."

LIFE INSURANCE.

THE CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., of Hartford, print their thirty-fourth annual statement on the outside of this paper. Their receipts for the year just passed are about nine millions of dollars, and their payments to policy-holders more than seven millions of dollars. Their ownership of real estate is larger than that of any other company, and it is the best of real estate. Their sales of it in all the year to come will be at profit, for foreclosures were made during the time when only a great company could afford to carry the property until its value should warrant its sale. Bound to the core, utterly conservative, ably directed and honestly managed, the CONNECTICUT MUTUAL shows its policy-holders a statement of which, in all its details, they may be proud.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT BONDS,
And other desirable Investment Securities,
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York,

Buy and sell all issues of Government Bonds, in large or small amounts, at current market prices, and will be pleased to furnish information in reference to all matters connected with investments in Government Bonds.

We are prepared to give information in regard to first-class Railway Securities, and to execute orders for the same.

Buy and sell all marketable Stocks and Bonds on commission, at the Stock Exchange and in the open market.

Receive accounts of Banks, Bankers, Merchants and others, and allow interest on daily balances; and for those keeping accounts with us we collect United States coupons and registered interest, and other coupons, dividends, etc., and credit without charge.

☞ We give special attention to orders from Banks, Bankers, Institutions and investors out of the city, by Mail or Telegraph, to buy or sell Government Bonds, State and Railroad Bonds, Bank Stocks, Railroad Stocks and other securities.

We have issued the Seventh Edition of "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," copies of which can be had on application.

FISK & HATCH.

FUN.

VETERAN joker, reading proof at the next table—"I wrote Brown and it is set up Black. The compositor must be color-blind."

THE man who lost both arms in the machinery proposes to strike, as he has noticed that whenever there is a strike they always put on new hands.

YOUNG LADY—"See, my poor doggie wants you to pat his head." Parson—"Ah, yes. But might not the 'laying on of hands' be followed by the taking off of fingers?"

THE observant "small boy" went to church and heard the minister repeatedly say in his prayer, "Grant us, O Lord." He reported at home that the minister had "come out strong for Grant."

LITTLE EDITH (Mrs. Brown, a visitor, has just kissed her)—"Mamma, I doesn't like womens one bit." Mamma—"Why, Edith, what do you mean? Why not, darling?" Edith—"'Cause womens is teasin' for tisses all 'e times." Mrs. Brown has learned a lesson. Oh, that she would profit by it.

PUNCH has a picture of a Scotchman disputing with a London cabman about his fare. The controversy has become warm. "I'd hae you ken," says the countryman of the Campbells, "that I am a Mackintosh;" to which the irreverent cabby replies, "You may be a humbereller for all that I knows, but my fare is heighteen pence."

AN UNEXPECTED PLEASURE—Beloved but unresponsive fair one: "So glad to see you, Cousin Charley, and so kind of you to drop in! Now, you'll sit a couple of hours with grandmamma, won't you, just to amuse her, while Arthur and I take a stroll in the garden? And be careful to speak as loud as you can, for she is very, very deaf, poor dear!"

A PAINTER from Tyneside, while busy putting the finishing touch on the stern of a vessel lying at the shipyard where he was employed, was whistling at his work as merry as a ploughman. The manager, being on deck, heard the painter, but failed to find out his whereabouts for some time. At length looking over the stern, he descried the man of paint, whose tune was merry and loud. He looked savagely at the man, who took no notice of his appearance, but continued his work until accosted by his superior with the following inquiry: "Do we pay you for whistling?" "No," replied the man; "we gie ye that into the bargain."

OVERWORKED BUSINESS MEN AND STUDENTS.

TO THE feeble convalescent and to the overwork'd student or professional man or man of business who finds himself slowly losing vitality and the power to do his best; who knows that his health is gradually giving way, and that if no health can be found a breakdown in the near future—fatal, it may be—is inevitable, "COMPOUND OXYGEN" offers an almost certain means of relief and restoration. Send for our "Treatise on Compound Oxygen," which gives the largest information and many remarkable testimonials from widely known and eminent public men. Sent free. Address, DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1112 Girard Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

MAN: "I say, mister can't yer give us a shil'n'; I'm turble hard-up." Farmer: "Ah, Proctor, I always told you to look out for a rainy day." Man: "So I did, master; but I never thought it wur a-going to snow." Master gives him a shilling.

GILT-EDGE BUTTER MAKER

makes July, August and Winter butter equal to best June product. Grocers pay 3 to 6 cents a pound extra for butter made with this powder. Guaranteed harmless. Increases production 6 to 10 per cent. Reduces time of churning one-half. Sold by druggists, grocers and general storekeepers. Send stamp for "Hints to Butter Makers." Address, Butter Improvement Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

FOR DYSPEPSIA, NERVOUSNESS, ETC.

I have prescribed HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE and am very much pleased with what I have seen of its action, and purpose using more of it as occasion requires. A. C COTTON, M.D.
TURNER, ILL.

"THE AMERICA" CHAMPAGNE of Messrs. A. Werner & Co., 398 Broadway, New York, is one of the very best antidotes to the depression and languor almost invariably attending the approach of Spring. Its tonic and strengthening effects are excellent, and all the bodily functions are promoted by its use. Disease is often averted and physicians' bills saved by timely attention to the general health, reinforced by a mild, agreeable stimulant like WERNER'S CHAMPAGNE. Safety and strength in these trying weeks of opening Spring often mean good health and immunity from disease for the entire remainder of the year—a hint which "THE AMERICA" readers practicable for every one

THE PHILADELPHIA PREMIUM BOOK HOUSE, No. 610 Chestnut Street, is advertising new and standard books at the lowest retail prices, presenting a gift with each. Its managers are some of the best business gentlemen of Philadelphia, and its list of premiums embraces many handsome and costly articles. The enterprise has thus far met with great success by reason of the prompt and generous manner in which it has fulfilled its promises.

AFTER SHAVING.—Gentlemen who use the razor will find Burnett's Kalliston a most desirable cosmetic. It softens the beard, allays all tendency to inflammation, counteracts the painful effects sometimes produced by soap, and prevents roughness and dryness of the skin.

HOWEVER SAFE your occupation, a slip or fall may make you wish you had insured in THE TRAVELERS.

SEND for our Treatise on Kidney and Lung Diseases. Sent free on application.
Excelsior Kidney Pad Co., Toledo, Ohio.

MESSRS. BRADLEY & CO., of Philadelphia, who publish the "Encyclopædia of Wit and Wisdom," are responsible and liberal gentlemen, and wide-awake agents who desire to handle a profitable work, will do well to apply to them for territory, mentioning the name of this journal.

MY mother says HOP BITTERS is the only thing that will keep her from her old and severe attacks of paralysis and headache.—ED. OSWEGO Sun.

FOR AN IRRITATED THROAT, Cough or Cold, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are offered with the fullest confidence in their efficacy. They maintain the good reputation they have justly acquired.

CALL on DR. BROWNING, 1117 Arch Street, and he will tell you how to cure a cold with only three doses of his CORDIAL.

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE, a genuine relish, exactly suited to all tastes and all conditions of people.

SEE advertisement of UNION MANUFACTURING CO.

MANY of the largest and finest structures in this country are painted with the H. W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS LIQUID PAINTS, which are rapidly taking the place of all others for the better class of dwellings; their superior richness of color render them the most beautiful as well as the most economical paints in the world. H. W. Johns Mfg. Co., 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y., are the sole manufacturers.

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ¼, ½ and 1lb., labeled:
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists,
LONDON, ENG.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

FRIEDRICHSHALL
NATURAL BITTERWATER.

Highly recommended by eminent medical authorities, as Sir Henry Thompson, Knapp Virchow, Frerichs, etc., as a mild aperient and well-tried curative for adults and children. Owes its great reputation to the happy proportions of its ingredients. Cures: Indigestion, constipation, obstructions, piles, chronic disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, gout, plethora, rush of blood to the head, hypochondria, melancholy, lassitude, impurities of the blood and skin, eruptions and blotches. Sold by all dealers in mineral waters. Pamphlets on application.

One Hundred Years Old.
1780 — 1880
WALTER BAKER & CO.
Dorchester, Mass.
CHOCOLATE, BROMA and COCOA

In their best and purest form, contain every ingredient that is needful for the sustenance and growth of the human system, being composed, as determined by chemical analysis, of starch, gum, gluten, oil, and a white crystallizable substance called theobromine, similar to theine in tea, but containing more nitrogen and being an important adjunct to nutrition.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

LA BELLE CHOCOLATIERE. Our Book of Choice Chocolate Receipts will be sent free to any address.

CATARRH

Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is DR. M. W. CASE'S

CARBOLATE OF TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION,
BRONCHITIS &
DEAFNESS.

It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedial agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT sent. SATISFACTION ALWAYS GUARANTEED. Address,
Circulars, etc., Sent Free.
(When writing for circular, name this paper.)
Dr. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL,
Broadway, New York.

Parties interested in Mining Property will find, in the Reading and Writing Rooms of the St. Nicholas, valuable works of reference, including the celebrated Centennial Map of the U. S. and Territories, Hardon and Wheeler's Surveys and Atlases, Maps and principal Newspapers of the Mining Districts, &c. Conveniently and centrally located for Headquarters for Mining Interest.

Nearest First-Class Hotel on the American Plan to Wall Street, and within fifteen minutes' walk of the Mining Exchange.
Apartments, service and table unsurpassed.

CHAMPLIN'S LIQUID PEARL

"Is an excellent cosmetic."—Tribune. "The best I have ever used."—Charlotte Thompson. "The best I have ever used; for the future I shall use no other."—Lotta. "Far superior to the one I bring over from Paris."—Jennie Ackek. "Superior to any cosmetic."—Secret Soldiers. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a bottle. Beware of imitations. CHAMPLIN & CO., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

CHEAP MUSIC

Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 22 Park Row, New York.

1854 THE ORIGINAL 1880
GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE,
A GIFT WITH EVERY BOOK
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED AT
610 Chestnut St., Philad'a. 610

Are now GIVING AWAY to PURCHASERS of Books Gold Watches, Silk Dresses, Mantel Clocks, Silverware, Jewelry, and a large variety of useful and valuable articles—FREE! We sell at the LOWEST PRICES all the New and Standard Books in sets or single volumes, and give a Handsome Premium with each book.
☞ Pleasant and profitable employment for everybody. Send for our New Catalogue of Books and Gifts for 1880. Terms to agents and persons forming clubs.
C. M. GILBERT, President.
PHILAD'A PREMIUM BOOK CO.,
610 Chestnut St., Philad'a.

AGENTS WANTED
FOR THE
Best Selling Books in the Country.
For catalogues and terms address
PORTER & COATES,
S. W. cor. Ninth and Chestnut Sts., Phila.

Illustrated Catalogue 150 pp. and Lecture, 10c.
MAGIC LANTERNS & VIEWS
THEO. J. HARBACH, 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

EUROPEAN TOUR FOR 1880 to the locations of the Old World; including excursions to Italy, Switzerland, France, Austria, England, Scotland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, EGYPT and the HOLY LAND, with an extraordinary number of first-class travel for an extremely low price. Send for a forty-page explanatory pamphlet; with full address to TOURJEE, Music Hall, Boston, Mass.

CANDY
Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address C. F. GUNTHER, Confectioner, 78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

MAMMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted safe and sure. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

Frank Leslie's Budget.
96 QUARTO PAGES—NEARLY 100 HANDSOME ILLUSTRATIONS.
Annual subscription price, $1.50, postpaid. Send 15 cts. for a specimen copy.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

15 THE GEM Puzzle
Or Game of "FIFTEEN."

1	2	3	4
5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12
13	14	15

100,000 sold in February in New York City alone. Bank Presidents, Editors, Lawyers, Doctors, Mechanics, Laborers, Boys and Girls, are all equally interested in the solution of this most fascinating puzzle. $100 reward offered by the manufacturers of the "Gem" for its correct solution. Price reduced to 15 cents, 2 for 25 cents, to Agents $1.25 per doz. by mail, postpaid. Postage stamps taken. Address,
EUREKA TRICK AND NOVELTY CO.,
Box 4614. 39 Ann St., New York.

Good News for our Young Readers.
A SPLENDID NEW STORY,
ENTITLED,
CICERO THE SECOND;
OR,
Talked into Bad Luck,
BEING THE REMARKABLE ADVENTURES OF LYSIMACHUS CICERO CHINN, THE ORATOR,
Will be commenced in No.
703 703 703 703
OF
Frank Leslie's
Boys' & Girls' Weekly
Issued Monday, March 29th.

ORDER EARLY OF YOUR NEWSDEALER.
LET YOUR FRIENDS KNOW ABOUT IT.

Digitized by Google

Amusements.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. BEGINS AT 8.
Last week but two,
ABBEY'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
SPANISH STUDENTS. | THE GREAT LORELLAS. | PRINCE ROYAL KATSNOSHIN.
MAFFIT AND FRASER. A WORLD OF NOVELTIES.
Come and see the CRAZE PUZZLE DONE—13, 13 & 14.
MATINEES WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.
ABBEY & HICKEY.....Proprietors.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.

Every Night at 8. The Perfection of Comedy, Spectacle and Music.

THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.

Matinees of THE ROYAL MIDDY
EVERY WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2.
 Seats may be secured a fortnight ahead.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.....FRENCH OPERA.
Lessee and Manager.....Mr. MAURICE GRAU.
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 8TH,
Return for three (3) weeks only of Mr. MAURICE GRAU'S
GREAT FRENCH OPERA COMPANY.
Mlle. PAOLA MARIE, Mlle. LEROUX SOUVARD,
Mlle. ANGELE, M. VICTOR CAPOUL.
*A change of opera nightly.
SEATS AT BOX OFFICE FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE AND 111 BROADWAY.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
SIXTH WEEK
SIXTH WEEK
of
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
EVERY EVENING, AND SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:30.
The new American operatic extravaganza,
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA. INDIANS NEVER TELL A LIE. HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
HIAWATHA. HIAWATHA.
New and sparkling music by Ed. E. Rice. Libretto, full of fun, by Nathaniel Childs. Beautiful scenery by William Voegtlin.
MATINEE SATURDAY AT 1:30.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Mr. A. M. PALMER.....Sole Lessee and Manager
Begins at 8; over at 10:35. Saturday Matinee begins at 1:45.
EIGHTH WEEK AND CONTINUED SUCCESS
of Mr. Edgar Fawcett's Play,
THE FALSE FRIEND.
This fascinating play, with its splendid scenes—the most magnificent ever set upon this stage—and with a cast of characters made from the
BEST COMPANY IN AMERICA,
Will be given every evening and at the Saturday Matinees until further notice.
SATURDAY, March 13th, Ninth Matinee of THE FALSE FRIEND. Seats secured two weeks ahead.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
SALSBURY'S TROUBADOURS,
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
THE BANKER'S DAUGHTER.
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

ONLY $5.00 AND WARRANTED 2 YEARS

CUT THIS OUT IT IS VALUABLE

THE BEAUTIFUL NEW-STYLE AMERICAN STEM-WINDING WATCH, which we offer to the readers of this paper, has many Novel and Wonderful Features, and is protected by Patents granted by the governments of the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Germany, Russia, France, Austria, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, and Belgium. Heretofore, a low-priced watch has been the poorest of investments, being of no value as a time-keeper, and a constant source of annoyance and expense to its owner. Our Watch is a Marvel of Accuracy and Cheapness. The inventor has spent years in simplifying, in all its parts, the American Stem-Winding Watch, and we are now, for the First Time in the world's history, able to offer a Low-Priced, Perfectly Reliable Watch, suitable for use on Railroads and Steamers, and all other places where accurate time is required.

The nickeled dial shows the face of the Watch, giving the exact size and style. The face is covered with solid cut crystal, showing the handsome movements without the necessity of opening the case. The movements are of American make, known the world over for their excellence and fine finish. The case is made of beautiful, highly polished, silvered metal. It is thoroughly protected from the dirt and dust, to which a key-winding watch is daily exposed.

We know the American Stem-Winding Watch will meet with and grow in favor as its peculiar merits and good qualities become known. There is now a growing demand for just such a Watch, for, more than ever before, are the acts of everybody governed by and performed on time, and we believe that the vast army of Progressive Men, Careful Mechanics, Farmers, and Laborers will appreciate a Good Watch at a Cheap Price, which they can rely upon for accurate time.

OUR GRAND OFFER! In order to introduce our goods in every neighborhood in the United States, we make the following unprecedented offer, viz: On receipt of only $5.00, and this advertisement, on or before the 15th day of May, 1880, we will forward—all charges prepaid, and guarantee to reach you in good order—one of our American Stem-Winding Watches, packed in a Handsome, Velvet-lined, Case. And, we further agree, to send with each Watch a Beautiful Fire-Gold Chain and Ox'y Charm (as shown in cut). The chain is made from a composition of metals so closely resembling Gold that it is almost impossible for the best judges to distinguish the difference, even by a chemical test. It is the best substitute for gold ever discovered. We can only send out a LIMITED NUMBER at prices named; and, to protect ourselves from jewelers and dealers ordering in quantities, we will insert this advertisement in this paper but one time, hence require you to cut it out and send to us, so that we may know you are entitled to the benefits of this offer. Under no circumstances will we send more than one watch, chain, and charm to any person sending us $5.00 and this advertisement; but, after you receive one, if others are desired, we will furnish them at our regular wholesale prices. Many of our agents find ready sales for this combination at $10.00.

We will mail you a bundle of our Catalogues at the same time we send your goods, and feel sure you will be so well satisfied that you will oblige us by distributing them among your friends, and aid us by showing them your Watch. You can in this way assist us in selling other goods of Standard Quality, which we manufacture from New and Original Designs, and which we guarantee to give satisfaction.

Money can be sent by Registered Letter, Check, Money Order, or Draft on New York or Philadelphia, made payable to the Union Manufacturing Co. We will send the Watch C. O. D., with the privilege of examination, provided you send $1.00 to guarantee against loss by express charges; but, if you send $5.00, we prepay all shipping charges. Order before May 15th, as this agreement is void after that time. N. B.—Send to us direct, as there are many worthless imitations being offered under various names.

UNION MANUFACTURING CO., 120 S. Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM ONLY $5.00

CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA,

And the early stages of Consumption, are most successfully treated by the use of

INHALENE A Compound of CARBOLATED OIL or TAR

and the most healing Balsams, which, by simply breathing or inhaling, is converted into a cleansing, healing and vitalizing vapor, and taken direct to the disease, where it heals as quickly as the best liniment heals an ordinary cure. It cures—first, by destroying the cause; second, by local application of soothing and healing vapor; third, by purifying, vitalizing and building up the system.

CAUTION Do not be deceived by worthless imitations, advertised by so-called doctors, who charge you a big fee, or two prices for the inhaler and medicines. Order Inhalene, and secure the most reliable treatment at a reasonable price. J. Price Miller, M.D., Physician in charge. Office hours, 9 A.M. to 4 P.M. Professional advice by mail. State symptoms. Name this paper. Send for Circular. Address all letters to HOME MEDICINE CO. S. W. cor. 10th & Arch Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS LIQUID PAINTS

Are strictly pure linseed-oil paints of a higher grade than have ever before been manufactured for structural purposes.

☞ A saving of 25 to 33 per cent. of customary cost laye can be effected by the use of these paints. Samples of sixteen newest shades for dwellings sent free by mail.

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,
Sole Manufacturers of ASBESTOS ROOFING, BOILER COVERINGS, &c.
☞ Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.
Central Park Brewery
AND
Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159—165 East Fifty-ninth Street. Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Streets, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

WITH FIVE DOLLARS
YOU CAN BET A WHOLE
IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN
100 Florins Vienna City Government Bond,

Which bonds are issued and secured by the Government, and are redeemed in drawings

FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY

Until each and every bond is drawn, with a larger or smaller Premium. Every bond must draw a Prize, as there are no blanks. The three highest Prizes amount to 200,000 FLORINS,
50,000 FLORINS,
30,000 FLORINS,
And bonds not drawing one of the above prizes must draw a Premium of not less than 130 Florins.
The next drawing takes place on the
1st of April, 1880,
And every bond bought of us on or before the 1st of April is entitled to the whole premium that may be drawn thereon on that date.

Out-of-town orders sent in REGISTERED LETTERS, and inclosing $5, will secure one of these bonds for the next drawing.

For orders, circulars, or any other information, address,

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,
150 Broadway, New York City.
Established in 1874.

N. B.—In writing, please state that you saw this in the English FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

☞ The above Government Bonds are not to be compared with any Lottery whatsoever, and do not conflict with any of the laws of the United States.

KEEP'S SHIRTS
ARE THE VERY BEST.

KEEP'S PATENT PARTLY-MADE SHIRTS, only plain seams to finish, 6 for $7.

KEEP'S CUSTOM SHIRTS, very best, MADE TO MEASURE, 6 for $10. Fit guaranteed.

An elegant set of extra heavy gold-plated Buttons presented to purchasers of six shirts.

KEEP'S KID GLOVES (FOR GENTS).
The very best, plain or embroidered, $1.10 per pair.

KEEP'S UMBRELLAS.
BEST GINGHAM, Patent Protected Ribs, $1 each. Warranted. Fifty per cent. stronger than any other umbrella. REGINA and TWILLED SILK UMBRELLAS.

KEEP'S UNDERWEAR.
Flannel and Knit Shirts and Drawers in White, Scarlet, and Fancy Styles, from 60c. to $2.50 each.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES
In Gents' Silk, Linen and Cambric Handkerchiefs. Scarfs in elegant designs and effects.

Shirts only delivered free.

Merchants will be furnished with Trade Circulars on application, as we furnish the trade on the most favorable terms.

Samples and Circulars mailed free.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY
631, 633, 635 & 637 Broadway, New York.

HENDERSON'S
Combined Catalogue of
SEEDS AND PLANTS
Sent free to all who apply by letter.
Peter Henderson & Co.,
35 Cortlandt Street, New York.

TAPE-WORM
INFALLIBLY CURED with two spoons of medicine in 2-3 hours. For particulars, address, with stamp,
H. KICKHORN, 4 St. Mark's Place, New York.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF By sending 35 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

Imitation Gold Watches.
$5, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 338 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3006.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 233 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

RELIABLE.  DYKES' BEARD ELIXIR etc. and will do it or the money back. Have thousands of testimonials. Many have in 20 days grown nice BEARDS, LARGE HEAVY MOUSTACHES AND HEADS. Lasting effect. Don't be deceived by Pomades, Restorers, Dyes, Stains, &c. Sent by mail, sealed, from observation, for $1.00. Circulars free. Address DYKES & CO., 206 N. 9th, Philadelphia, Pa.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & CO., 180 W. 4th St., Cincinnati, O.

15 gilt-edge, chromo, snowflake, glass, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING CO., Fair Haven, Ct.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. DORMAN, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

$2 WATCHES, Cheapest in the known world. Agents wanted. Address COULTER & CO., Chicago.

ELEGANT AUTOGRAPH ALBUM, bound in Gilt, 48 pages, Engraved in Colors, and 54 select Quotations for name, 15c. 12 Photograph Cards, name and photo on, 50c. Send photograph. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

NIGHT Scenes, 5 for 25 cts. Sent by mail, sealed. GILBERT & CO., North Chatham, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS! READ THIS! We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. We mean what we say. Sample Free. Address SHERMAN & CO., Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS WANTED Everywhere, to sell the Best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. Will knit a pair of Stockings, with heel and toe complete, in 20 Minutes. Will also knit a great variety of fancy articles, for which there is always a ready market. Send for Circular and Terms to The Twombly Knitting Machine Co., 400 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY
in a legitimate business within 60 days, where small capital is required, and investment can be redeemed at any time, send for information to
H. M. LEE & CO., 25 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS WANTED To sell the best and fastest-selling Books and Bibles. Low prices, excellent terms, exclusive territory. Address BRADLEY, GARRETSON & CO., 66 N. 4th St., Phila., Pa.

WE WANT A FEW MORE SALESMEN To Sell to Dealers; Samples free. CIGARS! Send 3c. stamp to insure answer. S. FOSTER & CO., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich

WANTED—Salesman—for each State. Salary $75 to $100 and expenses. Goods sold by sample. LA BELLE MANF'G Co., Chicago, Ill

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$250 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

ENORMOUS INCOME and free outfit to Agents. Apply at once. JENKINS' NURSERIES, Winona, O.

IT PAYS to sell our Rubber Hand Printing Stamps. Circulars free. G. A. HARPER & BRO. Cleveland, O.

Frank Leslie's
POPULAR MONTHLY.

128 PAGES QUARTO. OVER 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Published on the 15th of each month. Price 35 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE SPRING FASHIONS
JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.

Frank Leslie's
LADY'S JOURNAL.
THE
Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal
IN THE COUNTRY.

The Spring Fashions just received from Paris.

COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY,
EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.

ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive Short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. Its art and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

DE VENOGE & CIE. CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOCE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

YOUNG MEN And Older People—We send on 30 DAYS' TRIAL our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Trusses, and other appliances, to those suffering from Nervousness, Nervous Debility, Weaknesses, or Lost Vitality, from any cause; or to those afflicted with Rheumatism, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Liver or Kidney Troubles, &c., or Ruptures. Speedy Cure Guaranteed. Send at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

NEW FLORAL AUTOGRAPH ALBUM. Illustrated with Birds, Scrolls, Ferns, Flowers, etc. (48 pages), covers and edges elegantly gilded; also 42 select quotations—all for 15c., postpaid. (Stamps taken). Agents wanted. Address, G. W. BOCKEKEZER, West Haven, Conn.

Photos of Actresses 6 for 25c. Special subjects, 3 for 25c. Catalogue of Photos and Books, 3c. FRANK D. TOUSEY, 238 State St., Chicago.

20 New Style Chromo Cards, 10 cts. Best ever sold. Stamps taken. J. B. HUSTED, Nassau, N.Y.

SECRET HOW to become Rich and Watch sent free. FELTON & CO., Agents, New York.

BOYS! A splendid illustrated story paper one year for 35 cents. CLIPPER CO., 124 Clark St., Chicago.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc., with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

20 Lovely Rosebud Chromo Cards, or 20 all Motto, with name, 10c. NASSAU CARD CO., Nassau, N. Y.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

50 Pinafore, Chromo, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 80 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

Digitized by Google

FAMILIAR SCENES IN NEW YORK CITY BEFORE AND AFTER THE ADOPTION OF RULES "250" AND "451" BY THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL

Statement

—OF THE—

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE Insurance Company

—OF—

HARTFORD, CONN.

NET ASSETS, January 1, 1879	$46,225,182.44
RECEIVED IN 1879.
For Premiums $5,750,441.57
For Interest and Rents, 3,203,848.99
	8,954,290.56
	$55,179,473.10

DISBURSED IN 1879

To POLICY-HOLDERS:
For claims by death and matured endowments $3,745,265.54
Surplus returned to Policy-holders, 1,885,264.97
Lapsed and surrendered Policies, 1,506,455.88
TOTAL TO POLICY-HOLDERS	$7,136,986.39
EXPENSES:
Commissions to Agents $308,145.89
Salaries of Officers, Clerks, and all others employed on salary 97,574.29
Medical Examiners' fees 12,844.25
Printing, Stationery, Advertising, Postage, Exchange, etc 164,946.82
Profit and Loss 2,495.50
	$586,708.45
TAXES	340,533.89
	$8,063,228.73
BALANCE NET ASSETS, Dec. 31, 1879	$47,116,244.37

SCHEDULE OF ASSETS:

Loans upon Real Estate, first lien		$22,237,403.37
Loans upon Stocks and Bonds		27,853.28
Premium notes on Policies in force		4,108,717.91
Cost of Real Estate owned by the Comp'y		11,099,472.47
Cost of United States Registered Bonds		4,620,685.14
Cost of State Bonds		619,000.00
Cost of City Bonds		2,326,480.00
Cost of other Bonds		560,000.00
Cost of Bank Stock		91,683.00
Cost of Railroad Stock		26,000.00
Cash in bank at interest		1,418,332.03
Balance due from agents, secured		52,882.71
Bills receivable, and Judgment		13,806.46
		$47,116,244.37
ADD:
Interest due and accrued	$1,453,488.52
Rents accrued	16,179.05
Market value of stocks and bonds over cost	163,992.86
Net premiums in course of collection	None
Net deferred quarterly and semi-annual premiums	20,939.68
		$1,654,600.11
GROSS ASSETS, December 31st, 1		$48,792,334.48
LIABILITIES:
Amount required to re-insure all outstanding policies, net, assuming 4 per cent. interest	$44,674,325.00
All other liabilities	1,277,257.06
		45,951,582.06
SURPLUS by Conn. Standard		$2,840,752.42
SURPLUS by N. Y. Standard, about		6,800,000.00
Ratio of expense of management to receipts in 1879		6.54 per cent.
Policies in force, Dec. 31st, 1879, 64,504 insuring		$164,185,123.00

JACOB L. GREENE, President.
JOHN M. TAYLOR, Secretary.
D. H. WELLS, Ass't Sec'y.

RICH DRESS GOODS

A SUPERB COLLECTION of IMPORTED and DOMESTIC

Spring and Summer Fabrics

REPRESENTING ALL the CHOICEST MANUFACTURES of Europe and America,

INCLUDING BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS in SILK and WOOL COMBINATIONS, ALL-WOOL MATERIAL, in PLAIN and FANCY COLORINGS, etc.,

At Attractive Prices.

A. T. Stewart & Co.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

THE
Union Mutual Life Ins. Co.

JOHN E. DE WITT, President.

HOME OFFICE, Augusta, Maine.
DIRECTORS' OFFICE—145 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Commenced Business in 1849.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. H. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N. Y.

CRYSTAL ROLLING-PINS.

ALWAYS Sweet & Clean Dough will not stick to it.

CAN BE Filled with Ice Making delicious pastry.

[Patented Oct. 21st, 1879.]

For sale by all First-class Grocers and Kitchen Furnishers.

General Agency, 8 CENTRAL WHARF, Boston, Mass.

A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $2.00.

ABSOLUTELY CURES Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,

DETROIT, MICH.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. The cheapest, largest and best book of the kind ever published. Agents wanted who can devote all their time to canvassing for this work. For circulars, terms and territory, address the publishers. BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, March 13, 7 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER.....Saturday, March 20, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, March 25, 3 P.M.
CITY OF BERLIN.....Saturday, April 3, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, April 8, 3 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $60, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 31 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Cabinet Organs, 13 Stops, 2 Set Golden Tongue Reeds, 2 Oct's Sub Bass, Walnut Case, warr't 6 years, Stool & Book, $90. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $143 to $325. Before you buy learn to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price list. CHAS. W. COPELAND, Sole Manufacturer, Boston, Mass.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 12 larger sizes For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

"THE MAGIC of A FACE,"

A STORY OF SUNNY MEXICO,

By NUGENT ROBINSON.

"A STRANGE GUEST,"

By the Author of "GUILTY WITHOUT CRIME"

The opening chapters of these highly attractive serial novels will appear in No. 774 of

FRANK LESLIE'S CHIMNEY CORNER,

Issued MONDAY, MARCH 15th.

THERMOMETERS,

Spectacles, Eye Glasses, Field Glasses, Opera Glasses, Microscopes, Barometers, Compasses, at greatly reduced prices. R. & J. BECK, 1016 Chestnut St., Phila. Send 3 stamps for Illustrated Catalogue of 140 pages, and mention this paper.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Ehelano, assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,278.—Vol. L. NEW YORK, MARCH 27, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly. $2.00 Weekly $2.00.

A BIT OF ADVICE.

COLUMBIA—"Now, see here, my lads! what's the use of quarreling? neither one of you can do without the other. Suppose you try a little consideration for one another; you would be surprised at the effect."

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, MARCH 27, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

J. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS.

THE Supreme Court of the United States has just pronounced two decisions on the Federal Election Laws which have for their effect to determine judicially the constitutionality of so much of the recent legislation of Congress as undertakes to regulate the election of members of the House of Representatives. It will be remembered that the Constitution declares that "the time, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

It will thus be seen that the constitutional power of Congress is plenary and paramount in the premises, with the single exception here indicated. The purport of the Constitution was so understood at the date of its ratification by the States, and the fact of the plenitude and supremacy of the power thus vested in the Federal over the State Legislatures, quoad hoc, was made a ground of strenuous opposition to the adoption of the instrument in many of the Conventions held by the States on the question of its ratification.

Partly, it may be, out of respect for the sensibilities excited by this clause, and partly from the absence of any necessity calling for Federal intervention under this head, the Congress of the United States never proceeded to exercise the paramount power vested in it over the election of Representatives until the years 1870 and 1871, when it enacted the laws comprised in the Revised Statutes from Section 5,511 to Section 5,523.

The constitutionality of these laws has been frequently impeached, notably by the Democratic majority in the present Congress, when, at the late extra session, it joined an imprudent issue with the Executive on the question of voting an appropriation for the payment of the deputy marshals charged, in part, with their enforcement. It is, therefore, a matter of much political, as well as judicial, interest that the questions raised on this point should have been brought to the final umpirage of the Federal judiciary.

The question arose in two separate cases, the first, that of certain judges of election in Baltimore in 1878, who were convicted in the United States Circuit Court for the Maryland District, of interfering with the Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals of the United States, while the latter were engaged in the performance of their duties at an election for Representatives held in Maryland on the 5th of November, 1878. The parties inculpated appealed to the Supreme Court with a petition for the writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, on the ground that sections 5,515 and 5,522 of the Revised Statutes, under which they were convicted, are unconstitutional and void.

The second case arose on a petition of one Clarke, an election judge in Cincinnati, appointed as such under the laws of Ohio, and who acted as such at the Congressional election held in that State on the 9th of October, 1878. Indicted, tried and convicted under Section 5,515 of the Revised Statutes for an official misdemeanor, in that, contrary to the laws of Ohio, he did not convey the ballot-box to the County Clerk after it had been sealed up and delivered to him, and that he allowed it to be broken open, Clarke appealed to the Supreme Court on the ground that the clause under which he was convicted is unconstitutional.

The gist of the legislation, passed under review by the Supreme Court and pronounced constitutional, is comprised in Sections 5,515 and 5,522 of the Revised Statutes. The first of these sections imposes a penalty on any officer of election, whether appointed by State, Territorial or Federal authority, who, at any election for Representatives, "neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election required of him by any law of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or who violates any duty so imposed." Section 5,522 denounces the penalty of fine and imprisonment against any person who hinders or resists the marshal and deputy-marshals of the United States in the performance of their duties at elections.

That the Congress has power to regulate the "manner" of holding elections for Representatives is plain from the text of the Constitution, but it was gravely questioned whether, without taking full and exclusive jurisdiction in the premises, it could adopt the State laws, or parts of State laws, under this head, in such a way as to make them Federal laws for the "time, places and manner" of such elections. The Supreme Court hold that, under the peculiar terms of the Constitution on this subject, it is not necessary that Congress should assume entire and exclusive control of the elections for Representatives, but may simply exercise, if it so pleases, a merely supervisory power, and, to this end, it may "add to, alter or modify the regulations made by the State," without providing an entirely separate set of Federal regulations. And it is held that no conflict of laws can ensue on this ground, because the authority of Congress, so far as it takes jurisdiction, whether it be more or less, must be recognized as supreme over and beyond that of the States.

Whatever inconvenience may attach to this superposition of Federal duties upon those enjoined by the States, it seems plain to us that the text of the Constitution recognizes its admissibility. The laws of the United States, if passed in pursuance of the Constitution, are the supreme law of the land, and apply to individuals throughout the Union. An officer appointed by the State to be a judge of elections is also, under Acts of Congress, now pronounced constitutional, an officer of the United States so far forth as relates to the election of Representatives, and it is his duty to take cognizance of the statutes prescribed by the United States for his government in the matter of such elections. And the reason of the law resides in the fact that all the people of the United States are interested in the integrity and purity of the elections held in each and every Congressional district for the choice of a Representative who shall assist in making laws for the whole people. The dishonest election of a Representative in Maine or Louisiana is a wrong not only to the people of Maine or Louisiana, but of the whole United States. Hence the Federal jurisdiction lodged by the Constitution in Congress under this head. Under this jurisdiction Congress has legislated, and the Supreme Court has now affirmed the validity of its legislation, with two dissenting Justices—Judges Field and Clifford.

Now that the constitutionality of the statutes on this point has been authoritatively settled, it is to be hoped that the Democratic majority in the present Congress will no longer demur to the suggestion of President Hayes when he invited them to amend these laws instead of seeking to repeal or nullify them, and when he pledged his co-operation in any effort to cure the "inequality" and "oppression" which they are charged with working in their present shape and under their present administration, so far, at least, as relates to the deputy-marshals, who, as at present appointed, are all of a single party, and who have often worked rather for the success of their party than for the purity of elections. The Democrats have urged that they could not conscientiously amend these laws because they did not admit the constitutionality of such legislation; but, in the face of the decision now rendered by the Supreme Judiciary, they are absolved from such scruples, and can help the country in securing what it desiderates in all Federal elections—an honest election, conducted under the supervision of officers so appointed and so constituted as to insure the popular faith in its honesty by excluding all ground for the mere suspicion of fraud and collusion.

PRESIDENT HAYES AND THE INTER-OCEANIC CANAL.

WHY mix up the Monroe Doctrine with the construction of an inter-oceanic canal across the Isthmus? That the United States should be jealous of any interference by Great Britain, Germany, France or Spain in the affairs of this continent was to have been expected from our geographical position. But the building of this great canal is not a local matter, for it affects the trade of the whole world, the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa, as well as the Western Hemisphere. Its successful completion will require the monetary assistance of the capitalists of France, England and Germany as well as those of the United States; and it does not become our dignity as a nation for President Hayes and Congress to call up the spectre of the Monroe Doctrine to alarm the bankers of the world and so impede a work of the most vital importance to the human race.

It is inevitable that, when constructed, this canal will naturally fall under the control of the United States. We are near at hand, while Europe is remote. We would have a hundred opportunities of profiting by its construction where any other nation has one. It will affect vitally not only our relations with Asia and Europe, but will mark an era in our coastwise trade on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It is a matter of common notoriety that our commerce with the west coast of South America is seriously impeded by the exactions of the Panama Railroad. The people of South America want our agricultural implements, carriages, carts and other bulky manufactured articles, but the fares on the present routes on the Isthmus are prohibitory. There is not a market in the world with which we cannot compete with Great Britain, France and Germany in manufactured articles, and the opening of the canal will, for the first time, give us the advantage over Europe in all the markets on both sides of the Pacific Ocean. As a matter of fact, the only interest inimical to the building of the canal are the transportation lines which now have a monopoly of carrying freight and passengers between Europe and Asia over this continent. This trade is valuable no doubt to one great interest, but there are a hundred fields for American enterprise which would be stimulated into healthy activity by the completion of this new highway of nations.

The future Gibbonses and Macaulays, in relating the rise of the Great Republic, will no doubt be astonished when they come to canvass the action of President Hayes and the American Congress in 1880, in trying to put impediments in the way of the construction of a work of such grave moment to the whole human race. The Mohammedan zealots who destroyed the libraries of Alexandria, and the ambitious youth who "fired the Ephesian Dome," do not figure well in history, nor will President Hayes be the subject of laudatory comment, when our annals come to be written, for trying to discourage the mission of Count Ferdinand de Lesseps.

The time chosen for this protest is ill-chosen. We have no navy. We could not enforce the Monroe Doctrine against the feeblest power in Europe. According to Senator Bayard, all the cities on our sea-coast are at the mercy of any nation which possesses a modern ironclad. One month after a declaration of war Great Britain, France or Germany could be in possession of the principal cities on our sea-coast. We have neither ships, guns, land or floating batteries or an effective torpedo service that would insure us against attack, and to talk of our enforcing the Monroe Doctrine against combined Europe is the height of absurdity.

Let us have an end of this ad captandum rhetoric about the Monroe Doctrine in connection with this scheme for constructing a work which will render this century memorable, which will do more to bind nations together than a thousand treaties, which will stimulate commercial enterprise the world over, and which will open up the dark places of the earth to the humanizing influences of trade and civilization

WILL ENGLAND SUSTAIN THE TORIES?

WE believe it will. The advent of the Tories to power has been marked by many disasters to Great Britain. Gladstone left England with a prosperous trade and a full treasury, but the Beaconsfield administration has been marked by loss of trade, diminishing revenues and partial famine in Ireland. The petty wars in Zululand and Afghanistan have been costly without redounding to the glory of the British arms. Mistakes without number have been committed in Parliament as well as in the administration of the Government; but despite these drawbacks it seems as though the Conservatives, so-called, will add to their majority in Parliament in the coming election, simply because Beaconsfield and Salisbury are determined that Great Britain shall be respected the world over. The Gladstone administration was disposed to stand aloof from the councils of Europe; to withdraw from foreign conquests; to concentrate attention upon problems more vitally affecting the business interests of the people of Great Britain. In short, the charge was that the Liberals were tradesmen rather than statesmen. The Tories have reverted to the policy of Pitt and Palmerston. Great Britain has had her say in everything that transpires on the Continent. She asserts her power in Central Asia, in Southern Africa—wherever the British flag floats. Americans on the Isthmus and in South America, when in trouble, claim to be British subjects in order to secure that protection which England gives to all her subjects everywhere, but which the United States, owing to the weakness of her naval arm, is unable to afford. It is this determination to uphold the traditional aggressiveness of Great Britain which has given Beaconsfield his hold upon the voting population. Then the Liberals are without a coherent policy. It is a party of "leaders who will not lead" and of "followers who will not follow." Gladstone will not go to the front, and Hartington has little beyond his rank to entitle him to a leading place in the councils of his party. Therefore, unless the unexpected occurs, the English Parliament to be chosen in April will be as decidedly Tory as the one which Beaconsfield has controlled for the last six years.

SIGNS OF DANGER.

THERE are some signs in our national life which are portentous and full of warning to all who value our institutions. Prominent among such signs we may mention a growing disrespect for the Constitution—a disposition among public men to disregard the binding force of its provisions. Particularly is this true of Senators and Representatives in Congress. A departure from the strict requirements of the organic law might, perhaps, have been excusable when the Government was forced to wrestle with a gigantic rebellion. Then extraordinary measures were rendered necessary, and men thought more of preserving the unity of the nation than of the legality of the methods employed. But during the past fifteen years the alarms of war have been hushed, and we have been at peace. With North and South united, there has been no good and sufficient reason for overstepping the limits of the Constitution. "The basis of our political systems," said Washington, when retiring from public life, "is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government." So we believe, so we maintain; and yet Congress does not hesitate to assume to itself powers greater than conferred by the instrument under which alone Congress exists. What is this but contempt for the Constitution? Said Senator Carpenter, in a recent speech, "A careful observer of the tendencies of our time cannot fail to see that in every branch of our Government we are running towards the consolidation and centralization of power, and that inside of the Government the tendency is equally strong towards the centralization of power in Congress." These things cannot be without a studied and deliberate violation of the Constitution.

Another sign is to be found in the infamous devices employed to promote partisan success. Fraud and force are fast supplanting the peaceful methods devised to determine the political bias of the country. Elections, to a considerable extent, have been converted from a quiet and friendly measurement of strength between opposing opinions to a fierce struggle for control between contending and ambitious politicians. Instead of the ballot operating to execute the will of freemen, the predominance of party is made to depend upon skill in trickery and effrontery in using, without scruple, whatever pretext ingenuity can devise for securing power in spite of the majority. Do we exaggerate? Witness the public declaration made by Congressman Hill, of Ohio, only a few days ago. Addressing a crowd of partisans at Washington, he assured them that the Democracy would not only nominate their man—meaning the Presidential candidate—at Cincinnati, but that they would go still further and "inaugurate him whether he be elected or not." Coupling this outspoken declaration with the recent attempt to subvert the Government of Maine, and the fraud and force connected with the last Presidential election—an election which came near plunging the country into civil war—we are justified in claiming that volcanic signs of no ordinary character threaten the future of the country. If elections are to be won through trickery, or if candidates are to be seated through force and fraud, then the Constitution becomes a nullity, law a mockery, and liberty a meaningless phrase.

Sectional animosity constitutes another sign of danger. Although the North and South are united under one flag and Government, it requires no extraordinary penetration to discover that in no true sense are the two sections friends. The North insists that all Southern participants in the war were rebels and traitors. The South contends that her cause was just, and pronounces any opinion to the contrary a falsity. The South reaches out her arms to regain possession of the Government, and chafes to occupy her old vantage-ground. The North resists and declares that never again shall a traitorous section be intrusted with power over the destinies of the country. Thus the two sections stand, mistrusting each other, and, if the naked truth be told, hating each other as decidedly as when engaging in the shock of battle. The volcanic force is merely held in check, not destroyed.

Digitized by Google

Another volcanic sign may be discovered in the attitude assumed by our foreign-born citizens. We have given them, as it was our duty to do, a hearty welcome to our shores. We have inducted them into the privileges of citizenship, and freely opened to them the benefits of our free institutions. In return for all this we have simply asked that, renouncing all past allegiance, they should become Americans both in name and spirit. But now, having greatly increased in numbers, and feeling their strength, they enter the political field as hybrid Americans, and assume to dictate the current policy, together with the choice of rulers. Thus we have the strange spectacle of "Irish-Americans" dominating the Democratic Party, while "German-Americans" serve notice on the Republican Party that their wishes must be respected in the nomination of a Presidential candidate, or else they — the "German-Americans" — will "smash things generally." We have no comment to make other than to say that, during the Rebellion, the Irish only furnished 7.14 per cent. and the Germans 8.76 per cent. of the more than two millions of men who entered the Union armies.

The last sign of danger to which, at present, we shall call attention, is to be found in the efforts which are making to destroy our system of free education for the masses. Common schools were founded because American statesmanship discovered that the well-being of the citizen and the perpetuity of republican institutions depended on widespread intelligence. Under this system, so far as education could be made to contribute to the result, the children of the rich and poor, and of all religions, have been given an equal start in the great race of life. No selfishness or discrimination has been exercised. The privileges enjoyed by native children have been heartily extended to those of millions of immigrants from other lands. The object has been to give foreign-born children like advantages and equal chances with our own, to Americanize and fit them to become good citizens, to make them an element of strength in maintaining and perpetuating the blessings of civil and religious freedom. In short, our common schools were founded to serve as nurseries of American ideas, American freedom and American progress. Such they have been in the past, are in the present, and must remain in the future. But the hand of the destroyer has been raised, and the schools will not be kept in existence without an earnest, persistent and constant struggle.

We repeat, the signs are portentous and bode no good to the country. Let our readers, one and all, bear in mind that

"Our country's welfare is our first concern
And who promotes that best, best proves his duty."

THE COURSE OF SPECULATION. WHEAT.

SPECULATORS in leading staples of domestic products have ceased to look for any further advance in prices. The great question with them now is how they may unload without submitting to ruinous sacrifices. With the subsidence of buying for the rise, the course of values is left to the legitimate influences of supply and demand, and unless there be an acknowledged scarcity of an article, the wants of current consumption are rarely sufficient to maintain prices, especially if they have been forced up to any considerable extent by speculative action. The anxiety to sell, when the highest prices have apparently been reached, is so much greater than the needs of consumers, that any surplus of stock is certain to cause depression.

Take wheat for an example. The export demand for the past two years has been beyond all precedent. The United States have exported in the twenty-four months preceding the 1st of March, little, if any, less than three hundred million bushels of wheat! Previous to these years fifty or sixty million bushels a year was a large export. The increase in the growth of American wheat has kept pace with the demand for it. It is fortunate that this has been the case, for, with ordinary crops, we should have had famine prices at home as well as abroad. The wants of the west of Europe, where there has been great deficiencies in the crops for two seasons past, has been made the basis of a speculation in wheat almost unprecedented in magnitude, of whose far-reaching consequences we have not yet seen the end. A great deal of nonsense has been written about "conspiracies" to prevent the crop going forward. There was simply an enormous speculation, attended by the accumulation of stocks which was natural under such circumstances. In proportion to the yield and aggregate movement of the crop, the accumulation was no larger than in former years. It simply seemed relatively larger, and interested parties have employed this fact to raise and maintain clamor about it.

The visible supply of wheat, at a late date, in the principal markets of the United States and Canada, amounted to twenty-eight million bushels, against twenty-one millions last March, and eight and a half millions two years ago. We are now within twenty weeks of liberal supplies of new wheat. If, therefore, we should begin now and reduce stocks at the rate of a million bushels per week, there would still be in stock, at the beginning of the next crop year, the large quantity of eight million bushels. Receipts at the six principal markets of the West have, for some time past, averaged about a million bushels per week, and nearly half that quantity reached the seaboard from the smaller towns, where the movement does not enter into the record. It is apparent, therefore, that the large quantity of two and a half million bushels per week must be marketed for some time to come in order to effect the needed reduction of stocks, preparatory to the reception of the next crop.

The west of Europe is still in need of large supplies, and for many months to come must be a large buyer of American wheat. But her prospects for the next crop are very fair, and her buyers are quick to discover the dilemma in which our speculators are caught. Europe took last Autumn, for several weeks in succession, nearly one million bushels a business day, and, of course, could take two million bushels a week now without any great effort. But will she do it? Much depends upon crop prospects. At any rate, the position of holders, though sufficiently precarious, is not so desperate as comparative statistics would lead one to believe. The progress of the struggle between the Bulls and Bears will be watched with much interest, and its final result will, no doubt, be largely influenced by the weather for the next few months. "Old Probabilities" will have something to say in the matter. If there shall be a bad sowing season for Spring wheat in the Northwest, or the crop of Winter wheat shall be found to be Winter killed to any extent, the Bears may be compelled to cover their "shorts" under very adverse circumstances, and thus suffer severe losses; while, with crop prospects uniformly favorable, a decline can scarcely be avoided.

THE DEATH OF A GOOD IDEA.

IDEAS can be stabbed as well as people. There are people who deliberately kill ideas, others who smother them with the sandbags of stupidity, others who garrote them, and others who drown them by attempting to carry water on both shoulders. One of the buckets tips over, and the poor idea is swamped.

Now, one would fear that, either by mistake or intent, Miss Kate Field had killed an excellent idea. The Ladies' Dress Association, as she presented it, was an admirable and a noble idea. The object, as stated in the prospectus, was to establish a co-operative store where dress goods, millinery and a full assortment of ladies' and children's wear would be kept, the custom to be confined to the shareholders, one share granting the privilege to a whole family. Lunch, reading, writing and dressing rooms were to be provided. While the Association was philanthropic in the highest degree, it was again so practical and so sensible, that the business man who ran could read ten per cent. between the lines. It had every virtue, including that of success.

And she took the right road to achieve the most thorough, lasting, and honorable success. She called the best women in New York to her aid. They were fascinated, convinced. Here was the great desideratum, the sine qua non, the ultima thule, the solution of the riddle. A board of trustees of the highest respectability was to be invoked. Such names as Morris K. Jesup, William E. Dodge, Jr., Henry E. Pellew, George William Curtis and John J. Cisco floated in the air. Mr. Abram S. Hewitt was to be entreated to give his aid, the books were to be open for weekly inspection, there was to be "honor bright" inscribed on every bill-head—when, lo! it comes out at the eleventh hour that Miss Field has chosen her own trustees; that it is, in fact, a close corporation of herself and Mr. G. Scott, and no shareholder is to have any power for one year.

Of course, every one feels that the co-operative idea has been killed, or at least stunned, for a long time. The soul of such an idea is perfect trust and confidence. The public must know at once, and always, that it is being fairly served; that the whole public took a lively interest in the subject, that it is a very much needed reform, that it is a great desideratum to have shops where ladies could have retiring-rooms and a lunch—a place where the weary wanderer from Orange or Morrisania could leave her satchel. All this is evident. If Miss Field had told the ladies and gentlemen who flocked to hear her that she and Mr. Scott had their company formed, it would have been well; but to reserve that revelation after four or five meetings, at which organization had been discussed, most surely killed an excellent idea.

Honesty is the best policy.

IT is said that an attempt will be made to secure the pardon of the Pennsylvania lobbyists who have been convicted of attempting to buy the votes of legislators in connection with the Pittsburg Riot Bill. It is to be hoped, in the interest of public morality, that the Court of Pardons will prove firm enough to resist the application in behalf of men who are only deserving of execration.

THE supporters of General Fitz-John Porter in the United States Senate apparently imagine that he can be most effectively defended by assailing the character of other army officers who have testified against him as to his conduct at the second Bull Run battle. All the speeches so far made in his behalf have bristled with aspersions of the motives and insinuations against the military capacity of Generals Pope, McDowell, and others. The country will be apt to agree with Senator Conkling that "to seek in this connection for blameless men on whom to throw filth, is not only unjust, but possibly not likely to help Porter."

MR. PARNELL, obedient to a call from his constituents, has suspended his work in this country and sailed for home, in order to take part in the Parliamentary elections. He gives it as his opinion that there will be a gain of from twelve to twenty Land League Home Rulers as one result of the general election. As to the financial results of his mission to this country, he says that the sum of $200,000 has been collected, of which $120,000 has already reached Ireland. The sum collected by him for political purposes is from $20,000 to $25,000. He announces that he will return to the United States and "take up his very important work" at the point where he was compelled, by the summons from home, to suspend it.

THE present year promises to be marked by an unusual influx of immigrants to our shores. London dispatches report that since Spring set in multitudes of people from the farming districts of England and Ireland have been flocking into Queenstown to take passage for America, and the Superintendent of Castle Garden, referring to the same subject, says that, whereas in February of last year only 2,750 immigrants arrived here, the number arriving in the month just closed was 8,000. He adds: "This is the largest number recorded for the month of February since 1869. The famine in Ireland and the revival of trade in the United States are the causes of this increased emigration, and there will be but little abatement until the condition of affairs in Ireland changes for the better."

THE result of the Spring elections in Maine is generally accepted as a rebuke of the recent Democratic attempt to seize the State Government by fraud and violence. In nearly every city and town the Republicans make large gains, while the Greenback vote shows a heavy decline, that party carrying the day in only one or two towns. While the Greenbackers will have a ticket in the coming national contest, it is now quite certain that their strength will by no means be as formidable as it at one time seemed possible it might be. The revival of business prosperity, and the success of the financial policy of the Administration have effectually expelled from all sound minds every vestige of sympathy with the delusion that an unlimited expansion of an irredeemable currency is essential to our industrial and commercial rehabilitation.

THIS time it is the trade dollars which are to go, the House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures having determined to report favorably a Bill providing for the exchange of trade dollars for legal tender silver dollars. The Bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be exchanged at the Treasury and at all sub-treasuries of the United States legal tender silver dollars for trade dollars at par, and shall recoin such trade dollars as now provided by law. It is also provided that the coinage of trade dollars shall cease. The Bill prohibits the coinage of trade dollars into dollars of 412½ grains from interfering with the minimum of silver coinage now authorized by law. It would be much more commendable for the Committee to report, and Congress to pass, a Bill giving the country an honest dollar, one having a purchasing power equal to one hundred cents.

THE Grant movement is not gaining, but rather declining, in strength. Its main element of strength at the outset was in its spontaneous character — in the belief that "the people wanted him." But it very soon became evident that "the people" were not to be permitted to say what they wanted, but that shrewd and intriguing "machine" managers proposed to manipulate conventions in the Grant interest, without reference to the popular will; and the disclosure of this fact has very generally chilled the movement to force his nomination at Chicago. The application of the gag rule in the Pennsylvania and New York Conventions showed conclusively that Cameron and Conkling feared to trust the people to select delegates to the National Convention by the usual methods. But the very means used to secure a unit vote for the ex-President are quite certain now to produce a counter result. There is scarcely any room for doubt that there will be many delegates, both from Pennsylvania and New York, who will refuse to obey "machine" dictation, and a break in the delegations of these States will result inevitably in a panic and defeat all along the Grant lines. Whether that outcome will be followed by the nomination of Washburne, or some other new man, time only can determine.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

FIVE women have been elected members of the Middletown (N. Y.) Board of Education on the Democratic ticket.

THE Senate of Virginia has refused to pass the Riddleberger Debt Bill over the veto of the Governor—yeas, 19; nays, 16; not the necessary two-thirds.

THE Senate has passed the Bill so amending the laws regarding smuggling as to prevent the forfeiture of a vessel when neither officer nor owner is privy to the offense.

THE jury in the Lewis will conspiracy case at Trenton, N. J., have returned a verdict of guilty as to all of the conspirators, but recommending Bradford to the mercy of the Court.

THE Citizens' Protective Union of San Francisco has issued a manifesto stating the purposes of the organization to be the restoration of law and order and the protection of life and property.

A HOWITZER, a box of muskets, and field ammunition were shipped by steamer, March 12th, to Lancaster County by the Virginia authorities, to protect the oystermen of the lower Rappahannock against foreign dredgers.

P. A. SAWYER, recently Deputy Secretary of State, has refused to testify before the Maine Legislative Committee on the State seal, and was remanded to custody until the further orders of the House or until he shall purge himself of contempt.

THE Senate Finance Committee has agreed to a Bill to admit classical antiquities into the country free of duty. It is understood that one of the special purposes of this action is to provide for the free admission of the Egyptian obelisk now on its way to this country.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Charleston News and Courier says information has been received through private sources in Egypt which reveals the secret of who is to bear the expense of the removal of the Alexandrian obelisk to New York. The work was undertaken at the instance of Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, who is to pay $75,000 on its successful completion.

AT a meeting of the directors of the Musical Festival Association of Cincinnati on March 10th, the resignation of George Ward Nichols, president, was accepted, also of Directors J. Burnet, Jr., and Peter Rudolph Neff. The plan to retain Mr. Thomas at the head of the college by buying a controlling interest of the stock has been abandoned. He has entirely severed his connection with the College of Music, though he will conduct the May festival.

ORDERS have been issued to move all the available troops on the Pacific Coast to such places that they can be used in case the California authorities prove unable to cope with any outbreak that may occur in San Francisco. General McDowell has been ordered to send his available troops to San Francisco. The arms of the Second Regiment of the National Guard there have been placed under guard to prevent seizure in event of an uprising among the workingmen.

Foreign.

A DECREE has been issued at Madrid prohibiting the importation of pork from the United States and Germany.

IT is reported that Chung How, late Ambassador to Russia, who negotiated the Kuldja treaty with that Government, has been beheaded, and that a revolt has broken out in Pekin.

THE Guion line steamship Montana went ashore on the rocks at Churchtown Bay, near Waterford Harbor, on the Irish coast, on March 13th, and is expected to become a total wreck.

THE hearing of argument on the writ of error in the case of the Tichborne claimant has been formally fixed for the 23d instant, but is not expected to come on until the third week after Easter.

IN the Dominion House of Commons on March 9th, the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech. The Dominion Government will propose an increase of notes from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000.

THE Russian Minister of the Interior has appointed a commission to inquire into the relative proportions of the grain trade of Russia and the United States, and also as to the best means of competing with the latter.

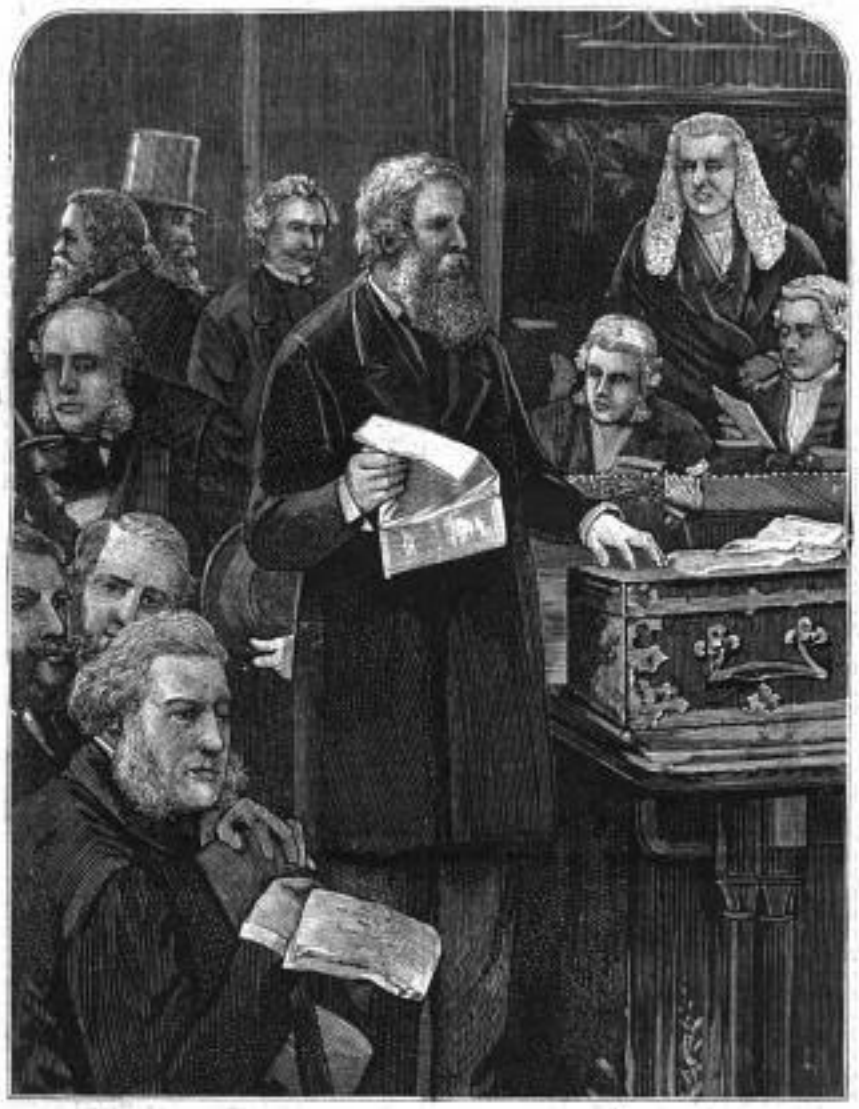
THE Dublin Mansion House Committee says it has great reason to fear that the destitution is likely to increase. The experiences of former famines have shown that the time of the worst trial is usually in the months of May, June, July and a part of August.

A DISPATCH from Athens says a detachment of Turkish troops has landed at Salonica do pursue the brigands who captured Colonel Synge and his wife while on their way from Constantinople to Eastern Roumelia for the purpose of distributing relief among the Montenegrin refugees.

THE report of the Committee of the Spanish Chamber of Deputies on the Cuban Budget estimates the expenditure at $34,000,000, and proposes measures for balancing that amount. Power is reserved for increasing the total amount of the budget to $42,000,000 in case of necessity.

ON Monday, March 8th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the House of Commons that the Queen was advised to dissolve Parliament at Easter. Lord Beaconsfield made the same announcement in the House of Lords, and the new Parliament, the Chancellor said, would meet at the beginning of May.

IT is understood that the British Royal Commission on Agricultural Depression have unanimously approved the principle of a scheme for the purchase by the Government, out of the Irish Church surplus fund, of Irish waste lands, which are to be allocated among local farmers on certain conditions of tenure and improvement.



PRIVATE advices from Peru announce that Señor Quimper, Minister of Finance, has been imprisoned, and that his property has been confiscated, on account of a contract negotiated by him with the Credit Industriel of Paris recently, which the Peruvian Government repudiated. The property of Señor Rosas, one of the commissioners who negotiated the contract, has also been sequestrated.

ON March 9th the French Senate, by a vote of 148 to 129, rejected clause seven of M. Jules Ferry's Education Bill. During the debate, M. de Freycinet, President of the Council, declared that if the clause referred to should be rejected, the Executive would be obliged to enforce against the Jesuits much harsher laws which already existed. Senator Dufaure (Republican) opposed the clause, and described the Bill as despotic and calculated to humiliate religion and violate liberty.

A DISPATCH from Cabul says in effect that advices from two different sources state that Mahomed Jan and Mir Baicha, the chief of the Kohistani insurgents, have agreed to follow the advice of an ex-Finance Minister, who was recently sent by General Roberts with letters to the malcontent leaders, telling them that the British Government was disposed to accept as a ruler for Cabul any Sirdar... with certain exceptions — whom the assembled nation might choose, and inviting them to discuss the matter at the capital of their country.

Digitized by Google

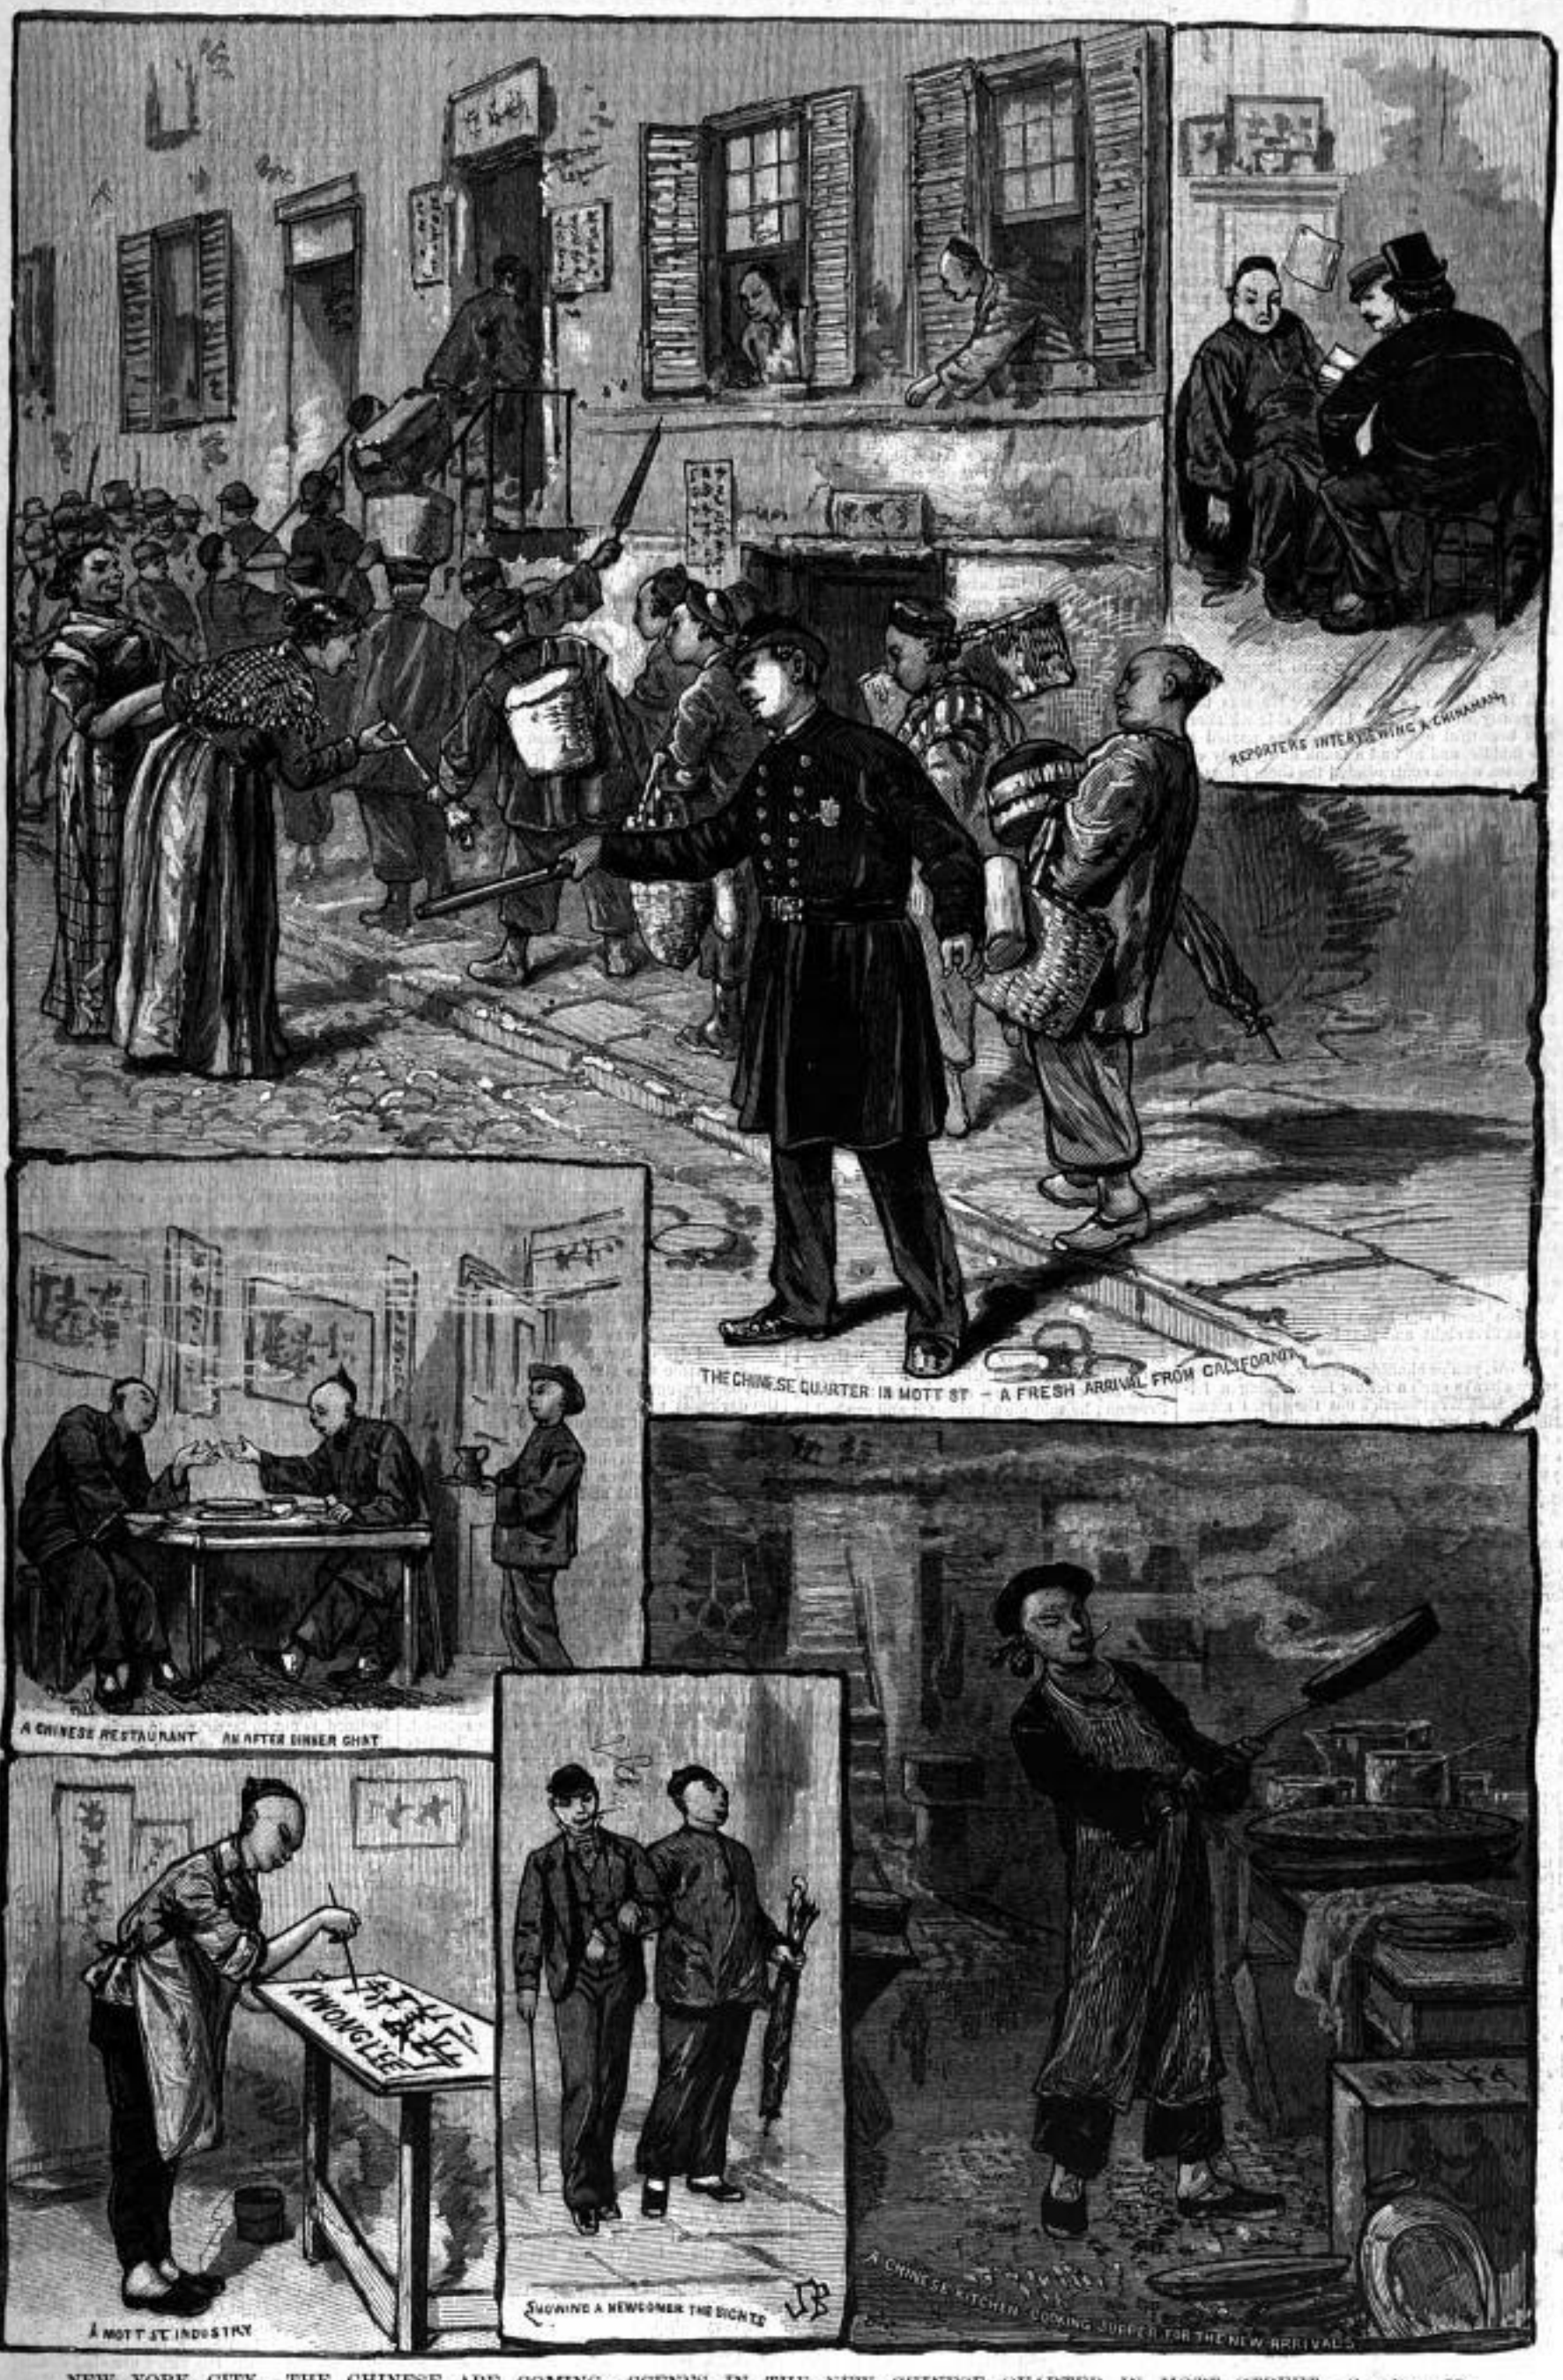
The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 55.

ENGLAND.—THE CHANCELLOR ANNOUNCING THE DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

RUSSIA.—THE CZAR'S WINTER PALACE, ST. PETERSBURG.

RUSSIA.—ATTENDANTS AT THE IMPERIAL DINNER-TABLE.

PERU.—THE INSURGENT BATTALION REPULSING THE ATTACK OF THE REGULARS AT LIMA.



ITALY.—THE OSTRICH PROCESSION IN THE CARNIVAL AT NAPLES.

RUSSIA.—THE ATTEMPT ON THE CZAR'S LIFE—A "TE DEUM" IN THE IMPERIAL CHAPEL AT THE WINTER PALACE.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—THE CHINESE ARE COMING—SCENES IN THE NEW CHINESE QUARTER IN MOTT STREET.—SEE PAGE 55.

Digitized by Google

HUNTING A MILLION.

By J. ESTEN COOKE.

CHAPTER I.

MISS STEENIE WENTWORTH was seated one evening in the ballroom at the Virginia Springs, watching the German then in progress, when a gentleman was presented to her.

She was a very attractive person, and a French admirer, during her travels in Europe, had called her a "ravishing blonde." Her eyes were blue; her complexion half-pink and half-cream—the exact tint of the tea-rose; and as to her toilet, that was exquisite and beyond all criticism. She had just arrived, in company with her aunt, brother and cousin, and her appearance caused a wild sensation; for Miss Steenie Wentworth was worth a million—the fact had been ascertained. She had inherited that amount from her parents, and had, besides, great expectations from an old bachelor uncle. This gentleman had amassed several millions by stock operations, and, if his valuable life was spared, would probably amass as many more. He cared for no one on earth besides his favorite Miss Steenie, and unless he decided to build a public institute, which seemed improbable, it was very nearly certain that the young lady would fall sole heiress to his millions. This was very exciting. The gilded youths who make it their business to discover things, had discovered the fact. A number were ranged about Miss Steenie in the ballroom, when the gentleman above alluded to was presented to her.

He was so very handsome that Miss Steenie Wentworth looked at him with interest. In fact, Mr. Stanley Bedford, attaché of the English Legation, was an Adonis. He was tall, elegantly dressed, had brown side-whiskers and beautiful eyes. His hair was parted in the middle, and he had a frank and manly expression which contradicted the theory that he was a fop. When, after a while, he solicited the favor of a promenade on the moonlit portico, Miss Wentworth smiled amiably, placed a small hand, in a sixteen-button glove, on his arm, and they glided away, followed moodily by the eyes of the gilded youth who were distanced.

There is not much to be said in a first interview. Mr. Bedford did not talk a great deal. His manner was devoted, but not too much so. When, towards midnight, he escorted Miss Wentworth to her cottage in the grounds, he took his leave with a bow which was so very graceful that a smile rewarded him; he had evidently made a favorable impression.

He returned to the hotel portico, where a friend was awaiting him. This friend was a man of about thirty, with a bronzed complexion—Captain Morley of the Queen's Invincibles, who had served in India, and was enjoying a brief furlough in the States.

"Well, Bedford, you've found your million at last," said Captain Morley, who was smoking a cigar. He was a very composed personage; he might be smiling a little, but his heavy black mustache concealed it. "What do you think of her?"

"She's a stunner, Morley?" Mr. Bedford said, "but, don't you know, she don't seem—well, impressible?"

"You mean she hasn't fallen in love with you at first sight, and that the fact is surprising."

"Now, you're chaffing a fellow, Morley. You were always such a fellow for chaffing a fellow! Miss Wentworth's not the sort, I mean, that have a way of looking at you when they are talking to you, as if—well, the harpstring sort, you know—respond at the least touch, you know."

"I think I understand. She's too quiet."

"Not that exactly—wants electricity, eh?"

"Well, try the cousin, Miss Despard. I made her acquaintance, and she's a—torpedo."

"But, then, she might explode, Morley."

"There is always the risk. But you'll try for Miss Wentworth, I suppose?"

"I will."

"And I'll help you."

"I knew you would. My motto's 'Victory or a crusher,' Morley."

At the very same moment a conversation was taking place between two young ladies in one of the foliage-embowered cottages. One of them, Miss Steenie Wentworth, was standing before her mirror, slowly passing a comb through a waving mass of brown-golden hair, which fell upon her shoulders. The other, Miss Nettie Despard, black-haired, with sparkling eyes, was seated in a rocking-chair, and laughing. Miss Nettie was a "poor cousin," but Miss Steenie gave up to her in everything. If either was the subordinate, it was not the penniless cousin, but the young heiress.

"So you like Apollo. I think him rather insipid," said Miss Nettie.

"He is not insipid, he is very agreeable," said Miss Steenie, combing her hair.

"Gracious! you don't mean to say he's intellectual?"

"Well"—the word was uttered with the rising inflection, "but he certainly is a perfect gentleman, and you will acknowledge he is handsome."

Miss Steenie threw back her head and passed her fingers through the brown-gold mass—it was a very pretty gesture.

"Mark my words—that man will address you!" exclaimed Miss Nettie Despard.

"Do you think so?" her friend said, pensively.

"I know he will! He is one of those foreigners who are always looking for pretty heiresses. You are both, and——"

"You are a goose, Nettie! I'm not pretty—pretty means a wicked-looking somebody like you."

"Very much obliged, miss, but no tricks. I say the elegant Mr. Bedford is in search of a Mrs. B., and has made up his mind that you'll suit him. You know he has."

"How can I know it? He has certainly not told me so," said Miss Steenie, with dove like innocence.

"That's an evasion! You know he'll ask you. Do you ever mean to marry anybody?"

"I haven't the least idea," said the owner of the brown hair. "I suppose I'll have to or die an old maid. Charley will marry—he was playing the devoted to that pretty little Miss Preston to-night—and when he's married who'll take care of me?"

"Mr. B. will, miss."

Miss Steenie smiled serenely and said:

"Well, goosey, suppose you marry the other one, though he seems rather dull."

"Dull! Captain Morley? He's delightful! and such eyes! They're not sweet dove's eyes like somebody's!"

"You mean Mr. Bedford's? Very well, I'll be introduced to Captain Morley and flirt with him."

"If you do, I'll flirt with your friend!" exclaimed Miss Despard, with vivacity, "and that will make you furious."

Miss Steenie opened her lips to say "Goosey!" but a terrible yawn defeated her purpose, and, after interchanging a few additional words, the cousins retired.

* * * * * *

Having promised to assist his friend, Captain Morley made the acquaintance of Miss Steenie Wentworth, passed an hour in conversation, and went to report to Mr. Bedford. He found that gentleman just about to ride out with young Charles Wentworth—a youth of about nineteen, greatly devoted to everything English. He wore a suit of clothes exactly resembling those of his groom, said "My dear fellow" with a delightful drawl, and was cultivating side-whiskers. He and Mr. Bedford were already close friends, and he bore away that gentleman in his elegant drag. On their return, Captain Morley made his report. He had spent an hour in his reconnoissance, he said, trumpeting Mr. Bedford's perfections, and from the manner of Miss Wentworth he had no doubt the fortress would yield if attacked in force.

Mr. Bedford listened in silence and did not seem much elated. In fact, his brows were knit, and he gnawed one end of his mustache in a manner which seemed to indicate mental disturbance.

"What's the matter," said Morley.

"Well, you know, the thing's beastly!" said Mr. Bedford.

"What is beastly?"

"Playing this game to catch a girl—and a deuced fine one! I'm poor, Morley, but I'm Stanley Bedford, and I say the thing's beastly."

Morley smiled and smoked.

"What is there wrong about it?" he said, at length. "You needn't conceal the fact that you are impe pecuniæ. You are young and blooming—not a grim old foggy like Ferdinand Morley, but a youthful scion of the bluest blood——"

"No bluer than yours, Morley. You came over with—what do you call him?—the Conqueror, you know. No end of the Morley pedigree—estate entailed since the flood, you know."

"A tumble-down entail that scarcely brings a penny. But that's not the question. You're not going to fall back—you understand?"

"Yes, I am—no; I am not—I don't know what I am going to do?" Mr. Bedford sucked fiercely at his cigar and scowled. "Here I am driving out with Charley Wentworth—a good boy and spooney about that little Miss Preston; he told me all about it and gushed in a manly way—and all the time I'm a fraud, as they say in the States, and after his sister's money-bags!"

It was only after a long interview that Mr. Bedford consented not to abandon his project, to cultivate Miss Despard as a valuable friend, and not to let his nerves get the better of him. This was all that Morley could accomplish, and their talk there ended.

CHAPTER II.

IT soon became plain that Mr. Bedford and Miss Wentworth were engaged. They were together nearly the whole time, and when they were not, Mr. Bedford cultivated Miss Despard, and Captain Morley was sounding his friend's praises in the society of Miss Wentworth.

There was no doubt at all that this would be the last season at the White Sulphur of Miss Steenie Wentworth. If the "ravishing blonde" returned, it would be as Mrs. Steenie Bedford. And yet that gentleman did not seem happy. He even sulked, knitting his brows and puffing out clouds of hot cigar-smoke. "What was the matter?" Morley asked the question.

"My dear Bedford, something is on your mind," said his friend. "You are making a steamboat-funnel of your mouth, and scowling at that little feminine hop-pole yonder as if you would like to put an end to her."

"Didn't see her," said Mr. Bedford; "ugly as original sin!"

"Very well; but what's up? My own opinion is that you have proposed to Miss Wentworth and been refused."

"Wrong!—haven't proposed!" said Mr. Bedford, throwing out dense clouds.

"When are you going to?"

"Don't know."

"Why don't you?"

"Don't know?"

"What do you mean?"

"Well, I mean," said Mr. Bedford, hurling away his cigar, "that the thing's really too low, Morley—too deuced low, don't you know. Is there a vacancy in the Queen's Invincibles?—say the place of bootblack. I'd like to secure it."

Morley looked at him with a curious smile, and said:

"Something has gone wrong; but that's not the question. You are meditating a retreat. Now, I've only this to tell you, Bedford, that you'll have to make an offer of yourself. The thing is de rigueur."

"You don't think so, Morley?" Mr. Bedford cried.

"You have paid Miss Wentworth the most devoted attentions for a month; well, what is your duty now?"

"Right, by Jove!" Mr. Bedford exclaimed, as if struck in the breast by a bullet.

Morley quietly smiled, and said, after a moment:

"One would really think that you looked upon proposing to your Miss Million as a disagreeable necessity."

"Don't pitch into a fellow in that way, Morley. What's the use of proposing? You have been blowing any number of tin horns in praise of a friend of yours for a whole month, and she don't care a button for me!"

"Why not ask her? Do you expect a young lady to ask you?—to hold out her arms to your lordship before you hold out yours?"

Mr. Bedford groaned.

"Come, the thing is unavoidable. Propose on the ride to the mountain this evening. I'll take charge of Miss Despard. Pop and be happy, my dear fellow."

"I will!" exclaimed Mr. Bedford; "but remember what I tell you, Morley, I'll be nowhere."

On the very same evening a riding party went up the winding road of a mountain near the Springs. This party consisted of the two friends and Miss Wentworth and her cousin. Reaching a point near the summit the couples quietly diverged. Mr. Bedford rode on with Miss Steenie Wentworth and disappeared; Captain Morley continued to escort Miss Nettie Despard.

After a while the latter couple dismounted, and Morley affixed the bridles to some pine-boughs. He then offered Miss Despard his arm to conduct her to a mass of rock jutting out on the mountain's side, from which there was a fine view. This they very soon reached, and there beneath them was the little green valley, with its winding stream and white cottages, peering from green foliage.

"Peaceful enough," said Morley, in his deep, quiet voice. "There is a little community that seems tranquil from this distance; but the tranquillity is an illusion."

"Do you think so?" said Miss Despard, in a low voice, looking up to the bronzed face.

"Yes; the world in little is yonder. Hearts are beating there as they beat everywhere—with pleasure and weariness, with disappointment and ambition, and love and hatred, too. They throb with joy or break with despair; and look at nature. Her serenity is pitiless, is it not?"

"Nature's rôle is to be calm and beautiful, and she plays it," said Miss Despard, sighing. "I wish I was beautiful."

"What shall I reply?" said Morley.

"Nothing."

They exchanged glances, and the young lady smiled slightly.

"What a lovely landscape?" she said.

"There is a legend connected with it I hear," Morley said. "The brave wife of a frontiersman escaped to this mountain; she and her husband were attacked by the Indians in their cabin and they both managed to reach a fort in this vicinity. Here the wife proved herself a brave lady if there ever was one."

Miss Despard was listening, with clasped hands and deep interest.

"Her name was Kate," said Morley. "She first took refuge here, and then stole away in the darkness to the fort which was attacked by a large band of Indians. Now for the proof of her courage. One morning her baby strayed out of the fort, and she exclaimed, 'My child! my child!' when her husband ran out and caught up the child and hastened back. But the Indians fired upon him and he fell dead on the threshold."

"He was a brave man!" exclaimed a voice, and, turning round, they saw Miss Steenie Wentworth. She was very much moved. Mr. Bedford, standing near her, was cutting his boot with his riding-whip.

"We stole up to surprise you. Is that all, Captain Morley?" said Miss Steenie, sadly.

"Except the courage of the brave lady. The Indians attacked, and the women were busy molding bullets, and, when Kate was advised to go and indulge her grief she refused, exclaiming, 'No! there's no time now, bullets are needed.' That was courage indeed."

But Miss Steenie shook her head.

"She was brave, I suppose, but, like a woman, spent her feelings in words. Her husband died for his baby."

She had a wild flower in her hand, and her head drooped; an expression of exquisite tenderness came to her face.

"You may laugh at my reasoning, but it is true," she said; "and now it is time to go home. Your story has made me quite sad, sir, and the sun is setting. We'll be too late for—tea."

General laughter at this anti-climax ensued, and the whole party remounted. On the way home, Mr. Bedford was uncommonly quiet. Morley looked at him. What had happened?

Two scenes which took place on the same evening will serve to throw light on the mystery.

Miss Steenie Wentworth was reposing on the white bed in her cottage, pouting elaborately and occasionally sniffing. Seated near her in a rocking-chair was Miss Nettie Despard, who was laughing.

"Why take it so much to heart, you foolish Steenie?" said Miss Despard. "Anybody with eyes in their head might have seen it was coming."

"They mightn't!" protested Miss Steenie, with a piteous sniff.

"Everybody has been talking about it. I never saw such devoted attention."

"That's nothing. I never thought he was in earnest; he's such a flirt!"

Miss Despard laughed heartlessly.

"And I suppose you think little Miss Preston is even worse?"

"Yes, a thousand times!—to make Charlie fall in love with her, and propose!"

Miss Despard smiled wickedly, but continued to rock herself in a composed manner.

"I really don't see the enormity," she said. "Charlie is not very ancient, but he is old enough to justify a young gentleman in replacing his baby skirts with pantaloons, and he ought to have protected himself from the wiles of this designing creature of seventeen."

"I don't care if she's seventeen or seventy!" exclaimed Miss Steenie. "She's no right to marry Charlie and take him away from me! What am I to do?"

"Marry somebody yourself."

A sniff was the only response.

"There's Harry Winthrop. You know he's dying for you; why not take him—as you won't take Mr. Bedford?"

"Mr. Bedford! What do you mean?"

"Goosie!" said Miss Despard. "As if people hadn't eyes! Do you think it's any secret that he proposed and was discarded this afternoon? Whenever you see one of the lords of creation cut his riding-boot in that manner, and look as he looked, something has recently occurred. He addressed you—you know he did, you goose!—and you refused him. If you had accepted him he would have beamed on everybody, instead of which he looked—well, imbecile!"

Miss Despard's laughter was a silver bell chime. Miss Steenie was blushing behind her pillow.

"Well, could I help it?" came at length in a tone of dove-like innocence from behind the pillow. "I don't mean to marry anybody! Harry Winthrop! I won't have him if he asks me—which he hasn't! I'll die an old maid, and I feel like scratching Charlie's eyes out or Miss Preston's for treating me so!"

With which words Miss Wentworth sniffed and sank to silence.

At nearly the same moment Mr. Bedford and his friend Morley, were seated on a bench in the grounds conversing.

"Fact, my boy!" said Mr. Bedford—"proposed and was stricken to earth like a member of the P. R. A real stunner, old fellow! Got up and felt myself all over to find if any bones were broken. Am not entirely certain yet—shaky, by Jove!"

Morley listened with his eternal smile, slowly expelling his eternal cigar-smoke.

"I am afraid you bungled the matter, Bedford," he said, "were too matter-of-fact, or too confident or careless. Some men make the mistake of approaching a woman with an air that says: 'You may take me or not just as you choose.' That's a blunder, I take it. You were not ardent enough."

"Ardent? You never were more mistaken in your life, old Morley! 'I piled up the agony,' as they say here in the States. You see, the champagne at dinner helped. I foresaw the conflict and prepared for it, and I thought I was in earnest, Morley! I never saw a girl look prettier, though I don't mind saying she's not my style. But the whole thing hung fire, my boy! You behold the great rejected bent on self-destruction. He's now blowing a last cloud previous to that ceremony!"

Mr. Bedford smiled. He did not smoke his cigar with the air of a man bent on self-destruction.

"Well," said Morley, quietly, "I'm glad to see you are not so much cut up as might have been expected. You are right to take these things philosophically. The smart disappears after a while always, and the best thing is to try and bury it. Vive la joie is an excellent motto, and I see you have adopted it. Take what comes and don't repine, and if you think the matter is ended, try elsewhere. Other millions in this or other lands await you."

"Other millions?" said Mr. Bedford, smiling. "No; I have given up that programme, my friend. The fact is, this hunting for girls with money is a different thing in reality, you know, from what you think, you know, when you are hard up, you know!"

With which painful tautology Mr. Bedford drew a letter from his pocket.

"I'm not in the million business any longer, old Morley," he said; "it's beastly. Stanley Bedford is not to be driven to such miserable shifts, as some fellow says, in future. He is a landed proprietor now, and a member of a superior order. Got the news by to-day's mail. Sir Bathurst Stanley Bedford, of Woodpark, has had the politeness to die, and a friend of yours succeeds to the title, and, what is better—five thousand a year!"

Morley grasped his friend's hand warmly and said:

"I congratulate you; Bedford, it couldn't have fallen to a better fellow! You heard to-day?"

"Just after dinner. I didn't read the letter until I pulled it out with my handkerchief on the mountain. I then looked at it and told Miss Wentworth, and she was as much pleased as you are. It was not discussed at length. I had more interesting topics, and then came the stunner previously alluded to and drove it out of my mind until this evening, my boy!"

Mr. Bedford was in excellent spirits, and Morley looked at him, musing. So Miss Steenie Wentworth did not propose to marry Sir Stanley Bedford with his £5,000 a year, which was presumptive evidence that Mr. Stanley Bedford, without a bank account, had not made a sufficient impression.

"Well, my dear Bedford, I suppose that is the end of the affair," he said. "There's time enough, and you needn't marry yet."

Mr. Bedford looked mysterious, smiling.

"A man never knows what will happen," he said. "The sight of lovers makes a fellow spooney, you know. I am engaged at present in holding the bottle for my young friend Charles Wentworth. His knees are shaky, but he's all right I think; he'll marry little Miss

Digitized by Google

Preston, and then Miss Steenie will be alone, and will marry in turn, I suppose. It won't be me, Morley; another fellow, you know. Good luck to the other fellow!" and Mr. Bedford laughed aloud.

CHAPTER III.

MISS STEENIE WENTWORTH and her party went away in a palace-car. The old aunt was dozing. Mr. Charles Wentworth in the smoking-car, and Misses Steenie and Nettie were looking out of the window.

Miss Despard was blushing, which seemed to arise from the fact that Mr. Bedford was engaged in holding one of her hands. In fact, she had promised to marry him, and this catastrophe had occurred naturally. Having proceeded to "make a friend of Miss Despard," as his friend suggested, Mr. Bedford had found that the young lady was his "style," had been rather pleased than otherwise at his discardal by Miss Wentworth, and, ten minutes before the time which this narrative has now reached, had discovered that he was Miss Despard's style also.

Miss Steenie was seated in the rear with an open novel in her lap. It must have been a production of interest—a thrilling love story, no doubt—for Miss Steenie's corsage was heaving, and her cheeks were a cluster of blush-roses. Or, perhaps it was what Captain Morley was saying to her that made her blush so. Here is what he was saying, with a deep color on his bronzed face:

"I did not mean to tell you this. I meant to go away without saying it. People say you are very rich. I am very poor; but I am proud, too, as poor people often are. I shrunk from it, but I was too weak. You must pardon my weakness and not think badly of me. I could not go away without telling you that I have loved you with every drop of blood in my heart since I first saw you. I could not help it. I know it was foolish—I am so poor! If you were only poor, too! We are going to part this evening. After all, there was no harm in telling you. You have been my one romance. God bless you and good-by."

He rose, holding out his hand; she did not take it or raise her eyes.

"Good-by—Steenie."

She gave him her hand; he kissed it, and then, with a great agony of the heart, released it. But the hand would not be released. It clung around his own. Suddenly Miss Steenie raised her eyes.

"You are not—going to leave me?"

The eyes were swimming in tears. And as the train was running at the rate of thirty miles an hour, Morley did not leave her.

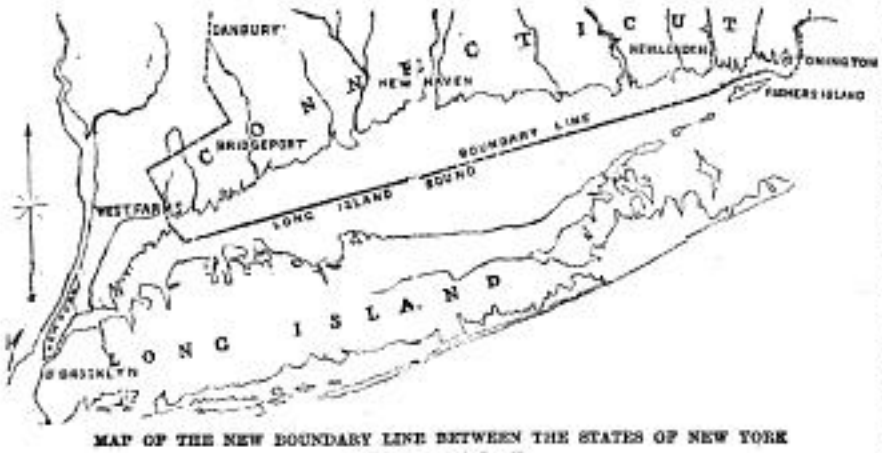
There was a double-marriage in the Spring, and the couples went to travel in Europe. They were very exemplary married people, but the raptures of another couple, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wentworth, who accompanied them, kept the passengers on the steamer in a good-humor until they reached Liverpool.

NEW BOUNDARY BETWEEN NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT.

IN 1879 the States of New York and Connecticut appointed commissioners to make an adjustment of the boundary lines between them, those on the part of New York being Alton C. Beach, Augustus Schoonmaker and Horatio Seymour, Jr., the Secretary of State, Attorney-General and State Engineer under Governor Robinson, and Connecticut appointing on her part Origen S. Seymour, Lafayette S. Foster and William T. Minor.

In January last the joint commission made a unanimous report, and the Legislatures of both States have since approved it and adopted the new line. The following is a copy of the material part of the agreement:

We agree that the boundary on the land constituting the western boundary of Connecticut and the eastern boundary of the State of New York shall be and is as the same was defined by monuments erected by commissioners appointed by the Legislature of the State of New York and completed in the year 1860, the said boundary line extending from Byram Point, formerly called Lyons Point, on the south, to the line of the State of Massachusetts on the north.



And we further agree that the boundary on the Sound shall be and is as follows: Beginning at a point in the centre of the channel about six hundred feet south of the extreme rocks of Byram Point; marked No. 0 on appended United States Coast Survey chart, thence running in a true southeast course three and one-fourth statute miles, thence in a straight line—the arc of a great circle—northeasterly to a point four statute miles true south of New London lighthouse, thence northeasterly to a point marked No. 1 on the annexed United States Coast Survey chart of Fisher's Island Sound, which point is on the long E. ¾ N. sailing course drawn on said map, and is about 1,000 feet northerly from the Hammock or N. Dumpling lighthouse, thence following the said E. ¾ N. sailing course as laid down on said map easterly to a point marked No. 2 on said map, thence southeasterly towards a point marked No. 3 on said map so far as said States are coterminous.

Looking at a map of the territory it will be perceived that a piece of Fairfield County, in Connecticut, juts a long way into our Westchester County; that a little further north Westchester juts sharply into Fairfield, and that then the line is prolonged up to the southern frontier of Massachusetts, which it strikes at a point considerably east of the point where our eastern boundary against Massachusetts begins. The historical truth is that this "easting" was intended as a compensation to New York for the great protuberance of Fairfield County into Westchester along the Sound. But owing to the imperfection of the instruments and methods of surveying in those days it gave to New York more than was intended. The agreement which has been reached at last concedes to New York a quiet title to all the area within this curve.

The agreement also gives Fisher's Island to New York, the Connecticut commissioners saying:

"In regard to Fisher's Island, it ought, by reason of its nearness to our coast, to belong to Connecticut. It belonged to us, we think, under a fair construction of the charter of 1662, which, by express words, gave us the islands adjacent to the mainland, but upon familiar principles of law New York has now the title, having had the actual possession of it more than a century."

The map will show the accurate and precise line that has been drawn after a personal inspection of the area through Long Island Sound.

MAP OF THE NEW BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN THE STATES OF NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT.

SCENES IN THE CHINESE QUARTER, MOTT STREET, NEW YORK.

MOTT STREET might be in Pekin instead of Gotham, so Chinese has it become, and so redolent of the flavor of the Flowery Land. Almond eyes and pig-tails, blue shirts and flowing continuations, are the order of the day, while pigeon English may be heard from step and stoop, from basement and balcony. Mott Street is the Mecca of Chinese pilgrims; hither they come upon arrival, and here they remain, despite high rents and gloomy proprietorial denunciations. New York houses 2,000 Chinese, Brooklyn 1,000, while Jersey City "does" for 1,000. Owners of houses do not like Celestials as tenants, and put on exorbitant rents in order to fend those unsavory heathens off; but the slippers of tea and the smokers of opium can earn good wages, and can afford to pay. Fancy one of these airily-clad, padded slippered individuals raking in $27 a week at cigar-making. What a millionaire when he returns to his boat-house on the Peiho, or his dive in a Canton slum, where shells and fishbones do duty for metallic currency!

Mott Street was in a state of furore last week on account of the recent and most fashionable arrivals from the Flowery Land. The sidewalks immediately in front of a prominent Chinese boarding-house were thronged by a critical crowd, whose comments upon the Celestials, as they passed into their new quarters, were the very reverse of complimentary. A sturdy 210-pound policeman kept order, and it was only at some facetious sally from two of his countrywomen, whose Hibernian wit was thoroughly appreciated by the on-lookers, that he permitted his weather-beaten features to relax into a smile. It is expected that Mott Street will present striking features of Celestial interest twice a month, as the emigrant fare from 'Frisco to Gotham, per Pacific Mail steamers, is $35—this only twice in the month—the ordinary rate being $66. There are six Chinese stores on Mott Street, all of which are apparently booming. To enter one of these is to tread terra incognita. Pasteboard boxes containing Chinese medicines, incense sticks, jade bracelets, quaint kites, dried shark's fins, dragon-shaped cuts of meat and split ducks, nuts, mushrooms, opium-pipes, teas such as Sairey Gamp would serve up to Mrs. Harris, and a variety of strange and mysterious-looking objects assail the eye, while on a gypsy table stands the tea-set and the harmless necessary tea, open to all comers. There are Chinese club-rooms and benevolent society-rooms in Mott Street, and a couple of opium-smoking dens where the miserable victims to this baneful drug doze away their worthless lives in dreams of voluptuous bliss. I visited a Chinese kitchen, and I am free to confess that the perfume which greeted my olfactory nerves was appetizing to the very last degree. A perspiring Celestial was defiantly flourishing a pan all over the place as I entered. What the contents of that pan may have been I may never know. Something dark and brown was cast into the air after the fashion of pancake-tossing, to fall back into the pan with a hiss that spoke of its being done to a turn. Fain would I have tasted, but my prejudice was stronger than my appetite. In an adjoining apartment sat two Chinamen enjoying that beatific sensation that sets in after a good dinner, and puffing cigarettes. A boy was ministering to their comforts in the shape of post-prandial tea. The dreamy look in those almond-shaped eyes as they indolently followed the cigarette-smoke was perfect in its utter abandonment. On gaining the street I dropped upon two reporters interviewing a recent arrival. I pitied that Celestial. His puzzled gaze of terror as he turned from one to the other of his pertinacious persecutors, while the pig-tail pendulated, would have made the fortune of a low comedian. A new industry has sprung up in Mott Street, namely, that of Chinese sign-painting. How good Queen Bess would have appreciated the efforts of the artist whom I found at work. No shadow, no perspective! And yet another incident. The Mellican Chinese—the long established, naturalized Celestials—showing the sights to the wondering, gaping, grunting new arrival, just as the born New Yorker shows his cousin from Ohio the elephant.

Mrs. Sargent considers that Chinese later will boom as an outcome of Kearneyism, and that the sun of insolent white helps is about to set. Mrs. Sargent has been canvassing among the property-holders of Eighth Avenue and other portions of the west side to ascertain the objections to the colonization of the Chinese in that locality. This energetic lady is considering a proposal to erect an immense Chinese washhouse at Saratoga, and similar institutions at several other watering-places. She considers that if they were thus introduced to the Eastern public, many families who spend their Summer at watering-places would bring Chinese help to their city residences. Mrs. Matthew Wilson, of New York, whose cousin is the wife of Yung Wing, the Vice-Consul for China at Washington, is about to engage actively in the new movement. Her husband owns a large property at Lake George, N.Y., and intends to employ Chinese labor on his estate. Mrs. Wilson proposes to use her influence to have all the hotels at Lake George hire Chinese domestics for the coming season. It is likely that 5,000 Chinamen will be brought East to engage in various labors. Mrs. Sargent states: "I intend shortly to commence a series of anti-Kearney lectures in New York. I will show the Chinese problem in its true colors. The proceeds of these lectures will be turned into a general fund for the purpose of aiding Chinese to emigrate from San Francisco to New York. It will be an easy matter to secure special rates and pay the fares of 100 or 200 at a time, as the case may be. Of course when the present limited exodus from California is accelerated by the inducements which New York shall offer, the Mongolians will fairly swarm here. Their neatness and economy will soon win them favors in the cultured East, and the time is not far off when New York manufacturers will be glad to send to China direct for recruits to their workshops. Their value as workmen in the trades is increased by their dislike to strikes, and an employer of a Chinaman is never embarrassed by a desertion at a critical time. I intend, with the assistance of my friends, to see what can be done with the manufacturers of this city in this respect. There is skilled labor of every kind wasting in the West, simply because a few ignorant fools have started a prejudice into activity." Muchee goodee Kearney!

The cry is "still they come," and the almond-eyed proprietors of Celestial boarding-houses permit wintry smiles to twinkle around high-cheek bones as they rub their hands and mutter some mysterious sounds supposed to represent joyfulness. The 'Frisco news is perused with the keenest earnestness, every pro and con being weighed with anxious care. New arrivals are cross-examined as to the exact state of things in the vicinity of the Golden Gate, and no Presidential campaign was ever planned with more exacting nicety with more subtle vigilance, than the present upheaval of the Chinese "boom." To hear the pigeon-English as some intelligent Chinaman reads the evening paper to his countrymen, is as quaint a study as a word-painter need sling ink at.

FICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

The Dissolution of Parliament.

On Monday, March 8th, announcements were made in the House of Lords by Lord Beaconsfield and in the House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the Queen had been advised to dissolve Parliament at Easter. In the course of his statement with regard to the event the Chancellor explained that the Government had been unable to come to a decision earlier because of the necessity of procuring Parliamentary sanction for the Irish relief measures. The new Parliament, he thought, would probably be in working order to the course of the first week in May. The announcement of the dissolution was received with cheers in both Houses, and the campaign was opened at once. Before the week expired all the leading members had addressed manifestoes to their constituents, and completed arrangements for a most thorough canvass of their respective districts.

The Carnival at Naples.

A very novel phase of the carnival season in Naples this year was the appearance in the grand procession of a representation of huge ostriches. The counterfeit birds were well made up, and moved with the peculiarities of their prototypes. The entire observance was, if anything, more general and spirited than ever, and all manner of follies was on account en règle during the great day of the season.

The Revolution in Peru.

The deposition of President Prado of Peru, in December last, and his flight, ostensibly on a mission to Europe to negotiate a loan, were noted at the time in this paper. Our present illustration is of an engagement between the insurgent troops under command of Don Nicholas de Pierola and the regulars under General La Cotera on the Plaza Mayor, Lima, on December 21st, when the insurgent battalion successfully repulsed the attack of the regulars. The "revolution" was of short duration, and at its close President Prado was declared deposed, while General Pierola was chosen President in his stead.

The Last Attempt to Kill the Czar.

The murderous conspiracy of the Russian Nihilists against the life of the Emperor Alexander II., and their most recent attempt to destroy His Majesty, with the members of the Imperial family, by the explosion of a charge of dynamite beneath the dining-saloon in the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg, continues to be a subject of painful interest. The Winter Palace at St. Petersburg, built in the reign of the Empress Elizabeth on the plans of Count Rastrelli, between the years 1754 and 1762, is of colossal proportions and very simple architecture. The palace is 400 feet square, and its inmates number 6,000 persons when the Czar is in residence. It is built on the left bank of the Neva. In front there is a large open space called the Palace Square, in which stands Alexander's Column, a monolith of red granite eighty feet high. On the right of the palace is Peter's Square, which contains the celebrated statue of Peter the Great and the Field of Mars, a parade-ground large enough for 40,000 men to manœuvre in. On the east side of the palace is the Empress Catherine's Hermitage, now a museum, and connected with it by a covered way. The palace is four stories high, or about 80 feet; the frontage is 455 feet in length, in breadth 350 feet. The principal entrance, or "perron des ambassadeurs," is from the Neva, and leads by a magnificent flight of marble steps to the state apartments of the palace. A gateway in the centre of the building, facing Alexander's Column, opens into a large court. The most magnificent apartments are the Throne Room of Peter I., where the diplomatic corps generally present their congratulations on New Year's Day; the White Hall; the hall of St. George, a parallelogram of 140 feet by 60 feet; the gallery of the Field Marshals and the Alexander Gallery, and a suit of splendid halls, filled with marbles, malachites, vases and pictures. The palace is perfectly accessible to every one, and there are three entrances, one for the Emperor, one in the centre—the entrée d'honneur—and one on the side of the Hermitage, for ordinary purposes. The Czar has his apartments on the first floor and in the corner of the Winter Palace that overlooks the Neva and the Admiralty. The Empress inhabits the other corner, and between the two is the family dining-room, which had, however, been deserted since the return of the Empress, the meals being served, as already stated, in a smaller room over the guard-room. At one and six o'clock the Czar, the Czarina, and the Grand Dukes Alexis, Sergius and Paul, meet for déjeûner and dinner. The Czarewitch and the Grand Duke Vladimer, who are both married, have also general invitations to join the Imperial circle; but the other members of the family wait till they are bidden. Six covers are always laid, and the service is performed by three French maîtres d'hôtel, who relieve each other every fortnight. The effect of the explosion was to destroy the guard-room, kill and wound fifty-three soldiers remaining there off guard, break through the sides of the vaulted roof, and lift and dislocate the floor of the dining room in two places, corresponding with the gaps in the vaulted roof below. Moreover, the dining table was damaged, as well as part of the ceiling, and the large central chandelier was thrown down, the gas pipes being broken, and the rooms being in darkness until fresh lights were brought.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE Nevada Republican State Convention is to be held in Austin on Tuesday, May 11th.

—THE Oregon Republican State Convention is to be held in Portland, on Wednesday, April 21st.

—VIRGINIA negroes are emigrating to Iowa to take the place of striking white men in the mines.

—THE Legislature of Mississippi has imposed a tax of $3 upon bachelors over twenty-five years of age.

—EIGHTY members of the Legislature of Mississippi are natives of the State, and all are natives of the South.

—THE negro physicians of Tennessee have organized a State medical society, of which Dr. J. M. Jamieson is President.

—THE prevalence of smallpox in Paris is causing much alarm, and the Municipal Council is taking measures against its further spread.

—THE Chinese Government has determined to establish consulates in Boston, Philadelphia and New York, for the better protection of its subjects.

—A MARKED revival in the silk ribbon trade is reported from Basle, Switzerland, where very considerably orders have lately been received from the United States.

—THE Duchess of Marlborough, writing to the Lord Mayor of London, says the distress in Ireland is not yet diminishing, continues to be general, and in some parts is increasing.

—MR. JOSEPH JEANES, of Philadelphia, has recently endowed a chair in the Woman's Medical College of that city, it being a new professorship, solely for the diseases of women and children.

—IT is understood that Russia intends proposing to the European powers the conclusion of an international agreement securing to each signatory power the right of demanding the extradition of regicides.

—THE Post Office Department is advised by the International Bureau of the Postal Union that the Republic of Ecuador has adhered to the rules of the Paris Convention, and will enter the Postal Union on July 1st next.

—PREPARATIONS are making for a series of Shakespearean performances in April in the Memorial Buildings at Stratford-on-Avon. The performances will continue for three weeks, and most of the principal English actors will take part.

—THE Pleuro-Pneumonia Act of New Jersey has been repealed by the Legislature, to take effect on and after Wednesday, March 10th. The quarantine against New York is raised, and all cattle will be allowed to enter New Jersey without permit.

—THERE will shortly be presented to the Royal College of Surgeons in London a rare collection of skulls and skeletons gathered during the last forty years by Dr. Bernard Davis, of Staffordshire; it comprises all the varieties of the human species found on earth.

—DURING experiments on board the new Italian ironclad Duilio, a gun burst after twenty-five shots had been fired from it. The turret was slightly damaged, but the machinery of the vessel was not injured, and the trials were resumed. Ten persons were slightly wounded.

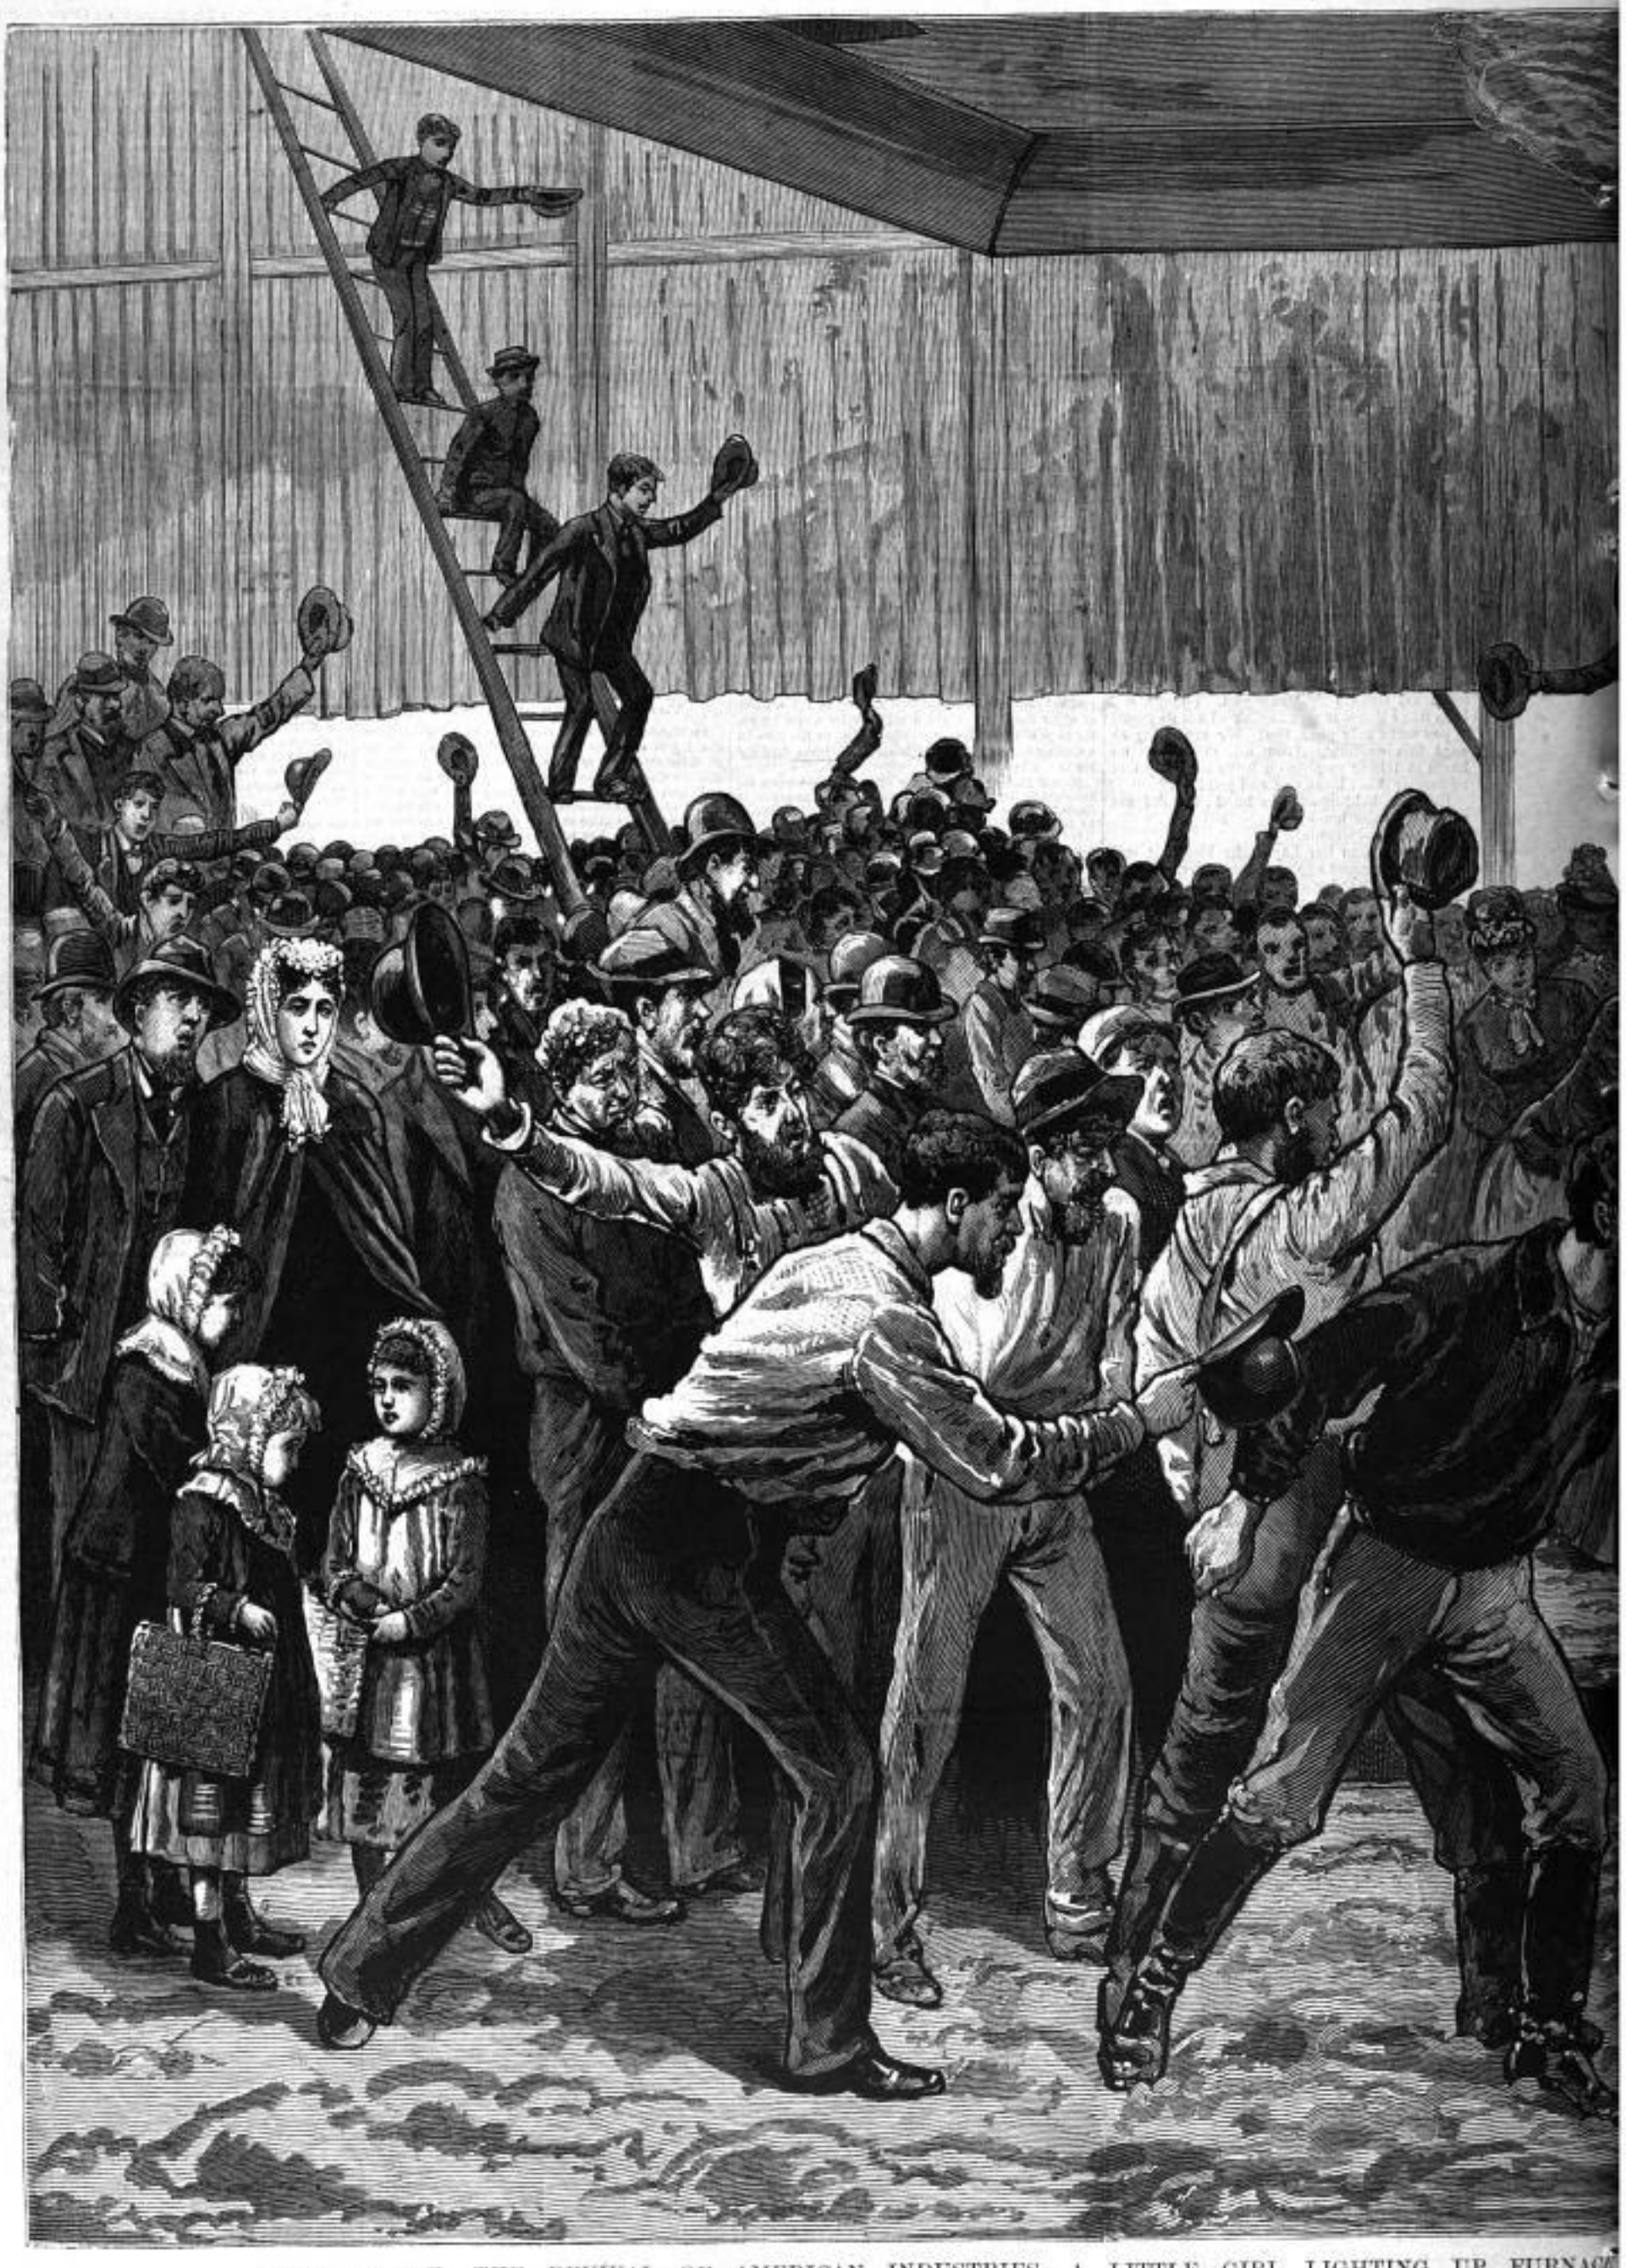
—THE Governor of Vienna has prohibited Dr. Hansen from giving any more public exhibitions of magnetism. The order is apparently the result of a protest from the medical faculty of the University of Vienna, in which the performances are described as injuriously affecting the nervous sensibility of the audiences.

—THE United States Consul at Guayaquil reports that the municipal authorities have created a new tax, which is now levied on all vessels arriving at the Port of Guayaquil. The new rates are as follows: On vessels under 100 tons register, 2 cents per ton; 100 to 500 tons, 3 cents per ton, and those of a greater capacity 1½ cents per ton.

—BY a compilation made in the Interior Department, it is found that the Government gets by the agreement with the Ute Indians 11,000,000 acres of land for about sixteen cents per acre. This price includes the estimated cost of removal, pay for the Ute improvement surveys and the fund to be set aside for the annual annuity of the Utes.

—THE heirs of Stephen Girard have been beaten again in the litigation to get a part of the fund which he left for Girard College. He bequeathed $2,000,000 outright, and set half as much more aside for the same purpose, if needed; but the $2,000,000 proved sufficient for the maintenance of the college, and the rest was applied by the City of Philadelphia to certain public purposes.

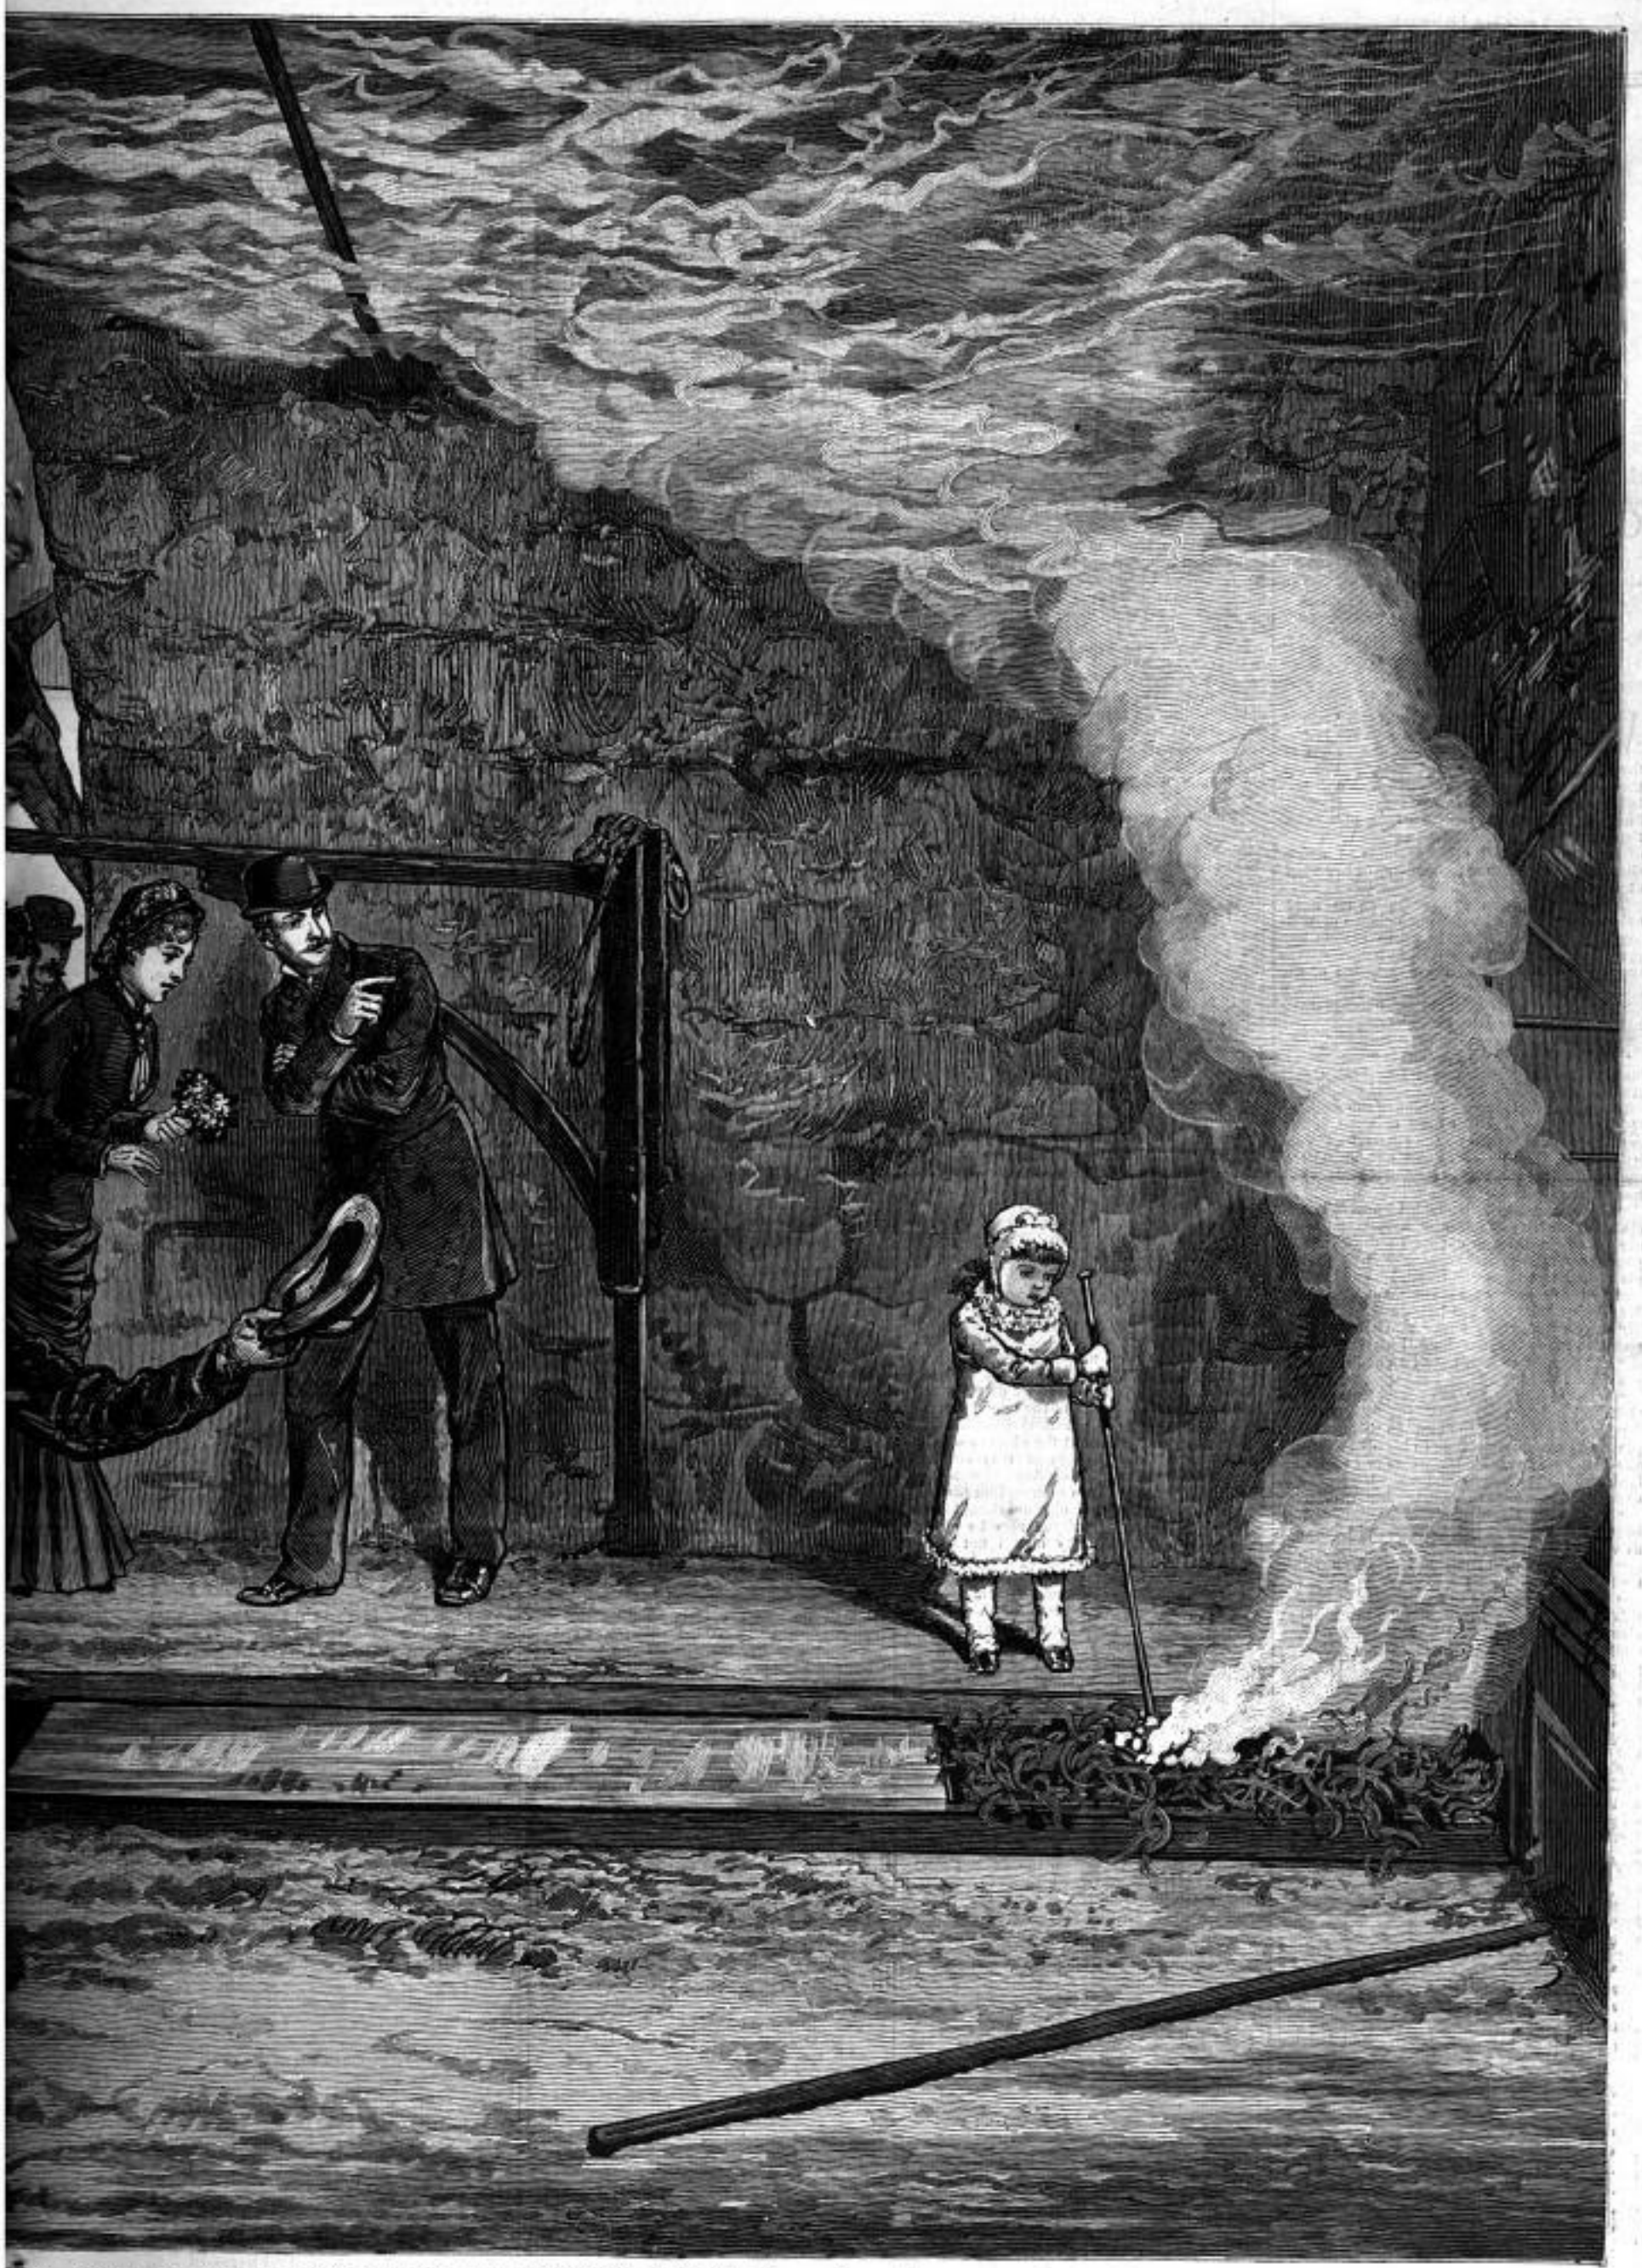
—THE Portuguese Ministerial journal, the Progresso, referring to the alleged intentions of the United States to found commercial colonies on the west coast of Africa, says: "Portugal should congratulate herself on seeing the United States approach her colonies, because that republic is incapable of despising the rights of Portugal, but would, on the contrary, guard them against encroachments by England."



—ANOTHER tariff proposal has emanated from the Japanese Government, and has been submitted to the foreign ministers to send to their superiors. The duties are all specific, a few useful articles are free. Opium is only to be imported by the Government for medicinal purposes. Importations of arms and ammunition may be prohibited. The proposal imposes a tax on kerosene of five cents per gallon.

—THE Berlin Borsen Zeitung publishes a long article on the depressed condition of trade in Saxony, and observes that the hand-weaving of that province, which was, up to 1860, in a most prosperous condition, is to-day almost destroyed by the competition of mechanical weaving, and it seems to be established beyond doubt that its production must in future be limited to the supply of the home markets, as competition with foreign markets has become impossible.

—A PARIS journal has announced that papers relating to the Mexican war, which were transported to Mont Valérien during the siege, have just been discovered in that fortress. The ministers of Napoleon III. tried to a certain extent to disguise the immense sacrifices which this war entailed upon the country. M. Rouher, when in office, declared the cost to be covered by 200,000,000 francs, while M. Thiers offered to prove that the mere money loss amounted to more than a milliard, besides the many human lives sacrificed.



—THE Central American States grow in importance as the prospects of the inter-oceanic canal improve. Their population is calculated at 2,462,000. Guatemala is the largest of the little republics, having 1,170,000 inhabitants; Salvador, 434,000; Honduras, 251,000; Nicaragua, 300,000; and Costa Rica, 185,000. From the fact that the Cordilleras run very near the coast, principally on the Pacific shore, and that the population is mainly resident on the mountain slopes, it results that the culture of coffee has grown rapidly in extent, the facilities for export, in the way of good roads to the harbors, making a market always easily accessible to the planters. Indigo is a profitable culture, as is also sugar, the exportation of which is increasing.

Digitized by Google

NEW JERSEY.—THE REVIVAL OF AMERICAN INDUSTRIES.—A LITTLE GIRL LIGHTING UP FURNACE

Digitized by Google

LER ONE, IN THE IRON MILLS AT BOONTON MARCH 8TH.—FROM SKETCHES BY JOSEPH BECKER.—SEE PAGE 59.

Digitized by Google

FOR EVER.

FOR ever is a long word,
Its end no thought can see;
A meaning and a strong word,
But all too weak for me.

For words are only voices
That vainly strive to tell
The joy that still rejoices,
The griefs that burn and dwell;

Or, words are like a prison
To hold the spirit low
Which, genius-like, when risen
Would still increase and grow;

Or, words are like the throbbing
Of waves eternally
That cannot tell for sobbing
The secrets of the sea;

Or yet like strong winds roaring,
Not strong enough to say
How many storms in storing
The heaven hath hid away.

One thing alone shall flourish
When earth and sea and sky—
All things that Time doth nourish—
All things, save Love, shall die.

JOHN MORAN.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DIMITRY.

CHAPTER III.—A QUESTION OF HONOR.

WHEN Manuela entered the parlor where Reginald was awaiting her, the latter, who was gazing thoughtfully out of the window, turned to greet her. She crossed the space that lay between them with a graceful ease that few women might have rivaled. She was dressed in a morning robe of a color that matched the violet hue of her eyes, and of a texture the soft, clinging folds of which showed the undulating movements of her form at every step.

The look of stern preoccupation on Reginald's face vanished before her glance of welcome, but not so quickly as to escape her observant eye, and her bright smile disappeared as she detected the expression of his countenance.

"Good-morning," she said. "What further has occurred since we parted yesterday?"

"I have heard from the marchesa."

"Well, that is gratifying. But it can scarcely justify the dark frown that I noticed a moment ago."

His face still evidenced a trace of the feelings of exasperation that had been aroused in his breast an hour before by the perusal of Vellani's letter, but he composed himself with a successful endeavor, and shook hands with her with a smile.

"Something has happened, I know," Manuela continued. "A letter or a message from the Marchesa di Lupo cannot be the cause of your mental disturbance, for I perceive plainly that you are disturbed."

"You are correct in your surmise, Miss Waring. Something has happened."

"Pray explain yourself. You are about to speak to me of the marchesa, I know."

"Not exactly of her, but of an acquaintance—a friend—of hers."

"What of him?—for, of course, it must be a 'him'?"

"You are right. The 'him' in this case is a person to whom, according to his own account, she is to be married. His name is Luigi Vellani, and he is a cousin of hers. He is, moreover, an officer of cavalry in the Italian army."

"Yes—yes; I see. This Luigi Vellani has become jealous, and you have heard from him as well as from the marchesa."

"A prophet could not have spoken more truly."

"One does not need to be a prophet to reach this conclusion. An Italian and a lover, what else could you expect?" she replied, with a smile that afforded Reginald a transitory glimpse of her beautiful teeth. "He has heard from her that you were more or less attentive to her during her stay here—don't deny that you were—and so he has thought proper to show that he is offended. A mere trifle and not worth a second thought."

"You mistake, Miss Waring. As you said a while ago, I have indeed heard from him; but instead of expressing simply a lover's hasty offense because of a few gallant phrases which I addressed to the marchesa, in a note or two that I wrote to her while she was here, inviting her to a promenade, or a drive in the Park, or some such trifle, he actually has become brutal over the matter. I might have overlooked an exhibition of spleen; but his insolence, never!"

"What could he have written that you deem so impertinent?"

He took the two letters from his pocket and gave them to her. "Here," he said, "are the precious documents—the marchesa's note and Mr. Luigi Vellani's. Read them and tell me what you think of them."

She received the letters in her hand, and first opened that of the marchesa. A frown gathered on her brow as she read on to the end.

"Upon my word," she said, as she folded the note and returned it to Reginald; "this is a strange letter!"

"Oh, that is mild in comparison with the other one! Now, read what Mr. Vellani has to say!" exclaimed Reginald, moving restlessly in his seat.

She was already half through the Italian's missive when Reginald ceased speaking. Her flushed cheeks and quick breathing showed that, for some unexpressed reason, the taunting language of the writer powerfully affected her. As she read the last word, she crushed the paper between her strong, tapering fingers.

"This is indeed vexatious," she said. "I do not wonder that you should feel angry. But, after all——"

"You are about to say, 'why allow what he has written to affect me?'"

"Precisely. Under the circumstances, what can you do?"

"What can I do? Why, of all whom I know and trust, I thought you would be the readiest to appreciate my feelings and my duty in this matter."

"Do not suppose," she answered, "that I do not appreciate your feelings! As to your duty, if the man were here on the spot I should appreciate that equally readily. But consider for a moment. He wrote these from a safe distance, and probably without imagining that you and he would ever find yourselves together in the same place. In this view of the case, doesn't it seem to you that you might treat the letter with the indifference it deserves?"

"But if I regard my honor as being affected by a quiet submission to this man's insolence, what then?"

"You make it a question of honor?"

"I do. I feel the affront as deeply as if this Luigi Vellani lived in the next house to this and where he could see me every passing day. My feelings will not allow me to palliate the offense because of the remoteness of the offender. And as to the distance that separates us, steam will soon remove that obstacle. Within two weeks' time I can bring this man to the confessional. And I intend to leave at once for Europe for that purpose."

For the first time during the interview, Reginald exhibited in his manner something of the passion that was at work in his bosom. For the first time he allowed his feelings to carry him away, and, in consequence, his voice was harsh and his gestures were quick and angular.

"Think of it, Miss Waring," he went on, rising from his seat and pacing the room; "think of these two people entertaining themselves, as they doubtless are doing, at my expense! If that picture does not present itself clearly to your mind, it does to mine. As for the marchesa, I am quite satisfied that she is as responsible for Vellani's letter as though she had dictated it herself. Besides which, there is the manuscript. Do you suppose she ever will return it?"

"It is doubtful," was Manuela's abstracted reply.

"No," he continued. "While I do not suppose that she, or any one else who may see it, will connect it with aught tangible or real in the way of a treasure that may be discovered by research, still she may regard it as sufficiently curious as a relic to retain it. I therefore have two reasons for going to Europe. First, to call Mr. Luigi Vellani to account; and second, to recover my manuscript from the Marchesa di Lupo."

"The possession of the document," observed Manuela, "can scarcely benefit you since the clew is wanting to the locality in which the treasure is concealed. Why, then, give yourself any further trouble on that subject? Besides, you have your English version of the original French, and that will answer all practical purposes—the name of the writer being obliterated, you say."

"You argue the matter very well, Miss Waring; but I must confess that I do not choose to regard it as a subject of argument. And as to the possession of the original manuscript not proving of practical benefit to the possessor, you forget that the chapter of accidents, if I hold the document, may result in the discovery of the missing links in some way not now apparent. By a comparison of handwriting, for example, if chance should bring about such an opportunity, I may be able to identify the writer. Why may I not search the records of the fortress of San Juan, if I can discover the locality of that fort or prison? If I could but learn the name attached to the writing, and establish the fact that a person of the same name was a prisoner in that fortress about two hundred years ago, pursuing my investigations into his career, I might succeed, possibly in fixing the unknown pueblo and the now indefinite church."

"Your reasoning is good," said Manuela, in reply, "but there are so many formidable obstacles in the path to success. Trust rather to the chapter of accidents, as you term it; perhaps in that way, in a manner least expected at present, you may secure some of the missing clews to the hidden treasure."

With a peculiar expression of countenance she motioned him to a seat, and continued:

"And now, in regard to the Vellani affair. What do you mean to do?"

"I mean to take passage on the French steamer that leaves on Wednesday. On reaching Europe I shall proceed at once to Milan, where, if fortune favor me, I will find the marchesa and Vellani. First, I shall obtain from the marchesa my manuscript, and, next, I shall demand of Vellani an apology."

"And if he should refuse to apologize?"

"I shall either cane him or challenge him, leaving the decision as to which to circumstances."

"In either event you will have to meet him, for I am sure an Italian army officer must necessarily be prepared to engage in a duel."

"I go ready to send or to accept a challenge, Miss Waring," said Reginald, emphatically. As he spoke she leaned over toward him and laid her hand lightly on his arm.

"In what I am about to say," she said, earnestly, "you must not think that I mean to express any doubt of your ability to take care of yourself in an affair of honor in which you may be engaged."

"Say what you please," he replied, with a smile, relaxing from his severity of demeanor.

"I only am anxious for—for the safety of one whom I regard as highly as I do you when I ask you whether you have had much practice with the pistol?"

"You mean am I a good shot?"

"Yes."

"Well, to tell the truth, I never thought of that. The fact is, I am nothing of a marksman. I suppose I could hit a barn-door at ten paces"—this he said with a laugh—"but whether I could do as much to a man is doubtful. I am satisfied of one thing, however, and that is that my nerve would not fail me."

"There is virtue in a steady nerve, Mr. Grey; but," she continued, shaking her head gravely, "that is not enough. Your antagonist, you should remember, may possess equal nerve, and may be a dead shot besides."

Reginald was silent, but the look of resolution deepened on his face as Manuela went on:

"Equally important—more important indeed when there is a question of a duel with a European, and that European a cavalry officer in the Italian service—becomes a consideration of your knowledge of fencing. The dueling-sword is the weapon of honor on the Continent, and, unless you can meet an opponent on equal grounds with this weapon, you are at his mercy."

"I am sorry to say that I have no knowledge of the use of the sword," said Reginald, almost apologetically. "But I shall begin at the first opportunity to take lessons. Perhaps in that way I may prepare myself to meet an average swordsman in the field."

"Ah!" ejaculated Manuela, again shaking her head, "the fencer's skill cannot be acquired in a few days, or even in a few weeks. Sometimes it never can be acquired at all. The accomplished swordsman is a genius in his way, and, with his single weapon, he can keep at arm's length, and disarm, a room full of unskillful assailants."

She looked down thoughtfully, as if pondering the answers that Reginald had given to her questions, while Reginald himself, forgetting for the moment the disagreeable possibilities that might result from the encounter which he had determined to seek as the last alternative, took delight in contemplating her rich beauty and Juno-like form, and in thinking of the germs of heroism that lay dormant in her nature.

"You do not seem to anticipate that I would emerge from a duel with this Luigi Vellani unscathed," he observed finally, in a tone of pique.

"Frankly, I do not, unless he should prove, which is improbable, as ignorant as you are of the fencer's art, for, depend on it, if there is to be a duel, the sword will be the chosen weapon."

"Well, well—let it be so. I am ready to risk it. It would scarcely be manly for me to speculate beforehand on his skillfulness or unskillfulness."

"It is your heart which speaks there, Mr. Grey, and not your reason. Will you be guided by my advice in this matter?"

"I came this morning to ask your advice and to consult with you. I shall feel only too greatly honored if you will advise me," he said, with respectful earnestness.

"Then you will be advised by me?"

"In all things. What should I do? Only remember that I cannot forego my purpose to seek an explanation of Vellani."

"You must promise me that you will not act hastily, and that you will endeavor by fair means to obtain the apology you desire. The apology, I suppose, would satisfy you?"

"A written apology for that letter would be all that I should ask. If that be given, I would pursue the matter no further."

"That is enough. It is more than advice that I gave you, Mr. Grey; if I may be allowed to say so, it is my earnest wish that you should act discreetly and prudently in your dealings with this man."

CHAPTER IV.—A QUESTION OF SENTIMENT.

AS Manuela spoke these last recorded words, seemingly under an impulse that she could not control, she turned her head away.

"Why do you say it is your 'wish,' Miss Waring?" said Reginald, leaning forward so as to look into her face. "Do you mean that what concerns me arouses your interest?"

"I have said that it is my wish that you should be prudent. Only remember that," she replied, without changing her position.

"Miss Waring," he began, and then paused abruptly.

She turned to him with an almost imperceptible heightening of the color on her cheek.

"Well?"

"I was about to ask you to allow me to call you Manuela."

"Why Manuela?" she inquired, with a pretty expression of surprise on her face.

"Because," he answered, "I should feel more satisfied if ceremony were dispensed with between us. Miss Waring, if you will allow me to say so, seems too cold, too formal."

"Then, the ceremony is to remain with me, I suppose?"

"No; but I did not dare to hope that——"

"That I would call you 'Reginald'? Let it be as you wish. You may call me 'Manuela.'"

"And you will call me 'Reginald'?"

"Oh, I can't grant too many privileges at once!"

"So be it, but when you say 'Mr. Grey,' I will believe that you mean 'Reginald.'"

"I commend you for your ingenuity. But, answer me: which should you prefer, that I call you—'Reginald' and think 'Mr. Grey,' or call you 'Mr. Grey' and think 'Reginald'?"

"If you will only think of me as 'Reginald,' Manuela, I shall be happy, for I will imagine that perhaps I am nearer to your thoughts."

It was the first time that he had addressed her so familiarly, and it was natural that the sound of her name thus uttered by his lips should cause her to betray a slight embarrassment. He perceived it.

"I fear," he said, "that, after all, it displeases you to be addressed by me by your Christian name. I see that I was mistaken."

"Mistaken? In what respect?"

"In supposing the contrary."

She laughed lightly, but her heightened color denied the words with which she replied to him.

"How like your sex you are!" she exclaimed. "What could have induced you to believe that I should wish you to call me 'Manuela'?"

"Only my convictions," he answered. "I do not think they err in this case. I confess that it was happiness itself when I thought that our relations might be closer than those of mere friendship. And now that I have thus plainly spoken, and on the eve of my departure on what may prove a mission of danger, will you permit me to speak freely?"

Her silence gave consent, or at least he so regarded it, for he continued:

"Miss Waring——"

"No, Manuela," she interrupted, softly. "I do like that better."

He took her hand, which lay in his quietly.

"Reginald," she said, with her clear, frank look fixed on him, "it would be folly for me to misconstrue your words and childish to affect not to understand your meaning. Are you in earnest, or——"

She left the sentence unfinished, but her eyes still looked into his and completed the question.

"I am in earnest, Manuela," he answered. "Perhaps, but for the peculiar circumstances engendered by the events of this morning, I should not have spoken to-day. But I tell you now, that in going away from you, I should wish to bear with me some assurance that you do not think of me altogether with indifference."

"I give you the assurance that you wish," she replied. "I prefer, however, to await the test of time before I either exact or give a more definite promise. Perhaps"—a tone of sadness pervaded her speech, and the smile that played about her lips was in keeping with the inflection of her voice—"perhaps, some day, you may thank me for granting you the opportunity to know your own mind better."

"I see the future as clearly as I see the present. My heart will not change."

"And yet, barely a month ago, you did not consider it any violence to your feelings to address the Marchesa di Lupo as 'my charming Marietta.'"

"Oh, that was quite different! And then, besides, I did not mean to be anything more than complimentary, you know."

"Very possibly. At least, I prefer to believe so. Don't imagine, however, that I am jealous of the marchesa!"

A proud look swept across her face, and in it Reginald read a confession of her indomitable spirit.

"How grand you are, Manuela!" he exclaimed, as he raised her hand to his lips. "I hope to prove to you that I am worthy, at least, of your friendship!"

"Be faithful, Reginald, and that will be proof enough."

"Let the future decide for me. When I return—if I return from this meeting with Vellani——"

"You must go, then?"

There was a tremulous accent of pleading in her voice as she uttered these words, and her fingers closed around his hand with a sudden clasp.

"Do you ask me to surrender my purpose?" he said. "Would you prefer that I should make no effort to avenge the insult that man has put on me?"

She raised her disengaged hand with a quick gesture to her eyes, and a slight tremor shook her frame. For a minute or more she remained thus silent, with her head bent over her bosom. The feminine element in her nature was struggling with the heroic. The heroic conquered.

"No, Reginald!" she exclaimed, when the brief mental conflict was over. "Follow your own instincts. Vellani shall apologize or be punished."

"If the worst come to the worst, Manuela, I shall think of you. I hope for an apology from him. An hour ago I was careless; now, for the first time, I feel a responsibility."

"Yes; for my sake be discreet. Now, tell me, what are your plans when you shall have reached Europe?"

"Have you forgotten? I shall proceed to Milan——"

"All that I know. But what about a friend, a second, should one be needed?"

"I have not decided as to that. I shall pick up some friend in Paris—French or American—and intrust him with the preliminaries, if the affair become serious."

"Will a delay of a fortnight in Paris interfere materially with your movements?"

"Oh, no! A few days, more or less, of postponement will not affect the result unless, indeed, within that interval I should lose track of Vellani and the marchesa."

"In that case, all that you would have to do would be to dismiss the two from your mind and return to New York."

He shrugged his shoulders slightly, and replied:

"I suppose the matter would have to end there."

"My brother Melchior," she continued, "is now in England. In three weeks or a month from to-day he will be at the Hotel du Louvre in Paris. Wait in Paris until he shall come, then go and see him. He will be your friend. I shall write to him and explain all. He speaks French and Italian perfectly, and is besides a fine fencer and a good shot. He will do for you as you would for yourself. Will you not trust him?"

"Trust him, Manuela!" cried Reginald. "Is he not your brother? Yes, I can trust him."

Digitized by Google

At this point the conversation passed, by a natural transition, from the European journey to themselves."

"When I return from Europe," he said, "where will you be?"

"If I am not here I shall be, probably, at my home in New Mexico. The Asciendo on which I live belonged to my grandfather, Davila, and was left to my mother as her inheritance. It was there that my father met and married my mother. If, when you return, you should wish to see me again, you will find me there."

"If I should wish to see you again!" he exclaimed, repeating her words. "Do you doubt for an instant that, if I live, I will return to you?"

"No, Reginald. I do not doubt you. But I cannot refrain from thinking with anxiety of the future."

"You must not feel anxious," he said, in a light tone. "It is not like yourself to be disheartened easily. Be brave and cheerful, my dear girl, until we meet again in Albuquerque."

"I am a soldier's daughter," she replied, "and I have often ridden by my father's side when there was danger to be met. Trust me, I shall keep up a brave heart."

For the second time he raised her hand to his lips and kissed it.

An hour later he rose to go.

"Good-by, Manuela," he said. "Until to-morrow, good-by."

"Good-by, Reginald."

After Reginald had left her, Manuela sat for a long time lost in thought. Under what far-off skies were her musings centred? Was she thinking of her home near Albuquerque? Was she following Reginald in imagination in his distant journey to Italy? or, was she speculating on the old manuscript and its writer, and seeking to evolve from the mists of uncertainty the spot where stood the church within whose walls—if they still rose above ground—reposed the undiscovered secret of the pueblo?

All of these, perhaps, were among her fancies, as she sat and thought.

(To be continued.)

"FIRING UP" AT BOONTON.

WHERE is Boonton? Who knows anything about it? Who cares about it? Of what public interest can it possibly be? Is it in Texas or Minnesota? Where is it, anyhow? Boonton is a village situated on a sunny little stream called the Rockaway, twenty-seven miles by the Morris and Essex line from New York City. It stands on the side of a steep hill, and keeps a watchful eye over an extensive and wooded, flatlish country that reaches away south till lost in the dim distance. Boonton boasts of two hotels, a post-office with genuine brass letter-boxes, the very identical pattern used by the millionaires in the postal palace at Gotham; a main street bordered by perky-looking dwellings that seem inclined, at this hour of writing, to strut down the hill, and take the train to New York; a canal, with a patent wire rope for hauling boats to a higher level without the tardy intervention of locks; two schoolhouses, half a dozen needle-spired places of worship, a few pretentious villas, bedding themselves haughtily aloof from the vulgar throng; a waterfall, beside whose leaping foam young Boonton plights its troth; and, above all, Boonton is the proud possessor of the Boonton Iron Works, which cover twenty acres in the valley lying between the canal, the railroad and the river.

Five years ago and Boonton was a chirpy, cheery place, quoted in the iron market, and turning out its thousands of tons of "pig" annually. Came the bad times and Boonton dropped out of sight. Her pride, her glory—her iron mill—ceased to discourse to the world of iron, and the grip of an iron world came at the throat of this once prosperous and happy village. Poverty closed the stores and shut up the houses. Poverty, in all its grim reality, settled down in Boonton, and soon, too soon, became the most prominent of its citizens. But there was a good day in store for Boonton yet. The Sleeping Beauty, alias the workshop, was to be awakened by the hot kiss of the revival of industry, and glad tidings of great joy came to the village when it was announced that once again the roar of the furnace would make itself heard, and the clang and clamor and delightful din of the molding-shop ring out above the roar of the waterfall and the murmur of the ever-flowing but pulseless river.

Monday was a great day for Boonton, and as the artist and I alighted from the train, we could perceive a calm satisfaction in everybody's face, while the word went from mouth to mouth, "Number one's to be lighted up at five o'clock." Crossing the railway bridge, we struck a towpath by the gigantic canal-boat lift, and presently entered within the precincts of the ironworks. What a busy scene that was! Grimy men carting glowing cinders in turret-shaped cars, shunting wagons, signaling to locomotive-drivers, preparing loam and sand, piling "pigs," laying sleepers, and hurrying hither and thither as though the fate of the iron world depended entirely upon individual exertion. Up high against the keen blue sky stood monster smokestacks, and furnaces and machinery and strange gear, while within a throbbing building whirled a gigantic wheel to the music of the steam-pipes. Fancy what a financial difference the employment of one thousand men must make in a little village like this? Fancy the mill lying idle for four years, and the bread-winners and their families scattered to the four corners of the earth, and you will realize the gladness that reigned like sunshine on every face to-day. When the rolling-mill and nail-factory gets to work, over $1,000 a day will be paid out! Think of this, ye Boontonites, and utter pæans of joy! Think of this ye founders, keepers, helpers, fillers, condensers and laborers! $1,000 a day! A founder receives $13 a week, a keeper $12, a helper $10, a filler $12, a condenser $10, and a laborer $1.10 a day. What wonder, then, that Boonton was light-hearted, and that mine host of the United States Hotel chuckled as he trousered one dollar in return for our well-cooked, comfortable meal! As five o'clock approached, the fairer sex made itself visible, gorgeous in hats, refulgent in sacques, coquettish in gloves, daring in boots. Presently a tiny toddler in white, and a hood as blue as her sweet, innocent young eyes, approached the furnace-house, while a great hulking fellow, all grime and iron-filings and dust, informed me, in a husky voice:

"That's the little gal as is a-going to light up number one."

"Aha! my little maid," thought I, "you are going to light a fire now that will only last five years. Wait till the sweet by-and-by, and you'll be kindling a flame in the furnace of some young fellow's heart that five times five years won't see extinguished."

We now approached the cast-house which is 60 feet long, 55 wide, and 40 feet high. The furnace is 70 feet high, and it turns off ten tons of "liquor" at each discharge. The iron "roasts" for four days, and is then drawn off every six hours or four times a day, and during the five years this furnace is to be kept alive 55,000 tons of iron will be vomited forth from its inflamed interior.

A great vault-like construction, partly of iron, partly of brick, stands like a hood over the furnace dam. In connection with the dam is the jimp. Opposite this dam or well stood the little maid of four years, holding a brass rod with an iron top, red hot. Beneath her were shavings and resin in a sort of prepared bed. Around her little majesty, but at a respectful distance, stood her sisters and her cousins and her aunts, while founders, keepers, helpers, fillers, condensers and laborers formed a sturdy background. Small boys climbed on ladders, and venturesome spirits seized upon dizzy eminences for the purpose of seeing No. 1 lighted up. The little maid, nothing dismayed, at a given signal applied the red hot poker to the shavings, and in a second up went a merry blaze to the music of a ringing cheer, and then—ay, and then, Boonton was happy once more. What power in that tiny, dimpled, fat white hand!

AN ODD PRIZE CUP.

THE Athletic Club, of Boston, Mass., offers for the Spring pedestrian contests, the first of which takes place on April 8th, a most unique cup. It is in the form of a shoe. The base is ebony highly polished, and the shoe-rests and inscription plate are of solid silver. The shoe was made upon a running shoe "last," size 8, but, owing to the thickness of the silver, the outside dimensions are the same as a size 7 shoe. The shoe is made to lift off the "rests." While the inside of the shoe is gold lined, the strings and facings over the instep are of oxidized silver, and the spikes are silver with gold finish. The money-value of this very appropriate prize is $150.

THE IMPROVEMENTS AT ROCKAWAY BEACH.

ROCKAWAY BEACH, like its sister resort Coney Island, has been looked upon as not exactly the place respectable persons would like to visit, but Coney Island within a few years has become a fashionable resort, and, although still called by the old name, has so changed its character in every way that even the most particular of society-people are to be found at its famous hotels. It has taken about six years to bring Coney Island to what it is to-day; but money and energy take no account of time nowadays, as will be evident to the visitors to Rockaway the coming season. Visitors to the Beach have seldom ventured below the Neptune House, and from that point to the western extremity of the Beach was a terra incognita to them, while in reality it is the best part of the entire five miles of beach, and will, when the season opens, astonish the beholder. The idea of making this a fashionable and beautiful seaside resort was the offspring of another scheme by which it was proposed to improve the old beach and bring it within easier reach of New York. J. M. Oakley, State Senator from the First District, in June, 1877, secured a lease from the town of Jamaica of certain meadow lands on which to construct a railroad connecting Hunter's Point with Rockaway Beach. Later on he obtained from the Queens County authorities permission to construct a bridge across Broad Bay and channel and two sections of Jamaica Bay, with the condition that there should be at least two drawbridges. A company was formed with a nominal capital of $1,000,000, but nothing was done, and it looked as if nothing ever would be; but about eighteen months after appeared upon the scene Benjamin E. Smith, who is said to have built more railroads than any other person in this country. He paid a visit to Rockaway, inspected the Beach, looked at the proposed route for the railroad, and very soon decided, after consultation with some friends, that he would not only build the road and improve the Beach, but would put up a hotel, eclipsing in every respect any other in the country. With this object in view, Mr. Smith, in conjunction with Mr. H. Y. Attrill, purchased the entire Beach from a short distance below the Surf House to the Point, and extending from the ocean to the bay, paying for it over $300,000. The construction of the railroad was commenced last September, and the trestle-work across the bay and meadows is nearly complete. The rolling stock and locomotives have been ordered, and the road will be open in time for the commencement of the season.

The laying out of the grounds, etc., has been designed by Mr. Olmsted, who was the architect of Central Park. The general plan comprises a hotel, the dimensions of which are: Length, including porches, 1,170 feet, the building proper being 1,030 feet long; its shape will be very much like the letter E, the front, of course, facing the ocean; there will be two wings on the ends of the main building, each 400 feet deep; there will be four stories above the basement; along the front will run a piazza 70 feet wide; the first story will measure 18 feet from floor to ceiling, the second and third 16 feet, and the fourth 12 feet; the height of the roof from the piazza level will be 160 feet. On this roof a promenade will be located, with seating accommodations for 200 people. The view from this point will be superb. The architects of the hotel are N. Le Brun & Sons. The furnishing will be on a grand scale, black walnut of the best quality and latest style being used. This is now being manufactured to order, and will be ready for delivery about the 15th of May. The carpets are also being made to order, the quantity required being so large that no house had such an amount on hand. It will take about 35,000 yards for the upper floors, and nearly a thousand for the parlors alone. The upholstering and internal fittings will be of the finest, while an air of comfort on cool days will be given by the presence of fireplaces in many of the rooms. The house will have steam-heating pipes throughout. In connection with the hotel and grounds there will be a gas-house erected on the property, with capacity for a town of 20,000 inhabitants.

The Holly Water Works Company are also putting up water-works that will supply sufficient water for 40,000 people, and as a special protection against fire there will be an arrangement by which ten streams of water can be turned on the hotel at once.

In order that the building and grounds may be finished in time for the Summer business, it has been found necessary to employ over 1,000 men and 100 teams, work being carried on night and day, which, with the aid of the Weston Electric Light, is perfectly feasible, and much time will be saved thereby. The cost of the hotel alone will be over $300,000. It will hold 1,500 permanent guests and over 2,000 transient or day visitors. The grounds will be laid out in magnificent style, while the lovers of bathing will have ample facilities to indulge in either surf or still water. Three thousand bathing-houses, with gas and running water, are in course of erection on the bay and ocean sides. They will be ready for use about June 1st, at which date the hotel will open.

The company have their own dock, 800 feet long, on the bay side, so that visitors by water can land on the company's own ground. A covered passage will lead from this dock to the hotel. There will be a similar passage from the railroad depot. The system of sewerage, as determined by the engineers, is likely to be effective, as they propose carrying pipes to a main three and a half miles away, and by depositing the refuse in the bay, escape having it washed back upon the shore by the sea. Next to the hotel, and only a short distance from it, the music-stand is to be located. It is not to be the usual isolated structure with accommodations for the musicians and the sounding concave that people are familiar with, but an oval, covered building open on the sides and furnished with fountains, flowers, greenery and refreshment tables, much after the fashion of a concert garden. This, it is announced, is to be open to visitors free of charge. Dodworth's Thirteenth Regiment Band of Brooklyn, 100 pieces, will furnish the music. The main pavilion will be a long building stretching from 1,800 to 2,000 feet along the beach and 70 feet in width. It is to be elevated and furnished with accommodation for a large number of visitors. Here are to be located the restaurant, a bar and the like, with an abundance of seats and tables. The pavilion overlooks the section of the beach to be devoted to bathers, and from it the antics of the surf-disporting throng will be visible. A happy expedient is used in the construction of this building to enable the bathers to escape the annoying ordeal of being stared at on their way to the surf. Instead of traversing an exposed platform the passage will be made underneath the pavilion, and the bather will be so enabled to be in the water before catching the eye of the onlooker. A boulevard, or drive, from the hotel along the beach, will be constructed; the length will be 3½ miles, and it will be 120 feet wide. The cost of improving the Beach and building the railroad will be over $5,000,000. It is claimed for Rockaway that there is no finer beach anywhere; that the air is more saline than it is nearer New York, and that the garbage nuisance does not affect the purity of the water; while, with a direct railroad running to New York in thirty minutes, it will be more accessible to the metropolis than any other seaside resort.

The New Bound Brook Line between Philadelphia and New York offers to Pennsylvanians and the people of New Jersey a direct and convenient way of reaching Far Rockaway Beach. Twenty trains on fast time are provided daily, the equipment is unsurpassed and the management careful. Residents of Reading, Pottsville, Harrisburg, Williamsport, and all points in the interior of Pennsylvania, can make direct connection with the Bound Brook route to New York, being landed at the New York depot of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, foot of Liberty Street. From this point easy and instant access is had to all the steamboats and railways operating between New York City and Rockaway Beach.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Railway through the St. Gothard Tunnel will, it is thought, be open for traffic by the 1st of October, this year.

A Letter from South Africa states that companies have been formed in Griqualand West and Natal to prospect for gold in Sikukuni's country, where it is known to exist.

An International Meteorological Conference has been held in Sydney, at which it has been arranged to establish a uniform system of weather telegraphy for the different Australian colonies.

The Designs of the Forth Bridge—a much more daring undertaking than the Tay Bridge—are to be reconsidered, and it is very doubtful if the gigantic scheme, as at present conceived by Sir Thomas Bouch, will be carried out.

It is announced as certain that M. Krantz, the director of the 1878 Universal Exhibition, will be appointed director of the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, and that many improvements will take place on the occasion of his appointment.

Lieutenant-Colonel Flatters is to command the caravan expedition for the purpose of investigating the proposed French trans-Sahara railway route, and he is to be in possession of a force so strong that there will be no danger of obstruction.

The Law on the constitution of the high council of education in France is progressing favorably before the Senate. No other members will be admitted than professional teachers, except delegates of the five National Academies: Sciences, Beaux Arts, Français, Sciences Morales et Politiques, Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.

The Microphone has been successfully employed by Professor Milne, of Tokio, Japan, to announce the premonitory signs of an earthquake. He places the instrument in pits remote from roads, and he is careful also to exclude all insects, the movements of which would, of course, affect the indications and lead to false inferences.

At the Last Promotion of the Legion of Honor M. Levasseur, Vice-President of the Paris Geographical Society, was appointed to the grade of officer for his geographical and statistical works. M. Levasseur is the editor of the statistical department of the Annuaire of the Bureau des Longitudes, which has been so much enlarged recently.

The Emperor William has recently conferred the Order of the Red Eagle on Professor Heeren, of the Hanover Polytechnic; Professor Hallendorf, of the Polytechnic at Aix la Chapelle, and Professors Roth, Weisky, and Wichelhaus, of the University of Berlin. Most of these decorations are in recognition of special services in developing the mineral resources of the country.

The Chilian Government has just published in English, Spanish and French, a "Synopsis Statistical and Geographical of Chili," treating of the condition of the country from January, 1878, to September, 1879. Among other useful matters it contains a short historical sketch, besides notes on its geographical position and physical aspect, its industrial zones, geological constitution, ethnography and medical geography.

Dr. Broca, the eminent anthropologist, has been elected a life-member of the French Senate by a majority of eight. The election has created some sensation, Dr. Broca's nomination having been opposed on the ground of his Darwinist opinions. Dr. Broca opened the last meeting of the Anthropological Society by a short address, in which he considered his election as a victory gained not only by his political, but also by his scientific, opinions.

The German Admiralty intends to publish a work on the scientific voyage round the world, made by the German corvette Gazelle during the years 1874 to 1876. The work will be divided into three parts. Part I. will contain a short description of the origin of the expedition, its objects and a general account of the voyage. The second part will be devoted to the deep-sea measurements, the meteorological and magnetical observations. Part III. will treat of the marine fauna and flora.

According to the report of the French Phylloxera Commission, the pernicious insect has spread in a deplorable manner during the last two years, in spite of all measures to the contrary. The black patches on the maps of the Commission, and which represents those districts over which the plague has a complete hold, must be enlarged year after year. Great hope was placed in snow, but it proved futile, inasmuch as snow must cover the ground for at least forty-five days to destroy the insects, and nowhere has the snow lasted so long as that. About one-quarter of the French wine-growing districts are now destroyed.

The Veteran French Chemist, Sainte-Claire Deville, has resigned the professorship at the Ecole Normale of Paris, after having filled it in the most brilliant manner for twenty-nine years. Of his manifold and classical investigations during this period the most noteworthy were those on aluminium, which, supported by Napoleon III., led to the creation of the aluminium industry; the adaptation and application of the same metallurgical processes to magnesium which created likewise the industry of this metal, and the extensive researches on platinum and its allied metals in company with Debray, in the course of which platinum was fused for the first time.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

M. ALBERT GRÉVY, Republican, has been elected a Life-senator of France.

THE Archduke Rudolph, the Prince Imperial of Austria, has been affianced to the Princess Stephanie Clochilde, of Belgium.

MR. LOWELL, the Minister of the United States, presented his credentials to the Queen, at Buckingham Palace, on March 12th.

MR. HARNISCH, the American sculptor, now in Rome, is making a model for the statue of Calhoun, which is to be erected in Charleston.

M. DE SCHAKOFF, the new Russian Ambassador to the Berlin Court, is reputed one of the best chess players in Europe, and has never been beaten.

THE municipality of Paris has resolved to present to Professor Nordenskjöld, the Swedish Arctic explorer, a gold medal on his passage through that city.

BISHOP QUINTARD (Protestant Episcopal) of the diocese of Tennessee, has, on account of ill health, been ordered by his physician to give up his duties and take complete rest.

THE House Committee on Claims has agreed to report favorably a Bill appropriating $2,500 for the relief of A. B. Meacham, for injuries sustained during the Modoc outbreak.

IT is stated in well-informed circles that Prince William, eldest son of the German Crown Prince, will shortly be betrothed to the Princess Caroline Mathilde, daughter of the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein.

THE Queen of Italy's physician, Dr. Martini, assures her subjects that Margherita's vital functions are not attacked by her present disease, and that its nervous character has given neither him nor the court any serious solicitude.

PRINCE ERNEST, son of the Grand Duke of Hesse and the late Princess Alice of England, will shortly be entered on board the Britannia as a naval cadet, thus following the example set by the sons of the Prince of Wales.

GENERAL GRANT has been visiting Contreras, Molino del Rey, Churubusco and other scenes of his Mexican campaign. He remembered the localities well, but was unable to find his old quartermaster's office and store in Tacubaya.

A JAPANESE gentleman, Shinichiro Saito, and Edward Greey, the author, who lived many years in China and Japan, are preparing a translation of Tamenaga's historical novel "I ro-ha Bunko," under the title of "The Loyal Forty-seven."

AFTER a second representation of Rubenstein's new opera, "Ivan Kalashnikoff," in St. Petersburg, at which the Imperial family were present, its performance has been prohibited. The scene of this opera is laid in the time of the Czar Ivan the Terrible.

ENSIGN L. K. REYNOLDS, U.S.N., whose portrait was published in our last issue, has been awarded the gold medal of the Life-saving Benevolent Association of New York, for his distinguished bravery in rescuing the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olive.

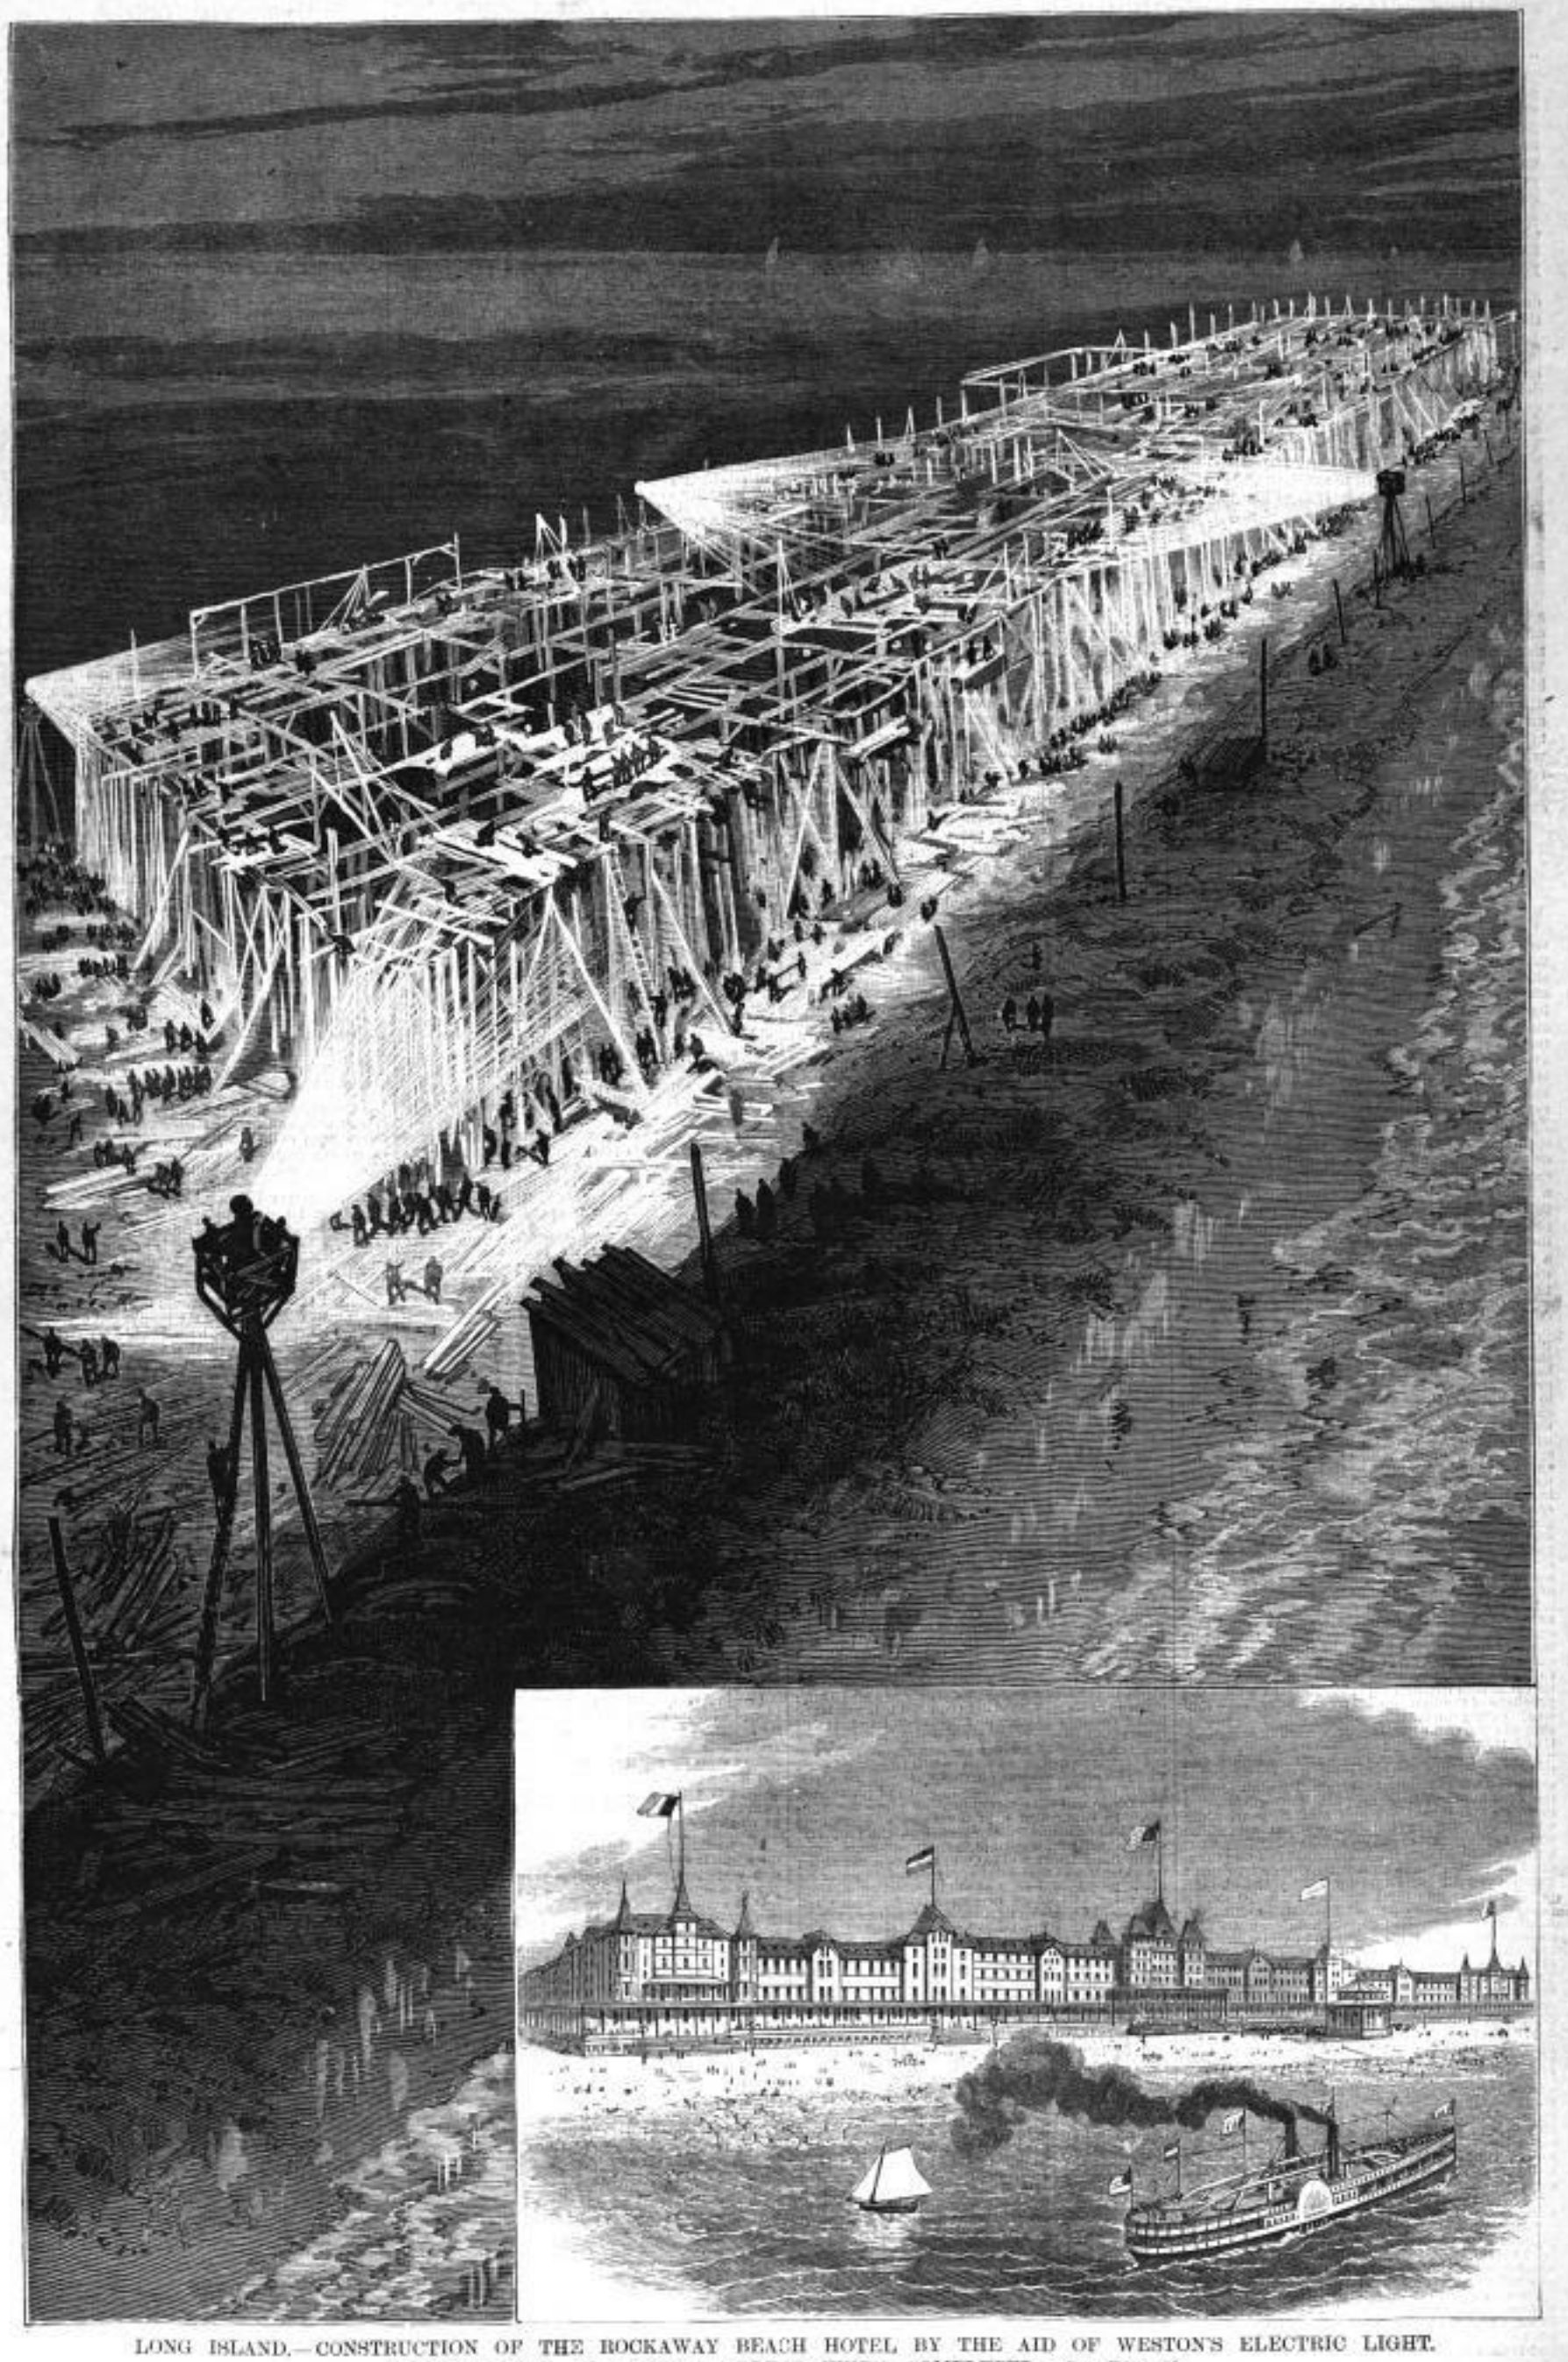
EX-GOVERNOR JOEL PARKER has taken the oath of office as a Judge of the Supreme Court of his native State of New Jersey, which during the past twenty-five years he has already served as legislator, District-Attorney, Attorney General and Governor.

MR. THOMAS HUGHES, Q. C., the well-known author and Liberal politician, who visited the United States some years ago, lectured at the Workingmen's College, in London, of which he is Principal, on March 6th, on "James Russell Lowell," the newly appointed American Minister to England.

MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, the philanthropist, in a curious tract, compares the relative cost of religion, living, education, rum and tobacco. Rum costs the country yearly $667,636,602; religion, $47,636,450, and education, $95,436,727. Rum, she says, costs each person $17 a year, whether they drink it or not.

MADAM LI-FU-JEU, wife of the Chinese Minister in Berlin, has just been formally presented to the Emperor and Empress, who received her very graciously. The Chinese lady wore a superb native costume, looked very picturesque, and behaved with tact and grace. Lady Odo Russell, as doyenne of the diplomatic corps, made the presentation.

M. MEISSONIER, who owns to sixty-seven years of existence, has a handsome house full of beautiful artistic objects, and though he has earned more money than any other painter in France, he is so fond of luxury that he is now not worth more than $200,000. He receives from $3,000 to $5,000 for a portrait. His cuisine is perfect, his wine cellar "magnificent." He paints very slowly, and utterly refuses to be hurried when executing commissions.



THE Austrian Diet has voted $75,000 to defray the expenses of the Empress's ice hunting trip to Ireland, a thing which would not be done, probably, by any other legislative body in Europe. The retinue the Empress takes with her is enormous. Twenty-five sit down to the steward's room and sixty-five in the servants' hall every day at meals—ninety in the household. In the stables are about fifty horses, though one of these only six are for Her Majesty's own riding.

BY the will of the late Joseph Nickerson, of Boston, $2,000 is given in trust to the Young Ladies' Library of the town of Brewster; $6,000 in trust for the support of preaching, according to the Universalist faith and order, in Brewster; $32,000 in trust for the deserving poor of Brewster; $5,000 for the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers, in Boston; $3,000 for the Home for Aged Men, in Boston, and $3,000 for the Home for Aged Women, in Boston.

MR. PIERRE LORILLARD, of this city, in co-operation with the French Government, has arranged an expedition for exploring the antiquities of Central America and Mexico. In an interview Mr. Lorillard stated he would contribute the principal cost, about $30,000, and that Mr. Thorndike Rice was now in Paris arranging all the details. He said that Mr. Charnay, the French explorer, will probably accompany the expedition in April, in company with a scientist from this country, who is not yet decided upon. Whatever objects and monuments are found will become the property of the French Government and form the Musée Lorillard.

THE marriage of Captain Granville Alexander, of Forkhill House, County Armagh, Ireland, to Miss Daisy Mathews, of San Francisco, Cal., took place on the 25th of February at St. George's, Hanover Square, London. The bride wore a dress of white satin, trimmed with white jet and pearls, and wore diamond ornaments. She was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Mathews, and given away by her brother, Mr. Charles Mathews. After the ceremony the company went to Edwards's Hotel, George Street, and were entertained at breakfast by Mrs. Mathews. Lady Louisa Juliana Alexander, mother of the bridegroom, was unable, through ill health, to be present.

Digitized by Google

LONG ISLAND.—CONSTRUCTION OF THE ROCKAWAY BEACH HOTEL BY THE AID OF WESTON'S ELECTRIC LIGHT.
THE BUILDING AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.—SEE PAGE 59.

Digitized by Google

WEST INDIES.—BASIN OF THE BOILING LAKE, DOMINICA, BEFORE THE LATE ERUPTION.

REV. FREDERICK COURTNEY.

THIS popular and well-known clergyman who has been since 1876 the assistant to the Rev. Dr. W. F. Morgan, rector of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church in this city, has just accepted a thrice expressed call to St. James's Church, Chicago. Mr. Courtney was born at Plymouth, England, January 8th, 1807, his father being the Rev. Septimus Courtney, late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and vicar of Charter, Plymouth. He died in 1843, leaving young Frederick, only six years old, to battle with the world alone. The boy was educated at Christ's Hospital, one of the public schools of England, which was founded by King Edward VI., of the pupils of which there are nearly 1,000 in London and 500 in Hertford, being still dressed in the costume of the date of the royal founder, from which circumstance the institution is popularly termed the "Bluecoat School."

When fifteen years old his means did not allow him to study further, and he entered a merchant's office. After ten years' waiting he accomplished his ambition, the death of a relative having enabled him to pursue theological studies. He matriculated at King's College, graduated in the first class, was admitted to the degree of Theological Associate, and was ordained deacon February 12th, 1804, and priest the following year.

He occupied several ecclesiastical positions in England, and was for a time the local Secretary and Treasurer of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. He also served on various missionary and other committees.

In 1870 he was called to St. Jude's Episcopal Church in Glasgow, where he remained until 1876, when the work there being uncongenial, and his two sons having died within two months, he accepted the offer to become the associate of the Rev. Dr. Morgan, of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, New York, where he has since remained.

Mr. Courtney is an able and accomplished preacher, and will undoubtedly make an impression in Chicago, whither he will proceed immediately after Easter, March 28th.

NEW YORK CITY.—REV. FREDK. COURTNEY, OF ST. THOMAS'S CHURCH.

THE BOILING LAKE AT DOMINICA.

ON Sunday, January 4th, shortly after eleven o'clock in the morning, a volcanic eruption occurred in the Grande Soufrière district of Dominica, West Indies. This district is situated near to the centre of the southern third of the island; and before the late eruption its volcanic energy was manifested by the action of four solfataras and by the Boiling Lake. Shortly before eleven o'clock the sky became overcast and heavy rain began to fall, accompanied with thunder and lightning. Soon afterwards the sky darkened, the rain poured in torrents; a powerful odor of sulphureted hydrogen pervaded the atmosphere; the lightning increased in vividness; and thunder of a peculiar sound, and without the usual reverberation, crashed for several minutes, with intermissions of so short a duration as to be scarcely recognizable. After the lapse of about five minutes the darkness began to lift, and it was then seen that the rain was bringing down volcanic ash of a light grayish color and metallic lustre.

The scene of the eruption is about eight miles east from Roseau, and the volcanic ash was blown to the west, by the trade wind, in a narrow belt about one and a half miles wide. The area over which the ash fell must have been at least twenty square miles.

Strictly speaking, a new crater has not formed, for the eruption was only the breaking into activity of an old volcano. The Grande Soufrière district formerly included four solfataras and the Boiling Lake, and the most active of these solfataras was situated in the crater of the volcano which has again become active. With the exception of a part of the bottom and southern side occupied by the soufrière—as a solfatara is called in the West Indies—the crater was clothed with trees, many of which were of large size and considerable age; and a stream of strongly ferruginous water rising at its southwestern extremity, ran through the ovoid basin and found an exit at the break in the northeastern side. The path to the Boiling Lake passed through the crater, and the north bank of the chalybeate stream—which has now entirely disappeared—was the usual place selected for an encampment by those visiting the lake.

PROF. J. LAWRENCE SMITH.

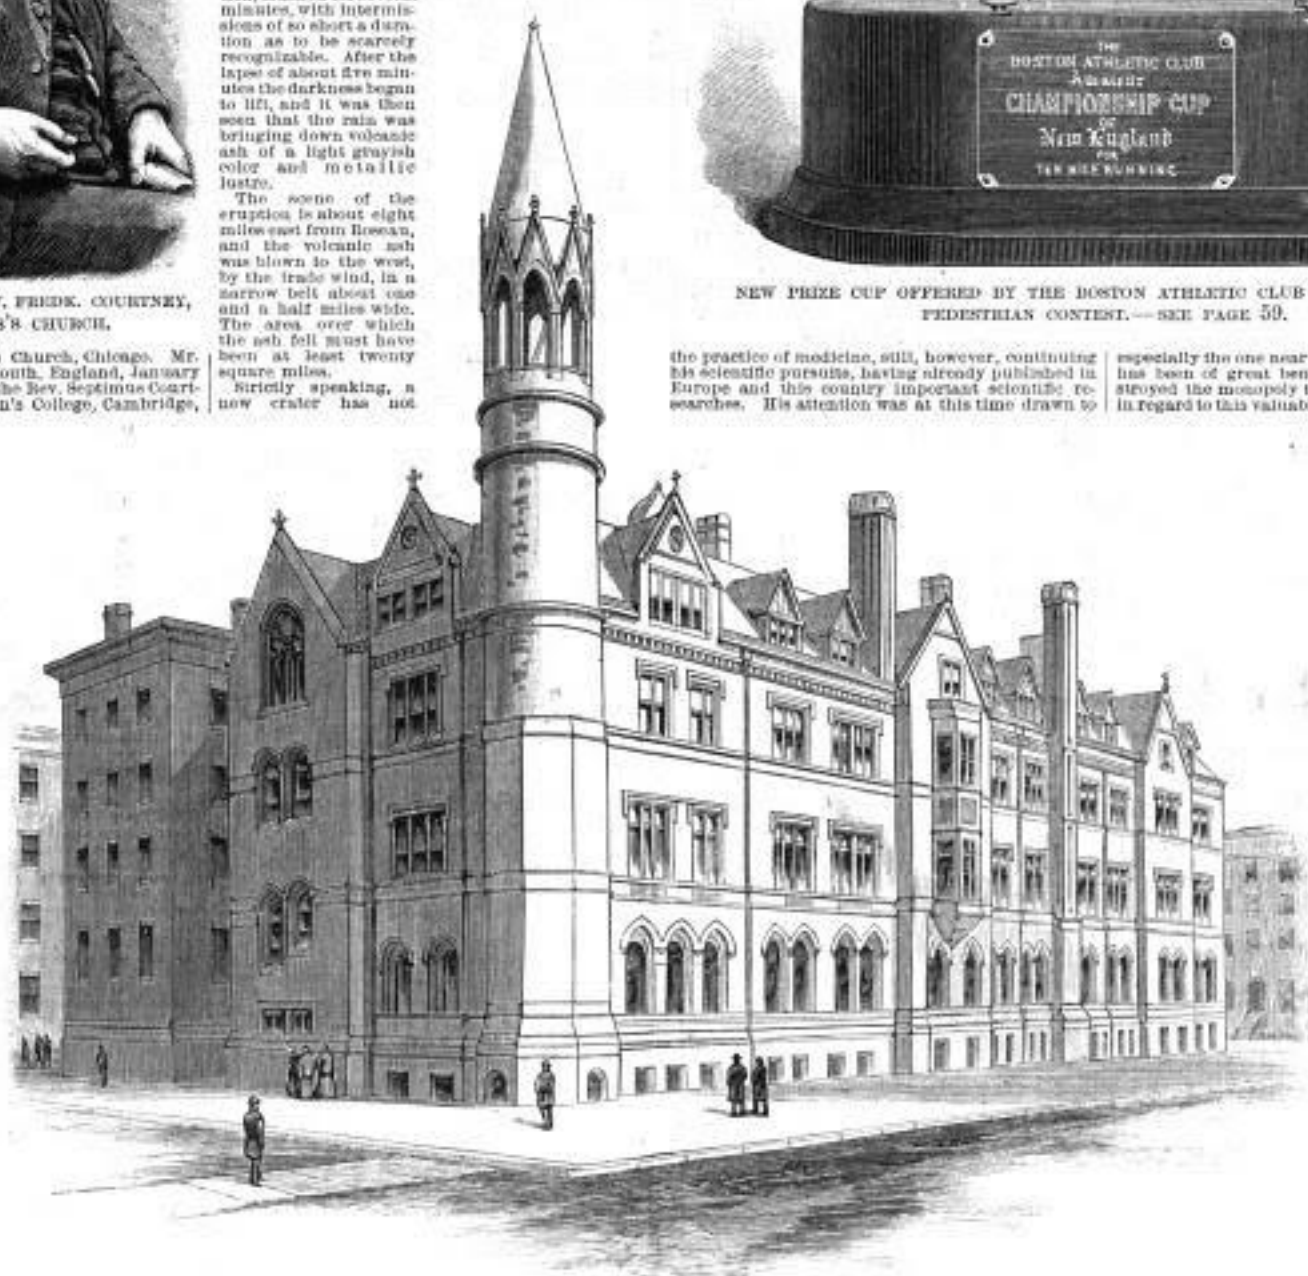
PROFESSOR SMITH was born in Charleston, S. C., December 17th, 1818, and was educated in the college of his native city and in the University of Virginia. Much of his time in early life was devoted to the study of pure and applied mathematics. In determining a practical pursuit in life Dr. Smith selected that of civil engineering, and after devoting two years to its various branches, in connection with geology and mining engineering, he was employed as one of the assistant engineers of the railroad projected in 1838 between Charleston and Cincinnati. This pursuit not proving congenial to his scientific tastes, he turned to the study of medicine, and in three years graduated at the Medical College of South Carolina, and afterwards continued his medical and scientific studies in Europe for three years longer under the leading professors of France and Germany. Chemistry he studied under Liebig, Dumas and Orfila, and mineralogy and geology under Elie de Beaumont and Dufrenoy.

On his return to his home in 1844 he commenced the practice of medicine, still, however, continuing his scientific pursuits, having already published in Europe and this country important scientific researches. His attention was at this time drawn to the remarkable marl deposits in his native State, and he pointed out the large amount of phosphate of lime in these marls, from which there are now obtained immense quantities of phosphatic nodules, out of which large quantities of artificial manure are manufactured annually.

In 1846 he was induced to go to Turkey at the request of the United States Secretary of State in answer to a request from the Sultan, and for four years occupied the position of mining engineer to His Majesty. His labors there resulted in most important discoveries of coal, chrome ore, emery and other useful minerals that have since been of vast pecuniary benefit to that country. His discovery of emery in several localities in Asia Minor, especially the one near the ancient City of Ephesus, has been of great benefit to the world, for it destroyed the monopoly that the island of Naxos had in regard to this valuable mineral, and immediately reduced its price to one-third the price at which it was then selling.

Shortly after his return to America he was appointed to the chair of chemistry in the University of Virginia, but did not retain the position long, responding to a call to a similar position in the University of Louisville, having married, a short while before, a lady of that city, the daughter of the late Hon. James Guthrie.

Professor Smith was one of the commissioners to the Paris Exposition of 1867, and made an able report on "The progress and condition of several departments of industrial chemistry." It is very nearly exhaustive of the important subjects to which it is devoted. He was again appointed commissioner to the Exposition of Vienna in 1873.



Professor Smith's original researches are no less than sixty or seventy (among the most important are those on meteorites), and his scientific reports are numerous. He is still actively engaged in his labors, and has very recently published an extensive memoir of the basaltic rock and native iron of Greenland, settling the question in regard to the true origin of masses of iron discovered in 1872 by Nordenskjold. He served last year as a member of the International Congress that met at Paris to consider the subject

KENTUCKY.—PROFESSOR J. LAWRENCE SMITH, OF LOUISVILLE.

NEW PRIZE CUP OFFERED BY THE BOSTON ATHLETIC CLUB FOR THE SPRING PEDESTRIAN CONTEST.—SEE PAGE 59.

NEW YORK CITY.—NEW BUILDINGS OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE ON FORTY-NINTH STREET AND MADISON AVENUE.—SEE PAGE 62.

Digitized by Google

of an interoceanic canal, and his views of the results arrived at by that congress are embodied in a report in which he questions the propriety of the United States Government countenancing the construction of a canal at the present time.

Professor Smith enjoys the highest honors that American science can confer, being a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and having been made president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1872. He is also a corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences of the French Institute, and many of the leading European scientific bodies.

THE NEW BUILDING OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

THE opening of the new building for the Academic Department of Columbia College, New York City, by President Barnard, in January last, marks one great step towards the attainment of an object earnestly desired by all loyal sons and friends of this time-honored institution of learning. As will be seen from the illustration, the new building is a very handsome and substantial structure. With the School of Mines on Fourth Avenue, it forms a most striking contrast with the familiar pile from which so many eminent men have been graduated. The present quarters on the square between Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Streets, Fourth and Madison Avenues, were taken possession of in 1857, only as a temporary refuge. The chief building was originally used as a Deaf and Dumb Asylum, and has never been deemed entirely satisfactory for college purposes. Since 1857 there has been erected on the square a house for the President and a building for the School of Mines—the latter in 1874, at a cost of $150,000—and the estimated valuation of the square and the buildings thereupon before the new building was erected was $530,000. The general library of 17,340 volumes is valued at $40,000; the Law School library of 4,000 volumes at $8,500; the Mining School library of 6,000 volumes at $12,000; the Herbarium, with its botanical library, at $20,000, and the chemical, philosophical and mathematical apparatus and cabinets four-fifths of the same belonging to the School of Mines, at $131,500. The whole amount of property controlled by "the Trustees of Columbia College in the City of New York" is nearly $6,000,000. The property of its Medical School is under the charge of a distinct board of trustees, and their annual financial exhibit finds no place in the statement of the college treasurer.

The nine professorships in the academic department proper, arranged in the order of the official seniority of the present incumbents of them, are as follows: Greek, German, chemistry, mathematics and astronomy, moral and intellectual philosophy and English literature, mathematics, mechanics and physics, Latin, history and political science and international law.

In 1767 the governors of the college established a medical school, which existed till 1813, when the trustees agreed to incorporate it with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, which had originated in 1807. In 1860 this institution was in turn adopted as the "Medical Department of Columbia College," and its diplomas have since borne the signature of the college president. Its building on Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street was first occupied in January, 1856. The number of students in attendance for the last ten years has averaged about 300, the extremes being 209 and 452. The faculty comprises ten full professors and double that number of assistant professors and lecturers. The Law School, founded in 1858, at a time when no systematic instruction in law was given by any public institution in the city, has rapidly gained a very high reputation. The School of Mines was begun as an experiment in 1864, on condition that it should not become a burden upon the general funds of the college, but soon justified its right to live, and now stands scarcely second to the Law School as an example of rapid and prosperous growth. Its faculty comprises eight professors, including four from the academic department, and eighteen assistant instructors. The advance of this school, corresponding to the advance of the scientific department of the University of Pennsylvania, suggests anew the resemblance which exists between the two representative "city colleges" of America. Both were founded at the same time and both sought to get the same Dr. Johnson for first President. Both sent agents to England in pursuit of funds; both fell under suspicion of disloyalty and suspended their functions in the "times which tried men's souls," and at the close of that "unpleasantness" both were thoroughly reconstructed as to their names and governing boards before being allowed to resume their educational work among the ingenuous youth of the two rival cities.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE.

THE Sixteenth Annual Statement of the Continental Life Insurance Company, published herewith, shows an experience in life underwriting which covers nearly all the salient features of the business, and entitles the company to rank among the thoroughly established. During the past year the Continental paid on account of policy holders $615,031, of which $305,615 was for mutual endowments. Its interest and rent receipts were $127,686, or $30,824 more than their death claims. The present surplus on a 4 per cent. basis is $268,750; assets, $2,707,323, and policies in force, 8,394, of which 1,253 were issued, or restored, during 1879.

BOOK NOTICE.

"SOME WOMEN OF TO DAY."—The art of narrative is, perhaps, the most difficult art a novelist has to acquire, and must be learned at the expense of a great deal of time and patience, and an extraordinary application of the intelligence. Balzac deemed the story telling art he possessed to be one of the highest of his attributes, so with Fielding and Dumas. The author of "Some Women of To day," or, may we say, authoress—for we trace the dainty handling of the other sex all through the piece—has done her work right masterfully. She writes graphically and well, and she possesses a luminous imagination, with the knack of discerning and depicting character. There is a finish about her novel worthy the veteran, while its freshness betrays the débutante. Seldom have we perused a book with greater pleasure, seldom laid one aside with a more gracious remembrance. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co.; London: S. Lowe & Son.

Physicians' Fees in Prussia.

THE fees which physicians may charge in Prussia for their services are regulated by law, and according to the most recent ordinance the charge for the first visit to a sick person is fixed at two marks (twenty-five cents standing for a mark), and one mark for each subsequent visit; where, however, several persons belonging to the same family and dwelling in the same house have to be treated at the same time; then, for the second and each succeeding person, only the half of these fees respectively is to be charged. The same rule is to apply to boarding-schools and similar institutions, also to prisons. When there is a consultation of several physicians about the treatment of a sick person, including their personal visits, each physician is to receive for the first consultation five marks, and three marks for each subsequent similar consultation. On the occasion of the first visit to the physician's residence for his medical advice, one mark and a half. For the administration of chloroform, etc., when necessary for the treatment of the patient, three marks.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT BONDS,
And other desirable Investment Securities,
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York,

Buy and sell all issues of Government Bonds, in large or small amounts, at current market prices, and will be pleased to furnish information in reference to all matters connected with investments in Government Bonds.

We are prepared to give information in regard to first class Railway Securities, and to execute orders for the same.

Buy and sell all marketable Stocks and Bonds on commission, at the Stock Exchange and in the open market.

Receive accounts of Banks, Bankers, Merchants and others, and allow interest on daily balances; and for those keeping accounts with us we collect United States coupons and registered interest, and other coupons, dividends, etc., and credit without charge.

☞ We give special attention to orders from Banks, Bankers, Institutions and Investors out of the city, by Mail or Telegraph, to buy or sell Government Bonds, State and Railroad Bonds, Bank Stocks, Railroad Stocks and other securities.

We have issued the Seventh Edition of "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," copies of which can be had on application.

FISK & HATCH.

FUN.

IT shocks one's faith in human nature to be accosted on the street after midnight with: "Uf you blose, gif me a few pennies. I vas a Irish suffererman."

WHEN old Mr. Higginsworth was asked if he took a newspaper, he replied that "since our member of Congress has stopped sending me the Congressional record I don't take any, but I guess I kin get along without it. It never gives much news, anyhow."

THEY were sitting together Sunday evening, with an album or two between them, when she pleasantly asked: "How would you like to have my mother live with you?" In just fifteen seconds he had his hat down half way over his face, and was bolting through the gate.

OVERHEARD AT A RESTAURANT. Loquacious Lady—"And you Chinese actually eat rice with chopsticks? How funny!" Chinaman—"You tinkee so?" Loquacious Lady—"Of course. Why, we use a spoon." Chinaman—"So didee we, madam, long 'go when Chinee muchee barbarian, too!"

ON THE HORNS OF A DILEMMA.—Polly: "Well, Pat, what is it now? Would ye rather look a bigger fool than ye are, or be a bigger fool than ye look?" Pat: "Sure now, my darlint, and I'll be both till I find which side o' the argimint yer on yerself, whin, by jabers, I'll join ye, right or wrong."

VISITOR—"Lee,' 'ow did it 'appen?" Mrs. O'Shaney (the nurse, whose patient has had a relapse)—"Will, now, she wor a-gittin' on foinely, she wor, whin all av a suddint she tuk a violent cold. No one cudn't tell 'ow it 'appened, but it 'is my belafe they gev her gruel out av a dhamp bowle."

AT a crowded French theatre a woman fell from the gallery to the pit, and was picked up by one of the spectators, who, hearing her groaning, asked her if she was much injured. "Much injured!" exclaimed the woman, "I should think I am. I have lost the best seat in the very middle of the front row."

"UNSATISFACTORY ARITHMETIC." — Parson — "I wish to complain, Mrs. Diggins, of the conduct of your daughter at the Sunday school to-day; it was rude in the extreme." Mrs. D.—"Ah, it's what they taches her at that theer Board School as does it. Yesterday she come home, and she says, 'Mother, they are a-taching of me vulgar fractions.' What can you expex after that, sir?"

"BECAME SOUND AND WELL."

HATCHER'S STATION, Ga.

R. V. PIERCE, M.D.:

Dear Sir—My wife, who had been ill for over two years, and had tried many other medicines, became sound and well by using your FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION. My niece was also cured by its use, after several physicians failed to do her any good.

Yours truly, THOMAS J. METHVIN.

"BEST OF ALL."

BALTIMORE, Md., March 5th, 1879.

DR. R. V. PIERCE:

Dear Sir—My family have used your FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION, and it has done all that is claimed for it. It is the best of all preparations for women complaints. I recommend it to all families.

G. S. WATCHMAN, Druggist.

ASTHMA.—Extract from the "Life of Washington Irving," by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving, Vol. IV., page 212:

"The doctor prescribed, as an experiment, what had been suggested by Dr. (O. W.) Holmes on his late visit: JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA, a teaspoonful in a wine-glass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result."

WHAT changed your gray hair to its natural color? MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Sold by Druggists.

It is a very old bit of philosophy which declares stagnation to be an impossibility. Things which do not improve must deteriorate. Perhaps this is why Mr. Welch of the ST. NICHOLAS so assiduously watches his house, perfecting carefully every arrangement in his seemingly perfect hostelry. The guests of the ST. NICHOLAS are made so comfortable that they might almost imagine they were in their own palatial residence. The ST. NICHOLAS has had a very large list of arrivals this week, and it looks as if the Spring trade had already commenced.—Boston (Mass.) Home Journal.

THE Improved Rifle offered for sale by the CHESTER RIFLE CO., of Jersey City, N. J., at the low price of $6.50, is without doubt the best bargain in firearms ever presented to the public. They are handsomely made, and cannot fail to give satisfaction, being very accurate for either sporting or target purposes. Any of our readers requiring a reliable gun cannot do better than secure a CHESTER.

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE.—Best relish in use. For family use preferable to all others.

A FAVORABLE NOTORIETY.—The good reputation of "Brown's Bronchial Troches" for the relief of Coughs, Colds and Throat diseases has given them a favorable notoriety.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE gives speedy benefit for night sweats of consumption. It strengthens the nerves and muscles, and promotes recovery.

DON'T wait until you are disabled by accident before insuring in THE TRAVELERS.

A KEEN AGONY.

AFTER a trusted family doctor has prescribed almost everything in the pharmacopœia for the relief of his patient, and at last reluctantly says, "Use HOP BITTERS," it is agonizing to reflect that if he had said so before, how much of anguish and expense might have been saved.

THE Asbestos Roofing (with white or gray Fireproof Coating), now in use in all parts of the world, is the only reliable substitute for tin. It is adapted for steep or flat roofs in all climates. It costs only half as much as tin, and can be easily applied by any one. H. W. Johns Manufacturing Co., 87 Maiden Lane, Sole Manufacturers.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Sold only in soldered tins, ½ and lb., labeled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists,
LONDON, ENG.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY.
Ouida's Great Novel,
MOTHS.
12mo., 543 pages. Extra cloth, $1.25.

 For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price by
J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Philadelphia.

Friedrichshall
BITTERWATER.
To be had of all Dealers in Mineral Waters.

Fever & Ague Remedy.
SURE CURE.
Price, 75c. Stamps received. Send for circular.
PODOLSKI, Druggist, cor. Sixth and Poplar Sts. Phila., Pa. Mention this paper.

TO LOVERS OF FLOWERS.
My list of Seeds comprises 450 varieties, which includes all the old favorites and most of the new sorts.
On each packet there is an engraving and a description of the flower, the COMMON, GERMAN and BOTANIC name of the seed, also full directions for planting.
The sorts named by parties ordering, or my selection, sent by mail, postpaid, at the following rates:
Per 7 packets, 25c.; per 15 pkts., 50c.; per 32 pkts., $1.
As special inducements to clubs I offer 200 pkts. for $5.
F. E. McALLISTER, 29 Fulton St., N. Y.
Postage stamps accepted. State where you saw this adv't.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE
Insurance Company
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Sixteenth Annual Statement, January 1st, 1880:

Income for 1879.

From premium receipts	$318,975 82
From interest and rents	127,686 57
From all other receipts	19,706 98	$466,369.47

Disbursed, 1879.

To POLICY HOLDERS:
Am't paid death claims	$ 97,272.51
Am't paid matured endowments	205,615 23
Paid dividends purchased and lapsed policies	309,863.74	612,691.48

Expenses, 1879.

Commissions and salaries paid agents	$ 62,306.86
Salaries paid officers and clerks	33,285.33
Medical examiner's fees	6,376 00
Printing, stationery, advertising, postage and charges	29,892 36
Taxes and legal expenses	11,729 66	143,651.21

Assets, Jan. 1, 1880.

Loans on real estate	$639,042.99
Collateral loans and bills receivable	336,856.84
Premium notes and liens on policies in force	828,477.82
Real estate owned by company	600,903 93
U. S. State, county and town bonds	122,005.97
Railroads bonds	21,640.00
Trust Co. stocks	6,150 00
Cash in office and banks	96,326.09
Agents' balances	34,003.94
Furniture, fixtures and safes	17,817.74
Premiums in course of collection and deferred and semi-annual and quarterly (less 50 per cent. for collection)	28,866.42
Interest due and accrued	96,301.64
	$2,707,323.28

LIABILITIES.

Amount required to re-insure all outstanding policies (4½ per cent. interest) estimated	$2,334,735.00
Death losses and matured endowments awaiting proof	41,122.00
	$2,375,858.00

Surplus - - $421,465.28

	No.	Amount.
Policies issued and restored during the year	1,253	$1,357,701.00
Policies in force December 31st, 1879	8,394	8,460,993.00

JAMES S. PARSONS, President.
ARTHUR S. WINCHESTER, Vice Pres't.
ROBT. E. BEECHER, Secretary.
HORACE R. MORLEY, Actuary.
WM. M. HUDSON, M. D., Med. Adviser.
HENRY P. BARTON, Supt. Agencies.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

1854 THE ORIGINAL 1880
GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED AT
610 Chestnut St., Philad'a. 610

Are now GIVING AWAY to PURCHASERS of Books Gold Watches, Silk Dresses, Mantel Clocks, Silverware, Jewelry, and a large variety of useful and valuable articles—FREE! We sell at the LOWEST PRICES all the New and Standard Books in sets or single volumes, and give a Handsome Premium with each book.

☞ Pleasant and profitable employment for everybody. Send for our New Catalogue of Books and Gifts for 1880. Terms to agents and persons forming clubs. PHILAD'A PREMIUM BOOK CO.,
C. M. GILBERT, President. 610 Chestnut St., Philad'a.

SICK HEADACHE
POSITIVELY CURED BY
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
AND THE PRICE IS
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them; but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail. CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM
GOUT OR GRAVEL. Schlumberger is the only patentee in France. L. A. Paris, 102 W. 14th St., N.Y., his only agent for the celebrated French Salicylates, which relieve at once, cure in four days, without dangerous consequences, their purity being controlled according to French laws by the Board of Pharmacy of Paris. Beware—The genuine has red seal and signature of agent on each box. $1, post-paid. Send stamp for pamphlet. Thousands of references.

CHEAP MUSIC
Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 32 Park Row, New York.

TO THE PUBLIC.
BOKER'S BITTERS.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS.
In accordance with the desire frequently expressed, both in the United States and abroad, these Bitters, so long and justly celebrated for their fineness as a cordial, and for their medicinal virtues against all diseases of, or arising from, the digestive organs, will henceforth be put up and sold not only in quart, but
ALSO IN PINT BOTTLES,
for medicinal, family, traveling, and other purposes. To be had at all the principal druggists', grocers', liquor-merchants', etc. L. FUNKE, Jr., Sole Agent, New York, 78 John Street. Post Office Box 1,029.

AGENTS WANTED
FOR THE
Best Selling Books in the Country.
For catalogues and terms address
PORTER & COATES,
S. W. cor. Ninth and Chestnut Sts., Phila.

CANDY
Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Orders to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

Digitized by Google

Amusements.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. BEGINS AT 8.
Last week but one.
ABBEY'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
SPANISH STUDENTS, | THE GREAT LORELLAS, | PRINCE ROYAL KATSNOSHIS.
MAFFIT AND FRASER. A WORLD OF NOVELTIES.
Come and see the CRAZE PUZZLE DONE—13, 15 & 14.
MATINEES WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.
ABBEY & HICKEY.....Proprietors.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
EIGHTH WEEK
And AUDIENCES still the LARGEST and MOST FASHIONABLE in the city. The PERFECTION of COMEDY, SPECTACLE and MUSIC, A CHORUS of SEVENTY, and set of LIVING CHESS FIGURES by THIRTY-TWO CHILDREN, Seats may be secured for a month ahead, ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY. ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
THE ROYAL MIDDY.
EVERY EVENING AT 8.
Matinee,
Wednesday and Saturday at 2.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.....FRENCH OPERA.
Lessee and Manager.....Mr. MAURICE GRAU.
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 8TH,
Return for three (3) weeks only of Mr. MAURICE GRAU'S GREAT FRENCH OPERA COMPANY,
Mlle. PAOLA MARIE, Mlle. LEROUX BOUVARD, Mlle. ANGELE, M. VICTOR CAPOUL,
A change of opera nightly.
SEATS AT BOX OFFICE FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE AND 111 BROADWAY.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
Seventh and last week of
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17th, MATINEE at 1:30, in aid of the IRISH RELIEF FUND.
REGULAR MATINEE SATURDAY AT 1:30.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Mr. A. M. PALMER.....Sole Lessee and Manager
Begins at 8¼ over at 10:55. Saturday Matinee begins at 1:45.
NINTH WEEK AND CONTINUED SUCCESS
of Mr. Edgar Fawcett's Play,
THE FALSE FRIEND.
This fascinating play, with its splendid scenes—the most magnificent ever set upon this stage—and with a cast of characters made from the
BEST COMPANY IN AMERICA,
Will be given every evening and at the Saturday Matinee until further notice.
Seats secured two weeks ahead.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
"WIDOW BEDOTT."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
THE TOURISTS IN THE PULLMAN PALACE CAR.
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

NATIONAL DISPENSARY
419 Arch Street, Philadelphia.
N. D. OZONIZED REMEDIES for all Diseases. Permanently cures Paralysis, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Liver Complaint, Cancer and Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Tumors and all Blood Diseases, Nervousness, Baldness and Grayness, Tape Worm, etc. Our Practice is Eclectic. Patients can be treated successfully at their homes, if they will describe their symptoms carefully. Also, will be provided with Hygienic Board. Electricity a specialty. Ozone Inhalations. Agents wanted. ISABEL M. MITCHELL, M.D., Prop'r.

KEEP'S SHIRTS,
Gloves, Umbrellas, Underwear, Etc.
SAMPLES AND CIRCULARS MAILED FREE.
KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
631, 633, 635, 637 Broadway, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's
SUNDAY MAGAZINE.
Each Number Contains
128 PAGES QUARTO, 100 BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS
Published on the 10th of every month. Annual subscription, $3. $1.50 will be received for six months; $1 will be received for four months. 25 cents per number, sent postpaid.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53 55 & 57 Park Place New York.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.
50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.
50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.
$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.
18 Elegant New Style Chromo Cards, with name, 10 cts, postpaid. GEO. I. REED & CO., Nassau, N. Y.
50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.
52 Gold, Crystal, Lace, Perfumed & Chromo Cards, name in Gilt & Jet, 10c. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

A BREECH-LOADING REPEATING RIFLE FOR $6.50. THE IMPROVED "CHICHESTER."
Weight from 5 to 8 Pounds. Length of Barrel 22 Inches.

The many readers of this Paper will no doubt remember, during the past six months, having seen our advertisement of the new celebrated CHICHESTER RIFLE, accompanied by flattering editorial notices in the New York "Tribune," "Atlas," "World," and other leading newspapers throughout the country. In response to a universal demand from all quarters, we decided to materially improve our rifle, and as now offered it is the most complete weapon of the kind in existence. The simple addition of PEEP and GLOBE SIGHTS (for which other manufacturers charge from $2 to $6) is worthy of special attention. Notwithstanding the immense advance in both metal and labor we shall offer the CHICHESTER with all the new improvements at the same proportionate RED ROCK price as before. WE DEFY COMPETITION from any of the monopolist high price manufacturers, and as the "New York Tribune" and other papers justly remarked, after the test bargain in Fire-arms ever presented to the American people. These Rifles have been in course of active manufacture for over one year. The Patents which cover them being dated March 26th, 1872, May 27th, 1878. CHICHESTER RIFLES are WARRANTED and GUARANTEED fit to made of as fine material and in as thorough a manner in every respect as any fire-arm in the World. Every part is made by special and expensive machinery, and in very large lots. Fire-arms, like Sewing Machines and Pianos, have always paid an enormous profit to the manufacturers; the actual cost being but a small part of the selling price. The CHICHESTER will never be sold at the immense profit asked by the manufacturers of other fire-arms, but only for the purpose of introduction will it be sold at the present price, and only for a limited time. We know this to be in the end the most effective and cheapest way to introduce any meritorious article. We GUARANTEE the CHICHESTER to be equal in MATERIAL and WORKMANSHIP to any Rifle in the World. The best material only is used. The barrels are 22 inches long, made of steel, and rifled in the most careful manner. The trimmings are all nickel-plated. Black Walnut Stock and very handsomely designed hard rubber pistol grip. Adjustable PEEP and GLOBE Sights, case-hardened hammer and trigger, and the best of steel locks. BEAR IN MIND this is no old fashioned paper cartridge army gun, big bored and clumsy, but a small revolver with sleek wood stock. It is a BRAN NEW REPEATER, using regular Metallic cartridges of 22, 32 and 38 calibre, which are sold everywhere. FIRES SEVEN TIMES with one loading, and is very ACCURATE and EFFECTIVE at both short and long distances. It can be loaded in fifteen seconds, and every shot discharged in ten seconds if necessary. Can be used as a single shot rifle if desired. Every one is shot and thoroughly tested before leaving the factory. Every one is numbered and a WARRANT is given for each, signed by the Company. We have targets made with the CHICHESTER at mid range, that cannot be beaten. Each one is packed separately in a neat case, with cleaning rod, &c., and sent to any address on receipt of price. We will get special rates from the Express Companies and can guarantee that the Express Charges will not amount to over 50 or 75 cents to most parts of the country. We cannot of course send by mail.

WE WILL SEND ONE CHICHESTER SEVEN SHOT REPEATING RIFLE as described above, to any address for $6.50, carefully boxed, and when cash accompanies order, will give FREE a box of long range rifle Metallic Cartridges. The Office of the CHICHESTER RIFLE CO. is in Jersey City, N. J., near terminus of the Pennsylvania Rail Road, and within one block of the Ferries (ten minutes' rail from New York City.) If you have acquaintances in New York or vicinity, ask them to step into our salerooms and examine the CHICHESTER RIFLES, and Targets made with them at long and short range, and read testimonials received from well-known sportsmen.

For our responsibility we refer to the principal Banks and Express Companies of Jersey City. In ordering send Money by Registered Letter, Post Office Money Order, Draft on New York, or, if preferred, forward to any Express Agent in Jersey City, with instructions to pay money to us on delivery of the Rifle. Make all Checks and Money Orders payable to CHICHESTER RIFLE CO., W. M. FITCHETT, Treasurer, 51 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, New Jersey, U. S. A.
Incorporated under Laws of the State of New Jersey.

BROWNING'S C&C CORDIAL
FOR Coughs,
Colds,
Bronchitis,
Hoarseness,
Tickling or Dryness of the Throat,
Sore Throat,
Cold in the Head,
Croup,
Influenza,
Whooping-Cough,
Cold in the Bowels,
Asthmatic Coughs,
and relief of Consumptives.

DR. BROWNING is a regular graduate of medicine, a skillful pharmacist, and a thorough chemist. His "C. & C." (Cough and Cold) Cordial is not the result of mere chance, but of long scientific research in chemistry and medicine, as is plainly seen by the rapidity of its action and its unparalleled efficacy. The expense in its manufacture is at least five times as great as that of any other medicine upon the market, and yet it is sold at the exceedingly low price of 50c.
☞ Sample bottles (for a short time only) 25 cts.
W. CHAMPION BROWNING, M. D., Proprietor, 1117 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
☞ FOR SALE BY THE PROPRIETOR AND ALL DRUGGISTS.

H. W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS ROOFING
The Asbestos Roofing (with white or light-gray Fire-proof Coating) is now in use in all parts of the world, and is the only reliable substitute for tin. It is adapted for steep or flat roofs in all climates. It costs only half as much as tin, and can be easily applied by any one.
☞ Note the address, send for samples, and be sure and get the genuine, which is manufactured only by
H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,
Sole Manufacturers of genuine Asbestos Liquid Paints, Boiler Coverings, etc.
Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

KNOW THYSELF.

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; Or, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.
Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jewelled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail, postpaid.
The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."
An Illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.
The author refers, by permission, to JOS. S. FISHER, president; W. L. P. INGRAHAM, vice-president; W. PAINE, M.D.; C. S. GAUNTT, M.D.; H. J. DOUGET, M.D.; R. R. KLINE, M.D., J. R. HOLCOMB, M.D., N. R. LYNCH, M.D., and M. R. O'CONNELL, M.D., Faculty of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; also the Faculty of the American University of Philadelphia; also Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., president of the National Medical Association.
Address, DR. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.
HEAL THYSELF

50 Pinature, Chrome, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 50 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

Frank Leslie's
POPULAR MONTHLY.
128 PAGES QUARTO. OVER 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.
Published on the 15th of each month. Price 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.
Mme. Julian's Specific is the only unfailing remedy for removing radically and permanently all annoying disfigurements from the Lips, Cheek, Chin, Brow, Arms, etc., without injuring the Skin; no acids used. Ladies may address or apply to Mme. JULIAN, No. 48 East 26th St., New York.

ANTI-MOTH PAPER.
Absolute Protection against Moths.
CHEAP, CLEAN, FRAGRANT, HEALTHFUL.
Sold by all Druggists.
CAMPBELL, HALL & CO.,
Samples Free. 110 & 112 NASSAU ST., N. Y.

DE VENOGE & CIE. CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY.
The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.
L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

YOUNG MEN And Older People—We send on 30 DAYS' TRIAL our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Trusses, and other appliances, to those suffering from Nervousness, Nervous Debility, Weaknesses, or Lost Vitality, from any cause; or to those afflicted with Rheumatism, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Liver or Kidney Troubles, &c., or Ruptures. Speedy Cure Guaranteed. Send at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

MAMMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. Dorman Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE | THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 233 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF | By sending 35 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

Imitation Gold Watches.
$5, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 225 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3026.

40 Skeins German Worsted, 21 colors and shades, 12 Perforated Mottoes, and over 100 New Designs for Worsted Work, postpaid by mail for only $1. Best dollar package ever offered. Worth about Three Dollars at Retail Prices. F. W. Gardiner, LYNN, MASS.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & Co., 120 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

75 gilt-edge, chromo, snowflake, glass, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING CO., Fair Haven, Ct.

20 Lovely Rosebud Chromo Cards, or 20 all Motto, with name, 10c. NASSAU CARD CO., Nassau, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell the NEW BOOK,
FARMING FOR PROFIT
TELLS HOW TO
Cultivate all the Farm Crops in the Best Manner; Breed, Feed and Care for Stock; Grow Fruit; Manage Farm Business; Make Happy Homes, and
How to Make Money on the Farm.
Every Farmer should have a copy. 860 Pages. 140 Illustrations. Send for circulars to
J. C. McCURDY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY
in a legitimate business within 60 days, where small capital is required, and investment can be redeemed at any time, send for information to
H. M. LEE & CO., 33 Broadway, New York.

LADY AGENTS WANTED.
In every town in the United States. No capital required Address JUVENILINE CO., P. O. Box 2,281, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED To sell the best and fastest-selling Books and Bibles. Low prices, excellent terms, exclusive territory. Address BRADLEY, GARRETSON & Co., 66 N. 4th St., Phila., Pa.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

HOPE FOR THE DEAF
Garmore's Artificial Ear Drums
PERFECTLY RESTORE THE HEARING and perform the work of the Natural Drum. Always in position, but invisible to others. All Conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. We refer to those using them. Send for descriptive circular. GARMORE EAR DRUM CO., CINCINNATI, O.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.
Central Park Brewery
AND
Bottling Company.
Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159—165 East Fifty-Ninth Street, Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Streets, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.
BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.
The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

VENUS SAFETY BELT LADIES' FRIEND
It is an indispensible and valuable article that supplies a want long felt by every lady. It is a self-adjustable and perfect fitting belt, combining security with ease and comfort. By mail for 60c. 2 for $1. Send waist measure. Lady agents wanted. N. E. Medical Institute, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

THE SPRING FASHIONS
JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.
Frank Leslie's
LADY'S JOURNAL.
THE
Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal
IN THE COUNTRY.
The Spring Fashions just received from Paris.
COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY,
EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.
ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.
SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.
The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive Short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. Its ads and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.
Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.
FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

THE TABLES TURNED.

How our Streets will look next Summer as the result of the Chinese invasion.

A. T. Stewart & Co.

HAVE OPENED AN UNEQUALED COLLECTION OF

Rich Dress Fabrics

The LATEST STYLES, MANUFACTURES And COLORINGS, INCLUDING AN ASSORTMENT of ELEGANT

Silk AND Wool Novelties

In BROCADES, STRIPES, FIGURES, Etc.

Khyber Buntings,

LIGHT SHADES, WITH PRINTED BORDERS in JAPANESE DESIGNS for STREET or HOUSE WEAR. Also, a FULL LINE of

Cashmeres and Merinos

ALL QUALITIES in LIGHT SHADES for SPRING.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $3.00.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,
DETROIT, MICH.

COLUMBIA BICYCLE

A practical road machine. Indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. Send 3c. stamp for 24-page catalogue with price list and full information, or 10 cts. for catalogue and copy of "The Bicycling World." THE POPE MFG. CO., 59 SUDBURY ST., Boston, Mass.

MABIE, TODD & BARD.

GOLD PENS.

Pencils, Holders, Cases, etc.

180 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for Price-List.

Our Goods are for sale by First-class Dealers in U. S.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price-list.

CHAS. W. COPELAND,
Sole Manufacturer,
BOSTON, MASS.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

THE Admiration
OF THE
WORLD.
Mrs. S. A. Allen's
WORLD'S Hair Restorer
IS PERFECTION!

FOR its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and QUICKLY CHANGING GRAY OR WHITE HAIR to its natural youthful COLOR and BEAUTY.

IT IS NOT A DYE.

It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful color and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. DANDRUFF is quickly and permanently removed. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF CHESTER....Saturday, March 20, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, March 25, 3 P.M.
CITY OF BERLIN.....Saturday, April 3, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, April 8, 3 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $60, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 33 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 305 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

COOK'S GRAND EXCURSIONS

TO EUROPE!

1880. For the Summer of 1880,
ANNUAL MAY PARTY.
Grand Annual Educational Vacation Party.
Annual Midsummer Party.

Pamphlet, containing full particulars, with MAP OF EUROPE, sent free on application. Tourist Tickets for Independent Travelers, by all routes.

Cook's Excursionist contains fares for over 1,000 tours. By mail, 10 cents.

Address, THOMAS COOK & SON,
261 Broadway, New York. P. O. Box 4197.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Grand $$ Organ, Most Golden Tongue Reeds, Walnut Case, warranted 6 years, Stool & Book $90. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $145 to $800. Before you buy beauty write me, Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

Read the New Story!

"The Magic of a Face,"

Commenced in No. 774 of

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

FISHERMEN!
TWINES AND NETTING
MANUFACTURED BY
WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md.
☞ Send for Price-List, naming your County and State.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Over One Thousand Royal Octavo Pages, nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. Amusing, Instructive and Religious. The cheapest, largest and best selling book ever published. Agents wanted. Exclusive territory given. For terms, circulars and territory, address the Publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Copies mailed on receipt of retail price, Three Dollars.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

Boston Journal,

Philadelphia Times,

Baltimore American,

Cincinnati Commercial,

Chicago Tribune,

St. Louis Globe-Democrat,

San Francisco Bulletin,

Louisville Courier-Journal,

Washington Star.

We especially represent and solicit business for the daily papers named above.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.

Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce St.,
Printing House Square, opposite the Tribune Building,
NEW YORK.

AND NOT WEAR OUT.

SOLD by Watchmakers, by mail, 50 cents. Circulars free. J. BUSCH & Co., 58 Cortlandt St., N.Y.

CELERY

As a Remedy for Nervous Diseases

WHAT THE MEDICAL PROFESSION SAY ABOUT IT,

AND

The Good Results Attending its Use

IN

Headache, Neuralgia, Nervousness, Indigestion, Sleeplessness, and Paralysis.

CELERY has only come into public notice within the last few years as a nervine, but scientific experiments and experience have proved beyond a doubt that it controls nervous irritation and periodic nervous and sick headaches to a marked degree.

Brown-Sequard says that Celery contains more nerve food than any other vegetable or substance found in nature. Celery was first discovered and used as a nervine by French physicians, about 1867. But a combination of the EXTRACT OF CELERY AND CHAMOMILE, which has been but recently introduced to the profession and the public by Dr. C. W. Benson, has produced such marvelous results in curing nervousness and headaches, and especially nervous and sick headaches, neuralgia, paralysis, indigestion and sleeplessness, that it has excited public attention and newspaper comments, and many physicians have tested the merits of this preparation with the best results, as quoted below from a few:

WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY.

Dr. Benson's preparation of Celery and Chamomile for nervous diseases is the most important addition made to the materia medica in the last quarter of a century.—Dr. J. W. J. Englar, of Baltimore.

Dr. Benson's Pills are worth their weight in gold in nervous and sick headache.—Dr. A. H. Schlector, of Baltimore.

Dr. Benson's Pills for the cure of neuralgia are a success.—Dr. P. G. Holman, of Christiansburg, Pa.

These Pills are a special preparation, only for the cure of special diseases, as named, and for these diseases they are worthy of a trial by all intelligent sufferers. They are prepared expressly to cure sick headache, nervous headache, dyspeptic headache, neuralgia, nervousness, paralysis, sleeplessness, and indigestion, and will cure any case. Price, 50 cents, postage free. Sold by all druggists. Depot, 106 North Eutaw St., Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 7 6TH AVE.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards (which &c. (Self-inker $5) 11 larger sizes For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

A. WERNER & CO.,

SALESROOM, 308 BROADWAY, N. Y. WINE CELLARS, 18 & 20 Park Place, N. Y.

Pioneers of Domestic Champagnes.

Try "THE AMERICA,"

The Most Popular Brand of the Age.

Digitized by Google

[March 27, 1880

CHINESE LAUNDRY
OF
SAM LEE

RVANTS

CELERY

As a Remedy for Nerv. Diseases.

WHAT THE MEDICAL PROFESSION SAY ABOUT IT,

AND

The Good Results Attendi its Use

IN

Headache, Neuralgia, Nervousn Indigestion, Sleeplessness, and Paralysis.

CELERY has only come into public notice within a few years as a nervine, but seventh its great and experience have proved beyond a doubt its va in the nervous irritation and periodic nervous ex headaches to a marked degree.

Brown-Sequard says that Celery contains more blood than any other vegetable or edible known to mankind. Celery was first discovered and used as a nerv by the French physicians, about 1847. But a combinat the EXTRACT OF CELERY AND CHAMOMILE has been but recently introduced to the profession the public by Dr. C. W. Benson, has produced astonis curative results in curing nervousness and headache especially nervous and sick headaches, perhaps no other, indigestion and sleeplessness, that it has not prostration, nervous attention and brain power consumed, as not physicians have tested the merits of the popular with the best results, as quoted below from the

WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY.

Dr. Benson's preparation of Celery and Chamomile for nervous diseases is the most important addition to the materia medica in the last quarter of a century.—Dr. J. W. J. Eagle, of Baltimore.

Dr. Benson's Pills are worth their weight in gold for nervous and sick headache.—Dr. A. E. Sturm, Philadelphia.

Dr. Benson's Pills for the cure of neuralgia are unsurpassed.—Dr. P. G. Holman, of Christiansburg, Va.

These Pills are a special preparation, only for the cure of special diseases, as named, and for these complaints are worthy of a trial by all sufferers. They are prepared expressly to cure sick headache, nervous headache, dyspeptic headache, neuralgia, nervousness, paralysis, sleeplessness, and indigestion, and in every case. Price, 50 cents; postage free. Sold by druggists. Depot, 106 North Exter St., Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 7 CEDAR ST.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards, labels, &c. Circular size. For business or pleasure. Everyone should have one. Send stamp for catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., to the manufacturers. Kidder & Co., Boston, Mass.

of Domestic Champagne

THE AMERICA

Most Popular Brand of the age

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by J. W. England, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,279.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, APRIL 3, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly; $1 Weekly $1.00.

MASSACHUSETTS.—SERVING THE VIANDS TO GENTLEMEN GUESTS, AT THE YOUNG LADIES' COOKING SCHOOL OF BOSTON.
From a Sketch by Joseph Becker.—See Page 70.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, APRIL 3, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 12th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

J. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

FAIR PLAY VS PARTISANSHIP.

THE independent press of the country cannot afford to discuss questions like the proposed unseating of Kellogg in the Senate from a party point of view. Probably the most discreditable chapter in the history of the Republican party was the course its representatives pursued in the Senate and House in unseating regularly-elected Democratic members, and putting in their places Republicans who were not the choice of their constituencies. This was done repeatedly and flagrantly during the administrations of Johnson and the two terms of Grant. Neither considerations of justice or respect for the popular vote had any weight with the majority which then controlled the Republican party. The effects of this reckless policy were mischievous in many ways, but more especially for the excuse it has given Democrats to follow this bad Republican example. It is, moreover, a real peril to our institutions, for if, in deciding what should be a judicial question or a mere matter of fact, partisan considerations only have weight, our elections become a farce, and our free institutions are put in the gravest peril. We can stand many irregularities in our political contests, but with fraud universally practiced by both parties, violence will be next in order. The spoils of office are so tempting, the number of positions is so large and the amount of money involved so great, that to win the political prizes there is danger that they who do not scruple to destroy the sanctity of the ballot-box will not hesitate when all that is needed is address and boldness in the employment of force.

In Great Britain election contests are referred to the Judiciary. There is a special Legal Department for passing upon contested elections, or where it is supposed improper means have been used to elect a member of Parliament. We have great need of such a court if we would save the country from the scandals connected with the unseating of Representatives and Senators by unscrupulous party majorities.

The success of the Republicans in acquiring the electoral vote of Louisiana and Florida by means which their opponents believed, perhaps unjustly, to be dishonest, is tempting the Democratic party to attempt the same course if chance shall offer in the next Presidential election. Maine tells the story of what they will try to do if they get the opportunity.

The frequent occurrence of these scandals connected with the counting of votes and the unseating of regularly elected Representatives has so dulled the public conscience, that the country will not be really aware of the peril it involves until open violence is attempted. Congress has been criminally negligent in not having passed a law directing how the electoral vote shall be counted. We believe we represent all fair-minded people of both parties when we call upon the Democratic majority in both Houses to pass a just law on this subject. There is plenty of good material in the propositions made by the late Senator Morton. Senator Edmunds's Bill recently introduced deserves careful consideration. The Democratic party cannot afford to have this Congress adjourn without the passage of some law for honestly counting the electoral vote and settling such disputed questions as are likely to arise. The possibilities are so terrible in the event of this matter being left at loose ends pending an exciting political contest, that the country will not forgive the present majority in the two Houses if they do not make reasonable provision against a recurrence of the dangers and scandals which were associated with the selection of Mr. Hayes as President of the United States.

THE BALANCE OF TRADE AGAINST US.

THE speculative "boom," and the general advance in prices which attended its progress, have turned the balance of trade with foreign countries against us. It was one of the consolations which we derived from the effects of the panic of 1873 that down to a recent period it caused the balance of trade with foreign countries to be largely in our favor. We were selling much more than we were buying. This was especially the case when, notwithstanding the increased yield of our crops of cotton and wheat, Europe took our surplus at greatly advanced prices. The advance on both these great staples was about forty per cent., and there was also a large increase in the quantity exported, so that the increase in the value of the exports of these two articles was fully fifty per cent.

The rise in prices of wheat and cotton naturally added largely to the "purchasing power" of the people of the Southern and Western States. There was consequently a larger demand for the comforts and luxuries of life, followed naturally by a great impetus to manufactures and trade in the Middle and Eastern States. Revival of confidence in railroad property, attended with activity in building and repairing roads, and reacting upon the iron and coal trades, also came in to swell the "boom."

All this was most happy. But what do we now see? Such an increase of cost of production, through the higher value of raw material and advanced wages, that imports have been increased and exports decreased. The balance of trade is against us. Instead of Europe sending home our bonds and their own gold to adjust the balances due us, we shall soon be sending our gold and obligations to pay the balances that we owe. The imports of foreign merchandise at the port of New York for the month of of February just passed were valued at $39,192,810, the largest amount ever recorded, and an increase of $13,607,521, or more than fifty per cent. over February, 1879. The imports of merchandise for two months from January 1st, to March 1st, 1880, were valued at $79,214,926 against $50,267,345 for the corresponding period of 1879. At the usual ratio which the imports of New York bear to those of the whole country, the imports of the two months were about $120,000,000, against $68,000,000 in 1879, or at the rate of $720,000,000 for the year, pointing to an increase of more than $300,000,000 over 1879.

Now let us look after our exports. The total value of merchandise exported from New York in February, 1880, was about $25,891,148, against $27,132,343 in February, 1879, a decrease of twelve per cent., and at the same ratio for the year, the decrease for 1880 from 1879 will be about $80,000,000. Here we have it, then: an increase, say of $300,000,000 in our imports, and a decrease, say of $75,000,000 in our exports—or a change of $375,000,000 to the wrong side of the account.

It must be "plain as a pike staff" to any reflecting man that the speculation which has carried us to this state of affairs needs no fresh or abnormal stimulants such as Secretary Sherman affords it. It has carried us to a change with balance of trade against us, to strikes of labor all over the land, to a point where persons with fixed incomes feel seriously the increased cost of living, and it is carrying us forward to dangerous over trading and over-production. It promotes speculation after a just basis for speculation has ceased, but merely for the sake of speculating. It causes an extension of undervalued and corporate credit beyond the limit of safety, and thus paves the way to another panic. The country has been truly prosperous in the past two years. It can afford to buy more of foreign countries than for several years preceding. But we must not attempt to go too fast, nor to keep up a killing pace when it is not justified by circumstances.

SEX AND THE BALLOT.

IT is now obvious that there is only one way to determine the question whether the privilege of voting had better be extended to women, and that is by experiment. No chatter about "inalienable rights" can settle it; no effort of deductive reasoning can settle it. It is not a problem for either syllogisms or oratory.

A few women in England are allowed to vote on school and local matters, but it is impossible to judge of the expediency of it from so limited a concession. Several States of this country have recently endowed women with certain political rights. In Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Oregon and Texas they can vote for and be elected as school officers; and in Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont and Wisconsin, they are eligible to all school offices, but may not vote. In New York women may hold all school offices, and may vote "in school meetings," but are excluded from the choice of the city boards. Thus in twenty-two States, besides four or five Territories, women have attained a certain well-defined political status, and it is to be added that a large number of women have been chosen Commissioners of Education in these States, and that the proportion of women of the better class who go to the polls is rapidly increasing.

The tendency of this cannot be obscure. Already the Wisconsin Legislature has passed a joint resolution to endow all women above the age of twenty-one with the right to vote for all officers at all times, and great is the frenzy of joy among "champions of the cause" in that Northwestern commonwealth of pioneers. It seems to be a question whether the passage of this joint resolution actually guarantees the ballot to the proscribed sex without amending the Constitution; but it is apparent that a moral victory is won, and that making good the pledge of the joint resolution is only a question of time. This is not to be regretted. The problem must be solved by a free and bold experiment in some large and powerful State. It might as well be tried in Wisconsin as anywhere—now as well as later. It cannot be regarded as an assurance of the establishment of woman-suffrage throughout the land, but only as a tentative movement to enable American men to judge whether it would be politic to make the concession general.

Most people, including women, make a mistake in talking about "rights." Voting is not a "right." It is a machine built for the protection of free society, and whether it is expedient to permit everybody to vote is a question to be decided by those who possess the ballot. What is best for society—that is the test. If electioneering and caucusing should prove seriously to demoralize domestic relations and injure woman, by breaking down the barriers of modesty which should hedge her in, then the ballot should be denied her for the good of all. The mere casting of a ballot is a trifle; it is the influences which lead up to it and surround it that are chiefly to be considered. Experiment may settle the question, and in this mission it is perhaps a matter of congratulation that Wisconsin has been called to the front.

EASTER.

FEW people, even among those who are the devout observers of Easter, have any idea of the vast difficulties which have attended and still attend the task of fixing upon the day when that festival is to occur. There is a general and vague belief that Easter arrives of its own accord, like the Fourth of July or Christmas, but a little reflection will convince any one that this is not true. Easter does not occur with uniform regularity on the same day of the month, but is liable to happen anywhere from the 21st of March to the 25th of April. It is styled a movable feast, but it might with equal propriety be called an oscillating feast, and it oscillates so rapidly, and with such apparently lawless agility, that it is an extremely difficult task for one to put his finger decisively upon it before the ecclesiastical authorities have caught it and announced a definite day for its celebration.

The origin of Easter is curiously complex. The early churches of the East held that Easter was really the same as the Jewish Passover, and, therefore, celebrated it on the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month. It was a simple and easy matter for an Oriental Christian to find out when Easter would arrive, but in the fourth century the Council of Nice decided that the Eastern theory of Easter was all wrong, and that those who celebrated Easter on the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month were guilty of the atrocious crime of "quartadeciman heresy." Henceforward Easter was to be regarded as a festival in honor of the Resurrection of Christ, and was to occur, not on a fixed day of any particular month, but was to be appointed annually by the moon. With the celebration of Easter were united certain ceremonies with which the contemporaneous pagans had been accustomed to celebrate the opening of Spring. Thus striking its roots down into the Jewish, the Christian and pagan religions, Easter gradually grew to be the chief festival of the Church and the one which determined the date of all other movable feasts.

Of course the priesthood alone were able to find out when Easter would happen in any given year. The system of divination by which they proceed to ascertain the time of Easter is still in ostensible use; but as no layman, however learned in theology, astronomy and mathematics, can now find out the date of Easter, most assuredly the ignorant laymen of the early and middle centuries were wholly dependent in this matter on the clergy. In all our prayer-books a key to the solution of the Easter puzzle is ostentatiously printed, and many a tedious sermon has been rendered innocuous by persons who have employed the time in trying to find out by this, the so-called key, when the next Easter would occur. Such persons will unanimously admit that their efforts were in vain. As well might they hope to solve the "fifteen puzzle" from the position, "13, 15, 14." According to this key the searcher is first to take a dominical letter—though what letter he is to select he is not informed. This he is to multiply by a golden number—now he is left to guess what a golden number is—and the result is to be subtracted from the full moon and divided by the sun's declination if north of the equator, the final result being the day of some undetermined month on which the next Easter will fall. Perhaps, in quoting from memory, some one of the processes mentioned in the key may have been omitted, but the method of finding Easter as given in the prayer-book is substantially as above. Now no man ever found out the date of Easter by any such process. After carefully following the directions about dominical letters and golden numbers, he usually arrives at some such manifestly impossible date as the 491st day of October. The simple truth is that the alleged key is no key at all, and to-day, as in the fourth century, Easter is ascertained by the clergy alone, and without them we should find it utterly impossible to have any Easter at any time of the year.

How the clergy find out when Easter will happen is a mystery. Do they have a private and really available key which they keep exclusively to themselves, and by which they find out what the key in the prayer-book vainly professes to teach? Or do they take elaborate observations of the moon with complicated brass instruments, and thus, with the aid of logarithms, painfully work out the problem? May not the so-called "full moon," which is said to be an element in the determination of Easter, be, after all, a mere figure of speech? We know by the confessions of the clergy themselves that their ecclesiastical "full moon" is not the apparent full moon in the heavens, nor yet the mean moon of astronomers, inasmuch as this ecclesiastical full-moon is frequently announced as occurring two days later than any other recognized full-moon. It is, however useless to indulge in speculations of this nature, since the whole matter of determining Easter is an ecclesiastical mystery. There are bold and irreverent thinkers who do not hesitate to say that Easter is annually balloted for in the House of Bishops, and that the date is fixed by a majority vote to suit the convenience of the greater number of bishops. This, however, is a mistake, since the Church of Rome celebrates Easter on the same day as the Episcopal Church, and it is impossible to suppose that the Roman Pontiff is in collusion in this matter with Anglican bishops.

Whatever Easter signifies, however it is appointed, it is one of the few days in which the whole Christian world is in agreement. There is little danger of prizing it too highly, and the growing respect paid to the day by the sects that most strongly repudiate the sacramental themes of the orthodox church is a step, and by no means an unimportant one, towards the future union of Christendom.

CHEATING THE INDIANS

THE Indians have been styled the "wards of the nation," but no people on the face of the globe have ever been cursed with such rascally guardianship as have the red men of this country. At no time has the Government kept faith with them. The most solemn treaties have been violated, and on every hand the Indian has been made the victim of rapacity and oppression. When goaded into resistance, he and his kin have been slaughtered without compunction or remorse. The recent negotiations with the Utes is only part and parcel of the processes by which the race has been robbed of its heritage. They were first plundered, then pinched by hunger, then driven to commit acts of hostility, and now are being, by negotiations, cheekily "shaved" out of their reservation in Colorado, amounting in all to about 12,000,000 of acres. A large portion of this reservation is said to be rich with mineral treasure, and therein lies the secret of an acquisition by the white man and his Government. In return for the agricultural valleys and mineral riches of their splendid domain, they are to receive the munificent sum, in the shape of an annuity, of $50,000, in addition to which each head of a family is to be endowed with 160 acres of land at three other points. How long, judging from past usage, will this annuity be paid? and how long will the miserable redskins be permitted to hold their farms in peace? If we are not mistaken, the Government is now in arrears of payment to these same Indians. Divided and made more helpless than ever, it will not be long before the Utes, now numbering some four thousand souls, will be wiped out of existence by the arts so well understood by corporations.

Digitized by Google

white settlers, and the agents of Government. In spite of treaty obligations, a movement is on foot to also obtain a hold upon the Indian Territory, to force an entering wedge for future operations. The civilized tribes protest, and threaten war in case they are disturbed, but the work will go on until the Indian has no abiding place or foot of land that he can call his own. We are a great people, and can afford to be both just and magnanimous, but the devil of avarice appears to possess us, and, until it is cast out, we will be neither in our treatment of the aborigines.

THE cost of the Zulu war is stated at about $25,690,000, nearly all of which has been defrayed by England. It may fairly be doubted whether John Bull will regard the results attained as justifying this expenditure.

SAMUEL MCKEEVER, a journalist well-known in New York, and at one time an attaché of this establishment, died at Fort Reed, Fla., whither he had gone for his health, on March 19th. He was a member of the Lotus and Press Clubs of this city.

THE New Jersey Legislature has passed a concurrent resolution for biennial sessions of the Legislature. The Legislature of 1881 must now indorse it and the people then vote upon it before the change will be effected. Its adoption would not only diminish the volume of legislation, but save from $150,000 to $200,000 to the State every year.

THE electoral campaign in Great Britain has become very active, and is characterized by much intensity of feeling. Both the Liberal and the Conservative leaders are addressing large meetings, and the victory, wherever it may fall, will not be easily won. The indications are that Beaconsfield will be sustained, owing mainly to a want of coherency in the Liberal policy and plans.

THE Temperance Reformers in Iowa have achieved a notable victory in the Legislature, which has just adopted a Constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors, "including wine, ale and beer," and providing for the necessary legislation to enforce the prohibition. The amendment will go to the next Legislature for ratification, and of this there would seem, in view of the existing popular sentiment, to be little doubt.

THE Senate of this State having killed the Bill to reduce the fare on the elevated railroads to five cents, the author of the Bill has introduced another in the Assembly to extend the commission hours on the roads from five to nine A.M. and from four to eight P.M. During these hours the railways are to be required to run commission trains every three minutes. The Bill will probably be beaten by the same peculiar influences which defeated the original measure.

EX-GOVERNOR JOHN M. PALMER, of Illinois, announces himself as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President on a State sovereignty platform. Governor Palmer was one of the founders of the Republican party, and his present attitude will occasion a good deal of amazement. But there is no danger that the Democracy will again make the mistake of nominating a man of pronounced Republican antecedents as their Presidential candidate.

IT is again announced that Mr. George F. Seward, our Minister to China, is to be removed. It is remarkable, to say the least, that he was not removed a year or more ago, when his scandalous performances in connection with the Chinese Consulates were first revealed. It is not to the credit of the President or State Department that a Minister whose conduct has justified a Congressional Committee in proposing articles of impeachment against him has been permitted to represent us at so important a Court as that of China.

CINCINNATI was ablaze with enthusiasm last week over an event of great interest to the West and South, namely, the completion of the Cincinnati Southern Railway, by which the Queen City expects to secure a profitable business connection with all the principal Southern States. The feature of the celebration was a grand banquet, at which 1,200 guests, mainly from the South, were royally entertained. The speeches on the occasion furnished very conclusive evidence that the old animosities between the sections are rapidly disappearing among solid business men.

THE sentence of Denis Kearney, the California agitator, to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000 for the use of incendiary language and disturbing the public peace, appears to have had an excellent effect upon his misguided followers. The only surprise is that the vulgar ruffian has been so long permitted to defy the laws and foment discord and discontent without the slightest attempt at interference by the authorities; they would seem, however, to be now thoroughly aroused, as Gannon, Kearney's lieutenant, has also been convicted of using incendiary language, and will share the punishment of his chief.

THE world is not wholly bad. Conscience still struggles with men, and here and there obtains a victory. A few days ago, United States Treasurer Gilfillan received $2,200 in three separate packages, to be placed to the credit of the "Conscience Fund." An envelope from Baltimore contained $900 and a slip of paper, on which was written the words, "Income Tax." An anonymous letter from New York contained $500, and directions to apply the same towards liquidating the public debt. The remaining $800 was by check, postmarked St. Paul and Sioux City Railroad, with an inclosure upon which was written, "For Conscience Fund."

A RESOLUTION has been introduced in the House of Representatives for the adjournment of Congress on May 24th. It will scarcely be worth while to prolong the session until that date if the do nothing policy heretofore pursued is to be continued. So far, neither House has done anything whatever of real interest or value to the country; they have simply wasted three and a half months of precious time in idle discussion, and in posturing for the Fall elections. The important questions of the finances, of the tariff, etc., are all thrust aside as of no real consequence, and from present indications this indifference to the public interests is likely to continue to the end of the chapter. The people should be careful to mark all faithless representatives, and brand them as they deserve in the coming political canvass.

A MORE moderate policy towards the disaffected and malcontent classes has been adopted in Russia. The results, as contrasted with those accruing under the harsh, repressive measures hitherto enforced, are already seen to be salutary and beneficent. This is especially true as to the student class, who have been so long treated with almost brutal severity, but who now are manifesting, under the changed policy, a disposition to be sincerely loyal to the Government authority. The credit of the improved condition of things appears to be due to General Melikoff, the new military dictator, who has not only discontinued the system of wholesale arrests, but has accorded greater freedom to the press, and has in contemplation measures of reform which, it is believed, will practically disarm the hostility of the more moderate of the reactionaries.

THE sum of money required to pay pensions for the present fiscal year, ending June 30th, 1880, almost equals the grand total of the national debt as it stood before the war. Appropriations have already been made to the amount of $56,100,000, and an appropriation of $6,665,000 is still needed to complete the payments. This latter sum will be provided for in the special Deficiency Bill, thus making the pension-roll for 1879-80 amount to $62,765,000. The Pension Bill for the coming fiscal year, which has already become a law, appropriates $32,400,000. It is estimated, however, judging from the large number of additions to the rolls which are continually being made, that the next Congress will be called upon to pass a much heavier Deficiency Bill to meet the requirements of the Pension Bureau. It is well for the country that its resources can stand the heavy drafts continually made upon them.

IT is announced that the case of the Government against Samuel J. Tilden for failure to pay his income tax, will come on for trial at the April term of the United States District Court for this district. It is due both to the people and Mr. Tilden that this matter should be settled at the earliest possible date. It has been postponed from time to time at the request of Mr. Tilden's counsel, while the prosecution, having failed to elicit in full the testimony of two or three of the defendant's brokers and partners, has consented to the delay in order to perfect evidence. It is asserted in Government circles that the defendant's known and proved liabilities, or deficit in his income tax, amount to more than eighty thousand dollars, and that the case will now be pushed with vigor. To this Mr. Tilden, if he be blameless, cannot object. The people, at all events, are interested, in view of Mr. Tilden's political prominence, in having his guilt or innocence established without further delay.

THE annual report of Mr. Henry Bergh, President of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, for 1879, furnishes a most interesting exhibit of the beneficent work of that excellent society. It shows that only thirteen States and Territories are now without humane societies of this character; that the work of protecting helpless dumb animals from the atrocious cruelties to which they have been so long exposed is everywhere awakening popular interest and attention; and that in New York alone, the parent society has 713 branches and 199 agencies at work. Last year there were 746 prosecutions for abuse, while in the two cities of New York and Brooklyn the society agents, while patrolling the streets, interfered and protected animals from abuse in 1,527 cases. The total number of animals suspended from work in these cities from 1866 to 1880, through the efforts of this society, is stated at 18,384. No one can read Mr. Bergh's report without a growing appreciation of the great work he has performed, and a heightened estimate of his claim to rank as the first humanitarian of the age.

THE United States Senate has upon its calendar a Bill, favorably reported by its Judiciary Committee, which prohibits the arrest of election officers on days when elections are being held. This Bill makes it unlawful for any marshal, deputy-marshal or supervisor of election, or any person acting by their authority, to arrest or imprison on election day any election officer, appointed or elected by virtue of or under any State law, for any offense committed against the election laws of the United States. Permission, however, is granted to serve the offender with a warrant or process at any time after the close of such election. The animus of the Bill amounts to just this: An election officer serving by virtue of a State law, and conducting an election for Presidential electors or Member of Congress, may knowingly reject the ballots of legal voters, may designedly receive the votes of aliens and repeaters, may wind-up by stuffing the ballot-box, and all this, too, right under the noses of federal supervisors and marshals powerless to prevent. True, the scoundrel, if he has not absconded, may be arrested at any time after election day, but in the meantime men honestly entitled to election have been defrauded of their rights. The Bill should be entitled an Act to Promote Dishonest Elections.

WELLS, FARGO & CO. are in a fair way to have trouble with the postal authorities. Some two months ago the Postmaster-General appointed a committee to examine into the operations and effect of the "letter express" business conducted by that company. The committee have ended their labors with a report which winds up with the following tart expression of judgment: "It is our deliberate opinion that the letter express business of Wells, Fargo & Co., in all its phases, is at variance with both the spirit and letter of the law; that its operation is calculated to injure and degrade the postal service, and that the interests and dignity of the Post Office Department demand its immediate discontinuance. We think, moreover, that the free conveyance by this company of the correspondence of its banking-houses, and of the Western Union Telegraph Company and Central Pacific Railroad Company, is a gross wrong to the Government, and an indefensible infraction of a law, that ought not only to be at once interdicted, but for which, if there is any legal means for obtaining, the Department ought to seek indemnity." It is now in order to hear from Wells, Fargo & Co.

THE World newspaper persists in its opposition to the nomination of Mr. Tilden for the Presidency, and predicts all sorts of disaster to the Democracy should he be the party candidate. In a recent article it says:

"Is it necessary or expedient to invite a defensive battle with the Republican enemy? Is it even commonly prudent to allow Mr. Tilden to set the Democracy at work in the coming canvass to 'vindicate' his personal innocence of those cipher transactions at the expense of every man of all the Tilden 'workers' of 1876? If the Democratic voters in the choice of delegates to the State Convention allow Mr. Tilden's 'workers' to control the State Convention, must not the State Convention 'take the bull by the horns' and set about vindicating the doings of the 'workers' of 1876 in Oregon, in South Carolina, in Maryland and in Louisiana? What conclusions have the Democratic voters of New York formed about those cipher telegrams? Do they propose to commend them or to condemn them? Are they such ostriches as to fancy that they can escape the discussion of them from the opening day of the canvass till the close of the polls in November? We advise every Democratic voter in New York, who thinks of sitting still and allowing Mr. Tilden's 'workers' to 'fix' the Democratic primaries in Mr. Tilden's interest, to drop his box of 14-13-15 for one day and set about thinking out and putting on paper a plan for the Democratic treatment of the cipher business which will adequately meet the plunging crossfire of the Republican and independent press from Maine to California."

WE have more than once expressed our conviction that the nomination of General Grant for the Presidency would be a mistake on the part of the Republicans. Admitting all that can be said in his behalf, it still remains true that the sober judgment of the country is against the re-election of any man as President for a third term, and averse to the idea that we need "a strong man"—meaning one who will pursue an aggressive policy as to the South—for President. As it seems to us, the true course of the Republicans is to nominate a representative of the more conservative sentiment of the party—some one who, like Mr. Washburne, has been identified with its fortunes, and has loyally maintained its essential principles from the beginning, but who has had no share in those excesses in the use of power, and no sympathy with that policy of violence towards certain States and sections, which characterized a considerable period of Republican rule. The candidate, too, should be a man of clean life and upright record, and one, moreover, whose career would constitute an ample guarantee that he would administer the Government in the interest of the people, and not in the interest entirely of clamorous favorites or noisy partisans. With such a candidate, it would be by no means impossible for the Republicans to perpetuate their hold upon the Executive department of the Government, and regain also control of the House of Representatives; but if they shall defy the warnings of experience, and nominate a candidate who represents primarily the "machine" politicians, they will deserve defeat, and, unless the Democracy shall blunder in their nomination, will certainly achieve it.

FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE

For April has found its way to our editorial portfolio, and we take pleasure in noticing it con spicuously. Its excellency in all respects as a magazine needs no commendation from our pen, for this is known wherever polite literature is read. But the present number is one of unusual interest, as its tabulated table of contents will go to show. The mess of this table is of the most pleasing character, and will satisfy and repay the intelligent and general reader, whether old or young, upon almost any subject in current literature.—Albany Sunday Press.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE Southern Pacific Railroad was completed to Tucson, Arizona, on March 17th, and the track was laid through the town.

AT the close of the six days' walking match in San Francisco, the scores stood: O'Leary, 516 miles 2 laps; Weston, 490 miles 2 laps.

THE Treasury Department is paying in advance the interest on the public debt falling due April 1st. The interest so paid amounts to $7,600,000.

THE Rhode Island Republican Convention has nominated Mr. Littlefield for Governor, and selected Blaine delegates to the Chicago Convention.

GOVERNOR HAMILTON of Maryland has vetoed the Bill recently passed by the Legislature requiring non-resident salesmen to take out a license before selling or offering for sale any goods in the State.

REPORTS from some of the various counties in Kansas show that the acreage of wheat is 20 per cent. greater than that of last year, and the condition fully 10 per cent. better, and that the yield this year will exceed 30,000,000 bushels.

THE Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, by a party vote, has decided to award Senator Kellogg's seat to Mr. Spofford. Mr. Edmunds has introduced in the Senate a Bill to provide for and regulate the counting of the electoral vote.

A DECISION has been rendered by the Illinois Supreme Court that the election last Fall, which resulted in a vote for the consolidation of three town governments of Chicago into one, was not regularly held under the statute, and therefore is void. This will necessitate the keeping up of three expensive governments for another year.

THE Socialists of Chicago held a meeting on March 15th, and heard addresses from their leaders on the Chinese question. They adopted ultra resolutions against Chinese immigration, formulated a petition to the City Council to declare a quarantine against the Chinese, and threatened dire things in case they should visit Chicago in any numbers.

IN the United States District Court at Trenton, N. J., March 16th, the conspirators in the Lewis will case were sentenced as follows: Mark Sachs and Frank Ward Allison, each to two years in the State Prison and to pay $10,000 fine. Bradford and Rumford were each sentenced to one year in the State Prison and pay $1,000 fine. The sentence of Dr. Parks was postponed for a few days. The mythical Widow Lewis was too ill to be in court.

THE House of Representatives has adopted a proposition to pay the deputy marshals employed at the California election last Fall, and that deputies shall, hereafter, be appointed by Judges of the United States Circuit or District Courts; that not less than two, or more than three, appointments shall be made for any voting precinct, and that the persons so appointed shall be of different political parties. The Deficiency Appropriation Bill, containing this item, passed March 19th.

Foreign.

AT a meeting of the London Central Arctic Committee a resolution was passed appointing May, 1881, as the time for the sailing of the new British Arctic Expedition.

THE British gunboat Condor has left Salonica for Calerina to take the British Consul, Mr. Blunt, with money demanded by the Greek brigands for the ransom of Colonel Synge and his wife.

THE Court of Cassation, the highest court of appeal, has rejected the appeal of Francisco Otero Gonzales, who was convicted of attempting the life of King Alfonso and sentenced to death.

IT is alleged that the Pope, having learned that several Catholic dignitaries in England had used violent language against the British Government and supported the Irish movement, has dispatched letters of remonstrance to them.

MR. FAIRCHILD, our Minister to Spain, will represent the United States in the conference in Madrid to arrange with the envoy of Morocco rules relating to the protection by foreign powers of Jews and other subjects of the Sultan of Morocco.

THE committee of the leaders of the Boer Party has abandoned the proposed mass meeting in the Transvaal. The condition of affairs in Basutoland is critical, in consequence of the determination of the Cape Government to insist upon the disarmament of the natives.

INFORMATION has been received of a rupture between France and Madagascar, in consequence of a misunderstanding between the French Consul and the Government of the island. The Consul has hauled down his flag and appealed to his Government for support.

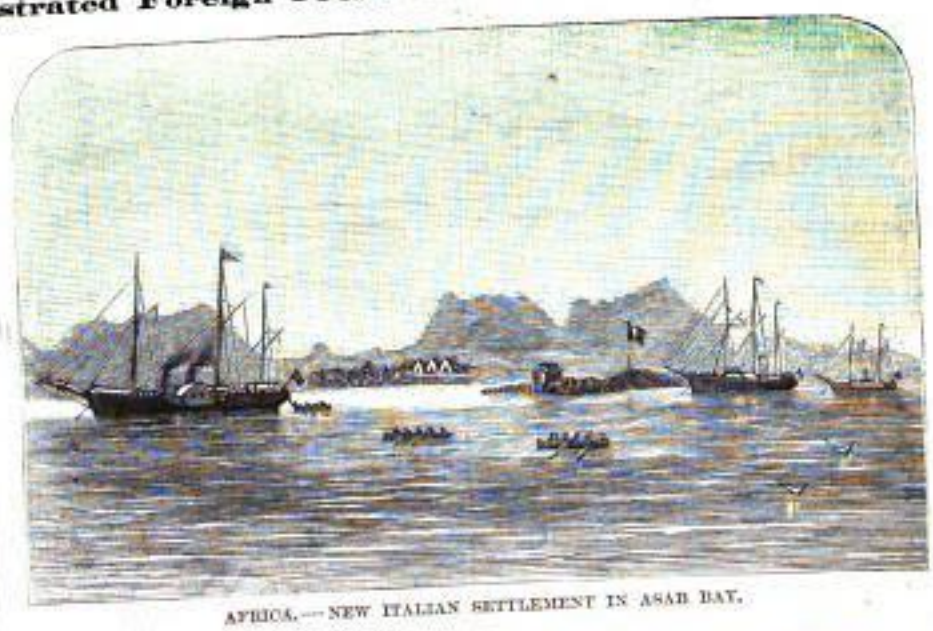
THE United States, in the person of its Minister, Mr. Christiancy, received a marked attention from the Dictator of Peru on Washington's Birthday. Mr. Piérola personally paid his compliments to the Minister at the Legation—the first courtesy of that nature remembered there for many years.

IN Paris the principal Jesuits are so persuaded Premier de Freycinet is in earnest, that they no longer hope to remain in France, and are preparing to emigrate to Spain and Belgium. It is stated that the Jesuit authorities have already caused all members of their society who are not Frenchmen to leave France.

THE Pope having made the concession that the names of priests appointed to livings are henceforth to be officially communicated by bishops to the secular authorities, peace between Berlin and the Vatican has become possible. About 1,000 vacant livings will be refilled, and some vexatious clauses of ecclesiastical laws will be repealed.

THE Uruguayan Consul-General at London has received the following telegram from Montevideo, dated March 15th: "The resignation of Colonel Latorre as President has been accepted. The House of Representatives has appointed Dr. Francisco Antonio Vidal Constitutional President of the Republic. Tranquility prevails. All the Ministers have resigned."

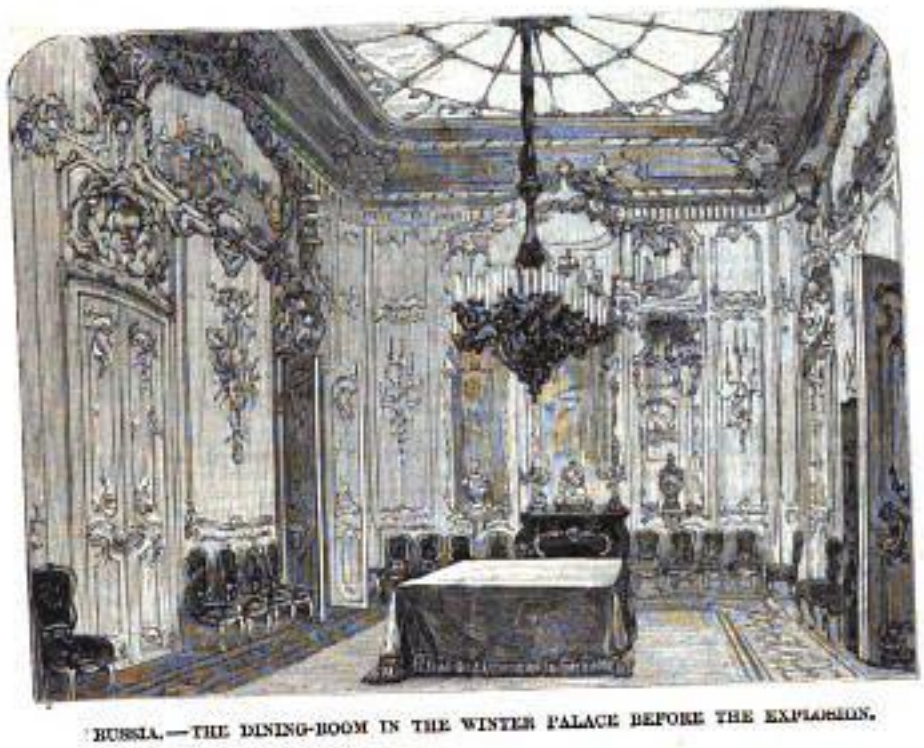
PRESIDENT DIAZ has issued an order that generals and army officers shall abstain from taking part in, or interfering with, the political campaign. The same rule is applied to postmasters and telegraph operators, who will be closely watched, and in case of disobedience will be removed from office. The order enjoins perfect freedom of the people at the polls without distinction of party.



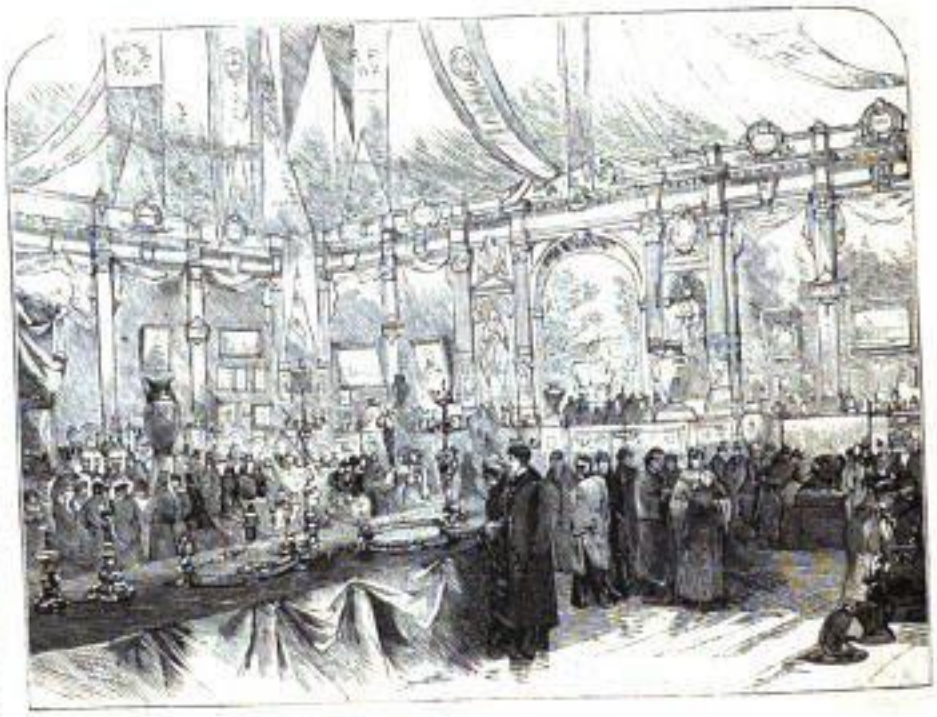
THE committee of the Reichstag to whom was referred the Bill for the prolongation of the law against socialism has decided, by a vote of 10 to 3, to report in favor of prolonging the operation of the law until the 8th of September, 1884, instead of 1886, as proposed by the Government; and also in favor of declaring the law for the expulsion of members of the Reichstag and Landtag from Berlin inoperative during the session.

Digitized by Google

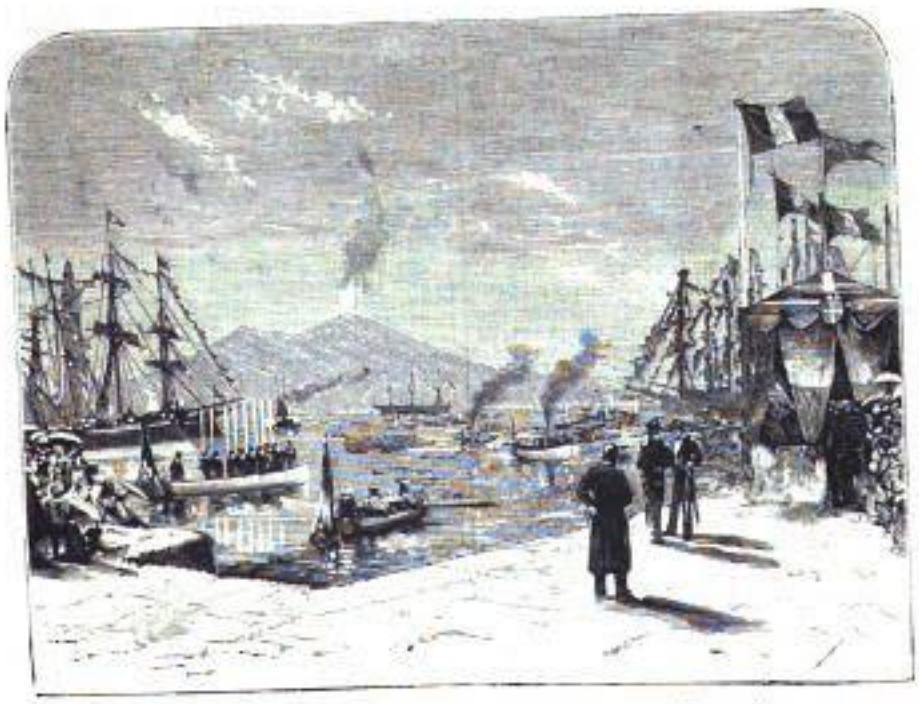
The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 71.



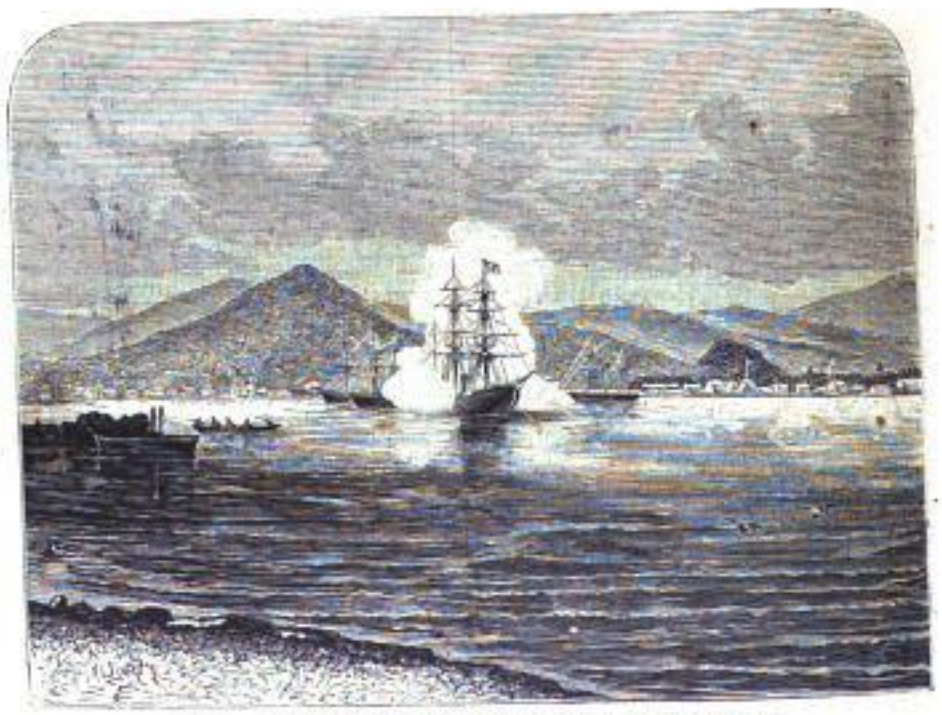
RUSSIA.—SCENE IN THE CELLAR OF THE WINTER PALACE AFTER THE EXPLOSION.



AFRICA.—NEW ITALIAN SETTLEMENT IN ASAB BAY.

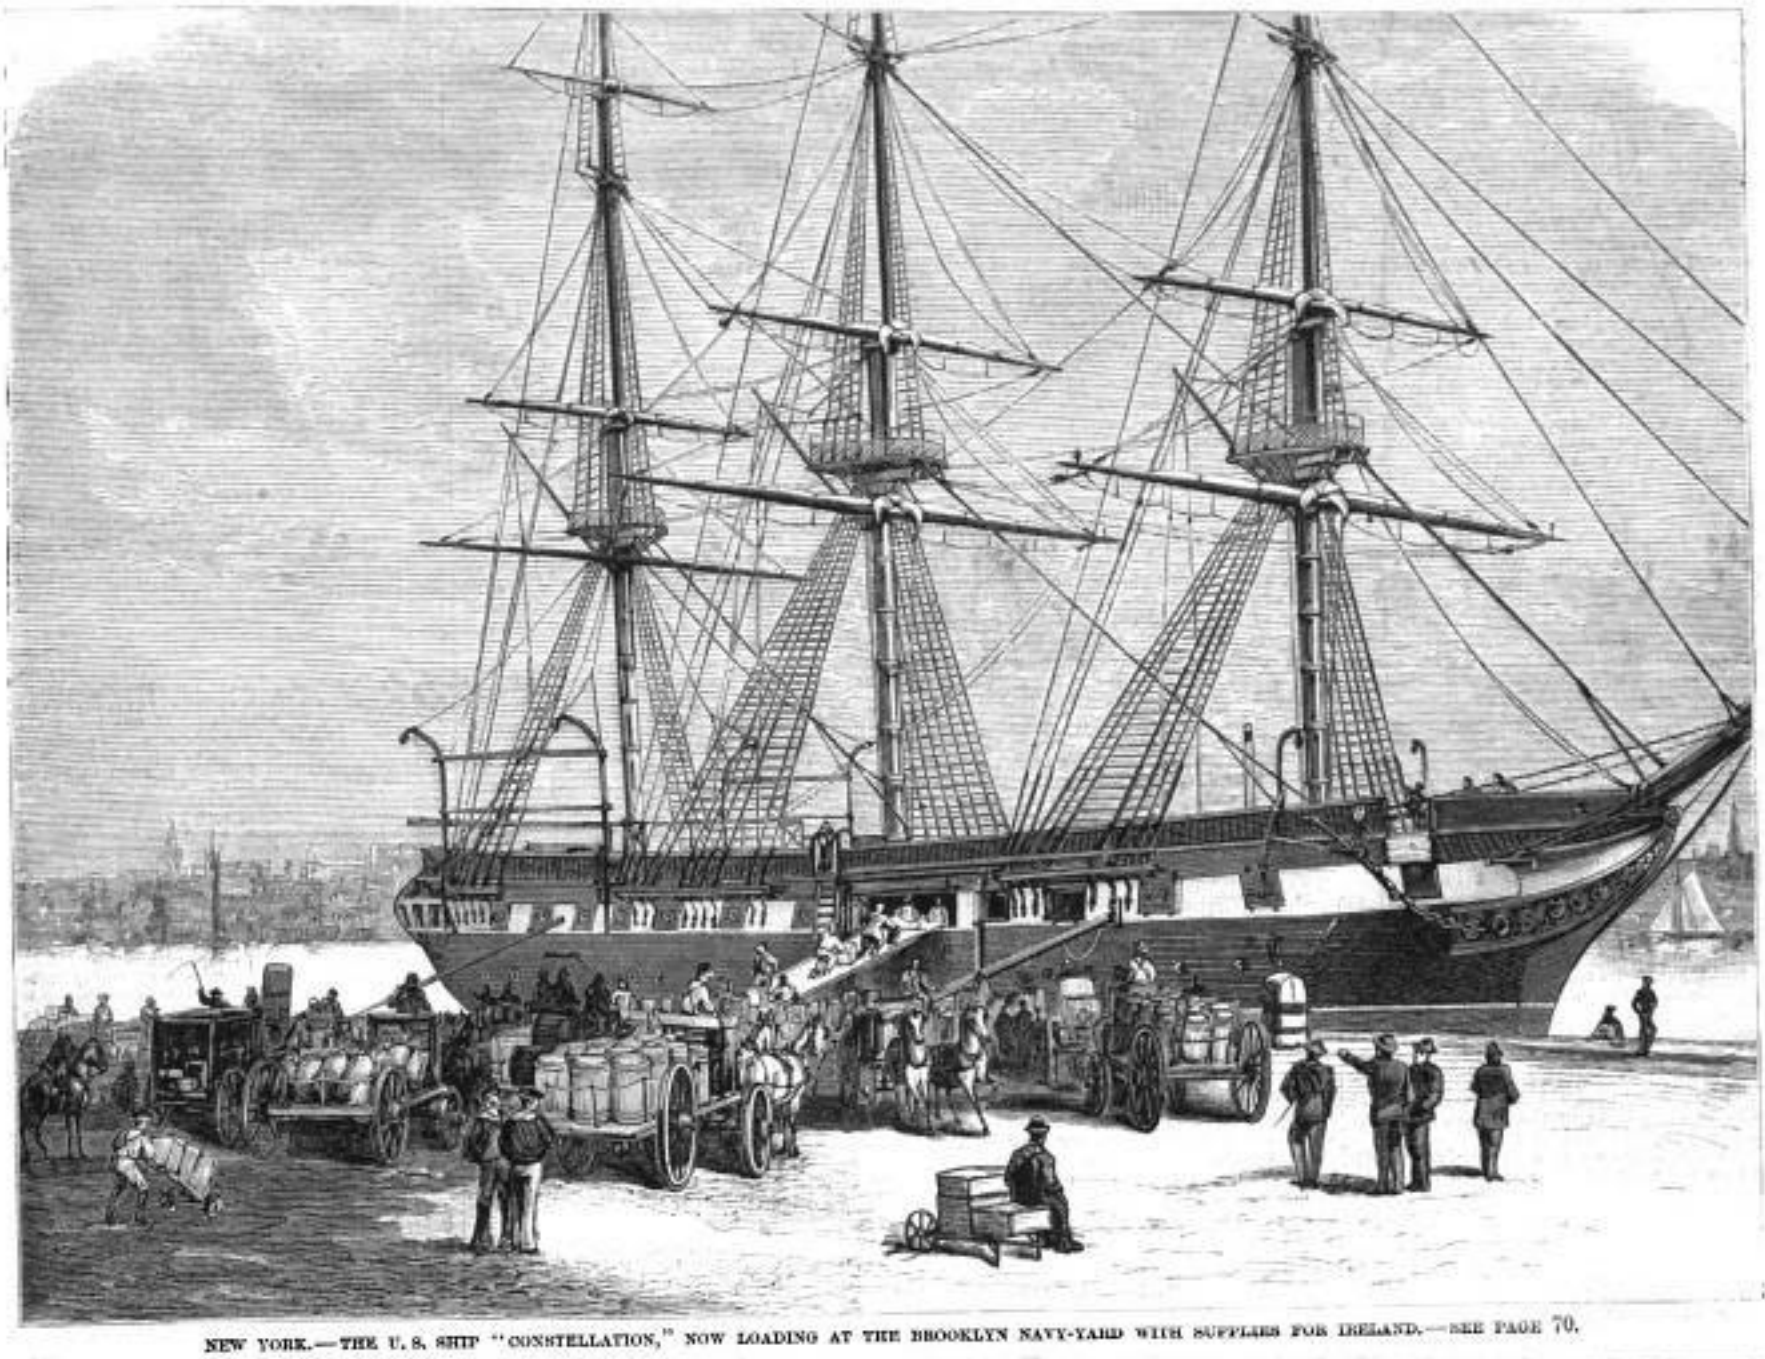


ARCTIC REGIONS.—A MID-WINTER FUNERAL IN NORDENSKJOLD'S PARTY.



RUSSIA.—THE DINING-ROOM IN THE WINTER PALACE BEFORE THE EXPLOSION.

FRANCE.—GEMS OF THE FRANCO-SPANISH LOTTERY.



ITALY.—LANDING OF PROFESSOR NORDENSKJOLD FROM THE "VEGA" AT NAPLES.

SAMOA.—THE GERMAN FLAGSHIP FIRING A TREATY SALUTE.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK.—THE U. S. SHIP "CONSTELLATION," NOW LOADING AT THE BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD WITH SUPPLIES FOR IRELAND.—SEE PAGE 70.

ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW OF OUR LADY ARTIST WITH THE UTE INDIAN CHIEFS AND PRISONERS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY MISS GEORGIE A. DAVIS.—SEE PAGE 71.

Digitized by Google

A SPY'S REVENGE.

BY COLLINS SHACKELFORD.

"I WILL not play at cards. I will not drink kvass. It is enough for me if you take good care of my horse. I choose to walk in the city."

This was the refusal of the young farmer, Ivan Reditzky, spoken to the keeper of a little inn called "The Rose," in the outskirts of St. Petersburg. With a snap of his thumb and forefinger backwards over his shoulder, he started to leave the noisy public room, chinking the while the roubles and copecks in his pocket.

"Your money rings; but it does not call for vodki and apple-cakes," remarked a rough-looking lounger near the huge stove.

Ivan, hearing this, turned and looked at him, saying:

"He is a fool who asks wolves to dine with him. My money makes music only for myself," and, with that, stalked away.

The crowd laughed, all save the mójik who had been rebuked.

"He is very saucy when his fingers are buttered with roubles," said this man. "I know him. He forgets that 'you may shut the door on the devil, but he will enter by the window.' He will find I can reach further than I can talk," and he followed the farmer.

"Ivan is not a bad fellow," remarked the inn-keeper; "but he has claws on his tongue and scratches when he speaks. He believes in everybody minding his own business."

Ivan, meanwhile, was walking rapidly into the city. He was straight as a soldier, and his blue caftan flapped merrily around his knees as he stepped along. Now to the right and then to the left, and he shot out upon the lower end of that magnificent avenue, the Nevskoi Prospekt, with its grand width of one hundred and fifty feet, its double carriage way, its granite footpaths and its reach of nearly three miles. The change seemed to make a new man of him. He smote his hands together in gladness, like a child, and his eyes sparkled with delight.

He struck out at a more rapid pace; past spirit shops full of peasants drinking, singing and shouting; past houses done up in red and yellow colors; past inns with bizarre groups of Germans, Jews, Moors and Mongolians; past second-hand stores, with their odd accumulations, until he was over the great bridge and in front of the Admiralty, whose huge gilt spire pierced the mist.

It was nearly noon of a day early in April, and as the young farmer stopped for a moment to glance around him, the artillery in the citadel thundered out the expected signal that the waters of the Neva had sundered their icy fetters. The great crowds surged towards the quays where the Emperor would drink from a crystal goblet a libation of the liberated water to commemorate the departure of Winter. The bands sent out a whirlwind of melody that brought the tears to Ivan's eyes—so sensitive to music is the nature of the Russian peasant. He regarded for an instant the boats darting out upon the river, caught at a glance the shifting mass of human life speckled with soldiers—the Circassian in his coat of gleaming mail, the solemn Tartar, the Finland Guard, the stolid, machine-like Russian trooper—paying no attention to the colossal statue of Peter the Great, nor to the grand buildings on each side of him, but, dodging drosky and carriage, he crossed the Fontauka Canal by the Anitshof Bridge, and was at once in the tumult and show of the aristocratic stretch of the Prospekt. It was like being suddenly swirled from a sombre solitude into a maelstrom of spirited life and gorgeous colors. There was a panorama of stylish carriages, of brilliantly-uniformed nobles and military and civil officers; of colossal palaces, grand cathedrals and imposing public and private edifices—a grandeur that would have overwhelmed the ordinary countryman in the city for the first time.

The scene was not new to Ivan, but it delighted him, nevertheless. From his little farm, ten miles away, at Ovgorotz, on the road to Pavlos, he had come many times to St. Petersburg to sell the products of his labor. He was no ordinary mójik—dirty, noisy, ignorant and lazy—but a stalwart, educated, handsome fellow of thirty years, the son of a German mother and a Russian father—the latter a gardener—now both dead. His log cabin was two stories in height and clean; his kitchen utensils were of metal instead of wood; he slept upon a bed instead of upon the floor. His farm lay upon the warm, southern slope of a hill. It yielded more than enough rye for his bread, more cabbages than he needed for his soup, and he raised more hogs than he required for meat and lard. He had beds of cucumbers, onions and asparagus, and a patch of hemp, and a surplussage of everything, for which he found a ready sale in the city. He was wise enough to extract the gold from the sunshine that warmed his acres, and rich enough to drink real tea instead of Sbiten. He worshiped the God of Heaven to the exclusion of priest-blessed images, and unwittingly defied the Government by doing a little thinking on his own account. This sort of independence made him in the abstract a dangerous man—though he did not know it—for despotisms fear nothing so much as subjects who reason.

As he stepped along the sunny side of the Prospekt there were few finer-looking men to be seen, for he was tall, straight, fair-haired and fair faced, taking after his mother. His blonde mustache had a twist to the ends, and his blue eyes held in their depths a steady glow of intelligence. The clean, blue caftan, polished knee boots, and round, flat-brimmed hat indicated that he was on a pleasure day excursion. And so he was, or he would have given more heed to the show around him; he would, at least, have studied the jaded-looking but aristocratic women who were passing continually from their carriages into the crowded shops. But he gave them no heed, because none could compare with his Vera—no, not one.

Vera—Vera Potalitzin! No wonder that Ivan's eyes and Ivan's thoughts went back to her and saw not nor dwelt upon the scene and forms around him. No wonder that his mission to the city made him speed his steps and forbade his lingering, in curious mood, by shop-door, under cathedral arch, or on the pavement, as some grand dame swept by in rich apparel, the quivering light of diamonds at her ears or around her throat, and flushing the air with strange perfumes as she moved.

Vera lived in Ovgorotz, and Ivan was to wed her in two days. She was a little child-like woman, not a beauty exactly, but so good in heart, so soft-worded and sweet-voiced, that everybody liked her. Then, too, she was industrious and frugal and rich, in a common sense, that made her wise in comparison with the other women of the hamlet. Her lover, speeding on his errand, thought only of his sweetheart at home as, singing cheerily at her work, she waited impatiently for the sound of his horse's footfalls and the music of his welcome. He fancied he could see her bright face, her eyes that glowed with love, her rosy lips always widening with a smile—see her busy at her wheel spinning flax, or talking nonsense to the little bird he had given her. The grand dames in their silks and satins and warm, rich goods, were nothing to Ivan as he recalled Vera in her finely-quilted skirt, her close-fitting bodice of bright color, the kerchief around her neck barely hiding the fleecy chemisette. In the strength of his affection the city had no temptation for the sturdy young farmer.

Ivan, who had been walking fast, was at last compelled to slacken his pace, for he became entangled in the mass of people who, all day long, sluggishly sweep towards and into that immense market-house, the Gostinoi Dvor. In the building the din was deafening. Merchants praised their wares in voices that might be heard a half-mile away. The sacred lamps flickered and smoked before thirty pictures of saints, and the crowd cheapened the wares and chaffed the dealers.

Paying no attention to this confusion and those who created it, the young man forced his way to the shops where bridal presents were displayed. There, after much doubt and hesitation and talk, he bought for his betrothed a gold ring for her finger; for her neck a gold cross, with a thread like chain of the same metal; a bridal crown of roses interwoven with silver wire; a bottle of perfume and some bits of laces and pretty-colored ribbons. He was extravagant, perhaps, but he thought that nothing was too good for Vera. His roubles were for her; they were glad, if it could have been known, to be spent for her. And wouldn't she rejoice to see the gifts! There was nothing wasteful about their purchase. The man who could not be generous to his sweetheart would mistreat his wife—scold and starve and beat her. So thought Ivan, but he could not do that. He was a man.

He had put the purchases into his pockets, and was counting the change, when his arm was given a sharp push that sent the few copecks to the ground. Turning, he looked into the face of the fellow with whom he had passed sharp words that morning at the inn.

"Of course it was very clumsy," said the latter, as if in admission to an unexpressed censure, "but what can one do in such a crowd? I will pick them up," and he stooped among the army of shifting feet, pushing them this way and that.

"The bear is safest at his back," said Ivan to himself. "I do not like the looks and ways of this fellow. He may keep the money," and he at once pushed into the crowd, and drifted with it out of the Gostinoi Dvor.

There was no necessity for haste in returning, for his errand of love was finished. He stared at everybody and everything worth seeing, studying the contents of the shop-windows, wondering at the broad distinction society had created between the luxuries of the rich and the necessities of the poor, and feeling that the bondage of the latter was as hopeless as anything could be in Russia. A few years of saving and of labor, and he was determined that he and Vera should try America, where men had a chance to make a fair fight for existence, and where the hand of a despot was not upon the best and fairest of God's gifts.

"It is a long way from peasant to Czar," he said, not thinking he spoke aloud.

"True!" declared a voice at his ear; "but the Czar is always so close to the mójik that he can put out his hand and throttle him. And he does it, too."

The speaker was young, well-dressed and aristocratic-looking, and his black eyes fairly blazed into Ivan's. As soon as he saw that Ivan understood him he added:

"So look out for those fingers, for in Russia no man is more in danger than he who is the most innocent."

Then he left him. As Ivan looked he saw the man was followed in a stealthy way by one who was exactly like the fellow who had spoken to him in the inn and jostled him in the market house. What had been uttered was treason and dangerous to be spoken or listened to. He knew that and began to feel alarmed.

A troop of Cossacks clattered by, scattering carriages and foot passengers. He stopped to watch their course. As he gazed he became conscious that he himself was an object of suspicion. Three men not fifty feet away were nodding their heads at him. He moved, and they followed. He stopped at a show-window and his arm was touched. There were now four men about him, and one of them was the creature whom he had already repulsed. The face, because of some change of feature, or on account of some expression that had come over it, was one that he had remembered. But he gave no sign of recognition.

"You stare, Reditzky," said the individual who had touched him, "as if you saw through the shop the gendarmes at the back door."

Ivan started at hearing his name spoken.

"Well, and if I do?" he asked, recovering his composure.

"Then you ought to understand that the place is suspected and is dangerous."

"It is only a book-shop. Are books dangerous?" asked Ivan.

"Yes, to those who can read, and especially to the peasant farmer, Ivan Reditzky," answered the man.

"Again you speak my name," said Ivan, with a suspicious look at the group. "Perhaps you know me?"

"Perfectly well," answered the man, who had already twice encountered him. "Your name has been twice spoken. You came from near Ovgorotz, in the commune of Veterhoff, last night, bringing garden stuff, which you sold for five roubles and ten copecks. You had in your pockets eight roubles and seven copecks. Your horse and sledge are at the 'Rose' inn. Since this morning you have bought——"

"Hold!" cried Ivan. "Since you know so much, you may keep the rest. It will save me from explaining. As for you all," growing warm with indignation at having been watched, "I know you—I know you!"

"Indeed! And who are we?"

"Spies! Miserable, contemptible——"

"Have a care with your tongue, Reditzky! A little meat is better than a good deal of broth," one of the men said.

"Oh, I know you," said Ivan, turning on him. "I have not forgotten Michael Kropoff, sent about his business by Vera Potalitzen, and you are the fellow a little the worse for wear. If I had you anywhere but in this city I would give you a taste of my fists."

The man assailed grew white even under the dirt upon his face; but his companions came between the two, and put their hands upon Ivan.

"There, there! What matters it?" they asked, crowding him gently against the wall. "We do not know anything. Now where did you get this caftan?" feeling of the garment. "It is too good for even a mójik like you," and they turned him this way and the other, and stroked the cloth.

Ivan saw that he had made a mistake in speaking so boldly, and that it would be discretion to submit to a certain degree of insolence. So he answered:

"They are Cousin Alexander's."

"And the hat, which is also too good for you?" taking it off, and tapping the crown.

"Also Cousin Alexander's."

"And now who is this cousin who is so accommodating with his clothes?"

"A medical student at Kieff, and home for a holiday," was the quick reply.

"I know him," Kropoff declared. "He is a room-mate of Peterhof—both conspirators, both marked, both dangerous. I tell you, this Reditzky is no better. Why wait?"

But the others shook their heads and motioned him back. At the same moment there was a great commotion on the street. A crowd had gathered behind them. It spread apart and came together again like a flock of frightened finches. It rolled against Ivan and his tormentors like a flood in the Neva. They were violently separated. The swirling of the people drew the farmer towards the centre. There he beheld a squad of police cutting right and left with their whips as they dragged over the pavement a man, whose face was red with blood, and whose clothing was filthy with the dirt of the street.

Ivan recognized the poor victim at a glance. It was the young man, who, not three minutes before, had spoken such dangerous sentiments close to his ear. Though innocent of anything savoring of treason in thought, speech, or action, he realized, by intuition, that his position had become a dangerous one. He tried, therefore, to force his way out of the crowd; but the police plied their thongs more viciously as the people stupidly pressed to the centre, and he found that he was only pushing against a living, resisting wall. Encompassed and harassed, he ran to and fro inside the ring, always finding an unyielding front, until, wedging himself into a mere crevice, he managed to work his way for a distance of perhaps twenty feet. Then, just as he began to feel secure, two grips as of iron fell upon him, one on each arm. They were the touches of two gendarmes.

A solemn hush came over the noisy crowd as the two men, thus caught up out of their midst, were forced away to prison.

(To be concluded in our next.)

THE FAMINE SHIP "CONSTELLATION."

SOME time ago Congress passed an Act authorizing a vessel to be assigned for the purpose of conveying provisions to the Irish famine sufferers. The ship Constellation was selected, and is now at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, whence she will sail as soon as she is loaded with the contributions of food offered by our citizens. One-fourth of the cargo will be supplied by Hon. Levi P. Morton, one-fourth by the Herald, and another fourth by Mr. W. R. Grace, who has also offered the services of his experienced shipping clerks, giving their time without compensation to attend to the shipment of such donations as may be received.

The ship was put into commission at the Brooklyn Navy Yard on March 18th, Commander E. E. Potter taking command of the vessel. The crew was sent aboard in the morning, and at one o'clock in the afternoon all hands were summoned on deck, where Commander Potter read the orders from Washington. The other officers of the vessel are Lieutenant-Commander J. M. Forsythe, Paymaster L. G. Billings, Lieutenant N. E. Mason, Lieutenant W. F. Low, Ensign F. A. Wilner, Boatswain E. Bonsall, and Sailmaster T. H. White. The vessel is to be rapidly loaded with seed-potatoes, canned meats, barrels of cornmeal, oatmeal, beans, casks of pork, and other articles. As the mission of the vessel is charitable, all of the great guns are to be hoisted out and their places filled with food. The portholes are to be closed and planked up inside. The vessel will carry only two small howitzers for signaling purposes. It is hoped that she can sail on Thursday next.

More supplies having been tendered than can be conveniently loaded on the United States ship Constellation, Secretary Thompson says it is probable he would cause the tanks of the vessel to be removed, in order to make more storage room. If the Constellation, with such additional space, cannot carry the supplies offered and another cargo can be obtained, a second vessel will be at once put into commission for the voyage of mercy and relief.

The Constellation is one of those splendid old vessels constructed of live oak which our ship-building ancestors knew how to build, and which navy officers fondly guarantee will "last for ever." She was built in 1797, and presented to the Government by the ladies of Baltimore. She is about 2,000 tons burden, and, although originally constructed solely with a view to efficiency as a man-of-war, almost every inch of her space can be made available for freight purposes. She has been rebuilt several times, but she is practically the same solid old body, and her reputation in the navy for sailing qualities is very high.

THE YOUNG LADIES' COOKING-SCHOOL OF BOSTON.

A PIQUANT aroma greeted my nostrils as I entered the dwelling in Tremont Street, Boston, on the second floor of which resides the "married man's friend," Miss Maria Parloa. This house, from cellar to garret, is tenanted by artists, but the "arrangements" and "symphonies" and "effects" produced by the fair artistes on the second floor surpass—of course I speak materially—the finest efforts of ancient or modern painters, for, if the inner man be not satisfied, of what avail the Dantesque beauties of a Rosa, or the tender glories of a Claude; while the starry eyes of Raphael's Madonna would not weigh in the balance for a single second against a supréme de volaille aux truffes, or a filet de bœuf à la Godard. Miss Maria Parloa's mission in life is cookery, and, as brain and nerve are both alike dependent upon the temper of the stomach, this cordon bleu holds the destiny of nations in her fat, white, dimpled, dainty hands. I call her "the married man's friend," for there are occasions when that dreary cold mutton, and that disastrous hash, serve to render existence almost unendurable, and when the wife of one's bosom ceases for a brief season to be the muchly adored one. Miss Parloa proposes to change all that, and, with a wave of her stewpan, to convert the horrors of cold-meat days into the joys of Lucullus-like festivals.

I found la belle cuisinière in a charming little ante-room giving upon the studio—I scorn to call it a kitchen—from which stole forth an aroma, if not of "Araby the Blessed," at least of sweet breads à la béchamelle. She was attired in a white, coquettish pinafore that enshrined her from her chin to the floor, and her striking resemblance to the late Miss Titjens smote me alike with pain and surprise.

"I want to spread a knowledge of the common things of everyday life among all the people," she said. "Physicians and others qualified to give an opinion testify that the foundation for disease, intemperance, and crime, is nearly always impure air and water, food improperly cooked, or uncleanly and disorderly homes. I have long had a desire to remedy these evils, and, while studying at South Kensington and the Board Schools in London last year, became convinced that the English people had solved the question as to how and where the reform should begin. In the City of London there are twenty-one practice-kitchens, where girls of eleven years of age and upwards are sent to practice lessons in the preparation of the plainest dishes. The schools have been in successful operation for two years, and have done a wonderful amount of good. The same method is followed with marked effect in the manufacturing and mining districts."

"I suppose that you were a cook from your very cradle," I laughed.

"Almost. I always had a taste for cookery, and was quite a little authority before I ever thought of adopting it as a profession. I was a teacher, and you know what a life of ceaseless drudgery that is. I was on a visit South, and, having been asked to deliver a lecture for a charity, I was puzzled for a subject. 'Why not cookery?' thought I; and cookery it was. This was so successful, that after a time I commenced to lecture and to instruct classes. My success has been very, very great, indeed. I instruct the poor as well as the rich, and every Saturday I devote to poor young girls—the forenoon to girls under fourteen, the evening to girls between fourteen and sixteen; on other evenings I instruct poor women. The class which you see at work now consists of Society ladies of the highest rank. Come and see what they are doing."

I followed la belle cuisinière up three steps into the studio, around which runs a bright dado of blue and white tiles. It is furnished with a large isolated stove and a water-trough, while a scrupulously-clean shelf, containing the impedimenta appertaining to Cookdom, adorns one wall. The studio is carpeted, and in the centre is an oval-shaped dinner-table. The great northern window is fitted up as a conservatory, and numerous gothic gardens, containing octopus-like creepers, hang suspended from the ceiling.

Six disciples of the culinary goddess, anges cuit in every feature, were seated round the table, all attired in bibs and tuckers and little paper caps such as Dregon assumes in "Geneviève de Brabant." Note-books and pencils stood ready for any emergency, and six pairs of very expressive eyes were concentrated—Absit!—not upon me, but upon a gaping haddock that lay ready for stuffing in the centre of the table.

"We are going to have a 'swell' dinner to-day," said Miss Parloa. "This is Class A, my most perfect class, and this class has the privilege of each inviting one gentleman guest to partake of the dinner which is now being cooked. The class came here at nine this morning, and will only just have time to dish the dinner before the arrival of their guests. This is the bill of fare":

Oysters on Ice.
Consommé à la Royale.
Whitefish, Hollandaise Sauce.
Fillet of Beef with Mushrooms.
Squash. Potato Balls.
Chicken Salad.
Larded Sweet Breads.
French Peas. Lettuce Salad.
Royal Diplomatic Pudding.
Chocolate Ice Cream.
Pine-apple Sherbet.
Cheese. Coffee. Crackers.

As a preliminary qualification, Miss Parloa requires that her pupils shall know how to make bread, tea and coffee, and to cook meats, then she takes them in hand and, by gentle progression, leads them up to the artistic sublimity of the foregoing menu, and finally to the composition of puff paste, which la belle cuisinière regards as the very north-west passage of cookery. Miss Parloa's first lesson deals with clear soup, rye muffins, custard soufflé and cream sauce. It amused me to see the charming cooks uttering such naïvetés as: "Must the creature"—the haddock—"be turned round?" "Oh, my, I have buttered the wrong side of the dish!" "May I sew up this instead of skewering it?" "Ah, my sauce commences to smile!"

"I want you to let me have a menu of your idea of a perfect dinner, Miss Parloa," I said, with a view to profiting by the occasion at the board of a sybaritic wealthy bachelor friend, residing on Fifth Avenue, as well as with a view to instructing an intelligent public.

"You shall have it," she laughed. "And here it is:

"Six small oysters on a block of ice—a twenty pound block—they look much better on ice than in the half-shell; and you hollow out your ice by applying a succession of hot bricks. A clear consommé soup; baked whitefish, with sauce Hollandaise; oysters or chicken patés; filet de bœuf aux champignons; cheese soufflets, salad, roast chicken, which I cover with butter and flour preparatory to roasting; sweet breads, game, French lettuce salad, sherbet, frozen pudding, a specialty of my own; crackers and cheese."

Digitized by Google

Ponder over this, ye connaisseurs and gourmets, and salaam at the name of Maria Parloa!

Six o'clock and to the second came the six cavaliers, faultlessly attired in full evening dress, the perfumes from the cooking range sharpening appetites far ahead of what sherry and bitters could do in that direction, while the jocundity of the fair cooks and the charms of their special dishes, foretastes of which they pressed upon their cavaliers, seemed to render the banquet even fit for the gods.

FLAT-BOAT LIFE ON THE OHIO.

DURING the past Winter there were from thirty to fifty families, comprising about one hundred persons, residing in what are known as "family boats," at Cincinnati. These dwellings are flat-boats, which, having served their original design as freight-carriers, or, mayhap, trading boats, have been purchased at a low price, and after being covered in, have become the homes of a people; occasionally they are floating still, but generally they are to be found where the high water has left them here and there, on the river bank. A tour among these unique residences develops much that is interesting. A family boat, at its best, is by no means a comfortless dwelling. At its best it is high and dry, "shored up," so as to be level, has a tight roof, and is divided into two rooms, lighted by half-windows. Of course it is warm, for the shore is strewn with driftwood; and to be the possessor of a good ax is a guarantee of comfort from a good fire. But a good boat is not the rule, and the heavy rains, or a freshet in the river, finds them but poor substitutes for homes. There is scarcely a family without at least three children. They are all from other parts. Several are from far up the river, one or two from West Virginia, a number from Kentucky, while several have chosen this mode of living because it is economical, "no rent to pay," and in Summer time far preferable to back rooms in tenement-houses. Sometimes a family in Pennsylvania, intending to emigrate, will purchase a boat, place in it their household goods, and start down the river. Whatever their original destination, they may "beach" the boat and stay from six months to three years at some point between Pittsburgh and Louisville.

As a rule, the boats are merely places of residence. Occasionally a boat devoted to the bone business touches the shore. When this is the case, it is usually accompanied by a second craft for the use of the family—a home among the bones picked up along the shores of the river not being considered favorable to digestion.

In all these clusters of family boats there is the "Sunday-school boat," in which sermons are preached and religious instruction imparted on the Sabbath, under the auspices of some mission at the place of location. The scenes enacted at these marine colonies are similar to those with which many of our New York readers are acquainted who have visited Communipaw, Harsimus Cove, or any of the large "basins" in the city during the Winter season. With the opening of navigation the disintegrating process begins, and one by one the boats are pushed or towed away for the activities of commercial traffic.

GLIMPSES OF LIFE AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON society takes its breathing space in this Lenten season, and the Star's nightly record of receptions, teas, etc., is but a meagre one. Nevertheless, there is enough doing, and enough to be done, in this city of strangers and visitors and sightseers—this city of splendid beginnings, with its old confusion of magnificence and meanness, of historic dignity and mellow respectability, and the merest modern crudity—of vast promises and abortive performances. I, being here as a sightseer, find the days and the evenings all too short, though I am everywhere assured that "there is nothing going on—absolutely nothing," and that I ought positively to have come three weeks earlier.

There are Vandals among us who speak of removing, rebuilding, or, in somewise, destroying the good old White House—of giving our future Presidents a smart modern mansion, with all the improvements of the day. I am grateful to the gods, as I mount the broad marble steps this sunny March morning, that it has not been done so far in my time. There may be little splendor about the old house, but there is a strong, solid, spacious sort of dignity—an elegance of the old school, an intangible flavor of the stately days of Washington and the "Republican Court." But, then, we Americans are not, as a rule, appreciative of intangible influences, or the charms of association, and so, I suppose, the new Executive Mansion will come in time—somewhere about the remote era when the Washington Monument shall be finished.

Mrs. Hayes is not at home, but the President is receiving as usual from 10 until 2 P. M. With several other parties of visitors—distinct from the mere sightseers—I pass from the little reception-room up-stairs to the larger ante-chamber opposite the President's room, and seat myself in a big leather armchair to await my turn. There are a number of ladies sitting expectant, and a larger number of men in the great hall outside, not sitting expectant, but mostly stalking up and down, impatient. At intervals the Presidential door is seen to open, and a visitor to issue forth; and then the usher, crossing over to our side, utters a monotonous invocation to, "Ladies who are waiting to pay their respects," and who at once rush forward, or mysteriously summons one of the impatient gentlemen who have come, not to pay their respects merely, but possibly with invisible axes to be ground. I have an ax myself, but it is not an official or a political one. It is a long time before I am let in with it; women, as possible office-seekers, are liable to snubs in Washington; but at last I, too, take my turn to enter that mysterious door across the hall.

"What can I do for you?" asks the cheerful voice of the President, as he greets me cordially. I make known my wish to see a little behind the scenes at the White House—in the interest of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER—and meet with no hesitation in the hearty permission at once accorded. Motioning aside the secretary, who offers to act as my escort, the President leads the way, through a door on his right hand, into the private rooms devoted to the family.

They open right and left upon a great hall which runs almost the whole width of the house—a wide hall into which the sunshine pours through an immense semi-circular window with a deep old-fashioned window-seat, at the further end. A soft Turkey rug covers the floor, and for furniture there are sofas and big armchairs, an old-fashioned marble-topped centre-table strewn with books and papers, and a pair of tall-etores, suggestive of a recent game, and an inlaid cabinet supporting a bust of Lincoln. Two large portraits face each other—Mrs. Tyler, in white satin, simpering, with her head on one side, and President Hayes at full length. On one side of this hall—itself the brightest of sitting-rooms—are the guest chambers, the children's rooms, from whose open door the smiling, ebony face of the nurse peeps out at us, and Mr. Webb Hayes's bedchamber.

"Here we gather every evening," says the President, pausing at the library-door, "and here"—hurrying past—"is Mrs. Hayes's room. Here she is always to be found, and, of course, where she is, every one else naturally comes, too." And we step into a large, bright, sunny room, with light, graceful Eastlake furniture, cabinets and bureaus loaded with pretty trifles in china and glass and bronze, an open fireplace with shining andirons and logs laid ready, canaries singing in a great cage in the sunshine, and lounges, armchairs and window-hangings all of rich, dark, Persian-patterned stuff. On the cabinet by the window sits a great stuffed owl, as if alive. It was caught inside the unfinished monument near the White House grounds, and, dying after two or three days' captivity, was stuffed and presented to Mrs. Hayes, and here it perches, and seems to blink wisely in the streams of sunshine.

We linger a moment in the library, a great oval room, with frescoed ceiling; walls panelled in dark-green and gold, and doors and wainscoting all of black walnut. The furniture, quaint and rich, is upholstered in dark-green leather, with plenty of odd chairs to break the monotony of the pattern; low bookcases supporting pictures, busts and statuettes, and a massively-carved library-table near the window; under the huge chandelier a centre-table, whose black marble slab is piled with a delightful confusion of books, papers and pamphlets. A great globe stands in one of the doorways, and above it mounts guard a rare old portrait of John Hampden, attributed to Vandyke; near it hangs a a fine half-length of Mrs. Hayes, her brunette coloring and black dress relieved against a warm, gold background. Round the oval sweep of the walls are portraits of former Presidents, interspersed with bits of landscape and brighter color, and here by the fireplace, with its glittering andirons, stands a small upright piano in a richly-inlaid case, on which is stationed a bust of General Grant. In this cozy sanctum are held the pleasant informal "evenings" which Mrs. Hayes has made so charming through the Winter, when Cabinet officers and Senators lay aside weightier matters for a while, and consent to be charmed by the fantasias and caprices that Secretary Schurz coaxes so deftly from the piano keys—such an evening as the artist has given us a glimpse of, albeit in a silent fashion.

But the afternoon is stealing away, and, as afternoons are not to be wasted, I hurry on to fresh Washingtonian fields. The Ute delegation at the Tremont House claims my attention for the evening, and, through the courtesy of Major Andrews, who has these interesting wards of the nation in charge, I am permitted to see, shake hands with and sketch, the distinguished chieftains.

In four or five little bedrooms are ignominiously huddled together the fifteen representatives of the Ute nation, each room so pervaded and permeated with tobacco-smoke that it is difficult to distinguish one representative from another through the dense cloud. Major Andrews—evidently a favorite with them all—calls them up like so many big children to "shake hands with the ladies"; and this ceremony being duly performed, he wheedlingly suggests that the white squaw should take their portraits. This proposition, however, meets with extreme disfavor. One or two black-coated and red-shirted chiefs, who are stretched on the bed, roll over and bury their faces in the pillows with grunts of violent dissent, while Chief Augustine, a tall, stately redman, with strings of otter-skins braided in his long hair, solemnly and silently advances, and as solemnly wrecking the sketchbook from my hands, tears out the leaf on which I have surreptitiously commenced a sketch of himself.

"What, won't you let the lady take your likeness for me?" asks the major, smilingly.

"No squaw, no squaw," replies the chief, shaking his head. "Man take pesio—good! squaw pesio no good—no, no!" And he walks into a corner and turns his back on the company.

This is the first room that we try, and the results of the call are rather discouraging; but in the next we find better success and more gallant chieftains. Here is Captain Jack, the fighting chief of the Utes, lately famous for leading the attack on Major Thornburgh; Wass and Ignacia, chiefs of the White River Utes; Buckskin Charley; and one recumbent brave, who keeps his face resolutely hidden, and never shows so much as the corner of one eye until we leave the room. Jack also refuses with scorn to be sketched, but the others allow themselves to be coaxed like children, and laugh with great glee when the pictures are shown. They are almost all fine-looking men, tall and large, with more aquiline features and a better expression than in my small experience of Indians I have yet seen; Ignacia especially has an open and benevolent face and fine eyes. They are all dressed in black cloth, with calico or red flannel shirts, and cling to such native insignia as moccasins, earrings, and long tags of otter-skin in their shiny black hair; on the wall hangs a magnificent Indian full-dress suit, so to speak—the personal property of Buckskin Charley—which is literally a mass of fine bead-work, the colors most artistically shaded and arranged.

Ouray and his wife glide in with noiseless moccasins, while I am sketching, and exchange some words with the rest, in a mixture of Ute and Spanish. The language and the voices of these Indians are singularly musical, and the tones of the woman especially have the softest, plaintive sound, while her laugh has the quality of sweetness so rare among her white sisters. She is a stout comely squaw, gorgeous in a red plaid gown and beaded leggings, her fingers loaded with rings, and her wrists with bracelets, a fashionable white canvas bag hanging on one side of her belt, and a beaded pouch on the other, which last she slaps with a burst of merry, childish laughter, when Major Andrews points it out as her money-purse. The major seems thoroughly at house with his charges, and thoroughly confident of their attachment and loyalty to himself. "They are like so many children," he says. "I would trust myself twenty years among them." And so has many another white man said, I think to myself, with a shudder as I glance round on the swarthy, stealthy faces. Jack—the least prepossessing in appearance of the whole party—moves close up to the major, and puts his hand caressingly on his shoulder. "Ask Hayes make you Utes agent," he says, in his soft, musical voice, and two or three others grunt assent to the proposition. Five minutes after the major points out to us the newly-arrived prisoner, Henry Jim, supposed to be one of the principal actors in the attack on the Meeker family, and close beside him, hiding and peeping out round the shoulder of another Indian, like a child playing bo-peep, is Tomass, the murderer of Agent Meeker's farmer.

The Camoens Fete in Lisbon.

THE 10th of June of this year will be the tercentenary of the death of Luis de Camoens, and the occasion is to be celebrated at Lisbon by fêtes of some importance. The International Literary Association has been requested to hold its third session there, the first, it will be remembered, having taken place during the Exhibition year in Paris, and the second in London last Summer. The municipality of Lisbon, as well as the Portuguese Government, have expressed their intention of receiving the association with all possible honor. The reigning king himself, Don Louis, has consented to be a member of the reception committee, and a series of fêtes will be given by him, as well as by his father, Don Fernando, who is president of the Royal Academy of Science. King Louis, who has already translated "Hamlet" into Portuguese, has just published a translation of the "Merchant of Venice." A vessel-of-war is to be sent to some French port for the conveyance of those members of the association who have no fears of the terrors of the Bay of Biscay; while for the seaside special arrangements are to be made with the railway companies in France, Spain and Portugal. Invitations have been sent out to representative literary men, and answers must be given before May 1st. The literary congress will last for five days, and there will also take place about the same time a congress of commercial geography, in continuation of that held in Brussels last year.

Blindness among Russian Soldiers.

STAFF SURGEON SKREBITSKY, a celebrated specialist in ocular diseases, has just published his report upon the Russian military hospitals, twenty-six of which he has inspected in different Governments of the Empire within the last few months, for the purpose of ascertaining the causes to which may be attributed the extraordinary accumulation of cases of total blindness resulting to the Russian soldiery from the invasion of Turkey. Over and above the cases of eye-diseases reported in the registers of these hospitals as having terminated fatally since the war, he estimates the number of living men who lost their sight through participation in the 1877 campaign at considerably more than 2,000. Only four per cent. of all the cases in question were ascribable to wounds or injuries received in action. Ninety-six out of every hundred had been caused by lack of sanitary precautions, by dirt, insufficient clothing and unwholesome food. The tale of human suffering disclosed to us by Dr. Skrebitsky's dispassionate statistics is indeed a terrible one. Many years will probably elapse, and more than one generation of the men who took part in the tremendous struggle between Russia and Turkey will pass away, ere the real losses of the Muscovite host during the second semester of 1877 will be made known to the world.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

The Explosion in the Winter Palace.

In our last issue we gave a brief description of the famous Winter Palace of the Czar at St. Petersburg, in speaking of the last attempt upon His Majesty's life. Our present illustrations depict the scene in the cellar beneath the dining room after the explosion, with the officers endeavoring to extricate the bodies of the killed and wounded, and the private dining-room itself before the explosion. The Czar has his apartments on the first floor and in the corner of the Winter Palace that overlooks the Neva and the Admiralty. The Empress inhabits the other corner, and between the two is the family dining-room, which had, however, been deserted since the return of the Empress, the meals being served in a smaller room over the guard room. At one and six o'clock the Czar, the Czarina, and the Grand Dukes Alexis, Sergius and Paul, meet for déjeûner and dinner. The Czarewitch and the Grand Duke Vladimer, who are both married, have also general invitations to join the Imperial circle; but the other members of the family wait till they are bidden. Six covers are always laid, and the service is performed by three French maîtres d'hôtel, who relieve each other every fortnight. The effect of the explosion was to destroy the guard-room, kill and wound fifty-three soldiers remaining there off guard, break through the sides of the vaulted roof, and lift and dislocate the floor of the dining-room in two places, corresponding with the gaps in the vaulted roof below. Moreover, the dining table was damaged, as well as part of the ceiling, and the large central chandelier was thrown down, the gas pipes being broken, and the rooms being in darkness until fresh lights were brought.

Germany and Samoa.

A German settlement was established on Samoa in 1872, and soon attained an encouraging degree of prosperity. A few years later, it is claimed, French missionaries began stirring up strife between the natives and the colonists, and the commercial business of the island almost came to a standstill. Last Fall Maleitoa was elected King, and one of his first acts was to recognize Germany as the protector of the islands. As soon as this decision was made known, a treaty was concluded, and the German war vessels, then lying off Apia, fired a salute in ratification of that proceeding. England, France, Germany and the United States are now deeply interested in that section of the world, and it remains to be seen whether the new arrangement will produce the desired harmony.

Gems of the Franco-Spanish Lottery.

In the northeast pavilion of the Palace of Industry at Paris there is displayed a wonderful collection of works of art contributed for a grand lottery for the benefit of Spanish sufferers by the inundation at Murcia and elsewhere. No wonder the Spanish people are so devoted to the French, when the latter began the relief movement as soon as the extent of the disaster was ascertained. The great fête, arranged and managed by the journalists of Paris, in brilliancy and pecuniary results were almost unprecedented in the capital of gay life and generous impulses. When a handsome sum has thus been collected, and it was found that more was needed, the Government gave its sanction for the immense lottery, of which we give an initial illustration. The character of the last undertaking may be judged by the variety and class of articles composing the lots, and which may be distinctly made out in the engraving.

Prodse or Nordenskjold's Return.

There was a great eruption at Naples on the 16th of February, not of Mount Vesuvius, but of popular rejoicement, the occasion being the arrival of the good ship Vega, containing Professor Nordenskjöld and his intrepid party, this being the first European port touched at since the Vega's daring and successful passage through Behring Straits. Naples was completely en fête, and the welcome accorded to the distinguished travelers was as enthusiastic as it was heartfelt. In the evening a banquet was given in the magnificent Hotel Royale des Etrangers, and, to mark the event with more than ordinary éclat, the spirited proprietor of the hotel named the new dining hall—completed for the occasion—"Vega," in graceful compliment to the sturdy vessel which battled so bravely against the terrific onslaughts of the ruthless ice king. The menu included every delicacy of the season, and the vintages ran the gamut of the "best years" all round. The engraving of a funeral in the long night of an Arctic Winter is from a sketch by one of Professor Nordenskjöld's assistants.

Asab Bay.

The Italians, who have long cast loving eyes upon the African Continent, and have for many years past been talking of obtaining a footing there by establishing a colony upon the sea coast, have at last made a beginning by founding a settlement at Asab Bay, a small port situated in the northern part of the straits of Bab el Mandeb in the Red Sea. Asab Bay was bought by the Italian Rubattino Company from the chief of that port in 1869, and has been only now taken possession of by the Italians. In December, 1879, the paddle wheel steamer Esploratore hoisted the Italian merchant flag there, and the crew, in company with that of the Italian gunboat Archimede and steamer Messina, have since been landing stores, building huts, and surveying the place. Asab Bay is one of the smaller bays on the west coast of the Red Sea, lat. 13 deg. N., long. 42 deg. 45 min. E., is twelve miles long and five miles wide; the surrounding country and mountains are volcanic, the lower part of the bay is low, and frequently covered by sea water. The northern part, where the flag is hoisted, is situated at a higher elevation, and fresh water is plentiful, though slightly brackish; the date palm grows wild, and there is excellent soil, but, like most parts of the African coast about there, is dried up, and rain seldom falls.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE Winter sowings of wheat in South Russia have suffered greatly from frost.

—THE Chinese Government have decided on establishing a complete system of telegraphing throughout China.

—UNDER the operation of the new protective tariffs foreign goods are being gradually ousted from the German markets.

—IN consequence of unfavorable weather in Egypt, a large quantity of cotton must be reseown, and the crop will be late.

—IT is officially estimated that there are 20,000 tenement-houses in New York City, and that they contain 500,000 people.

—THE Georgia Baptist Convention, representing 2,661 churches, and 219,725 members, meets in Savannah on April 22d.

—THE Wisconsin Senate has defeated a proposed temperance amendment to the State Constitution by a vote of 32 yeas to 14 nays.

—IT is reported in Berlin that negotiations will shortly be opened with all the States of Germany regarding the carrying out of a scheme for the introduction of a tobacco monopoly.

—IT is estimated that at least three hundred million dollars in gold and silver has been added to the available circulating medium of the country during the last fourteen months.

—CORPORAL punishment in the British navy is now confined to twenty-five lashes, whether the punishment be awarded by the commander of the ship or sentence of court-martial.

—A NEW Order in the Brahmo Somaj, under the name of "Brahmo Sadhak," has been instituted in India for those who wish to cultivate devotion and piety without giving up secular avocations.

—SIGNOR SELLA'S resignation of the leadership of the party of the Right in the Italian Chamber of Deputies indicates important changes in the constitution of parties in the Chamber. Signor Sella will probably act temporarily with the party of the Centre.

—THE German Imperial Budget fixes the revenue and expenditure for the next fiscal year at 339,252,640 marks each, and the matricularatory contributions of the different States at a total of 51,670,930 marks.

—THE Supreme Court of Indiana has decided that the legal name of a person consists of one Christian name and one surname, and that inaccuracy in a middle name does not invalidate a deed or other legal document.

—SIXTY million dollars is the estimated cost of the projected Euphrates Valley Railroad, which is intended to facilitate the intercourse of England with India. The road will be over a thousand miles long and will be very difficult to build.

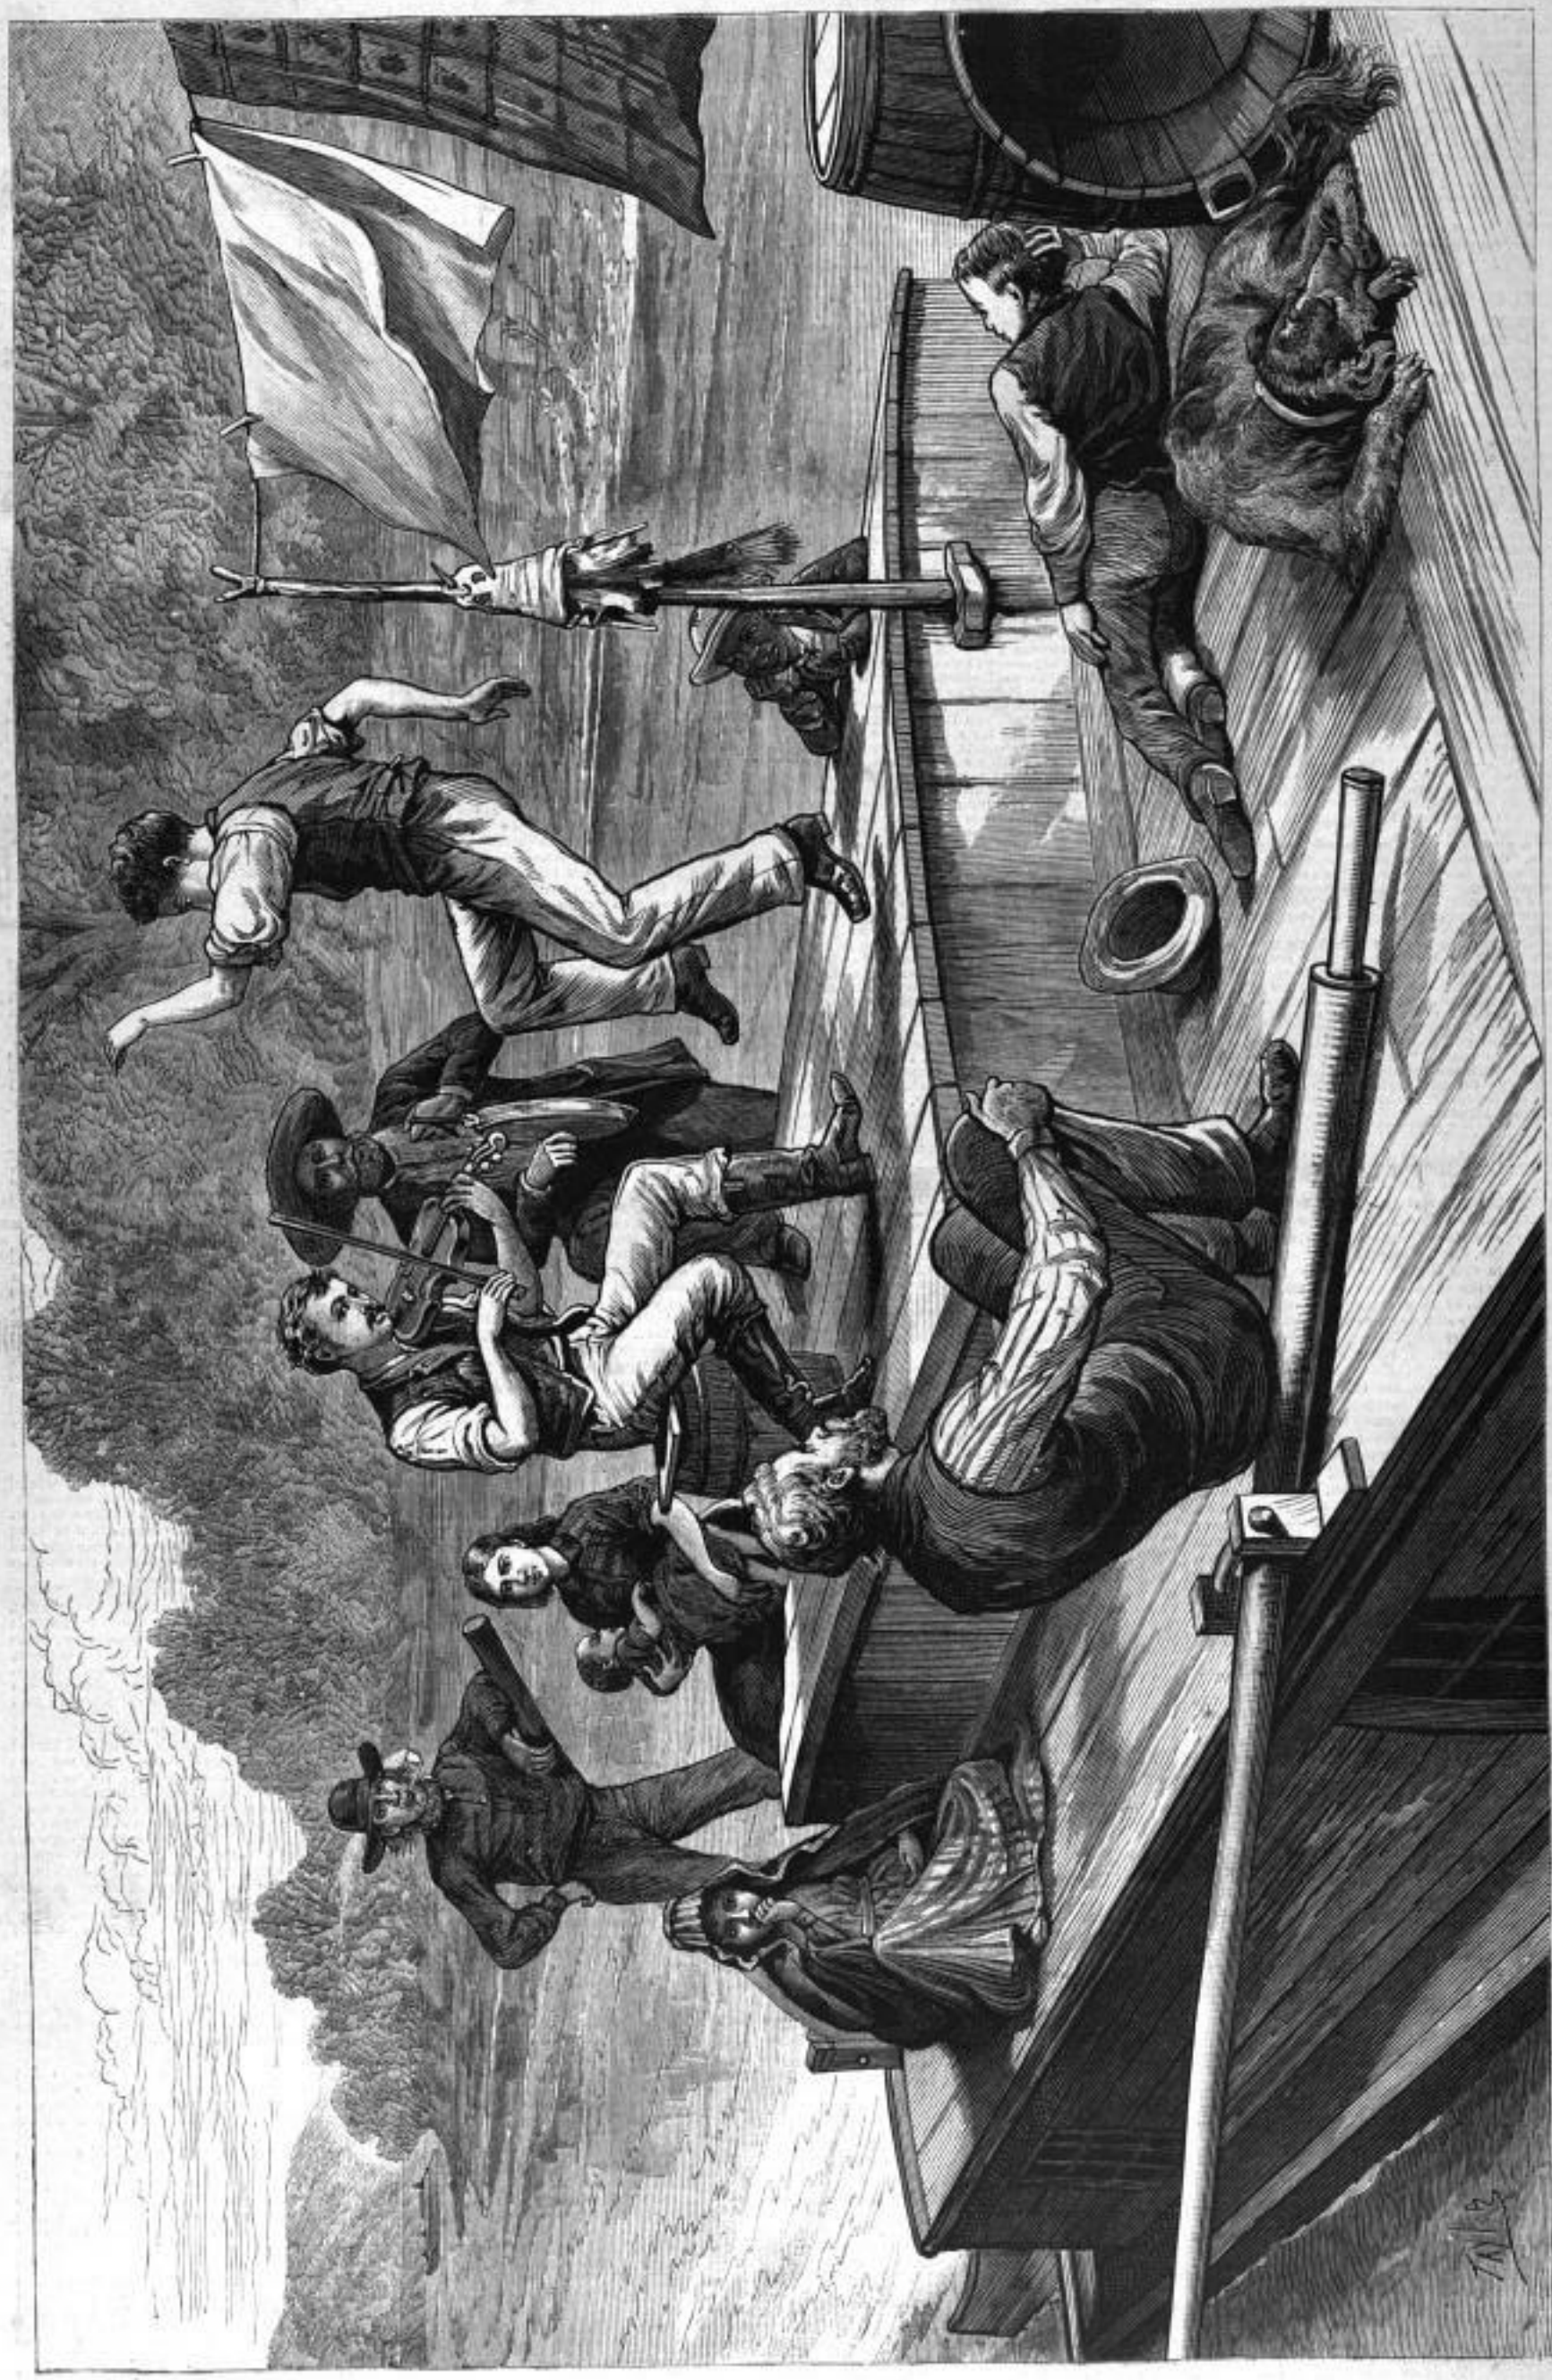
—E. DWYER GRAY, Lord Mayor of Dublin, has declined to contest that city at the coming election for Member of Parliament, as he feared that his doing so might militate against the working of the relief committee and subscriptions to the fund.

—PRINCE BISMARCK has presented in the Reichstag a paper on emigration from Germany during 1879, showing that 35,327 persons, two thirds of whom were males, emigrated—by far the greater number going to the United States and British North America.

—A HOUSE built in 1639 still stands in Dedham, Mass., and is the oldest in New England. It is beautifully situated under beautiful branching elms, with a moss-covered roof. Much of the original furniture, 240 years of age, still remains, and has been in the possession of one family, named Fairbanks, during all of that time.

—PRINCESS STEPHANIE, of Belgium, the fiancée of the Archduke Rodolph, Prince Imperial of Austria, is tall, well developed, strong, long-nosed and blonde, but pretty, but with a pleasant face. She was educated under the direction of Mme. Depterghem, is an excellent linguist and musician, has a poetic nature and good sense, and rides well.

—OWING, probably, to the sudden thaw, several land-slips have occurred in various parts of Switzerland. Near Vully, on the Lake of Morat, 300 metres of cultivated land have glided into the water, and it is feared that a part of the village may share the same fate; and at Bellegarde, in Fribourg, several acres of wood are slipping down the side of a mountain.



—EX-UNITED STATES TREASURER-GENERAL SPINNER resides permanently in Jacksonville, Fla., and has not been out of the State for fifteen months. He is interested, but takes no active part, in the national bank of which his son-in-law is cashier, and he occupies himself in studying the history of Florida. Rows of books line his study, and a fine microscope is a prominent object in it.

—THE length of the actual St. Gothard tunnel is nine miles and 377 yards, while that of the Mont Cenis is rather more than a mile and a half less. The rate at which the rock was bored between Modane and Bardonèche amazed mechanicians a dozen years since. But the daily progress made under the St. Gothard has been more than double. The contractor agreed that the work should be finished within eight years. The actual time has been seven months less than the stipulated term. A medal is to be presented to all the men engaged in the tunnel.

—REV. DR. JOSEPH PARKER, the Congregational clergyman of London, has announced himself as a candidate for a seat in Parliament. In his address to the electors and non-electors of the City of London, he defends the candidacy of a Nonconformist minister actively engaged in pastoral duties. He thinks that so long as the existence of an Established Church requires a considerable amount of ecclesiastical legislation, there should be a number of men in Parliament whose training and occupation especially qualify them to deal practically with the religious progress and necessities of the country. The clergy have their representation in the House of Lords, but none in the House of Commons.

—FOR the first time in two hundred years the old turquoise mine in Chalchuitl Mountain, New Mexico, is being reopened. In 1680 work was suspended on the mine, the cause being the caving in of the shaft and the subsequent death of some 100 Indians who were at work below. An attempt made by the Spanish to force the Indians to begin again and reopen the shaft led to a rebellion, and probably was one of the causes which forced the Indians to an uprising and the subsequent expulsion of their rulers from the country. The extent to which these mines have been worked may be conjectured by the vast amount of débris lying around the old shaft, covering no less than fifteen acres of ground. This mine is the only turquoise mine on the continent, and as the gem has always a market value, it will ere long be one of the recognized sources of wealth of New Mexico.

Digitized by Google

FLAT-BOAT LIFE ON THE OHIO.—SCENE ON A FAMILY BOAT, AT THE OPENING OF NAVIGATION.—SEE PAGE 71.

Digitized by Google

WASHINGTON, D. C.—SOCIAL LIFE IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.—AN EVENING IN THE PRIVATE PARLORS OF THE EXECUTIVE MANSION.—FROM A SKETCH BY MISS GEORGIE A. DAVIS.—SEE PAGE 71.

Digitized by Google

KISMET.

I WALK alone with sad, neglected ghosts—
Vague shapes of promise that were once to be
The golden-freighted ships that sailed the sea,
Bearing my treasures from far-distant coasts.
I hear the merry laugh, the jubilant toasts,
That in my halls rose musical and free.
Ah! but those days were happy days for me,
And I had loving friends in countless hosts.
They say the ships were wrecked on some cold shore.
Where are the friends that held my love so dear?
For neither friend nor ships are now my own.
How false the vows that red lips softly swore;
How false the hopes that filled my soul with cheer!
For through life's sombre paths I walk alone.

THOMAS S. COLLIER.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DIMITRY.

CHAPTER V.—REGINALD IN PARIS.

THERE was the usual bustle at the dock of the General Transatlantic Steamship Company on North River, where lay the Pereire awaiting her hour of departure, as Reginald ascended the gangway to the steamer's deck.

At the company's office, while purchasing his ticket, he had asked if the names of Luigi Vellani and the Marchesa di Lupo were registered among those who had sailed for Havre on the vessel of the same line that had left the previous week. An examination of the list showed them to be there.

He had nothing to do in the interval of waiting but to stand on deck and watch the arrival of passengers, the running about of porters and others connected with the ship, the movements of friends of the passengers who had come to see the latter safely off, and the leave-takings of those on shore.

All things have an end at last, and so the huge steamer, at the signal from the engineer's bell, finally began to move out towards the middle of the stream.

In the ensuing half-hour, while the clustered houses of New York, Jersey City and Brooklyn gradually became confused in a mass of brick and mortar, Reginald walked the deck, thinking of Manuela, of the purpose of his journey abroad, of the lost manuscript, of his coming explanation with Vellani, and of his expected meeting with Melchior.

The resolute determination with which, one week before, he had planned his mission of vengeance—if that term might be applied to the object of his trip to Europe—had not weakened in the least, now that he had taken the first step towards the carrying out of his plans. On the contrary, as the hour of action approached, he felt his purpose grow stronger and the reality of Vellani's affront seemed to rise more clearly before his mental vision.

If at times, during his walk, his mind reverted to the contents of the manuscript, it was only in a way of vague speculation, for, while it was certain that the treasure, if it still remained undisturbed in its receptacle of adobe, was worth the seeking, the total absence of any clew to the locality of the pueblo would as certainly render all efforts to obtain it futile. That this pueblo was in the New World was evident, and equally evident was it that its church had been in charge of Spanish missionaries, from the use in the manuscript of the terms "adobe" and "padre," and from the name of the priest. But here his speculations abruptly ended, for beyond these facts, as if to distract his logical consideration of the subject, lay the vast arena of the Spanish conquests in the two Americas, with their multitudinous religious establishments and the attendant successive risings of the native population against the invaders. And then, too, unless the full name of the writer and of his fortress-prison were known to him, the archives of the Spanish domination in America might fail to give him the information that would be needed to clear up the mystery.

Of Manuela he thought with a tender memory. Away from her, and recalling more calmly her glorious traits, physical and moral, she seemed to his mind to bear a close relation to the few heroines, the record of whose careers history has preserved. He had spoken to her of his hopes, that she would think of him kindly when he should be away, and she had promised that she would do so. Although she had not bound herself to him, he knew that even as he loved her so she loved him; and in his thoughts of her was mingled a certain sweet superstitious feeling that in his journey her protecting spirit would accompany him.

From Manuela his thoughts drifted to Melchior, whom, by some singular combination of ideas, he blended in his mind with Manuela herself. He was her brother, resembling her, and, doubtless, inspired by the same sentiments of truth and fidelity. He could see him in imagination, a type of that Crichton whose skill as a swordsman Manuela had suggested that he—Reginald—might one day equal; a man with the face of Adonis and the soul of Mars—in whom were joined the grace and beauty of youth and the discretion of maturer years.

So, dwelling on what was nearest to his heart, he still walked the deck long after the steamer had passed the Narrows and had entered the trackless ocean, and when the white coast of Coney Island lay shining in the distance, a strip of surf-beaten sands.

When the steamer reached Havre, Reginald hastened from the vessel to the Paris railway station, having previously satisfied himself by inquiries among the drivers of the fiacres, at the landing, that a lady and a gentleman, apparently Italians from their conversation, and whose trunks were marked "Milan," had been driven to the same station a week before, on the arrival of the Ville de Paris from New York, in one of the vehicles that usually attended at the steamers' dock.

Having obtained this knowledge, he bought a ticket, seated himself in the car, and, as the train sped on its way to the French capital, he leaned back in his seat and speculated on the chances of his finally meeting with the pair in the city of their destination.

Had he been in Paris for the first time on this occasion, or had his mind been less impressed with the responsibility that attached to his present journey, he might have devoted his days of waiting for Melchior to sight-seeing and to familiarizing himself anew with the city's wonders. As it was, however, after securing lodgings at a hotel he began to make inquiries at the Paris end of the Havre railway similar to those that he had made at the dock in Havre. Success, although qualified, here also attended his efforts, for, by dint of questionings among the coachmen on duty at the station he discovered that one of them, a glib fellow in his way, recollected that a certain Marchesa di Lupo—that name having been on the lady's trunks—had engaged him about a week before, on the arrival of the Havre train, to drive her to the station of the Lyons road.

The man remembered, furthermore, that a gentleman had accompanied her in the carriage to the train, and, after seeing her to the station, had bidden her good by, telling her that he would soon be in Milan.

Reginald gave the communicative driver a franc as a pour-boire.

"Did the gentleman say," he asked, "at what time he should be in Milan?"

"Faith!" ejaculated the cocher, as he shrugged his shoulders, "I did not hear him say. He said, 'Au revoir—I shall be in Milan soon.' Then the lady went into the car and I drove away."

"You do not know, however, whether the gentleman went with the lady or remained in Paris?"

"But how? The train was there ready to depart—is it not? Eh, well! The gentleman assisted the lady into the train; he saluted madam and said 'Au revoir.' I was there when the train departed, and monsieur he was there, too. How? Was I not there—I?"

The sum of the intelligence thus obtained regarding the movements of Vellani and the marchesa was that, while the former, for some reason unknown to Reginald, had deferred his departure from Paris, the latter had proceeded at once to Milan, if the fact of her having taken the Lyons train might be accepted as evidence to that effect. He, therefore, had little fear of not finding the couple in Milan when he should be prepared to set out for that city.

While awaiting Melchior's arrival he determined to spend the intervening days in endeavoring to perfect himself in pistol-practice, and to acquire a knowledge of at least the rudiments of fencing. Without any delay, therefore, he set about the work, with the resolve to devote several hours of each day to the pistol and the foils. Entering a shop in which the fencer's paraphernalia—foils, gloves, visors and jackets—were sold, after the purchase of a dozen foils and two sets of the other articles, he asked the shopman:

"Can you direct me to a good fencing-master?"

"If monsieur will go to the Rue St. Marc, near the Rue Vivienne, he will find the man he wants," was the reply.

The fencing establishment in the Rue St. Marc opened on a courtyard of a house in that street, and when Reginald entered the brilliantly lighted salle d'armes he found assembled there fifteen or twenty men, some conversing and looking on, and others, coatless and vestless and equipped for fencing, thrusting at each other and parrying each other's blows with slender foils which, striking together, filled the air with a shivering, sawing sound.

For a while he looked at the passages-at-arms, admiring the expertness of those who seemed most familiar with the use of the foil and wondering whether he could ever hope to attain something of the skill they exhibited. Then his eye glanced around the room and took in its special features.

On the walls were hung visors, gloves, and padded buckskin jackets, and under these were suspended rows of gleaming foils.

From the foils, as they rose and fell in the fencers' hands, with the swiftness of thought, or tremblingly played against each, the gas-light reflected in a thousand flashes and spark-like scintillations. There was little danger to the participants in the sport, for, thoroughly guarded from injury as they were by the visors and jackets, the foils with their blunt ends repeatedly reached their marks without any other result than a gay friendly laugh and an exclamation of "Touched, monsieur!"

The proprietor of the establishment was engaged with a pupil at the moment of Reginald's entrance, and when, after a few minutes devoted to the lesson, the pupil dropped his foil and with a bow retired to a chair to rest himself, he briskly approached Reginald, and with a polite bow said:

"Does monsieur desire to try his skill with the foils, or does he merely wish to see the other gentlemen fence? Monsieur is very welcome in either case."

"Many thanks, sir. I am desirous of taking fencing lessons, and have come here for that purpose," was Reginald's response.

"Bien! does monsieur know something of the art?"

"No; I have never had a foil in my hand."

"Très bien! Monsieur, I am convinced, would make an artiste with the foil. Monsieur has a good chest; he has strong arms, a quick eye and firm legs."

He stood off at a little distance, putting his head on one side, and contemplated Reginald much as if he had been a prize ox.

"I cannot, of course, guarantee," he continued, "that monsieur will astonish himself by his own skill in a few days' practice, but in a month or six weeks——"

He again bowed very politely, smiled, brought his hands together, and left his visitor to conjecture as to the degree of perfection that he might hope to attain in that period.

Had it been Reginald's ambition simply to acquire the art of fencing as he would any other manly accomplishment, the favorable opinion of his qualifications expressed by the maître d'armes would have delighted him beyond measure; but, as the case stood, he felt that he could not devote so much time to the task of transforming himself into what the instructor complimentarily termed "an artiste with the foils."

"It is impossible," he said, in answer to the last remark, "that I should devote a month or six weeks to continuous practice. A week, or ten days at the most, is all I can give."

"Does monsieur expect to have immediate use for his knowledge of fencing?" asked the maître d'armes, insinuatingly, and with a certain air of mystery.

"Perhaps I may," returned Reginald. "And for that reason, in order not to find myself at a disadvantage, I should be glad to be taught some of the secret methods with which accomplished fencers, as I have heard, are familiar."

"My dear sir," replied the maître d'armes, laying the palm of his hand lightly on the lapel of Reginald's coat, "you have been misinformed. What you have said there is a very common mistake. There is no secret in the art. They speak of this blow and that blow—ma foi! one must be a good fencer—an artiste, in effect, to succeed with anything. Monsieur is, let us suppose, artiste. Eh, bien, monsieur has no need of tricks in fencing! Voilà!"

"How is it, then, that one man is superior to another with the sword?"

"Because he has skill and a good eye. Because he is quick and cool. Because he does not become excited, and he waits for a chance that his opponent—if he be not so cool and have not so good an eye—will certainly give him. Something, too, is due to long practice. You comprehend?"

"Then, sir, you have no special secret in your profession to impart?"

"To a gentleman about to fight a duel with swords," answered the maître d'armes, impressively, "I should give this advice: Watch your opponent's eye; don't excite yourself, retreat as much as possible, parry instead of attacking, and when your man has tired himself out, either run him through or, if you can do so, twist his sword out of his hand. This, sir, is my only secret. If I give monsieur lessons he shall be taught every movement with the foil which I know myself. I can promise no more."

"I ask no more than that. And now, if you are at leisure, I should be glad to begin."

In five minutes Reginald, in shirt-sleeves, stood in the fencer's attitude, with right foot advanced, his left arm raised and his right hand holding his gleaming foil with the point on a line with his eye. Previous to assuming this attitude he had politely acknowledged the salute with which the maître d'armes, passing his foil from hilt to point through his left hand and bending it slightly as he did so, had thrown himself into position with the brief, cautious exclamation:

"A vous, monsieur!"

The lesson that followed was more laborious than brilliant, and in moments when, at Reginald's special request, the fencing-master exhibited a little of his skill, quietly prodded, now his visitor's mark, then his jacket above the heart, and finally his sword-arm, Reginald entertained the profoundest contempt for himself as a possible swordsman, not unmingled with a solicitous reflection regarding the degree of expertness that Vellani might develop under circumstances more perilous than those that marked the fencing lesson.

It was almost with dejection that, fatigued with the long exercise which seemed only to point out more forcibly to himself his awkwardness with the foils, he at last lowered his weapon, bowed to the maître d'armes and stepped back, removing his mask and gloves as he did so.

"Monsieur is fatigued?" said the latter, sympathetically, standing in an attitude as of awaiting Reginald's further pleasure.

"It is indeed fatiguing," Reginald replied, drawing a long breath. "But I suppose one becomes accustomed to that, too. Now tell me, what sort of a fencer shall I make?"

"Monsieur has done very well for a first trial, but he must trust more to his talent than to genius. Monsieur has talent vraiment, and he should hope for the best."

"Thank you for your candor," replied Reginald, laughing, while his instructor bowed, raised his left hand deprecatingly, and said:

"I always tell my pupils honestly what I think of their prospects, when they ask my opinion. Then there is no disappointment. However, monsieur may prove more skillful than I think. We shall see. But a week or ten days only——" and he finished with a suggestive shrug of the shoulders and a contortion of the lips which was rather discouraging to the pupil.

Before he retired from the place, Reginald had made arrangements with its proprietor for as many lessons during the next ten days or two weeks as he might choose to take. When these preliminaries were settled, with a shake of the hand and a mutual interchange of compliments, he parted from his instructor and left the fencing-school, walking towards the Boulevard Montmartre.

His violent exercise of a half-hour before had heated his blood, and he strolled along the bright thoroughfare for an hour or more, cooling himself. Then, remembering that his essay at arms had given him an appetite, he entered a café.

As he crossed the threshold, two gentlemen stood at the cashier's desk, settling with the female who presided over that department for their dinner.

At the same moment, a third gentleman, coming from a table near by, from which he had just risen, joined them.

"Ha, Vellani!" exclaimed one of the two gentlemen. "You here!" Then, turning to his companion, the speaker added: "M. de Saltigny, let me make you acquainted with M. Luigi Vellani, of the Italian army."

Reginald paused abruptly at the sound of this familiar name, and half-turned on his heel. He felt the blood rising to his face as he stood for an instant irresolute.

What he would have said or done had he followed his first impulse it would be difficult to say; but even in turning, he had recalled his promise to Manuela to be prudent, and he controlled himself.

In the backward glance that he gave, however, he had taken in the physical characteristics of the man who had been so close to his thoughts for many days, and in whose presence chance had thus so strangely thrown him.

As the group passed out of the door into the street, laughing gayly, he mentally photographed the Italian officer, and the image that remained on his mind as Vellani disappeared was that of a man of about his own age and height, dressed like a boulevardier, with close-cut brown hair, a brown, flowing mustache and a heavy imperial; of slender figure, and with a face that indicated less of the manly determination of the soldier than the cool assurance of the flaneur.

"So, Mr. Luigi Vellani, you are still in Paris!" he said to himself, taking his seat at the table and spreading his napkin on his lap, leisurely. "When next we meet, we shall not pass each other as strangers!"

Then, perceiving that the waiter was standing in an attitude of expectancy near his chair, he said, as he took up the menu and began to consult its contents:

"To begin with, my friend, bring me a glass of absinthe and aniscette."

CHAPTER VI.—MELCHIOR.

DURING the ensuing days of waiting for Melchior, Reginald varied his fencing-school and pistol-gallery practice with what might be called private instruction in fencing given by a waiter of the hotel, whose accomplishment with foils had become known to him.

This garçon, by name Antoine, for a consideration was accustomed to repair to his room each morning at a certain hour, when he—Antoine—was supposed to be at breakfast, and for ten minutes or so would assist his employer in breaking a succession of foils in teaching him what he termed "the commander's blow," the success of which he assured Reginald was infallible, when thoroughly understood and properly performed.

After a while the rumor of these assaults-at-arms having spread about among the other garçons and the chambermaids of the floor on which his apartment was situated, Reginald's goings and comings were noticed, as those of an eccentric American monsieur, whose odd mania was to acquire a knowledge of fencing secrets. He, however, was ignorant of the notoriety he had gained in the establishment until the day of his departure from the hotel, and then he discovered that he had been charged by the hotel-keeper for his fencing labors with Antoine under the head of "extras."

At the shooting gallery and fencing-school his progress was slow. His occasional success in hitting the mark with the bullet he regarded as owing more to chance than to expertness, and, while his intelligence enabled him to appreciate what a swordsman should do in order to become proficient with the sword, his acquaintance with the fencer's art still remained at the aggravating stage of theoretical, rather than practical, knowledge.

"It is very easy," his instructor would say of a certain blow, "to parry this lunge. Now see. Monsieur will please to make the lunge. There, you observe, I parry and then I lunge in my turn—so! It is very easy."

"I dare say it ceases to be difficult when one has practiced it for a long time," Reginald would reply. "But, unfortunately, with such an antagonist as you, I can neither parry the first lunge nor avoid your parry in making the succeeding one."

"Let us have patience, monsieur," the maître d'armes would say, "and let us try it again."

The day was at hand when, according to Manuela's promise, Melchior was to arrive in Paris. The allotted two weeks had expired, and as Reginald already had made several inquiries at the Hotel du Louvre for him without success, he repaired thither one morning about the time when he might be expected, and asked if Mr. Melchior had arrived.

The clerk examined the register.

"Mr. Melchior Waring," he said, reading from the book. "Room 50. Arrived last night."

"Oblige me by having this card taken to Mr. Waring's room," said Reginald.

The card passed from the hand of the clerk to that of the call-boy, who proceeded upstairs on his mission. In two minutes he returned with the information that Mr. Melchior Waring was in and would be pleased to see monsieur in his parlor.

Following the waiter up the stairs, Reginald was shown to the door of a room. The waiter rapped, a voice from within called to the knocker to enter, the waiter opened the door, and then, bowing Reginald into a private parlor, retired, closing the door after him.

The occupant of the parlor stood with his back to the fireplace smoking a cigarette, which, as Reginald entered, he threw into the grate. At the first glance given to him, Reginald saw that his imagination had not gone astray in picturing Melchior Waring as an Adonis in face and form; for sure nothing could have been imagined more perfect in grace and beauty than the youth—for he scarcely could be called a man—who stood before the mantelpiece with Manuela's eyes and Manuela's smile, looking at him. In lineaments the same; in expression a trifle more sedate perhaps. There were but two or three features of the face in which the resemblance between Manuela and her brother was wanting. These differences were comprised in the complexion which, in Melchior, was darker than Manuela's; in certain shadows that lay under the eyelids, and which gave to his eyes a darker appearance; and in a youthful side-whisker which grew on either cheek, parallel with the ear.

Digitized by Google

Melchior had Reginald's card in his hand when the latter presented himself.

"Mr. Grey, I presume?" he said, advancing and extending his hand. "I have been expecting you."

"Thanks, Mr. Waring, for the assurance," replied Reginald. "I scarcely should have needed to ask you if you are Miss Waring's brother. Your resemblance to her is too striking to admit of a doubt of the relationship."

"Ah, sir," returned Melchior, "you should have seen us a few years ago—before we ceased to be children! Then, indeed, you might have wondered. But these resemblances are common, I believe, among twins."

"Common enough, but rarely so remarkable as that between you and your sister."

Melchior bowed, drew up two chairs and, inviting Reginald to be seated, occupied one of them himself.

"Manuela wrote to me a few days ago," he observed, "advising me of your visit to Europe and of its double purpose, and telling me that you would call on me when I should arrive in Paris. She seems to think that I may be of service to you, Mr. Grey. If her supposition be correct, please command me. I have a few days of leisure before me, during which I can place myself at your disposal." As he spoke, and before Reginald could reply, he took a cigar case from his pocket, opened it, and presented it with the remark, "Do you smoke?"

Reginald took one of the proffered cigars.

"For my part," continued Melchior, "I prefer to smoke the cigarette. It is a habit acquired from my Mexican friends and relations," and with these words, he proceeded to roll up a cigarette with paper and tobacco which he took from the pocket of his waistcoat.

"Now, to return to the subject of Manuela's letter," he resumed. "If you have no objection, I should like to be made acquainted with all the facts in the case, both as regards the missing manuscript and the insulting letter you received from the Italian officer. I offer myself as your confidant and friend, and I ask your confidence in your difficulties."

"You shall have it," returned Reginald. "I only wish," he added, warmly, "that I could express in suitable terms my sense of your kindness."

Smoking his cigarette and leaning back in his chair with half-closed eyes, with his handsome face and his extraordinary likeness to Manuela riveting Reginald's attention even as he proceeded with his recital, Melchior gave close heed to the story that Reginald had to impart. The latter had been careful to bring with him the translation of the ancient manuscript, and this he also read to his companion, as well as the letters that had been written by the marchesa and Signor Luigi Vellani.

"In regard to the Vellani affair," said Melchior, when Reginald had completed his narrative, "my sister wrote to me that, as you were unacquainted with the sword exercise, it would be prudent for you to take lessons in fencing. Have you done anything in that way yet?"

"For the past two weeks I have been at it steadily," replied Reginald. "Moreover, I have been shooting away enough powder, in endeavoring to obtain accuracy of aim with a pistol, to supply a company of soldiers in an engagement."

"It was well to take time by the forelock," observed Melchior, with a laugh. "What has been the result of your efforts? Manuela desired me particularly to question you on this subject."

"I am sorry to say that I am a failure as a swordsman. Perhaps with the pistol I could go into the field on something like equal terms. With the sword, however, Vellani must be more or less proficient, and if I should be compelled to fight him with that weapon he would have a decided advantage."

"Who was your fencing-master?"

"I have been attending the fencing school in the Rue St. Marc, and I have also been taking lessons in a private way from a man—a waiter—in the Hotel Splendide, where I lodge. The sum total of my lessons is generally two or three foils broken, and a renewed conviction that in order to become even an ordinary fencer I should be obliged to keep at it for a year or two."

"And you are still bent on calling this man to account?" said Melchior, as he lighted a cigarette that he had just rolled up. "You have not changed your mind since your departure from New York?"

"Not in the least. My mind is more than ever resolved on obtaining either an apology or suitable satisfaction. By-the-way, I met this Vellani by accident a few nights ago, strange to say."

"Indeed! How was that? I thought his destination was Milan?"

"So it is. But he remained in Paris some days after his return to Europe, and on the night of my arrival in this city I saw him in a café in the Boulevard Montmartre, where I had stopped for dinner."

"How did you know of his intention to remain here?" asked Melchior.

Reginald told him of his conversation with the drivers of the fiacres in Havre and at the Paris station of the Havre Railway, and of the events that had occurred in the café.

"A curious coincidence. What manner of man is this Vellani? Does he look as formidable as his epistolary style would seem to indicate?"

"It would be impolitic, perhaps, to judge a man by his looks," said Reginald; "but Mr. Vellani impressed me as being a very ordinary specimen of the class of the young men about town, as the term goes. There is certainly nothing about him to justify his utterance of the direful threats contained in that letter."

Melchior smiled and blew away the ashes from his cigarette.

"Possibly we may find him only a braggart, after all, Mr. Grey," he observed, carelessly. "Still, that remains to be seen; for as you truly say, it would be impolitic to judge a man merely by his appearance. But speaking of fencing," he added, suddenly, "I should like to try a pass or two with you. I am a pretty fair fencer myself—was taught by a Frenchman in the regiment of my father, Colonel Waring, on the Mexican border—and I can form a better idea of your proficiency after testing your skill with the foil."

"With all my heart," said Reginald. "If you will ring for a waiter, we can send a messenger to the hotel for my foils, visors and the other things."

The suggestion was adopted; a messenger was dispatched with a note to the Hotel Splendide, and in due time he returned with a large package containing the articles sent for.

(To be continued.)

GEN. GRANT'S PRESENT TO A VICEROY.

IT will be remembered by those who followed the course and kept themselves familiar with the incidents of General Grant's tour round the world, that, while in China, he ascended the Yang-Tse-Kiang River, and was entertained in a princely manner by the Viceroy of the Province of Chi-li, Li Hung-Chang, who is said to have expended $30,000 in the three days during which the General and his party were his guests. Upon their departure he gave them many splendid presents as a mark of his high consideration. Before General Grant sailed for Cuba he ordered from Tiffany & Co., an elaborate silver pitcher to be made of hammered silver, and similar in design to the one made by the same firm for the Duke of Argyle, to be presented to Mr Gladstone. It is covered with ivy leaves, and is further ornamented with butterflies, beetles, etc., in bronze, iron and gold. Upon the bottom of the pitcher is engraved the following:

"HIS EXCELLENCY, LI HUNG-CHANG,
Viceroy of Chi-li,
from U. S. Grant, 1880."

Its cost is $300, and it has been sent to the Chinese Embassy at Washington for transmission abroad.

AN ALLEGED PERPETUAL MOTOR.

MR. PIETROWSKI, a Pole, of New York City, is an engineer by profession, has been in this country sixteen years, and has devoted his leisure hours to the elaboration of his invention for securing perpetual motion. The model consists of a pair of hollow metal wheels, four feet in diameter, which revolve on the same axis, but in opposite directions. The moving power is nine metal balls placed within the wheels so as to bear the rim down at first, and then gravitate towards the axis, where a slide groove runs the balls off to a grooved radius of the wheel revolving in the opposite direction. Four balls were placed in the grooved radii of the first wheel and four in the radii of the second, and when momentum had been gained the ninth ball was added, to give additional power. To the axis of the wheels, which is also the axis of smaller grooved wheels that regulate the speed of the machinery, the shafting is applied.

Several engineers who witnessed the working of the machine were sanguine in the opinion that for all practical purposes, leaving out the engine of the locomotive and the steamboat, it will be found of great value.

THE NEW WING OF THE BLOOMINGDALE ASYLUM.

THE new wing of the Bloomingdale Insane Asylum, erected at the expense of Mrs. John C. Green, as a memorial to her deceased husband, is now practically completed, though the finishing touches are yet to be given, and is already occupied by the patients for whom it was designed. Mr. Green, who was distinguished for his charities, and especially for his liberal gifts to Princeton College, was, at the time of his death, the President of the Board of Governors of the New York Hospital and Bloomingdale Asylum, and had always taken much interest in the conduct of the asylum. The new memorial building, which has cost about $130,000, faces the Hudson and forms an L, extending north from the old building, which was extended about thirty feet. Like the main asylum, it is of brown stone, but of a more modern design and finish, and was built from designs by Mr. Ralph Townsend. There are a basement, three stories and a mansard roof, the whole over fifty feet deep and fronting about two hundred feet upon the Boulevard. The memorial, or, as it is already called, the Green building, is thus, in fact, the front of the asylum, although the main entrance and offices of the institution remain, as heretofore, in the older edifice.

The intention of Mrs. Green in its erection was to provide for the women patients those comforts to which they may have been accustomed, and to remove entirely those evidences of an asylum or prison which too frequently characterize institutions for the insane. As the wards are designed for women whose insanity is of a mild type, it has been possible to fit up the halls and bedrooms with handsome furniture, and the visitor is surprised, upon entering the first ward, at the attractiveness of the surroundings and the parlor-like appearance of the apartment and the well-dressed ladies who are sitting about engaged in needlework or conversation. The floors are brightened by Turkish rugs, the woodwork is painted in stripes of red and blue upon a tinted ground, and the chandeliers are of polished brass. Upon the walls are many engravings. The bedrooms are particularly pleasant. The front rooms overlook the Boulevard, and, beyond, the Hudson River, while from the upper floors the view of the Hudson and across the island to Long Island Sound is magnificent. The furniture is of ash, in Eastlake designs, and the bedsteads are ornamented with tiles and the bureaus with marble tops and dressing mirrors. On each floor is a well-furnished parlor resembling that of a private house. Each parlor contains a piano, a writing-desk and easy-chairs. The dining-rooms are furnished in the same style, and upon the tables are shining silver and delicate china and glass ware. The first, second and third wards are occupied by patients of about the same class, and they are all nearly equally elegant. The fourth floor is devoted to patients whose insanity is of a more pronounced character. There are accommodations in the new building for sixty-five patients in all, and at present about that number are there, some having been removed from the old wards to allow repairs to be made. During the year an assembly hall has been completed and in use, and there the patients meet for religious exercises on Sunday and theatrical entertainments on occasional week day evenings. The hall formerly used for a chapel, and now containing a billiard-room, is being enlarged and will be thrown into wards if necessary.

In connection with her gift of the memorial hall for women patients, Mrs. Green has given a fund of $200,000, the income from which is to be applied to the care of women who were formerly accustomed to the comforts of a home, but who, becoming insane, have no means with which to pay the charge for admission to the Bloomingdale Asylum. It is stipulated by Mrs. Green that this fund shall be for the support of women who have been engaged in teaching school or music, or in similar pursuits. Heretofore there has been no means to enable women in such cases to be taken elsewhere than to the asylum on Blackwell's Island, or to some one of the like institutions of the State, where they are thrown into contact with a more violent and a generally worse class of patients.

Anarchy and Famine in Turkey.

REPORTS from various parts of the Ottoman Empire tell of an almost hopeless condition of confusion and dilapidation. The consuls at Salonica have informed the ambassadors at Constantinople that, except in the immediate neighborhood of the towns, that whole region is dominated by brigands. Thirteen distinct bands are enumerated, comprising in all about one hundred and fifty men—Greeks, Wallachs, Bulgarians, Albanians and Turkish deserters. They levy blackmail upon Mussulmans and Christians indiscriminately.

Appalling accounts continue to come from Armenia and Kurdistan. The famine extends over an area of a hundred thousand square miles. Five months must pass before another harvest can bring relief. An appeal for help has been published in London, signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and a number of other prominent gentlemen. The troubles between the Greeks and Bulgarians in Eastern Roumelia have become so acute, and the evidence of a systematic effort by the Bulgarians to drive away the Greeks and Mussulmans so overwhelming, that Aleko Pasha, Governor-General, though he is believed to be in sympathy with that movement, has been compelled to issue a circular to the prefects, commanding them to dissolve the Bulgarian secret societies and armed gymnastic associations organized by the Russians during their administration in that province.

The financial situation of the empire is very bad. The ministers are endeavoring to frame some plan of reform and retrenchment. Salaries of many officers, including members of the Cabinet, have been largely reduced. It has been resolved to return to a gold standard, and to require all revenue due to the State to be paid in gold, to the exclusion of paper and the debased metallic currency, the latter of which, however, will be receivable for arrears of taxes at one-half of its nominal value. This decision has occasioned a further heavy depreciation in the debased metallic currency, and is declared to be impolitic, cruel and unjust. Great consternation has been produced by it. The price of bread has risen in proportion to the further depreciation of almost the only available medium of purchase. The shopkeepers refuse to receive it except at a reduction, which entails upon the poor the loss of half their means. Already disturbances are reported from several provinces, both in Europe and Asia, and in some of the towns the bakers' shops have been pillaged.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

M. Herve-Mangon has been appointed director of the Paris Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, in succession to General Morin.

The Smithsonian Institution has received from Professor Foerster, of Berlin, the announcement of the discovery by Palisa, at Pola, on March 6th, 1880, of a planet of the eleventh magnitude in 12 hours and 11 minutes right ascension, and 34 minutes north declination, with a daily motion of 3 minutes north.

The Carbolized Paper invented by Captain John F. Rogers, of the United States Army, and which has protected $150,000,000 worth of Government property during the past ten years, is now offered to the public by Messrs. Campbell, Hall & Co., of this city. It is a complete protection against moth, mildew and contagion.

The Chair of Chemistry in the newly established Agricultural College of Berlin is to be filled by Professor H. Landolt, of Aix-la-Chapelle, well known by his exhaustive studies on the relations between the optical properties of bodies and their chemical constitution. His wide experience in saccharimetry has likewise led to his simultaneous appointment as director of the Chemical Laboratory established at Berlin by the German Verein für Rübenzucker-Industrie. Professor Landolt is succeeded in the Polytechnic of Aix-la-Chapelle by Professor A. Classen, who has recently published two favorably-received laboratory manuals on Qualitative and Quantitative Chemistry.

The French Chambers, at the instigation of M. de Freycinet, have voted a sum of 600,000 francs for the cost of sending exploring missions into the remoter parts of Algiers and Senegal, and penetrating into the Sahara of the Western Soudan. Their immediate object is to trace the lines of future railways, but the indirect influence on the extension of our geographical knowledge is most important. Three scientific expeditions are being organized in Algiers; one is to operate in the Algerian Sahara, and will not pass El Goleá; a second, comprising a corps of engineers and an escort of natives, will advance southward from the Wargla, and, after passing the Summer at the Jebel Ahaggar, will proceed by the Hoggar to Sokoto, and, ascending the Niger to Timbuctu, will return by way of Senegal.

Professor Waldhauer, of Dorpat, has visited the northern boundaries of Courland, near the Bay of Domesnaes, in the Gulf of Riga, with a view of studying the condition of the small remnant of people living there, who are the sole representatives of the ancient races of Courland and Livonia. These persons, about 2,400 in number, occupy a limited area of about a verst in width between Melkalin and Lyserort, and are separated from the Letts in the interior by a train of morasses. They exhibit great national pride, deny their affinity with the Esthonians, are ignorant of the term Livonian, and call themselves "randalist," inhabitants of coast lands, or "kalamied," fishermen. They are hardy sailors and skilful pilots. Several families occupy one long hut in common, and their villages resemble those of the Esthonians. They are usually fair skinned, with chestnut or dark-brown hair; the beard, which is generally very abundant in middle life, is seldom seen in young men before the age of twenty-five. Professor Waldhauer has seen no instance of a red beard among them.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

THE United States has passed the Bill to remove the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor.

MR. JOHN A. BINGHAM, Minister to Japan, will be a candidate for renomination to Congress in his old district.

MR. W. MARSHALL, of Glasgow, Scotland, has bequeathed £200,000 to that city for an educational institute for destitute children.

DR LESSEPS has reached San Francisco, and had interviews with the Board of Trade and other business bodies in reference to the interoceanic canal.

PROFESSOR KO-KIN-HUA, of Harvard, is reported as saying that he likes this country very much, and is far from enthusiastic about going back to China.

THE great beau of Florence is the Prince Piero Strozzi, who devotes himself to the married ladies and only exchanges petty glances with the single ones. He drives a pair of handsome gray ponies.

PRINCE LEOPOLD, Queen Victoria's youngest son, is, it is stated, about to travel, and there is a probability of his coming to America. He will travel modestly, having only two persons for his suite.

ROBERT BROWNE, Judge of the County Court of Pleasants County, W. Va., died while opening court on Saturday morning, March 13th. He was eighty years of age; it is supposed that he died of heart disease.

THE engagement is announced of Miss Louisa Evarts, the youngest daughter of Secretary Evarts, to Dr. Charles Scudder, son of Henry J. Scudder, of Scudder & Carter. Dr. Scudder, who is at present house surgeon in Bellevue Hospital, intends to spend next year in Europe following his professional studies.

THE Duchess of Northumberland visited the village schools at Albury Park, the Duke's seat, in Surrey, the other day, and presented to each of the female scholars, numbering some two hundred, a scarlet cloak. The children, as they go to and fro to school, look now like a regiment of little Red Ridinghoods.

THE Russian Minister of the Interior is making arrangements for the despatch next Summer of four steamers, laden with exiles, to the island of Saghalien, in the Pacific. Each vessel will take out five or six hundred exiles, among them being many Nihilists, at present confined in the provincial prisons of Russia.

A SPECIAL meeting of the House Committee on Claims was held on March 17th, to receive the report of the sub-committee upon the claim of General Sutter, the discoverer of gold in California. The report favors an appropriation of $50,000 to satisfy General Sutter's claim, and was unanimously adopted by the committee.

THE British Navy is becoming a school for royalty. Not only are the two sons of the Prince of Wales midshipmen, but Ernest, the thirteen year-old son of the Grand Duke of Hesse and the late Princess Alice, is about to join. Queen Victoria, is said, however, to be rather indifferent to the navy, taking more interest in the army.

ON Wednesday, March 17th, Millie, Alexander and Sol. Block, triplets, born at one birth, reached their majority. The occasion was celebrated by a reception at Eureka Hall, Cincinnati. It created considerable comment, and the statement was made that this was the first instance of the kind ever celebrated in America, and probably in the world.

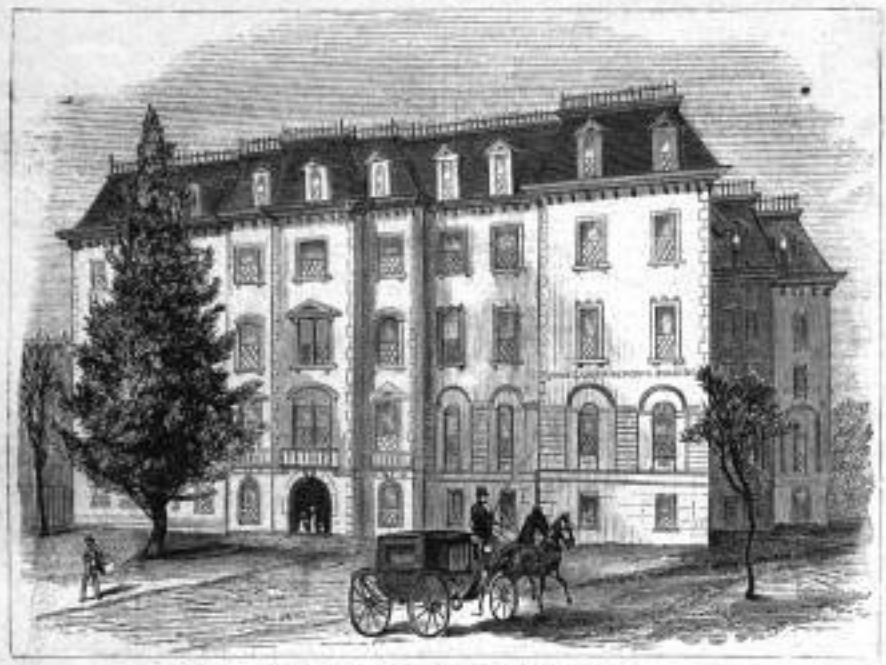
MR. LEON CHOTTEAU has been selected by the French in New York to express to the French Government the strong desire on the part of all Frenchmen in this country to have France properly represented at the Yorktown Centennial Celebration. The idea is to have a French war vessel transport a regiment of soldiers to be present at the celebration.

THERE seems to be little reason to question the truth of the statement that Prince William, eldest son of the Crown Prince, will soon be betrothed. The lady is Princess Augusta Victoria, eldest daughter of the late Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, and not Princess Caroline Mathilde, of Schleswig-Holstein, as previously reported.

THE physicians have informed the Pope as their unanimous opinion that it is necessary for his health to quit the Vatican and pass the Summer where he can avail himself of sea-bathing. "You are merely telling me that it is necessary for me to do what is impossible," he answered. He has consented, however, to allow salt-water baths to be erected in the Vatican.

THE Rev. James Freeman Clarke, who is now seventy years old, is an indefatigable worker. He writes a new sermon every week, and gets up early Sunday morning to put it on paper, accomplishing most of the task before breakfast. Then he lectures a great deal, writes constantly for magazines and newspapers, and can always be depended upon for a political speech.

THE death is announced of Thomas Bell, F. R. S., the English scientist. He was born in Dorsetshire, England, October 11th, 1792; became a member of the College of Surgeons in London in 1815, and Professor of Zoology in King's College, London, in 1833. In 1853 he was elected president of the Linnæan Society. Among his works are a "History of British Quadrupeds," and a "History of British Stalk-eyed Crustacea."



THE monument to the memory of Shumann is already erected in the cemetery at Bonn, and will be unveiled on the 2d of May next. In the evening of the same day a grand vocal and instrumental concert will be held in the Beethoven Hall, in which a number of the leading German performers will take part. This will be followed the next day by a matinee of chamber music. Several of the chief works of the great composer will form the programme.

THE Rev. John A. Watterson, the newly appointed Roman Catholic Bishop of Columbus, was born in Blairsville, Pa., and is about forty years old. He was graduated at Mount St. Mary's College, in Maryland, and immediately accepted a professorship in that institution, where he has continuously remained from 1868 to the present time. Four years ago he was made President of the college. He is described as a man of great learning and fine character.

M. ROCHER has decided to completely renounce political life. He will devote himself in future, it appears, exclusively to the arrangement of the rather complicated affairs of the ex-Empress Eugénie. It is by virtue of these powers that he demands from the French companies, in which the widow of Napoleon III. has been assured for considerable sums, the reduction of the ten per cent. extra premium of which the payment had been stipulated, "for the risks encountered by crowned heads."

CHIEF JUSTICE RYAN, of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals, is in perfect physical health, but he imagines that he is hopelessly ill, and all efforts to persuade him out of his delusion have failed. He was to write a decision in a test case involving the validity of option contracts, and, as it will affect the entire system of the grain trade in the State, it is awaited with great anxiety; but the hypochondriac refuses to work, and his brother Judges of the Court of Appeals are reluctant to take the matter out of his hands.

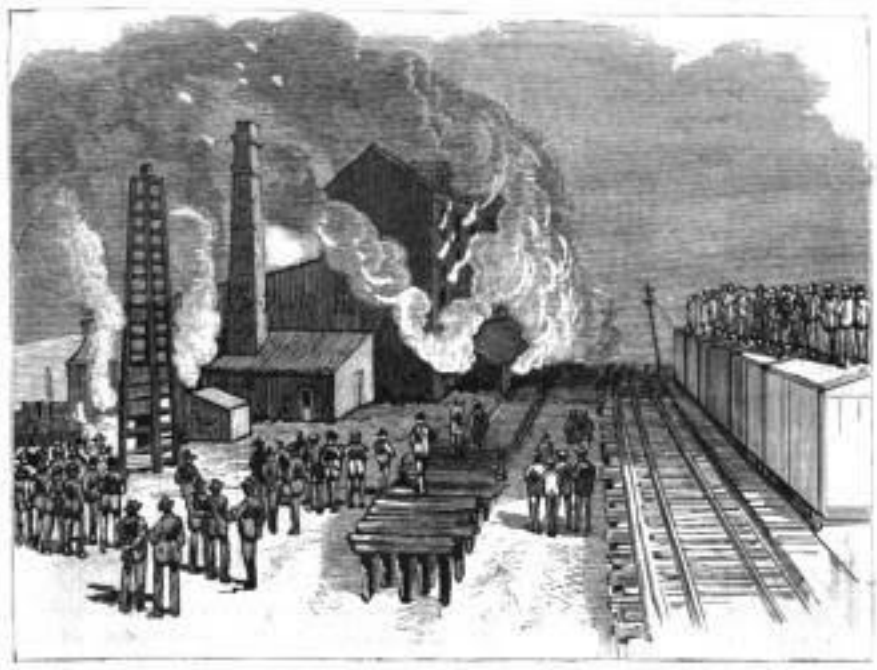
Digitized by Google

EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE NEW WING.

THE MAIN CORRIDOR.

A SLEEPING-ROOM.

THE DINING-ROOM.



THE PARLOR, OR GENERAL RECEPTION-ROOM, OF THE FIRST WARD, FOR INMATES AND THEIR FRIENDS.

NEW YORK.—THE NEW WING OF THE BLOOMINGDALE LUNATIC ASYLUM FOR THE USE OF FEMALE PATIENTS.

SEE PAGE 75.

Digitized by Google

MINNESOTA.—DESTRUCTION OF ELEVATOR NO. 1 AT DULUTH, MARCH 6TH. FROM A SKETCH BY CHARLES F. JOHNSON.

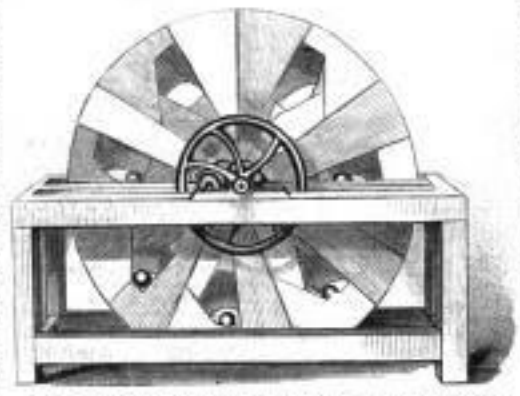
A DULUTH ELEVATOR DESTROYED.

A FIRE at Duluth, Minn., on the 6th of March destroyed the large wheat and corn elevator, known as Elevator No. 1, built in 1870, at a cost of $80,000, and containing 40,000 bushels of wheat and 120,000 bushels of corn. The capacity of the elevator was 250,000 bushels. The total loss was about $160,000. A correspondent says: "This fire is just now a grevious loss to our young city, as all the elevator capacity we have has for the last two years been taxed to its utmost, and pending as it does the erection of a new elevator of a million and a half capacity, but which cannot be finished for next Fall's crop. As a matter of interest, it may be stated that most of the grain consumed is from the Dalrymple farms in Dakota, which were, about a year ago, the subject of your excellent illustrations."

VASE PRESENTED BY GENERAL GRANT TO THE VICEROY OF CHI-LI, CHINA.—SEE PAGE 75.

THE REV. WILLIAM McKINLEY.

MR. McKINLEY, recently settled as pastor of the Church of Christian Endeavor, in Brooklyn, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, came in childhood with his parents to this country, and lived in Maryland till his sixteenth year, when he went to Illinois and there spent five years, partly in teaching school and partly in advancing his own education at the best institutions of learning in the West. Being compelled, by sickness, temporarily to abandon his studies in 1855, he went to Minnesota and sought and found health in the outdoor life of that then new country.



There, beyond the reach of organized churches and ordained ministers, seeing no one else at hand to do the work, at the age of twenty-one he began his ministry as an unpaid, volunteer lay preacher and missionary. A year later, when the Minnesota Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, he was received into that body, of which he is now a member.

His first sermon was preached in a log-cabin on the frontier, to a congregation that crowded the house and heard with curiosity and wonder the youth who, thus early and in such a time and place, took upon himself such an apparently thankless and profitless office. His first charge was a circuit in the picturesque Cannon River country, stretching across the prairies and through the Big Woods of Minnesota east and west indefinitely, and north and south from East Prairie to Castle Rock, at which latter place his memorial remains, near the place of his first sermon, in the form of a church known as "McKinley Chapel."

Since that time, with the exception of two years spent in the South—one as army chaplain during the war, and one, more recently, in Knoxville, Tenn.—Mr. McKinley's ministry has been in Minnesota, most of the time in the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Winona. He has done all kinds of a Methodist minister's work on circuits, stations, and more recently as presiding elder of a large district; was a delegate to the General Conference of his church in Baltimore in 1876, and last Fall was again elected to represent his Conference in the General Conference to be held in Cincinnati next May.

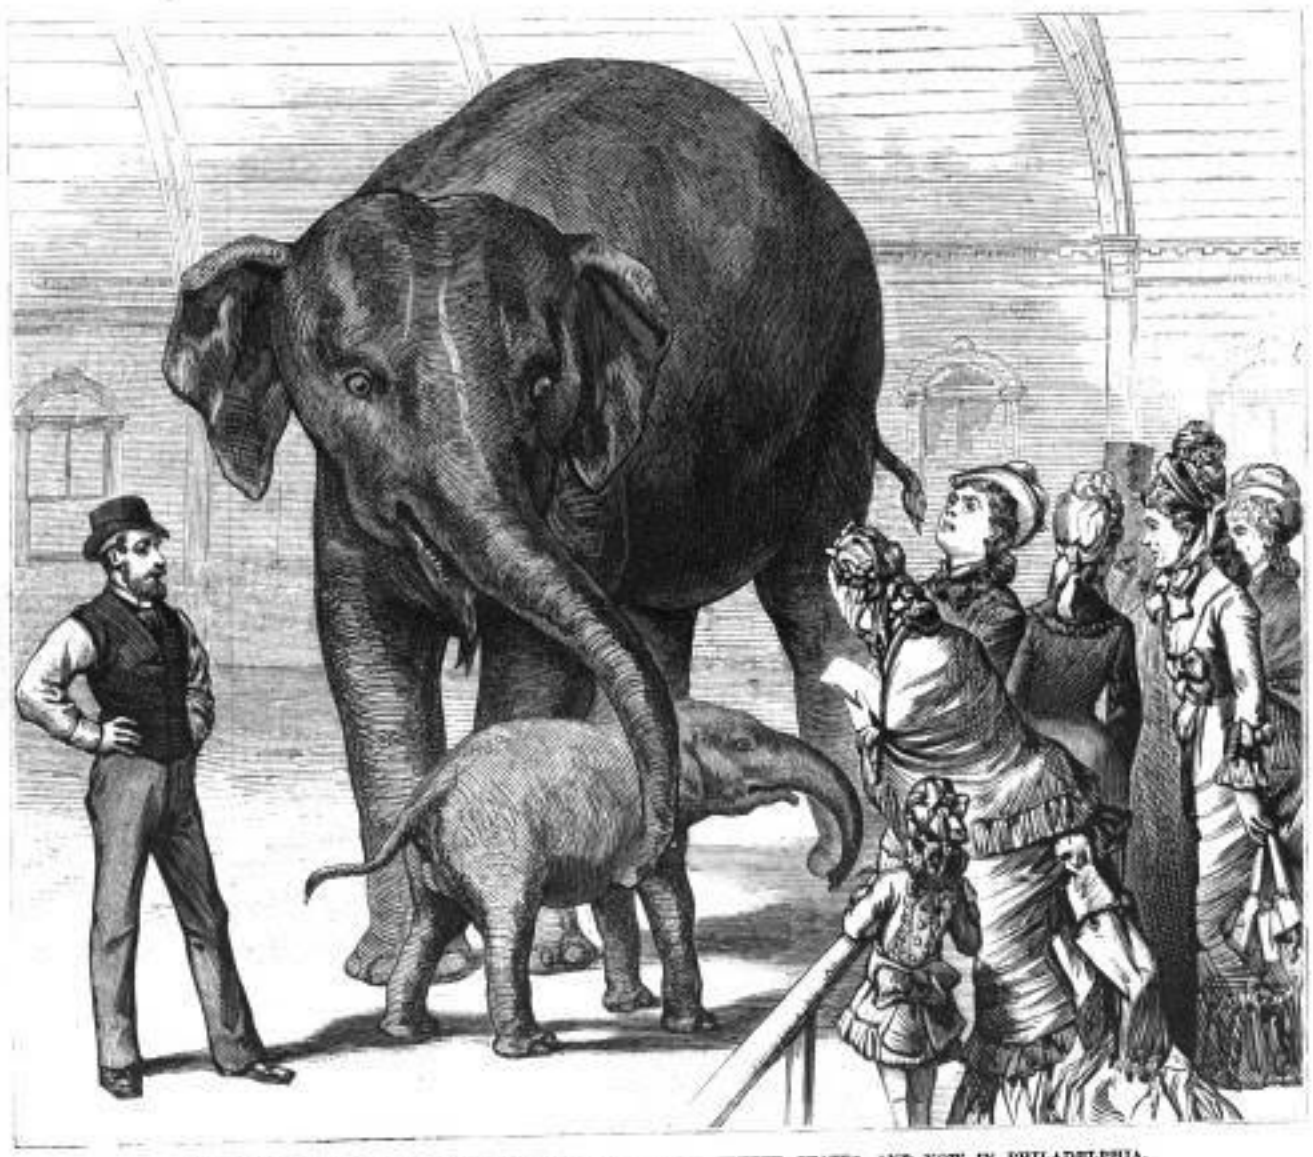
On his first circuit was the Metropolisville of Edward Eggleston's story, "The Mystery of Metropolisville." Here Mr. McKinley met the future author of "The Hoosier School-master," and to that meeting is due the fact that Mr. McKinley now succeeds Mr. Eggleston in Brooklyn. A friendship was then formed between the two young men, and when Dr. Eggleston was compelled by ill-health to resign his pastorate, he suggested Mr. McKinley as his successor, which suggestion having been seconded by the unanimous call of the church, has been accepted, and the one friend succeeds the other with mutual satisfaction to themselves and to all concerned.

Mr. McKinley has received a warm welcome, not only from his own church, but also from the Christian community to which he comes. On Thursday evening, January 29th last, the large auditorium of the Church of Christian Endeavor was filled with people, and the platform with ministers of the neighboring churches, assembled to give him a public reception, and welcome him to his new work and home. It was an occasion of uncommon interest and pleasure, and ought to convince Mr. McKinley that, though a Western man, he is not to be regarded as a stranger and foreigner in the City of Churches.

AN ALLEGED PERPETUAL MOTOR.—SEE PAGE 75.

AN AMERICAN-BORN ELEPHANT.

THE unusual event of the birth of an elephant in captivity occurred in Philadelphia on the morning of March 10th. The mother is one of a herd of five large elephants (two males and three females), which are well-known throughout the country. She is known by her early name of "Baby," having been brought to this country when young. She is twenty-three years old. One of her keepers stated that the mother elephant had had a furious attack of frenzy soon after the birth of her young, and had broken everything within reach. She had kicked down the sides of her stall, twisted off a large beam with her trunk, and necessitated the employment of all the restraint that could be put upon her. The infant is of a pale mauve color and is well proportioned. The animal is a female, weighs 213 pounds, stands 30 inches high, and measures 35 inches from the stock of the trunk to the crupper. In the shape of the body she much resembles the small hippopotamus now in New York, but is darker in color. The trunk is handled with perfect ease, and even in a playful manner towards those who approach. The mother and her huge infant have attracted much attention from scientific gentlemen, besides the ladies of Philadelphia, and great interest is manifested in the youngster's daily improvement.



The baby is a frisky animal, fond of running away from her mother, and takes quite kindly to the throng of visitors; but whenever the infant becomes too familiar with the ladies and children, the mother, who is evidently of a jealous disposition, invariably drags her charge away from the railing.

GEN. LORIS MELIKOFF, CHIEF OF THE SUPREME REGULATING COMMISSION OF RUSSIA.

REV. WM. M'KINLEY, PASTOR OF THE CHURCH OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, BROOKLYN, L. I.

PENNSYLVANIA.—THE FIRST ELEPHANT BORN IN THE UNITED STATES, AND NOW IN PHILADELPHIA.

GEN. MELIKOFF,

DICTATOR OF RUSSIA.

COUNT LORIS MELIKOFF, Chief of the newly-established Supreme Regulating Commission of Russia, and virtually the dictator of that vast empire, is the son of an Armenian merchant, and began his military career as an officer in a Hussar regiment in St. Petersburg. At the opening of the campaign of 1877 he was selected as the commander of the principal column which invaded Armenia from the line of the Caucasus. Ardahan was carried by storm, Kars was invested, Mukhtar was forced back to the mountains, and the appearance of the Bayazid column on the flank was anxiously awaited. At the critical moment the Turkish commander took advantage of shorter lines of communication, and, by weakening his centre, massed his forces against the Russian left wing. Melikoff attacked the enemy in front, but, after a severe repulse, he retreated towards Kars. The left wing, after winning a victory at Zeidikhan, was forced to retire and re-establish its communications with Ertvan. The investment of Kars and Batum was abandoned, and Melikoff's campaign seemed to have ended midway in disaster. He resumed operations about the middle of August, two months after the retreat from the mountains, and lost one of his advanced positions. The Russian forces were then concentrated and heavily reinforced, and, by brilliant generalship, Mukhtar's army was cut in two. The battle of Aladja was an overwhelming victory for the Russians, and the victorious commander lost no time in following up his success. He pursued Mukhtar to

Digitized by Google

Kars, and again defeated him at Dere-Boyun. The storming of Kars, on November 18th, was the most brilliant achievement of the war. Although a night attack upon Erzerum was repulsed, the town was closely invested, and by this series of successes the Russians were virtually masters of Armenia.

Count Melikoff is a man of great and varied accomplishments. In addition to his native language, Armenian, he is familiar with and speaks Russian, Turkish, Persian and French, but is ignorant of German and English. He was a great favorite with his soldiers. He visited them in their bivouacs, tasted their soup, and inquired after their comfort. He took especial care of the sick, frequently inspecting the field hospitals and ambulances. At the same time he was a strict disciplinarian, and required from all, and particularly from the non-commissioned officers of his army, a punctual performance of their duty. His age is fifty-seven.

The imperial ukase, creating the new Commission and appointing General Melikoff chief, was issued on February 24th last, and on the afternoon of March 3d an attempt was made to assassinate the chief, but a mailed shirt preserved his life from the bullets. His assailant was captured, tried and hanged three days afterwards.

BOOK NOTICE.

DR. NORMAN W. KINGSLEY, of this city, has just brought out, through Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., a volume entitled, "Oral Deformities as a Branch of Mechanical Surgery," a large and handsome work profusely illustrated. To the surgeon this title will at once display the character of the work, but to the layman it is necessary to explain that "Oral Deformities" are malformations or irregularities of the jaws, teeth, palate or other parts appertaining to the mouth. These eccentricities of nature or accident it is the design of Dr. Kingsley's book to set before the reader, accompanying such presentment, moreover, with sound and original theories as to the causes of such condition, and devoting the knowledge derived from long and varied experience to the means for curing or modifying them. The book is divided into five parts. The first takes into consideration "Irregularities of the Teeth," and after illustrating the "normal type of jaws," exhibits various deformities and their causes. A curious chapter in this section shows the relation of dental irregularities to the condition of idiocy, giving information derived from extended investigations in this country and in Europe among idiots, cretins, etc. The subject of dental irregularities is continued in an examination involving diagnosis, physiology and pathology, mechanical appliances and cases from an extended practice with their treatment. The second part is devoted to the subject of "Palative Defects." Next is taken up the question of "Maxillary Fractures," and in the two chapters devoted to this part of the subject will be found an able disquisition on diagnosis, and a careful explanation of the best methods of treatment, with descriptions of splints and other machinery used. Part IV. is a profound analysis of the "Mechanism of Speech," including the "Physics of Sound" and the "Formation of Vowels and Consonants." This intricate and novel study has evidently been pursued with enthusiasm by Dr. Kingsley, who has clearly defined from actual experiment the limits of the vocal machinery, and has rendered by elaborate illustrations a most important service to science, and displayed, by his skillful adaptation of means to ends, the possibility of overcoming the most startling deformities and remedying the most indistinct utterance by simple mechanical means. Dr. Kingsley's book closes with "The Æsthetics of Dentistry," which is made to include the application of dental art in the restoration of the features to a natural expression in cases of deformity, and of so regulating malformations as to bring about a normal and even beautiful condition. The value of this treatise to the surgeon as well as to the dentist cannot be over-estimated.

FUN.

DIDACTIC PARENT: Do you know why I am going to whip you?" Jap mind Urchin: "I suppose because you are bigger than I am."

MAMMA (entering)—"Now, I'm sure you children are in mischief, you are so quiet." Ethel (in a rapturous whisper)—"Hush, ma! Tommy's been painting a spider's web on grandpa's bald head while he's asleep, to keep the flies off!"

"JOHN, what odor is that?" "Cloves, love." "But that other?" "Allspice, my beloved." "But isn't there another?" "Yes, apples, beloveliest." "Just one more?" "Raisins, my most beloveliest." "Well, John, if you'd only drink just a little brandy, now, I think you would make a good mince-pie."

ORGAN-ISE (SIZ).—First Rebellious Party—"Drink, dear boy, deranges the nerves, destroyesh the stomach chief, produceth diseases, so why do intelligent men give waysh to itsh, whatsh the cause? Even Dr. Richardson can't tell ush whatsh the organ of drunkenneesh." Second R. P.—"Organ o' drunkenneesh—whatsh the organ o drunkenneesh? Why, the barrel organ, of courshe."

THE examiner is trying to explain to the fat-headed listener the character of a miracle. He asks a scholar. "What is a miracle?" "I don't know, sir." "If—all at once—the sun appeared in the heavens at night, what would you say it was?" "The moon." "But if you were told it was the sun, what would you say?" "I'd say it was a lie." "Now, I never lie. Suppose I told you it was the sun?" The scholar, after a moment's deep reflection, bobbed his head. "Please, sir, I'd say you were drunk."

AT the theatre not long since a distinguished surgeon was seen to applaud an actor with great zest, and those in the immediate vicinity joined in the applause. Turning suddenly round he asked why they applauded. "To tell the truth," said one, "it was partly from example." "But you don't know why I applauded," he continued. "I was applauding the marvelous effects of the iodide of potassium." The actor was one of the physician's patients, who had a stiff elbow joint, and the remedy had proved efficacious, judging by his gesticulations.

CHEAP TRAVEL.

TRAVELING has been reduced to a science, hours and minutes standing instead of furlongs and miles. It has been made easy, delightfully easy, and it has even condescended to be cheap. We can all travel nowadays, and the man who lays by $500 to spend on a tour makes a wiser investment than he is possibly aware of. He purchases health and a chain of rosy thoughts, of delightful realisms which no amount of reading, however well-selected, could possibly counterpoise. As April merges into May the thoughts By oceanwards or mountainwards, or to the sweet wild woods, and the unasked question is "Whither?" The excursions of Thomas Cook & Son make answer and cry, "Come with our annual May party, and leave New York by the Inman steamer City of Brussels on April 19th"; or "Join our grand educational vacation party, and leave New York by the Devonia on July 3d," or "Take a trip with our midsummer party, and leave New York on the Inman line steamer City of Richmond on July 31st. We will take you to England, France, Switzerland, the Rhine, Belgium and Holland, visiting London, Paris, Turin, Genoa, Pisa, Florence, Rome, Naples, Pompeii, Sorrento, Venice, Milan, Lake of Como, the Simplon Pass, Mount Blanc, Geneva, Interlaken, Lucerne, Zurich, Schaffhausen, the Black Forest, Strasbourg, Baden Baden, Heidelberg, Mayence, the Rhine, Cologne, Brussels, Antwerp, Amsterdam, The Hague, Rotterdam." Ninety-four days for $600, including everything! What a trip and how cheap!

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT BONDS,
And other desirable Investment Securities,
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York,

Buy and sell all issues of Government Bonds, in large or small amounts, at current market prices, and will be pleased to furnish information in reference to all matters connected with investments in Government Bonds.

We are prepared to give information in regard to first-class Railway Securities, and to execute orders for the same.

Buy and sell all marketable Stocks and Bonds on commission, at the Stock Exchange and in the open market.

Receive accounts of Banks, Bankers, Merchants and others, and allow interest on daily balances; and for those keeping accounts with us we collect United States coupons and registered interest, and other coupons, dividends, etc., and credit without charge.

☞ We give special attention to orders from Banks, Bankers, Institutions and Investors out of the city, by Mail or Telegraph, to buy or sell Government Bonds, State and Railroad Bonds, Bank Stocks, Railroad Stocks and other securities.

We have issued the Seventh Edition of "Memoranda Concerning Government Bonds," copies of which can be had on application.

FISK & HATCH.

BRILLIANT RESULTS.

THERE can not be found, in the whole range of medical literature, any such a series of brilliant cures as have already been made by the new COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT, especially in Pulmonary diseases. Catarrh, a close relation of vitality or dying from weakness or sickness, and the wide range of torturing Neuralgic affections. Our treatise on the Nature, Action and Results of this new Treatment, which is rapidly coming into use in all parts of the country, is sent free. Write and get it. DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1112 Girard St., Phila., Pa.

PATRICK, having been told that Dr. Peters had found an asteroid, remarked: "Bedad, he may have his asteroid, but as for meself of prefer a horse wer ride."

SOLID AS GRANITE.

THE Insurance Commissioner of Connecticut, who has recently completed the regular examination of the ÆTNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, as required by law, speaks of its condition with the utmost confidence and enthusiasm. The other day he remarked, in conversation concerning the Ætna Life, that its assets are as solid as granite.

THE MARKET PRICE OF BUTTER

is increased 3 to 5 cents a pound by using GILT-EDGE BUTTER-MAKER in churning—increases product 4 to 10 per cent. Reduces time of churning one-half. Keeps butter from becoming "strong" or rancid. Gives a rich golden color the year round. Sold by druggists, grocers and general storekeepers. Send stamp for "Hints to Butter-Makers." Address, BUTTER IMPROVEMENT CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE
IN TYPHOID FEVER.

I HAVE been greatly benefited myself, as also have others from using HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE. I have used it to the exclusion of all other remedies, in typhoid fever, with very gratifying results to myself, and with thanks from my patients for so agreeable a remedy. C. H. J. KELLAM, M. D.
St. CHARLES, MINN.

If you have a sore throat, cough, cold in the lungs, head or bowels, take DR. BROWNING'S C. & C. CORDIAL. It cures quickly. Price 50 cents.

THROAT DISEASES often commence with a cold, cough, or unusual exertion of the voice. These incipient symptoms are allayed by the use of "Brown's Bronchial Troches," which, if neglected, often result in a chronic trouble of the Throat.

PITTSFORD, MASS., Sept. 28th, 1878.
SIRS:—I have taken HOP BITTERS and recommended them to others, as I found them very beneficial.
Mrs. J. W. TULLER,
Sec'y Women's Christian Temperance Union.

PROOF of superiority. Sales immense through England and France of Mrs. S. A. Allen's WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Sold by Druggists.

HALFORD LEICESTERSHIRE TABLE SAUCE.—No gentleman's table should be set without it. A genuine relish.

YOU, who read these lines, are the one who needs an Accident Policy in THE TRAVELERS.

MILLIONS of bottles of HUNNETT'S COCOAINE have been sold during the last twenty years, in every civilized country, and the public have rendered the verdict that it is the cheapest and best Hair Dressing in the world.

THE Agents' Herald's announcement in another column deserves attention.

ADAMS, MASS., May 8th, 1879.
H. W. JOHNS MFG. CO., 87 Maiden Lane, New York:
Dear Sirs—We have sold and used H. W. Johns' Liquid Paints for three years, and they have given perfect satisfaction to all who have used them. Among others I. L. Brown Paper Co., Hoolrew Mfg Co., Arnold Print Works, Freeman Mfg Co. We think they are the best paints in use. Yours truly, F. E. MOLE & CO

OFFICE OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST,
New York, July 22, 1878.
H. W. JOHNS MFG. CO., 87 Maiden Lane, New York:
Dear Sirs—I have used your Paint upon outside work of my house, and can already see that the work done with it is superior to that done with the lead and oil paint. I am much pleased with the paint, and wish now to try the pure white for inside work, etc.
Yours truly, HENRY STEWART.

CHAMPLIN'S
LIQUID PEARL
"Is an excellent cosmetic."—Tribune. "The best I have ever used."—Charlotte Thompson. "The best I have ever used; for the future I shall use no other."—Lotta. "Far superior to the one I bring over from Paris."—Jennie Lee. "Superior to any cosmetic."—Spirit Sirdoms. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a bottle. Beware of imitations. CHAMPLIN & CO., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

50 Pinafore, Chromo, Photo., etc., Cards, in case, 10 cts. Agent's outfit, including over 80 samples, 10 cents. CONNECTICUT CARD CO., Northford, Ct.

LA BELLE CHOCOLATIERE.

One Hundred Years Old.
1780 1880
WALTER BAKER & CO.
Dorchester, Mass.
CHOCOLATE, BROMA and COCOA
In their best and purest form, contain every ingredient that is needful for the sustenance and growth of the human system, being composed, as determined by chemical analysis, of starch, gum, gluten, oil, and a white crystallizable substance called theobromine, similar to theine in tea, but containing more nitrogen and being an important adjunct to nutrition.
SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.
Our Book of Choice Chocolate Receipts will be sent free to any address.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.
Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane sts. New York.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY.
Ouida's Great Novel,
MOTHS.
12mo., 525 pages, Extra cloth, $1.25
, For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price by
J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Philadelphia.

ANGOSTURA BITTERS
An excellent appetizing tonic, of exquisite flavor, now used over the whole civilized world, cures dyspepsia, diarrhœa, fever and ague, colics, and all disorders of the digestive organs. Try it, but beware of counterfeits. Ask your grocer or druggist for the genuine article, manufactured by DR. J. G. B. SIEGERT & SONS. J. W. HANCOCK, U. S. Sole Agent, 51 B'way, N. Y. P. O. Box 2,610, N. Y.

Illustrated Catalogue 150 pp. and Lecture, 10c.
MAGIC LANTERNS & VIEWS
THEO. J. HARBACH, 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

CANDY
Sent one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

CHEAP MUSIC
Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 32 Park Row, New York.

THE SPRING FASHIONS
JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.
Frank Leslie's
LADY'S MAGAZINE
—AND—
Gazette of Fashion,
Universally regarded for nearly a quarter of a century as the
FASHION STANDARD OF AMERICA
FULL AND ACCURATE DESCRIPTIONS ARE GIVEN OF THE LATEST PARISIAN STYLES OF LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S COSTUMES,
Beautiful Colored and Plain Fashion Plates
Are imported monthly from Paris,
EXCLUSIVELY FOR THIS MAGAZINE.
"FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE needs no special praise at our hands; it speaks for itself, and is a prime favorite in every household where it has ever gained a foothold. Its stories, its poetry, its sketches, its engravings, its fashions—all things about it, in fact—are first-class in their way; and, take it for all in all, we don't know of a lady's magazine in America that excels it, and few that come within measurable distance of equaling it, in any of the departments we have mentioned. In point of cheapness it outranks them all, quality and quantity considered, its price being only $3.00 a year, postpaid."—Lyons (N. Y.) Republican.
The readers of the LADY'S MAGAZINE have the earliest information of the constant change in Fashions, as its reports appear simultaneously with those in the journals of Paris.
Each Number is Profusely Embellished.
Published on the 15th of every month. Annual subscription, $3.00, postpaid.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Amusements.

BOOTH'S THEATRE, BEGINS AT 8.
Last week but one.
ABBEY'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
SPANISH STUDENTS. | THE GREAT LORELLAS. | PRINCE ROYAL. KATSNOSHIN.
MAFFIT AND FRASER. A WORLD OF NOVELTIES.
Come and see the CRAZE PUZZLE DONE—13, 13 & 14.
MATINEES WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.
ABBEY & HICKEY.....Proprietors.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
Every Night at 8, The
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy,
Royal Middy.
Matinees every Wednesday and Saturday.
THIRD MONTH, NINTH WEEK.
THE CROWNING SUCCESS OF THE SEASON!
, Seats may be secured a fortnight ahead.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
First appearance in New York of
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
the charming Vocalist and Actress, as
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
in which character she has received the indorsement of the press throughout the country.
She is supported by the J. E. McConnell and Bob Fulford Combination.
SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:30 and EVENING AT 8.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER.
After months of most elaborate preparation,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
with entire NEW COSTUMES and with a GREAT CAST, the grandest dramatic work of this century,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THIS GREAT PLAY CAN BE GIVEN HERE BUT THREE WEEKS, AS THE REGULAR SEASON CLOSES ON APRIL 10th, Mr. Palmer being under engagement to present his company to the Boston public for a season commencing April 12th.
Seats for any of the TWO ORPHANS NIGHTS are now on sale.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
"WIDOW BEDOTT."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Propr & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
"RICE'S SURPRISE PARTY."
CHAS. L. ARGENTS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

Frank Leslie's
POPULAR MONTHLY.
The Best and Cheapest Magazine in America.
128 PAGES QUARTO. OVER 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.
Published on the 15th of each month. Price 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

100,000 Agents Wanted by 999 Advertisers in the

An old-established and decidedly prosperous illustrated semi monthly of sixteen large pages. It has an eye on Notorious Swindlers and Bogus Advertisers, and sounds the alarm as soon as its eagle eye descries them. Contains special trade Novelties, including ten thousand new Subscription Books, and fast-selling Agents' Goods, with beautiful cuts illustrating the same. Rare chances for the unemployed to make money. Of late a number of important enlargements, improvements and new features have been added, including laughable series of illustrated episodes pictur ing the life and adventures of the Agent, and occupying the whole of the last page of each paper. A beautiful pictorial heading has also been added. The Agents' Herald is one of the most extensively circulated and best advertising mediums in the world. Circulation over 100,000. 200 Fine White Envelopes or Letter-heads, with any business or profession printed thereon (worth $1.75), sent FREE to every Subscriber.

Sample Copies 10 cents, from all newsdealers in the U. S. and Can., or direct from the office of publication.

AGENTS' HERALD, 716 Sansom St., Phila., Pa.

Adorn your Window with the New Patent

STAINED IMITATION GLASS

NEW, ELEGANT, CHEAP and DURABLE. Is easily applied, temporarily or permanently, to glass in windows of Churches, Libraries, Vestibule Doors, Transoms, Bank Rooms, Stairways, etc., with the full effect and brilliancy of variously colored stained glass. Curtains and Shades dispensed with. A new, neat and fascinating occupation for ladies and gentlemen, in tastefully beautifying their houses, offices, etc. Samples of two beautiful styles, each 12x18, mailed with full instructions on receipt of 50 cents; or a full and complete assortment of all the 24 different patterns for $6.

PHILA., Pa., May 9th, 1879. My windows embody their beauty and brilliancy, and are as pretty as when illuminated over a year ago.
M. W. CASE, M. D.

PITTSBURGH, PA. We have windows decorated with imitation Stained Glass at Exposition Building; they look as well as any stained glass, and are much admired. J. F. DIEHL & SON.

FORT SCOTT, KANS. Material for the windows received to-day. I pasted it on the glass, and must confess that I am delighted and more than satisfied with the result.
REV. J. HANTLEY, Rector St. Andrews Church.

JERSEY CITY, N. J. I followed instructions, and succeeded in making a very handsome window. Send me two and material sufficient to decorate all the windows in the church and Sunday-school room. R. HARRISON, Pastor Trinity M. E. Church.

PADUCAH, KY. Finished the windows at Hollywood House yesterday. Owners are much pleased. Captain David, of Cincinnati, says he will guarantee me ten thousand feet at thirty cents per yard to go home with him and paste the material on the glass.
J. RICE WILSON, Canvassing Agent.

OCEAN GROVE (N. J.) RECORD. L. Lum Smith, Esq., of Phila., well sustained his reputation as one of the most enterprising men of the day, in finishing up the Job he undertook on the Temple in a highly satisfactory manner on Sat. When determined by Rev. E. H. Stokes, President of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association, to adopt the wonderful imitation Stained Glass for the windows, he had but a few days to execute the work and be ready for dedication. Twenty large windows were quickly covered, and nothing could exceed the delight with which all the people hailed the effect. The sun was but a trifle, comparatively, but the improvement was splendid. Indeed; could tell the difference, either from the exterior or inside, between the finest stained glass and this excellent substitute. Windows were also decorated in the Tabernacle, and Association Office, and in Hotels, Residences, Stores, etc., in the same elegant manner.

PHILA. (PA.) SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES. "Imitation Stained Glass is very pretty, and will come into general use by those who cannot afford stained glass. It requires no skill to apply it, and the effect is so pleasing that it will be used widely for home decorations as well as for chapels, halls, etc. If you want a stained glass window in one of your rooms, you can have it now at a trifling cost by writing to Mr. L. Lum Smith, to whom you can with confidence send your money."

PHILA. (PA.) AGENTS' HERALD. "The above is the most remarkable and beautiful invention ever patented, and we advise the 200,000 readers of the AGENTS' HERALD to secure choice territory. The article will undoubtedly meet with a most enthusiastic reception and extraordinary sale. It will offer the best opportunity for coining money that has ever been offered to Agents, and being light, neat and respectable, will be peculiarly adapted to ladies and gentlemen, who, from debility, etc., have hitherto been debarred from engaging in the Agency business."

AGENTS WANTED } L. LUM SMITH, 716 Sansom St., Phila. Pa.

Puzzling Puzzles!

15 Block Game, 16 Block Puzzle, Game of 34, Little Buttercup, the new Sol Smith (all brain-crackers), all by mail only 25c. Agents and dealers supplied. 200,000 sold. HARTFORD PUZZLE CO., Charter Oak Bldg., Hartford, Ct.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery

AND

Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159 to 165 East Fifty-ninth Street, Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Streets, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

NEW FLORAL AUTOGRAPH ALBUM.

Illustrated with Birds, Scrolls, Ferns, Flowers, etc. (48 pages), corners and edges elegantly gilded; also 47 select quotations—all for 15c., postpaid. (Stamps taken.) Agents wanted. Address, G. W. ROCKWOOD, West Haven, Conn.

20 New Style Chromo Cards, 10 cts. Best ever sold. Sample taken. J. H. HUSTED, Nassau, N.Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

KEEP'S SHIRTS

ARE THE VERY BEST.

KEEP'S PATENT PARTLY-MADE SHIRTS, only plain seams to finish, 6 for $7.

KEEP'S CUSTOM SHIRTS, very best, MADE TO MEASURE, 6 for $10. Fit guaranteed.

An elegant set of extra heavy gold-plated Buttons presented to purchasers of six shirts.

KEEP'S KID GLOVES (FOR GENTS).

The very best, plain or embroidered, $1.10 per pair.

KEEP'S UMBRELLAS.

BEST GINGHAM, Patent Protected Ribs, $1 each. Warranted, Fifty per cent. stronger than any other umbrella.
REGINA and TWILLED SILK UMBRELLAS.

KEEP'S UNDERWEAR.

Flannel and Knit Shirts and Drawers in White, Scarlet, and Fancy Styles, from 50c. to $2.50 each.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES

In Gents' Silk, Linen and Cambric Handkerchiefs. Scarfs in elegant designs and effects.

Shirts only delivered free.

Merchants will be furnished with Trade Cl culars on application, as we furnish the trade on the most favorable terms.

Samples and Circulars mailed free.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY
631, 633, 635 & 637 Broadway, New York.

Read the New Book,
THE CANARY.
MATING and BREEDING.
Varieties, Care, Management, Diseases, etc.
Handsomely bound and illustrated.
For sale at all Book and Bird Stores.
Price, 25c., by mail, 30c. Published by the SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.,
562 Hudson Street, N. Y.

ANTI-MOTH PAPER.

Absolute Protection against Moths.

CHEAP, CLEAN, FRAGRANT, HEALTHFUL.

Sold by all Druggists.

CAMPBELL, HALL & CO.,
Samples Free. 110 & 112 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Mme. Julian's Specific is the only reliable remedy for removing radically and permanently all annoying disfigurements from the Lips, Cheek, Chin, Brow, Arms, etc., without injuring the Skin; no acids used. Ladies may address or apply to Mme. JULIAN, No. 48 East 20th St., New York.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c, 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS LIQUID PAINTS

Are strictly pure linseed-oil paints of a higher grade than have ever before been manufactured for structural purposes. ☞ A saving of 25 to 33 per cent. of customary outlays can be effected by the use of these paints. Samples of sixteen newest shades for dwellings sent free by mail. ☞ Be sure and get the genuine, which are manufactured only by

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,

Sole Manufacturers of Genuine ASBESTOS ROOFING, BOILER COVERINGS, etc.

☞ Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

J. M. THORBURN & CO.,

15 John Street, New York,

Offer to applicants their new

DESCRIPTIVE PRICED CATALOGUE OF

SEEDS

For 1880,

For the Vegetable and Flower Garden, for the Lawn, the Farm and Nursery.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 233 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.00 up. Business Men, do your own Printing. Economize in waste. The best presses made by J. F. W. DORMAN, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

Imitation Gold Watches. $8, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 208 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3095.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

ELEGANT AUTOGRAPH ALBUM, bound in Gilt, 48 pages, Engraved in Colors, and 54 select Quotations for same, 15c. 12 Photograph Cards, name and photo on, 50c. Send photograph. CLINTON BROS., Clintonville, Ct.

THE REVEALER.

Reveals the hidden, beautiful and secret wonders of nature with our Revealer, which is worn by every young man and woman wants, as it reveals all the secret and beautiful wonders of nature. Being an entirely new article it sells like hot cakes, and in order to give everybody a chance not more than two will be sent to any one address. This is a rare bargain to those who wish to see the beautiful in nature revealed.

Sent securely sealed on receipt of price, 25 cents each, two for 40 cents, (postage stamps, silver or currency.) When ordering, write your name and address in full. (Mention this paper.) Address all orders to Coddard & Co., No. 9 Murray Street, New York.

HOPE FOR THE DEAF

Garmore's Artificial Ear Drums

PERFECTLY RESTORE THE HEARING and perform the work of the Natural Drums. Always in position, but invisible to others. All Conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. We refer to those using them. Send for descriptive circular. GARMORE EAR DRUM CO., CINCINNATI, O.

TAPE-WORM

INFALLIBLY CURED with two doses of medicine in 2-3 hours. For particulars, address, with stamp, H. KICKHORN, 4 St. Mark's Place, New York.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED Everywhere, to sell the Best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. Will knit a pair of Stockings, with heel and toe complete, in 20 Minutes. Will also knit a great variety of fancy articles, for which there is always a ready market. Send for Circular and Terms to The Twombly Knitting Machine Co., 409 Washington street, BOSTON, MASS.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY

in a legitimate business within 60 days, where small capital is required, and investment can be redeemed at any time, send for information to H. M. LEE & CO., 35 Broadway, New York.

WE WANT A FEW MORE SALESMEN To Sell to Dealers | Samples free CIGARS | Send 3c. stamp to THOS. SHAWEL, S. FUSTER & CO., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS WANTED To sell the best and fastest-selling Books and Bibles. Low prices, excellent terms, exclusive territory. Address BRADLEY, GARRETSON & Co., 66 N. 4th St., Phila., Pa.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

IT PAYS to sell our Rubber Hand Printing Stamps. Circulars free. G. A. HARPER & BRO., Cleveland, O.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

BIG PAY to sell our Rubber Printing Stamps. Samples free. Taylor Bros. & Co., Cleveland, O.

YOUNG MEN And Older People—We send on 30 days' trial our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Trusses, and other Appliances, to those suffering from Nervousness, Nervous Debility, Weakness, or Lost Vitality, from any cause; or to those afflicted with Rheumatism, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Liver or Kidney Troubles, &c., or Ruptures. Speedy Cure Guaranteed. Send at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF By sending 25 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, &c., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, Dr. JAQUES & Co., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

MARMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 TREMONT ROW, Boston, Mass.

18 Elegant New style Chromo Cards, with name, 10 cts. postpaid. CHO. I. REED & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

85 gilt-edge, chrome, snowflake, glass, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING Co., Fair Haven, Ct.

THE SPRING FASHIONS

JUST RECEIVED FROM PARIS.

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S JOURNAL.

THE

Best & Most Attractive Fashion Journal

IN THE COUNTRY.

COLORED & PLAIN FASHION PLATES IMPORTED MONTHLY,

EXCLUSIVELY for the LADY'S JOURNAL.

ACCURATE REPORTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PREVAILING FASHIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SIXTEEN PAGES, AND BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Literary Contents comprise brilliant Serials, attractive Short Stories, Sketches of Life, Character and Scenery, Fashion and Society Gossip, etc., etc. The art and other miscellaneous engravings are selected with a view to variety, interest and beauty.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cts., at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

Attractive, Interesting and Edifying Reading for Everybody.

THE

April Number Now Ready.

CONTENTS:

"A City of Saints." A Comprehensive Article on the Mormons. By the Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson. Nine illustrations, with portrait of Brigham Young.
"Martin Luther." A Biographical Study. By Alfred H. Guernsey. Seven illustrations.
"The Magnificat." By Rt. Rev. Wm. Alexander, D.D.
"The Women of the Orient." By Rev. R. C. Houghton.
"The Conquest of Illinois in 1777." Illustrated.
"Dervish Worship." By T. L. Donaldson.
"The Sistine Chapel."
"The Maiden of the Winged Wheel." A German Allegory.
Serial and Short Stories, sketches, etc.—"Be-Be, the Nailmaker's Daughter," by the Author of "Gideon's Rock" (Chap. XIII. to XIX.); illustrated. "Little Hinges" (Chap. XI. to XII.); illustrated. "The Shadowed Heart"; illustrated. "The Maiden of the Winged Wheel," a German Allegory; illustrated. "Bretnal's Heiress"; illustrated. "A Child Shall Lead Them"; illustrated. "The Sting of Memory." "The Young Preacher's Dilemma"; illustrated. "Markon's House"; illustrated. "Little Jetie"; illustrated. "Ragged Joe"; illustrated—etc., etc.
Essays, etc.—"The Silence of Jesus." "The Bible and its Revision," by Jno. D. Champlin, Jr. "St. James the Less"; illustrated. "Fashion and Faith," by M. E. W. S. "The Children of the Bible (No. III.—Joseph, the Dreamer)"; illustrated. "Esau"; illustrated. "Rain-clouds"—etc., etc.
Poems.—"A Mother's Love"; illustrated. "The Snow-storm"; illustrated. "Spring Breezes"; illustrated. "Hasibek," by J. B. Boras; illustrated. "April," by Frances Ridley Havergal; illustrated. "Going Home"; illustrated. "Fussy's Complaint"; illustrated—etc., etc.
Miscellany.—"Mount Tabor"; illustrated. "A Rainy Day in Old London"; illustrated. "Attractions of the Bible." "The Ideal Christian House." "Flattery Rebuked: A Lesson from Canute the Great"; illustrated. "The Prohibited Bible"; illustrated. "The Wrestlers of the Spirit: A Russian Sect." "The Resurrection"; illustrated. "The Jewish Messiah"; illustrated. "The Conqueror Conquered"; illustrated. "Making Word Pictures"; illustrated. "The New Sailors' Home"; illustrated.
"Editor's Portfolio," "Obituary Notices," "Recreations for Sunday Afternoon." Music—"O Paradise! O Paradise!" composed for the SUNDAY MAGAZINE by D. E. Mervy.

128 QUARTO PAGES---100 EMBELLISHMENTS.

Single copies, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50—postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

A PLEASURABLE PUBLICATION.

Frank Leslie's

PLEASANT HOURS.

A MONTHLY PICTORIAL JOURNAL of LIGHT, PLEASING LITERATURE,

INTERESTING AND BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED STORIES, COMPLETE IN EACH NUMBER.

PLEASING TALES, ADVENTURES, ANECDOTE, AND MIRTH-PROVOKING ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Pleasant Hours" will prove to be a Delightful Traveling Companion.

For sale by all newsdealers, price 15 cents. Annual subscription, $1.50, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

A NEW FACTOR IN NEW YORK POLITICS.

DENNIS—"I say, Johnnie, if yer means to stay here, ye must showre allaince to Tammany Hall. Will yez do it?"
McPATRICK—"Fair, and ye must go wid the boys, anyhow."
JOHNNIE—"Chinyman no votee; me wantee workee allee samee Melican man."

ELATION OF THE "HEATHEN CHINEE" OVER A RECENT EVENT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Persons at a distance should write for Samples and Directions for ordering

MEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

"Select List"

Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s Select List of Local Newspapers.

Many persons suppose this list to be composed of CHEAP, low-priced newspapers. The fact is quite otherwise. The catalogue states exactly what the papers are. When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST. When printed in CAPITALS, it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper. IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST. IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST. At the foot of the Catalogue for each State the important towns which are not covered by the lists are enumerated. IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

An old advertiser writes: "I prefer the LOCAL LIST for the reason that, while but few persons in any particular town subscribe for a class medium or large city weekly, nine out of ten subscribe for their local paper, and the tenth one borrows it from his neighbor."

An advertiser, who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $300 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

The rates charged for advertising are rarely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $650. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $3,083.16. The list includes 977 newspapers, of which 193 are issued DAILY and 784 WEEKLY. They are located in 807 different cities and towns, of which 98 are State capitals, 371 places of over 5,000 population, and 483 County Seats.

For copy of List and other information, address

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.
Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce St., New York.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO
New Church 28 Stops, 3 set Golden Tongue Reeds, 2 Oct's, 5 Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $90. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $143 to $255. Before you buy be sure to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

THERMOMETERS,
Spectacles, Eye Glasses, Field Glasses, Opera Glasses, Microscopes, Barometers, Compasses, at greatly reduced prices. R. & J. BECK, 1016 Chestnut St., Phila. Send 3 stamps for Illustrated Catalogue of 146 pages, and mention this paper.

CLOAKS

A New and Complete Assortment of

Paris Made

Mantles, Fichus, Wraps, Jackets, Sacques, Dolmans, Ulsters, Etc.

THE LATEST SPRING STYLES
From WORTH, PINGAT, GRANGE & MAGENTA, PERDOUX, HENTENAAR and OTHERS. Also,

Special Novelties
In DOMESTIC MADE
English Walking Jackets and Ulsters,
And A FULL LINE of
Misses' and Children's Sacques, Etc.
At Very Attractive Prices.

A. T. Stewart & Co.
Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price list.
CHAS. W. COPELAND,
Sole Manufacturer,
BOSTON, MASS.

FISHERMEN!
TWINES AND NETTING!
MANUFACTURED BY
WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md.
☞ Send for Price-List, naming your County and State.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.
THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.
Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.
See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.
C. R. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS
For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.
NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, March 25, 3 P.M.
CITY OF BERLIN.....Saturday, April 3, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, April 8, 3 P.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, April 17, 11 A.M.
From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.
Cabin, $60, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.
Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.
These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.
JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 33 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 82 South Clark Street, Chicago.

$3 Printing Press
Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 12 larger sizes For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 3 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

THE

Union Mutual Life Ins. Co.

JOHN E. DE WITT, President.

HOME OFFICE, Augusta, Maine.
DIRECTORS' OFFICE—133 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

☞ Commenced Business in 1849. ☜

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Over One Thousand Royal Octavo Pages, nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications. Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. Amusing, Instructive and Religious. The cheapest, largest and best selling book ever published. Agents wanted. Exclusive territory given. For terms, circulars and territory, address the Publishers. BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Copies mailed on receipt of retail price, Three Dollars.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $5.00.
A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.
THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,
DETROIT, MICH.

COOK'S GRAND EXCURSIONS TO EUROPE!
1880. For the Summer of 1880.
ANNUAL MAY PARTY.
Grand Annual Educational Vacation Party.
Annual Midsummer Party.
Pamphlet, containing full particulars, with MAP OF EUROPE, sent free on application. Tourist Tickets for Independent Travelers, by all routes.
Cook's Excursionist contains rates for over 1,000 tours. By mail, 10 cents.
Address, THOMAS COOK & SON,
261 Broadway, New York. P. O. Box 4197.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of NAT. H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

TWO BRILLIANT SERIAL NOVELS!

"The Magic of a Face,"
A STORY OF SUNNY MEXICO,
BY
NUGENT ROBINSON;
AND
"A STRANGE GUEST,"
BY
The Author of "Guilty Without Crime,"
Commenced in No.
774 774 774 774 774 774
OF
Frank Leslie's
CHIMNEY CORNER.
Issued Monday, March 15th.

THE CHEAPEST MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD!

Frank Leslie's
POPULAR MONTHLY.

THE

April Number Now Ready,

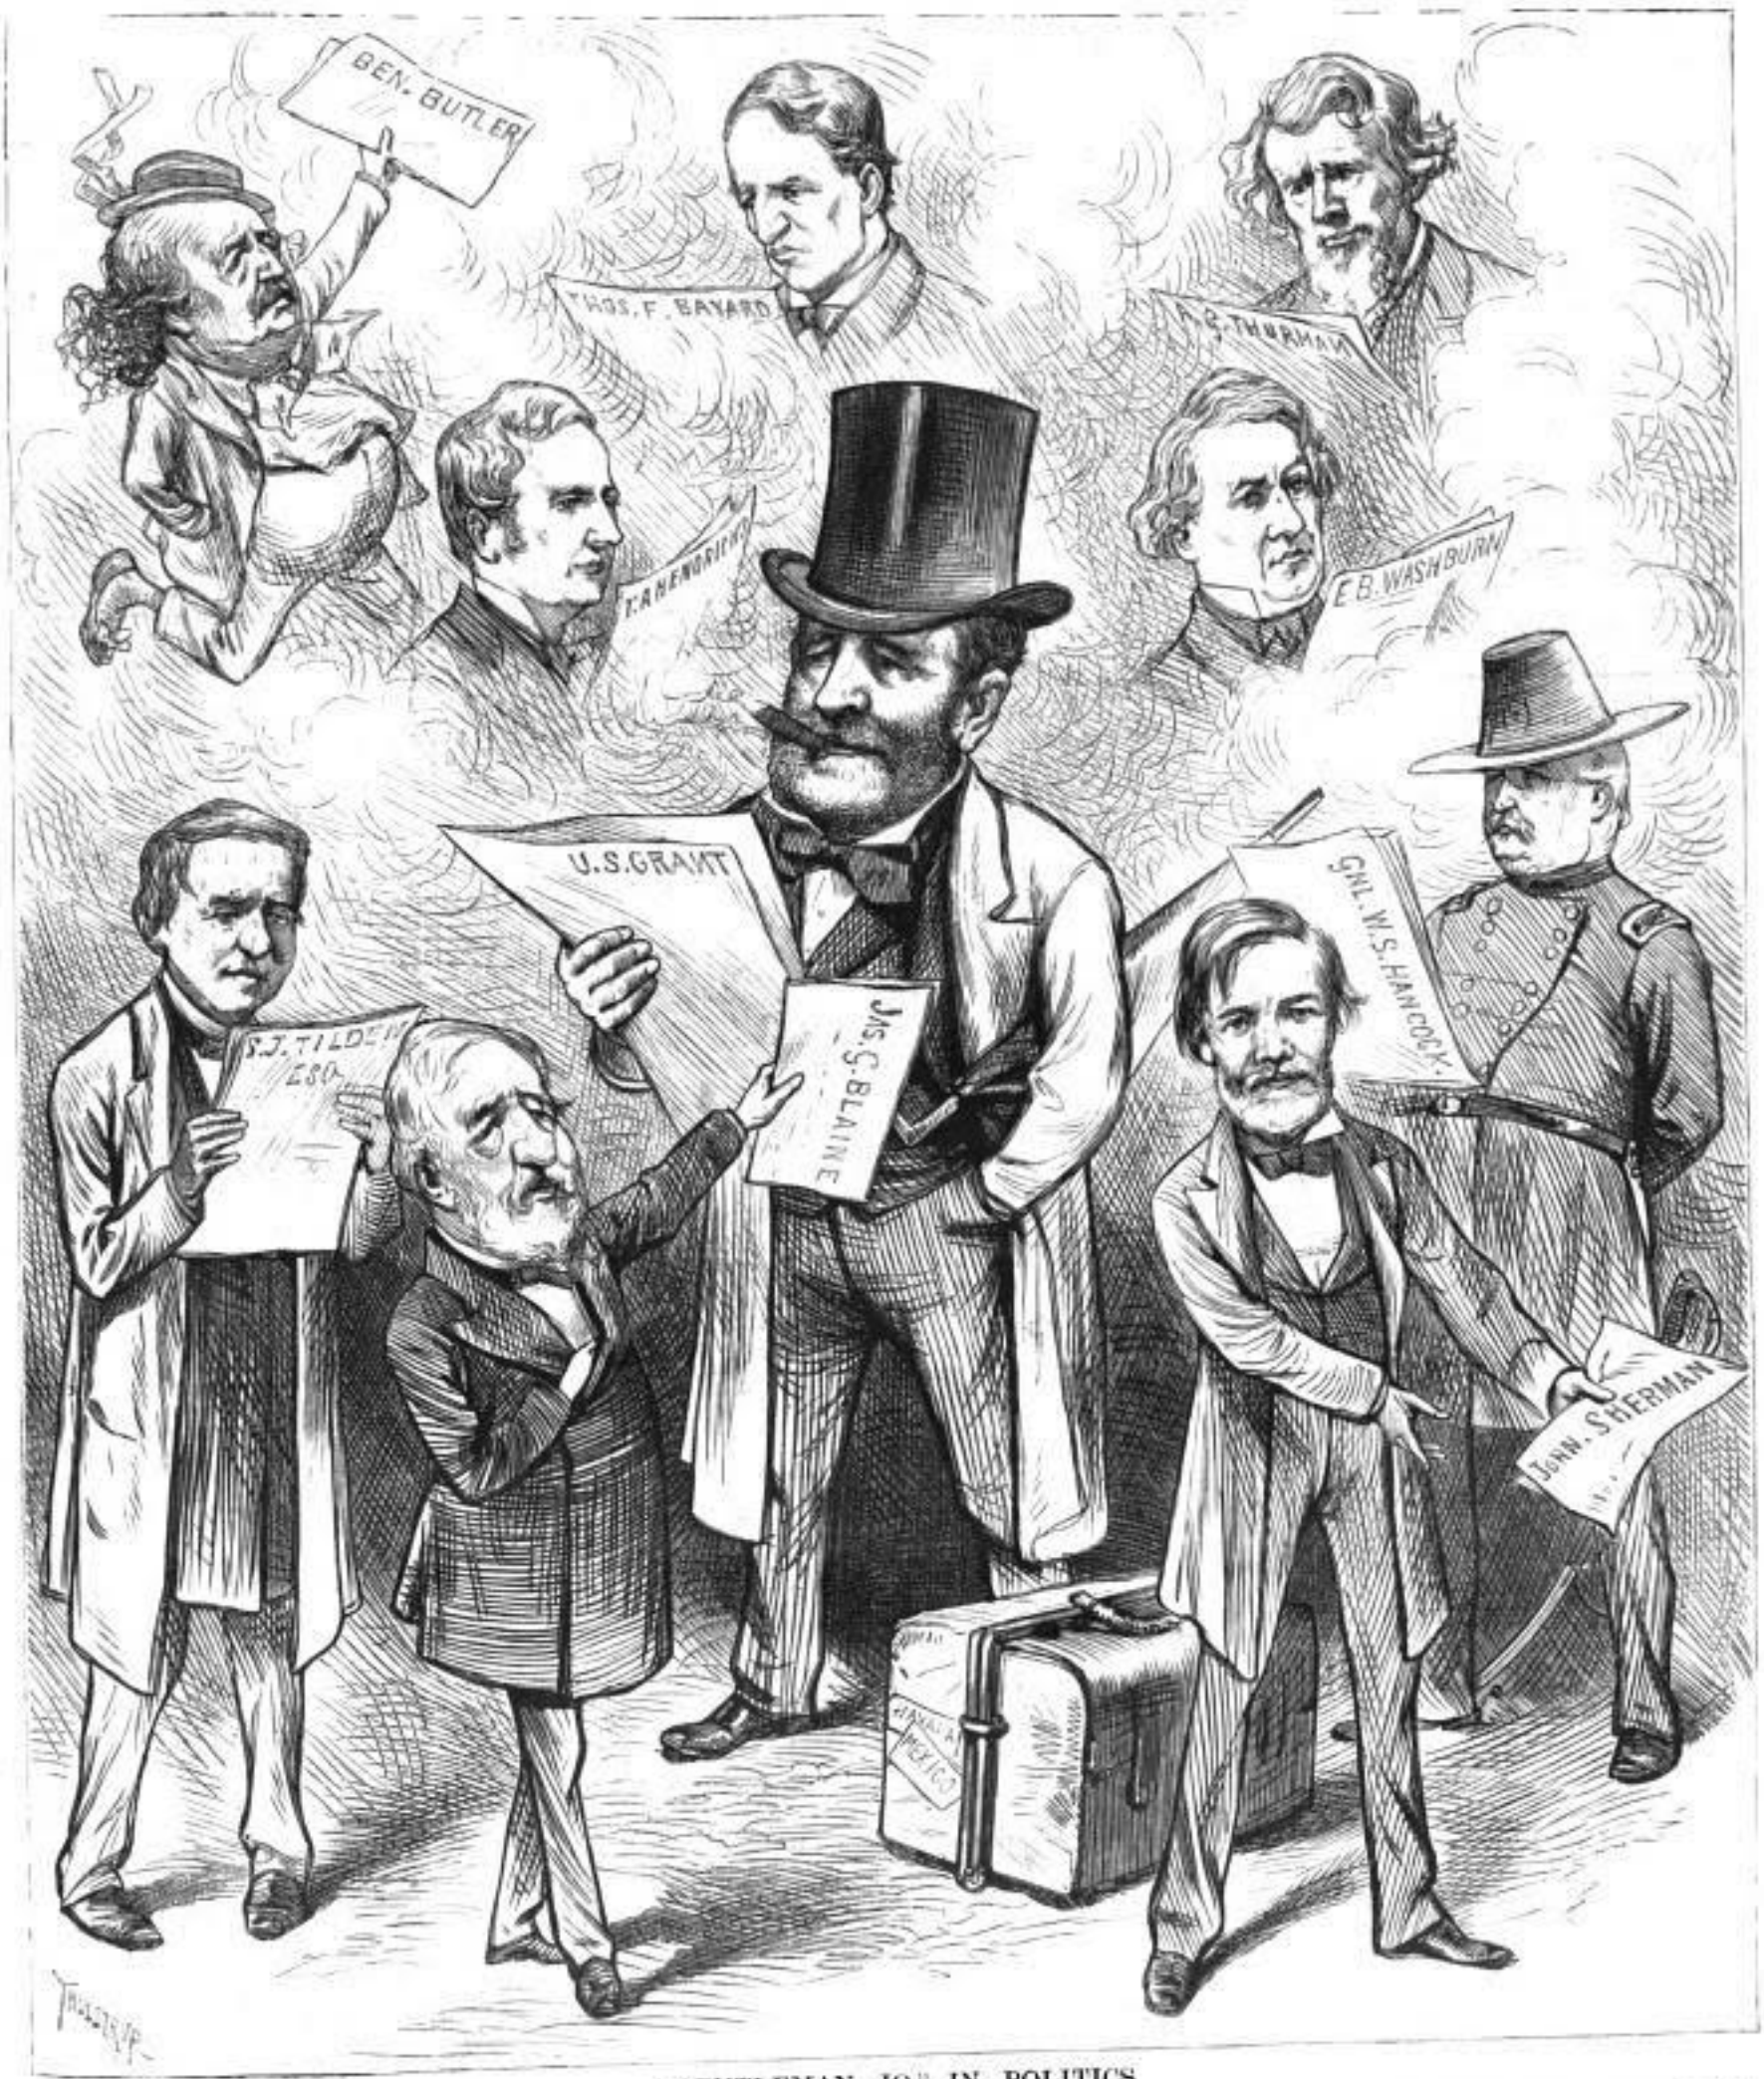
WITH THE FOLLOWING BRILLIANT TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

"THE NEW IRISH MOVEMENT." By Nugent Robinson. 15 illustrations.
"SKETCHES OF HIGHLAND CHARACTER—SHEEP FARMERS AND DROVERS."
"GENTLEMAN GEORGE—A STORY OF THE QUEEN'S TRIAL." By Alfred B. Guernsey. 10 illustrations.
"NYLGHAU-HUNTING IN CANDEISH, INDIA." Illustrated.
"HOW I GOT INTO THE BALL OF ST. PETER'S." By Frank Leslie. 8 illustrations.
"OPOSSUM-HUNTING IN THE SOUTH." 4 illustrations.
"HOW THE JAPANESE AMUSE THEMSELVES—THE SHIBAI (THEATRE)." By Edward Greey. 3 illustrations.
"HEARING WITH THE TEETH." Illustrated.
SERIAL AND SHORT STORIES, Etc.—"Not Guilty," by Etta W. Pierce (Chap. XI.-XIII.); illustrated. "Poor Harry"; illustrated. "Mary Broad"; illustrated. "Our Disaster," by Eleanor Grantham; illustrated. "The Price of a Pair of Ears"; illustrated. "The Sting of the Serpent"; illustrated.
SKETCHES, Etc.—"Our Church Festival." "A Terrible Experience"; illustrated. "A Desperate Boat Fight"; illustrated. "The Goblin's Kitchen"; illustrated. "Strange Archery—The Fish and Turtle of the Amazons"; illustrated. "A Fishing Adventure"; illustrated. "Some Dogs that I have Known"; illustrated—etc., etc.
POEMS.—"An Alter Ego," by G. A. Davis. "The Lifeboat," by the author of "Mary Powell"; illustrated. "Binley and '46," by Bret Harte—etc., etc.
MISCELLANY.—"The Most Northern Point of the United States." "A Curious Pleasure Yacht." "Voice in Fish." "The Vestal Tuccia"; illustrated. "Ants and their Ways—The Farmer Ant"; illustrated. "Recent Progress in Science." "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES — 100 ILLUSTRATIONS
AND A
Handsome Chromo Frontispiece, entitled "Happy Days."

Single copies, 35 cents each. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50—postpaid.



Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER

Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Ehemann, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,280.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, APRIL 10, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1.00.

"GENTLEMAN JO" IN POLITICS.

"April 1st. I take pleasure, sir, in informing you that your nomination for the Presidency is certain. Please remit $1,000.—'Gentleman Jo.'"

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, APRIL 10, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

I. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

NEW FRONT TO AN OLD QUESTION.

THE House of Representatives has at last taken an important step in a direction looking to the improvement of the Federal election laws. As the law now stands, the United States Marshal of every judicial district may appoint as many deputy marshals as he pleases, in every city of twenty thousand inhabitants, with power to aid the supervisors of election by making summary arrests during the period of registration or voting. As the United States Marshal under the present Administration is everywhere a Republican, it follows that none but Republicans are appointed as his deputies for election purposes. The compensation of each deputy is at the rate of five dollars per day for a term of ten days, and hence it is easy to see that the law, as it stands, enables the marshal to surround himself with a host of deputies, and to arm them with fifty dollars a piece for partisan purposes performed in the guise and with the plenary authority of Federal agents. In this way the Federal treasury, at the will and pleasure of an unscrupulous marshal or of an unscrupulous deputy, may be assessed for a corruption fund or an electioneering fund, to be used by one party to the disadvantage of the other, and to the damage of the people at large. And that the law has sometimes been so abused in fact was a matter of public notoriety at the last Federal election, when twelve hundred deputies were appointed in New York and nearly eight hundred in Philadelphia, comprising in their number some very disreputable persons, whose character and antecedents sufficiently disclosed the kind of service which was expected at their hands.

But instead of attacking these abuses of the law, the Democratic majority in Congress, at the late extra session, proposed to nullify the law in all its features, and to compass this result by bringing a coercive power to bear on the Executive department of the Government. In his veto message of May 29th, 1879, President Hayes expressed the opinion that "the great body of the people of all parties want free and fair elections," and at the same time do not think that "a free election means freedom from the wholesome restraints of law." Instead of favoring a relaxation of the authority of the Federal Government in the premises, he believed that public opinion demanded greater vigor both in the enactment and enforcement of the laws framed for protecting the purity of Federal elections. But in that spirit of candor which has characterized the words and acts of the President on this subject, he was careful to add that he would co-operate with Congress in correcting "any oppression, any partisan partiality which experience may have shown in the working of the existing laws."

With a blindness which seemed judicial the Democratic majority at the late extra session refused to profit by this hint of the Executive, and preferred to take the consequences of a course which was little less than revolutionary in its theory. It is, therefore, gratifying to observe that this recalcitrant majority, in the House of Representatives at least, is no longer disposed to kick against the pricks of an Executive veto, especially since the rights and duties of the Executive in the premises have been reinforced by a recent decision of the Supreme Court affirming the constitutionality of the existing legislation under this head.

We refer to the recent passage of a Bill by the House of Representatives making appropriations for the salaries of the marshals and their deputies, but accompanied with the following proviso as regards the latter:

"Provided that hereafter special deputy marshals of elections for performing any duties in reference to any election shall receive the sum of $5 per day in full for their compensation, and that the appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties, or by the district judge in the absence of the circuit judge. Said special deputies shall be appointed in equal numbers from the different political parties; and the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character and shall be well-known residents of the voting precinct in which their duties are to be performed."

This proviso was regularly draughted by Mr. Garfield, and was accepted as a "compromise" by the Democratic majority of the House, with the opposition of only a few dissentients who seemed ambitious of representing that Bourbon sentiment which forgets nothing and learns nothing. But Bourbonism, it seems, is not the peculiar possession of the Democratic Party. As all parties have their Radicals, so all parties have their Bourbons. Especially is this the case at the present time, when each of the two dominant and historical parties of the country is compelled to found its hope of success on the unwisdom of its opponents rather than on any wisdom of its own. An accession of wisdom to the Democratic Party in its dealing with any practical question is seen by the Republican leaders to be so much subtracted from their party capital in the coming Presidential campaign. In the present case there is a positive danger that the Republicans may not only lose the partisan services of a set of hireling deputies, but also the good electioneering cry which was furnished to them by the blunder of the Democrats at the late extraordinary session of Congress. Hence the opposition of the Republican minority to the passage of the amendment we have cited; for the objection that the amendment, though good in itself, is exceptionable as a "rider," is scarcely tenable, in view of the fact that a "rider," in the true acceptation of that term, is always something straddled upon an appropriation Bill because it has not merit enough of its own to procure for it the honor of an independent passage. An amendment germane to the subject matter of a Bill, and correcting obvious abuses and misappropriations in the expenditures of the public moneys, is not a "rider" properly so called, though even in the present case we could have wished that the Democratic majority, instead of aiming a blow at the most flagrant defects of the present Federal election laws, had addressed themselves to the task of digesting a well-considered measure under this head, in the shape of a separate Bill designed to correct all the "oppression" and "partiality" of the existing statutes.

Meanwhile, the fate of the pending amendment is implicated in the tactics of parties manœuvring for a position in the next election. The stalwart Republicans of the Senate are expected to oppose it, because they resent, in its passage, an untimely exhibition of Democratic discretion as well as the loss of valuable auxiliaries in carrying "a strong Government" at the polls. The stalwart Democrats are expected to oppose it in the Senate, on the ground that it involves a surrender of the high and dry position on which the Democracy planted themselves at the extra session. And so between these two classes of incapables and incurables there is some danger that the country may be defrauded, after all, of the reform it desiderates in the Federal election laws. But as the Democrats have an absolute majority in the Senate, it is obvious that the chief responsibility for the success or the defeat of the pending measure must rest upon them, as there is every reason to believe that President Hayes will concur in the policy of the proposed amendment.

POLAR EXPLORATION.

ANOTHER vigorous effort is to be made by American enterprise to unlock the mysteries of the frozen Arctic seas. Captain H. W. Howgate, who is widely known as the projector of the preliminary expedition of Captain Tyson year before last, has purchased a steamer which he is now having fitted out at Alexandria, Virginia, for Arctic work, and it is expected that, with ordinary good fortune, the second expedition will set out about May 1st for the Polar regions. A few days since a Bill was reported in the House of Representatives which authorizes the President to establish a temporary station within the Arctic Circle, for the purpose of making scientific discoveries, explorations and observations, obtaining all possible facts and knowledge in relation to the magnetic currents of the earth, the influence of ice-floes therefrom upon the winds and seasons and upon the currents of the ocean, as well as other matters incidental thereto, developing and discovering at the same time other and new whale-fisheries, now so material in many respects to this country. It is proposed that this expedition, having such scientific observations in view, shall be regularly made for a series of years, under such restrictions of military discipline as will insure regularity and accuracy, and give the fullest possible return for the necessary expenditure. The Committee on Naval Affairs, in reporting this Bill, declare that "in view of the fact that either the Governments directly, or scientific corps under their authority, of Germany, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Austria, Denmark and Russia, have concurrently agreed to establish similar stations, with like object, during the year 1880, both the interests and policy of our people demand that the United States should co-operate in the grand efforts to be thus made in the solution of the mysteries and secrets of the North Polar Seas, upon which, in the opinion of scientists, depends so much that affects the health and wealth of the human race."

Captain Howgate's scheme, which has the sanction of leading American geographers and scientists, contemplates the establishment of the first colony of exploration at some point north of the eighty-first degree of north latitude, on or near the shore of Lady Franklin Bay. His expedition will be composed of hardy, resolute and intelligent men, who will be provided with all modern appliances for overcoming the physical obstacles in the pathway to the Pole, and for resisting the effects of hunger, cold and sickness, so as to deprive it of the means of retreat, except at stated periods of time. Among these appliances will be sets of signal equipments, copper telegraph wire, and other means of communication. Provided with these, it is believed that parties of explorers will be able to move forward with confidence, establishing advanced sub-stations, and thus gradually approaching the Pole without serious risk. The House Committee, in concluding their report, remark:

"While your committee believe that the interests of geographical and scientific discovery, as set forth by Professors Henry, Loomis and others, in connection with the proposed Arctic station, are of themselves of sufficient magnitude to warrant favorable legislation, they do not exclude the additional practical consideration of the political and commercial results that are probable to flow from the discovery of new fields for the whale-fisheries. That large section of country from which springs the American sailor, whose education and wealth is largely derived from these fields, is entitled, as a matter of justice, to have their interest cared for in this direction. This home of sailors becomes, not only an element of commercial wealth, but a resource of national defense, which should not be lost sight of by the American statesmen.

The country will approve, we doubt not, the wise conclusions of the committee, and will, moreover, watch with eager interest the progress of the scheme here outlined and commended.

THE COURSE OF SPECULATION. COTTON.

THE great staple of the South—cotton—is a favorite "deal" with speculators; and operations entered into for the purpose of affecting or controlling its value have often had the most far-reaching and unlooked-for influence. Although the cotton-gin and the spinning-jenny are among the inventions of the last century, American cotton has not been of much importance, commercially, more than sixty years. In 1820 the entire crop of the United States was only 240,000 bales of present weight, or less than the quantity now grown in the comparatively small State of South Carolina.

The first great speculation in American occurred in 1825, when the crop had increased to 569,000 bales. The movement is known in commercial history as the "bobbinet prosperity." It began in Liverpool on the delay of supplies from the United States, and the discovery that the stock was only half as large as estimated. The price rose in Liverpool 110 per cent, and in the United States 85 per cent. Forced sales burst the bubble, and a general and severe panic followed, aggravated by financial disturbances. The high prices during the planting season that year caused an increase of the crop next season to nearly a million bales, and for some years there was but little increase upon this quantity. The next great speculation was in 1839, under the lead of the famous Nicholas Biddle, of the United States Bank at Philadelphia. It brought ruin to its projectors. The next grew out of the late civil war, closing the Southern ports and cutting off communication between the cotton-growers and the manufacturers of cotton goods. The price of Middling Uplands rose from 8¼ cents, in December, 1860, to $2.85 per pound in 1864. After the war there was an effort to sustain cotton at abnormal figures, on the theory that the free negro would not work, and that, therefore, the growth of cotton at the South must be very small for many years. The growth of cotton in the ten years after the war was greater than in the ten years preceding it, and in the effort to sustain the price, Southern, Montreal and Liverpool banks and capitalists were losers of large sums.

A speculation for an advance in cotton began about one year ago, and succeeded in forcing an advance of nearly 50 per cent., which has been supported with much vigor down to a recent period in the face of greatly increased production. It received its first impulse from a greatly increased demand for goods at Manchester. Her spinners were compelled to buy the raw material at steadily advancing prices. Not only this, the visible supply at the close of March, 1879, was nearly 300,000 bales less than one year before, although the receipts from the American crop in seven months, at the Southern ports, had increased 230,000 bales, showing an enormous increase in the ratio of consumption.

The present statistical position is a notable one. The latest report from the National Cotton Exchange indicated that the crop for the coming season will be about 5,540,000 bales, an increase of 466,000 bales over last season, and 767,000 bales over the season of 1877-8. So large an increase seems almost incredible. And yet the increase in the consumption has more than kept pace with it. The visible supply of cotton at the principal markets of the world at the latest dates was 218,000 bales less than two years ago, when the American crop was more than three-quarters of a million bales less! The cotton crops of other countries have not varied much. But it is asserted, in modification of this exhibit of the visible supply, that the "invisible supply," composed of stocks in the hands of spinners, is larger than in former years. The report of the National Cotton Exchange makes the takings of American spinners for the first half of the current crop year 1,238,096 bales, an increase of 367,035 bales over the corresponding period of the previous year, and as the consumption has not probably increased so much, they are undoubtedly carrying larger stocks than last year—probably 250,000 bales more. As respects the consumption of cotton in Europe, statistics show that it amounts to about 105,000 bales of 400 pounds each weekly, against 95,000 bales one year ago, an increase of more than ten per cent. It is thus apparent that, unless the spinners are carrying large stocks, there must be a deficiency in the supply before October.

Still, prices have latterly declined. The great cloud hanging over the speculation is the prospect of an excessive planting for the next crop, promising, with an average season for growth and picking, a yield of little less than seven million bales. The Southern Press remonstrates, but in vain. The planters are called upon to raise bacon and corn, but the planters, seeing their railroad communications with the Northwest extending and perfecting, say they will raise cotton where it can be grown, and buy their corn and bacon of those who cannot grow cotton. What the other countries will do when the United States exports between four and five million bales of cotton in a single season, remains to be seen. But there is danger of such a decline in price as to cause widespread disaster to the growers and greatly retard the rising prosperity of the South.

OUR POLITICAL CHART

THE attempted revival of the doctrine of State Rights, and the position of those who maintain that the powers of the General Government are delegated and limited while those of the States grow out of the attribute of sovereignty, induces the question: Are the men of to-day wiser than those who framed the organic law of the country and launched the national ship of State? Touching this whole subject, the American people can have no clearer light than that afforded by the Constitution itself. That instrument is something more than a mere piece of political journey-work. It required greater skill and higher sagacity than that of merely common minds to construct a governmental system which should hold together, as at present, thirty eight States with their local governments, the line of whose united territory runs down all the parallels of latitude from New Brunswick to the Gulf of Mexico, and whose area stretches from ocean to ocean.

As we view it, the Constitution of the United States was formed and adopted for the purpose of securing in perpetuity two grand specific objects, the union of the States, being the first. It is the bond of that union, and in no ambiguous language it states and defines its terms. No one among all the dead has ever been able, no man of all the living is competent, to speak in terms warm enough and high enough of its importance in this respect. The wisdom of its conception, its adaptation to promote an aggregate result of unrivaled national prosperity and happiness, and its ability to withstand assault, are matters which have challenged, and still do challenge, the admiration of the most highly civilized nations. It is true that our country presents a diversified climate, and that the local pursuits and productions of the geographical sections differ in character. But their interests, if not identical, are far from being inconsistent and hostile. On the contrary, it is in their unity that the nation finds its wealth and power, and no man, whether he belongs to a commercial, manufacturing, grain-growing or planting State, can make it apparent to the public mind that he is less prosperous or less happy than he would have been if the National Government had never existed.

Digitized by Google

The second great object kept in view by the framers of the Constitution was to fix limits to delegated authority, or, in other words, to impose constitutional restraints on political power. There are those who entertain the opinion that if political power be delegated power, then there can be but little or no fear of its abuse. The people's favorites and servants, they imagine, may be safely trusted. To this school the men who gave the country its present admirable system of government did not belong. They sought to make assurance doubly sure by providing, firstly, for the election, at short intervals, of political agents by the people themselves; and, secondly, by prescribing constitutional restraints on all branches of this delegated authority. It is not among the most hopeful signs of the present time that politicians, self-imposed leaders of party, seek to substitute personal confidence for legal restraint, and men for principles. The sentiment which tends to promote an unlimited, if it be but an elective, government, aims a deathblow at all which is valuable in the Constitution for the preservation of freedom to the citizen and for the perpetuation of the spirit and genius of republican government. To repose an excessive, unlimited, unconstitutional confidence in men; to admit that, as official agents, they may interpret the public will in their own way, in antagonism to the Constitution and laws, or that they may set up anything for the declaration of that will except the Constitution and laws themselves, or that any public servant, high or low, should undertake to constitute himself or to call himself the representative of the people, except in so far as the Constitution and the laws may create and denominate him such representative, is to menace with destruction both the Constitution and the union of the States.

It has been truthfully as well as forcibly said that "there is no usurpation so dangerous as that which comes in the borrowed name of the people. If from some other authority, or other source, prerogatives be attempted to be enforced upon the people, they naturally oppose and resist it. It is an open enemy, and they can easily subdue it. But that which professes to act in their name, and by their own authority, that which calls itself their servant, the present Congress, for instance—although it exercises their power without legal right or constitutional sanction—requires something more of vigilance to detect, and something more of stern patriotism to repress; and if it be not seasonably both detected and repressed, then the Republic is already in the downward path of those which have gone before it." The very essence of all security for the preservation of liberty, the hopes of a national future greater and grander than all that has gone before, lies in enforcing a strict submission, by every branch of the Government, to the limitations and restraints of the Constitution. "Whatever Government is not a Government of laws, is a despotism, let it be called what it may."

BRIGANDAGE in Greece is at least a profitable, if not a reputable, pursuit. It is announced that the sum of $60,000 has been paid for the ransom of Colonel Synge, who was captured some time ago by certain adventurous ruffians. Had the captive been a Cabinet Minister, or something of that sort, this sum would no doubt have been doubled or trebled. It is plain that people with lean purses cannot afford to travel in Greece.

THE election contest in Great Britain is growing in heat and intensity. This is especially the case in Scotland. It is believed that Mr. Gladstone, who is said to be over-worked, will be returned from Midlothian, and that the Liberals will gain some seats in Scotland now held by Tories. The party majority of the Government is less than sixty, and thirty seats must, therefore, be won to bring Tory supremacy to an end. It may be doubted, in view of the mistakes of the Liberal canvass, whether the aggregate gains will reach this figure.

THE reputation of South Carolina suffers through a free use of whisky and the carrying of deadly weapons by her people. The Charleston News, in a list which it does not pretend is complete, gives an appalling account of the crimes committed in that State during the past two months. In that time there were twenty-one cases of homicide, sixteen assaults with intent to kill, and two cases of rape. The homicides and assaults were almost, without exception, by whites upon whites, or by negroes upon people of their own color. The State seems to be in need of missionary effort.

MR. BLAINE is said to have declared recently that he will not make a personal canvass for the Presidential nomination. In conversation with a gentleman who desired him to "take a hand" in Ohio against Secretary Sherman, he said that in 1876 he was by force of circumstances drawn into an aggressive campaign, which was against his wishes and against his taste; and that now, in 1880, he proposes, so far as he is concerned, to let his friends do just as they please, and he will not direct or request anything. If the Senator shall honestly adhere to this position, he will establish a fresh claim upon the public appreciation.

MR. PARNELL has signalized his return to Ireland by setting the Liberals and Home Rulers by the ears, and introducing discord and confusion where harmony is absolutely essential to success over the Conservatives. The facts appear to be that before Parnell's arrival Mr. Gladstone had agreed, on behalf of the Liberals, not to interfere in districts where it was probable that Home Rule candidates might prevail over the Conservatives, and the Home Rulers agreed in return not to nominate candidates in districts where the Liberals might possibly succeed. This agreement has been repudiated by Parnell, who proposes to place men in nomination who will fight the Moderates to the bitter end. This course can only result in the election of an increased number of Conservatives from Ireland, and in the disintegration, possibly, of the so-called Nationalists, not only in the present, but for some time to come.

KEARNEYISM has suffered another defeat, the United States Court in San Francisco having just decided that the State law forbidding the employment of Chinese by corporations is unconstitutional and void. This decision is in harmony with one rendered in an Oregon case some years ago, and it is difficult to understand how any other determination of the issue raised by the Kearneyites could have been expected. The Burlingame treaty, which forms part of the supreme law of the land, invites Chinese immigration and guarantees immigrants full protection and equal rights, and no State enactment can abridge or impair the right of the Chinaman to follow any lawful calling which is open to persons of other nationalities. It is announced that the case which provoked this decision will be carried to the United States Supreme Court, and this is, perhaps, desirable, as a final settlement of the question in dispute will thus be secured.

THE exhibit of the results of the Herald weather service during the past year illustrates in a remarkable way the possibilities now attainable in meteorological science. Of the storm warnings telegraphed to Europe during the first half of the year not a single one failed of fulfillment. Of the forty-one warnings by cable of the movement towards the European coasts of various forms of atmospheric disturbances sent during the six months ending with the 14th of February last, thirty-three were fulfilled completely, seven were partially fulfilled, and one failed of verification. The value of the work thus gratuitously performed with such wonderful accuracy by the Herald to the commercial and other interests of the world, is practically incalculable; and, as an illustration of the enterprise of American journalism, very naturally attracts the attention, while at the same time eliciting the plaudits, of the press and people everywhere throughout Europe.

THE Commercial Bulletin puts this conundrum: "Can anybody say why a resident of the rural districts should be made Health Officer for the Port of New York? The position is one which requires some little knowledge of quarantine practice, shipping and commercial usage; but what knowledge of these things has Mr. William N. Smith, of Alleghany County, who has been confirmed by the Senate? It would be just as preposterous to take a ship captain or a 'longshoreman to superintend a dairy farm or a cheese factory among the green fields or on the mountain slopes of the interior." This is all very true; but then the "machine" politicans must be cared for. It is sheer idiocy to suppose that our partisan rulers will permit such considerations as the preservation of the health of the metropolis or the welfare of its commerce to stand in the way of the advancement of political favorites or the ratification of political bargains.

ARCHBISHOP WOOD of Philadelphia is uncompromising in his opposition to the Ancient Order of Hibernians and similar Irish societies. Ascertaining that the "ancients" were soon to hold a convention in the "city of brotherly love," the bishop has addressed a circular letter to his flock in which he denounces the "insidious efforts that have been and are being made in many parts of the diocese, and probably throughout the country, to blind and deceive the faithful and to entangle them in the meshes and shackles of these unlawful and forbidden societies." The bishop says that these societies are known by different appellations, such, for example, as "the National Brotherhood, condemned by the Bishops of Ireland, and the Fenian Brotherhood, whose efforts to aggregate members to their association in this country are unscrupulous and unceasing." The bishop places the Molly Maguires, the A. O. H. and the Buckshots in one class, and remarks that their names seem to have been selected rather to conceal than to indicate the object of their association.

IT was given out some time since that Minister Seward was retained in China because his experience would enable him to negotiate an advantageous treaty with that Government. Now it turns out that no progress whatever has been made in that direction during the past year, and President James B. Angell, of Michigan University, has just been appointed as Minister in Mr. Seward's place, with John F. Swift, of California, and William H. Trescott, of South Carolina, to assist him in securing such a revision of the present treaty with China as shall satisfy the legitimate demands of public sentiment in this country, and yet confirm and strengthen our friendly relations with the Empire of China, which are so important to the interest of our growing Eastern commerce and our influence in Asia. If the result desired is at all possible of attainment, these gentlemen will, no doubt, secure it. President Angell is a man of great learning, Mr. Swift is an eminent lawyer, and Mr. Trescott, who was formerly Assistant Secretary of State and, later, one of the counsels of the Government in the Northern Fishery Question, is one of the ablest writers on international law whom this country has produced. The country may well rejoice that the diplomatic service in China is no longer to be disgraced by a person who has been charged with the gravest misdemeanors.

THE aggregate deposits in all the savings banks of this State on the first of January last amounted to $319,266,020, representing 870,622 depositors. The deposits in the banks of this city were $175,371,862. The average cost of managing the deposits, including salaries and all other expenses, was $1.07 per year for each account. This cannot be regarded as extravagant, but it is greatly in excess of the cost of the same service in Massachusetts and other States. In the former State the cost of management averages only 87 cents for each account, while in Connecticut it averages $1.03. In the British savings banks the same service is procured for about one-fourth the cost in this State. Superintendent Lamb, in his annual report, says: "Very frequently the expenditures in our savings banks are excessive and do not meet the requirements of the statute that, after paying necessary current expenses, the depositors shall receive the benefit of the income from their deposits. The reported current expenses fall short of the actual cost. For the savings banks, or fifty-five of them in the State, own banking houses in which is invested the sum of $9,000,000. The income from this property barely pays the current expenses upon it. In consequence, the capital invested yields no net income and pays no interest to those savings banks." The superintendent says very truly that rigorous economy is the only remedy for past extravagance and unprofitable investments in palatial banking houses by the managers of these institutions.

THERE are elements of discord in both the Republican and Democratic parties which may seriously affect the result of the coming Presidential canvass. Among the Republicans there is a widespread aversion to the third-term idea, and in the event of General Grant's nomination, this feeling will flower into open revolt, especially among the Germans, who, upon this question, are practically unanimous. Among the Democrats, there is a want of unity and a sharp contention as to candidates which is prophetic of nothing but disaster in certain contingencies. The nomination of Mr. Tilden, for instance, would be opposed by a strong element of the party in this State. The selection of Mr. Bayard would arouse the opposition of many of the old "war Democrats," while also alienating the support of the Greenback element of the party. The opposition to Mr. Tilden is so intense on the part of Tammany Hall that rooms have already been taken at Cincinnati for the accommodation of three hundred representative "workers" who, with the prominent men of that organization, will do everything in their power to defeat his nomination. Mr. Tilden, however, will have a strong following, and his case will lose nothing from the want of astute management. It is quite among the possibilities, in view of existing and prospective rivalries and disputes, that both parties may think it wise to concentrate upon new men for the Presidential race, and so far as the Republicans are concerned, such a course, if it should result in the nomination of Washburne or some equally reputable candidate, would certainly seem to be discreet and desirable.

A MATTER of a good deal of importance to the people of Utah has just been brought to the attention of Congress. It appears that by means of a system of incorporated cities the Mormons have practically obtained control of all the arable land of the Territory, and unless the land laws of the United States shall be there enforced, vast wrong and damage will be inflicted upon the Gentile population. There are in all thirty-seven of these cities in Utah, some of which, with less than 1,000 inhabitants, exercise municipal jurisdiction over 40 square miles. The charters granted to these so-called cities by the Territorial Legislature cover 720 square miles, and embrace nearly all, if not quite all, of the land of the Territory which can be irrigated by natural means and is attractive to the farmer. A Washington dispatch says that "excluding Salt Lake City, the total number of inhabitants in the remaining 36 of these cities, in 1870, was less than 32,000, or an average of a little over 1,000 for each settlement; and out of the 460,000 acres held under their charters they have been able to secure as town sites only 38,000 acres, in accordance with the law which allows such town site patents to be taken only in proportion to the number of inhabitants. By means of this monopoly the polygamists have excluded from these lands all who did not profess and manifest a belief in the doctrines taught and upheld by Brigham Young." The United States Senate last week adopted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for all the facts in the case, and it is possible that if the land laws shall be found to be defective, the necessary corrective legislation may be enacted. This will certainly be the case if Congress has any proper appreciation of its duty in the premises.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

NEARLY all of the striking piano-makers of New York City have returned to work.

OVER 2,000 immigrants were landed at Castle Garden, in this city, in one day last week.

THE Governor of California has signed a Bill taxing corporations and savings bank deposits.

A NATIONAL mass-meeting of Republicans opposed to a third-term candidate for the Presidency is called to meet at St. Louis some time in May.

THE Rhode Island Democrats have nominated Horace M. Kimball for Governor, and selected Presidential delegates favorable to Tilden if he shall prove "available."

A PETITION has been introduced in the United States Senate asking Congress to inquire into the legality of the Brooklyn Bridge, and particularly as to whether it obstructs navigation.

THE Post Office Department has advertised for bids for miscellaneous star routes throughout the United States, numbering in all 425. The contracts will be let in May and go into effect on the 1st of July.

J. F. WEATHERWAX, of Herkimer County, has been confirmed by the Senate as State Assessor; and Dr. Smith, of Alleghany, as Health Officer at this port. The appointments are sharply criticised by some Republican journals.

INDIAN raids are reported in New Mexico; in one instance they attacked the mail stage on the Santa Fé route, killing the driver, destroying the mail, and driving off the stock. Chief Ouray and the Ute Indians have left Washington for Colorado.

THE Interior Department has been informed that large numbers of Sitting Bull's band have applied at Fort Peck for rations, offering to surrender their arms and ponies. These surrenders, Secretary Schurz says, will have to be made to the military posts.

THE majority report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in favor of giving Mr. Kellogg's seat to Mr. Spofford, was presented March 22d. Senator Blair presented the minority report, denouncing the proposed action as a crime to be classed with the firing on Fort Sumter.

THE Navy Department has received from the Baltimore Board of Trade a list of merchants who desire to be furnished with samples of the cotton recently sent here from Africa by Commodore Shufeldt, of the Ticonderoga. The Boards of Trade in New York and other cities will be invited to furnish similar lists.

ON March 23d the Supreme Court of Alabama rendered an opinion in a case involving the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad, the amount at issue being several million dollars. The court decided that the first trust deed of 1853 had a first lien on the whole main line of the road in Alabama, but not on the Government land grant, and also to a corresponding portion of the rolling stock; the other portion of the rolling stock pertaining to the road in Georgia.

THE long litigation over the celebrated Maxwell grant in New Mexico has been terminated by a foreclosure sale of the entire property under a decree of Chief Justice Fraze. This finally sets at rest the title of nearly 2,000,000 acres of the most valuable mineral and grazing land in New Mexico. It includes some 5,000 acres of well-watered grazing land, over 600 acres of surveyed coal land and the famous Moreno Valley Placer Mines, besides several gold quartz mines, including the Aztec mine.

EUGENE FAIRFAX WILLIAMSON was arrested in Baltimore on March 24th, and admitted that he was the author of the letters and the tricks which caused so great annoyance to Dr. DIX. He says that Dr. Dix never injured him, and he is unable to explain the motives which prompted him to persecute the clergyman. Williamson is a resident of Pittsburg, and made two visits of about a week each to this city to carry out his plot, living at the Windsor Hotel while here. He was arrested by Superintendent Gayler, of the New York Post Office.

Foreign.

DEFALCATIONS amounting to $525,000 have been discovered in the Overland Custom House, St. Petersburg.

THE Emperor of Russia has presented to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria a war steamer, 40,000 rifles and several Krupp guns.

ON March 9th the business quarter of Samana, Santo Domingo, was destroyed by fire, causing an aggregate loss of $150,000.

IT is reported that the French Ambassador to the Vatican has been instructed to prepare the Pope for a revision of the concordat with France.

ABDUL MOUTILLAH PASHA, the newly appointed Grand Shereef of Mecca, will leave Constantinople for his post on Saturday, escorted by two battalions.

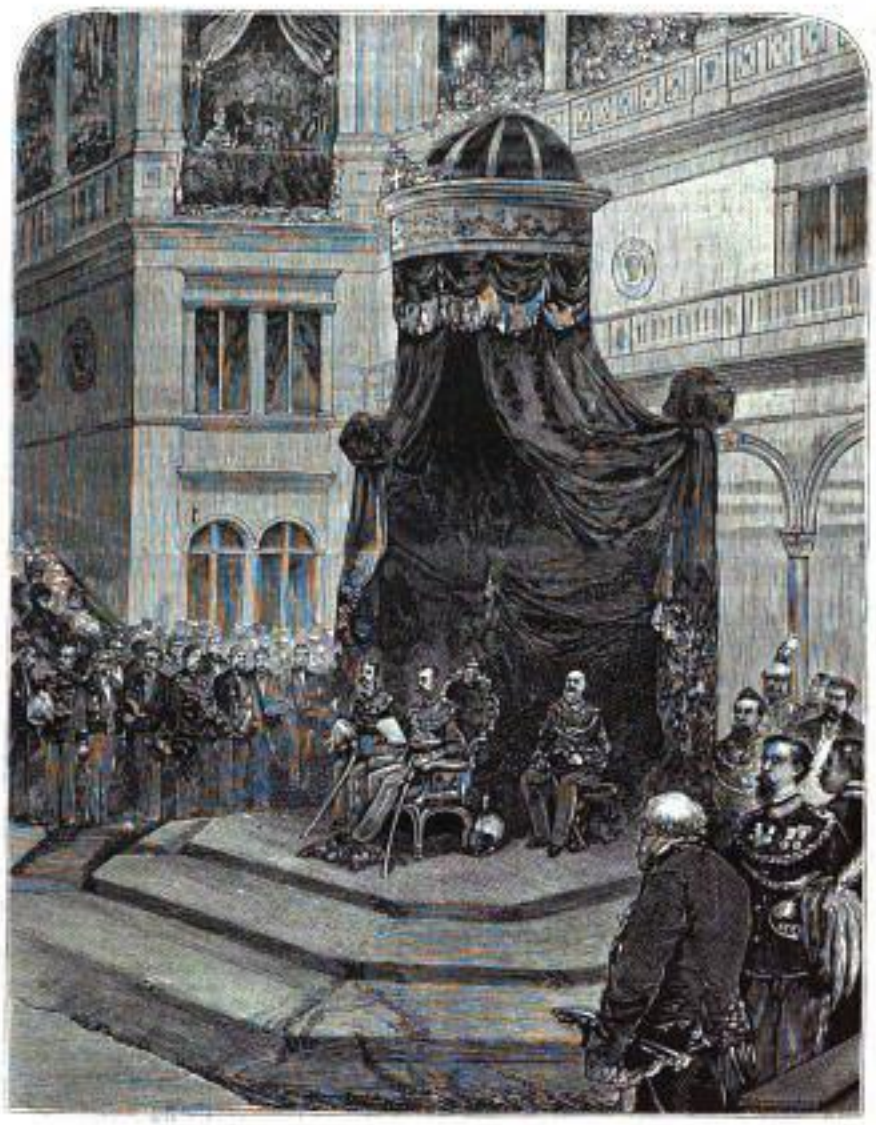
A MINISTERIAL crisis has occurred in Brazil. Dom Saraiva has replaced Dom Cansansaode Sinimbu as President of the Council and Minister of Public Works and of Agriculture.

IT is rumored that Count von Hatzfeld, the present Ambassador of Germany at Constantinople, will be appointed, in September, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the place of Herr von Bülow, deceased.

THE ex-Empress Eugénie, traveling incognita, and accompanied by Colonel Sir Evelyn Wood, V. C., and Lady Wood, the Marquis of Bassano and a small suite, has departed for the scene of the Prince Imperial's death.

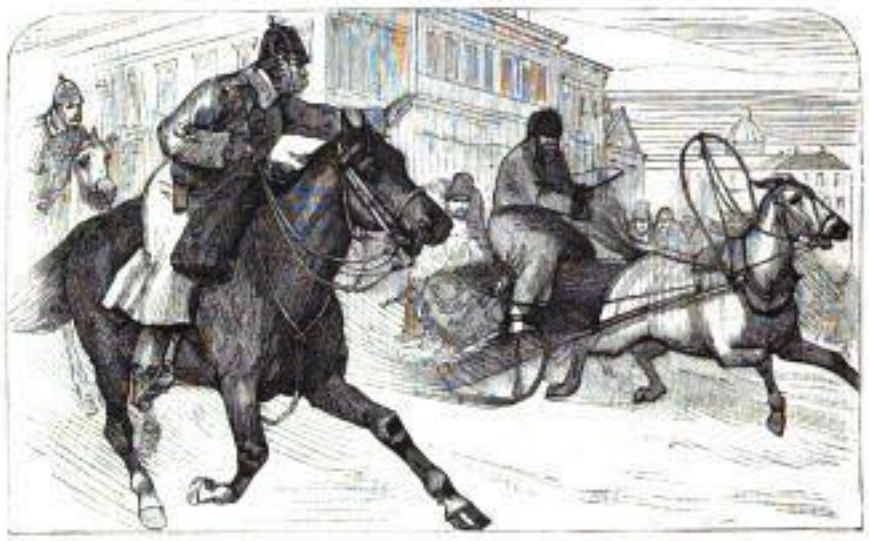
A PANAMA dispatch states that the Chilian forces, to the number of about 5,000, have made a successful landing at Pacocha, Peru, and that 3,000 more occupied the village of Vitor, a coast town twenty miles south of Pacocha.

THE Duchess of Marlborough has written a letter to the Lord Mayor of London, stating that there is now no fear of famine in Ireland, but there is dire destitution in the mountainous parts and on the sea coast. There is great need of clothing and seed.



THE British Parliament was formally dissolved March 24th. The Queen's speech was read by Lord Cairns, the Lord High Chancellor. There were present only twenty-five members of the House of Commons, fourteen peers and eleven ladies.

A NEW Greek Ministry has been formed, with M. Tricoupis as President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Mavrocordatos, Minister of Education and Public Worship; M. Lombardos, Minister of Interior; M. Petmezas, Minister of Justice; M. Balgaris, Minister of Marine, and M. Karaiskakis, Minister of War.



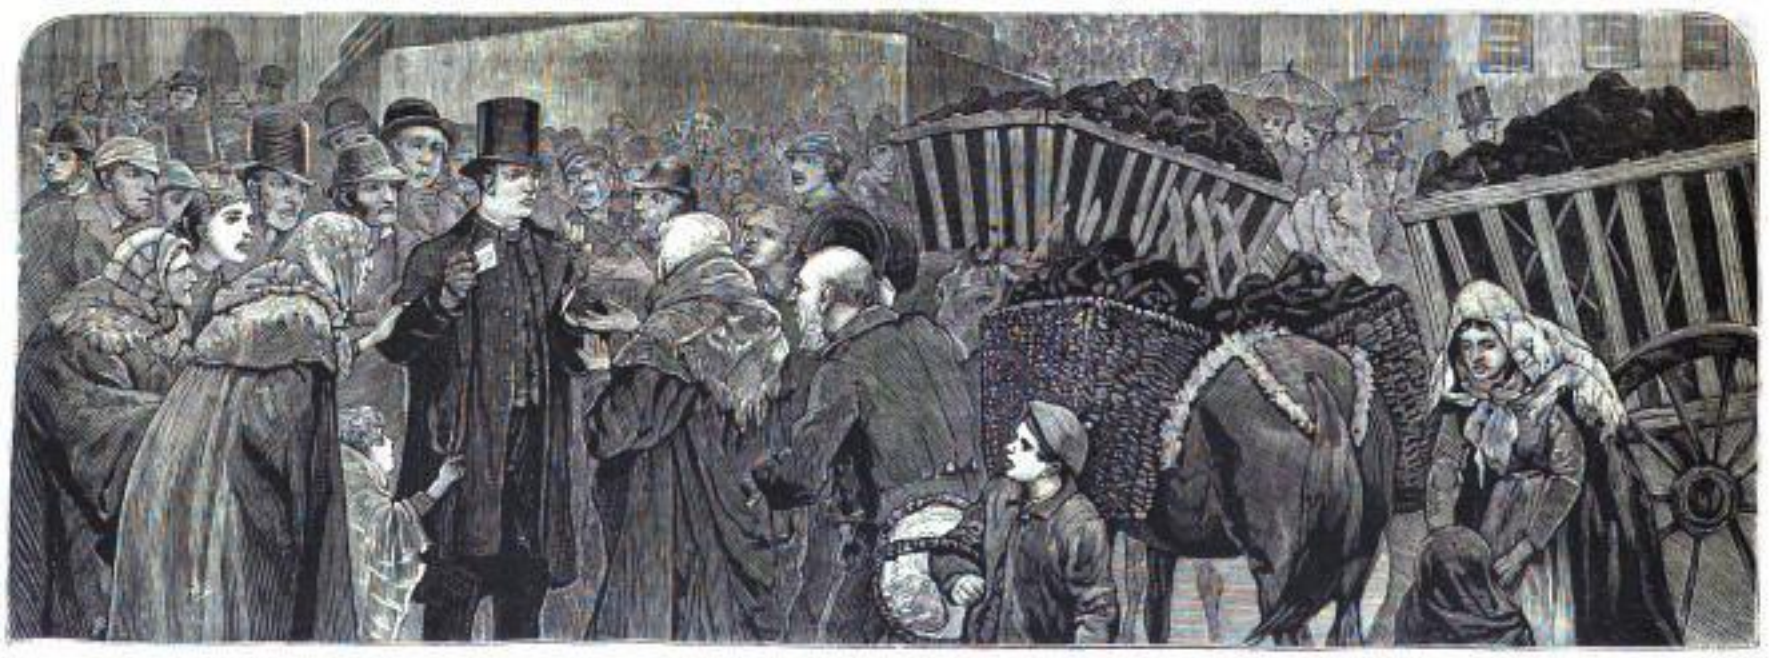
THE British troops at Jelalabad were ordered to advance on Gundamuk by forced marches, in consequence of a report of the hostile attitude of the Southern Ghilzais. A deserter reports that Gholam Hyder, Governor of Afghan Turkestan, sent three regiments with six guns towards Balkh to oppose Abdulrahman Khan, but they went over bodily to Abdulrahman, and Gholam Hyder has fled.

Digitized by Google

The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 87.

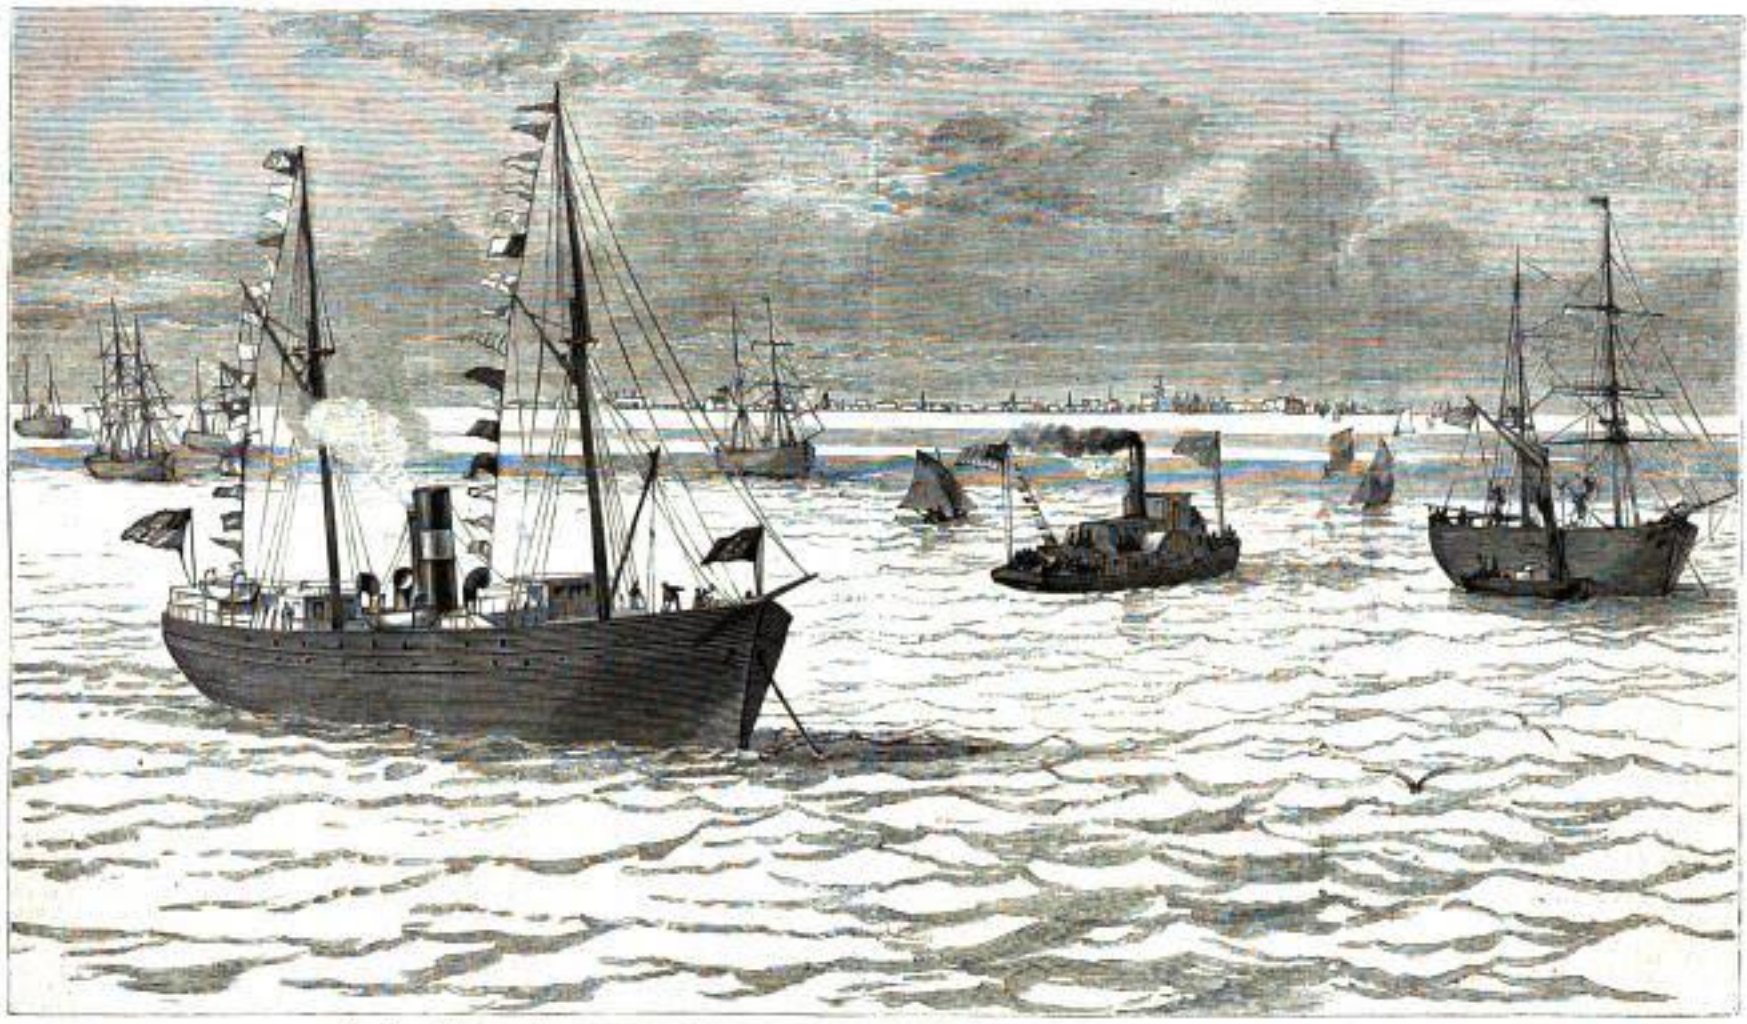
ITALY.—KING HUMBERT OPENING THE SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

RUSSIA.—POLICE ESPIONAGE IN ST. PETERSBURG.

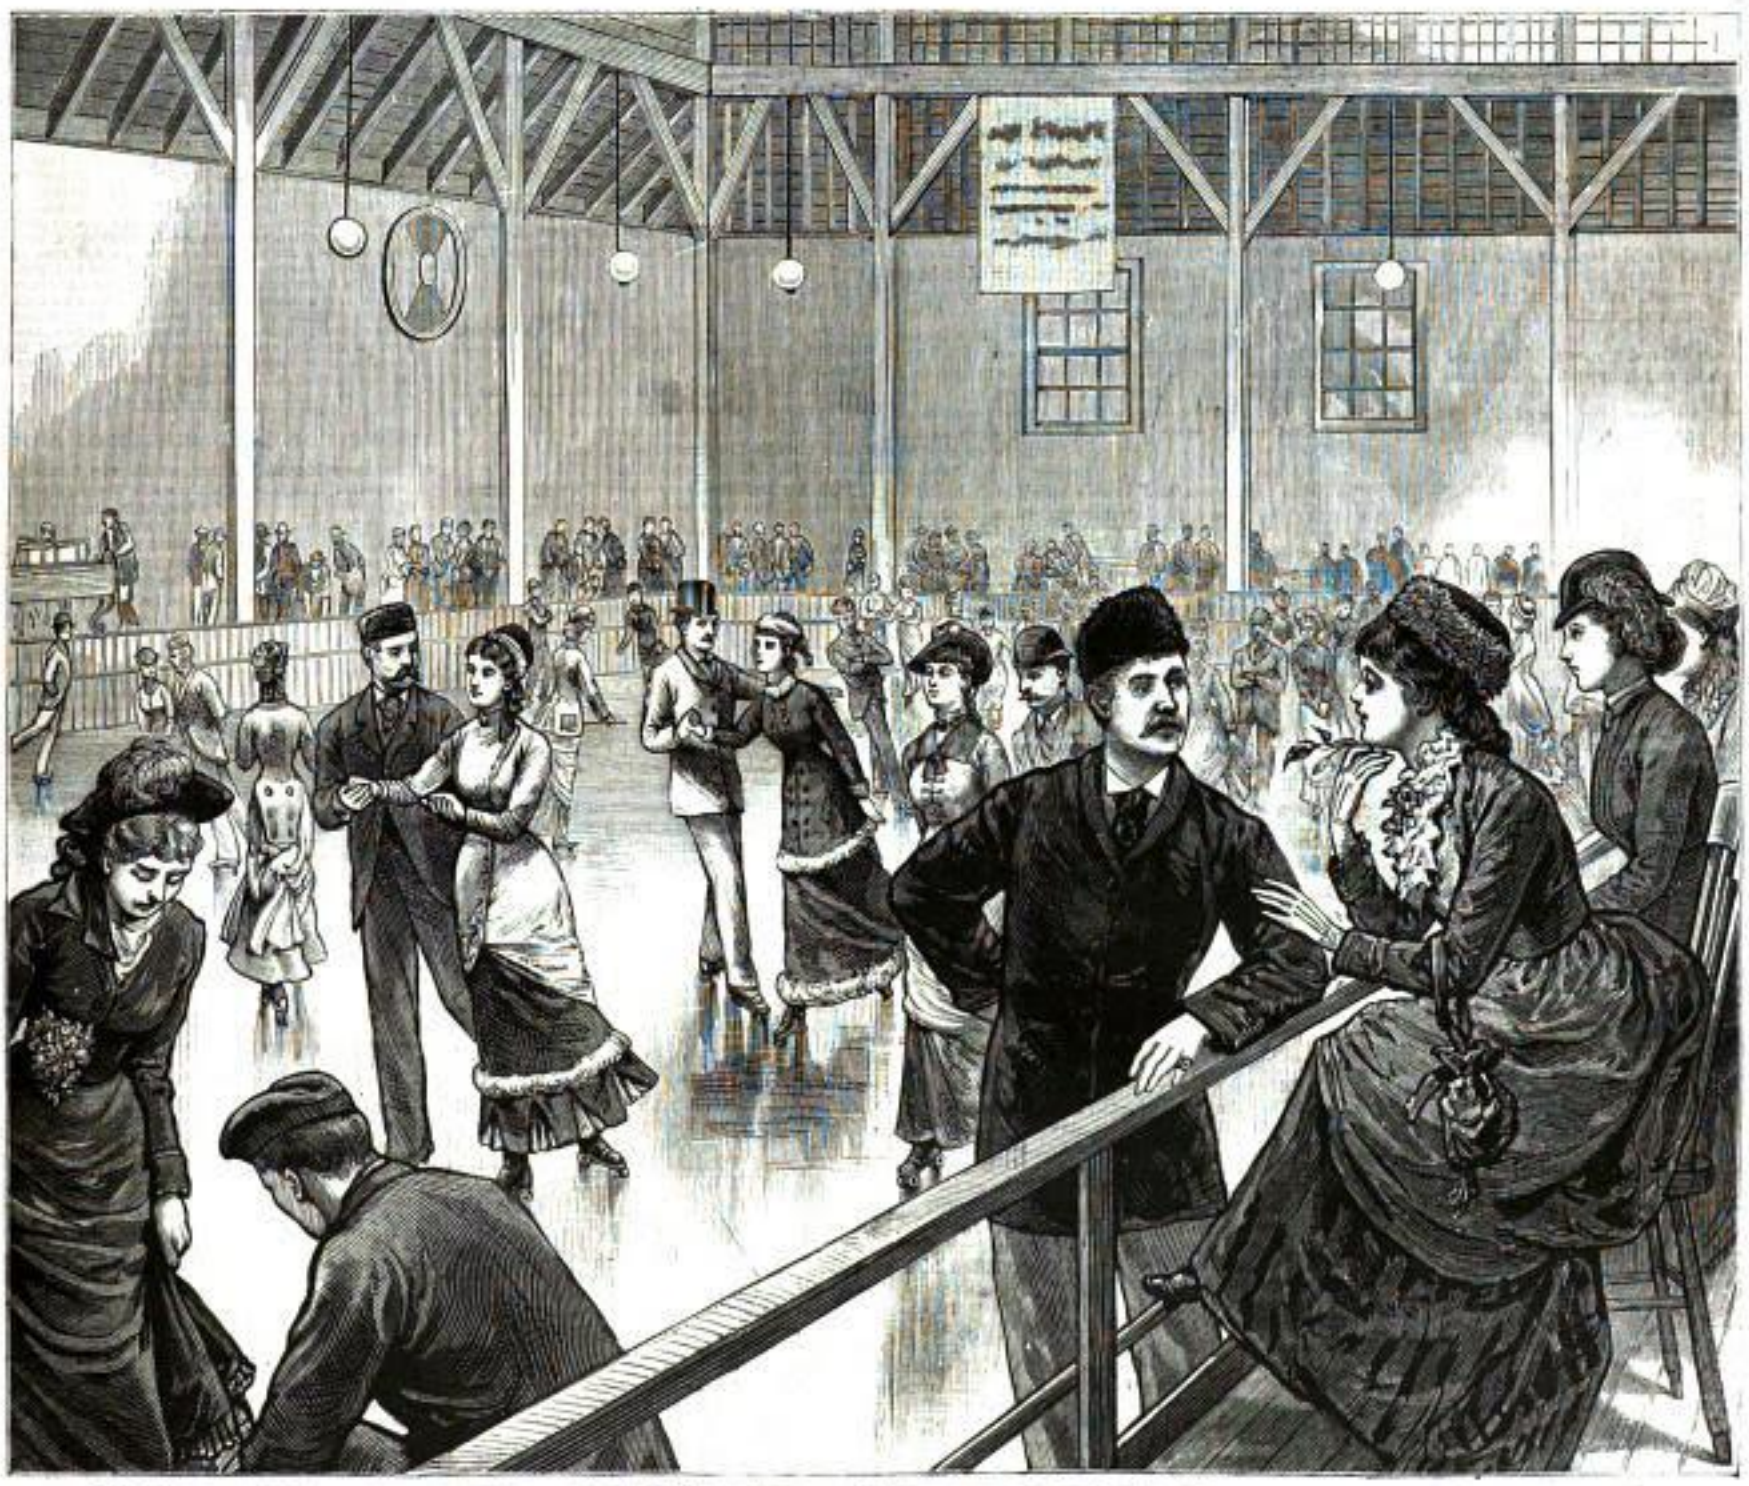


RUSSIA.—PRISONERS AT A RAILWAY STATION.

COCHIN CHINA.—A GAME OF CHESS WITH LIVING FIGURES AT SAIGON.



IRELAND.—AN AGENT GOING TO BUSINESS AT WESTPORT, MAYO.



IRELAND.—DISTRIBUTING RELIEF TICKETS IN THE TURF MARKET, WESTPORT, COUNTY MAYO.

Digitized by Google

TEXAS.—THE REVENUE CUTTER "M'LEAN" CONVEYING GENERAL GRANT AND PARTY FROM THE STEAMER TO THE WHARF AT GALVESTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. A. OGDEN.
SEE PAGE 86.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—GLIMPSES OF LIFE AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.—A FASHIONABLE ROLLER-SKATING RINK.—FROM A SKETCH BY MISS GEORGIE DAVIS.
SEE PAGE 86.

Digitized by Google

A SPY'S REVENGE.

BY COLLINS SHACKELFORD.

(Conclusion.)

THE despotism of Russia works so smoothly and with as little noise as nicely adjusted machinery, and, like that, it is pitiless in crushing those so unfortunate as to be caught in its wheels and cogs. Ivan knew by legend and story what an arrest by the police meant, and his forebodings, as he was pushed and pulled along, were of a very gloomy character, for he feared that his adventures of the day might be so warped in intent by an enemy as to seem threatening against the Government. He certainly had that enemy in the person of Michael Kropoff.

There was not much delay in the prison. In times of discontent a Russian court never wearies in the administration of justice according to despotism in the creation of tragedies and of equities. Ivan had not been twenty minutes in the court-room when he heard his name pronounced. He was instantly pulled to his feet and forced before the judge.

"The charge is treason," said the judge, sternly. "Prisoner, have you anything to say?"

"I am innocent. I have been arrested without cause," declared Ivan, standing erect and looking the judge boldly in the face.

"The old story," said the judge. "Every conspirator declares himself innocent. Officers, your proofs!"

"They are upon the prisoner," was the reply.

"Upon me?" cried Ivan. "That is absurd."

"We shall see," sneeringly responded a gendarme.

With that he was seized and stripped, as one skins a squirrel, of his caftan and cap. A slash of a knife around the latter and there was revealed a mass of papers as lining.

"Proclamations against the Governor of St. Petersburg, and from Kieff," said one of the officials, after reading them.

They were placed before the judge.

The accused held out his manacled hands pleadingly, and again asserted his innocence. There was silence then, for how could those present believe in him with such testimony before them?

"Is that all?" asked the court.

"Not the half," and the functionaries thrust their hands into the pockets of the caftan. They brought out the presents purchased by the lover with so many anticipations of the delight that they would give his sweetheart.

A brutal laugh ran around the room as they were roughly unwrapped and placed upon the table. The prisoner's heart, great in its love, grew sick at this sacrilege committed upon his little, simple gifts.

"There is no treason about them," he exclaimed. "They are for Vera, my betrothed."

"Hold your tongue, insolent!" cried an officer, striking him a stinging blow across the face with his whip. "What does it matter? You'll not need them again."

A livid line arose across the face of the defenseless man. His eyes grew fierce, his lips worked convulsively, and he raised his chained hands above his head as if to brain the coward who had struck him.

"Be quiet," said the judge. "Now, prisoner, who is this woman Vera, and where does she live?"

Ivan did not answer. His head was bowed down upon his breast. He seemed lost to his surroundings.

"She is the daughter of old Potalitzen, the herb gardener of Ovgorotz," said a voice in the shadows.

Ivan raised his head.

"Oh! it's you, is it, Michael Kropoff!" he cried. "You ought to know her, for she turned you to the right-about for a better man. Come, now! Stand out! Don't hide, like a stabber in the back, in the dark."

The man came forward with a coarse laugh, stood by the table and contemptuously poked over Ivan's bridal gifts, jeering, without rebuke from the judge, at the wreath and the ring which Ivan had thought would bring such joy to his Vera's heart. The bits of lace and pretty ribbons the brute rolled into a ball and filliped at a companion. The sight was more than poor Ivan could quietly endure, even in his dangerous position. He sprang forward with a muttered threat.

Kropoff raised his whip.

"Stand!" he cried. "Keep silence! You cannot bite. You shall not even growl. Besides, Ivan Reditzky, we have not done with you yet," and, picking up the caftan, he brought out thin wads of paper and spread them out.

A cry of surprise went up. There were dozens of copies of the Semli-i-Schtsoboda (Land and Liberty) newspaper. Here certainly was proven Nihilism. The officers had never before discovered such a bold offender, such undeniable evidence of guilt.

Ivan's heart failed at this, to him, astounding display. His eyes grew hot, his tongue parched, and he trembled as with a chill. But still he declared:

"I know nothing of them. Those papers were put there by enemies. I am innocent! I will declare it until I die!"

Again Kropoff uttered his brutal laugh.

"'Lies march on rotten legs,' and lose their legs," he said, slashing the caftan into strips with his knife. "Behold, more treason!" drawing out sheets of the proscribed journal. Another whirl of the knife and the collar of the garment was opened and closely-folded documents in writing were produced.

"A list of members of a Nihilist's club at Kieff!" shouted Kropoff. "What more is wanted?"

"No more," said the judge. "There is more than is wanted."

"The coat is not mine," pleaded Ivan. "I borrowed it from my Cousin Alexander. I knew nothing of these papers, absolutely nothing. What was in the pockets was not there two hours ago. I will swear to that. Michael Kropoff, it is you who put them there in the crowd. You hate me. You have followed me all the day. Come, now, acknowledge the truth and let this joke be ended! Surely it has gone far enough."

"Humph! Joke! You'll find it no joke," exclaimed Kropoff, shrugging his shoulders. Then, turning to the court: "We saw him with Peterhof, the assassin of General Belekinoff. They talked, then separated. Five minutes later both were under arrest. Both are here. That is all."

"Enough! Take him away!" said the judge.

"But Vera—my marriage—my——"

An outburst of jeers drowned the rest. Ivan straightened himself. A new spirit took possession of him.

"I see it all," he cried. "It is not justice but revenge given me. I understand—I understand. But a grain of sand under the grinding sometimes strikes fire. I am wronged——"

What he might have said can never be known. The lash of whips and the prick of bayonets suddenly ended the defiant speech of the peasant and drove him, wounded but unsubdued, from the room where justice seemed heaven-like by its absence.

It was not a cell but a grave into which they hurled the poor peasant. It was underground. The water dripped from the ceiling, every drop a death note. Rats scrambled over him in mad antics. They would feast on him soon, as they had gnawed the victim before him. A dismal lamp in the corridor gave him shadows for other company. The silence was horrible! Nothing broke its oppressiveness save the rats, the water-drops and the muffled moan now and then of a prisoner in some neighboring vault. The tomb would have been more welcome. Its horrors are only imagined by those who are left behind. The dead are content.

To the strong-lunged peasant whose days had been granulated in the keen air, and whose nights were untroubled by unrest, the horrors of this infested dungeon, its loathsome air and the living contestants for space, were maddening. Nor was the imagined scene at Ovgorotz more pleasant. He pictured Vera—Vera, the bright-eyed, Vera, the loving—watching at the door for the footfalls of his horse, and for the song of joy he always sang as he approached her house. She would wonder at the silence and listen in vain for his song, the tinkle of his sledge-bells, his cheery shouts of welcome. She would weep—this dear little woman—and her heart would ache, and she would call to the dumb night air, "Ivan! Ivan!" and never more would there be answer from his lips. Never more, he thought, would he see her or his home, or know again even the meagre freedom that had fallen to his lot as a peasant. Vera's heart might break, but he would never know it, the grave might cover him and she be none the wiser. His bright day, so well begun, had ended with a prison-cell. He saw how Kropoff had tricked him for revenge against Vera, and that carried him back again through the incidents of the day. It roused his wild passions, and, in his rage, he beat the slimy, granite walls with his fists, crying:

"Cursed be the law and the men that have brought me here and let the rascals go free. I have been honest. I have done my soldier-work. I have paid my taxes. I pray to the same God as the Emperor prays to. I till the soil and am useful. What more can the best of citizens do? And yet I am here."

No answer came to these cries, no responsive sound, save the drip, drip, drip of the water and the deadened footfalls of the invisible sentinel in the corridor. Two days of this numbness and Ivan's spirit was broken. He trembled at the closing of a door; he shrieked in affright at the scrambling rats; he put his fingers in his ears to shut out the sound of the trickling moisture. He had almost forgotten his God and his Vera.

Then, as if in mercy, there was a clanking of chains, the bolts of his door were pushed back, and a dozen men seized the affrighted creature cowering in the furthest corner. He made no resistance when they clipped his hair and mustache until they looked like a shoe-brush; nor when they dressed him in linen trousers, a great-coat of coarse cloth, a round cap and huge leather boots; but when the blacksmith knelt down to rivet chains upon his ankles, then tears sprang to his eyes and he resisted the degradation. But the ready whip brought him into subjection, and he was dragged into the hall. There he beheld a score of men dressed like himself.

"What does this mean?" he whispered to one of them.

The man looked at him, laughed, and called him a fool.

Another answered him—"Siberia and the mines."

Ivan did not understand. He asked again. A hand was put on his arm. Turning, he faced Peterhoff.

"I remember you, poor fellow!" said the latter. "And you want to know about Siberia? It means fifteen miles a day of walking, for six months, that you may reach a living grave in the mines."

Ivan turned his face away. He was sick at heart. The journey, the destination, the life of daily torment in the mines he had heard talked about. He knew what was to come, and had he had the chance he would have killed himself then and there.

It was dusk when the prisoners were led forth into the street and placed in carts, and it was early morning when they reached an encampment where a large number of other exiles had been gathered. Here Ivan was chained to another exile. It was Peterhoff.

"Courage, comrade," said Peterhoff. "We shall be dead before we get there."

"I would die before I start," sighed Ivan.

That night the journey was commenced. The weather was bitter cold. Some of the exiles had friends to bid them good-by. Others were to be accompanied by their wives. There were moans and tears—moans like funeral wails. Ivan and Peterhoff were alone and friendless.

After hours of marching, a village was seen ahead. Already the miserable men were worn out with the walk and with carrying chains whose rattling and clanking bruised their flesh and their hearts. Strangely enough, though it was only about three o'clock in the morning, lights twinkled in the houses, and the houses themselves appeared like frozen shadows upon the snow-bound earth and against the star-lit horizon. Strangely, too, the people were astir and stood in silence along the main street; they had heard of the coming of the mournful procession, and had gathered to show their sympathy.

Ivan raised his head and looked around. The place seemed familiar, though his eyes, blinded by gazing for hours upon the snow, could not at first distinguish objects. Then, like a flash of light, the truth came upon him. The band of exiles were plodding through Ovgorotz. Here, then, all along the narrow, crooked street, were men and women whom he knew, but who, in him, a miserable convict, did not recognize their neighbor and friend, Ivan Reditzky.

He had no eyes, no thoughts, no voice for any one save Vera. Surely, he thought, she would be out, her heart was always so full of sympathy for the afflicted and persecuted. Would she know him? And if she did, what would she say? What could he say? Would she go with him into exile, or would she remain for ever behind? He wondered which way she would decide. Until he could speak to her he resolved to present himself to no one else until the last moment.

But Vera was not there, for the end of the street was reached. His heart began to ache and tears came to his eyes. Where was his betrothed? Why was she away when her lover marched by her on his way to exile? Then he remembered Kropoff. The villain must surely have told her of her lover's fate, for his revenge would be incomplete without it. But if she knew it, the more reason why she should be there. Ivan could not understand her absence, and a feeling of loneliness, of utter isolation, came over him.

A whisper that was, too, a shudder ran down the long line. It told of a band of woman convicts ahead, waiting for their party. It was soon reached. The men plodded by without sound save the hideous rattle and clash of their chains. The women were moaning and sobbing by their fires. Some were asleep and, for the time, happy. Ivan was heart-sick at this new atrocity, and he had not the boldness to raise his head and look at these tender victims of an iron despotism, until the next to the last group had been reached.

When he did look around, it was just as the light from a guard's lantern fell upon a woman seated by herself. Her hood had fallen off, her black hair was loosened, and, with her elbows upon her knees and her chin upheld by her hands, she was staring intently at the men as they passed. This man and this woman recognized each other on the instant. Two wild, despairing cries went out from their lips:

"Ivan!"

"Vera!"

She struggled to her feet. A burly Cossack, startled by the wailing outcry, ran towards them with uplifted whip. The thong hissed through the air upon the woman. A line of red sprang up across her face. Again the brutal blow, and once more arose on her white cheeks the brand of a horrible slavery. The victim tottered and fell.

"Oh, my beloved! my Vera!" cried Ivan, in a voice of love that went to her heart.

She staggered to her feet, holding up her hands imploringly towards him, but blind with the blows she had received.

But this outbreak of love was too much for the Cossack ruffian. He struck at her with the flat of his sword.

His foot slipped; he tumbled forward, and, as he fell, his sword was driven into her heart. She dropped dead where she had stood, her arms still outstretched towards her lover, and her head almost within his touch.

For a second Ivan stood as if cut out of rock. He did not move: he did not breathe. Then, with a shriek of rage, he sprang, like a wild beast, upon the assassin of his betrothed, dragging, as if he were but a straw, the man to whom he was chained. He took the Cossack's throat in an iron grip, and held it as if in a vise. In vain they tried to unclasp his fingers; in vain they beat his arms and head with sticks. There was no relief in that way for his cowardly victim.

"Enough! The man is crazy," declared an officer. "He is of no use to himself or the government. I will end this."

There was the report of a pistol, the shrieks of women, the muttered curses of men; and Ivan, throwing up his arms, reeled to the earth—freed by death.

As he fell his arms rested upon the head of his murdered Vera, his face towards hers.

And they were at rest.

RECEPTION OF GENERAL GRANT AT GALVESTON.

GENERAL GRANT and party arrived at the City of Galveston, Texas, on his return from Mexico, March 23d, in the steamer City of Mexico, and was received with a good deal of enthusiasm. The city was gay with bunting and flags flying from all of the principal buildings, and the streets were thronged with people. Upon the arrival of the steamer at the bar, nine miles out, a revenue cutter went out to meet her, having on board a committee of citizens, General Ord and others. On the arrival of the cutter, with General Grant and party, at the city wharf, a salute of twenty-five guns was fired. Upon the disembarkation of the city's guests a procession was formed, consisting of military, firemen, white and colored school-children, different societies, with the ex-President, Generals Ord and Sheridan and Colonel Fred Grant in the front carriage, followed by the committee in carriages. The route of procession was through Twenty-fourth, Broadway, Market and Tremont streets. On the arrival at Tremont Hotel a review took place from the rotunda, after which the General retired to the parlor, where a reception took place, and many ladies and gentlemen were presented. On the following evening a banquet was tendered the ex-President, which was largely attended. He was the recipient also of other marked courtesies, indicating the kindly feeling of the populace.

In reply to a toast in his honor at the banquet tendered by the citizens, General Grant made the following speech: "I am very much obliged to one and all of you for the very kind reception which I have received at your hands, and at the hands of all citizens of this city, and I assure you that it affords me very great pleasure to be here on this occasion and to see so many of you. It was my fortune more than a third of a century ago to visit Texas as a Second Lieutenant, and to have been one of those who went into the conflict which was to settle the boundary of Texas. I am glad to come back now on this occasion to behold a territory which is an empire in itself, and larger than some of the empires of Europe. I wish for the people of Texas, as I do for the people of the entire South, that they may go on developing their resources and become great and powerful, and in their prosperity forget that there is a boundary line between North and South. I am sure we will all be happier and much more prosperous when the day comes that there will be no sectional feeling. Let any American who can travel abroad as I have done, and with the opportunity of witnessing what there is to be seen that I have had, and he will return to America a better American and a better citizen than he was when he went away. He will return more in love with his own country. Far be it from me to find fault with any of the European Governments. I was well received at their hands on every side, by every nation in Europe; but, with their dense populations and worn-out soil, it takes a great deal of government to get from the soil a bare subsistence. Here we have a rich virgin soil, with room enough for all of us to expand and live with the use of a very little government. I do hope that we long may be able to get along happily and contentedly without being too much governed."

GLIMPSES OF LIFE AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

ON three evenings of the week, during the present season, very attractive gatherings have been held at the Roller and Skating Rink on Fourteenth Street, and, alike to lookers-on and to the members of the class themselves, the roomy, well-lighted hall has been one of the pleasantest of resorts. From six to eight the professor of this graceful art holds class, and the thirty or forty pupils, picturesque in pretty skating costumes, wheel and turn, march, countermarch, and flash on the smooth rollers through all sorts of bewildering and entangled figures, obedient to the signals of their leader. The rink is large enough for a regimental drill-room, and under the bright lights and over the polished asphalt floor, the crowd of swaying, swinging and gliding figures have the prettiest possible effect. Nearly all the class are good skaters, the exercise is a delightful one, the scope for dainty display in the way of costumes is infinite, the opportunity for mild flirtations boundless; and what more—always providing that you are a woman and eighteen—would you or could you desire?

People are fond of dropping in at the Navy Yard, where Mrs. Hoxie, late Vinnie Ream, is hovering about her corps of French workmen, watching the progress of the casting of Commodore Farragut in bronze. It was my good fortune to take a peep at the work under her guidance and to see the hero in a fragmentary state, his legs antiquidiluvian in plaster in her little workroom, and the remaining half of his colossal form buried in the sand-mold, with only the tip of the heroic nose visible. Under these adverse circumstances no very clear idea of the merits of the work could be gained, but Mrs. Farragut's letter of praise to the artist so heartily indorses her success, that I was content to take them all on faith. And, apart from more important considerations, among such a host of bronze equestrians as throng the avenues and "circles" in Washington, the spectacle of a hero on his own personal feet cannot fail to be agreeable.

THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART.

THIS magnificent building, which was formally opened March 30th with such distinguished éclat, is now the property of a discriminating public, and to this Mecca æsthetic pilgrims are hieing with all the fervor which characterizes your numismatists and conchologists and archæologists, and all the other ists. A spin through the beautiful Central Park that in a few days will don its tender greens, and coquettishly adorn itself with red and white and yellow blossoms, brings the æstheticone to the Long-Branch-cottage-looking porch, and from thence into a superbly proportioned hall, surrounded by a broad gallery, lighted to something akin to perfection. Great glass cases containing art treasures confront you on every side, while sarcophagi and stone effigies of kings who ruled in Cyprus for centuries before it became part of the kingdom of the Ptolemies grimly recalls period now fairyized in the mist of ages. Wondrous "bits" of Gobelin tapestry hang from the galleries, and vessels of every sort, shape, size and description, from Chelsea to ceramic, from potter's clay to yellow gold, suggests glorious visages, if not "crooked drinks." Here are cases containing laces that might have been woven by Titania; missals illuminated by bloodless Benedictines; armlets and anklets and rings and brooches of the time of the Queen of Sheba; cases displaying shells, Japanese curios, arms, and heaven knows what not besides. A Cypriotic sarcophagus, with bas-relief representations of chariots drawn by nondescript-looking animals, and driven by warriors with great beards in tufted curls, is a centre of attraction, and antiquarians stoop to it as reverently as did the immortal Mr. Pickwick before the moss-covered hieroglyphics which the deep research of the club brought to light as "Bill Stumps his mark." Here we have Di Cesnola's unrivaled collection from Citium, Paphos, Salamis, Idalium, Golgos, Curium and Amathus. These Cypriotic antiquities range probably from the Trojan age, B. C. 1200, to the close of the Greek dominion, in a series of monumental records unrivaled for continuous succession anywhere in the world save in Egypt. The coins bring tears of rapture in the eyes of the numismatist, for here are the Phœnician coinages of the Kings of Citium and Idalium, and Greek coins of Paphos and Salamis. Under the Ptolemies the mints of Cyprus struck abundant money, and, as the greater part of the silver coins are dated, the class is of unusual historic interest. The Idalium glass, with its wondrous iridescence, is hungered for, and the bizarre drinking vessels, representing effigies of dogs, fish, horses and strangely-headed animals, excite ardent comment. The galleries are chiefly devoted to ceramic pottery, Japanese curios, and the quaint ornaments in gold and other metals worn by the Cypriotic women of three thousand years ago. At either end of the building are picture galleries, one of which contains a unique collection of old masters, while the others are devoted to a loan exhibit of the productions of both foreign and American artists.

Among the foreign works are Diaz's "La Mare aux Grenouilles"; Rousseau's landscape which attracted so much attention in the Sherwood-Hart sale; examples of Corot, Daubigny, Dupré, Troyon and J. Maris; Vollons's "Distant View of Paris from the Seine"; a courtyard scene by Rice; Wahlberg's superb "Sunset on the Shores of the Baltic"; a Carl Becker and a Carl Hübner; Raimondo Madrazo's single figure of a Spanish woman seated and flirting with her fan; G. Jacquet's "Ready for the Races"; two works by Edouard Dubufe, "The Adieu of the Conscript" and "The Return of the Soldier"; Paul Soyer's "Une Poignée d'Amis"; Joseph Brandt's "A Polish Post in a Snow Storm"; and examples of Zugel, A. Vacca and Carl Hübner. Among the American pictures are Eastman Johnson's "Corn Husking," Samuel Colman's "Canal in Holland," Arthur Quartley's "Morning Effect, North River, N. Y."; George Inness's "St. Peter's," Winslow Homer's "The Sunny Side," C. H. Miller's "Twilight on Long Island," L. C. Tiffany's "Market Day at Guinipet," Walter Shirlaw's "Roxy," William M. Chase's "Feeding the Pigeons," and a host of others of equal merit. The Metropolitan Museum of Art is now an accomplished fact, and its collection is as unique as it is valuable.

Digitized by Google

Singular Case of Prodigality.

A PRODIGAL of a new kind has appeared before the Paris Civil Tribunal to obtain the removal of an interdiction to the management of his property. In this case the friends of the young man, M. Mario Vivares, had interceded to prevent him from ruining himself, not from a reckless love of pleasure, but from his ardor in engaging in business enterprises. He is the son of a notary of Cette, and received a brilliant education. His youthful passion was a love of adventure and a desire to distinguish himself in exploring and colonizing distant lands. He first joined the army, but in consequence of two duels with superior officers in Algeria, in which they were seriously wounded, he was led to abandon that career. He then came to Paris, and at once launched into the most diverse speculations, founding companies for working coal mines in Styria, sulphur works in Italy, church-organ building in France, etc. Journalism naturally attracted him, and the papers in which he invested capital made no small breach in his fortune. His latest scheme was to found a settlement in Africa for the barter of European merchandise for ivory and other productions of the interior of the dark continent, for which undertaking a capital of several millions was to be raised. His patrimony was rapidly disappearing, and to place bounds to his costly activity his father obtained the appointment of trustees for his property. The son has now been appointed vice consul at Sierra Leone, and, in consequence, applied to the Civil Tribunal to obtain the removal of the interdiction. The judges, however, doubted whether he was yet sufficiently cured of his extravagant ideas and declined to accede to the demand.

A Spanish Matador.

THE following description graphically illustrates the terror and danger attending a Spanish bull-fight: Cucharra, of Puerto, Santa Maria, is the matador. Majestically he strides towards the Governor's box, stoops in obeisance, and, in a loud voice, makes proclamation: "I pledge myself to Puerto Santa Maria and all its society, and to the people of Madrid, and now I am ready to kill this vile beast, if the vile beast cannot kill me." He removes his turban, and, with a graceful jerk with his right hand from behind his back over his left shoulder, flings it into the Governor's box, as gage of his boasted prowess. He takes his straight, keen-tempered sword and his cloak of offensive scarlet, and advances towards the bull. Now is the supreme trial; now is the time when men let their lighted cigarettes drop from their mouth and clinch their teeth; now is the time when women close their fans and draw long breaths. Cucharra faces Toro at a yard's distance. They regard each other. Cucharra hides his sword under his cloak, and presents it to the bull. Toro lowers his head, shuts his eyes, and charges, but the tornador gracefully slips aside and saves his life by a turn of the heel. Three times he repeats the feat of this risksome pirouette; but woe is him if he is a second too late in his movements, or if the soil is treacherous. The fourth time, as the bull lowers his head, Cucharra lifts himself on his toes, and, with one sure, swift blow, plunges the blade almost to the hilt in the spine of his antagonist. The bull stands still; there is a shout of bravo; the bull still stands, ten seconds, twenty, thirty; there is a howl of disappointment; but Cucharra gazes contemptuously around, he knows he has done his work well, and, my faith, he has. Toro quivers and drops, and Cucharra plants a foot on the neck of his prostrate enemy. The bull has died of internal hemorrhage; not a drop of blood has distilled from his mouth. Bravo Cucharra! This death at the first thrust—death without the dropping of the crimson fluid from the mouth—is the artistic death. When the sword pierces at the wrong spot, is displaced by the shaking of the bull, and sent flying, gore-wet, through the air, it is awkward workmanship. But Toro showed mucha fuego before he was so prettily pierced in the medulla. Bravo, Toro! And now the cachesierro stoops over him, and, with one dig of his sharp knife in the neck, makes assurance doubly sure. The team of mules trots in and trots out again with the dead champion at its heels; and the urchins outside are dancing on his carcass as the drums and cymbals proclaim the entrance of a second bull into the enthusiastic circle.

Ancient Quartz Workers.

THE Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune of February 9th in giving the proceedings of the Historical Society there, says a paper was presented by Miss Frances E. Babbitt considering the subject of ancient quartz workers, basing the conclusions upon the discoveries of Professor Winchell at Little Falls and surroundings points. At that place the professor discovered, in 1876, a number of quartz chips which bore evidence of having been cut from the parent rock by the hand of man. He further concluded that the quartz workers inhabited this country before the mound-builders' race; he found these chips in strata underlying the mound-building period. He therefore fixes the era of the quartz workers as that ending with the last glacial period. It is often disputed, however, whether these quartz remains belong to a pre-glacial folk, or to co-glacial, inter glacial or pre-glacial people, the question being difficult to decide because the remains found and noted by Professor Winchell, which are surface deposits, are so scattered and irregular. At Little Falls, however, there have been discovered quartz chips and implements occupying regular strata in the earth. The remains consist of hammers, implements, etc., both finished and unfinished, together with the chips struck off from the articles in the process of manufacture. The material of which they are composed is principally compact, lustrous quartz, frequently moulded as if selected with an eye to the artistic beauty. The stratum is some few inches in thickness and lies in the soil a few feet below the surface. The appearances indicate that this was once the site of a manufactory of such quartz objects, and this idea is upheld by various considerations. There are tools found such as would be used in the manufacture of quartz articles, and the whole stratum is mixed with quartz chips which in many cases appear stuck in the dirt just as they fell from the hand of the unknown. Unfinished implements are also found in more or less advanced stages of manufacture. It is not possible to fix the precise point occupied by these remains in the scale of the glacial epoch until the drift features and surrounding formations of the locality shall be better understood than now. Still, it is certain that the remains belong to a paleolithic people—that is a people living before the end of the last glacial period, because they are deposited in a drift which is known to be of glacial origin. The hard pan upon which the quartz formation lie is probably of the first glacial period, and the quartz may belong to an inter-glacial epoch.

Restoration in Venice.

THE attention of the public in England has been so much absorbed with the proposed restoration of the west front of St. Mark's, at Venice, that there is danger that the scarcely less important operations in progress and in contemplation at the Ducal Palace immediately adjoining the famous church may escape observation. Extensive works in the way of repair and substitution have been going on there for some time past, under the direction of the Cavaliere Forcellini, a distinguished Venetian architect, and have been carried out in a manner which has not escaped severe criticism at the hands of his countrymen. It is now proposed to restore the celebrated Porta della Carta, the lovely doorway leading to the Giant's Staircase, down whose steps rolled the head of Marino Faliero. The lintel of this doorway, a most exquisite piece of work, is cracked, but in no danger of falling, nor does it even need to be shored up. It is, however, to be removed, and a new lintel, copied from the original, put in its place. The work has been delayed in consequence of the difficulty of finding a stone of sufficient size for the purpose, but it is much to be feared that, unless some serious remonstrance is made, the substitution will be effected, with the approbation of the majority of the Venetians, the original lintel being, perhaps, preserved in the Correr Museum, which is a kind of hortus siccus to which displaced fragments of antiquity are relegated by the municipality. There is not the slightest excuse for this work. The Venetians have, however, the impression that it is perfectly justifiable to remove old work and to replace it with new, provided the new work be an exact reproduction of the old, and the architect who has directed the works of restoration at St. Mark's has carried this doctrine so far as to assert publicly that a portion of the pavement in that basilica which has been recently taken up and relaid under his direction is, in his opinion, superior to the original.

Maple-sugar Weather.

THE mild, Spring-like weather we have been enjoying is called in Northern New England "good sap weather," and that it has proved so in some regions already is proven by the appearance of maple-sugar in this market. The sugar season generally sets in about the 10th of March, but like everything else this year, it appears to be ahead of time. The sugar camp is a grand institution in the Northern States, and is the first active, bustling indication that Spring is really dawning. Alternating warm and cold weather are necessary for successful sapping. Should the thawing and the sunshine continue two or three days without a freeze, the sap will stop running, though why this is the case is not very clear, yet all maple-sugar makers find this out by experience. In new countries maple-trees have undergone the yearly process of tapping for twenty or thirty years without deteriorating in their sap-producing qualities, but, on the contrary, the sap is said to gain in sweetness the longer the old trees have been subjected to the process.

Indians understood sugar-making from the maple-trees, and the process was learned from them, though of a rude and pristine character, by the first white settlers. About the beginning of the present century, a large party of French emigrants, including nobles and priests, who were exiled from their country in consequence of the revolution, purchased a large maple forest near the head of the Black River, in Northern New York, and as little did they know of sugar-making, they tapped their trees in the Summer time, and what was the most ridiculous part of the operation—instead of using the very simple instrument the "spike," which was customary among the natives—they improved on the latter and inserted a "robinet," with a stop-cock at the end, to turn on and off the flowing liquor, such as is used in drawing out the contents of a wine cask.

The Tekke Turkomans.

AN interesting account of the Tekke Turkomans is given by the Moscow correspondent of the Cologne Gazette. They are the only Turkomans who do not lead a nomad life; they love their homes, and celebrate them with enthusiasm in their songs. Their total population is about 280,000; one-half of these live in the oasis of Merv, and the other half in the plain of Akhal. They are tall and strongly built, and are distinguished from the rest of the Turkomans (who, as is known, wear high black sheepskin hats) by their low white caps. The Tekkes are brave, enterprising and clever; and they are celebrated in Central Asia as silversmiths and armorers. They are, however, owing to the want of water and the barrenness of the soil in the Akhal plain, poorer than the other Turkomans. This accounts for the majority of them having from time immemorial lived by plunder. Every plundering expedition into the territory of their neighbors is in their eyes a chivalrous undertaking, while theft among themselves is almost unknown. They marry very young, and a man who can afford it usually buys a wife for his son when he is only twelve years old, for from $50 to 1,000 rubles (£10 to £120). There is no political organizations among the Tekkes; each man is entirely independent, and does not recognize any constituted authority. There is, however, in each village and fortress a man who by his wealth, ability and experience has become influential among his fellows, and acts as a sort of chief.

Social Life in Hong Kong.

A DISORDERLY Chinaman is uncommon, and a lazy one probably does not exist. He is rarely out of employment, for he will turn his hand to anything; hence beggars are seldom met with in the streets; hence, also, unhappily, among their other virtues, that of picking pockets is included. In this pursuit they are very adroit, and in the allied art of asking half as much again for anything than they intend taking they are perhaps equally skilled and unprincipled. The houses and shops are most curiously constructed, and just as strangely fitted up; not one, however small or poor, but has its domestic altar, its joss, and other quaint and curious arrangements known only to these peculiarly strange people. Look where you will, there are evidences of the customary industry and enterprise of the surprising sons of Shem. Up every alley and in every street we see crowds of little yellow faces, and stumble against brokers or merchants hurrying on to their business, clad in their universal blue-jean jumper and trousers, cotton socks, and shoes of worked silk, with thick wooden soles; some with, and others without, hats; the shaven face and pigtail so typifying the class, that to note a difference between Sun Shing and Wang Hong is sometimes most embarrassing. The dress of the women differs little from that of the men. The curious, built-up style the married ladies have of wearing their hair gives them a strange appearance; while the younger lasses allow theirs to hang down their backs in tresses, or wear it bound tightly over their foreheads, and secured en chignon. Their cheeks are tinted bright pink, and with their neat little feet and clean and loose clothing they make a very pretty picture. Although great numbers of other nationalities are to be seen, the Chinese are most conspicuous and interesting to the stranger, and when once the business of the day has begun, the din and traffic are enormous; for crowds of men of all creeds and colors—Jew, Pagan and Christian, Buddhist and Parsee, Chinese, Japanese and European—fill the streets, while gangs of coolies chant to keep step, as they press on beneath their heavy burdens. The merchants, whose places of business lie along the Queen's road, are so similar in appearance that a description of one will apply to all. He is generally a fat, round-faced man, with an important and business-like look, wearing the same kind of clothing as the meanest cooley—but of finer material—and is always clean and neat: his long tail, tipped with red or blue silk, hanging down to his heels.

Art Study under Sad Difficulties.

A VERY unusual instance of courage in life is noted in Cincinnati. At No. 68 West Eighth Street is a young lady known only to a limited circle of friends, whose life presents almost a dramatic interest. This lady is Miss Marion Foster, who is endeavoring to obtain work in her art of crayon portraits and painting in water colors. Seven years ago Miss Foster lost the use of her lower limbs from the effects of poisonous vaccine matter. Since that time she has been almost helpless. She sits in a wheeled chair, which she can move at pleasure, and in this does her work. Miss Florence Foster, her sister, is with her, and together the young ladies have taken a room, where they do their own "light housekeeping." They arrived in that city strangers and alone, from Minerva, Ohio. To Miss Foster art study is an absorbing purpose, and she has thus faced difficulties which would have appalled many women in perfect health. These young ladies are relatives—distantly connected, we believe—with Governor Foster, of that State. The family of the Governor have extended much kindness to Miss Marion, ordering of her portraits in crayon of both the Governor and Mrs. Foster. The flower pieces done in water colors by Miss Foster are very delicate and pleasing. Two of these pieces were exhibited at the Artists' Reception, and met approval. Many of the guests of that night will remember seeing Miss Foster, helpless in her wheeled-chair, yet taking in such positive enjoyment from the evening. To great natural talent this young lady adds some study and an immense amount of persistence. She is doing work at remarkably low rates, and many interested in this line of work, or moved by personal sympathies for this young lady, may find it of interest to call upon her.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

Opening of the Italian Parliament.

The present session of the Italian Parliament was opened by King Humbert in person on February 14th last. Much alarm is felt at the physical condition of His Majesty, as he is known to be consumptive, and does not look as if he could last many years. His Queen, the popular Marguerita, is also exceedingly delicate, and has lost much of her buoyancy since the attempt on the King's life. The Crown-Prince, too, although but seven or eight years of age, is very nervous, and has not recovered from the fright of the assault upon his father. The present dynasty of Italy, therefore, does not give evidence of a robust or lengthy existence.

Russia under Melikoff.

The pacific policy of General Melikoff is practically abandoned, and rigorous measures will shortly be introduced to crush out the conspiracies that are spreading through every part of the empire. The pressure that is being brought to bear upon the Czar to effect the removal of Prince Gortschakoff from the Chancellorship and General Milutine from the Ministry of War is attributed to German influences, which at present is very powerful. Gortschakoff is reticent, but is watching every move of his enemies, and his friends confidently predict that, even if he is removed, the change will be only a temporary one, as he is the representative of the old Russian feeling that has, in the end, invariably controlled the destinies of the empire. The Emperor is daily growing more anxious to leave St. Petersburg. Although every precaution is taken to prevent the introduction of Nihilist documents into the Palace, circulars continue making their appearance even in the Czar's most private rooms. The police are at their wits' end. The guards have been more than doubled, and are changed constantly, but without avail, and the Emperor, in despair, has signified his intention to leave for Livadia within the next fortnight, providing the Czarina is well enough to accompany him.

Visit of the King of Cambodia to Saigon.

On the 20th of November Phra Norodom, King of Cambodia, reached Saigon, the capital of French Cochin China, to pay his annual official visit, France having accepted or assumed the Protectorate of his States. Under the treaty he is to be received with royal honors. Accordingly, his visit is the occasion of a general holiday, as horse races, fireworks, military reviews, a grand ball and nightly illuminations take place, and all the world try to enjoy themselves to the utmost, simply to honor His Majesty. One of the entertainments usually given, is a game of chess in which the pieces are all represented by young men, the chess board being about sixty feet square. They were dressed in antique style, according to the traditions of the houses, and one of the bonzes directed the game. It was very amusing to see the pieces move at the direction of this old priest as the players expressed the wish to make a move, for each player had to communicate his wishes to the director. As the pieces were trained, they made their moves with great accuracy and as soberly as though performing some important operation.

The Distress in Ireland.

The latest dispatch from London concerning the famine in Ireland says, in order that relief of the people in distress on the coasts of Galway and Mayo may be carried out effectively, a frigate has been dispatched in addition to the three gunboats hitherto employed. The Duke of Edinburgh will shortly arrive on the west coast of Ireland to inspect the arrangements for relief. Our large engraving represents the scene in the turf-market at Westport, County Mayo, at the distribution of relief tickets for small portions of "yellow meal," or maize flour, doled out by the local relief committees to the famishing people of that neighborhood. Another sketch by our own artist, taken at the same place, is entitled "Going to Business." It shows the disturbed and excited condition of popular feeling, and the sense of insecurity that prevails in some districts, where the peasantry have been led to cherish sentiments of animosity and to threaten dire vengeance against those connected with the landlord interest. The agent of the Marquis of Sligo, who is the gentleman here seen going to his business office in the town of Westport, guarded by armed constabulary, has had several narrow escapes of being murdered by a gang of desperate villains sworn to take his life. He has been shot at five times; the last time was about three months ago. Though warned previously not to go without an escort, he went accompanied only by his son, and was attacked by four men with blackened faces. They fired at him but missed him, and his son then shot one of the assailants.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE taxable property in Augusta, Ga., is assessed at $14,000,000.

—THE University of Sydney, New South Wales, has had a bequest of $500,000.

—SEVENTY-SIX towns in Connecticut—about one-half the State—have voted against licensing the sale of liquor.

—AN international dog show is announced to be held at Haarlem, in Holland, from the 26th to the 28th of June.

—OVER hundred Italian families will go to Arkansas next Fall to settle in the St. Joseph colony at Morrilton.

—THE number of building permits issued in Boston since the year opened is twice that issued in the same period of 1879.

—CAPTAIN H. W. HOWGATE, of the United States Signal Office, has been elected a corresponding member of the Geographical Society of Antwerp.

—HEAVY rains in South Carolina have caused the overflow of the Congaree and Wateree Rivers, near Columbia. Planters report considerable loss of cattle by drowning.

—VIRGINIA and Maryland capitalists have bought 23,000 acres of copper lands in Northwestern Texas, and families from those States are rapidly taking possession.

—GENERAL TODLEBEN is reported to have said that ten pounds more of dynamite would have sent the whole superstructure above the cellar in the Czar's Winter Palace into the air.

—VERONA is shortly either to be deprived of its rank as a great fortress, or fortified like Metz and Strasbourg in a first-class modern style. The War Department at Rome is studying the question.

—ACCORDING to the last census, Japan has a population of 34,203,404 inhabitants. The capital of the empire, Tokio, or, as it is otherwise called, Yeddo, had at the end of 1879 a population of 1,026,771.

—THE memorial which is being addressed to Queen Victoria in support of the legalization of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, by the mayors and ex-mayors of boroughs, has just been signed by the Lord Mayor of London.

—ACCORDING to the Academy, the German excavations at Pergamos have come to an end, the Turkish firman granted for the purpose having expired. The last discoveries are statues of Zeus and Augustus, found near the Temple of Augustus, which appears to date from the time of Tiberius.

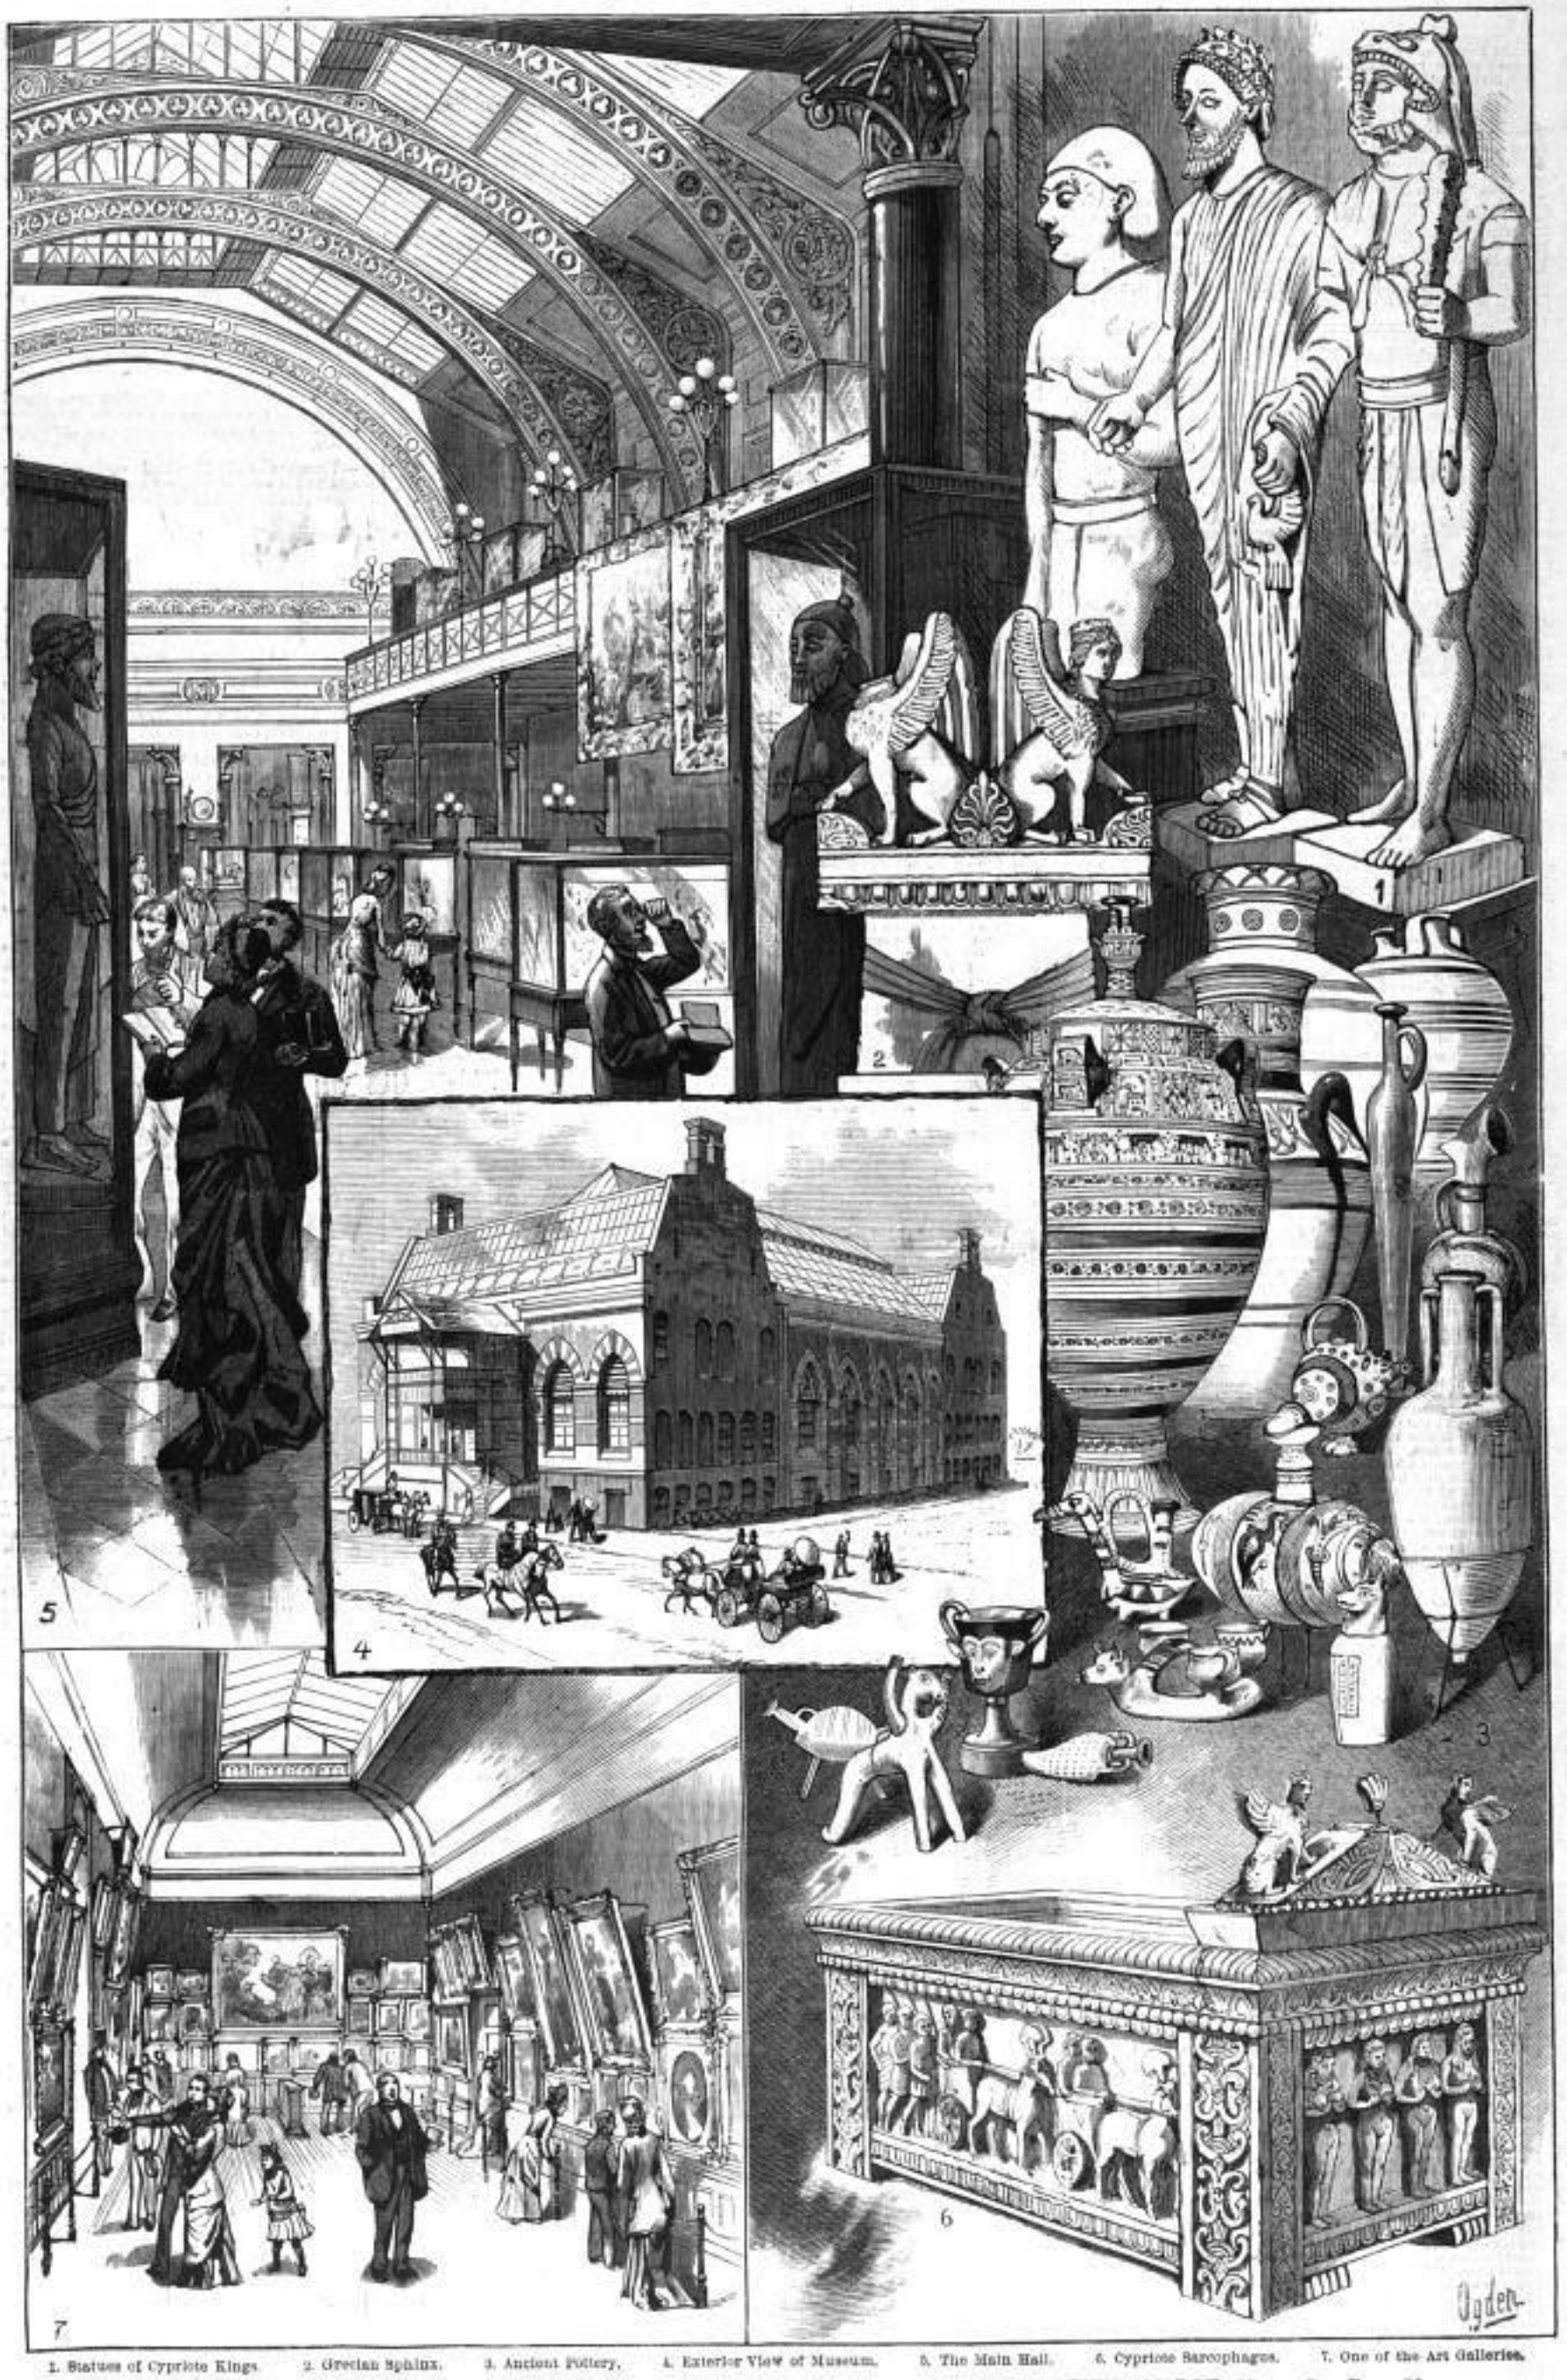
—AN international exhibition of jewelry will be held at Gröning, Holland, in the latter part of July, 1880. The most interesting feature of the display will probably be a collection of tools employed in the manufacture of jewels and watches during the last three centuries. The prizes awarded will consist of gold, silver and brass medals.

—THERE is some talk of constructing on the Place du Carrousel, at Paris, a vast monument illustrating the history of past republican governments. The four angles of the future monument will be occupied by colossal equestrian statues of four illustrious generals of the First Republic—Kléber, Hoche, Marceau and a fourth who has not yet been chosen.

—THERE are in the Swiss Alps about twenty cabins or refuges, built at the expense of the Alpine Club, to facilitate the ascension of high peaks. The "Uto" section of Zurich has decided to build a hut of this kind on the Schlossberg, in the Canton of Uri, and is about to take the necessary steps to obtain permission from the Communal Council of Attinghausen to carry out its plans.

—THE trustees of the Peabody fund have determined to withdraw aid from the schools of the South, as a rule, and to devote the interest of the fund to the better education of teachers. In Southern Carolina as much of the fund as is available will be employed in defraying the expenses of teachers' institutes throughout the State, in charge of the Superintendent of Education.

—IN the Fjord of Utsire, on the west coast of Norway, something strange like a large box lately appeared floating about. Some fishermen managed to get hold of it and towed it to shore, when they discovered that it was a damaged railway carriage, without either wheels or windows. On one of the doors the words "Edinburgh" —"Glasgow" were visible, and inside was a bag marked "P. B.," and it is supposed that it may be a carriage of the train which fell into the Tay.

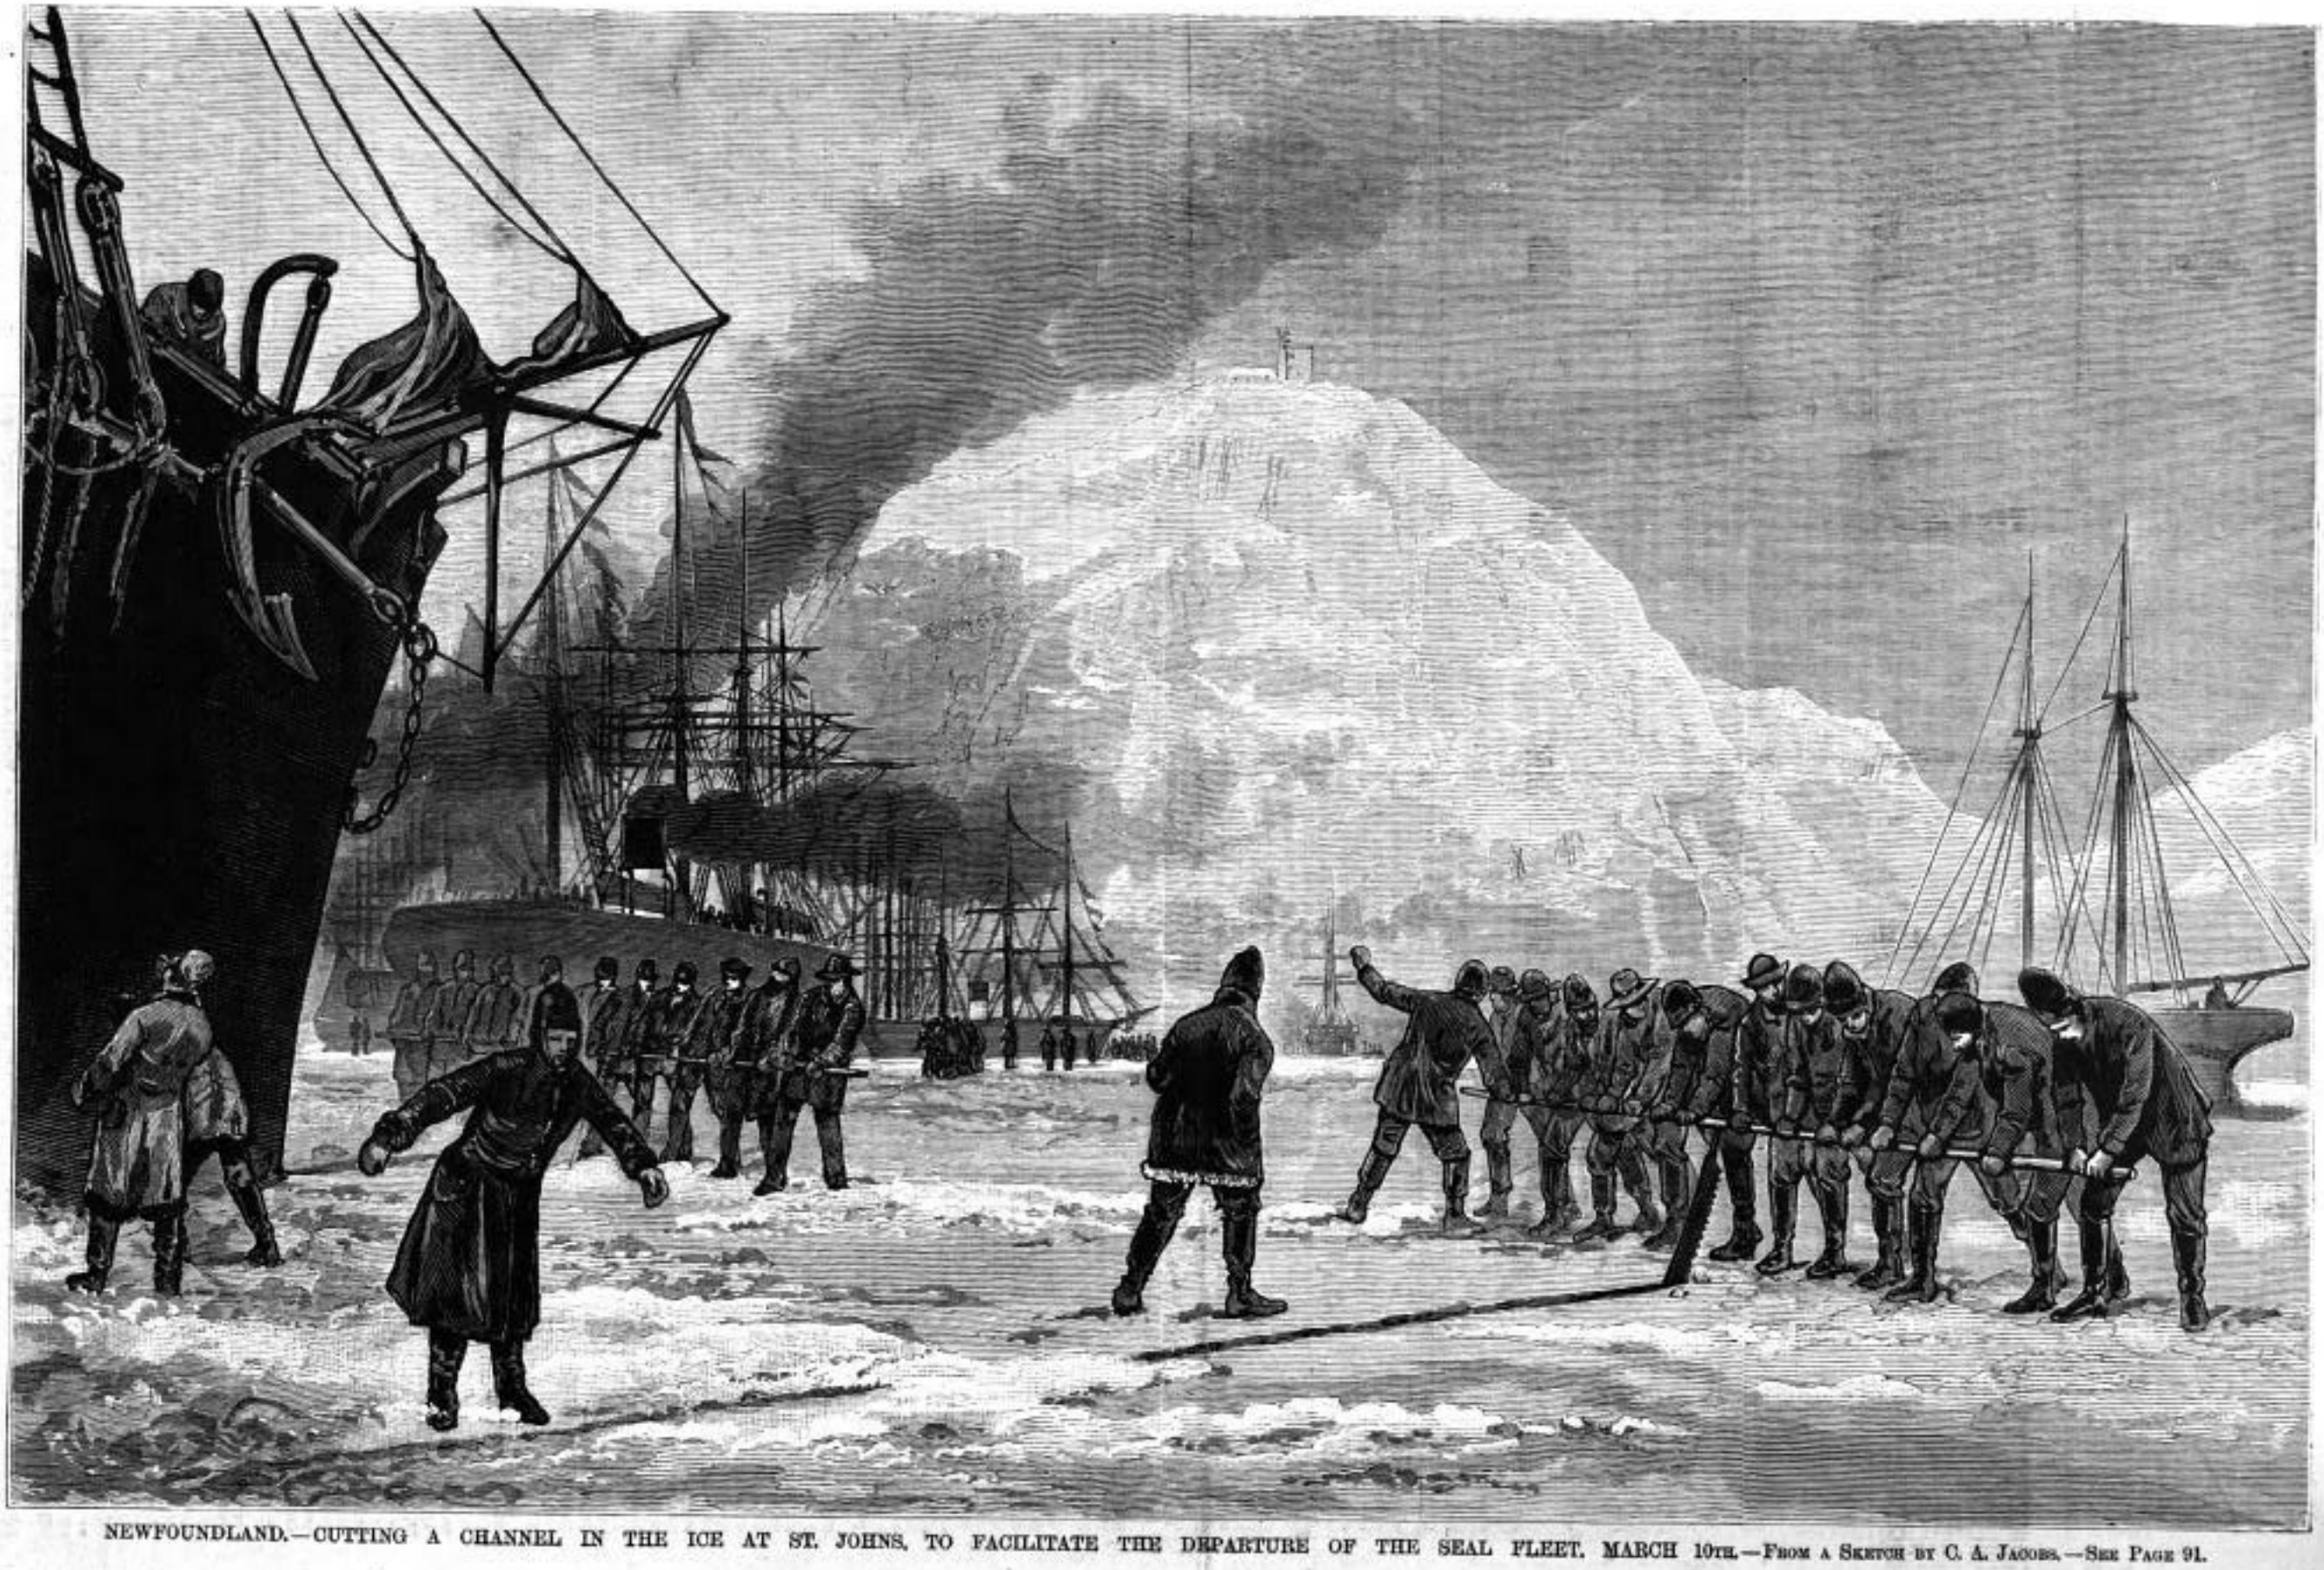


—THE proposed new Territory of Pembina, to be composed of the northern part of Dakota, has from forty to fifty thousand people more than any of the Territories had in 1870, except New Mexico and Utah, and four times as many as several of them had at that time. Twenty thousand of these came in 1879, with a prospect of a much larger immigration in 1880, this section having become famous for its large wheat farms and the superior quality of its wheat.

—THE birthplace of Abraham, the Biblical Ur in Chaldea, now called Urfa, was almost entirely destroyed by fire some weeks since. Abraham's house, "Bet Cheili Allah," or the "House of God's Friend," is still in existence, and is yearly visited by numbers of pilgrims as a place of special sanctity, so as the conflagration spread most of the inhabitants fled to the patriarch's dwelling, confident that the flames would respect so holy a relic. Happily, though the fire raged close by, the house remained untouched.

—THE brothers Forrest, during their recent expedition across the Australian continent, from Perth to Port Darwin, met with a race of blacks who are said never to have seen or even heard of white men before. They are described as fine, big, well built men, but cannibals. No women were seen by the travelers, though several parties of the same tribe of natives were met by the expedition. The men adopt an ingenious mode of fishing in the rivers, which teem with fish. They build a series of dams across the stream, leaving a gap in each, at which one native stations himself with a net made of grass, and catches the fish as, frightened from the pools by the other natives throwing in stones, etc., they try to escape. The natives did not attempt to molest the travelers.

—FIVE Kabyle chiefs, representing the inhabitants of a portion of the coast of Morocco, have lately arrived at Malaga to petition the Governor of Granada and the Spanish Government to undertake the protectorate of the districts from which they come. Strong hopes are expressed by the Spanish press that the authorities will accede to the request. The annexations lately made by Germany, it is urged, beginning with that of the Danish Duchies and ending with that of the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine; the annexations made by Italy from Sicily to the Papal States, by England from India to Cyprus, and the occupation of Bosnia by Austria were all the results of more or less costly wars, but now Spain is freely offered a territory with some forty-five miles of seaboard extending thirty miles inland, and inhabited by 15,000 men, women and children.



Digitized by Google

1. Statues of Cypriote Kings. 2. Grecian Sphinx. 3. Ancient Pottery. 4. Exterior View of Museum. 5. The Main Hall. 6. Cypriote Sarcophagus. 7. One of the Art Galleries.

NEW YORK CITY.—ATTRACTIONS IN THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART, OPENED MARCH 30TH.—SEE PAGE 86.

Digitized by Google

NEWFOUNDLAND.—CUTTING A CHANNEL IN THE ICE AT ST. JOHNS, TO FACILITATE THE DEPARTURE OF THE SEAL FLEET, MARCH 10TH.—FROM A SKETCH BY C. A. JACOBS.—SEE PAGE 91.

Digitized by Google

FOUR PAINTERS.

I.—GÉROME.

PICTORIAL majesty, at your command,
Shows all its powers and leaves no realm untried,
While Drama, taking History by the hand,
Bows to your pencil with allegiant pride.

We feel what splendid eminence you have trod
When seeing the phantom Crosses darkly fall
On Calvary, or dead Cæsar, like a god,
Flung prostrate in the senatorial hall!

II.—MEISSONIER.

Watching your arduous work, we vainly guess
What miracle could create, as potent fact,
Such height in brevity, width in narrowness,
And liberal vigor wed with cunning tact!

Your intricate patience, that no toils can crush,
The more we contemplate we reverence more,
Oh, Lilliput Angelo, whose wizard brush
Could paint a battle upon a bouton d'or!

III.—DAUBIGNY.

What mood of sunlight over meadowy ways
From you its happiest portraiture debars?
No candor of morning, or glad noontide blaze,
Or pale heavens wistful with the hope of stars

At will your magic mastery can awake
All subtleties of rich color, till you seize
The spirit of sound as well, and strangely make
Your folinged canvas murmur in the breeze!

IV.—CABANEL.

Those lovely forms that float through story and dream,
You lure to illume our present, till we meet
In animate beauty of unearthly gleam,
Penelope, Aprodite, Marguerite!

With palette of smiles and tears, by spells unknown,
You shape each woman or goddess to entrance,
While over each your sovereign spells have thrown
Luxurious golden vapors of romance!

EDGAR FAWCETT.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DIMITRY.

CHAPTER VI.—(CONTINUED).

IN the friendly assault that followed, Reginald soon had reason to admire Melchior's skill and to confess his own deficiencies. With an ease and a grace that were perfection itself, the latter executed all the more difficult passes, feints and movements known to fencing. So rapidly, indeed, did he at one time press Reginald to the wall with his advance, finally pinning him there, as it were, and at other times successfully parry every thrust made by the latter, standing immovable in his place as he did so, that his foil seemed more as if actuated by some human intelligence of its own than merely following the impulse given to it by its holder's arm and wrist.

"I should pity the man who should be compelled to stand before your sword, Mr. Warling," said Reginald, as he leaned against a chair. "How is it that you do not appear fatigued? As for me, my foil seems to weigh ten pounds."

"Don't suppose that I am not fatigued," returned Melchior. "Our bout lasted nearly five minutes without a rest, and that is a long time to remain with foils crossed. You must remember, too, that I am accustomed to the exercise, and, in addition, I did not exert myself as violently as you did yourself. Nevertheless, I am heartily tired, I assure you."

He threw himself into his seat as he spoke, removing the heavy wire mask, and drew a long breath of relief. Then he divested himself of the jacket and the padded gloves.

"It is these," he said, "that weary me more than the exercise."

"What do you think of me as a swordsman?" asked Reginald, doffing in his turn his fencing gear. "Has the time I have devoted to lessons been well spent?"

"You are but an amateur as yet," was the reply, "and against a beginner, like yourself, I do not doubt but that you could give as well as take. But with a skillful antagonist——"

"The chances would be against me?"

"Decidedly."

"There is one thing, at least, that I can do," exclaimed Reginald, with a touch of vexation in his tone. "And that is, if I go out with Vellani, to beat down the fellow's guard and so neutralize whatever skill he may possess!"

"No," said Melchior, quietly. "That would be rash. I am afraid that you lack one of the chief prerequisites to success in an encounter of this kind. You should keep cool."

"That was the fencing-master's advice. But how the deuce can a man keep cool when he has before him the very cause of his anger, I should like to know?" said Reginald, with an odd look of perplexity on his face.

"That problem is a difficult one to solve," laughed Melchior. "Nevertheless, the fact remains, that if you allow your feelings to control you, you will lay yourself open to serious inconvenience at the hands of your antagonist."

"I acknowledge the justice of your words, Mr. Waring. When I left New York I promised Miss Waring, your sister, that I would be guided by your judgment. I am ready to follow your advice."

"Thank you for the privilege of advising you," returned Melchior. "I have received—what shall I call it?—my instructions from Manuela. She expressed the wish that I should place myself at your disposal. She said that, entertaining a deep interest in your welfare, she should be better satisfied if I would see you through this adventure as a friend."

Reginald bowed. He was silent; but his thoughts went back lovingly to Manuela.

"Under these circumstances," Melchior continued, "I propose this course: Let us proceed together to Milan. In that city I will make the necessary inquiries regarding Vellani and the Marchesa di Lupo. Then I will go to the lady as your friend, and obtain the manuscript from her."

"And Vellani—what of him?"

"You will write to Vellani a formal demand for an apology. I will make search for him and deliver the note. If he should refuse to apologize, then we will consider the question of the duel."

"The arrangements could not be better. I need only appear, then, at the proper moment?"

"Yes; only when you are needed. By-the-way, I forgot to ask you—it is not important, but still I should like to know—have you any acquaintance whatever with Vellani?"

"No. I never saw him before last week—presuming that it was he who was addressed in the café as M. Luigi Vellani, of the Italian army."

"You know him, therefore, merely from the marchesa's account of him?"

"That is all. The marchesa told me once that a cousin of hers of that name, a captain of cavalry in the army of Italy, was in New York and that she expected to return to Europe with him—although her intention, at that time, was to remain for two or three months longer in the United States. Vellani, I presume, was obliged to return sooner than he had expected, and hence her sudden departure from New York."

"To morrow," said Melchior, after a brief pause, "we will leave for Milan. What say you?"

"So be it. The sooner the better."

And then they spoke of other things—of the lost manuscript and the hidden treasure, and of life in New Mexico and on the border.

CHAPTER VII.—THE MARCHESA.

IN after days when the events detailed in this story had become memories of the past, Reginald's thoughts were wont to recur to his journey from Paris to Milan with Melchior with something of a poetic delight.

The twenty-four hours that had elapsed since he had first set eyes on his companion seemed, judged by his feelings, to have lengthened into as many weeks or months, and the subtle sense of the latter's fascination and gentleness of manner, joined as it was to that other equally subtle sense of Melchior's identification with Manuela herself, which he could not efface from his mind, influenced him strangely—much as one is influenced by the odor of a familiar perfume which recalls some past pleasure, the locality and date of which elude the memory.

Insensibly—almost without either's knowing when or how—before they had parted in the Hotel du Louvre on the preceding day, they had dropped the formalities of recent acquaintance and had reached the freedom of calling each other Reginald and Melchior. Insensibly, too, the more masculine nature of Reginald had betrayed him into a little self assertion which Melchior seemed tacitly to admit. The difference between them in years was great enough to justify the former in regarding his new friend's youth and boyish appearance with a certain feeling of superiority which, however, did not impair the respect entertained for his intelligence and for those accomplishments in which he himself was deficient.

As for Melchior, with his glorious eyes, his deep olive complexion and velvety softness of skin, under which, with the varying phases of his different moods the warm blood burned and mantled; with the beauty more feminine than manly of his features, on which no care had left a line, and which showed in their mobility of expression at one moment the pathos, at another the enthusiasm, of a frank and generous spirit; his were a face and form on which men and women alike looked admiringly.

The morning train from Lyons that left Paris the day subsequent to Reginald's meeting with Melchior, bore the two friends on their way to Milan.

The country through which they passed was fresh with the verdure of early Summer. Many a quaint old town and village and many a delightful grouping of vineyards, with long vistas of poplar and box-trees, together with transitory glimpses of square, brick mansions, their parapet walls adorned with vases filled with flowers, met their gaze as they swept swiftly through the region that lies between Paris and Lyons. The ancient provinces of Champagne, Burgundy and Dauphiny seemed to come out in their brightest apparel of green, and the vine-clad slopes presented charming landscapes to the eye. Here and there the pictures of rural repose were varied with clumps of oaks, chestnut and other forest trees, and occasionally a château of the middle ages, its prison-like appearance suggestive of robber bands and the romance of the nursery, with its little surrounding group of thatched houses, became visible on some eminence for a minute and then vanished.

At Lyons, where they arrived in the evening, they determined to continue their journey without pausing, and the early sun of morning was gilding the tops of the Alps and the red-tiled roofs of Turin, and throwing long shadows from the ancient trees in the environs of that city, when they entered the railway station of the former capital of Sardinia.

"If you do not feel fatigued, Melchior, we have nothing to detain us here," said Reginald. "Turin has its attractions, but Milan has greater claims on our attention at this moment. In four hours at most," he continued, consulting his watch, "we shall be there."

"I am as fresh as when I left Paris," replied Melchior. "Let us keep on to Milan."

The comparatively short run from Turin to Milan was speedily made, and, soon after their arrival, Reginald and Melchior had secured their respective apartments at the Hotel Cavour.

In an hour's time they again met in the sitting-room of the hotel, after they had changed their clothing, dusty with travel, for more suitable apparel.

"The first thing to be done," said Melchior, "is to discover the residence of the marchesa. Let me recommend you to stroll about the city and amuse yourself until I return. As for myself, I will begin the search at once, and will report the result. To-morrow will be time enough to look for Mr. Vellani."

"How do you expect to find the marchesa?"

"I must trust to the chances. The chief of the city police may be able to tell me."

Reginald smiled.

"An odd intelligence-office in which to obtain tidings of a woman of rank like the Marchesa di Lupo!" he exclaimed.

"True," said Melchior; "but in these Continental cities the police know everything and everybody. It would not be surprising if even this conversation should come to the ears of the sbirri before the close of the day."

Melchior lost no time in applying to the chief of police for the desired information, nor was he disappointed in the result of his inquiries. His success was due, however, not so much to any hidden knowledge of the marchesa's place of residence that had come to the chief in the course of his official duties, as to the accidental fact that the latter was personally acquainted with her as the widow of the Marquis di Lupo, who had been his friend.

With the directions furnished by the chief, Melchior engaged a carriage and proceeded to the villa, in the suburbs, where dwelt the marchesa. The villa was a large building, stuccoed and painted, situated in the centre of a garden, above the high wall of which was visible a mass of luxuriant foliage. The top of the wall was overgrown with ivy, and the leaves rustled plaintively in the breeze. Two rows of poplars lined the path from the gate to the archway that led to the courtyard.

As Melchior passed through the archway he perceived, standing at a door, a woman who seemed, judging by her appearance, to be one of the household servants.

"Does the Marchesa di Lupo live here?" he asked, speaking in Italian.

"Yes. Does the signor wish to see the marchesa?"

"Tell Madame di Lupo that a gentleman desires the favor of an interview with her."

He handed the servant his card as he spoke, and with it she went into the house. A minute later she returned.

"Will the signor walk up stairs?" she said. "The signora will see him presently."

The woman preceded him up a stone stairway and ushered him into the sala, where she left him.

In a little while the rustle of a dress in the corridor announced the coming of the marchesa. She entered, a woman of about twenty-five, handsome, beautifully proportioned, with dark hair and large, indolent black eyes.

"Permit me to apologize for this intrusion before I mention the purpose of my visit," said Melchior, bowing. "My name is Melchior Waring, and I am from America."

The marchesa dropped lazily into a chair, and, motioning him to a seat with an easy gesture, inclined her head slightly and sat in an attitude of expectancy.

"A friend of mine, Mr. Reginald Grey——" he began, when she interrupted him.

"Ah, the dear Signor Grey—and how is he?" she asked, with a languid smile.

A shadowy look of displeasure came for an instant into his face, but it passed away so rapidly that the marchesa did not perceive it.

"Mr. Grey is in excellent health," he answered. "I was about to ask you, in his name, to return the manuscript which he lent you in New York a few weeks ago, and which, by mistake, you brought away with you when you left that city."

"A manuscript, signor? What manuscript? I do not remember," she replied, raising her eyebrows slightly.

"You will pardon me if I recall to your memory the letter you wrote to Mr. Grey from the steamer Ville de Paris, apologizing for having packed up a certain manuscript in one of your trunks."

"Oh, you mean the old paper that he gave me?"

"Gave you?" said Melchior, incredulously.

"Yes. Did he not make me a present of that manuscript?" she asked, with affected surprise.

"Not as I understand it, signora. He has particularly requested me to call for it."

"Perhaps," she said, smiling, "if he were here he would understand it better. I may be mistaken, but my impression is that you are at fault, sir."

"Mr. Grey is nearer to this place than you imagine. In fact, he is at this moment in Milan."

"In Milan!" she exclaimed, with more animation in her manner than she had yet exhibited, and flushing slightly. "Why, then, does he not come to see me?"

"Really, madam, I cannot answer your question. Perhaps his affairs may detain him."

"What affairs? He never spoke of coming to Milan when I saw him in New York."

"Whatever may be the business that brings him to Milan, marchesa, it is enough to know that he is here. It will surprise him, I assure you, to be told that he gave you the manuscript which, he has informed me, was only left in your hands for examination. I hope, therefore, that you will return the manuscript without any further explanation."

"It is no longer in my possession."

"May I ask what has become of it?" said Melchior, in a tone of surprise.

"Certainly," replied the marchesa. "Believing that the Signor Grey had presented me with that old paper, I gave it to a friend—a gentleman."

"Signor Luigi Vellani?" said Melchior, with the slightest possible touch of a sneer in his voice.

"It is as you say, Signor Waring," replied the marchesa, with provoking coolness. "You are a prophet, sir."

"No, madam, I am no prophet. You should know that this gentleman—your cousin, I believe?"

"Yes."

"He wrote to my friend, Mr. Grey, a very singular letter—a letter that would have been foolish if it had not been insulting."

"And then?" asked the marchesa, drawing down her eyelids until the pupils of her eyes shone through them like those of a cat.

"I am aware of this letter having been written, and for this reason I supposed that he is the person to whom you have given Mr. Grey's manuscript. I need scarcely ask you if I am right?"

"You are quite right, sir."

"Then I must obtain the manuscript from Mr. Vellani."

"You are at liberty to ask him for it. It is for him to decide whether he will surrender it. After all, it is a small matter. An old piece of paper that the moths have eaten away—it is not worth that!" and she waved her hand contemptuously.

"I am sorry to be compelled to disagree with you, madam," said Melchior, sarcastically. "Evidently both you and Mr. Vellani attach great importance to it. Otherwise you would not persist in claiming it as your own in spite of your knowledge to the contrary; nor would you have given it to Mr. Vellani, who, perhaps, may have some idea of attempting to recover the treasure which its writer mentions. You have committed a dishonest action, and I have no hesitation in telling you so!"

With a flushed face the marchesa rose from her chair.

"This is unpardonable!" she exclaimed. "You shall repent it, Signor Waring."

"We shall see," observed Melchior, also rising from his seat.

"Signor Vellani is my friend and relative," continued the marchesa. "He shall hear of this interview before night, and he will compel you to apologize."

"Signor Vellani would find it more to his interest, perhaps, to return the manuscript to its owner without delay. As to his compelling me to apologize, he will waste his time I assure you."

"He must bring me an apology!" exclaimed the marchesa, angrily, "for, until he does so, I shall forbid him my presence. You shall suffer for this, sir."

"In what way, allow me to ask?"

"Luigi Vellani will kill you!" she cried, passionately.

"How? By assassinating me?"

"No. He will kill you honorably," was the cool reply.

"In a duel, you mean?"

"Yes."

"You purpose, then, to send him in pursuit of me with this charitable intention. Very well. In order that there may be no mistake, I must trouble you to direct Mr. Vellani to the Hotel Cavour, to Mr. Waring, room 40. Can you remember? Or, perhaps, I should write it down for you. I should not like to disappoint him—or you either, marchesa."

As he spoke he took from his pocket a small memorandum book and wrote the address on a leaf, which he handed to the marchesa.

She received it without removing her eyes from his face, crushed the paper carelessly, and as if indifferent to its contents, in her hand, and said:

"I shall remember."

"I believe that is sufficient to enable him to communicate with me."

"You will doubtless find it so, signor."

Melchior answered with a cold bow and moved toward the door. As he passed out into the corridor he glanced at the marchesa. She was still standing where he had left her with her eyes fixed on him; but there was a trace of admiration struggling with the anger expressed in her countenance as she looked.

"The marchesa is relenting," he said to himself, while a curious and meaning smile played about his lips.

CHAPTER VIII.—"LA DONNA È MOBILE!"

THE first question asked by Reginald when, entering the sitting-room of the hotel an hour after Melchior's return from his unsuccessful mission, he found the latter awaiting him, was concerning the marchesa.

"I have had the pleasure of an interview with the fair lady," was the reply. "But when I mentioned the subject of the manuscript and requested its return in your name, she, at first, professed ignorance of it and then stoutly asserted that you had given it to her."

"Impossible!"

"So possible is it that she has even gone so far as to make Vellani a present of it—why, I cannot say, unless it be that that gentleman has some intention of entering on a Utopian search for the treasure. But that is not all that I have to tell you. Before the interview was over we were at daggers' points—to speak metaphorically."

"I do not quite understand you. Pray explain yourself and tell me what happened. I am sorry, indeed, that anything unpleasant should have occurred between you and the Marchesa di Lupo."

Melchior began the recital of what had happened since they had parted that morning, commencing with his visit to the office of the chief of police and ending with his departure from the marchesa's residence.

Digitized by Google

"Do you think," said Reginald, with a grave expression in his face, "that the marchesa will be so indiscreet as to excite Vellani against you?"

"Who can tell? She seemed very much in earnest when she spoke of it. But let us wait until to-morrow. If Vellani should present himself—or should send a friend—of course, I should be compelled to accommodate him. As to apologizing to the lady for any words I may have spoken which displeased her, that is out of the question."

"But what becomes of my affair with him?"

"You haven't any affair with him yet, and if he should seek a quarrel with me, I shall have the priority. But to-morrow, doubtless, will tell the story. Until then, let us cease to concern ourselves about the matter."

The morning of the next day was passed by the friends in expectation of the receipt of some intimation that the marchesa had carried out her threat and had engaged Vellani to call Melchior to account.

After informing the proprietor of the hotel where to find them in case a messenger should come for Melchior, they repaired to the sitting-room and sat there, awaiting developments and conversing on the probabilities.

A half-hour later the proprietor joined them. He held a letter in his hand.

"A letter for Signor Melchior Waring," he said.

"Who brought it, signor?" asked Melchior.

"A woman, who said it was to be delivered at once."

"Thanks. Is the messenger waiting?"

"No, signor. She went away immediately on delivering the note to the attendant," replied the proprietor, as he withdrew.

"This rather alters the case," said Melchior, as he scanned the address. "The marchesa seems to have thought better of her purpose, and instead of sending Vellani in search of me, she has written to me herself."

"Is that note from her?"

"Yes. The handwriting is the same as that of the letter she addressed to you in New York, and here," he added, opening the letter and reading it, "is what she has written. Allow me to translate it from the Italian for your benefit."

"MILAN, June 25*th*, 187—

"The Marchesa di Lupo regrets that any cause of disagreement should have arisen between her and Signor Melchior Waring during their interview yesterday, and in order that future trouble may be avoided, and as an evidence of her forgiveness of his hasty words, she requests his presence at her residence at twelve o'clock, noon, to-day."

"What can be the meaning of this sudden change?" said Reginald, wonderingly.

Melchior smiled the peculiar smile his face had worn when he had parted from the marchesa the day before.

"Who can tell?" he replied. "Women are strangely contradictory at times, and the Marchesa di Lupo is no exception to her sex probably. Some whim has seized her, it may be, and she is disposed to be friendly to-day, whereas yesterday she was at variance."

"Then we need not expect Mr. Vellani's visit?"

"That remains to be seen. Wait until I shall have had the interview with the marchesa."

"You intend to respond to the invitation, then?"

"Of course. I have an idea that she means to give me the manuscript. Where shall you be at two o'clock?"

"I shall remain here until you return?"

"Very well. I have half an hour before me in which to reach the villa. Au revoir."

From the hotel Melchior went to the nearest carriage stand and engaged a vehicle, in which he was driven to his destination.

The Marchesa di Lupo greeted him on her entrance into the salu with a demeanor that was in marked contrast to her manner on the previous day.

"I was afraid, Signor Waring," she said, with a gracious smile, "that you would attach more importance than they deserved to my words of yesterday, and that you would be so ungallant as to fail to respond to my invitation of this morning."

"The importance I attached to your words, signora," he replied, "was merely the importance you gave to them yourself. I certainly prefer that our brief and temporary acquaintance should be an agreeable one."

"Why do you say 'temporary acquaintance'? Ah, I perceive that, notwithstanding the note I wrote you this morning, you still are displeased with me."

"You are in error, signora. But our acquaintance necessarily must be brief, inasmuch as I shall leave Milan in a very few days."

"Have you nothing to say for yourself?" she asked, after a short pause. "Have you no regret to express for what you said yesterday? What was it? That I was dishonest—was it not?"

"I should prefer to believe that since our interview yesterday you have remembered more distinctly the circumstances under which you received the manuscript from Mr. Grey," observed Melchior, with a bow. "If I misjudged you, I am ready to apologize."

She inclined her head as if in acceptance of the implied apology.

"If I say to you, then, let us be friends and let us forget the events of yesterday, will you agree?" she asked, with a glance, the meaning of which it was impossible for Melchior to misunderstand.

"But at the same time," he replied, "I must not forget that I have a duty to perform, and that duty, as you know, is to obtain the manuscript."

She held in her hand a fan with which up to this moment she had been fanning herself languidly, but as he uttered these words she closed the fan with a violent movement and waving, as if waving away from her the subject of the manuscript, replied:

"That matter shall be settled satisfactorily. I was not thinking of the manuscript. Please do not speak of it again. It tires me."

She reclined in her chair, and as the fan, which she had opened again, resumed its slow movement, she fixed her large, lustrous eyes on Melchior's face with an expression of weariness.

Perhaps he understood the marchesa; perhaps he did not. At all events he did not seem inclined to respond to her wish to dismiss the manuscript from among the topics of conversation.

"I am sorry," he observed, "that the subject fatigues you, for, to speak truly, I came here this morning believing that you had obtained the manuscript from Mr. Vellani and that you would return it to me."

"Will you be satisfied if I promise to send it to your hotel? I must first get it from Signor Vellani."

"When will that be, signora?"

"To-night. I have written to him to bring it to me. But tell me, does Signor Grey regard that manuscript as of any value?"

"You have seen it and can judge of its importance yourself."

"Signor Vellani thinks——"

"Thinks what?" asked Melchior, as the marchesa paused abruptly.

"He thinks that if the writing were complete it might be very valuable to its possessor. That is all."

"A very wise opinion, signora."

"Does Signor Grey," she pursued, "intend to search for the treasure of which the writer speaks?"

"He may do so."

"Has he any other clews to it than those contained in the old paper?"

"Not that I am aware of."

"Then how does he expect to find the treasure?"

"By chance, perhaps."

"There is a better way to find it than by chance," she observed, significantly.

"Indeed! And what is that better way, marchesa?"

"Give up your intention to leave Milan in a day or two, and I will tell you."

Again she glanced at Melchior with a look that he could not fail to comprehend.

"Why do you wish me to remain?" he asked, as if not understanding the impulse that actuated her.

"Why? Oh, simply because it is my pleasure that you should remain."

"What would Signor Vellani say should he hear you express a desire for me to remain in Milan? Would he not be jealous?"

She shrugged her shoulders and curled her lips contemptuously.

"Where is the man," she replied, "who is not jealous? To be a man is to be jealous."

"I have no disposition to add to his jealousy, signor," said Melchior, "and, therefore——"

What more he might have said, and what the marchesa might have replied, must remain a matter of conjecture, for at this moment a quick, active step was heard in the corridor, and the latter drew back in her seat.

"Hush!" she exclaimed, placing her finger to her lips. "Here is Luigi!"

Mr. Luigi Vellani—for the marchesa's ear had not deceived her, and it was he—came down the corridor towards the salu, humming the Duke's song in "Rigoletto":

"La donna è mobile!"

As he reached the threshold of the apartment he paused, glanced swiftly and suspiciously at Melchior, and, with a stiff bow, spoke to the marchesa:

"Pardon, signora!" he said. "I was not aware that you are not alone."

The marchesa left her seat and walked to where he was still standing at the doorway. Melchior heard her utter a few sentences in suppressed tones, while an incredulous smile appeared on Vellani's face. As a lover's quarrel evidently was brewing between the two, and he had no inclination to remain and witness the outburst, he rose to go.

"Signora," he said, thinking of the manuscript, "may I request you to remember your promise."

At these words Vellani broke past the marchesa and stood before him.

"And what promise, signor—whoever you may be—do you call on the Marchesa di Lupo to remember?" he asked.

"Let the lady reply if she likes," said Melchior. "As to you, signor, I do not know you."

"My name is Vellani—Luigi Vellani, of the Italian army," replied Vellani, losing his self-control. "And when you say that you do not know me, it is I who have a right here to ask, 'Who are you?'"

"I will answer for him," exclaimed the marchesa, approaching Vellani. "Let it suffice that he is my guest for the moment at least, and, while he remains my guest, you must show him proper respect."

(To be continued.)

DEPARTURE OF THE SEAL FLEET FROM ST. JOHNS.

WEDNESDAY, March 10th, was a great day at St. Johns, Newfoundland, for it marked the departure of the seal fleet for the annual cruise. Heretofore the vessels composing the fleet were in the habit of starting on the first of the month, but as the whelping of the seals takes place about that time, the local Legislature passed an Act changing the time of departure from the first to the tenth. This provision, it is thought, will preserve the seals from extinction, a result which was threatened by the too rapid slaughter of the valuable fish before attaining their prime, which is usually reached in two weeks after their birth.

Preparatory to the start, long wide channels were cut through the ice which covered the harbor. The ice being very thick and solid, the process of cutting was performed by huge ice-saws with handles so long that scores of men could simultaneously ply them. Each sweep of these great saws was accompanied by the wild-sea choruses of the crowds of seal-hunters assembled on the ice. Every steamer and sailing-vessel of the fleet was lavishly decorated with flags.

Political Conventions Approaching.

CALLS have been issued for national and State political conventions at the times and places here mentioned:

Wednesday, April 7th.—Connecticut Republican, in New Haven; Iowa Democratic, in Burlington.

Monday, April 12th.—Louisiana Democratic, in New Orleans.

Wednesday, April 14th.—Kentucky Republican, in Louisville; Iowa Republican, in Des Moines; Missouri Republican, in Sedalia.

Thursday, April 15th.—Massachusetts Republican, in Worcester.

Tuesday, April 20th.—Texas Democratic, in Galveston.

Wednesday, April 21st.—Virginia Republican, in Staunton; Georgia Republican, in Atlanta; Oregon Republican, in Portland.

Wednesday, April 28th.—Ohio Republican, in Columbus; South Carolina Republican, in Columbia; Arkansas Republican, in Little Rock.

Wednesday, May 5th.—Tennessee Republican, in Nashville; Wisconsin Republican, in Madison; Mississippi Republican, in Jackson; North Carolina Greenback, in Greensboro.

Thursday, May 6th.—New Jersey Republican, in Trenton; New Hampshire Republican, in Concord; Maryland Republican, in Frederick; Ohio Democratic, in Columbus.

Tuesday, May 11th.—Nevada Republican, in Austin.

Wednesday, May 12th.—West Virginia Republican, in Wheeling; Michigan Republican, in Detroit; Florida Republican, in Gainesville; Wisconsin Democratic, in Madison.

Wednesday, May 19th.—Illinois Republican, in Springfield; Virginia Conservative, in Richmond.

Thursday, May 20th.—Alabama Republican, in Selma; New Jersey Democratic, in Trenton.

Wednesday, May 26th.—Kansas Democratic, in Topeka.

Tuesday, June 1st.—South Carolina Democratic, in Columbia.

Wednesday, June 2d.—Republican National, in Chicago, Ill.; Alabama Democratic, in Montgomery; Mississippi Democratic, in Jackson; Arkansas Democratic, in Little Rock.

Thursday, June 3d.—Workingmen's National Convention, in Chicago, Ill. (Kearney.)

Tuesday, June 8th.—Tennessee Democratic, in Nashville.

Wednesday, June 9th.—National Greenback Labor National, in Chicago, Ill.; Indiana Democratic, in Indianapolis.

Thursday, June 17th.—National Prohibition, in Columbus, Ohio; Indiana Republican, in Indianapolis (State officers); North Carolina Democratic, in Raleigh; Kentucky Democratic, in Lexington.

Tuesday, June 22d.—Democratic National, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Wednesday, July 7th.—North Carolina Republican, in Raleigh (State officers).

Wednesday, July 28th.—West Virginia Democratic, in Martinsburg (State officers).

Tuesday, August 10th.—Tennessee Democratic, in Nashville (candidate for Governor).

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

It is Stated that Prince Gortschoff, Russian Secretary of State, is engaged on a scheme for introducing the Gregorian Calendar into Russia.

The Specimens in the Peabody Museum at Harvard have more than doubled in number during the last four years. In a few months the South American room will be open to the public.

The "Geloa," of St. Petersburg, states that fears are entertained for the safety of Prjevalsky, the Russian explorer in Central Africa, from various reports that have come to hand concerning him.

The Low-Rhenish Antiquarian Society at Xanten are having extensive excavations made outside the Clevegate of that town, where very large Roman foundations have been discovered, dating from the Colonia Trajana.

Signor Denza, of the Moncalieri Observatory, points out the coincidence of a shock of earthquake in Lombardy and Piedmont on February 9th with the great activity of Etna the same day, and an eruption of a volcano in St. Domingo.

The Building of the Nice Observatory, established by M. Bischoffsheim, is progressing favorably. M. Perrotin, one of the astronomers of the Paris Observatory, has been appointed director, and will leave for Nice as soon as the works may require his presence in this magnificent establishment.

MM. Antoine Breguet, son of the celebrated member of the Institute, and Richet have taken the joint direction of the Revue Scientifique, the largest and most influential French scientific periodical. M. Antoine Breguet will write more specially on physics, and M. Richet on chemistry.

Native Japanese papers state that arrangements for constructing a railway between the Uzuchi coal mines and the Ishigari River in the island of Yezo are progressing, and that an agent of the Colonization Department will shortly proceed to the United States to purchase necessary material.

A Memorial is being signed in various parts of England to the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, praying that the Senate will grant to properly qualified women the right of admission to the examination for University degrees, and to the degrees conferred according to the results of such examinations.

Paris is to have a Municipal School of Horticulture; all species of plants used for ornamental purposes, in manufacture or medicine, will be carefully cultivated and preserved in a museum annexed to the school. A public course of practical botany will be given, and the pupils of the municipal schools will be taken by their teachers, on stated days, to the gardens and museum, where the nature of the plants will be explained to them.

A Few Years Ago Dr. Legoff subjected himself to an operation of transfusion of blood, in order to save the life of a wounded soldier lying in Val de Grace Hospital in Paris. The operation was successful, inasmuch as the patient escaped, but the health of the doctor declined. He went to Algiers to recover, but with no avail. We learn from an address by M. Wohl, a professor to the Lycée, on the occasion of Dr. Legoff's funeral, that he died in the beginning of February.

The Investigations and experiments following the bursting of the thirty-eight-ton Woolwich gun on the Thunderer shows that the Woolwich gun will burst explosively if fired with two charges of powder and two projectiles in the bore. They have also demonstrated that Sir William Palliser's gun will not burst under these circumstances. In ordnance manufactured on the Woolwich system, the inner tube of the gun is of steel. In the Palliser gun it is of coiled wrought iron.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

BY command of the Queen a stone cross has been erected on the spot where the Prince Imperial lost his life, in Zululand.

UNION COLLEGE has received an endowment of $10,000 from the sons of the late Asa Packer as a memorial of their father.

PRINCE FREDERICK, reputed the wealthiest Hollander, lately attained his eighty-third year. He is Grand Master of the Dutch Masons.

THEODORE MARTIN, who has just completed the life of the Prince Consort, has been knighted by the Queen, and also made Knight Commander of the Bath.

MINISTER JOHN A. KASSON has written home from Austria that he would accept the nomination for Congress from the Republicans of the Seventh District of Iowa.

THE death of her mother, at the age of ninety-one, leaves Miss Florence Nightingale an orphan. "Santa Filomela" herself is a great invalid, yet there are few busier women in the world. She seldom leaves her room, but she is never idle.

ALBERT SOWINSKI, the Polish pianist, the rival and contemporary of Liszt, Thalberg and Chopin during the reign of Louis Philippe, has just died in his seventy-fourth year. He was the son of a Polish General killed by the Russians during one of the risings in Poland.

A MAN dressed as a Dervish stabbed the Grand Shereef of Mecca on the 14th instant as he was entering Djedda, the seaport of Mecca. The Shereef died on the 21st from his injuries. Sir Austen Layard has received a telegram stating that the assassin is a Persian fanatic.

EX-GOVERNOR JOSEPH E. BROWN has presented to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, Ky., $50,000 for the endowment of a Professorship. The whole amount has been paid, and is now in the hands of the Rev. James P. Boyce, D.D., Chairman of the Faculty.

THE Duke of Newcastle, the Marquis of Anglesey and the Earl of Fife, who died in 1879, were the three most heavily insured men in England, the companies being hit for $6,250,000, while two other noblemen who have just died had between them $1,250,000 in the same companies.

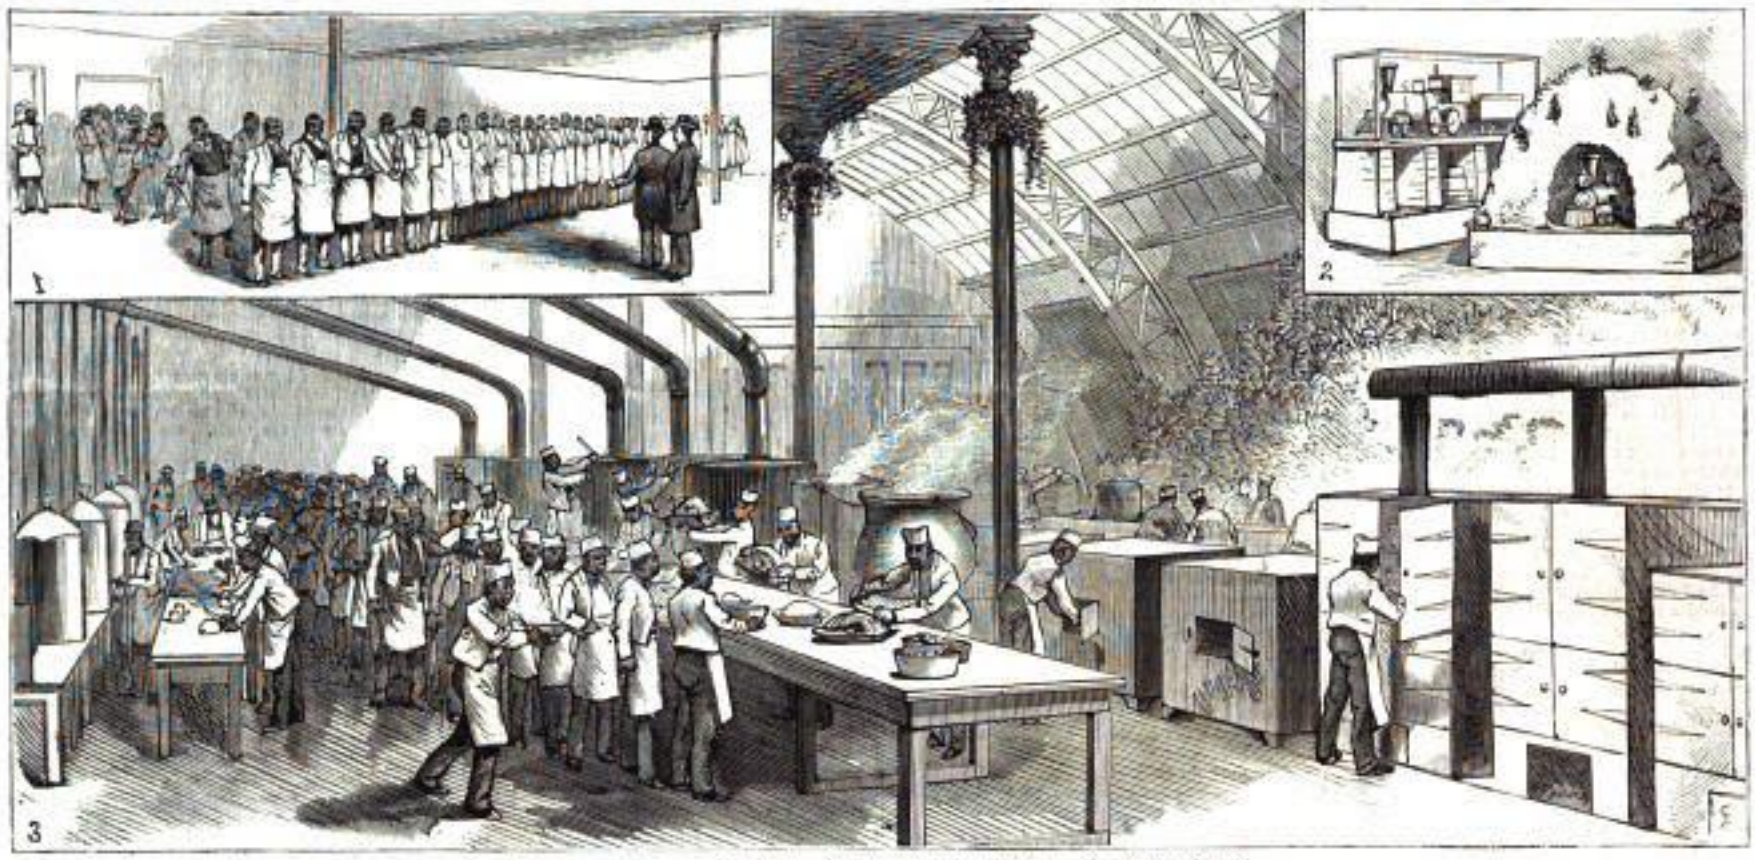
GENERAL H. E. PAYNE, Commissioner of Patents, has tendered his resignation, to take effect as soon as the unfinished business of his office can be disposed of. He will resume the practice of law with his former partners. Mr. Paine says the reason of his resigning is because the position is unremunerative.

MR. DARWIN has been offered the honorary membership of the Birmingham (England) Philosophical Association on the occasion of his seventy-first birthday, and the incident is much noted because the resolution making the offer is proposed and seconded by clergymen through the Protestant bishop of Manchester.

ALTHOUGH past sixty, Queen Louise Wilhelmine Frederikka Caroline Augusta Julia of Denmark is remarkably youthful in appearance and has been sometimes taken for the elder sister of her daughters, Alexandra and Thyra. The Queen is a devoted mother. She is an admirable pianist and is fond of music to enthusiasm.

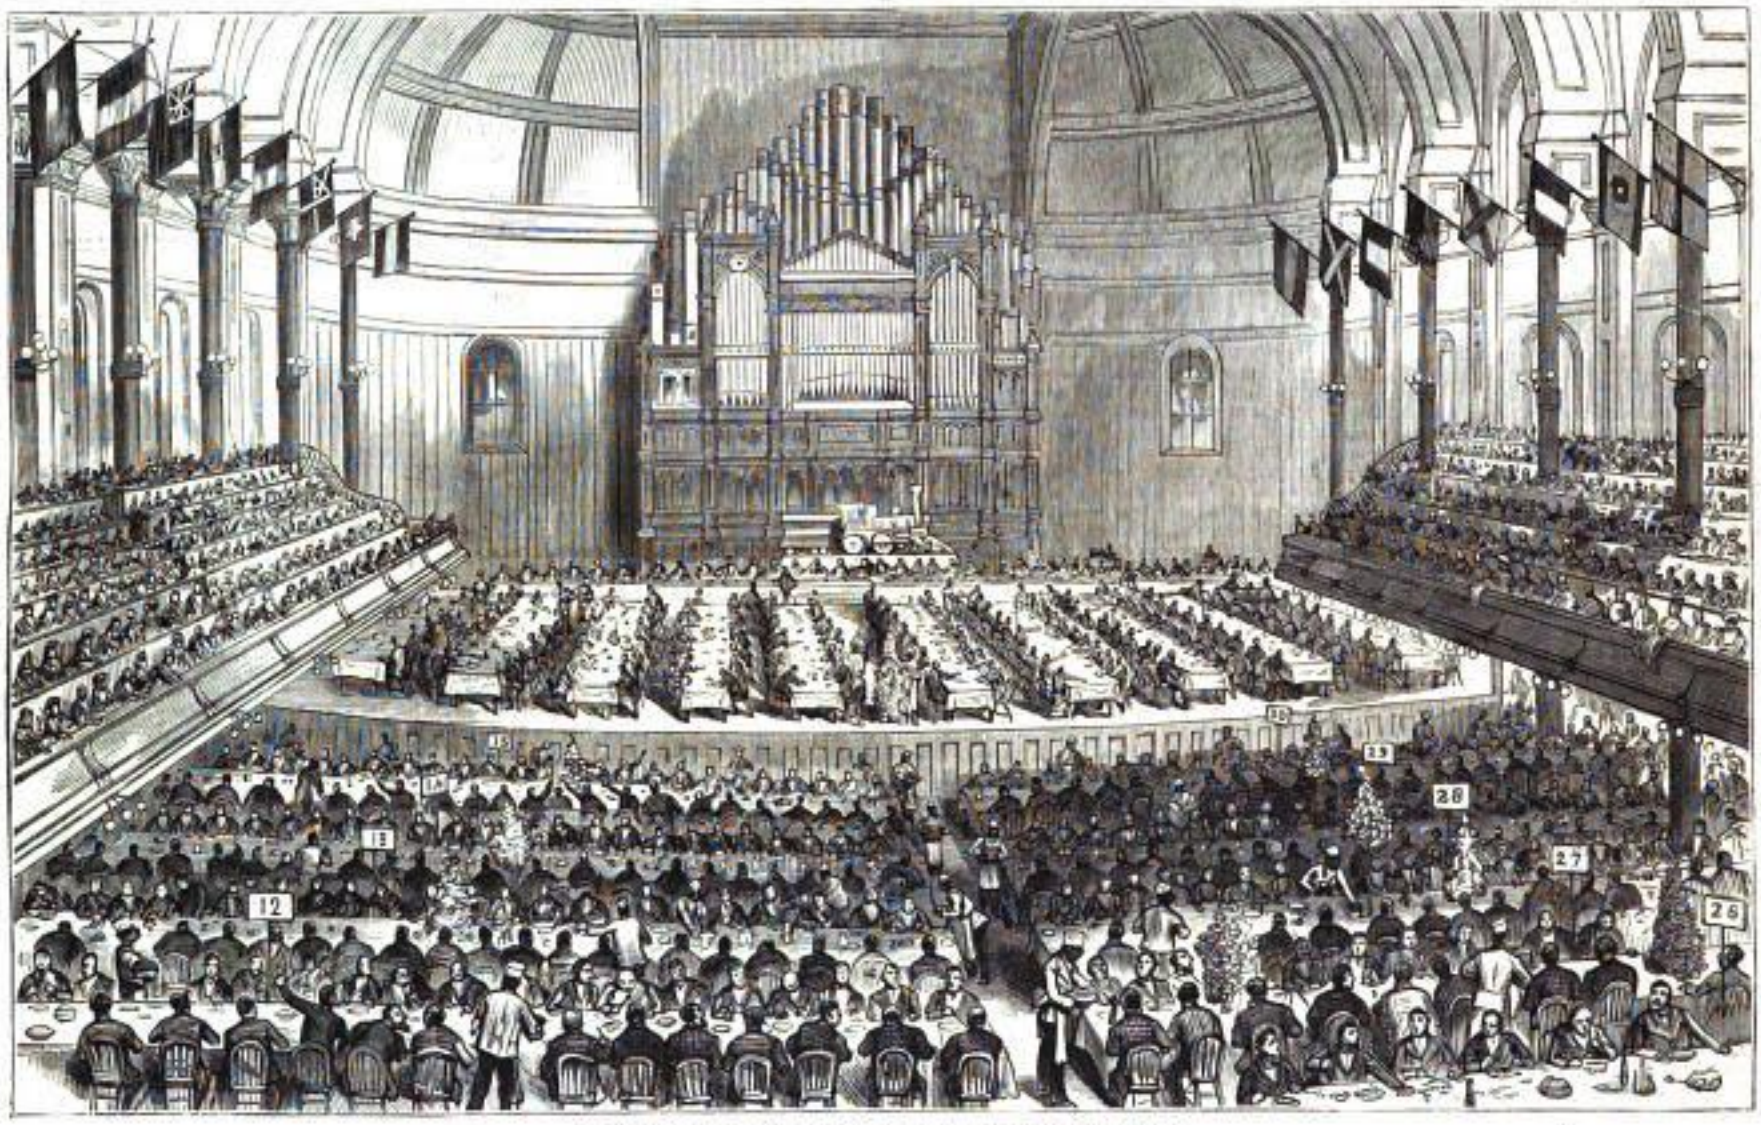
WE take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt, but too late to be used, of a remarkably clear specimen of photographic art from Leon Van Loo, of Cincinnati. It shows the platform and auditorium of the Music Hall after they had been prepared for the great railroad banquet. Every chair, knife, fork, napkin, salt-cellar and other accessories of the many tables, were distinctly taken on a large plate. The photograph is a most creditable piece of work.

A CHECK drawn by the Treasury Department to the order of William H. Vanderbilt for $310,801, being three months' interest on $31,050,920 of United States four per cent. bonds, was paid through the New York Clearing House on March 25th. This represents an income of $3,450 per day, of $142 75 per hour, of nearly $2.40 per minute, and of nearly four cents per second, sleeping and waking. It is, besides, only one of several of Mr. Vanderbilt's sources of revenue.



THE will of the late General William Badger Tibbits, of Troy, just admitted to probate, bequeaths $100,000 for the erection and maintenance of a home for indigent soldiers of the armies of the United States of the war of the rebellion, and for indigent old men and women, who may be admitted if the home is not filled with soldiers. The gift is conditional upon the raising of $50,000 additional within five years, and the erection of the home, to be known as the Tibbits Home, in or near Tibbits Avenue, in the City of Troy.

THE eighty-third birthday of the Emperor William was celebrated on March 22d. The weather was fine, and private houses and all the public buildings were decorated with flags. The first to offer their congratulations to the Emperor were the Generals of the army, headed by the Prince Imperial and other German Princes. These were followed by the members of the Bundesrath and Prince Bismarck. The Emperor looked hale and well. At night the Emperor gave a soirée at which 700 guests were present. The streets were crowded with people till a late hour.

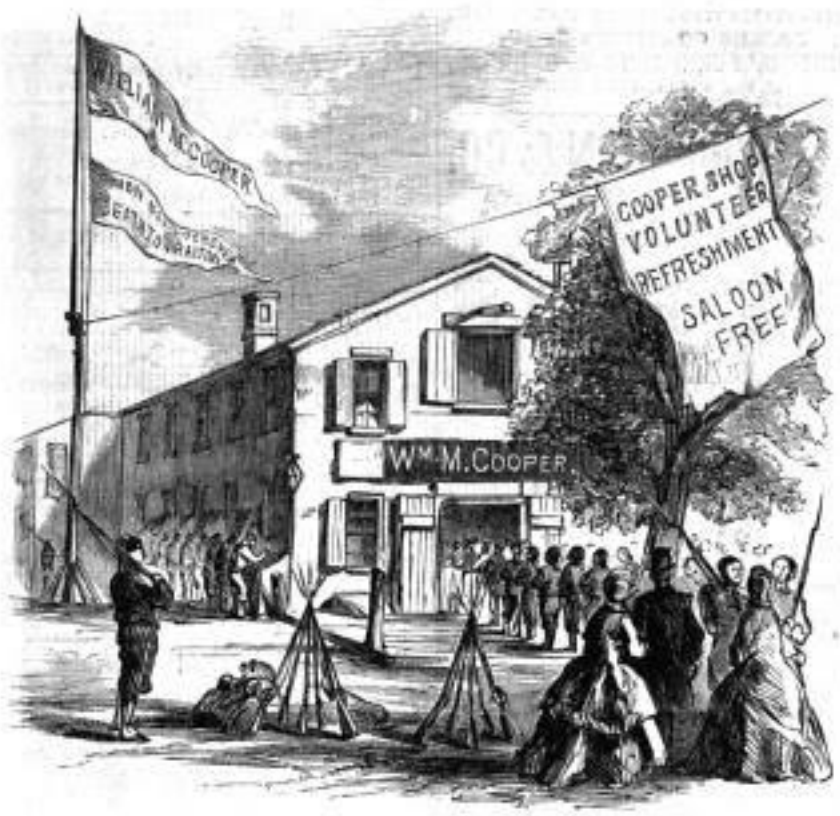


A FAIR young bride has been selected for the future Emperor-King of Austria-Hungary by his parents, and the wedding will take place shortly after the completion of the newly betrothed Princess's sixteenth year. Stephanie Clotilde, Princess of the Belgians and Duchess of Saxony, the second daughter of King Leopold II., and Queen Marie Henriette, was born on the 21st of May, 1864, and is, therefore, nearly six years younger than than her intended husband, the Crown Prince Rudolph of Hapsburg-Lorraine, who will celebrate his twenty-second birthday August 21st. The Archduke and his fiancée are third cousins.

JAMES BURRILL ANGELL, President of the University of Michigan, who has been named by the President for the post of Minister to China, was born in the town of Scituate, R. I., on the 7th of January, 1829. In September, 1845, he entered Brown University, and four years later was graduated with the highest honors of his class. In 1851 he went to Europe, where he spent two years in study and travel. He returned to accept the Chair of Modern Languages and Literature in the university of which he was a graduate, a position which he filled successfully for seven years. The Hon. Henry B. Anthony having been elected United States Senator, offered him the entire editorial charge of his newspaper, the Providence Daily Journal, and in 1860 Professor Angell assumed the duties of editor of that paper. The offer of the Presidency of the University of Vermont was too tempting to be resisted, and, after six years of journalistic labor, he returned once more to academic life. The fortunes of the college were at a low ebb when he assumed its control, but under his skillful management it soon took high rank among the educational institutions of the country. He declined the Presidency of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, when it was offered him in 1869, but subsequently accepted it in 1871.

Digitized by Google

1. MARSHALING THE WAITERS. 2. A SPECIMEN CAKE. 3. THE KITCHEN.



THE GREAT BANQUET IN THE AUDITORIUM OF THE MUSIC-HALL.

THE WINE-CELLAR.

OHIO.—GRAND CELEBRATION IN CINCINNATI OF THE COMPLETION OF THE CINCINNATI SOUTHERN RAILROAD.
FROM SKETCHES BY E. JUMP.

Digitized by Google

EXTERIOR OF THE COOPER SHOP REFRESHMENT SALOON, PHILADELPHIA.

HELPING THE FAMILY OF A PATRIOT.

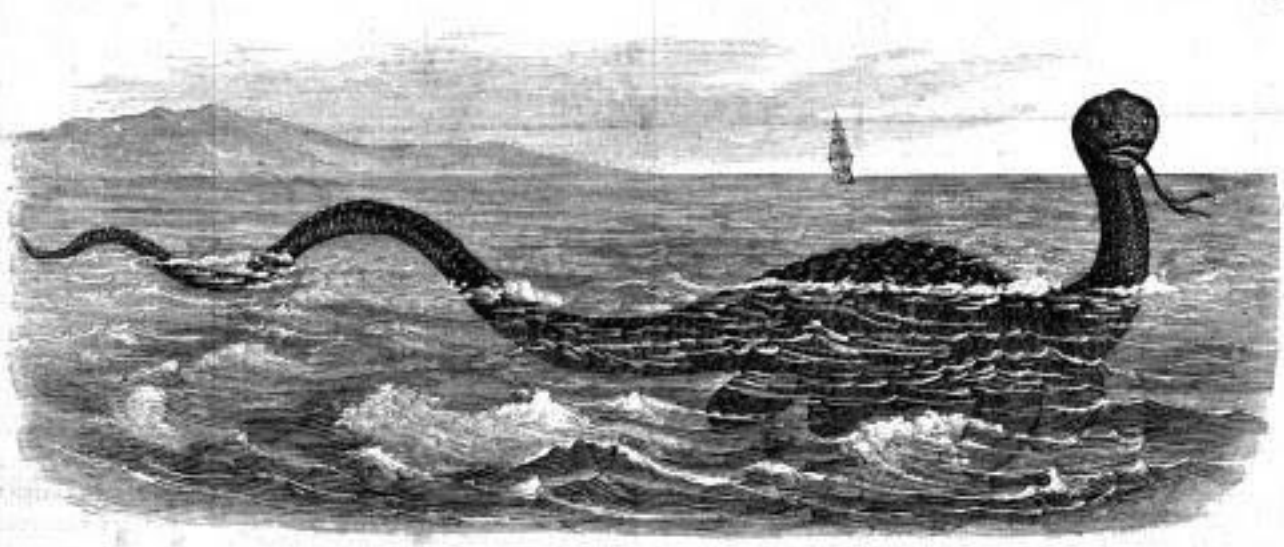
VETERANS of the Union Army during our civil war, no less than the general public, will remember that troops from the East, bound for Washington, in passing through Philadelphia, were usually landed at Washington Street wharf, on the Delaware River, proceeding thence to the trains running South. About one block from this landing, Mr. William M. Cooper, then a wealthy man, had an unpretentious two-story frame and brick building, which the owner made historic by the uses to which his patriotism devoted it. One morning, as Mr. Cooper was on his way to his place of business, he met a Massachusetts regiment, which had just arrived, endeavoring to make itself comfortable in the street. The men were tired and hungry. They had no food with them, and the neighbors had opened their doors and were doing all in their humble power to alleviate the temporary needs of the soldiers. The idea struck Mr. Cooper that he would place the immense furnace in his shop at the disposal of the citizens to boil coffee upon. He did so, and this was the beginning of one of the grandest patriotic charities known in the history of the rebellion. Immediately Mr. Cooper cleared his shop, and determined to aid the cause for the Union as best he could, since he was too far advanced in years to shoulder a musket. He set up what was christened the "Cooper Shop Volunteer Refreshment Saloon," which ended its existence only when the last of the brave men who had been spared by the enemies' bullets passed through Philadelphia on their return home. The citizens came to his aid, and contributions of all sorts poured in upon him. The founder of the place used his private means literally, and no soldier was ever turned away hungry. In addition, a hospital was established in the second story, and the sick were cared for.

After the war, Mr. Cooper turned his attention to business again, but new and more energetic men had supplanted him while he was aiding the Government in its struggle for existence. At last he was compelled to give up the struggle and retire to an humble life with the scanty means at his disposal. Sickness fell upon him and he died, leaving his family, consisting of a wife and two daughters, in almost utter destitution, and the house they lived in advertised for sale. The matter was brought to the attention of a number of prominent gentlemen, and they immediately started a subscription for the relief of the family. An appeal has been made to all the Grand Army members and soldiers who were fed at the Cooper Shop to send a small tribute for the relief of the widow and family of the philanthropist. William M. Singerly, proprietor of the Philadelphia Record, has taken charge of the matter vigorously, and has already received numerous contributions from veterans in New York City and New England, and there is no doubt that as the facts of the case become known, the donations will become very considerable. Among the contributors are the veterans of the Seventy-first Regiment of this city, who have appropriated fifty dollars from the regimental funds. It is to be hoped that others than veterans of the war, who appreciate Mr. Cooper's loyal efforts, may feel constrained to join in the movement for the relief of those he has left in want. The sum of $15,000 will be required to remove the incumbrance on the property now threatened with sale.

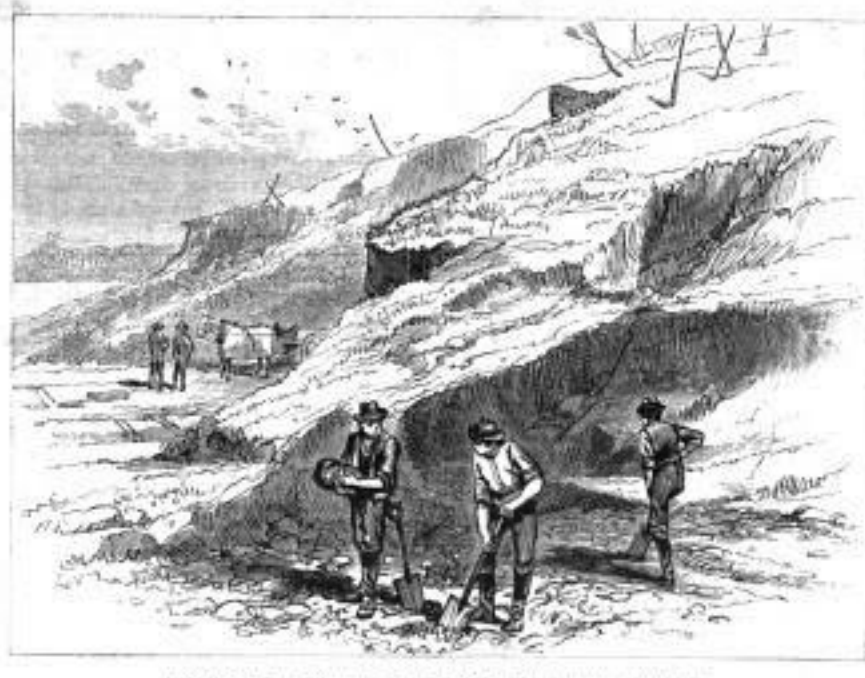
by a sculling movement. The neck was long, yet thick, and sufficiently powerful to sustain the great head high out of water when engaged in swallowing its prey. And what a wonderful provision of means for securing singular ends was there in that remarkable head.

"The huge jaws were fenced with terrible teeth, very like but far more formidable than those of the crocodile. The bony framework of the lower jaw was very singular. It had a sort of elbow-jointing, which was very significant. He had to swallow his prey entire; and oftentimes this was a fish of very large size. Now came in the utility of this elbow-jointed jaw, as in this way the animal could enlarge the opening of the gullet, and thus making possible the swallowing of his meal. Still, at best, this act of swallowing was slow, and the retaining of a powerful struggling prey would be very difficult, hence the upper jaw had an auxiliary contrivance, which exactly met the necessities of the case. It was really in function a small supernumerary jaw, with small, curved and very sharp teeth. This apparatus is really a grapnel. As the great jaws with their formidable teeth give a hitch, and thus force the struggling prey a little way down the mouth, to get another hitch the jaws must open wide again, when the prey would fall out. At this juncture down comes the little grapnel-jaw, and holds the struggling prey in place. So the movements of the great jaws and the small supernumerary one alternate until the prey is safely down the great maw."

A GREAT RAILROAD FESTIVAL.

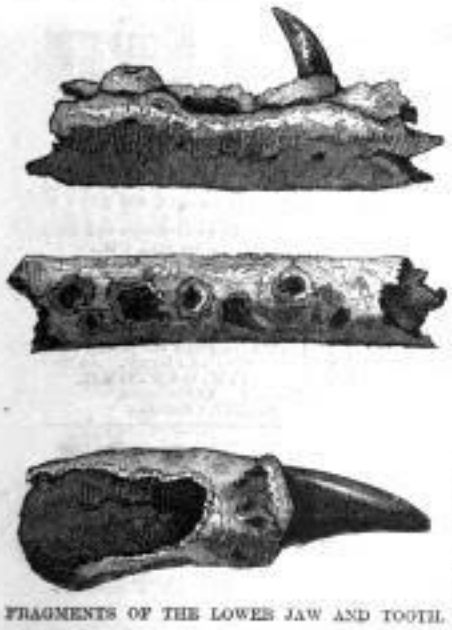


THE celebration of the completion of the Cincinnati Southern Railroad by a grand banquet, tendered by that city to fifteen hundred representative Southern citizens, on the 18th of March, was an occasion of more than ordinary interest. The visitors were received by a committee of four hundred citizens of Cincinnati, and, after visiting the Chamber of Commerce and other points of interest, were entertained in the evening at Music Hall, the main body of which had been converted into a magnificent dining-room. Thirty tables, 90 feet long, occupied the ground-floor; ten, 24 feet long, were ranged across the front of the platform: one, 80 feet long, stood in front of the organ, and two, 25 feet, each obliquely at its end; the whole 43 tables giving a length of over a quarter of a mile, over which was scattered $10,000 worth of tableware, and upon which covers had been laid for 1,840 guests. Seventeen hundred and seventy-six persons in all sat down at the tables. To every seven guests there was one colored waiter, clothed in spotless white jacket, vest, apron and tie; while each table was under the supervision of a head waiter in full dress. The viands were profuse in their abundance. Here there were 10,000 oysters on the half shell, 100 gallons of soup, 1,200 pounds of fish, 1,000 pounds of sirloin, 2,000 croquettes, 1,000 pounds of venison, 600 ducks, 2 wagon-loads of potatoes, 200 cold pieces of game, salads and jellies, 100 gallons of ice cream, 75 gallons of Roman punch, 125 pounds of cake, beside sundries unweighed, unmeasured and unnamable.



THE LATE WILLIAM M. COOPER, FOUNDER OF THE SOLDIERS' REFRESHMENT SALOON, PHILADELPHIA.

In preparing to serve the throng of guests seated at the tables, Horticultural Hall, south of the main building, was converted into a monster kitchen. Along one side of it were stretched 120 feet of ranges, having eight ovens with 160 feet of baking surface.



The decorations of the tables were elegant and handsome. On each table were two or three designs in pastry and in flowers. On the principal table immediately in front of the Mayor and the principal guests were several unique and handsome floral designs, while each end was ornamented with a horseshoe of calla lilies, tuberoses, violets and smilax. Wreaths, pyramids, fans, horse-shoes, cornucopias and other designs in roses, pinks, violets, lilies-of-the-valley and mignonettes, interwined with smilax, graced the other tables and diffused their fragrance on the air. A boutonnière was also furnished each guest. Several large floral pieces ornamented the room. Over the organ a locomotive and tender in pink and white flowers attracted considerable attention. This piece measured eight feet in length. Other pieces, illustrating a Southern Railroad train coming out of King's Mountain Tunnel, the High Bridge, a train on the Ohio River Bridge, and other subjects connected with the Southern Railroad, were also exhibited in the body of the Hall. The viands, which were faultlessly placed upon the tables, were of the choicest description, and everybody praised the arrangements. When, about 10:30 o'clock, the orchestra had played a particularly pleasing selection, an encore was insisted upon, and the musicians responded with "Dixie." The effect was magical. All over the house men rose, shouted and waved napkins with the greatest enthusiasm. The music was almost drowned, but when the orchestra struck

THE SUPPOSED FORM OF THE SEA-SERPENT.

THE MARL-PIT WHERE THE REMAINS WERE DISCOVERED.

FRAGMENTS OF THE LOWER JAW AND TOOTH.

A FOSSIL SEA-SERPENT.

SOME curious relics of the reptilian age has been recently discovered in a marl-pit near Marlboro, Monmouth County, New Jersey. Professor Samuel Lockwood, a geologist of fine attainments, in a description of these relics, says that the bones undoubtedly belonged to a monster of great bulk. "He had two paddles well forward and two behind, the size and solidity of the bones of which indicate extraordinary propelling force. Extending far behind was the tail, stout, long and serpentine, but a little flattish, thus affording great aid in propulsion

SECTION OF THE VERTEBRA.

NEW JERSEY.—FOSSIL REMAINS OF A SEA-SERPENT DISCOVERED NEAR MARLBORO.—FROM SKETCHES BY PROF. LOCKWOOD AND CHARLES UPHAM.

Digitized by Google

the majestic tones of the "Star Spangled Banner" the scene became indescribable, every one rising and the house being white with waving handkerchiefs. Finally the great organ took up the air, and orchestra and organ, with a shouting audience between, combined to form an unparalleled outburst of enthusiasm.

It was 12 o'clock when the speaking began, the order being as follows: An address of welcome in behalf of the City, by Mayor Jacobs; address of welcome in behalf of the State, by Governor Foster; "The Cincinnati Southern," response by Hon. E. A. Ferguson; "The South Atlantic States," response by Governor Colquitt, of Georgia; "Gulf States," response by Leslie R. Brooks, of Mobile; "Our Northern and Southern Connections," responses by M. E. Ingalls and ex-Governor Brown, of Georgia.

The Cincinnati Southern Railroad, which has cost $13,000,000, is operated entirely in the city's interest, though not by the city itself. A common carrier company, chartered by the Legislature, holds the road under a lease, they to furnish capital for locomotives, cars and all operating expenses, and to be allowed an interest of seven per cent. per annum, while all the rest of the earnings are turned into the city treasury to go on the sinking fund.

THE THEATRES.

AT Union Square the "Two Orphans" have made their rentrée, the cast being unique, the scenery new and superb.

"M'liss" at the Standard is drawing immense houses, the acting of Miss Pixley in the title rôle causing quite a sensation.

At Haverly's the "Widow Bedott" holds her own against all comers, and is unassailable even by the immortal Tony Weller.

There is truly but one step between the sublime and the ridiculous, from "Macbeth" to "Humpty Dumpty." Edwin Booth has succeeded the mirth-provoking pantomime, which is now convulsing Brooklyn, and the eminent tragedian is nightly fascinating enormous and æsthetic audiences.

J. H. Haverly having taken a lease of Niblo's opened with his marvelous Mastodon Minstrels.

The Bijou Opera House, under the management of Messrs. Ford and McCaull, commenced its opera season on Monday night with "Di Camera," of which an extended notice will duly appear.

How Greyhounds are Trained.

THE human denizens of poverty-stricken hovels in the "distressful country" or in the crowded alleys of this metropolis might well envy a grey hound in training for the Waterloo Cup. His kennel, to begin with, is artificially warmed by a flue which runs right round it, and his food consists of a strong jelly, made from beasts' or calves' feet, or from bullocks' or sheeps' heads. With this jelly is mixed some carefully-selected oatmeal, and a week before running the favored long-tail has his wind cleared by a diet of roast mutton and crisp toast. Each day of his life the greyhound is well groomed with a horse-hair brush on returning from exercise, and his feet are as carefully washed and wiped as those of a Derby favorite. As much thought is bestowed upon his training and exercise as is given by a crack Newmarket trainer of horses to the condition of an animal upon which the money is about to be "dumped down." The result is that greyhounds are now brought to the scratch with a gloss on their coats and a lot of hard muscle upon their loins which augur ill for the suffering hares, exposed to the endurance of untold agonies during the few minutes of suspense when their lives hang in the balance.

Corean Women.

THE women of Corea have to remain in the apartments set specially apart for their use, and those of the higher classes are even more insulated here than in China; a little more liberty is allowed them in the country, where a portion of the labor in the fields falls to their share; but although they can move about there somewhat more at their ease, they are still much more restricted than the female country population in China. In cities and small townships it is, however, considered a great offense against modesty and custom whenever a woman is met in the public streets in the daytime, and they quit their apartments scarcely ever during the day. To indemnify them for this strictly kept-up seclusion, the following remarkable arrangement has been made. At nine o'clock in the evening during the Summer, and at an earlier hour in Winter time, the city gates of Seoul and other towns are closed at a given signal. As soon as this has taken place all men are bound to leave the streets, and these are abandoned to the women for the purposes of recreation and promenading. Any male, finding himself by accident belated and behind the appointed time in the streets, is sure to hurry to his house as fast as possible without looking up or regarding about him, and severe punishment would fall upon any person daring, in the face of the stringent prohibition, to molest women in the least. Good-breeding demands from any man (and this is always done) to cover his face with a fan as soon as he encounters ladies walking during these hours, so that he may not be recognized, and to walk over to the other side of the street so as not to disturb or terrify them.

Turkish Bankruptcy.

NO FRESH proof of the almost hopeless impecuniosity of the Turkish Government need occasion any surprise, and least of all such an announcement as that contained in a telegram recently received to the effect that the Imperial Ottoman Bank had refused to advance any more funds for payment of salaries to the Ottoman Ambassadors at European Courts. This is, if we mistake not, the second time that the Porte has been reduced to such discreditable straits that its own financial agents declare they cannot trust it any more, even to the extent of enabling it to keep its representatives at foreign courts in pocket. The reason is the same now that it was a year since—nothing is done toward fiscal reform. Revenues are wasted or plundered, so that the State often wants means for the daily support of the ordinary administrative machinery. Court favorites or local placemen fill their pockets, while soldiers and police can scarcely be kept from the dire extreme of actual privation except by the adoption of hand-to-mouth expedients which merely stave off rebellion for the moment, and leave the old vices flourishing exuberantly. Among these expedients is that of playing off one set of financial advisers against the other. Thus, in the present case, as the Porte cannot get the Ottoman Bank to trust it any more, it proposes "making arrangements for the payments to be effected through other banks." All this time sources of revenue exist close at hand, which only want a little common sense management to produce three times what they have hitherto done and render petty borrowing unnecessary. The uppermost desire in the mind of any intelligent person on reading these notices of pecuniary straits is that not only the Imperial Ottoman, but every other bank and banker, would persevere in keeping their purse-strings tightly drawn until sheer penury drove the governing class at Constantinople to amend its ways.

FUN.

AN aviary is always a bird-den to the man who owns it.

HE who Mrs. to take a kiss
Has Mr. thing he should not Miss.

A MAN should have a fortune who thinks of marrying a ballet-dancer, because it is next to impossible to keep her in clothes.

OLD PHOSY: "What I say is this, sir: I approve entirely of fox-hunting as a manly, health-giving, and invigorating amusement, but not as a pursuit, sir." Irish Doctor: "Faith, ye'll find manny to agree with ye there. Especially foxes."

"How do you like the new minister?" asked a lady of her little girl. "Oh! he is splendid! I like him ever so much better than I did Mr. Edwards." "Why?" asked her mother. "Well," said the child, trying to think of a good reason, "he has a better complexion!"

Two boarding-house keepers are comparing notes. "It 'pears to me, Mrs. Miggles, that your chicken-salad is never found out—leastways, I never hear none of the boarders complain." "You see," explained Mrs. Miggles, "I allus chops up a few feathers with the veal."

A GENTLEMAN having occasion to praise a kind-hearted Irishwoman for her good deeds, said to her: "Well, well, Kate, if there is a Heaven in the next world you will get to it." As quick as lightning came the reply, with all the heartiness of the race: "God bless ye, Mr. P. An' sure, if I do, I'll lave the gate open for you."

THESE days no one is safe from the charge of plagiarism. Brown went to church last Sunday—a thing unusual—and upon being asked his opinion of the clergyman, said, "Oh, his sermon was very good: but that prayer, beginning with 'Our Father,' I think he stole entire. I know I have heard something somewhere that it was strangely like."

A ROMANTIC youth, promenading in one of the fashionable streets, picked up a thimble. He stood a while, meditating upon the probable beauty of the owner, when he pressed it to his lips, saying, "Oh, that it were the fair cheek of the wearer!" Just as he had finished, a stout, elderly negress looked out of an upper window, and said, "Mason, just please to bring dat fimble of mine in de entry. I jist drapt it."

"I BELIEVE in a personal devil," said Mr. Moody, at a revival meeting held in a remote Western city. "That's true, that's true—you're right there, stranger," said an old farmer, rising from his seat in his earnestness. Whereupon a calm-faced, placid-looking woman rose from the other end of the pew, took him by the ear and slowly led him out, and the assembly knew then for the first time that the old man's mind was filled with domestic thoughts instead of the hereafter.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

are furnished by the WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y., and Great Russell Street Buildings, London, England, on terms to suit the times. A new edition of the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," about 1,000 pages, nearly 300 illustrations, by R. V. Pierce, M. D., postpaid, $1.50. "Invalids' Guide-Book," postpaid, 10 cents; "Motion as a Remedial Agent," illustrating movement cure for paralysis, diseases of females, stiffened joints, club feet, spinal curvature and kindred affections, 10 cents; "Diseases of Generative Organs," 10 cents; "Catarrh," its rational treatment and positive cure, sent on receipt of one postage stamp. Address as above.

RINGLETS BRIGHT

"That toss in the breeze like a thing of life."

She stood thus beautiful through the use of Mrs. S. A. Allen's WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Sold by Druggists.

REPORTS from the various wine districts of France say that the extraordinary cold Winter has so severely injured grape vines that this year's crop will probably be very poor. The vines in Burgundy, and more especially in Champagne, have suffered most. It is very doubtful if the greater part of New York wine-drinkers would find this out if it was not published.—New York Sun.

It is also doubtful whether, since the introduction and popularity of "THE AMERICA" Extra Dry Champagne of A. WERNER & CO., 308 Broadway, it is of very much consequence whether the New York wine-drinkers ever find it out. The loss is more than made good.

"WHERE shall I stop?" is the query frequently put by the visitor to New York. This question can easily be settled in favor of the ST. NICHOLAS hotel, now, as ever, the leader among metropolitan hostelries. Its furniture, fittings, apartments, conveniences and table are, beyond comparison, the most suited to please the fastidious taste. Rates only $3.50 per day, the ante-bellum price.

$19 SAVED!

MORE sickness and misery will be prevented and cured with $1 worth of HOP BITTERS than by $20 in doctors' visits. They cure when all else fails.

TO MOTHERS.—Burnett's Kalliston is peculiarly adapted to the bathing of infants. It allays all tendency to inflammation, is perfectly harmless, and imparts to the skin a clear and healthy appearance.

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE.—Relish for Soups, Fish, Steaks, Chops, Cold Meats, Gravies, etc.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE acts with decided benefit in cases of innutrition of the brain from abuse of alcohol.

AN EXTENDED POPULARITY.—Each year finds "Brown's Bronchial Troches" in new localities, in various parts of the world. For relieving Coughs, Colds, and Throat Diseases, the Troches have been proved reliable.

AN OUNCE of prevention is worth many pounds of regret. Moral: Insure in THE TRAVELERS.

THE popular and palatial Bristol and Providence have resumed their places on the Fall River Line to Boston one month earlier than usual. Both have been thoroughly overhauled during the Winter and fitted with steam steering gear.

COLDS permitted to run their course are apt to terminate in catarrh or consumption. Dr. Browning's C. & C. CORDIAL is a sure cure. Fifty cents per bottle.

DAVID LANDRETH & SONS, of Philadelphia, whose advertisement appears in this paper, have a long and honorable record in their business. Full confidence may be placed in their announcement.

A CONVENIENT Album of Photographic Views in panorama form of New York and Brooklyn is offered by the NEW YORK PANORAMA COMPANY. From an inspection of the Album we can testify that it is all it is represented to be in the advertisement elsewhere given.

THE genuine ARMOUR EXTRACT is the only reliable substitute for tea; it costs only about one-half as much, is only as durable, is fireproof, and can be easily applied by any one. H. W. JOHNS MANUFACTURING CO., 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y., are the sole manufacturers.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

J. M. THORBURN & CO.
15 John Street, New York,
Offer to applicants their new
DESCRIPTIVE PRICED CATALOGUE
OF SEEDS
For 1880,
For the Vegetable and Flower Garden, for the Lawn, the Farm and Nursery.

EIGHTH EDITION JUST READY.
In the Schillingscourt
A Romance. From the German of
E. MARLITT,
Author of "The Old Mam'selle's Secret," "The Second Wife," "Gold Elsie," etc.
By MRS. A. L. WISTER.
12mo. Extra Cloth. $1.50.
To say that this new story possesses the interest and charm that distinguish all of Marlitt's Novels is sufficient commendation to the many thousands of readers of Mrs. Wister's delightful translations of these fascinating works.
. For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price by
J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Philadelphia.

SICK HEADACHE
POSITIVELY CURED BY
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
AND THE PRICE IS
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
We waste no words on this subject, and state only facts. We do not think physicians prescribe CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS, or know or care anything about them; but those who buy and use them soon learn that what we say is true. All Druggists sell them. Sent by mail.
CARTER MEDICINE CO., 22 Park Place, New York.

Fever & Ague Remedy.
SURE CURE.
Price, 75c. Stamps received. Send for circular.
PODOLSKI, Druggist, cor. Sixth and Poplar Sts., Phila., Pa. Mention this paper.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM
GOUT OR GRAVEL. Schlumberger is the only patentee in France. L. A. Paris, 302 W. 14th St., N.Y., his only agent for the celebrated French Salicylates, which relieve at once, cure in four days, without dangerous consequences, their purity being controlled according to French laws by the Board of Pharmacy of Paris. Beware—The genuine has red seal and signature of agent on each box. $1, postpaid. Send stamp for pamphlet. Thousands of references.

CHEAP MUSIC
Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 32 Park Row, New York.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.
Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1.
F. CROSBY, 665 Sixth Ave., New York.

1854 THE ORIGINAL 1880
GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED AT
610 Chestnut St., Philad'a. 610
Are now GIVING AWAY to PURCHASERS of Books Gold Watches, Silk Dresses, Mantel Clocks, Silverware, Jewelry, and a large variety of useful and valuable articles—FREE! We sell at the LOWEST PRICES all the New and Standard Books in sets or single volumes, and give a Handsome Premium with each book.
Pleasant and profitable employment for everybody. Send for our New Catalogue of Books and Gifts for 1880. Terms to agents and persons forming clubs.
C. M. GILBERT, President.
PHILAD'A PREMIUM BOOK CO., 610 Chestnut St., Phil'a.

TO THE PUBLIC.
BOKER'S BITTERS.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS.
In accordance with the desire frequently expressed, both in the United States and abroad, these Bitters, so long and justly celebrated for their efficacy as a cordial, and for their medicinal virtues against all disease of, or arising from, the digestive organs, will hereafter be put up and sold not only in quart, but
ALSO IN PINT BOTTLES,
for medicinal, family, traveling, and other purposes. To be had at all the principal druggists', grocers', liquor-merchants', etc. L. FUNKE, JR., Sole Agent, New York, 78 John Street. Post Office Box 1,729.

Friedrichshall
BITTERWATER.
To be had of all Dealers in Mineral Waters.

Amusements.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.
RICE & NUNNEMACHER, Lessees.
POSITIVE NOVELTY
EASTER HOLIDAYS.
MONDAY, MARCH 29TH,
EVERY EVENING at 8.
WEDNESDAY & SATURDAY MATINEES at 2.
GRAND PRODUCTION OF HERNE'S
HEARTS OF OAK. HEARTS OF OAK.
THE GREAT REALISTIC HOME DRAMA.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. BEGINS AT 8.
Last week but one.
ABBEY'S HUMPTY DUMPTY.
SPANISH STUDENTS. | THE GREAT LORELLAS. | PRINCE ROYAL KATSNOSHIN.
MAFFIT AND FRASER. A WORLD OF NOVELTIES.
Come and see the CRAZE PUZZLE DONE—13, 14 & 14.
MATINEES WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.
ABBEY & HICKEY.....Proprietors.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
EVERY NIGHT AT 8.
ROYAL MIDDY.
MATINEES SATURDAY and WEDNESDAY, at 2.
. Seats may be secured a fortnight ahead.
. MR. DALY begs to announce that he will produce as the FINAL NOVELTY of the present season a new play of contemporaneous interest, entitled
"THE WAY WE LIVE!"
A Comedy of Society as it is and might be, which has been some time in course of preparation, and will be most elaborately presented.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.
First appearance in New York of
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
The charming Vocalist and Actress, as
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS.
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
in which character she has received the indorsement of the press throughout the country.
She is supported by the J. E. McDonough and Bob Fulford Combination.
SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:30 and EVENING AT 8.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER.
After months of most elaborate preparation,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
with entire NEW COSTUMES and with a GREAT CAST, the grandest dramatic work of this century,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THIS GREAT PLAY CAN BE GIVEN HERE BUT THREE WEEKS, AS THE REGULAR SEASON CLOSES ON APRIL 10th, Mr. Palmer being under engagement to present his company to the Boston public for a season commencing April 12th.
Seats for any of the TWO ORPHANS NIGHTS are now on sale.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
"WIDOW BEDOTT."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Propr & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
JOHN A. STEVENS AND "UNKNOWN COMPANY.
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r,
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

CANDY
Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

EDUCATE
Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press, all prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. DORMAN Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

Read the New Story!
"The Magic of a Face,"
IN
Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

Digitized by Google

PHOTO-PANORAMA | NEW YORK | BROOKLYN & VICINITY

An Album in Russia-cloth cover, 4¾ x 7, in wide gensine gold tint, containing two admirable views taken from the two piers of the East River Bridge, shows the Great Bridge all ready finished according to authentic plans. Length of Panorama 6 feet 6 in. long. (Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.) By mail, in neat case, prepaid to any part U. S., Canada or Europe, for $1.

New York Panorama Co.,
202 Broadway, New York.

KNOW THYSELF.

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; Or, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail, postpaid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 4 cents for postage.

The author refers, by permission, to JOS. S. FISHER, president; W. I. F. INGRAHAM, vice-president; W. PAINE, M.D.; C. S. GAUNIT, M.D.; E. J. DOUCET, M.D.; R. H. KLINE, M.D., J. R. HOLCOMB, M.D., M. R. LYNCH, M.D., and M. R. O'CONNELL, M.D., Faculty of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; also the Faculty of the American University of Philadelphia; also Hon. P. A. BISKELL, M.D., president of the National Medical Association.

Address, Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

Read the New Book, THE CANARY. MATING and BREEDING. Varieties, Care, Management, Diseases, etc. Handsomely bound and illustrated. For sale at all Book and Bird stores. Price, 25c.; by mail, 30c. Published by the SINGER GRAVEL PAPER CO., 543 Hudson Street, N. Y.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Mme. Julian's Specific is the only unfailing remedy for removing radically and permanently all annoying disfigurements from the Lips, Cheek, Chin, Brow, Arms, etc., without injuring the skin; no acids used. Ladies may address or apply to Mme. JULIAN, No. 48 East 20th St., New York.

DE VENOGE & CIE. CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

KEEP'S SHIRTS,

Gloves, Umbrellas, Underwear, Etc.

SAMPLES AND CIRCULARS MAILED FREE.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COM'PANY,
631, 633, 635, 637 Broadway, N. Y.

25 'f gilt-edge, chromo, snowflake, glass, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING CO., Fair Haven, Ct.

The Most Extraordinary and Startling Events of the Day

Are vividly portrayed in the

NEW YORK

Illustrated Times.

PROMINENT EVENTS OF ROMANTIC INTEREST,
DEEDS OF HEROISM, REMARKABLE ADVENTURES,
ACCIDENTS, CRIMINALITIES,
Etc., Etc.,

Are fully detailed in its columns.

All the Prominent Sporting Events of the Day,
THEATRICAL NEWS, CRITICISMS,

Are given, together with

FAITHFUL PORTRAITS of PUBLIC NOTABILITIES,
Etc., Etc.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cents a copy at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

Address, 55 Park Place, New York.

Ask Your Merchant for

They are NOT sent out all over the country to be sold on commission.

They are NOT put up in Fancy Picture Papers, illustrating improbable vegetables.

They are NOT to be found for sale in drug-shops.

They ARE grown by the Subscribers on their own farms in Pennsylvania, Virginia, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

They ARE put up in plain paper, at the lowest cost. The purchaser, therefore, pays for seed, and not for fancy paper and printing.

They ARE sold by respectable Merchants, Druggists, Grocers, etc., who buy them outright, because they know they will prove satisfactory to their customers.

They ARE to be had in any quantity in papers, in ¼ lb. packages, in pints of Peas, Beans and Corn, or in bulk.

If your Merchant does not keep them, send for Landreths' Rural Register and Almanac, containing catalogue and prices, and order them direct from headquarters. DAVID LANDRETH & SONS, 21 and 23 South 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Mention this paper.

NATIONAL

DISPENSARY

419 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

N. D. OZONIZED REMEDIES for all Diseases. Permanently cures Paralysis, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Liver Complaint, Cancers and Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Tumors and all Blood Diseases, Nervousness, Baldness and Grayness, Tape Worm, etc. Our Practice is Eclectic. Patients can be treated successfully at their homes, if they will describe their symptoms carefully. Also, will be provided with Hygeian Board. Electricity a specialty. Ozone Inhalations. Agents wanted. ISABEL M. MITCHELL, M.D., Prop'r.

ANTI-MOTH PAPER.

Absolute Protection against Moths.

CHEAP, CLEAN, FRAGRANT, HEALTHFUL.

Sold by all Druggists.

CAMPBELL, HALL & CO.,
Samples Free. 110 & 112 NASSAU ST., N. Y.

RELIABLE  DYKES' BEARD ELIXIR in 21 days will do it on the smoothest face. Sent to any address, upon receipt of $1. ALREADY WEAK BEARDS POSITIVELY MADE HEAVY. Sealed and sent free. Full Particulars, Testimonials, &c. Sold by druggists in all towns. Purchase genuine Dykes' Beard Elixir and avoid fraud. Sold by the Wm. L. A. DYKES & CO. Only Agents, Baltimore, Md.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Imitation Gold Watches.
$5, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 335 Broadway, N. Y. Box, 3096.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF | By sending 25 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage.
Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, Dr. JAQUES & Co., 130 W. 6th st., Cincinnati, O.

CARDS—10 Lily of the Valley, 10 Scroll, 20 Engraved, 30 Transparent, 1 Model Love Letter, 1 Card Case, Name on all, 15c. WEST & CO., Westville, Conn.

40 ELEGANT CARDS, all Chromo, Motto and Glass, name in gold and jet, 10c. West & Co., Westville, Ct.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

18 Elegant New Style Chromo Cards, with name, 10 cts. postpaid. GEO. I. REED & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS LIQUID PAINTS

Are strictly pure linseed-oil paints of a higher grade than have ever before been manufactured for structural purposes. ☞ A saving of 25 to 33 per cent. of customary outlays can be effected by the use of these paints. Samples of sixteen newest shades for dwellings sent free by mail. ☞ Be sure and get the genuine, which are manufactured only by

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,

Sole Manufacturers of Genuine ASBESTOS ROOFING, BOILER COVERINGS, etc.

☞ Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery

AND

Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 150—155 East Fifty-ninth Street, Ice-houses and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

YOUNG MEN And Older People—We send on 30 days' Trial our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Trusses, and other appliances, to those suffering from Nervousness, Nervous Debility, Weakness, or Lost Vitality, from any cause; or to those afflicted with Rheumatism, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Liver or Kidney Trouble, &c., or Ruptures. Speedy Cure Guaranteed. Send at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE | THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For Sale by Grocers. D. d. WILTBERGER Prop., 233 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

MAMMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

Frank Leslie's

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

Each Number Contains

128 PAGES QUARTO, 100 BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS

Published on the 10th of every month. Annual subscription, $3. $1.50 will be received for six months; $1 will be received for four months. 25 cents per number, sent postpaid.

SEND 25 CENTS FOR A SPECIMEN COPY.

Any minister sending $2 for three subscribers will have his own copy free for one year. Any club of three subscribers sending $2 may order a free copy to their pastor or any other clergyman.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE CHEAPEST MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD!

Frank Leslie's

POPULAR MONTHLY.

THE

April Number Now Ready,

WITH THE FOLLOWING BRILLIANT TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

"THE NEW IRISH MOVEMENT." By Nugent Robinson. 15 Illustrations.
"SKETCHES OF HIGHLAND CHARACTER—SHEEP FARMERS AND DROVERS."
"GENTLEMAN GEORGE—A STORY OF THE QUEEN'S TRIAL." By Alfred H. Guernsey. 10 Illustrations.
"NYLGHAU-HUNTING IN CANDEISH, INDIA." Illustrated.
"HOW I GOT INTO THE BALL OF ST. PETER'S." By Frank Leslie. 8 Illustrations.
"OPOSSUM-HUNTING IN THE SOUTH." 4 Illustrations.
"HOW THE JAPANESE AMUSE THEMSELVES—THE SHIBA I (THEATRE)." By Edward Greey. 8 Illustrations.
"HEARING WITH THE TEETH." Illustrated.
SERIAL AND SHORT STORIES, Etc.—"Nea Gaffy," by Ella W. Pierce (Chap. XI.-XIII.); Illustrated. "Poor Harry"; Illustrated. "Mary Brand"; Illustrated. "Our Disaster," by Eleanor Grantham; Illustrated. "The Price of a Pair of Ears"; Illustrated. "The Ring of the Serpent"; Illustrated.
SKETCHES, Etc.—"Our Church Festival." "A Terrible Experience"; Illustrated. "A Desperate Boat Fight"; Illustrated. "The Goblin's Kitchen"; Illustrated. "Strange Archery—The Fish and Turtle of the Amazons"; Illustrated. "A Fishing Adventure"; Illustrated. "Some Dogs that I have Known"; Illustrated—etc., etc.
POEMS.—"An Alter Ego," by G. A. Davis. "The Lifeboat," by the Author of "Mary Powell"; Illustrated. "Binley and '46'," by Scot Harte—etc., etc.
MISCELLANY.—"The Most Northern Point of the United States." "A Curious Pleasure Yacht." "Voice in Fish." "The Vestal Turcis"; Illustrated. "Ants and their Ways—The Farmer Ant"; Illustrated. "Recent Progress in Science," "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES—100 ILLUSTRATIONS
AND A
Handsome Chromo Frontispiece, entitled "Happy Days."

Single copies, 25 cents each. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50—postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell the NEW BOOK,

FARMING FOR PROFIT

TELLS HOW TO
Cultivate all the Farm Crops to the Best Manner; Breed, Feed and Care for Stock; Grow Fruit; Manage Farm Business; Make Happy Homes, and
How to Make Money on the Farm.
Every Farmer should have a copy. 800 Pages. 140 Illustrations. Send for circulars to
J. C. McCURDY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY
in a legitimate business within 60 days, where small capital is required, and investment can be recovered at any time, send for information to
H. M. LEE & CO., 39 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS WANTED To sell the best and fastest-selling Books and Bibles. Low prices, excellent terms, exclusive territory. Address BRADLEY, GARRETSON & Co., 66 N. 4th St., Phila., Pa.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS Catalogue free. $7 per day made easy. J. F. GAGE & CO., Boston, Mass.

THE POPULAR FAMILY JOURNAL.

Frank Leslie's

CHIMNEY CORNER.

A Constant Succession of New Literary and Artistic Attractions!

This favorite publication has, for the past fifteen years, continuously enlarged its popularity, and is now admitted to be the

LEADING LITERARY FAMILY JOURNAL.

It is the ONLY weekly that gives, with Healthy Fiction, Attractive Novels and Stories, Biography, Travels, Incidents of all Times and Countries, Foreign Manners and Customs, Essays, Well-chosen Matter for Young Readers, Examples for the Aspiring Youth of Both Sexes, Natural History in a popular form, the Wonders of Nature, Science, Art, and Human Ingenuity, Adventures with Wild Men and Beasts, Narratives of Daring and Peril, Social Hints, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner

Is thus, from week to week, a Library for a Household that forms a perfect museum of attractions, the illustrations being of the highest character.

Each Number contains sixteen pages, eight of which are embellished with beautiful engravings.

Published every Monday. For sale by all newsdealers. Price, single copies, 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4; three months, $1—postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE LATEST SPRING FASHIONS.

Beautiful Colored and Plain Fashion Plates
OF THE
PREVAILING PARISIAN STYLES OF LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S COSTUMES;
HOUSE, PROMENADE AND CARRIAGE TOILETS;
HATS, BONNETS, ETC., ETC.,
Imported monthly exclusively for

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S MAGAZINE

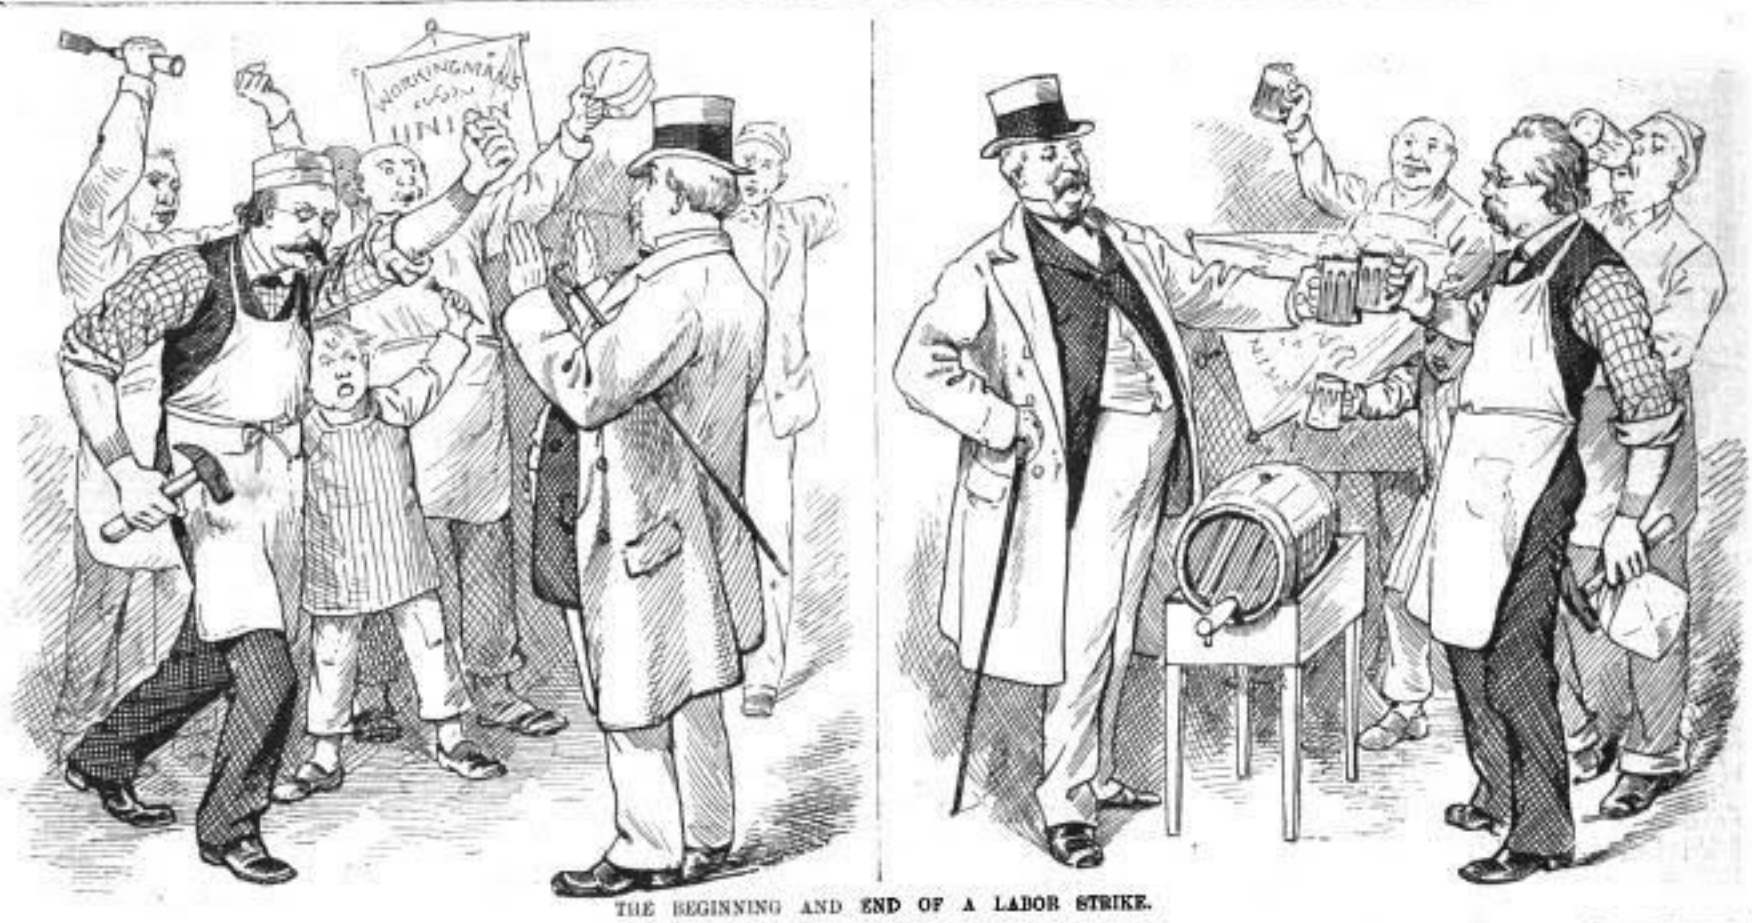
—AND—

Gazette of Fashion,

Universally regarded for nearly a quarter of a century as the

FASHION STANDARD OF AMERICA

The Reports of the various changes in the style of European toilets appear simultaneously with those in the Paris journals.



The Letter-press is of an exceedingly varied character, affording not only entertainment, but conveying much useful information. The Serial and Short Stories, Sketches, Poems, etc., are by celebrated writers, and beautifully illustrated. The cartoons are highly amusing, and the miscellany is abundant and interesting.

Each Number is Profusely Embellished.

Published on the 15th of every month. Annual subscription, $3.50, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

THE BEGINNING AND END OF A LABOR STRIKE.

Persons at a distance should write for Samples and Directions for ordering

MEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

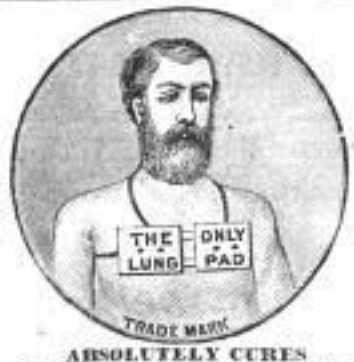
N.Y. Central & Hudson River R.R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.



WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price-list.

CHAS. W. COPELAND,
Sole Manufacturer,
BOSTON, MASS.

A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $1.00.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,
DETROIT, MICH.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (self-inker $5) 18 larger sizes for business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own printing and advertising. Catalogue of presses, type, cards &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

COLUMBIA BICYCLE

A practical road machine. Indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. Send 3c. stamp for 24 page catalogue with price list and full information, or 10 cts. for catalogue and copy of "The Bicycling World." THE POPE MFG. CO., 105 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, MASS.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured Dr. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

FISHERMEN!
TWINES AND NETTING!
MANUFACTURED BY
WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md.
☞ Send for Price-List, naming your County and State.

NICOLL THE TAILOR.

SPRING & SUMMER STYLES.
Diagonals, Worsteds, English Tweeds and Cassimeres,
MADE TO ORDER.

620 BROADWAY,
AND
139 to 151 Bowery, N. Y.

Samples and Rules for Self-Measurement
SENT BY MAIL.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS
For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF BERLIN.....Saturday, April 3, 12:30 P.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, April 8, 3 P.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, April 17, 11 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER.....Thursday, April 22, 3 P.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $80, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 51 and 53 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

VILLAGE NEWSPAPERS.

A list of nearly twelve hundred County and Village Newspapers, having an aggregate weekly edition of 692,891 ACTUAL COPIES ISSUED.

Advertisements, large or small, can be inserted in the entire list for $6 a line per week, and reading notices for $12 a line. A card occupying one inch of space is inserted one week for $75, or one year for $2,000.

For catalogue and further information, address

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.
Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce St.,
NEW YORK.

EXTENSION WINDOW CORNICES, fit any window. Catalogue of SAM'L H. VAN WINKLE, 244 Canal St., N.Y.

THE Admiration
OF THE
WORLD.
Mrs. S. A. Allen's
WORLD'S Hair Restorer
IS PERFECTION!

FOR its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and QUICKLY CHANGING GRAY OR WHITE HAIR to its natural youthful COLOR and BEAUTY.

IT IS NOT A DYE.

It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful color and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. DANDRUFF is quickly and permanently removed. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO
New Upright 10 Stops, 3 set Golden Tongue Reeds, in Case, 5 Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $105. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $143 to $225. Before you buy be sure to write us. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

SUMMER SILKS.

Foulards, Louisines, Pongees, Corahs, Etc.,
NOW ON EXHIBITION. Also, an UNEQUALED ASSORTMENT of Black Silk Grenadines,
SATIN and VELVET COMBINATIONS, in GREAT VARIETY.

A. T. Stewart & Co.
Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Over One Thousand Royal Octavo Pages, nearly Two Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications.

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. Amusing, Instructive and Religious. The cheapest, largest and best selling book ever published. Agents wanted. Exclusive territory given. For terms, circulars and territory, address the Publishers. BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Copies mailed on receipt of retail price, Three Dollars.

A KEY THAT WILL WIND ANY WATCH AND NOT WEAR OUT.
SOLD by Watchmakers. By mail, 30 cents. Circulars free. J. BOGUE & CO., 38 Dey St., N.Y.

"INTERLAKEN" FOR SALE.

THE ESTATE OF
THE LATE FRANK LESLIE, ESQ.,

Consisting of 92 acres, situated on LAKE SARATOGA, and extending back to Lake Lonely.

The house contains twelve rooms, gas and water.

The stable, finished in fine woods, has six box-stalls.

Finely appointed billiard-room, and three handsomely furnished sleeping-rooms over coach-house.

Gardener's cottage.

Conservatories profusely stocked with rare plants.

The furniture, steam-yacht, sail and row boats, French omnibus, etc., will be sold with the place.

Apply to

HOMER MORGAN, 2 Pine Street; or,

V. K. STEVENSON, 1 Pine St., and 35 E. 17th St.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Ehelarn, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,281.—Vol. L.] NEW YORK, APRIL 17, 1880. [Price 10 Cents. $4.00 Yearly. 14 Weeks $1.00.

E. Russell Washburne

NO. 1.—HON. ELIHU B. WASHBURNE, OF ILLINOIS.

GALLERY OF POSSIBLE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.—See Page 102.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, APRIL 17, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

I. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

THE SOUTH ILLUSTRATED.

We shall commence, at an early day, the publication of a series of illustrations of the Industries, Public Works and Buildings, and Natural Scenery of the principal Southern States, where we now have artists gathering trustworthy preliminary sketches. With a view of embodying in the series the largest possible amount of accurate information touching every subject considered, the illustrations will be accompanied by papers prepared for the most part by competent Southern writers who are especially familiar with the progress and development of that section in agriculture, mining, manufacturing and other industries, and who can, at the same time, correctly represent its needs and the opportunities it offers to capital and enterprise.

PARTIES AND PRINCIPLES.

IT is known that for a long series of weeks the Hon. Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, has been seeking to obtain the recognition of Speaker Randall in the House of Representatives, for the purpose of offering a resolution expressive of the financial crudities which he entertains in common with the Greenbackers; but the Speaker has refused to award him the privileges of the floor by reason of the priority given to reports and resolutions from the committees of the House. At the same time it is charged that the action of the Speaker in this matter has a political inspiration, and is prompted by a desire to prevent the introduction of any resolution which, by the vote had upon its adoption or rejection, would disclose the schism between the Hard Money and Soft Money Democrats. Since the schism cannot be healed, it is deemed "good party tactics" to conceal it until the ensuing Presidential election is overpast.

Not many days ago Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, submitted a measure for the revision of the tariff in three of its schedules, and, without the conscious privity of the House, procured its reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Statutes, instead of the Committee on Ways and Means, to which it properly belonged. That in so doing he compassed a legislative surprise upon the House is incontestable, and yet so simple a matter as the proper reference of this simple measure was not effected without a stubborn and exciting contest running through a three days' session. That the ocean of Congressional oratory should have been tossed into tempest in order to waft such a feather and to drown such a fly, is explained by the fact that neither Republicans nor Democrats are at unity among themselves on the subject of Tariff reform. The Democrats of Pennsylvania, of Maryland and of Louisiana are known to be in favor of the restrictive policy wherever it subserves the interests of their constituents, but the great mass of the Democrats from other States are opposed to protection for protection's sake. The great mass of the Republicans from the Eastern and Middle States are known as stalwart upholders of protection, but Republicans from the Western States are growing more and more outspoken in their aversion to the theory and practice of our present tariff acts. Hence the timidity with which the managers of both parties stand aloof from a living issue which threatens to shatter the ill-compacted shells of their political organizations.

In presence of events like these the whole country is witness to the fact that our nominal political organizations are wider than the bases of doctrine and principle on which they once professed to rest, and on which they founded their claims to popular confidence and support. The name and the external traditions of the Democratic and Republican parties have been handed down to the men who are now assuming to be their respective leaders, but on more than one of the living questions of the hour we find Democrats and Republicans who, in order to keep within the limits of their respectives organizations, are compelled to dissemble or suppress their real convictions.

The evils of this faltering in a double sense are at once manifold and obvious. It strips political organization of dignity, purity and manliness by despoiling it of vitality and truth. Constitutional government can be maintained only in a country which has intelligence and virtue enough to maintain an honorable and an honest competition between the parties which confront each other; and to do this the adherents of party must believe in the truth and importance of the principles for which they contend. Fictitious issues must not be invented for the purpose of "carrying elections." Vital issues must not be ignored in order to protect a fungus growth which seems to add strength to the organism. All such resorts of a calculating expediency are the sure precursors of political decay. They prove that the true spirit of life has departed from the body which it once animated, and that the way has been opened for unclean spirits to enter in and take possession of the carcass. The wily and dexterous management of machine politicians now takes the place of popular forces. Instead of parties filled with generous enthusiasm for the ideas they embody and represent, we have automata worked by wires in the hands of men who control "primaries" and "conventions." Between this decadence and the politics of Mexico there is but a single step. When men and not principles, when mere success as an end and not measures of public policy, addressing themselves to the reason and conscience of the people, are the bonds of political confederation, we have prepared the way for that weakest of all governments—the government of "the strong man." What the government of the "strong man" ends in may be seen to day in the Czar of all the Russias cowering behind General Melikoff.

But if these are evils of our present political situation, it is only just to say that the situation has its opportunities for good as well. In proportion as parties lose their bond of inner coherence, they lose their hold on the best elements that previously entered into their composition. The political managers of the passing hour make a great mistake if they suppose that the rank and file of their former constituency are to be held "like dumb driven cattle" within the traces of the political machine. The world is still governed by moral forces, and woe to the party or parties which break themselves to pieces by offending against them. Neither of the two great historical parties which have lately divided the country can afford to make up the issues of the coming Presidential election without taking the convictions of the "independent voter" into its account. The independent voter has his convictions, and he will neither cloak them nor sell them. For the present he may be a disregarded factor in the machinations of the political wire-puller, but it will be well, on next election day, for that party which shall have paid the most heed to his wishes and his legitimate sensibilities. Never before did the party uniform sit so lightly on the shoulders of its wearers, now that so many among our train-band captains have turned it into the livery of faction and made it the badge of personal politics. The situation of the country is full of perils incident to the decay of a brave and honest statesmanship in our public men, but the situation is also full of opportunities to the party which shall rise to the height of the public emergencies upon us and before us.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

THE Beaconsfield Ministry appears, contrary to the general expectation, to have sustained a decisive defeat in the English Parliamentary elections now in progress. The Liberals have already won twenty-nine seats, making a difference of fifty-eight seats, and this gain will be augmented by others in the elections yet to be held. That they will have a clear working majority in the Commons seems to be assured. Mr. Gladstone is elected from Leeds, where he was nominated so as to be sure of a seat in case he failed in Midlothian, by a majority of more than 10,000 over the highest number of votes polled for the Conservative candidates. His success in Midlothian also is now confidently expected. Lord Hartington and John Bright and all the more prominent Liberal leaders are returned, while on the other hand the Conservatives lose a number of their conspicuous representatives. The question of the Premiership is already engaging the attention of the Liberal leaders, and it may be that the problem will be found somewhat difficult of solution. Lord Hartington has indicated that he will leave the matter to the judgment of the party and the wishes of the Queen. Gladstone possibly may have no ambition to again burden himself with the cares and responsibilities of office, but he is the real natural leader of the Liberal cause, and if the honest voice of the country is consulted he will be called to reassume the functions which he laid down in 1874.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION.

THE New York World, which seems honestly desirous of securing the ascendency of the best element in the direction of the Democratic Party in the coming Presidential contest, calls upon ex-Governor Seymour to take the helm in this State and pilot "the Democratic ship through the perilous breakers into which she has unfortunately drifted or been driven." It urges all the Democratic voters of the State who are opposed to Mr. Tilden to unite in the primaries in the selection of delegates who will be willing, under the lead of Governor Seymour, to put an end to the Tilden and anti-Tilden feud, and it plainly intimates that if something of this sort is not done disaster will ensue. The World is right, and its sound counsel should be heeded by the party to which it is addressed. The nomination of Governor Seymour for the Presidency would not only heal party divisions in New York, but it would bring to the front elsewhere a class of democrats who can never be induced to support any candidate selected by "machine" influences. But the Democracy have, of late years, displayed such absolute stupidity on every occasion when success was within their reach, that there is little ground to anticipate any such sensible course on the part of the managers as the World has suggested.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

IF one will grope a little among the dark places of history, he will be astonished to find how many of the established usages of civilization, and especially of commerce, originated in force and fraud. The more practical laws of navigation have scarcely changed since they were framed by the Phœnicians and elaborated by the Romans; and the doctrine that "might makes right" was in full force among the bold seacovers of those peoples. Down to a comparatively recent period a merchant vessel carrying a valuable and easily portable cargo was sent out well armed, with a numerous crew well trained in the use of artillery and small arms. Our system of impost duties originated in organized robbery, and our word tariff comes from the name of an African cape in the Mediterranean Sea, whence passing vessels were watched and subjected to tribute.

Our system of compulsory pilotage has a similar origin, and yet till within the past century its justice and wisdom has not been seriously and effectively disputed. We went to war with Tripoli about eighty years ago to compel that power to give up its practice of exacting tribute from vessels passing along its coast—an exaction based on the claim that it was to support systems of lighthouses and pilotage. If the lighthouses had been really maintained, perhaps the claim would not have been denied to the extent of armed resistance. But the Tripolitan Government was forced to withdraw it at the cannon's mouth, and since then the navigation of the Mediterranean has been legally free, though we believe that the British Government has since, on one or two occasions, found it necessary to chastise the Moorish pirates. The Sound dues exacted by the Danish Government from time immemorial, on the passage of a ship through the Categat, have also been abandoned within a few years, and again through the influence of the Government of the United States. The Sound dues had a more reasonable and just basis than the exactions of Moorish States, and a money consideration was given for their abandonment.

It will thus be seen that our National Government has been active and influential in removing compulsory pilotage in foreign waters. It has done very little, however, in the same direction at home. The regulation of pilots has been left to the State Governments, and we have in the harbor of New York two sets of pilots, acting under different laws, subject to different authorities, and pursuing different methods, but both animated by the same leading purpose, that of exacting as much as possible from the commerce of New York, and contributing to make our port one of the most expensive to shipping (as it is, indeed, to nearly every other industry) in the world. One of these bodies of pilots is under the laws of New York, and the other under those of New Jersey, which controls the old port of Perth Amboy. Their exactions were not the subject of serious complaint until the number of small steamers employed in the coastwise trade had greatly increased. These steamers no more need pilots than do ferry-boats, and to compel them to pay pilotage is felt by their owners to be a great burden.

The attention of Congress has been called to the matter. It is clearly the duty of that body to make the regulation of pilotage a national affair, taking it out of the hands of the State Governments, and all compulsory pilotage ought to be abolished. There is no more reason in compelling a ship-owner to employ a pilot than to insure their ships. Marine Insurance Companies are a great boon to commerce, but no one would think of compelling a ship-owner to insure his vessel at extravagant rates, on the ground that Marine Insurance Companies must be maintained. The pilots assert that they cannot support their establishments without the aid of compulsory pilotage. This is evidently not true. The great Marine Insurance Companies would be their stanch friends, and in all cases, where their services would be likely to be needed, would insist in their policies of insurance upon the employment of pilots. All experience demonstrates that any legitimate industry thrives best when freed from the "protection" of law. Besides, New Hampshire and Maine have abolished compulsory pilotage, and there is no complaint of the effect in any quarter. Any good pilot knows that ordinary coasters do not need pilots on entering or leaving the port of New York. It is not honest, therefore, to exact pilotage from them.

Compulsory pilotage must go. Slavery and polygamy were denounced as "twin relics of barbarism." Compulsory pilotage is a relic of piracy; it is intolerable to the spirit of the age, and especially burdensome to the commerce of the Metropolis of the Western World. It must go!

THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA.

IT is not enough that the United States should be a great food-producing country, able to feed its own population and have a considerable surplus for export. We have other interests deserving of fostering care, other productions which the people of many countries, if permitted, would gladly receive in exchange for products of their own. Our manufactured goods, whether of iron, steel, wood, leather, cotton, or other material, are second to none in the world. In many lines of manufacture the Yankees are admittedly far in advance of England and other manufacturing nations. With energy, skill and natural advantages at command, there is no valid reason why the products of our workshops and mills should not be vigorously pushed into the several markets of the New and Old Worlds. Canada, Mexico, the West Indies, the States of Central and South America, the islands of the Pacific, and the empires of Japan and China, are easily accessible. Their combined populations, numbering hundreds of millions, can and ought to have their wants supplied from the industries of this country. That it is otherwise, results from a lack of American statesmanship rather than from any inability or want of disposition on the part of our people to supply the trade.

It requires no argument to prove to practical men the advantages to be derived from foreign commerce. To increase our exports to the extent of five hundred millions per annum is to add one hundred millions of dollars, at least, to the permanent wealth of the country, and a larger sum proportioned to an increase of trade. Five hundred or one thousand millions more produced in the country for foreign consumption means continuous employment to the labor classes, with good times and prosperity to all. But we can only have results through the employment of means to bring them about. We require proper commercial treaties with all peoples likely to use our products, manufactured or otherwise. We need a live consular service wherever there appears to be an entering wedge for American commerce. Furthermore, we should do our own carrying trade, and to this end require lines of steamships with American registers and carrying the American flag.

In this view, the proposal of Secretary Evarts to send a strong diplomatic commission to China with a view to negotiating a new treaty is a movement which the good sense of the country will approve. Although the mass of Congressmen may see nothing in the Chinese question beyond the miserable local quarrel on the Pacific coast, and may not deem the commission worthy of the expense to be incurred, yet the practical men of the country will take a more exalted view of the matter. Even the people of England see in the appointment of this commission something more than the settlement of a mere demagogical brawl over the employment of Chinese labor in California. It has awakened the trade jealousies of British merchants, and stirred the fears of the most intelligent of the English press. The Pall Mall Gazette, a journal of weight and influence, in commenting on the appointment of this commission, says that it "is a matter which no complications in Europe should keep England from closely watching." Owing to a change of popular opinion in Asiatic countries as regards America and European countries, the Gazette is led to believe that Americans, meaning the people of the United States, may become England's most formidable competitors in the far East. "A very slight gain in the shape of a reciprocity treaty," it remarks, "would give American trade a decided advantage in Chinese ports."

The interests of commerce have been the inspiring motive of our several treaties with China. Our trade relations with that country are on the increase, and it is not to be supposed that in negotiating a new treaty our Government will lose sight of the means to strengthen and increase commercial intercourse between the two countries. China manifests a disposition to become a good customer, and the opportunity thus opened to us should be utilized. The export of California flour to the Celestial Empire amounted to 17,335 tons in 1877; 20,737 tons in 1878, and 22,954 tons in 1879. The increase of last year over 1878 amounted to 26,000 barrels. In addition to breadstuffs, China receives from California more than one half of her entire product of quicksilver. But it is not a single State which profits through commerce with China. The country at large shares the benefit. From English sources we learn that during the four years ending with 1877 there was a steady and significant increase in the imports of American goods at Shanghai. The following table is given by Her Majesty's consul in his report for 1878:

Digitized by Google

IMPORTS OF AMERICAN GOODS.

	1874.	1875.	1876.	1877.
	Bales.	Bales.	Bales.	Bales.
Drills.....	2,630	6,891	9,863	19,612
Sheetings	1,235	2,000	4,365	14,461
Jeans....	.....	.....	360	2,597

"The demand for British fabrics," says our English authority, "is yearly decreasing, and their place is being supplied by American manufacturers. Gray shirtings have been imported into Chefoo during the last five years in the following quantities: 1874, 348,399 pieces; in 1875, 347,259 pieces; in 1876, 209,142 pieces; in 1877, 252,003 pieces; in 1878, 229,142 pieces." So, too, with American drills. Although forty per cent. dearer than the English article, yet the latter are being forced from the market. Last year the imports of English and American goods at Chefoo were as follows: English, drills, 14,673 pieces; American, 58,108 pieces; English sheetings, 871 pieces; American sheetings, 59,943 pieces.

With these facts before us, we cease to wonder at the warning outcry of the Pall Mall Gazette, or that the English are ready to seize upon any pretext to exclude us from China. If we fail to hold and improve our position in the East, it will be because of the stupidity of Congress and the failure of the Government to observe its treaty stipulations. While China admits American flour free of duty, a proposition is pending before Congress to double the duty on Chinese rice. While Americans receive full protection in China, the lives of Chinamen are in constant jeopardy in California. It is now a question whether American trade with China shall be promoted by fair and equitable dealings with that people, or whether Kearneyism and its Congressional sympathizers shall remand us to our old position of outside barbarians.

KEARNEYISM REBUKED.

IT looks very much as if a great many of the workingmen of San Francisco have grown tired of Kearneyism and the blatant demagogism which for a time seduced them into dangerous excesses. At the election last week for a commission of freeholders to revise the City Charter, the Kearneyites were beaten by a large majority; their candidate for State Senator, to fill a vacancy, also sustaining a crushing defeat. Kearney is reported to have been overwhelmed with chagrin and rage by this unexpected rebuff; and it is announced that, in the hope of retaining his power, he and his adherents will attempt to throw out the vote of the citizens' candidates on the ground that the ballots were not printed in accordance with law. But any such attempt must result in intensifying the determination of law-abiding citizens to make an end of the authority of the Sand Lots agitators, while at the same time it would scarcely dispose the courts to pass favorably upon the appeal of Kearney and his lieutenant from the sentence assigning them to the penitentiary. In every aspect of the case, the people of San Francisco are to be congratulated upon a result which demonstrates to the country that they will no longer submit to the mob rule which has so long and seriously prejudiced their interests.

KING-HUNTING.

THE pleasing and exciting sport of king-hunting is becoming common in Europe. In Russia attempts to kill the Czar are almost of weekly occurrence. Persistent efforts have been made to bag the German Emperor. The King of Spain has been shot at on the wing twice within comparatively few months, and the King of Italy, who, as a tame and constitutional monarch, might be supposed to offer no temptation to sportsmen, has had his share of being hunted. Under the French Empire it was the habit of every Italian exile, when time hung heavily on his hands, to amuse himself and tone up his system by going out and taking a shot at Napoleon III. That cunning monarch, however, was never hit, either because he was exceptionally lucky or because your Italian sportsman is far from skillful. Since the overthrow of the Empire there is, of course, an end of this sort of sport in France. Nobody cares to shoot a President. A mere cannibal pot-hunter might, perhaps, not be above taking a shot at President Grévy, but the true sportsman would as soon shoot at a domestic chicken as a Republican President, for Presidents are not, except in the benighted communities of South America, regarded as game.

Without being either churlish and averse to innocent sport, or weakly and sentimentally philanthropic, it is still possible to point out that, as at present conducted, king-hunting in Europe cannot be approved by genuine sportsmen, and needs to be carefully and stringently regulated. If the European Radicals continue to shoot at all seasons, they will sooner or later completely exterminate the game. In all civilized communities it is unlawful to shoot game during the pairing season, but the Spaniards shoot at their King during his honeymoon, and the Italian King is not permitted immunity from sportsmen even on Sunday. This sort of thing can have but one result. If the married and the unmarried, the old Emperor of fourscore years, and the young King just beginning his married life, are liable to be killed on every day in the year, it will not be long before there will not be a monarch or a prince of any kind left in Europe. There will be absolutely nothing for a Nihilist of leisure, or a Socialist with an enthusiasm for political sports, to shoot at. To remedy this evil a close season for kings must be established. It must be declared illegal and made disgraceful for a king to be shot at during his honeymoon, or for a monarch of any kind to be killed who has a family of young princes who are too young to be self-supporting emperors or kings. There should be also certain fixed days—such as Sundays, for example—on which no monarch should be shot at. This would give the game what our Western friends would call "a fair show," and prevent it from being driven out of Europe by the incessant pursuit of insatiable sportsmen.

In Russia things are much worse than they are elsewhere. It is only in Russia that sportsmen are permitted to explode mines with the purpose of blowing up an emperor. These mines are even more unsportsmanlike and reprehensible than the pound nets which have so nearly exterminated the fish of the Great South Bay. The Long Island fishermen were for a long time in the habit of planting these nets in the bay and gathering in their meshes fishes of all sizes, species and age, the vast majority of which were too small to be of any use, and were thus wantonly and wastefully killed. There is the same reckless and wasteful spirit among the Russian Nihilists. In order to kill one Czar they do not hesitate to mine a palace and blow up a dining-room, killing and wounding fifty or sixty persons whom no one regards as game. Or they blow up a railway train with dynamite merely because the Czar is supposed to be on board it, thus doing enormous damage in order to compass the death of a solitary monarch. Such practices should be sternly frowned down by every true sportsman, and it might be well for our sportsmen's clubs to pass resolutions deprecating the use of dynamite and of wholesale explosions by Russian Nihilists.

THE excess of our exports over imports of merchandise, during the year ending with February last, amounted to $212,298,963. The total value of the imports of merchandise into the United States for the same period was $555,561,748.

M. DE LESSEPS sailed for Europe on Thursday last, having failed to awaken any considerable interest in his canal scheme among American capitalists. He is still hopeful, however, that subscriptions may be obtained in this country, and has arranged with a banking-house to receive such as may be offered. Mr. Nathan Appleton will remain at the head of the enterprise in the United States.

SENATOR EDMUNDS does not appear to hanker after the Presidency as eagerly as do some of his colleagues. In a recent conversation he is reported to have said: "I see not a single feature in the Presidential office which would please me." Senator Edmunds has always passed as a man of rare good sense, and the declaration here made will not diminish the popular appreciation of his sagacity.

EVIDENCE of the substantial improvement of business is furnished in the fact that only 77 failures were reported in this city for the first quarter of the present year, the total liabilities being $953,635 and assets valued at about $292,026. The first quarter of 1878 had 232 failures with total liabilities of $20,000,000, and the same period in 1879 had 141 failures, in which the total liabilities were $2,805,512 and assets $959,826.

SECRETARY SHERMAN should be called to account by the President for violating the rules of Civil Service "reform." Not only is he using his position as a Cabinet Minister to promote his Presidential aspirations, but he is permitting officials in his department to employ their time and expend their efforts in the same direction. President Hayes has claimed to be honestly in favor of eliminating the office-holding element from politics; but if he shall acquiesce in Secretary Sherman's abuse of his official position in the manner indicated, he may as well dismiss all expectation that the public will believe in his sincerity.

THE old question of the Bible in the public schools which was raised some time ago in Illinois, has just been decided in the Supreme Court of that State. The school directors of a certain township directed fifteen minutes' reading of the Bible at the opening of every school session, and ordered all scholars during its reading to refrain from other studies. A Roman Catholic citizen, regarding the reading as religious instruction, and not contemplated by the public school system, directed his son not to refrain from studying during the reading of the Bible, whereupon he was expelled from school. The case was carried to a local court, which sustained the school authorities, and this decision is now, on appeal, affirmed by the Supreme Court.

THE temperance reformers are earnestly at work in all directions in furtherance of their cause. Last week a Michigan Representative presented in the House of Representatives a monster petition, 188 yards long, and containing the names of 34,000 ladies belonging to the Temperance Union in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, praying for a commission to inquire into the alcoholic liquor traffic and for such legislation as will prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It was referred to the special committee on the subject and will probably never be heard of again. Congress is not at all likely to concern itself about any question of real interest to the public, no matter how rigorously definite action may be urged by any particular constituency.

THE tide of immigration still flows in with increasing volume. For the week ending March 28th the arrivals at this port were 8,840, while since January 1st there have been registered at Castle Garden a total of 55,000 immigrants. This is about double the number of arrivals for any similar period during the last five years. The main cause of this increased exodus from Europe is undoubtedly the failure of the crops and the general depression of business in the more populous countries. Among the new arrivals, the increase is most notable among the Swedes, Italians and Hungarians. The latter are generally destitute; but the Swedes, like the Germans, are for the most part thrifty and possessed of some means. They go at once to the West, purchase farms, settle down and become good citizens. The Italians mostly settle in the large cities of the East.

EX-GOVERNOR EDWIN D. MORGAN has just performed an act which will add greater lustre to his name than any of the many political services which he has rendered to his State and country. "Desirous of showing his appreciation of the usefulness of the Union Theological Seminary in this city, and aiding it in the great work it is now doing for the country," he has made to that institution the munificent gift of $100,000, the understanding being that it is to be exclusively used for the construction of a new library building and the permanent maintenance of the seminary library. This library is accessible to clergymen of all denominations, and embraces 36,000 volumes and 38,000 pamphlets on theological and historical subjects. Governor Morgan's generous gift may well stimulate other gentlemen of large means to augment by their contributions this and other schools of theology and science.

MESSRS. GILBERT AND SULLIVAN publish a letter in which they announce that they propose to prosecute all theatrical managers who may produce the opera of "The Pirates of Penzance." "Be they men of substance or men of straw, we will fight each individual case on its own merits, and we will come over here, year after year, to do so until the offense is stamped out. We have a great stake at issue—so great a stake that it is well worth our while to spend much time and much money in securing our legitimate rights." It is to be hoped that these gentlemen will adhere to the purpose here stated. They have, under the common law of the country, as distinct a property in their manuscript play as they have in their pocketbooks, and that right should be defended at all hazards. It is high time that the business of pirating plays should be stopped, and Messrs. Sullivan and Gilbert will have the sympathy of all reputable playgoers in their efforts to put an end to the abuse.

ISSUE has at length been joined between the French Government and the Jesuits, the official decrees against the latter having just been published. They are explicit in terms, and seem to leave no avenue of escape for the Jesuits and other unauthorized congregations. They direct that all establishments occupied by Jesuits shall be vacated within three months; that unauthorized congregations must apply to the Government for authorization, and such bodies as shall not ask, or eventually obtain, authorization shall be dissolved. The enforcement of the decrees will, it is understood, be resisted by the Society of Jesus and by many of the regular clergy; and if the Government shall adhere to its position, a conflict and trial of strength will be inevitable. It is said that the unauthorized religious communities in France number 384 for men, with 7,444 members, and 602 for women, with 14,003 members. The bulk of these, however, are not Jesuits. Paris and its suburbs contain 123 Jesuit communities, and the Jesuit colleges throughout France number twenty-seven.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE Irish Famine Fund in this city has reached a total of over $321,000.

THE Bill providing for the New York Exhibition of 1883 has passed the Senate.

THE majority for law and order at the San Francisco election last week was 7,497.

THE United States Treasury bought $5,000,000 of bonds March 31st for the sinking fund.

GENERAL GRANT had a cordial reception last week at New Orleans, where he spent several days.

A BILL has been reported to the House of Representatives to establish a marine hospital on Bedloe's Island.

THE Cabinet has decided to recommend legislation looking to the establishment of a civil government for Alaska.

MR. JOHN D. LAWSON, of this city, has been appointed by Governor Cornell as State Superintendent of Insurance.

A DISPATCH from Alexandria, Egypt, announces the successful embarkation, March 31st, of the obelisk for New York.

A COMPANY has been organized in this city, with a proposed capital of $4,000,000, to lay another cable across the Atlantic.

A FIRE at Bradford, Pa., April 2d, destroyed eighteen buildings, including the Academy of Music, involving a total loss of $150,000.

THE Kansas Republicans have elected a solid Blaine delegation to the Chicago Convention. The Kansas Democrats have chosen a delegation favorable to Mr. Tilden's nomination.

EX-GOVERNOR RICE, General N. P. Banks and other leading Massachusetts Republicans have issued an address to the Republicans of the State, favoring the nomination of General Grant for the Presidency.

THE Diplomatic and Consular Bill, passed by the House of Representatives last week, appropriates the sum of $1,034,000, which includes $40,840 to enable Secretary Evarts to extend this service in the interests of commerce.

THE New York Democratic State Convention to nominate delegates to the National Convention will be held at Syracuse, April 20th. A Tammany convention opposed to Mr. Tilden will be held at the same place on the same day.

IN a speech at Mansfield, Ohio, last week, Secretary Sherman said he would not consent a candidate for the Presidency unless the Republicans of Ohio supported him in the election of delegates to Chicago with substantial unanimity.

THE New York East Methodist Conference has adopted a resolution declaring that "the time has come when some provision should be made for extending the pastoral term beyond three years in those exceptional cases where emergencies require it, provided some plan can be adopted for such an extension of time without interfering with the true and efficient itinerancy."

EDWARD BILL, one of the oldest merchants in New York City, a prominent member of the Produce Exchange, and a Mason of high standing, died March 31st, of apoplexy, aged 79; Professor James Dascomb, for forty-five years a member of the faculty of Oberlin College, died at Cincinnati on April 1st, and George A. Baker, the distinguished portrait painter of New York, on April 2d.

Foreign.

THE rivers Jucar and Segura, in Spain, and their tributaries, have overflowed their banks, and the towns of Alcira and Onhuela have been inundated.

THE religious associations of France will probably contest in the courts the legality of the Government decrees against the unauthorized societies, claiming that the decrees are based on obsolete laws.

IT is rumored that the Prussian Government intend, at the supplementary session of the Landtag, to ask for full powers to enable them to administer the ecclesiastical laws in a less rigorous spirit.

THE possibility of war with China is freely discussed in St. Petersburg, and Russia is said to be endeavoring to induce the King of Burmah to join the proposed Japano-Siamese alliance against China.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S sixty-fifth birthday was celebrated on the 1st inst. His palace was flooded with birthday offerings from all parts of Europe, and the Emperor William and many other distinguished persons visited him.

To pave the way for some desirable amendments to be introduced into the Bulgarian Charter, the Emperor of Russia has permitted Prince Alexander of Bulgaria to enlist 5,000 Russian subjects in the military service of the Principality.

A DECREE by the Government of Venezuela is published, declaring navigation of the Orinoco closed, as the coast where the river discharges is blockaded. This would indicate that the troubles in Venezuela are not over, as was last reported.

THE foreign ambassadors at Constantinople have declined to appoint additional physicians to examine into the sanity of the assassin of Colonel Commerell, and sentence will probably be pronounced, in accordance with the evidence already taken.

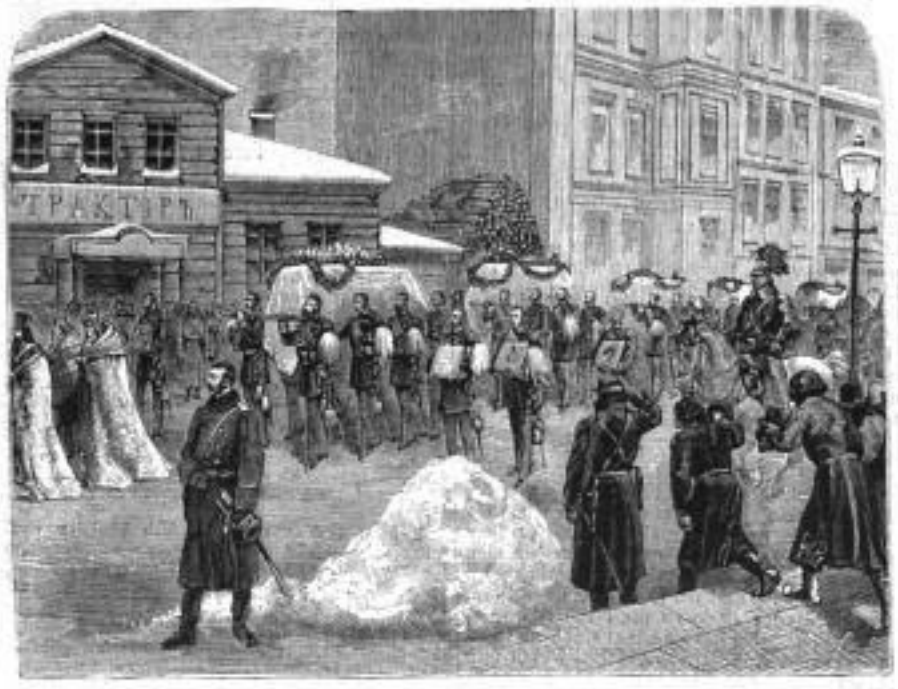
MINISTER FAIRCHILD had a brilliant reception at the Court of Madrid, March 31st. King Alfonso expressed the hope that the good relations and mutual friendship hitherto maintained between the United States and Spain would be continued.

THE indefinite postponement of General Skobeleff's departure to Turkestan, and the dispatch of a Russian division to Kuldja, are considered to indicate an indecision existing in Russian Ministerial circles which is attributed to the success of the English Liberals.

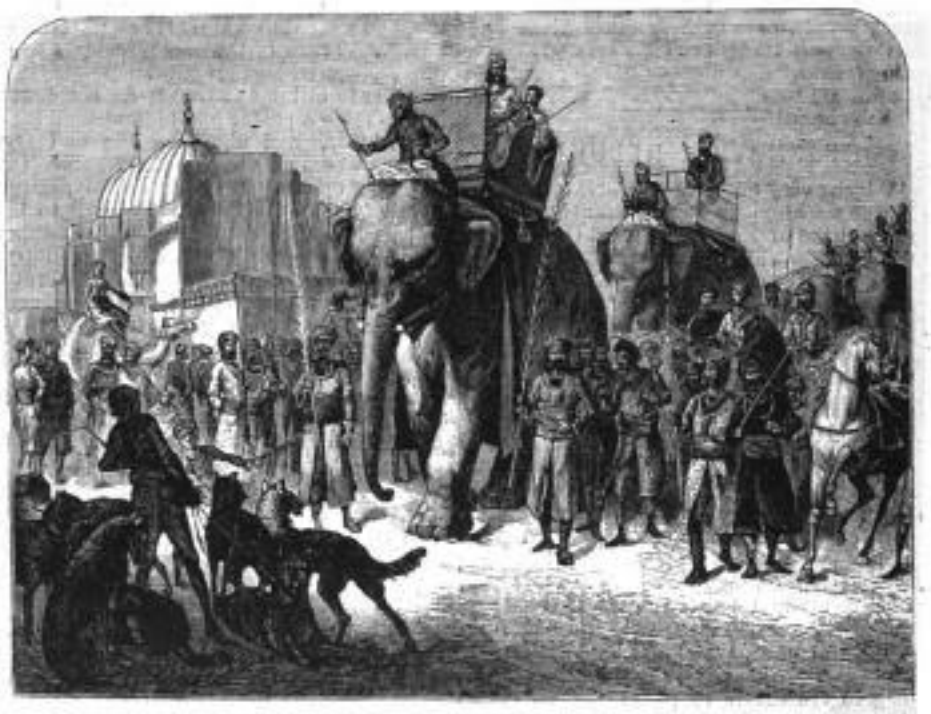
SIR FRANCIS HINCKS and the other directors of the Consolidated Bank at Montreal, against whom true bills were found at the last session for making false returns, have been formally acquitted at the Court of Queen's Bench, the private prosecutor having withdrawn the accusation, and the Crown having no evidence to offer.

AMONG the new members of the British Parliament are Professors Bryce, Thorold Rogers and Stuart Mackelyne, Charles Bradlaugh, the noted Radical; Henry Labouchere, the editor of Truth; Justin McCarthy, who has been re-elected without opposition, of the Athenæum; Sir Charles W. Dilke, H. L. Ingram, of the Illustrated London News, and J. Passmore Edwards, of the London Echo.

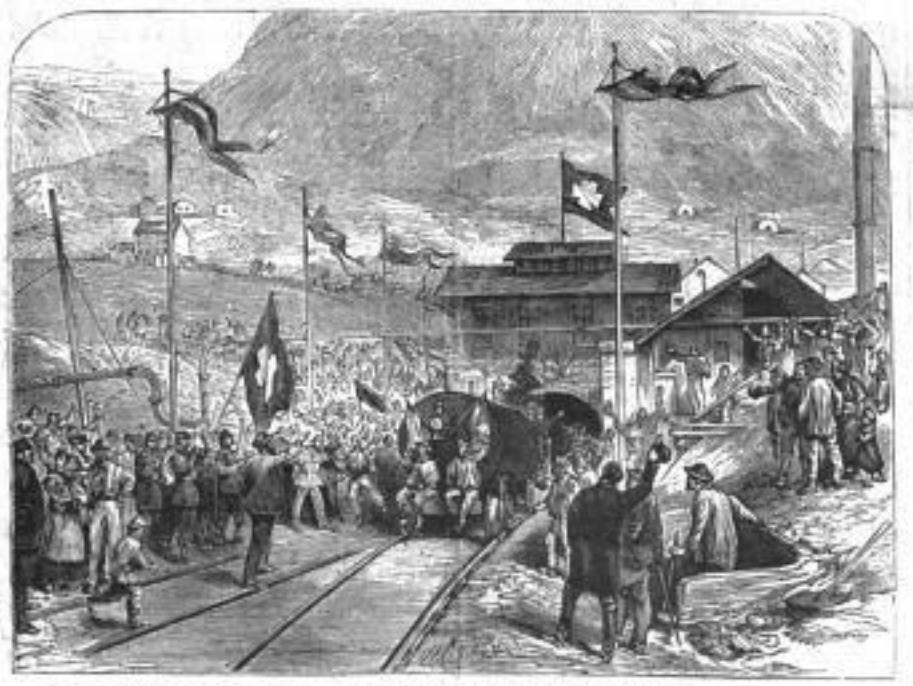
Digitized by Google



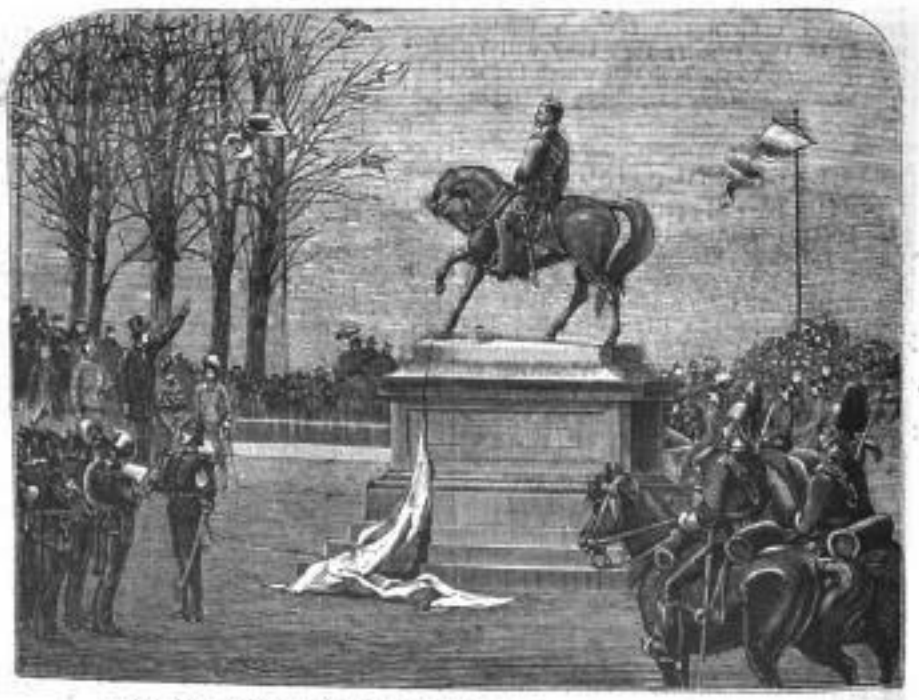
The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 103.



THE ST. GOTHARD TUNNEL.—THE MEETING OF THE TWO LINES.

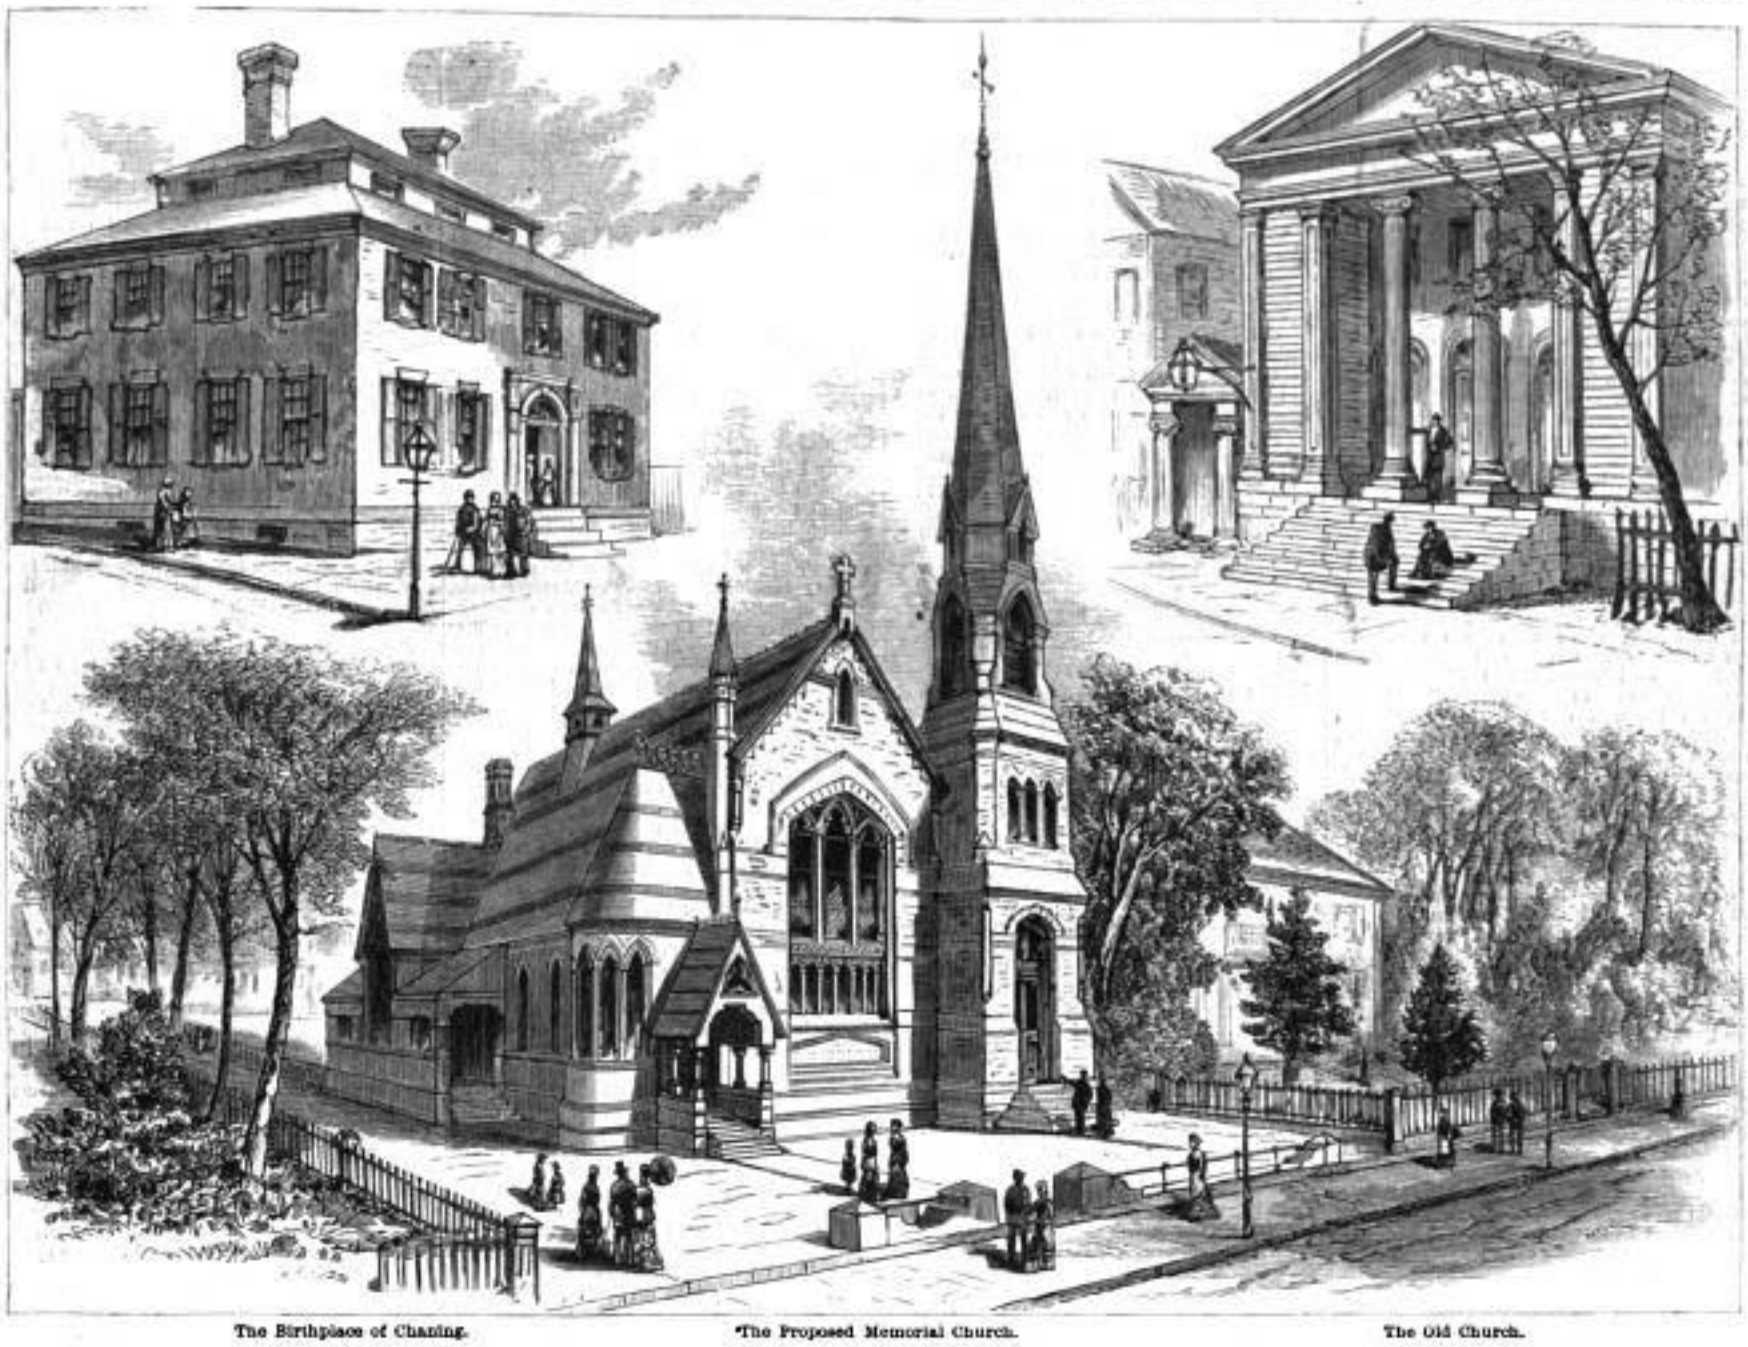


THE ST. GOTHARD TUNNEL.—THE FIRST TRAIN THROUGH.



RUSSIA.—FUNERAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE WINTER PALACE EXPLOSION.

INDIA.—AN EAST INDIAN PRINCE STARTING FOR A HUNT.



THE ST. GOTHARD TUNNEL.—ARRIVAL OF THE FIRST TRAIN AT THE ITALIAN END.

IRELAND.—UNVEILING THE GOUGH STATUE, PHŒNIX PARK, DUBLIN.

Digitized by Google

The Birthplace of Channing. The Proposed Memorial Church. The Old Church.

RHODE ISLAND.—CELEBRATION OF THE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF WILLIAM E. CHANNING.—FROM SKETCHES BY W. P. BODFISH.—SEE PAGE 103.

1. On Winter Picket Duty. 2. Going for Water with the Dog Train. 3. Examining a Trail. 4. Company K, Fifth Infantry, Chasing Hostile Indians through Heavy Snow.

MONTANA.—ILLUSTRATIONS OF LIFE IN GENERAL MILES'S COMMAND.—FROM SKETCHES BY CHAS. HOLTEN.—SEE PAGE 103.

Digitized by Google

HER RIVAL.

A YOUNG lady was sauntering along the Quai, by the side of the Seine, pausing at every one of the shelves of old books that lined the parapets, and now and then asking the price of some moth-eaten, battered volume from the equally moth-eaten and battered proprietor, meditating over his pipe under the budding trees. She was very prettily and very daintily dressed, but her face and carriage showed so much quiet resolution and self-reliance, that the boldest idler of the Boulevards would have been deterred from annoying her even in cynical Paris and on the very boundary of the Latin Quarter. She was deep in a quaint little copy of "La Bruyère," some sixty years old, which was offered at half a franc, when she heard a burst of light laughter not far from her ear, so strangely mingled of sweetness and a kind of haunting mockery that she involuntarily raised her eyes.

Approaching her were a young man and a girl, perhaps two or three years older than herself, and as near the perfection of physical beauty as it was possible for a woman to be, Miss de Forest acknowledged to herself with a strange pang. She had a profusion of pale chestnut hair, a skin of lilies and roses, large liquid eyes, a perfectly developed figure, and an undulating grace of motion which did not belong to the streets of Paris. She was perfectly well-dressed; but while Miss de Forest, in her own toilet, displayed the happy medium between chic and dignity characteristic of the demoiselle du meilleur monde of whatever nationality, the girl who suddenly confronted her with an impertinent glance had more of the quality of chic than was strictly desirable. "She is not a lady," thought Miss de Forest, "a grisette, probably," and the jealous pang deepened, for the man accompanying this girl—the man who raised his hat without looking at her, while a faint color overspread his handsome features and clear skin—was the man of all others to Amy de Forest. She had loved Arthur Duncan for more than a year, had watched the ebb and flow of his genius, had encouraged him to new effort in his despondent hours, and shared with him the pleasure of his successes. There had grown up between them a comradeship which on her side had ripened into something deeper, and on his had led to the thousand subtle marks of preference that may mean nothing or anything. And what in other men meant nothing, seemed in Arthur Duncan to mean everything, so much so that Amy de Forest, clever, self-possessed girl as she was, had come to believe in the absolute predominance in the scheme of her future life of this one figure. Only yesterday evening they had sat long together in the embrasure of the wide window that looked upon the gardens of the Luxembourg while the lamps sprang into light through the dusk; and when he went away, pleading an engagement in a friend's studio, he had lifted her hand to his lips in the darkness and called her his better angel.

The girl bit her lips and opened the "La Bruyère" again—the bitter, healthy draught of the old wit's cynicism acted upon her as a tonic and kept back the starting tears. The lives of her men-friends outside of her mother's drawing-room did not concern her, she thought; but it was hard that Arthur, with his talk of aspiration towards an ideal and the elevation of art above sordid realism, should find his inspiration in the soul of a grisette. And yet she could not blame him; the girl was beautiful—like a white rounded water-lily with dewy petals. Perhaps if she, herself, were a man—— She closed the book abruptly and paid the old bouquiniste for it, and then turned up a long avenue that leads past the Pantheon to the gardens of the Luxembourg. She liked these gardens better than the stately alleys of the Tuileries. There was more of the flavor of old Paris about them before the Second Empire—the Paris of De Musset and Balzac. She liked the threadbare students with their books, the knots of sewing-girls, the bourgeoise mothers and nurses, with the children playing around them; the old men, with red ribbons in the buttonholes of their rusty broadcloth coats.

The Spring wind swept down the avenues, scented with flower-odors from the market of St. Sulpice. Miss de Forest wandered on to where the great fountain stands, half-dried, with the water shallow over the rockwork of its basin, and green, wet beards dripping about the Tritons and Neptunes, and ivy throwing its arms out from the crevices of their shapes, and, overhead, new-leafing trees casting a tender twilight upon the quiet place. The voices of children came from the main avenue. Miss de Forest seated herself on the edge of the basin and looked into the shallow water, yellow with the dead leaves in its bed. The reflection of her own face came back to her framed in the shadow-boughs.

There had been times when its bright blue eyes and delicate outlines had seemed to her to fill all the requirements of beauty, but now, darkened by the decaying leaves and with the memory of the splendid creature she had just seen rising before her, it seemed quite impossible that any man could ever regard her as beautiful.

"Pure physical beauty is the best worth having," she thought, with a little sigh. And then she thought many things that a girl might think under the circumstances, but that poets set down only in allegory—the world-old problem of the two women struggling for authority over the soul of the one man, as old as history and legend—Tannhäuser bound in the chains of Venus while his chaste Elizabeth awaited his return. All men solve it for themselves, and all women in one way or another bide the issue of it.

Miss de Forest fell to studying her daintily-gloved little hands as they lay on her lap, and especially the place where last night Arthur Duncan's lips had rested. A shadow came between herself and the sunlight beyond the trees, and, glancing up, she saw before her the man she loved. She looked up at him with a smile slightly touched with the cynicism learned from the small book in her lap.

"What charming weather, is it not? The air is full of Spring sounds to-day. I have been walking a long distance."

"Alone, Miss de Forest?"

"Yes, why not? I much prefer walking alone unless I have a very agreeable companion, and you know I am not a demoiselle française to be bound by les convenances."

Were these two people talking the smallest of small-talk, the two who had parted the night before with the look in their meeting eyes that makes speech useless? A shadow had come between them—the shadow of a woman with limpid eyes and a shape like a pictured goddess. There was a moment's silence. A bird sang in the tree overhead, a leaf whirled down into the translucent water, the drops trickled from the green beard of the water-god.

"When will you come and see my picture, as you promised?"

"Whenever mamma will go with me. You know I cannot go to your studio alone."

There was a distant, haughty ring in her voice that Arthur Duncan had never heard before.

"I am going home," she said, rising. "I am tired—I have walked too far. Will you not come in this evening?"

"Thanks; I am sorry, but I have made an engagement which I can scarcely break."

"Ah!"

"May I take you to your door? The streets are full of students and all kinds of people."

"Thanks; I have no fear. I do not think any one will trouble me."

Sitting that evening in the tender Spring twilight among the flowers of the balcony high above the street, with a boy-artist on a low stool at her feet, looking up in a sort of adoration at the cloud of golden hair that was like a halo above her white gown, Amy de Forest asked her young page if he had seen Arthur Duncan of late.

"No one sees much of him now. He's engaged, the fellows say, in some sort of frightful love affair with a Spanish girl who dances at the Bullier. She posed for the picture he has just finished. The fellows say it's an awfully clever thing—sure to get into the Salon next year. He calls it the 'Goddess of Morning.'"

Yes, that was the name he had told her. So it was her rival she had met yesterday—a paid dancer at a students' ball! But, certainly, Arthur Duncan's artistic instincts were not at fault, for the girl was an ideal incarnate of morning dew and rosy cloud and vaporous sunlight. It gave her pleasure, despite her humiliation, to realize the truth and poetry of his conception.

"You have never been to the Bullier, of course, Miss de Forest. But a great many American girls do go—under veils, of course, and well protected."

"I confess I have always wished to go. I've no doubt, if I were a man, I should be a very dissipated one."

"For a little while, perhaps," said the wise young man at her feet; "but you would soon get tired of it—it is so frightfully monotonous, even in Paris. But if Mrs. de Forest would go, a dozen of us would form a battalion of escort for you."

"Does this girl dance there to-night?"

"Yes; three times a week, and dances divinely."

"What is her name?"

"Augustine. These waifs of Paris never have any surname."

"I should like to see her."

The lamps were lighted, more artists came in, and the conversation turned on Arthur Duncan's picture, which those who had seen it pronounced worthy of Lefebure himself.

"Mrs. de Forest," said the boy-artist, Guy Rainsford, "Miss de Forest has just confided to me an overwhelming desire to see the ball at the Bullier. Won't you gratify her and come to-night? No one will recognize you under your veils, and here are eight strong men ready to protect you. We are all going. Think of all the good American folk—clergymen and deacons—who go to the Mabille, and certainly this is no worse."

Mrs. de Forest demurred a little, but finally consented. She had peculiar theories of education which had perhaps given Amy the truthful, healthy outlook upon life which she possessed in a remarkable degree for so young a woman. If she had none of the illusions that dwarf the mental vision of more romantic girls, she had pure and generous instincts, unbiased by fear or prejudice. What corruption could there be in a tawdry students' ball for a girl who had weighed the problems of life in her own mind and found the balance in favor of law and order?

It was a noisy and motley scene they encountered—gaudy and common of necessity—but with some artistic quality in its glare, born of the city and the people. Guy Rainsford felt Miss de Forest shrink as she clung to his arm.

"What is the matter, Miss de Forest? Are you afraid?"

"No; only sorry—only sorry for these poor people. I don't think I have a taste for dissipation, after all, Mr. Rainsford."

"I thought the sight of a little would cure you. If women in general could see something of life they would soon lose that morbid admiration for fastness which troubles many of them. Ah, there is Augustine dancing; she is quite different from the rest."

The party forced its way through the crowd to within a few feet of its edge. In the space left for the dancers stood a shapely girl, with her fair chestnut hair rolled high above and about her head, her perfect arms and shoulders bared and adorned with the sequins of the Palais Royal, a scarlet bodice and a short skirt of yellow satin flounced with black lace. There was a touch of paint on her lashes and an artificial depth of color on her lovely cheek. The castanets rattled as she curved her arms above her head and twinkled her light feet, swaying her lithe body to and fro, till with her large, pale head she looked like the round lily-cup swaying on the water's surface, to which Miss de Forest had that morning compared her. In the front of the crowd stood Arthur Duncan, towering head and shoulders above his neighbors, his handsome face aglow, his eyes brilliant with excitement and eagerly following every curve of the dancer's motion.

"He has forgotten that I exist," thought Amy de Forest, bitterly, and she trembled from head to foot. "Take me home, Mr. Rainsford. Speak to mamma, please—the air here is stifling. I am sorry to take you away, but I do not feel able to stay."

Guy Rainsford took Mrs. de Forest and her daughter home and then returned to the ball. One of the other men told him that Arthur Duncan looked strangely troubled when he was informed that Miss de Forest had gone away ill with the atmosphere of the place.

When the dance was over Arthur stole away to the door of the dancer's dressing-room, and waited to take her home to her rooms, high up in one of the old houses frowned upon by the Sorbonne. The exercise and the applause of the crowd had heightened her beauty and made her absolutely dazzling in her radiant health and youth. Arthur, looking upon her as she sat over her supper, drinking the red wine, mixing her salad with the hearty abandon of the peasant nature she had brought from the Pyrenees, felt strangely the pathos of the stern necessity which could cast this perfect creature, this type of the world's youth and morning under the iron wheels of the great Parisian death-cart. The chimes of the Sorbonne struck the four-quarters, soft, sweet, little voices. In all his after life wherever he found a guitar, his hand instinctively struck the four sweet small notes, and before him rose a vision of a woman enveloped in floating fair hair, with white robes loose about her shoulders, and large eyes just touched with slumber like the great pale morning star.

Miss de Forest visited his studio the following day. Her eyes were heavy, and dark shadows played about them. She, too, had heard the Sorbonne chimes strike the hour. A strange fascination led her to wish to see the pictured face that had done her so much of harm. When she saw the vaporous, buoyant shape, with its rounded outlines defined by the floating drapery, the long fair hair curving among the clouds, the lovely, sensuous face softened to the evanescence and dewiness of a dream, she knew that she could never hope to rival with this wonderful creature. She congratulated Mr. Duncan cordially on the success of his work, and went home with a breaking heart.

When Mr. Duncan, that evening, took his way to Augustine's rooms, he found her gone. She had moved away that morning, the concierge said, taking everything with her. On the bare table at which she had sat at supper the night before, he found a note addressed to himself, and written in that half-French, half-Spanish idiom which had been so effective coming from her full red lips, and was no less so, misspelt on paper.

"MON AMI—Your picture is finished. You have no further need of me. I am tired of the Quartier, the artists, the dancing, the bad cooking. I have moved across the Seine into a higher sphere. Mon cher, Do not try to follow me; it would be useless. I do not care a sou for you. I have deceived you a thousand times, as you have that pauvre petite demoiselle we met yesterday. I asked you if she were your maîtresse, you said No; but last night I saw her at the Bullier. Under her veil the great tears were in her eyes. She loves you, mi amigo. I can read faces. Marry her, make her happy. You will never do it while I remain near you, for I have five times her power over you: c'est pour ça que je m'esquive!"

He read and re-read the letter, folded it and put it in his pocket, gave one last glance about the room. When the chimes struck the quarter-hour, he started as from a dream, and went down-stairs out into the night. He strolled along the quay, looked down into the rushing water that seemed to bear the burdens of weary hearts down to their resting-place in the sea. A great star hung over Notre Dame, lambent and steady. Which was it like, Augustine or Amy—poor little Amy who had watched and waited for him, all unconscious of Augustine's existence? That chapter of his life was closed. He wondered whether it was love he had felt for Augustine, or the sensuous admiration of the artistic temperament. She had been to him his goddess of morning, and every fibre of his soul had been filled with the divine impulse of creation—she was his picture, his life, himself. And yet it was always of Amy that he had thought while he worked, always her voice that sounded in his ear, spurring him on to effort and success. He passed her house and saw a gleam of white in the moonlight among the flowers of her balcony. He would go in and tell her all.

He found her alone, sitting on a low chair among the pansies and heliotrope and early roses. They talked upon indifferent subjects, more and more remote from the one nearest their hearts. At length Arthur said, "I heard you were at the Bullier last evening, Miss de Forest."

"Yes. Mr. Rainsford persuaded mamma to go. I was eager to see the original of your picture. She is certainly very beautiful. It was the same person I saw you with yesterday morning, I think."

"Yes; she has left the Quartier and gone no one knows whither. She—Amy, will you put an end to all my doubts and falterings? Will you let me tell you that I love you? Will you be my wife as you have always been my better angel?"

"I had fancied, indeed I had been told, that you were very much in love with your model. You can scarcely love two women at once."

"She has gone for ever."

"And I am the pis aller. Thanks!"

"Amy, I never loved her—it was simply that she was the ideal of my picture, and the two were so at one in my mind that I could not separate them. You yourself are artist enough to understand that. And I had no means of knowing that you loved me. Only Augustine herself revealed it to me." And then he read her those portions of the dancer's note that concerned herself.

Amy pondered long over it. She did not believe the dancer's words that she did not care for Arthur, that she was tired of the Quartier. She had seen those lovely eyes fill with light when they fell upon him in the dance rhythm. And afterwards she heard, in some careless studio-talk, that "the Spanish girl had been mad about Duncan." It was strange to her to think that the white flower of self-sacrifice could bud and bloom in the soul of a paid dancer at a students' ball.

She forgave him, for she loved him, and if she had been a man herself she doubted if her life would have been blameless. And the shadow of the Spanish dancer passed out from their lives.

A year passed. Arthur's picture had been hung on the line in the Salon, and he had, oftener than his wife knew, sauntered by, wondering if the Spanish girl would not hear of its being there and come to look at her own beauty. She had never been heard of in the Quartier since she left it. More than one offer had been made for the "Goddess of Morning," but Amy would not let it go—it had been her wedding gift from her husband.

Spring had come again. The Luxembourg gardens were filled as before with gay crowds—the streets of Paris were beautiful with flowers. One morning a man in an official dress brought a folded paper to Arthur as he worked in his studio. On it was written: "A Spanish woman, very ill in the hospital, begs to see M. le peintre Duncan. Will monsieur have the complaisance to come to the poor soul." He wrote a note to his wife, telling her of the circumstance, and went across Paris with the messenger, stopping only a moment for a few white water lilies that a boy thrust into his hand in the market.

They showed him into a ward where women lay ill of consumption in all its stages, and in a cot near the window, where the Spring sunlight streamed over her, he found Augustine—still lovely with the loveliness of approaching spirithood, but no longer the joyous goddess of morning; only a pale, fragile, large-eyed woman, whose life was almost ended.

"I knew you would come—you were always good. I wanted to see you before I died. I loved you when I left you, mon ami. I would have died for you; but your love was not for me—a model—a paid dancer. I was wild in dissipation after I left the Quartier. I tried hard to kill myself and I have succeeded. With my first sign of illness came desertion and poverty. The day I was brought here I had gone to see your picture, and I fell down before it."

He had laid the water-lilies within reach of her thin fingers; she took them up and caressed the fleshy leaves.

"They are like those I used to gather in my childhood in a little village among the mountains. I wish I had never come to Paris. But then I should never have met you. She is beautiful and good, your young wife, but she cannot love you as I did. Tiens! I am better. Perhaps I may live—my hair has not changed—you used to kiss it once, kiss it now, only once—she will not care—she has had you for a whole year, and I have hungered and thirsted for one touch of your hand."

There was a rustle of drapery in the path between the beds, and Amy stood suddenly by her husband's side in her black dress and her sweet young matronhood, with flowers, violets and heliotropes and pale roses in her hands. The sick woman raised herself.

"You here—his wife!"

"It was you who gave him to me," said Amy, in the soft low notes that the year's love had brought into her voice.

"You were jealous of me once, madame," said the dancer. "You have no need to fear now."

Amy laid the flowers in her hand. "You will get well again, and you will leave Paris and live in the country among the flowers."

"Among the flowers—yes, in my own country—up in the mountains where the lilies grow in the streams. Oh, yes—I shall go back!" her eyes grew bright, her face radiant, for one instant she was again the Aurora of the Quartier. Suddenly she cried out: "I am choking! Some water! My medicine!" and the life-stream rose to her lips.

Arthur Duncan caught her in his arms and Amy knelt by the poor bed. The fast dulling eyes met Arthur's. He touched her hair with his lips. The beautiful head fell back on his arm, the beautiful shoulders that had once shone above the scarlet bodice in the dance-measure were clothed with a scarlet that scorched the white lilies on her breast, even as Paris had blighted the pure white lily of her life.

POSSIBLE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

HON. E. B. WASHBURNE.

ELIHU B. WASHBURNE, who is regarded by many as the strongest candidate the Republican Party can name for President, comes of a gifted family, three of whom have sat together in the House of Representatives, and two of whom have been Governors of their States. A continuous service of sixteen years in the House and a service half as long as the head of the American Legation in France comprises his public life, which extends over twenty-five years. He is a native of Maine, born in

Digitized by Google

Livermore, September 23d, 1816. Mr. Washburne began life as a printer, but he soon abandoned that trade, and devoted himself to the study of law. He settled in Galena, Ill., and entered into its political life with so much energy that in the Fall of 1852 he was sent to Congress from the First District of Illinois by a small plurality over two competitors, and as a Republican Mr. Washburne was thenceforth elected to the Lower Chamber at Washington every other year for fourteen years. From the Kansas-Nebraska Bill to the Fifteenth Amendment Mr. Washburne had the opportunity of voting for every party measure of the Republican Party, and he consistently improved his chance. In the Thirty-third and the Thirty-fifth Congress Mr. Washburne was in the minority, and his position on committee was no indication of his standing in the House; but he shared in the long contests by which Mr. Banks was elected as Speaker of the Thirty-fourth and Mr. Pennington Speaker of the Thirty-fifth Congress, and in both these bodies he was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Commerce. His party was in an overwhelming majority in the Thirty-sixth, Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth Congresses, but in none of them did he reach a higher position than in his second term of service, till the death of Thaddeus Stevens during the Fortieth Congress placed Mr. Washburne at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, a position he held for a single session. Mr. Washburne conducted the investigation carried on just at the close of the war by the Special Committee on Immigration, and in the next Congress he was chairman of the committee investigating the Memphis riots.

During his long term of service Mr. Washburne earned one title to his credit, his persistent objection to items in appropriation bills gaining him the popular name of "The Watch-dog of the Treasury."

Mr. Washburne did his full share towards the nomination of Mr. Lincoln, and he enjoyed the exceptional favor of that Administration up to the time of Mr. Lincoln's death, and acted as chairman of the special committee which accompanied Mr. Lincoln's remains to Springfield. In 1864 he appeared in the Illinois Legislature as a candidate for a seat in the United States Senate, but Mr. Yates was just then fresh from his brilliant success as a War Governor, and Mr. Washburne retired defeated from the only contest which varied the unvarying success which attended him in his own Congressional district. There he reigned supreme, and there he met with final and lasting success by discovering President Grant among his constituents. The successive steps of his acquaintance with Mr. Grant have been told too often to need repetition here. The commission of colonel which he obtained for Governor Yates, the nomination as brigadier which he made at a later date, when four brigadiers apiece were parceled among the Illinois Congressmen, the urgent remonstrance which saved Major-General Grant from removal after the drawn battle of Shiloh and the lingering suspense at Vicksburg, the Bill by which the grade of Lieutenant-General was revived, and the later Bill by which the grade of General, held only by Washington in the previous history of the national arms, was resuscitated—all these these things have been told so often that the larger part of Mr. Washburne's biographies afford a tolerably complete sketch of the life and public services of President Grant. Not satisfied with heaping upon the military hero the military honors which he deserved, Mr. Washburne was early in the field in advocacy of his civil promotion, and a letter written to Mr. Washburne from before Vicksburg was long accepted as one of the early utterances of Mr. Grant's political creed.

Upon the election of General Grant he chose Mr. Washburne for his Secretary of State, but the condition of his health was such that after a brief service he was obliged to tender his resignation. He was then appointed Minister to France. He had been at his post but a short time when France declared war upon the North German Confederation, and instead of the quiet and rest he was seeking, there opened for him a season of extraordinary excitement and responsibility. Before hostilities were begun, the archives of the Prussian Embassy and the interests of the people of the various German States then residing in Paris, were placed under his protection. By the 2d of September, 1870, the American Legation had vised passports and given safe conducts for very nearly 30,000 persons, subjects of the North German Confederation expelled from France, besides providing railroad tickets to the Prussian frontier for 8,000 of these people, and various sums of money to others. Mr. Washburne also secured the release of every German who had been arrested and imprisoned on suspicion in Paris. During all the terrible days of the Commune, when nearly all the diplomatic corps had fled from the city the American Minister stood at his post. He had done so much for the distressed people of all classes that he was considered a general protector, and when the Communists arrested and imprisoned the venerable Archbishop Darboy, he was besought by a common voice of humanity to attempt to save the life of the beloved ecclesiastic. Mr. Washburne visited him repeatedly and made every effort to secure his release, but without avail. For his heroic services during the siege of Paris and the reign of the Commune, Mr. Washburne received the thanks of the German Emperor in person, besides an elegant oil portrait of His Majesty and the tender of the decoration of the Order of the Red Eagle, one of the highest within his gift, which filler honor the Minister was obliged to decline.

Since his return to this country, Mr. Washburne has lived in comparative quiet, but has kept up his interest in public affairs, and occasionally has appeared as a lecturer, giving his experiences during the reign of the Commune. He has been widely named as a possible Presidential candidate, but has utterly refused to do anything in his own behalf; indeed, he has explicitly declared that he could not consent, under any circumstances, to the use of his name against General Grant, whom he announces to be his "first, last and only choice." But it is still among the possibilities that he may be called to lead his party in the contest now close at hand.

THE AMERICAN FISHCULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

THE ninth annual meeting of the American Fishcultural Association, held at the hall of the Fulton Fishmongers' Association, in this city, last week, was an occasion of great interest to persons who are interested in pisciculture. President Robert B. Roosevelt presided, and fish-growers from all parts of the country were present, many of them officers of the National or State Commission. At the first day's session resolutions of regret were adopted lamenting the death of the late Professor James Wood Milner, one of the United States Fish Commissioners and member of the association, after which President Roosevelt read a paper on hybridization of fishes, giving the result of careful experiments and observations about cross-breeding with same class. This was followed by a paper from Seth Green on the effort to raise California mountain trout in Eastern waters. Mr. Green states that this species of trout had been found much easier to raise than the Eastern brook trout, and of much more rapid growth. As they were stronger and had more pluck, they afforded more sport to the fishermen than the ordinary brook trout. They were good fish for stocking the head waters of the Susquehanna, Delaware, Hudson and other rivers. The head waters of the Genesee had already been successfully stocked with them. They had also done well in Caledonia Spring Creek.

Papers were also read by Messrs. H. T. McGovern, Livingston Stone, Mr. G. Lamphear and others. Mr. Lamphear's paper embodied some interesting statistics as to the sale of fish in Fulton Market. According to the figures given, 34,216,666 pounds of fish were sold in that market during the year 1879-80, which is an increase of 646,700 pounds over the previous year. In addition, 1,509,561 mackerel had been sold and 291,845 shad. During the session Mr. Joseph Annin, Jr., gave a practical demonstration of "stripping" trout for artificial propagation. A number of male and female trout, brought from Mr. Annin's ponds on Long Island, were placed in tubs, and first taking the female trout, the eggs were, by the pressure of the hand, forced out into a pan placed for the purpose of receiving them, and afterwards, by the same process, the impregnating "milt" was forced from the male fish upon the eggs, which were then ready to be placed in the hatching-troughs. We illustrate this incident on page 108.

At the second day's session, papers were read by W. K. Brooks, of John Hopkins University, on the artificial propagation of oysters, and by Professor W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, on the nutritive qualities of fish. Remarks were also made on the extermination of the lobster, one gentleman stating that if proper restrictions are not made at once, and penalties enforced for infringements of the law, the traffic in lobsters will soon cease. The Association unanimously re-elected Robert B. Roosevelt, President; George S. Page, Vice-President; E. G. Blackford, Treasurer; Barnet Phillips, Corresponding Secretary, and James Annin, Jr., Recording Secretary; and in the evening partook of a banquet at the Metropolitan Hotel.

THE CHANNING MEMORIAL.

THE laying of the corner-stone of the church at Newport, R. I., on April 7th, which is designed to perpetuate the memory of William Ellery Channing, the great apostle of Unitarianism, marks the commencement of an enterprise which possesses a genuine interest to all circles of advanced and liberal religious thinkers. Channing impressed himself so largely upon the times in which he lived by his active participation not only in purely religious discussions, but in political and philanthropic movements as well, that a visible memorial of his work and career is but a just and proper tribute from those who come after him and have felt the influence of his teachings and example. The programme for the memorial occasion, on the one hundred anniversary of Dr. Channing's birth, included addresses by Rev. W. H. Channing, of London, and Rev. Dr. Bellows, of New York. In connection with the memorial service a meeting was held at the Arlington Street Church, in Boston, where Dr. Channing at one time officiated. Commemorative services were also held in Brooklyn, Montreal and other cities. The proposed memorial church, of which we give an illustration, will be located on Pelham Street, in Newport, and will be an object of reverential interest to the multitudes who, year after year, throng to that popular resort.

INCIDENTS OF GENERAL MILES'S INDIAN CAMPAIGN.

OUR artist with General Miles's Indian Expedition, writing from Keogh, March 11th, says: "Since my last there is some important news from this section. There has been a general raid by different bands of hostiles through the Yellowstone Valley. Troops have been out after them from here and Fort Custer. The weather has been intensely cold, with heavy snow. A few days ago a company encountered a band, killing three hostiles and losing two Indian scouts. Supplies have been sent to different points. Captain Baldwin's dispatch, which I inclose, shows how they do it. His ride after Indians is almost unparalleled, considering that the men were mounted on ponies (the Fifth Regiment, General Miles, is mounted on Indian ponies), and the deep snow they had to travel through. After Captain Baldwin's stock had become exhausted, he was fortunate enough to meet Captain Hamilton, of the Second Cavalry, with a strong body of men and horses in good condition, whom he immediately put on the trail of the Indians, and there is scarcely any doubt but that Hamilton will finally overtake them."

Captain Baldwin's dispatch, above referred to, which is dated at Camp on Little Porcupine, March 10th, says: "I overtook the Indians yesterday morning, run them thirty miles on the jump. . . . Got all their stock excepting one pony to each Indian. . . . When stopped, both men and animals were used up, having marched over one hundred miles inside of thirty hours—the last thirty miles on the run and trot. . . . Many of my men are suffering from snow-blind. It is believed that there is another party of hostiles still north of the Yellowstone."

Our illustrations show the pursuit of the Indians by Captain Baldwin's command, through the snow; the method of seeking the Indian trail, a dog-train going for water, etc.

THE LATE COMMODORE BARRETT, UNITED STATES NAVY.

THE late Commodore Edward Barrett, United States Navy, who died in New York on March 31st of malarial fever, was a native of New Orleans, La., where he was born in 1808. His family was among the most aristocratic of the State, his ancestor, De Villiers, being the Commander-in-Chief of French forces to whom Washington surrendered his sword at Fort Necessity. His father, Thomas Barrett, was for fifteen years Collector of the Port of New Orleans, to which office he was appointed by President Jackson. He entered the Navy when thirteen years of age, reporting on board the Warren, in Pensacola Bay, and being transferred thence to the Macedonian, under Commodore Nicholson. His first cruise was on the Lexcal, of the West India Squadron. In July, 1842, he was sent to the hospital in Norfolk, Va., and in the following August was attached to the frigate Columbus, of the Mediterranean Squadron. Upon arriving at that station he was first ordered to the sloop Preble, and then to the Columbus, bound for Brazil. In February, 1846, he was ordered to the United States Naval Academy, whence he graduated in August following, and was immediately assigned to the Mississippi, of the Gulf Squadron; and upon his arrival at Vera Cruz, served alternately upon the frigate Cumberland and the Raritan, and, during the siege of the city, upon the blockading ship John Adams. He relieved Passed Midshipman Nelson in command of the Ambulance Corps, operating with the naval battery in 1847, and participated in the Battle of Alvarado. He commanded the bark Cora, the first and best prize taken during the war, and proceeded with her to New Orleans. Rejoining his old vessel, he captured the Maria Theresa, and on being transferred to the Raritan he led in the attack on Tuspan. He served as a volunteer in the Frontera, Tobasco and Laguna expeditions. In 1848, on reporting for duty, he was sent to the coast of Africa, as master of the Jamestown, and remained on that station about two years. He then returned to the Mediterranean in the Lexington, and was there granted two years' leave of absence. In 1852 he joined the flagship Cumberland, of that squadron, and was subsequently ordered in the St. Louis and the Saranac. He was appointed flag-lieutenant to Commodore Breese in 1854, and returned to the United States in 1856. In the latter part of that year he was ordered to the Portsmouth, coast of Africa; in 1859 he went to the East Indies, and early in 1861, upon his arrival in this country, was appointed instructor of gunnery, and organized the schoolship Savannah. He commanded the Nausett in 1863, the ironclad Cobkill, off Charleston, S. C., 1864, and the advance of the picket of monitors. While at this station he captured the Deer, the last prize taken off Charleston, and the only one caught by a monitor.

In 1865 he reorganized the Ordinance Department of the Norfolk Navy Yard; in 1866 assumed command of the Quinnebaug, Brazil Station; in 1873 that of the Tuscaroras; in the following year the Canandaigua, and in 1875 the Plymouth.

In addition to these services, Captain Barrett was attached to the first man-of-war that entered the Port in Joliette, Marseilles, and the frigate Congress, which was the first that entered the breakwater at Leghorn, Italy; was on the first expedition that ascended Yang-tse Kiang as far as Hankow; was in command of the Quinnebaug, the first man-of-war that tested the mole at Cape Town, Africa; and of the Plymouth, which fired the Centennial salute off Fort Moultrie, S. C., was the Government ship present at the closing of the International Exhibition, and the first naval vessel to test and pass through the jetties at the South Pass of the Mississippi.

When the railroad riots were at their height the deceased was summoned to Washington, where he organized a brigade of marines for the protection of the city and public buildings, and held command under a temporary commission of brigadier-general in the army until all apprehensions of danger were dispelled.

Commodore Barrett was known throughout the Navy as a most rigid disciplinarian. He kept his ships and crew in clock-work order, exacting the strictest obedience to the rules of the department. He was a man of the stanchest integrity, was constantly exhibiting a just and hearty sympathy inwards his men, and made his profession his sole business. In all his qualities and relations he was a sailor sans peur et sans reproche.

The Defense of Berlin.

WE are informed on the best authority that the German War Department is preparing, as a sequel to the new Army Bill, a plan for the defense of Berlin. It is proposed to construct a series of at least twenty forts, after the style of those surrounding Paris; and these are to command the roads leading through the marshy and water-covered areas by which the Prussian capital is approached on the northeast and southwest. A large increase in the size of Berlin, for which allowance had to be made, was the principal difficulty with which the framers of the plan had to contend. But Prince Bismarck has never been a friend of great cities, and his support may be relied upon for a regulation which will result in adding to the height of the buildings in the imperial city on the Spree. All suburbs at the distance of Steglitz and Pankow are to come under the Berlin municipal authorities. The defense of Paris in 1870 taught military men that the holding of important cities, even though they be inhabited by more than a million of souls, must not be neglected. Berlin is the centre of the railway system of all the eastern provinces of Prussia. When it was overrun during the Seven Years' War by the Austrians and Russians, the royal treasures, the archives, and other valuable State papers, had been transferred to Magdeburg.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

The Completion of the St. Gothard Tunnel.

At ten o'clock on the morning of Sunday, February 29th, the piercing of the St. Gothard Tunnel was accomplished by one last blast, the two galleries which have been approaching each other from either end were thrown into one long tunnel, and the opposite gangs of workmen rushed into each other's arms and exchanged congratulations on the successful accomplishment of their task. The first man who actually succeeded in getting through the tunnel was M. Bossi, the manager of the works, but even he had been forestalled by the portrait of the late M. Favre, the contractor, which the workmen had pushed through as soon as the aperture had reached a width of three inches. The tunnel is the longest in the world—nine and a quarter miles—and has only taken seven years and five months in piercing, from September, 1872, to February, 1880—less than half the time occupied in piercing the Mont Cenis tunnel. This rapidity of execution is mainly due to the efficiency of the air compressors, invented by Professor Colladon of Geneva—the compressed air serving as a motive power for both the perforators which bore the rock and the locomotives which draw the wagons, and also as a means of ventilation. The northern, or Swiss entrance to the tunnel is situated at Göschenen, a wild and barren place at the mouth of that picturesque little river the Reuss; while the southern, or Italian, end, is at the village of Airolo, at the foot of the St. Gothard Pass, on the River Tremo. The tunnel is expected to be in working order by September, and the total cost of the work will be, broadly speaking, two millions sterling. M. Favre, the contractor, who so energetically carried out the work, died about six months ago.

The Winter Palace Explosion.

The funeral of the victims of the explosion in the Czar's Winter Palace in St. Petersburg, was the occasion of a general demonstration of sorrow. For the first time in the history of the Russian army the palls of private soldiers were borne by generals, nobles and members of the imperial family. The streets through which the long cortège passed appeared unusually sombre; crowds of spectators with bared heads watched the procession, and thousands breathed a fervent prayer for the safety of the terror-stricken sovereign.

An East Indian Prince Starting for a Hunt.

Our illustration represents the Prince of Khadeshuraha, the ruler of one of the vassal principalities of Great Britain in East India, starting on a recent tiger-hunting expedition. He was accompanied by some invited guests and the necessary hunters and followers. The Prince and his principal equerries and guests were on elephants, the others proceeded on horseback or afoot till the party reached the hunting-grounds, where each hunter is obliged to be mounted. The animals they intend to shoot are for weeks before lured by prey, specially prepared, to certain places where water is to be found, and it is in the neighborhood of these decoys that the hunters lie in wait for their victims. The Prince and his party made a right royal bag.

Statue of Lord Gough.

This memorial of an illustrious Irishman was unveiled by the Duke of Marlborough on the 21st ult. It occupies a site on the high road through Phœnix Park, Dublin, near the Wellington Monument and the statue of Lord Carlisle. Stands were provided for the Viceregal family and household, for the Executive Committee, and for invited friends. Bodies of troops were massed around the statue, including a brilliant staff around Sir John Michel, Commander of the Forces; while a party of pensioners from the Royal Hospital formed a significant feature in the spectacle. The statue, which is by Foley, is a most life-like representation of the late Lord Gough. It is 13 feet 6 inches high, and stands on a pedestal 7 feet 2 inches high, formed of iron tons of gun metal. The inscription on one side of the pedestal is: "In honor of Field Marshal Viscount Gough, K. P., G. C. B., K. G., an illustrious Irishman, whose achievements in the Peninsular War, in China, and India have added to the lustre of the military glory of the country, which he faithfully served for seventy-five years, this statue, cast from cannon taken by troops under his command, and granted by Parliament for the purpose, was erected by his friends and admirers." On the other side of the pedestal is inscribed the name "Gough."

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—THE beautiful hill of Posilippo, near Naples, on which is situated Virgil's tomb, is soon to be tunneled for a railway.

—ONE hundred and twenty men were killed and 400 wounded by accidents during the construction of the St. Gothard Tunnel.

—THE coal mines in Pennsylvania so far in 1880 have turned out a third more anthracite than last year; and exactly twice as much as in 1878.

—PROMINENT Mexicans have asked General Grant to aid them in securing American capital for developing the resources of Mexico. He has written a letter favoring some of the improvement projects.

—THERE are now 990 building and loan associations in Pennsylvania, Philadelphia having 490 of them. Each of them has an authorized capital of $1,000,000, and an average paid up fund of from $50,000 to $100,000 each.

—WOOD-CARVING is receiving especial attention in Germany as an industry of national importance. The wood-carving schools of the empire, now numbering about one hundred and sixty, are to be increased to two hundred, and a great number of prizes will be distributed.

—ADMIRAL PHILIPS WESTPHAL, the oldest commissioned officer in the British navy, died on March 16th, at Ryde, at the age of 89. Admiral Westphal had seen much service at a most stirring time. He won his first promotion to the rank of Lieutenant at the battle of Copenhagen.

—BORING for petroleum is still proceeding in the district of Dithmarschen, Prussia, a depth of 350 metres having been reached. At present only brackish water, mixed with petroleum, emerges, but it is believed that pure petroleum, superior to American, will soon be tapped.

—CAPTAIN HAMMOND, representing the Harvard freshmen crew, and Captains Kessler and Eldridge, representing the Columbia College freshman crew, met in New London, March 31st, and agreed to row a two miles straightaway race on the Thames at noon, Wednesday, July 7th.

—THERE was a premature and, consequently, fortunate accident recently on the new railway between Arbroath and Montrose, Scotland. Workmen were removing the centres from the arch of a new bridge when the whole thing fell, leaving nothing standing but a part of the parapets. No one was hurt.

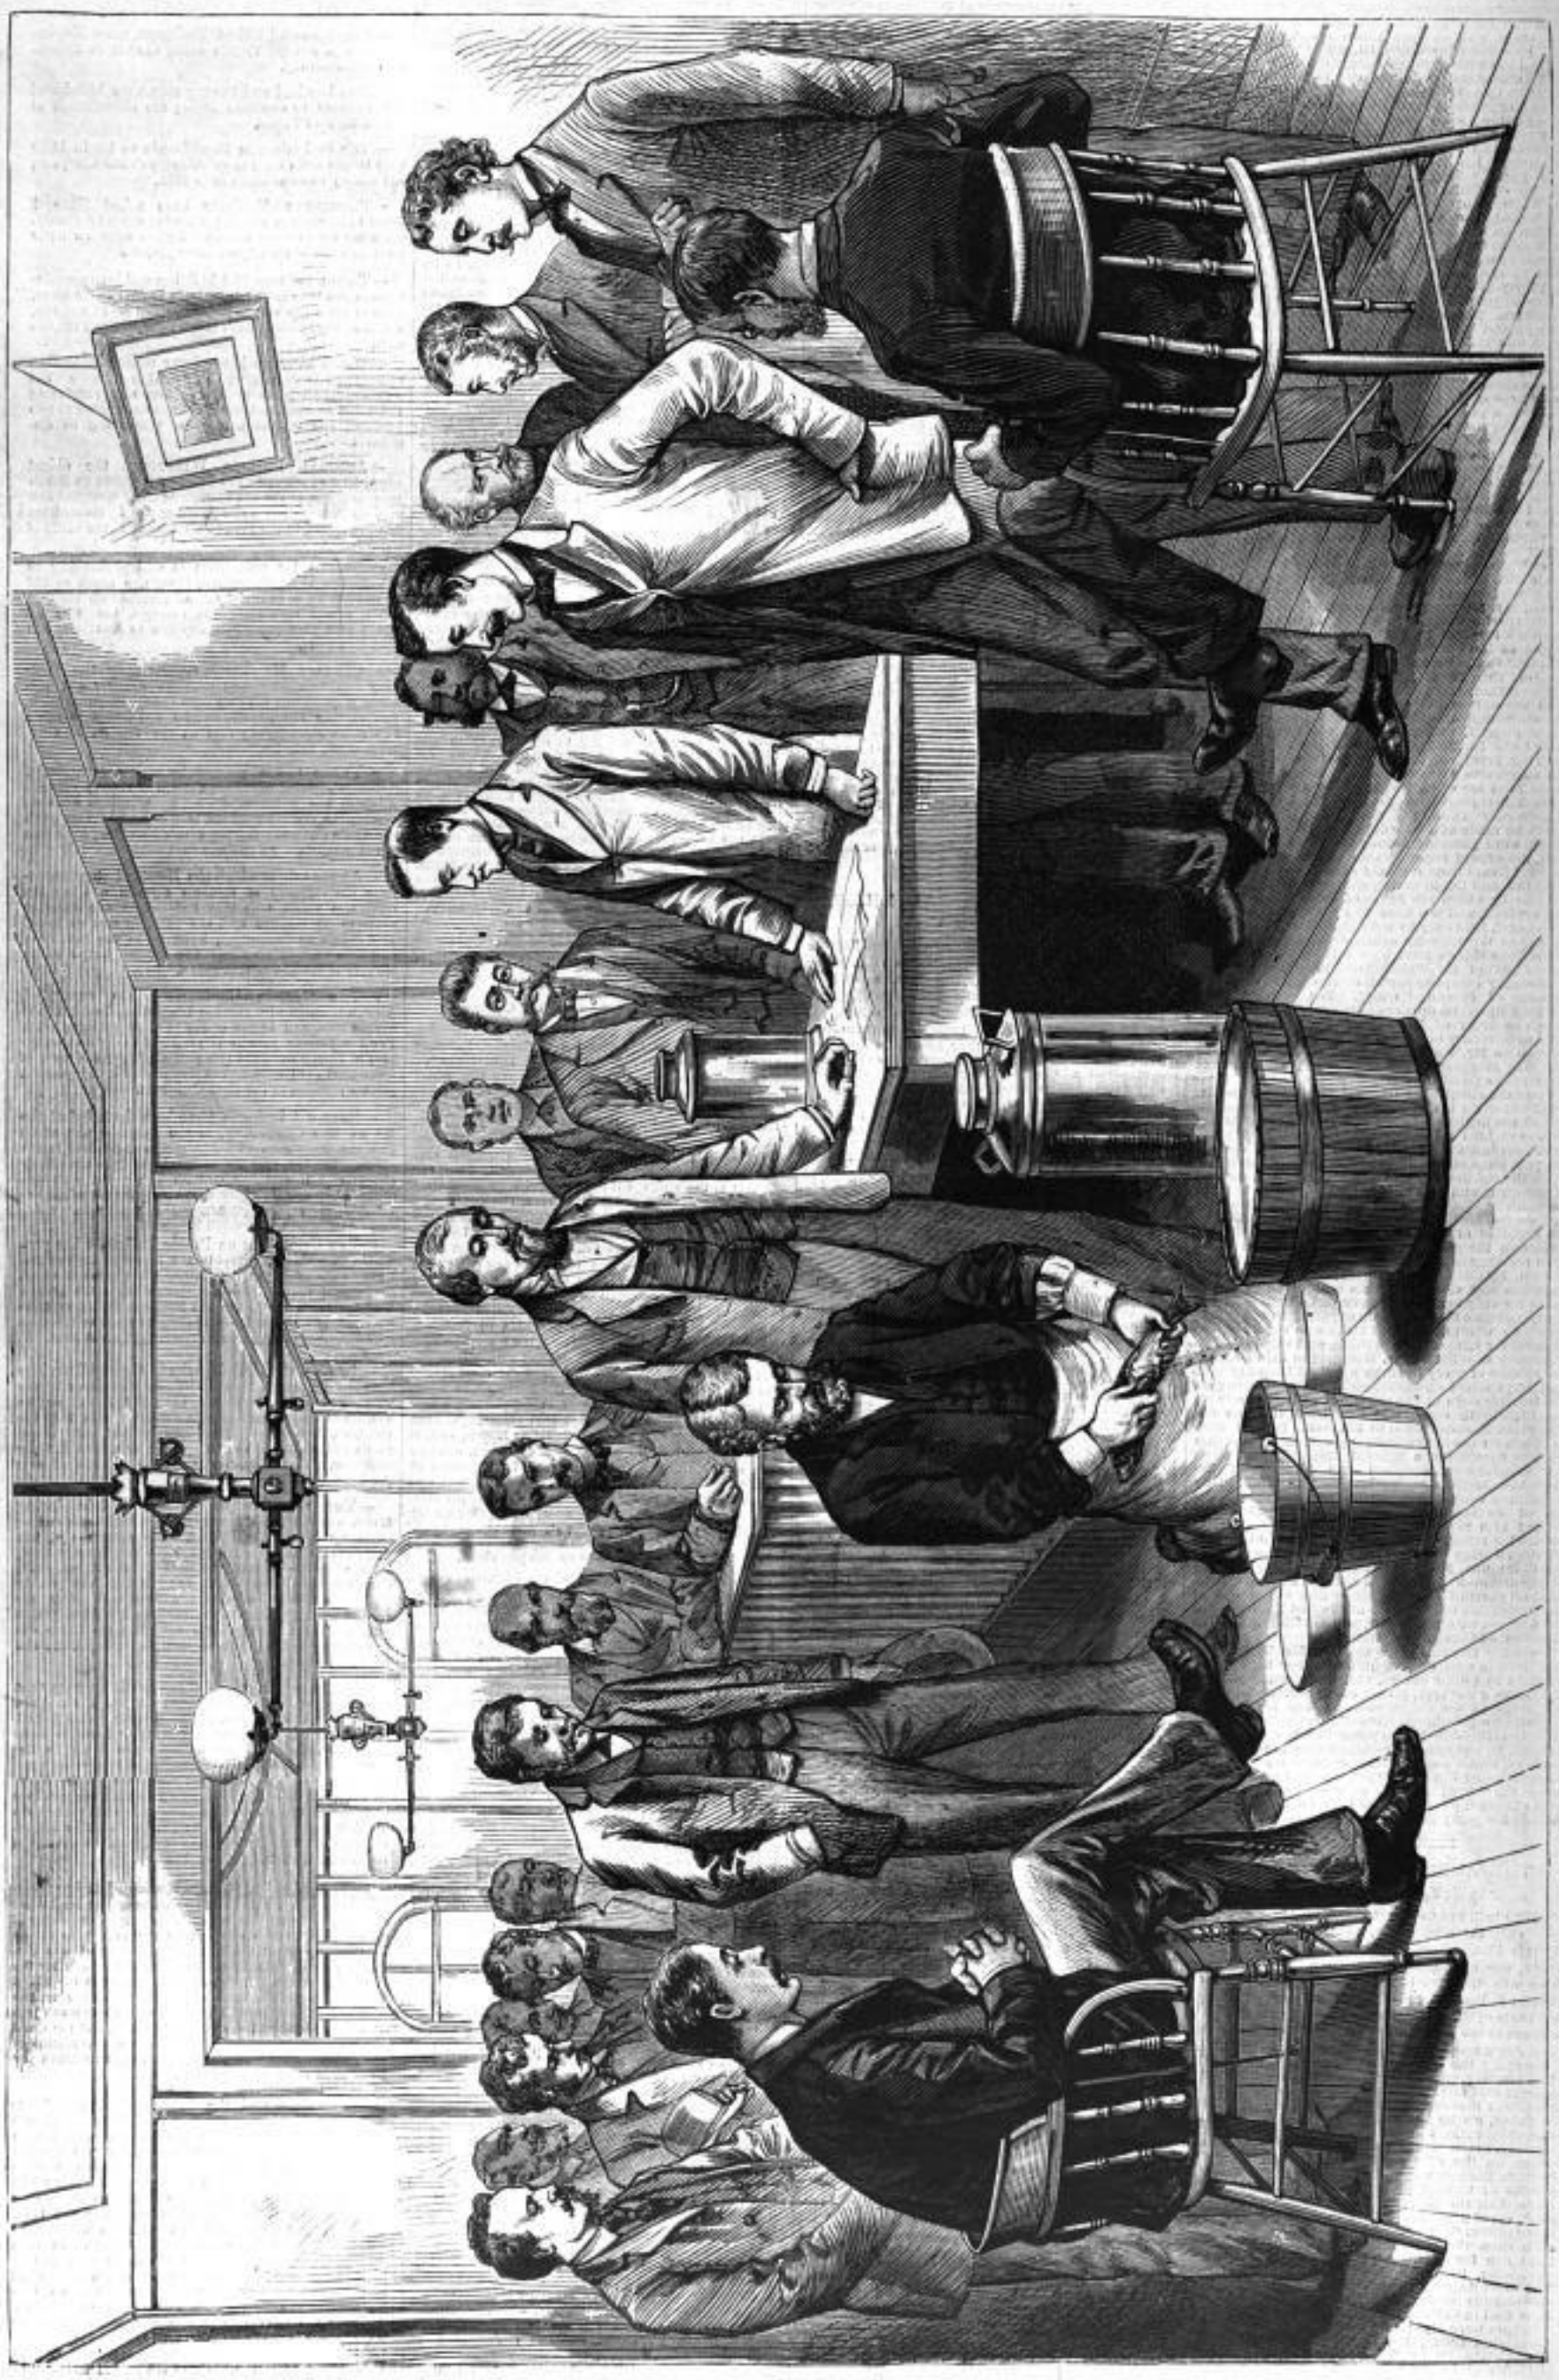
—AT the rate at which the House of Representatives has disposed of business since it met last December, it would take that body about one hundred years to get through with the business now on hand. This causes no diminution, however, in the number of new Bills brought forward. The greater part of every Monday is devoted to that object.

—THE German Government has supported African research with sums of 200,000 marks ($25,000) during 1878, and 70,000 marks ($17,500) during 1879. For the present year it is proposed to devote another sum of 70,000 marks to this purpose, besides a sum of 5,000 marks ($1,250) for the furtherance of independent private research in the Dark Continent.

—ECCOUP telephones have been installed at the Pic du Midi Observatory, in the Pyrenees, and afford easy communication with Bagneres, a distance of fifteen miles. The first experiment failed, owing to the cloudy and stormy intervening stratum of air, but with improved instruments every sound pronounced in the ordinary conversational pitch is distinctly audible.

—THE Committee on Pacific Railroads has presented an elaborate report to the House of Representatives on the subject of completing the system of transcontinental roads. The Committee takes the ground that the lands granted to the Northern Pacific road are forfeited, and that there is nothing to prevent the Government from taking action regarding them at once.

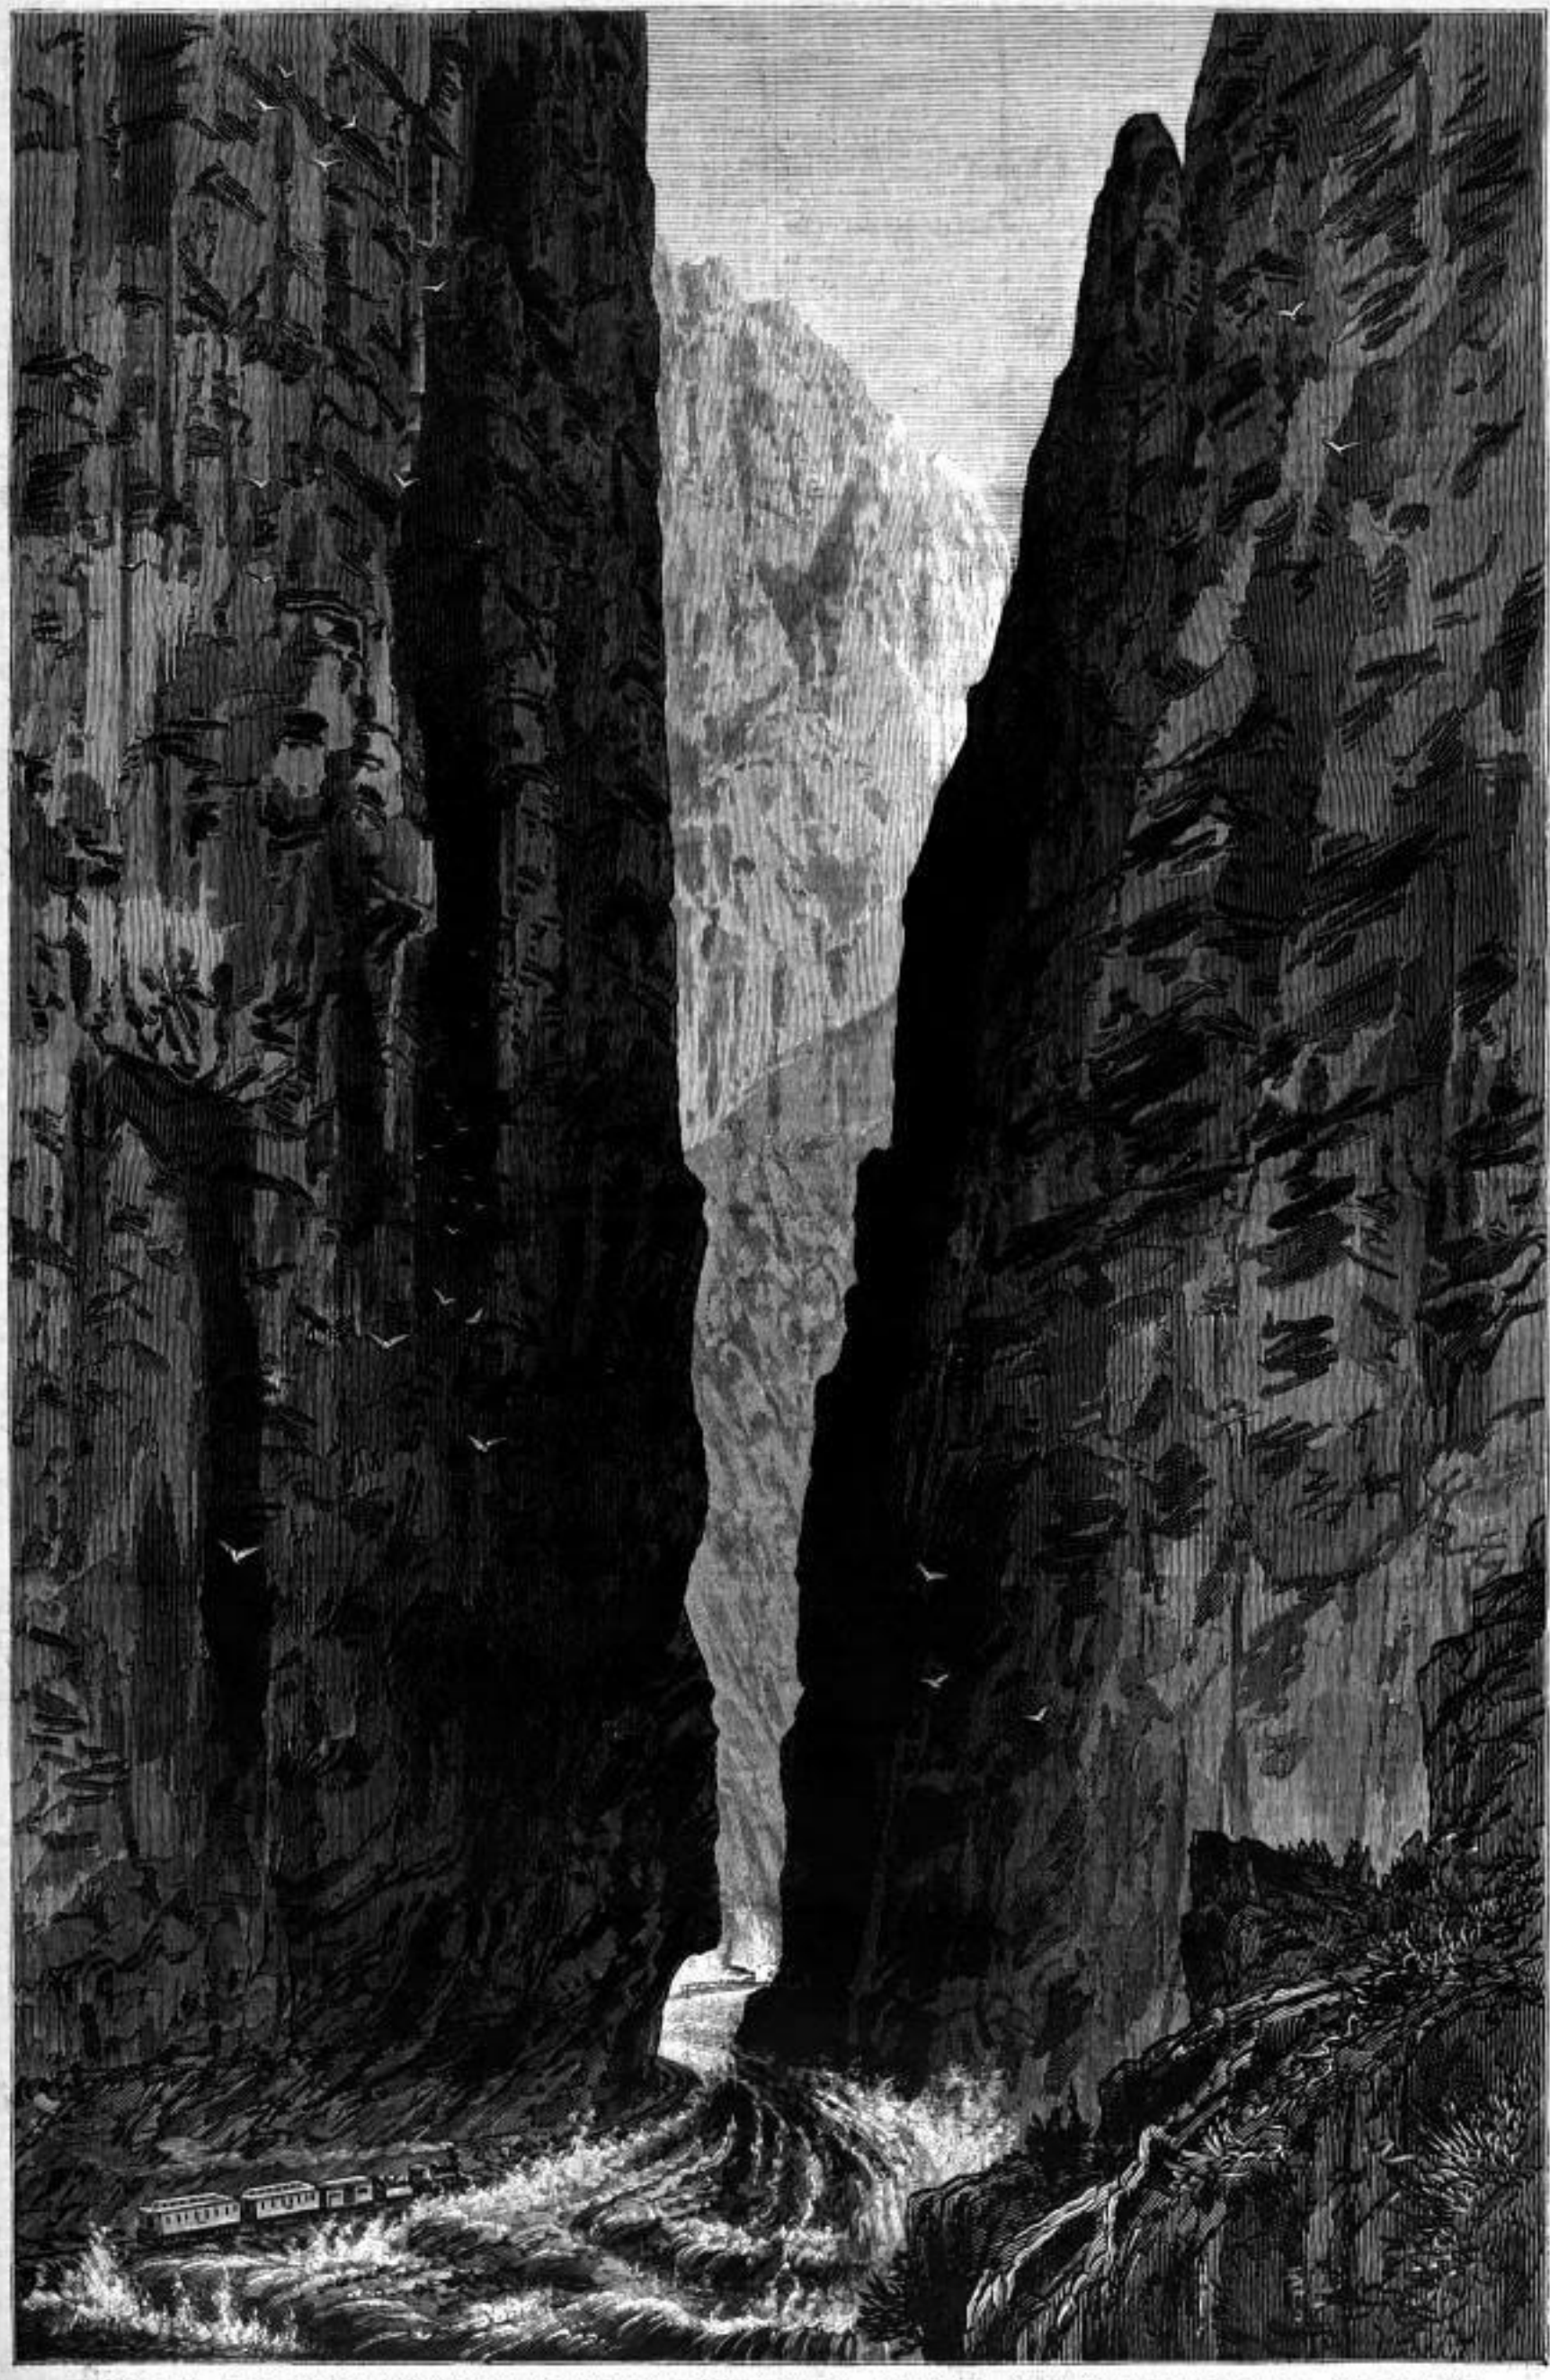
—IN 1863 the total deposits in the small savings banks of England, which are chiefly patronized by the working classes, amounted to £27,187,401, or an average of less than £9 to each depositor. In 1873 the number of depositors had largely increased, and the deposits had amounted to £61,471,412, or almost £16 per depositor. The returns for 1879 show an increase over the figures of 1873.



—THE reduction in the public debt during March was $14,719,397, and for the nine months ending April 1st nearly $47,000,000. The reduction of last month is the largest made in any one month since April, 1872, when it was nearly $15,500,000. For March, 1877, the reduction was over $14,000,000, but nearly $10,000,000 of this amount was derived from the Geneva award, which was covered into the Treasury that month. The unusually large reduction for March was due entirely to the increased receipts from customs and internal revenue.

—FROM recently printed returns it appears that the school libraries in France have during the last ten years increased to a remarkable manner. Established originally for pupils in the schools, these libraries have been gradually made use of more and more by the parents and friends of the scholars, and have now become really people's libraries supported by the State, which contributes 120,000 francs a year for the purchase of books, and by the municipalities. In 1866 there were 4,838 of these libraries, but by 1877 the number had increased to 17,764. During the same period the number of books rose from 180,853 to 1,716,900.

—THE Island of Rotumah, which has been provisionally annexed to the British Empire by Sir Arthur Gordon, at the request of a deputation of the chiefs of two hostile factions who inhabit it, lies a little to the north and east of the Fiji Archipelago, and was discovered by Captain Edwards during his search for the mutineers of the Bounty in 1791. Although the island is small, its population is comparatively numerous, the shore being covered with villages, which touch and join on to one another. The soil is very fertile, and the small vessels which trade among the islands of this section of the South Pacific Ocean frequently call at Rotumah for supplies of vegetables and other provisions.



—THE decree of the French Government expelling the members of the Society of Jesus from France makes the fourth time these followers of Ignatius Loyola have been driven out of that country. It was the last State in which they established themselves in large numbers, after other parts of continental Europe had been overrun by them, and the first from which they were expelled. The date of the latter action was 1574. In 1603 they were recalled, and remained undisturbed until 1764, when Louis XV. banished them. In 1773 Pope Clement XIV. suppressed the order entirely, but, revived at the beginning of the century, it made rapid progress in France, where it was associated with the rehabilitation of society after the chaos of the revolution. In 1830 the revolution of that year again decreed its expulsion, but the order continued to exist nevertheless, and in 1845 there was another ineffectual legislative decree issued against it. Under the second empire it of course flourished.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK CITY.—NINTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN FISHCULTURAL ASSOCIATION—MR. ANNIN STRIPPING TROUT FOR ARTIFICIAL PROPAGATION.—SEE PAGE 103.

Digitized by Google

COLORADO.—THE ROYAL GORGE IN THE GRAND CAÑON OF THE ARKANSAS.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. WORRALL.—SEE PAGE 107.

Digitized by Google

BEYOND.

NEVER a word is said,
But it trembles in the air,
And the truant voice has sped
To vibrate everywhere;
And perhaps far-off in eternal years
The echo may ring upon our ears.

Never are kind acts done
To wipe the weeping eyes,
But, like flashes of the sun,
They signal to the skies;
And up above the angels read
How we have helped the sorer need.

Never a day is given,
But it touches the after years,
And it carries up to heaven
Its sunshine or its tears;
While the to-morrows stand and wait,
The silent mutes by the outer gate.

There is no end to the sky,
And the stars are everywhere,
And time is eternity,
And the here is over there;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far-away.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DEMITRY.

CHAPTER VIII.—(CONTINUED).

VELLANI looked doubtfully from the speaker to Melchior, and the latter took advantage of the pause to say:

"You shall know who I am. My name is Melchior Waring. I am an American and the friend of Mr. Reginald Grey of New York, and for the time being I am stopping at the Hotel Cavour."

"And if I should have occasion to send a communication to the Hotel Cavour, shall I have the honor to find Signor Waring in?" asked Vellani, with a polite sneer in his voice.

"If you take pains to do so when I am not out, you will find me there," was Melchior's unconcerned reply. "However, should I have reason to anticipate a message from you——"

"You shall be found? I understand. I, therefore, make the formal request of you, signor, to remain at your hotel this afternoon."

"And I as formally promise that I shall do so."

"A duel!" exclaimed the marchesa, coming between them. "Luigi, I forbid it!"

"You doubtless fear the result to this gentleman?" said Vellani, angrily.

"She has quite as much reason to fear for you, signor," retorted Melchior. "Before I leave this house it is proper that I should relieve the Marchesa di Lupo of any misapprehension under which you may labor regarding the promise that I recalled to her. That promise was that she should send to my hotel the manuscript belonging to Mr. Grey that she took with her from New York."

"It is not necessary that she should communicate with you further," replied Vellani. "Here is the paper to which you allude."

He searched the breast-pocket of his coat and drew thence the manuscript.

The marchesa took it from his hand and gave it to Melchior, who glanced at it for an instant. There could be no mistaking it. There was the paper, brown with the lapse of two hundred years; there was the quaint handwriting, cramped and almost illegible; and there, too, were the uneven edges and the holes in the sheet whereby the moths had worked the destruction of the clew to the locality of the treasure. For a moment, as he looked down at it, he seemed lost in thought. Then he folded the flimsy scrap carefully and placed it in his pocket.

During these proceedings Vellani gazed at him attentively.

"Are you satisfied, signor, that that is the paper this lady received from Signor Grey?"

"This is the paper undoubtedly."

"And Signor Grey—what will he do?" he continued. "Will he try to find the treasure?"

"The Marchesa di Lupo asked me that question," replied Melchior, stiffly. "As I said to her, so I say to you—I cannot answer."

"He does not know where to look. I understand." Vellani spoke with a touch of subdued satisfaction in his voice which was not lost on Melchior.

"You speak, signor," he said, "as if you are wiser than Mr. Grey. Or do you merely wish to seem wiser than you really are?"

The Italian shrugged his shoulders.

"I only know this," he replied, coldly, "that the treasure belongs to him who can discover its hiding-place. If Signor Grey can find it, it is his." Then he added, with a distant bow, "Au revoir, signor," walked moodily to an armchair that stood at the further end of the salon, and seated himself abruptly with an air as of one at home in the marchesa's parlor.

Since the marchesa had last spoken she had not changed her position; but when Vellani moved away, and Melchior, saluting her, walked to the door, preparatory to taking his departure, she advanced and intercepted him.

"You must promise me," she said, hastily and in an undertone, "that you will refuse to meet Signor Vellani should he challenge you."

"What is his weapon?" asked Melchior.

"If he fights it will be with the sword, with which he is very skillful."

"Do not fear, signora. I promise to spare him. Good-morning."

And with these words, before the marchesa could frame another remark, he had passed rapidly into the corridor and had gained the head of the stairway.

In three minutes more he was seated in the carriage in which he had ridden to the villa, and twenty minutes later he had joined Reginald in the sitting-room of the hotel and was narrating the particulars of his interview with the marchesa and Luigi Vellani.

CHAPTER IX.—A MESSAGE FROM VELLANI.

WHEN Melchior had concluded his account of what had happened at the marchesa's, Reginald, who had been listening silently, but with a serious expression on his face, said to him:

"It is I, Melchior, who should insist on the first meeting with Vellani."

"Too late, mio caro. Besides, I propose to leave you nothing to do. Vellani, I fancy, will be in no condition to fight you when I shall have done with him."

"You do not mean to——"

"Kill him? Oh, no! Heaven spare me the necessity of doing that! But unless my cunning has left me, or Vellani prove the better swordsman, I shall not be the one to sue for mercy in this combat."

"Vellani," observed Reginald, after a pause, "must entertain an idea of searching for the treasure. How does it appear to you?"

"I think that he and the marchesa may have a theory in regard to it."

"And what is that theory do you suppose?"

"In reading the manuscript have you not been impressed with two facts which, taken together, may convey a third fact to the mind? Here is the manuscript, let us examine it. I merely wish to show you how, by a logical chain of reasoning, Vellani or the marchesa—I do not know which of the two—may have stumbled on a theory. This is the first fact: the writer says, 'brought . . this castle of San Juan.' The meaning is that he was taken there a prisoner."

"True. But which of the many castles of that name in the Spanish dominions is referred to?"

"Have we not inferred that Mexico is the country in which is situated the pueblo with its unknown church?"

"Yes."

"That being the inference, why not suppose that the castle or fortress in which the writer was imprisoned was also in Mexico?"

"Granted. What more?"

"Then, let us say that the 'Castle of San Juan' mentioned is the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, at Vera Cruz."

"A very reasonable supposition, and one, I must confess, that never occurred to me."

"As if to fortify this supposition," continued Melchior, "let us turn to this passage in the manuscript: 'I was put under arrest in D . . . .' Durango, in Northern Mexico, was at that remote period a flourishing town. Why not conclude that the word missing here is Durango? Accepting this to be the fact, let us further imagine that Vellani, inspired by the hope of tracing the treasure to its receptacle, has formed the resolution of going to the best source of knowledge in regard to the history of the unknown writer's imprisonment—namely, the archives of Old Spain that concern the two Americas.

"He will go to Madrid and inspect the colonial archives of that day. In the reports of the viceroys subsequent to 1680, he will find somewhere a report of the prisoner's case. Enough remains of his signature to assist him in identifying him. He will discover that he was arrested at, say Durango, in such and such a year, confined in the fortress of San Juan del Ulua at such a date, died in that prison on such a day."

"This is more than a theory!"

"Wait a moment," Melchior went on, smiling and raising his hand as if to enjoin silence. "Lured on by his hopes, Vellani, having gained this information, leaves for Mexico. He endeavors in the city of Vera Cruz to obtain some additional facts regarding the prisoner of San Juan. From Vera Cruz he proceeds to Durango and seeks further traces. Will he find them?"

"Perhaps," replied Reginald, thoughtfully, "in some church registry or record, or in some local legend, he may learn something of the unknown writer."

"My supposition carries Vellani no further," said Melchior. "But what is the matter?" he added, smilingly. "You look as perplexed as if all I have been saying is true instead of a mere series of suppositions."

"If these be merely possibilities, why do you detail them with so much precision?" asked Reginald, doubtfully.

"Because I believe that Vellani has resolved to undertake a search for the treasure, and that he has formed a theory of his own on the subject. And if I could see into his mind to-day, I think the propositions I have just propounded would be found there. You must be on your guard. When we shall have settled with him, you must leave at once to seek the treasure, if you hope to secure it."

"And in order to obtain it must I, too, follow the steps laid down in your plan?"

"It may answer the purpose," replied Melchior, quietly.

"If I enter on this search will you accompany me?"

"No. I expect to part from you in three days at the furthest. You will return to the United States, while I go"—he reflected for a moment as if pondering his answer—"I go to Egypt."

"Melchior," said Reginald, "I base no hopes of discovering the church in which the treasure is concealed on any knowledge that I may obtain by investigations. With my present feeling, I do not know that I shall ever take any steps to clear up what seems to me an impenetrable mystery. So let us speak of something more practical—more real. When we part, where shall I again see you—in New York or at Albuquerque?"

"At Albuquerque, probably."

There must have been something saddening to the two friends in the thought of their coming separation and of the events that must intervene before that parting, for both were silent. Reginald smoked his cigar thoughtfully, and Melchior looked absently through the window into the street.

The silence was broken by the former.

"Melchior," he said, "you must not fight Vellani, if he should challenge you. I cannot let you accept a responsibility that was entailed in serving me."

"It is nothing, Reginald. As I have told you, I do not fear the result. He cannot injure me, and a touch—a scratch—will suffice to end the duel. You shall be my second. In three minutes the affair will be over."

"You are very confident—not over-confident, I hope," said Reginald, in an anxious tone.

"Trust me," was the reply, uttered with a reassuring look. "Trust me and fear nothing. But if I should fall, look in the breast-pocket of my coat and you will find there a letter. It will tell you what to do."

A sudden paleness came upon his face, but when Reginald leaned over towards him, he smiled, grasped the outstretched hand that was extended to him, and said:

"It was only a passing thought. It is over now. Would you be very sorry, mio caro, if anything should happen to me?"

"Do not bring that possibility before my mind! Because, if I thought——"

"Yes, yes; I understand. You would stop the affair. But animo su! as they say here in Milan. Cheer up and have confidence in me!"

"If it were not that I feel so encouraged by your own confidence in yourself, which inspires me with a conviction that you will emerge unharmed from this encounter, should it come off, I would not resist the temptation that possesses me to have it prevented. For the first time I regret that I left New York on this journey to meet Vellani. But for that act of mine you would not be called on to risk your life."

"Would you make a sacrifice for my sake?" asked Melchior, abruptly.

"What sacrifice could you ask that I would not make to please you?"

"I have something to ask of you that, perhaps, you may hesitate to grant. But if you grant it, you will give me greater confidence if I am to seek the field with Vellani."

"Do you mean me to forego my purpose to demand an apology from him?"

"Yes."

Reginald's face flushed.

"On what ground do you base this request?" he asked, after a moment's pause.

"On the ground of my regard for you in the first place, and, secondly, on my knowledge of your deficiency with the sword. Are not these two excellent and sufficient reasons for my request?"

"They are such reasons as might inspire a generous, devoted and self-sacrificing friend, Melchior!"

"You decline, then?"

"I must decline. To gratify you I would do much, and if you were not engaged in this quarrel, to please you I should refrain from seeking any explanation from this man. As it is, however, I must go on. Could I have foreseen the events of this morning I would not have delayed in making my purpose known to him immediately on my arrival, for then you would not have become involved."

"Well, well! Let it pass. Perhaps it is best that Mr. Vellani should fall into my hands first."

As Melchior spoke one of the hotel waiters appeared in the doorway of the sitting-room and cast a quick glance around the apartment.

"Signor Melchior Waring!" he exclaimed, raising his voice. "A gentleman desires to speak with Signor Waring."

The half-dozen other gentlemen present in the sitting-room, some of whom were conversing and others reading their newspapers, looked up lazily as the waiter made this proclamation, and, as Melchior rose from his seat in answer to the call and walked toward the door, they glanced at him for an instant and then resumed their several interrupted occupations.

"Who wishes to see Signor Waring?" asked Melchior of the waiter.

The latter moved to one side, and behind him Melchior perceived for the first time a young gentleman attired in the undress uniform of an officer of the Italian army, and with a mustache à la Victore-Emmanuele, who, as the waiter retired, advanced to meet him.

"Signor Melchior Waring?" he asked, courteously, in Italian.

"Yes, signor. Whom have I the pleasure of addressing?"

"Lieutenant-Colonel Rodolfi, of the National Guard."

"And a friend, I presume, of Signor Luigi Vellani?"

"Ah, I see that you expected me," replied the other, with a smile. "That being the case, we shall have no difficulty in coming to an understanding, I hope."

"I trust not, signor. If you have any communication from Signor Vellani I shall be happy to receive it."

The officer handed a letter to Melchior.

"This will fully explain my mission," he said.

Melchior broke the seal and read:

"MILAN, June 18*th*, 187—

"SIGNOR MELCHIOR WARING—I inferred from your remarks during our interview this morning that you would not avoid a communication addressed to you at the Hotel Cavour by myself, who have reason to feel insulted by your language on that occasion. My friend, Lieutenant-Colonel Rodolfi, who is authorized to act for me, will hand you this note and will bring me your answer—either an apology for your words or your acceptance of this invitation, which I have the honor now to extend, to grant me the satisfaction of a gentleman on the field of honor. If you determine to choose the latter course, please name your weapons, the time and the place. LUIGI VELLANI."

Having finished the perusal of the note, he said to the officer: "Signor, I beg to be excused for a moment while I consult with my friend."

He walked to where Reginald was sitting, an attentive observer of the interview, and in a few words made him aware of the name and the purpose of the visitor and of the contents of Vellani's communication.

"I need not ask you what reply you will send," said Reginald, when he had put him in possession of all the facts.

"I shall, of course, give him the satisfaction he demands. But, come, let me introduce you to the very gentlemanly friend he has sent to me."

They went up to the officer, and Reginald was presented to him in due form, Melchior, while introducing him, expressing in complimentary words his regret that Reginald, owing to his ignorance of Italian, could not converse with Rodolfi in his own beautiful language—the language of Dante, of Ariosto and Petrarch.

"Eefa the Signor Grey awilla pardon mya Englisha, maybees wea cana talka leetla together," said the officer, accentuating the words strongly with the Italian inflection.

"You speak very good English," observed Reginald, encouragingly, insensibly adopting that patronizing tone with which all patriotic Americans address children and foreigners. "You do very well, indeed, signor."

Leaving the two to prosecute the conversation thus happily began, Melchior sat at a table, which was provided with pens, ink and paper for the use of the patrons of the hotel, and wrote his answer to Vellani's message. Then he begged the officer to excuse him while he conferred with Reginald.

"This is my reply," he said to the latter, translating for his benefit the note he had just written.

"Signor," he observed, rejoining Rodolfi, "Mr. Grey, you should understand, is my friend in this matter. Of course, the contents of Signor Vellani's letter are known to you?"

The young officer answered in the affirmative.

"Then, in order that there may be no delay in bringing the affair to a conclusion, I will read to you my reply to his communication. It is this:

"'HOTEL CAVOUR, MILAN, June 18*th*, 187—.

"'SIGNOR LUIGI VELLANI—Your communication of this date by the hand of Lieutenant-Colonel Rodolfi has been received, and my answer is, that I will fight you with small swords at six o'clock to-morrow morning, in the courtyard of the Palazzo Albergati, on the road to Varese.

"'MELCHIOR WARING.'

"You of course know," he continued, "the locality of the Palazzo Albergati?"

"I know the place very well," replied Rodolfi.

"Now," said Melchior, "I am about to make a request of you which, while it may seem somewhat informal, I must justify on the ground that my friend and myself are strangers in Milan. There are certain necessary preparations to be made in connection with this affair which I must intrust to your courtesy and honor."

The officer bowed as if in assent to the proposition.

"My request is that you supply all that may be needful on the occasion of this meeting—the surgeon and the weapons."

"It shall be done, signor."

"For myself, I promise that Mr. Grey and I shall be in the courtyard of the palazzo at six o'clock to-morrow, ready to grant that satisfaction to your friend that he has done me the honor to demand."

As Melchior spoke he resumed his seat, inclosed the note in an envelope and directed it to Vellani. That done, he handed the letter to the officer.

"You will pardon our unceremoniousness," he said, with a smile. "My friend here is too ignorant of your language to conduct this affair for me. I must be at once, therefore, principal and second. The rest I leave in your hands, trusting to that hospitality which distinguishes the Milanese."

"This hospitality shall not disappoint you, signor. Your interests shall be as safe with me as they would be with Signor Grey."

"That assurance is amply sufficient."

"Is there anything else that you would wish to be done?"

"That is all. For your kindness, signor, I give you my sincere thanks."

With these words the interview ended, and, after shaking hands with the two friends, Rodolfi bowed and withdrew.

"A manly fellow, that Rodolfi," observed Reginald, as he glanced at the officer's retiring figure. "Rather an improvement on Vellani!"

"Yes," said Melchior. "I feel that I can trust him. To-morrow, I have no doubt, we shall find all prepared at the palazzo at our arrival."

"How did you know of this Palazzo Albergati? What, and where, is it? Is it unoccupied, or unfinished, that you should have fixed on its courtyard as the place of meeting?"

"It is a ruined old château that has been untenanted for a hundred years. It dates back to a period coeval with the Crusades. There is some gloomy story of crime and blood connected with it, but I have forgotten the exact particulars. You will find them set down at some length in the guide-books. Day before yesterday, on my return from my first visit to the marchesa, I drove out to visit it, my coachman having spoken of it as a curiosity. I thought at the time it would be an admirable spot for a meeting—quiet, retired and screened from observation."

"And this is why you selected it in your note to Vellani?"

"Yes. I was quite certain that Signor Rodolfi would know the place. Everybody in Milan is familiar with it. It will answer our purpose in every respect."

Shortly after this conversation, the two

Digitized by Google

friends left the hotel and repaired to a fencing-school; and, for an hour or two, with intervals of resting, they practiced with foils.

At the conclusion of the practice, the complimentary fencing-master said to Melchior:

"Bravo, signor! You are as skillful as you are handsome. I confess that in you I have met my master. You should be as lucky in love as in war!"

(To be continued.)

THE ROYAL GORGE IN COLORADO.

GRAND as is the view of this remarkable cañon when seen from the window of the rushing train, its power of inspiring awe can best be tested by the tourist, contented to make his way thither on horseback or in the "schooners of the prairie." In approaching the gorge it is observed that the pinion growth is rank and dense; just beyond, great bleak ridges of bare, cold rock contrast strongly with the profusion of foliage hiding everything beneath from sight, while away in the dim distance the snow-crowned peaks of the continental divide are outlined sharp and clear against the solid blue of the morning sky. If the tourist is impetuous, his ardor will be checked by the guide, for after leaving wagon or horse a few steps will bring him to the edge of the precipice. Shuddering, he will peer down the awful slopes; fascinated, he will steal a little nearer to circumvent a very mountain that has rolled into the chasm, and at last the eye reaches down the sharp incline 3,000 feet to the bed of the river, the impetuous Arkansas, forty to sixty feet in width, yet to him a mere ribbon of molten silver. Though surging madly against its rocky sides, leaping wildly over gigantic masses of rock, and hoarsely murmuring against its prison bars, nothing is heard of its fury. The solemn stillness of death pervades the scene; the waters as viewed are as if polished, and as stationary as the mighty walls that look down on them from such fearful height.

If the first experience upon the brink of the Grand Cañon was startling, that of the Royal Gorge is absolutely terrifying, and the bravest at the one point become most abject of cowards in comparison at the other. At the first point of observation, the walls, though frightfully steep, are nevertheless sloping to more or less extent; here at the Royal Gorge they are sheer precipices, as perpendicular as the tallest house, as straight as if built by line. So narrow is the gorge, that one would think the throwing of a stone from side to side the easiest of accomplishments, yet no living man has ever done it, or succeeded in throwing any object so that it would fall into the water below. Many tourists are content with the appalling view from the main walls, but others more venturesome work their way 600 to 1,000 feet down the ragged edges of a mountain that has parted and actually slid into the chasm. The gorge is 2,038 feet sheer depth, and most precipitous and sublime in its proportions of any chasm on the continent.

Among all the thousands who have visited the Grand Cañon and the Royal Gorge, harm has befallen none, for, despite the seeming horror of the situation, the appalling depths and rugged paths, the fascination of the danger appears to give birth to greatest caution. The cañon, except in the dead of Winter, is approachable only from the top, the walls below being so precipitous and the river such a torrent as to defy all access. When frozen, as the waters are for brief periods during the coldest months, the way up the cañon may be accomplished, but only at the risk of personal comfort and not a little danger.

THE PRESENT EXTRAORDINARY EMIGRATION.

LIFE ON THE PASSAGE FROM LIVERPOOL TO THE UNITED STATES.

"CASTLE GARDEN is in full blast!" I overheard a weather-beaten 'longshoreman rapturously exclaim to a sun-kissed companion, as I lately passed the "frontage by the river." "I never seen the beat of this. We'll have more immigrants in on us this year than ever come in the liveliest of times. The ocean steamers is bringin' 'em by thousands. The City of Berlin brought twelve hundred yesterday; the Brussels as many more last Saturday. The railroad men out West is fairly tickled to death."

The 'longshoreman spoke from the book. Agricultural depression is sending us German and English immigrants; famine and the "agent" the "boys" from the Emerald Isle. New blood is leaping into the veins of this country through the great Atlantic artery. We require every drop of it, and more. An Irish family, consisting of representatives of three generations, seated upon boxes, bedding, bundles and impedimenta of every description, from a gridiron to a wicker cage, minus the blackbird, barred my passage. I made a long détour to avoid embarrassing them, and, as I went upon my way, I bethought me of scenes I had witnessed in the wild valleys of Connemara and on the picturesque shores of Bantry Bay—scenes in which distresses and evictions, the bailiff and the policeman, the dreaded agent, and the doubtful landlord, played all the prominent parts, and played them with a ghastly realism. On the faces of the evicted ones in the old country was Despair; on the faces of the family now occupying the sidewalk in the new, was Hope.

The emigrant of to-day is a fortunate being compared to the emigrant of ten years ago. To-day he has only to announce his intention of pitching his tent in a foreign land, and, lo! there are slaves upon slaves at his bidding. He has every reason to induce him to emigrate; and setting aside the irrelevant facts that the soil refuses to yield another crop, the agent of the absentee landlord to abate the rent, the process-server to stay his warrant, the cabin to remain over his head, the facilities offered for transferring him to fresh woods and pastures new are of so tempting a nature as absolutely to leave him no choice but to clear out in double quick. He consults his neighbors, who say, "God speed ye, be off!" Father Tom, who gives him his blessing and tells him not to forget the little church at Ballyporeen at Christmas and Easter; the landlord, who raises his eyebrows but who doesn't lower the rent. The money is obtained by hook and by crook, and then comes the embarrassment of choice of route. If he be well advised he'll travel by the Inman line of steamships, the acknowledged premier emigrant line. I have crossed the briny in fair weather and foul, and speak by the chart. Comes the day of departure and the tearing up of the roots of the heart that cling around the old tottering cabin—cling to its thatched roof, and its unglazed window, and its crazy chimney, its turf-stack and its now cabbageless garden. The neighbors are all there, and there's not a dry eye in the crowd. "God speed yez!" "Good luck attend yez!" "May the Lord keep yez safe!" "Don't forget Ould Ireland!" and the low-backed car jogs off amid the moans of women, the yells of men, the shrieks of children and the barking of the curs who accompany it a good half-mile on its road. Arrived at Liverpool, the emigrants—for there are two or three families from the same townland—are received at the wharf by the agents of the Inman Line; their luggage is carted down and carefully stowed away, and good lodgings procured for them at a price within the limit of their powers of expenditure. Thus is the first step in emigration made easy, and, instead of being left to the mercy of boarding-house sharks whose interest it is to cheat and plunder the still despondent greenhorns, they are at once taken under the ægis of properly qualified and attentive agents, and in every way cared for. Upon the following morning they are brought down to the landing-stage and for the first time behold their floating home—let us say the magnificent City of Brussels—which rides at anchor in the middle of the Mersey. Here a steam tug awaits them, and, with their luggage, they are conveyed on board with as much care as though they were constructed of glass. A few moments are spent in gazing wonderingly at the great sweep of deck, at the smoke stacks and masts and rigging; in peering into deck cabins, engine-hatches and galleys; in questioning busy officials and in comparing notes, when they are ordered aft, and then passed singly in review by a medical man, appointed especially for that purpose, with a view to ascertaining that each emigrant is sufficiently healthy to be permitted to travel. This is a very luxury of precaution, and one that establishes a confidence, if not a freemasonry, amongst the excited occupants of the steerage.

A very centre of attraction is the cook's galley in which the food for the steerage is prepared, and both doors are blocked by the expectant recipients of the savory-smelling messes being elaborately "fixed up" by portly mess cooks, arrayed in the snowy caps and aprons of their respected order. How the emigrant stares when he is informed that the annual consumption of food on board the ship means over 100,000 pounds of fresh beef, 15,000 pounds of mutton and lamb, 5,000 pounds of veal and pork, 25,000 pounds of salt beef, 3,500 pounds of corned beef, 3,000 pounds of sausages, kidneys and sweetbreads, 15,000 pounds of salt pork, and 10,000 head of poultry and game. That in preserving these articles 400 tons of ice are used, while the other articles consumed include 1,200 pounds of tea, 5,500 pounds of coffee, 15,000 pounds of sugar, 10,000 pounds of butter, 70 tons of potatoes, 300 barrels of flour and meal, 2,500 dozen bottles of ale and porter, and about 500 dozen bottles of wine, and 1,000 dozen bottles of mineral water. That some 2,500 pieces of glass and 1,500 pieces of earthen ware are broken in a year, and that these figures are based on the supposition that the number of passengers is less than the full complement, since the full complement would increase them to a total scarcely credible.

While on the important subject of "nourishment," let us see what the emigrant receives for his six guineas, or $30, in addition to being carried 3,000 miles. Let us take, par hazard, the Saturday and Sunday bill of fare on the City of Brussels for March 6th and 7th of this year:

Saturday, March 6th, 1880.

Breakfast at 8 a. m.—Cocoa and coffee, with sugar and milk; arrowroot, with sugar and milk; oatmeal porridge and molasses; fresh rolls, biscuit and butter.

Dinner at 12 noon.—Vegetable soup; one-half fresh beef, one-half mess beef; potatoes, rice and molasses.

Tea at 5 p. m.—Tea and gruel, with sugar and milk; biscuit and fresh bread and butter.

Sunday, March 7th, 1880.

Breakfast at 8 a. m.—Coffee and cocoa, with sugar and milk; arrowroot, with sugar and milk; fish, with sauce; biscuit and fresh bread and butter.

Dinner at 12 noon.—Vegetable soup; one-half roast beef, one-half boiled beef; potatoes and rice; plum pudding, with rum sauce.

Tea at 5 p. m.—Tea and oatmeal gruel, with sugar and milk; fresh rolls, biscuit and butter.

Three thousand miles at a halfpenny a mile, and this nourishment thrown in for nothing! Emigration made easy!—luxurious would be a better term. The emigrants, after medical muster, are free to descend to their staterooms. The steerage is apportioned into rooms, each room being laid out so as to accommodate from ten to twenty persons according to location, and each having its own window or port-hole and door, so that by the turn of a screw the port may be opened and the "champagne air of the sea" let in with a leap. In every room there are two tiers of berths on each side, upper and lower, with a wide passage-way from the door to the port-hole. Between the higher and the lower berth is a distance of three feet, with the same space between the upper and the roof. The berths are divided by deal boards, one and a half inches thick. These are removable so as to accommodate families, and the deals can be taken out to make up a bed to any required size. Each berth is nearly two feet wide. Nothing can exceed the cleanliness and the sweetness of these rooms. They are kept clean-swept, broomed and sawdusted, and, when the ship comes into port, steamed, while every deal is removed and every interstice overhauled. Beneath the lower berths in each compartment is a space two feet high, which is utilized by the occupants for stowing away such minor articles of luggage as may be required during the voyage. The single men are apportioned rooms to themselves, and our sketch will give a very exact idea of how emigration is made easy to the unmarried males on board the palatial steamers of the Inman Line. Air shafts and funnels play into the steerage, so that there is a constant current of the fresh sea-laden breeze gently permeating the rooms, and depriving vitiated air of everything in the shape of vantage-ground. Large vessels with brass taps, accessible at all hours, contain fresh water for the use of the emigrants, and in close or Summer weather there is a copious supply of iced water, while for washing purposes there is an equally inexhaustible supply of condensed water. It is a bright and cheery sight to behold the anxious and courteous stewards as they flit about the steerage dining saloon—well ventilated as any dinner-room on Fifth Avenue—bearing great smoking dishes, and endeavoring to attend to about twenty different callers at the same moment, while a very Babel of sounds arises as the emigrants—from Bavaria or Ballyporeen—laugh and talk and crack jokes over the plentiful and admirably-cooked meal. Every day fresh bread is baked and served to the steerage passengers, and, should a loaf prove insufficient, a barrel of biscuits is at all times at their disposal. If the weather be fine tea may be taken on deck, and al fresco parties invariably become the order of the evening.

Flirtation is not exclusively confined to the saloon passengers, or is dancing either. In the steerage, the fiddle or concertina supplies the place of the piano, and Pat, supple as an eel, "welts the flure" with Norah, while Hans trips it gayly with Gretchen, the non-dancers applauding with might and main, their joyous laughter mingling with excited cries and vigorous plaudits as Pat or Hans executes some Terpsichorean movement of unusual difficulty and agility. Cards and draughts, too, are called into requisition—"Spoiled Five" being the strong game—while books and newspapers are freely interchanged. The "morning wash" is an institution on board the Inman steamers, and the washroom a very type of neatness. Clean towels, fresh soap, a plentiful supply of water and mirrors, invite the male emigrant to his matutinal ablutions, while the gentler sex are similarly provided for 'tween decks, so that in the worst of weather this wholesome observance may be complied with. In addition to the self-adjusting basins, there are small troughs in which children may be bathed, and here the female-emigrant can herself take a bath in the uttermost privacy, the entrance to this apartment being strictly guarded. There is a washhouse on deck, with taps of hot and cold water, where clothes can be washed, and all the other sanitary conveniences are of the most improved and healthful order.

An admirable practice prevails on every ship of the Inman line. Bath and breakfast over, all hands, weather permitting, are daily ordered on deck, and then the steerage receives a thorough cleansing. The floors are scrubbed, the walls are scrubbed, every hole and corner is scrubbed. This work completed, down come the captain, the doctor and the purser, who critically examine the result of the recent scrubbing. Twice a day is the examination made, the purser following it up by several supplemental visits during day and night. To behold the handsome and genial purser of the City of Brussels, Mr. George Collar, performing this duty, one would be led to imagine that he was seeking a lost diamond, of a Queen Anne farthing, so analytical is he in his scrutinizing search! In every portion of the steerage notices are posted up, printed in French, German, Norwegian and English, urgently calling upon the passengers to report to the purser any inability or want of attention. So strict is the discipline observed that no food is sent into the steerage until it has been approved by this officer, who is held responsible by the owners for its freshness and wholesomeness. His duty it is to see that every care is taken to keep the sexes separate, extra diligence being used in the case of single women, and from the precaution taken in the selection of these officers by the proprietors, the morals of the Inman steamers is admirable from first to last. Should a passenger be taken ill, he or she is at once walled on by the doctor and removed to the hospital, where every attention is shown and every delicacy provided, from calves' feet jelly to champagne. The hospitals, male and female, are on deck, and luxuriously fitted up. Any case of infectious disease is instantly isolated, the patient being kept absolutely apart. Every new appliance for the extinguishing of fire is provided on the Inman line. Steam fire annihilators are connected with every department of the ship, together with centrifugal pumps capable of raising over 2,000 gallons of water per minute. Hanging in the davits are ten lifeboats of great capacity, furnished with the best appliances for safely lowering in case of any emergency. It is the habit of the company not only to test these appliances before the voyage but to put them to the still keener strain of sudden trials while at sea. This company, too, has adopted the routes across the North Atlantic suggested by Lieutenant Maury of the United States Navy—namely, the taking a southerly course during the months between January and August, when the ice is coming down from the northern regions on the banks of Newfoundland, so as to avoid all danger of a collision with ice.

It is the intention of the company to illuminate their entire fleet with the electric light, as the experiment on the City of Berlin on two voyages has resulted in a supreme success. The light in the steerage afforded the passengers veritable daylight, and in corners hitherto shrouded in darkness the emigrants knitted and sewed and read as if it were at high noon.

Having brought my immigrants safely and comfortably across the Atlantic in the good ship so ably commanded by the courteous Captain Watkins, I shall, in our next issue, place them in the hands of the jovial, cheery and obliging passenger agent, Mr. John Williams, who, taking them under his protecting wing, will keep watch and ward over them until the moment arrives for their departure Westward ho!

THE LOTOS "LOVING CUP."

THE Lotos Club of this city celebrated its tenth anniversary on the evening of March 27th by a grand banquet, at which the presidents of eleven other city clubs were present. Speeches were made by Whitelaw Reid (President of the Club), Secretary Evarts, Daniel Huntington, Jos. H. Choate, Richard O'Gorman and others. During the banquet a large silver tankard, with two handles, embossed at the base with double-eagle gold pieces, and bearing on its side the design of a Lotos flower, was presented to the club by Mr. Noah Brooks. Dr. A. E. Macdonald responded on behalf of the club, after which the cup was passed around the table, and each guest rose in his place and drank. The occasion was one of great enjoyment to all participants.

RIGHT REV. MONSIGNOR DOANE.

EASTER DAY was signalized at the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Newark, N. J., by the announcement by Bishop Corrigan that the Pope, Leo XIII., had just conferred upon the Vicar General and pastor of the Cathedral, the Very Reverend Geo. H. Doane, the rare dignity of a prelate of his household, with the title of Right Reverend Monsignor. Monsignor Doane, who is deservedly honored by this new dignity, is a son of the late Bishop Doane, (P. E.), of New Jersey and was born in Boston in 1830, while his father was rector of Trinity Church. After pursuing medical studies in Philadelphia, he entered the Protestant Episcopal Church and became a deacon under Rev. W. H. N. Stewart, in Grace Church, Newark. In 1855 he was received into the Catholic Church by Archbishop Bayley, and after a course of study for the priesthood in Paris and Rome, he was ordained a priest in St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1857. He has been pastor of that church for nearly twenty years, and after serving as Secretary of the Bishop and Chancellor of the Diocese, he was appointed Vicar General by Bishop Corrigan in May, 1873. The distinction now conferred upon him is probably due to the important services rendered by him, not only in the discharge of the ordinary duties of his office, but his successful efforts to raise funds in this country for the endowment of the American College in Rome, and establishing other important institutions. The ceremony of investiture will take place with imposing ceremony on St. George's Day, April 23d. This is the first time the honor has been conferred upon a priest in this country, but Monsignor Seton, of Jersey City, previously received a similar appointment while a student in Rome. They are the only two prelates of the Papal household in the United States, and both are residents of New Jersey. They have the right to wear the purple, but the appointment imposes no special duty upon them.

New Public Works in Paris.

A VAST number of public works are in progress or projected in Paris, and the commencement of milder weather will be followed by great activity in all branches of the building trade. Contracts have been passed for the plumbers' and joiners' work at the new Hôtel de Ville—the former for a sum of 778,891 francs, the latter for 1,084,867 francs. The construction of a stone embankment at the lower quay at Berry is advancing rapidly, and the foundations are being proceeded with for the bridge in the Rue de Tolbiac. The former of these works will cost 4,500,000 francs; the latter, 2,000,000 francs. An inquiry is open at the Mairie of the Sixth Arrondissement relative to the projected removal of the branch Mont de Piété from the Rue Bonaparte to a building to be erected between the Rues Cottilogon and d'Assas. The scheme for the concentration of different ministerial services will entail an outlay of 11,100,000 francs, of which 4,600,000 francs are for the Interior, 1,400,000 francs for posts and telegraphs, 4,600,000 francs for agriculture and commerce, and 500,000 francs for public works. The demolitions in the Champ de Mars are proceeding slowly, and the Exhibition building has, as yet, scarcely been touched. Dynamite had to be employed to throw down the portico of the Fine Arts Palace. The ruins of St. Martin Market, which recently fell down, are almost cleared away, and plans are drawn up for a new iron building, which will be completed by the end of the Summer. Among other great works are the construction of a retaining wall to the Park of Montsouris, in the Avenue Reille, the placing of three-branch candelabra on the most frequented boulevards, the placing of electric clocks on different public buildings to give the hour of the Paris Observatory, the erection of a new Hôtel de Ville at Neuilly, the rebuilding of the Pont des Invalides, the construction of two new locks on the Marne to improve the navigation between Meaux and Paris.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

A MONUMENT to the late Prince Imperial will be erected in South Africa by the British Colony.

THE Baroness Burdett-Coutts refuses to contribute towards Mr. Herbert Gladstone's candidacy for Middlesex, on the ground that the country needs a stronger government than the Liberals are, in her opinion, able to offer.

IT is not an unusual thing for ministers to be present at, and to pray for a blessing on, the "blowing in" of blast furnaces; but it has been left for Dr. Craven, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to dedicate a North Carolina cotton factory.

THE Rev. Dr. Newman Hall, who secured a divorce from his wife last August, has been married again. His second wife figured prominently in the divorce trial, and Dr. Hall then admitted that he intended to marry her if successful in his suit against his wife.

A MOB of Chinese at Yenping-foo recently attacked the Rev. Nathan Sites, an American Methodist missionary, and were on the point of stoning him to death when a local magistrate interfered. The mob said that they were only treating Americans as Americans treated Chinese in California.

PRINCESS STEPHANIE and Crown Prince Rudolph will be married—by civil ceremony—at Brussels; the religious rites will be conducted at Vienna. The young couple are to live at Prague. The Communal Council of Brussels intend to offer to the Princess a marriage gift of lace of the minimum value of $5,000.

THE Emperor William, replying to the congratulations of his Generals, on the occasion of the celebration of his birthday, said that he believed he was able to assure them that they would probably have no more opportunity of putting in practice their military knowledge, all fear of war having apparently, for the present, been dispelled.

PRINCE LEOPOLD, the Queen's youngest son, who was born on April 7th, 1853, has been prevented, by constitutional delicacy, from embracing any profession, but has inherited, beyond any of his brothers, his father's tastes. He was entered at Christ Church, Oxford, and is a member of the university and a doctor of civil law. His visit to America is settled for April.

PRINCE ORLOFF, the retiring Russian Ambassador to France, has, of late years, led a very secluded life in Paris. An irreparable loss he had suffered had closed his drawing-rooms, and thenceforth he ardently devoted himself to works of charity. He visited the garrets of the poor, took a special interest in sick workmen, and the infirm and poor of the laboring quarters will sorely miss him.

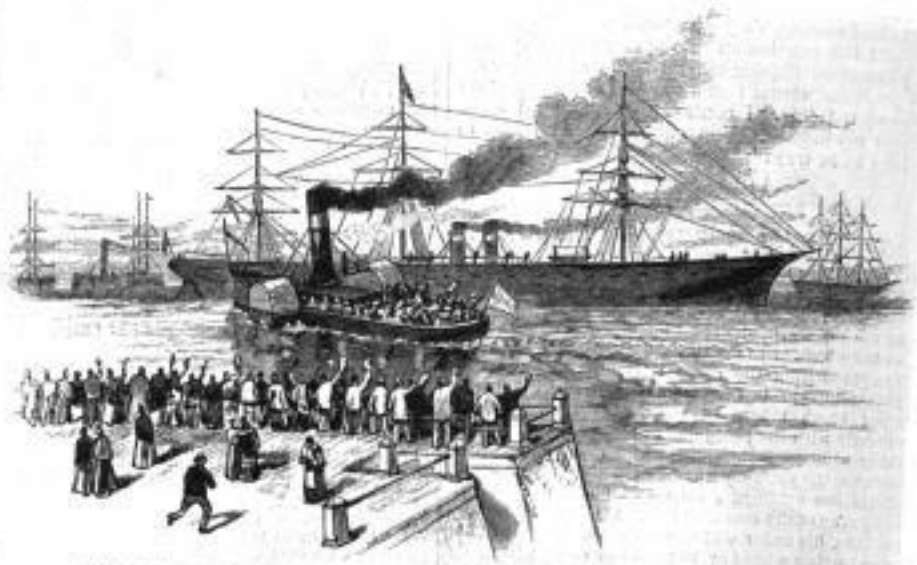
HON. ALEXANDER MOUTON, Louisiana's oldest ex-Governor, was recently serenaded in New Orleans by the Orleans Artillery. Governor Mouton, who is eighty years of age, was inaugurated in 1843, and served until 1846. He was Speaker of the State House of Representatives in 1837, was the first native Louisianian sent to the Congress of the United States, and was the President of the seceding convention in 1861.

M. VICTOR HUGO intends to bring out several new works this year. A poem of 4,000 verses, "Religion et Religions," will appear in a few days, and then will come two volumes of "Toute la Lyre," to be followed by the "Vision de Dante," the "Quatre Vents de l'Esprit," the "Fin de Satan," and the third part of the "Légende des Siècles." A five act drama, "Torquemada," two comedies, "La Grandmère" and "La Forêt Mouillée," and a piece in verse, "l'Epée," are also ready for publication.

FREDERICA, Princess of Hanover, so long the devoted companion of her old and infirm father, is about to make a marriage which must be said to be one of romance, since her future husband's rank is not quite equal to hers. He is the Baron de Pawel Rammingen, for many years the friend, secretary and aide-de-camp of the late King, Frederica's father. Queen Victoria will formally give her consent in Council to this marriage, the Princess being a Princess of Great Britain, as well as of Hanover, and intending to live in England.

IT is announced that Miss Louise Evarts and Dr. Bedder, of New York, will be married in May, and that Miss Ellen Sherman and Mr. Thackera will also be married in the same month. Miss Mills, daughter of Judge Strong, will be married in June to Mr. Slade, of New York. The gentleman is a widower, with two children. His first wife was the daughter of Mr. William Dodge, of New York. When Miss Ellen Sherman is married, she will receive her set of diamonds made up from the collection sent by the late Khedive of Egypt to General Sherman when his eldest daughter was married.

THE Sir Henry Havelock who has recently changed his name to Havelock-Allen, in consideration of a bequest of $2,500,000 from a cousin, is the eldest son of the great Sir Henry Havelock, the hero of the Indian mutiny. For his services in defeating Nana Sahib at Cawnpore, and for his relief of Lucknow, General Havelock was made a K. C. B. and a baronet. Strangely enough, the letters-patent were made out on the very day after his death, which occurred at Alum Dagh, in November, 1857, two months after his march to Lucknow. The honors which failed to reach him in life, however, continued to his son.



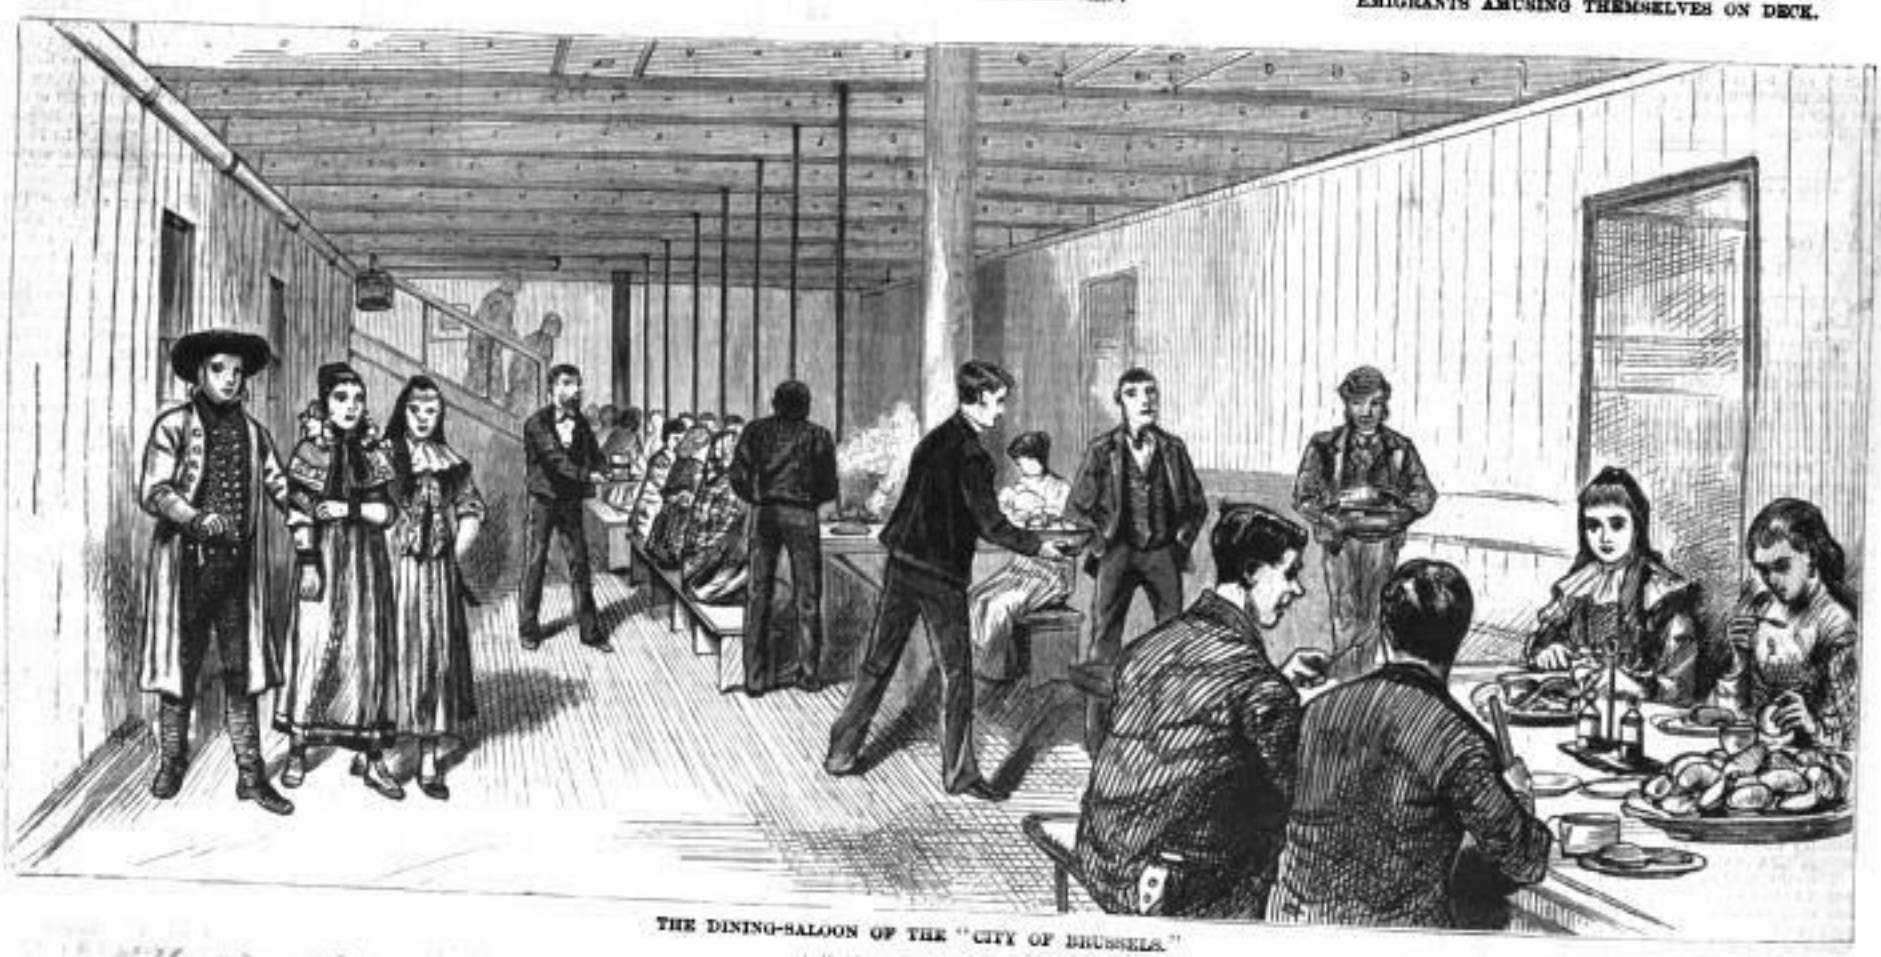
THE announcement is made that the Union Theological Seminary, of which the Rev. Dr. William Adam is the president, has recently received a gift of $100,000 from ex-Governor Edwin D. Morgan. Mr. Morgan's motive for this generous act is that he is "desirous of showing his appreciation of the usefulness of the Union Theological Seminary, and aiding it in the great work it is now doing for the country." The money will be used to form a fund which is to be called the "Edwin D. Morgan Library Fund." The new building to be erected will also bear his name. The officers and directors of the seminary hope to make this the best theological library for the use of clergymen and editors of all denominations.

IT is announced by cable that Pope Leo XIII. has made Vicar-General Doane, of Newark, a prelate of the Papal household with the title of Right Reverend Monsignor. The distinction is probably due to Vicar-General Doane's efforts to raise money in this country for the endowment of the American College at Rome, as well as for his services in the cause of the Church in general. The appointment gives the prelate the right to wear the purple, but it imposes no special duty upon him, being purely honorary. The Papal brief is expected to arrive in a short time, and the ceremony of investiture will take place on St. George's Day, April 23d. Vicar-General Doane is the eldest son of the late Bishop Doane, of the Episcopal Church. He was born in Boston in 1830, and, after studying in Philadelphia, became a deacon in Grace Church, in that city. He was received into the Catholic Church by Archbishop Bayley in 1855, and studied for the priesthood at Paris and Rome. He has been pastor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Newark, for twenty years, and was appointed Vicar-General by Bishop Corrigan in 1873, and served as secretary of the Bishop and Chancellor of the diocese. He is a brother of Bishop Doane, of the Episcopal diocese of Albany. The only other prelate of the Papal household in this country is Mgr. Seton, of Jersey City.

Digitized by Google

EMIGRANTS LEAVING HOME IN THE WEST OF IRELAND.

EMIGRANTS EMBARKING ON THE "CITY OF BRUSSELS," AT LIVERPOOL.



EMIGRANTS' PANTRY ABOARD SHIP.

STATE-ROOM FOR UNMARRIED MEN.

EMIGRANTS AMUSING THEMSELVES ON DECK.

THE DINING-SALOON OF THE "CITY OF BRUSSELS."

THE MORNING BATH.

THE SHIP'S HOSPITAL.

THE PRESENT EXTRAORDINARY EMIGRATION FROM EUROPE TO THE UNITED STATES.—FROM SKETCHES BY CLARENCE O'DOWD.—SEE PAGE 107.

Digitized by Google

ABBOT BONIFACE WIMMER, OF ST. VINCENT'S BENEDICTINE ABBEY, PA.

THE BENEDICTINE ANNIVERSARY.

ALTHOUGH the Benedictines are the oldest of the religious orders in the Latin Church, they have only within a few years been widely known in America. One of their number, Dom Buill, accompanied Columbus on his first voyage; but they do not appear prominent in the great missionary work that followed. The Mitred Abbot whose portrait we give is the pioneer of the Benedictines in the United States, yet he has lived to see no less than five abbeys of his Order, with a large number of priories and houses, scattered throughout the United States, and no fewer than three Fathers of the Order raised to the rank of bishop.

Their labors were originally among the German Catholics in this country, and they were invited to this field by an old clergyman, Rev. Peter Lemke, who as early as 1833 urged the Benedictines to occupy this field. In a visit to Europe he induced Father Boniface Wimmer to come over and begin a house of his Order. This Benedictine, born at Thalmassing, in Bavaria, January 14th, 1809, was ordained at Ratisbon in 1861, and in the following year entered the Benedictine Order at Metten. He could not find any priest to join him in the undertaking, but came over in the Summer of 1846 with five candidates for the Order, and a number of young men who wished to become lay brothers. Bishop O'Connor, of Pittsburg, offered them some land in Westmoreland County, Pa., willed to the Church by a priest in 1790. Here the Benedictines began their first monastery, and soon opened a college and theological seminary. The work has prospered beyond the wildest dream of the founder. In 1855 Pope Pius organized the members as the American Cassinesian Congregation, made St. Vincent's an abbey, and Father Wimmer became a Mitred Abbot, the first of his Order in the United States. The Benedictines soon had missions in various parts of Pennsylvania, Carrolltown, St. Mary's, Johnstown, etc.; and extending, established churches in Newark, N. J.; Covington, Ky.; Chicago; St. Paul; St. Cloud, Minn.; Atchison, Kan.; Wilmington, Del.; in North Carolina; Texas; and among the negroes in Georgia.

The aged abbot has been active in inducing his Order throughout the world to celebrate this year, the fourteenth hundredth anniversary of the birth of its founder, St. Benedict, and will have the satisfaction of celebrating it himself, surrounded by the numerous community gathered and organized by his zeal.

During the civil war the Benedictines did good service as military chaplains, and one was killed on the battle-field.

RIGHT REV. MONSIGNOR GEO. B. DOANE, PRELATE OF THE PAPAL HOUSEHOLD.—SEE PAGE 107.

OLD ST. ANN'S CHURCH, BROOKLYN.

THE corner-stone of St. Ann's Protestant Episcopal Church, in Brooklyn, now in course of demolition to make room for the East River Bridge, was laid in March, 1824, and in July of the following year the building was consecrated by Bishop Croes, of New Jersey. It is of brick, 98 by 68 feet, and 80 feet in height to the top of the tower. The schoolhouse, which was erected three years afterwards, is also of brick. The church contains three mural tablets of white marble, which are to be removed to the walls of St. Ann's, on Clinton Street. One is to the memory of Joshua Sands, long a warden in the parish; another is to the memory of Mrs. Ann A. Sands, relict of Joshua Sands; and the third is a memorial of the Rev. Benjamin Clarke Cutler, D. D., who for thirty years was the rector of this church.

St. Ann's is the oldest parochial organization of the church in the city. It dates back to a period when Brooklyn contained not more than one hundred houses, clustered around the neighborhood of Fulton Ferry. The Rev. James Sayre, an adherent of King George, officiated in the parish from 1778 to about the time of the evacuation of the town by the British troops in 1783. The Rev. Geo. Wright succeeded him during the following year, conducting the services, first in a private dwelling, then in a barn, and afterwards in a small building erected by the British and fitted up for the purpose.

St. Ann's began its new corporate existence in June, 1795. On the resignation of the Rev. Mr. Nesbitt, in 1798, the Rev. John Ireland became rector, and officiated until May, 1807. With the increase of the town the congregation soon attained such growth as to demand a larger place of worship, and in April, 1804, they received from Trinity Church, New York, a donation of $2,000 for a brick church in Sands Street, corner of Washington, which was at once begun, and was completed in 1805, at a cost of £4,794 7s. 9d. The dimensions of this structure were 60x46 feet. In May, 1805, it was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Moore. From 1807 to 1814 the Rev. Dr. Henry Feltus was rector, and for the three years following the Rev. Dr. John P. K. Henshaw. He was succeeded, from July, 1817, until November, 1819, by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Smith, when the Rev. Dr. Henry U. Onderdonk entered upon the rectorship.

"The Brick Church" in Sands Street sufficed for the wants of the congregation but little more than twenty years; for, in October, 1823, it was resolved to erect a larger one, fronting on Washington Street, the building which is now about to be taken down.

The Rev. Dr. Onderdonk continued to officiate in the new church in Washington Street till October, 1827, when he removed to Philadelphia. He was succeeded by the Rev. Dr. Charles P. McIlvaine, who remained till 1833. The Rev. Dr. B. C. Cutler was the next rector. Dr. Cutler's pastorate extended over a period of nearly thirty years, from April, 1833, to February, 1863, when he died. Upon the death of the Rev. Dr. Cutler, the wardens and vestry gave a call to the Rev. L. H. Mills, who had charge of the parish until his resignation, April, 1867, when the Rev. Dr. N. H. Schenck was named his successor, and soon afterwards entered upon the duties of his office.

THE "LOVING CUP" OF THE LOTUS CLUB OF NEW YORK. SEE PAGE 107.

MEMORIAL OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL, TO BE PLACED IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, LONDON.

THE PRINCE NAPOLEON MEMORIAL.

"A NICHE in the Abbey." This for the brave boy who died fighting England's fight, and with his face to the foe. And this is the end of the story that began with salvoes of cannon and the exultation of a mighty nation, and ended by finding the poor body of a boy, naked and slashed with wounds, alone and forsaken, desolate yet undaunted. Amidst the whirl of personages and circumstances, the inner history of Napoleon IV. was little noted by the curious world until the end came. 'A charming child, but rather delicate," "A promising young man, decidedly clever," was all that was said of him by the multitude, in his boyish splendor at Biarritz and St. Cloud, in the sterner training of his adolescence, in the purposeful retirement of his opening manhood. But however tortuous the paths of dynastic ambition, or however self-deceiving the not unnatural wish to benefit one's country and one's family may have proved to others of his house, no censure can fall on him. Bred in the glittering luxury of the Second Empire, there must have been sterling metal in the lad to bear the storms of adversity as he did, so that they only purified and hardened him, preparing himself the while for the high destinies of which he could not possibly help dreaming, by self-reliant labor, patient courage and spirited resolves to prove himself, at first chance, an enfant de France.

It was open to him to lead the life of the jeunesse dorée of the age, to be the favored guest at receptions, to be honored in great houses, to receive as the son of Napoleon III. the grateful recognition of a people whom his father had befriended. But he preferred the dangers and excitement of war to inglorious ease, and he went down. The end came because the lad really wanted to see fighting, and he took his life in his hand with a high and ready courage worthy of the "young and brave Bonas." Nobody can tell whether he would have made a general, but at least he had the qualities of a soldier—bravery, coolness in danger, self-forgetfulness. Still his death will be the most painful reminiscence of that most painful war, where glory was so hard to win, and when won, of so little worth. And yet, if it be true that no man can be counted happy until he is dead, and all chance of mischance is over, the heir of the Napoleons was blessed in his end above his ancestors. As Schiller says, "The future hides its gladness and sorrow," and no human wisdom could tell whether the Prince, had he fulfilled the destiny the world had marked out for him, would have reached shame or glory. As it is, he takes his place in history a figure beautified by the beauty of his life, the loftiness of his ambition, the romance of his fortunes, and the pathos of his untimely fate. The song has been sung—one of the sweetest our ears have heard—a pure pæan of glorious and well-founded ambition, and of aspiration to all that was holy, brave, true and good! The poem has ended—a poem of chivalry such as we nowadays but seldom have the privilege of hearing. England—that was his second home—honors his memory as she would honor that of the most distinguished of her sons, and the marble effigy by Boehm, which is about to be placed in Westminster Abbey, will tell the brave lad's pitiful story to our children's children.

OLD ST. ANN'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, NOW BEING DEMOLISHED TO MAKE WAY FOR THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

THE LATE COMMODORE EDWARD BARRETT, U. S. N. SEE PAGE 103.

Digitized by Google

This effigy of the Prince is the result of a subscription started by Mr. A. Borthwick, of the London Morning Post. All the Royal Princes are on the committee, and over $13,000 have been subscribed. It is to be executed in marble, also the sarcophagus, on which poor Lou-Lou's prayer will be introduced, with other inscriptions, etc. The design for the cenotaph has been done, or is to be done, by J. Pearson, A. R. A., Architect to Westminister Abbey. The sculptor, Mr. J. E. Boehm, has treated the effigy as much as possible like the old monuments of the fourteenth and fifteenth century, on account of its place in the Abbey (Henry VII.'s Chapel), but has united with it the British modern military costume with the greatest accuracy, finding it just as picturesque as that of any previous period, viz., patrol jacket of staff officer, breeches and high boots, with helmet at his feet. Her Majesty the Queen and the ex-Empress Eugénie have seen the model, and highly approve of it.

The Cervantes Anniversary Celebration.

THE memory of the author of the immortal "Don Quixote" was right royally honored at the anniversary celebration which recently took place at Booth's Theatre. The daughters of sunny Spain, looking "darkly beautiful," mustered as though attracted by the fierce fascination of a corrida, black eyes, blood-red roses, and fans resembling the sails of the windmill against which the Knight of the Rueful Countenance ran his luckless tilt, smiting the wandering gaze from all sides, while the caballeros gallantly upheld the prestige of the country of the Cid. A poem in Castilian, in memory of Cervantes, was hailed with well-deserved, enthusiastic plaudits, while the two original Spanish comedietias, "Un Español in Boston" and "La Cara del Campo," fairly brought down the house. The Students produced a new and piquante olla podrida, the pièce de résistance being the national anthem of Spain. The proceeds of this delightful entertainment will be devoted towards the erection of the Cervantes Monument in Central Park, after the design by the gifted sculptor and painter, Señor Fernando Miranda.

FUN.

WHEN any office-hunter puts himself into the hands of his friends, and his friends don't set him down before a woodpile and a sawbuck, they are not doing their duty—not by a long shot.

A HAPPY husband relates that he has been married twenty years, and that during the whole time his wife and he had only once had an idea in common, and that was when their house caught fire, and both did their best to see who could get out of the door first.

TWO Boston women of "culture" came across an old-fashioned milestone in the suburbs. One read the inscription, "L. m. from Boston," and the other said: "Here is a grave, perhaps of some young girl, who wished it written on her tombstone, 'I'm from Boston.' How simple and sufficient!"

IN crossing a street to a grocer's on the other side, a little lad was frightened by the violent barking of a large dog near the shop, and had no courage to proceed. The owner silenced the dog, and then bade the child come on, as there was no danger. "Ah, but," said the little fellow, casting a dubious glance at the object of alarm, "the barks are in him!"

THERE is one boy in this city whose bosom is filled with a pure and calm delight. For some offense his father took his sled away from him in the early part of the Winter with the promise that he should not have it again until another season, and the boy confidentially remarked to a friend that "this warm weather was the best rig on the old man he had ever heard of."

WHILE a quiet German family were seated around the Sunday hearthstone, the various professions which are open for a man of ability came up for discussion. A large majority of the children expressed a decided preference for a snug sinecure, where the work was unimportant and the salary excessive. One of the children, who had an open Bible on his knees, said: "Well, I should like to sit on the roof all my days and have nothing to do, just like Joseph in Egypt." Very naturally the attention of the family was excited by the remark, and the boy was asked to explain himself. He turned over the leaves of the book and triumphantly read the passage which aroused his envy: "And Pharaoh put Joseph over his house." "There," he said, "that's what I would like, to sit on the roof and have a large salary"

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

"COMPOUND OXYGEN" is especially valuable where, from any cause, there exists great nervous or physical exhaustion. Our Treatise will tell you all about it. It is mailed free. Address, DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1112 Girard Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A WELL-KNOWN English chemist delivered a lecture on oxygen, and having exhibited the combustion of iron in this element, sent round some of the fragments of fused and oxidized iron for inspection. At the conclusion, as he was taking his departure, a lady of rank hastened after him with the words: "Excuse me, professor, but you have forgotten one of your pieces of oxygen."

WHAT BETTER EVIDENCE

could the people ask to substantiate the merits of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines than the fact that they have not only yearly grown in popular favor in this country, but the foreign demand for them has become so great as to necessitate the establishing a branch of the celebrated World's Dispensary in London, England, that these blessings to the afflicted may be dispatched from that greatest commercial centre of the world to every country and people? Golden Medical Discovery is a concentrated, potent, alterative, or blood-cleansing remedy, that wins golden opinions of all who use it for all humors, from the common pimple, blotch or eruption to the formidable scrofulous swelling. Internal fever, soreness and ulceration yield to its benign influence. Consumption, which is but a form of scrofulous affection of the lungs, may in its early stages be cured by a free use of this God-given remedy. See article on consumption and its treatment in "Invalid's Guide Book"—10 cents postpaid. Address, "World's Dispensary Medical Association," Buffalo, N. Y.

WORCESTER, Mass., Feb. 3d, 1879.

DR. R. V. PIERCE:

Dear Sir—With trembling hand, from my extreme age, being eighty-five, I write to inform you of the great benefit your Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets have been to me. Three years ago I was prostrated with pneumonia, and no one thought I would recover. By the use of those medicines I was raised to health, and by the blessing of God and your medicines I have enjoyed pretty good health since, though for years before this I suffered from weak lungs and a bad cough.

Gratefully yours, MARY B. FISK.

SUCCESSFUL because of superior merit. MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Sold by Druggists.

DR. BROWNING'S C. & C. CORDIAL is the result of long scientific research. It acts rapidly, and its efficacy is unparalleled. Ask your druggist for it.

THE March 15th issue of the Agents' Herald comes to us with a handsome new heading, a page of humorous engravings and a choice assortment of specially contributed poetry, sketches, etc., making altogether a very interesting and highly valuable paper. The Herald is published semi-monthly at No. 716½ Sansom Street, Philadelphia, Pa., by Mr. L. Lum Smith, and is devoted entirely to the interest of agents and canvassers. Sample copies may be had from all Newsdealers in the United States and Canada, or they may be had from office of publication, 716½ Sansom Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Price ten cents. Our readers will do well to send for a sample copy, as its fearless exposure of all fraudulent advertisers makes it invaluable to every family. Mr. Smith is also sole licensee for the patent Imitation Stained Glass, a beautiful invention for home decoration. It requires no skill to apply it, thus making it a neat and engaging occupation for ladies and gentlemen in tastefully decorating their homes with all the brilliancy and beautiful effects of real stained glass at about one-tenth the cost.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

FOR SEA-SICKNESS.

PROF. ADOLPH OTT said: "In the plurality of cases I saw the violent symptoms yield, which characterize that disease, and give way to a healthy action of the functions impaired."

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—The attention of heads of families is respectfully invited to the superior quality of Burnett's Flavoring Extracts. They are entirely free from the poisonous oils and acids which enter into the composition of many of the factitious fruit-flavors now in the market. They are highly concentrated, have all the freshness and delicacy of the flowers from which they are prepared, and are less expensive.

THE skill and watchfulness which have been characteristic of the management of the ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, in New York, have made it the most perfect example of its kind which one could select to illustrate competence in a profession. This great institution, in its table, rooms and general conveniences, is known far and wide, and its reasonable charges cannot but increase its great patronage.

HALFORD'S SAUCE unrivaled by any relish. Intended for family use. Recommended by the best families.

RAILWAY DISASTERS, of which we hear so much, should remind every traveler to insure in THE TRAVELERS.

A COUGH, COLD, CATARRH or Sore Throat should not be neglected. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a simple remedy, and will generally give immediate relief. Imitations are offered for sale, many of which are injurious. The genuine "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are sold only in boxes.

THE genuine ASBESTOS ROOFING (with white or gray Fire-proof Coating), now in use in all parts of the world, is the only reliable substitute for tin. It is adapted for steep or flat roofs in all climates. It costs only half as much as tin, and can be easily applied by any one. H. W. JOHNS MANUFACTURING CO., 87 Maiden Lane, Sole Manufacturers.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

THE "ODD TRUMP" SERIES.

8vo. Fine cloth, $1.25. Paper cover, 75c.

THE ODD TRUMP.

"Preserving the highest praise. . . . Its incidents are all pure; it is the apotheosis of chivalric bravery and courtesy; and is written in elegant English, with a purity of style that is in itself refreshing."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HARWOOD.

"A good novel in the best sense of the word."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE LACY DIAMONDS.

"Will more than ever stamp its author as one of the foremost popular novelists of America, or it may be of the world."—New York Commercial.

FLESH AND SPIRIT.

"We do not at all wonder that these novels are popular. They deserve popularity for being precisely what they are meant to be and what they profess to be."—New York Evening Post.

THE CLIFTON PICTURE.

"A novel that the most exacting taste will revel in. It is brimful of situations, bright and entertaining."—Boston Post.

THE GHOST OF REDBROOK.

"It is a thoroughly readable novel, pure and vigorous in tone, with plenty of love, romance and humor, and not much ghost. The plot is worked out most skillfully, and will puzzle even the inveterate novel-readers."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

 For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. Dorman, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

25 C. AGENTS OUTFIT for 1880 of the best house. All articles ever invented; sell at sight; stamps taken. FLORENCE & CO., 154 Canal St., N. Y.

LA BELLE CHOCOLATIERE.

One Hundred Years Old.

1780 1880

WALTER BAKER & CO.

Dorchester, Mass.

CHOCOLATE, BROMA and COCOA

In their best and purest form, contain every ingredient that is needful for the sustenance and growth of the human system, being composed, as determined by chemical analysis, of starch, gum, gluten, oil, and a white crystallizable substance called theobromine, similar to theine in tea, but containing more nitrogen and being an important adjunct to nutrition.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

Our Book of Choice Chocolate Receipts will be sent free to any address.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,

COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.

Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

CHAMPLIN'S
LIQUID PEARL

"Is an excellent cosmetic."—Tribune. "The best I have ever used."—Charlotte Thompson. "The best I have ever used; for the future I shall use no other."—Lotta. "Far superior to the one I bring over from Paris."—Janauschek. "Superior to any cosmetic."—Scott-Siddons. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a bottle. Beware of imitations. CHAMPLIN & CO., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

WITH

$5

YOU CAN BUY AN

Imperial Austrian Government Bond

Which bonds are issued and secured by the Government, and are redeemed in drawings held every month with premiums from $100 to $100,000, and bonds not drawing one of such larger premiums must be redeemed with not less than 100 per cent over their face value.

These Bonds are negotiable at daily market quotations.

Out-of-town orders sent in REGISTERED LETTERS, and inclosing $5, will secure one of these bonds for the next drawing.

For orders, circulars, or any other information, address,

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,

No. 150 Broadway, New York City.

Established in 1874.

☞ The above Government Bonds are not to be compared with any Lottery whatsoever, and do not conflict with any of the laws of the United States.

N. B.—In writing, please state that you saw this in the English FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

ANGOSTURA BITTERS

An excellent appetizing tonic, of exquisite flavor, now used over the whole civilized world, cures dyspepsia, diarrhœa, fever and ague, colics, and all disorders of the digestive organs. Try it, but beware of counterfeits. Ask your grocer or druggist for the genuine article, manufactured by DR. J. G. B. SIEGERT & SONS. J. W. HANCOCK, U. S. Sole Agent, 11 B'way, N. Y. P. O. Box 2,616, N. Y.

CHEAP MUSIC

Send Postal for free Catalogue of Popular Music at popular prices. Extra special terms to dealers. Agents wanted in every village, town and city. Address, "HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE," 32 Park Row, New York.

CANDY Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address C. F. GUNTHER, Confectioner, 78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

MAMMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

40 Skeins German Worsted, 23 Colors and Shades, 12 Perforated Mottoes, and over 100 New Designs for Worsted Work, postpaid by mail for only $1. Best dollar package ever offered. Worth about Three Dollars at Retail Prices. F. W. GARDINER, Lynn, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

10 CTS. pays for STAR SPANGLED BANNER 3 mos. Nothing like it. 18th yr. 8 pages illustrated. Specimens FREE. Address, BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Dr. Clark's PERIODICAL PILLS. A Blessing to Womankind. Price $1 per box by mail. DR. CLARKE Medicine Co., New York.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is Dr. M. W. CASE'S

CARBOLATE OF TAR INHALANT

It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedial agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT sent. SATISFACTION ALWAYS GUARANTEED. Address, (When writing for circular, name this paper.)

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS & DEAFNESS.

Circulars, etc., Sent Free.

Dr. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Amusements.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.
RICE & NUNNEMACHER, Lessees. POSITIVE NOVELTY.

EASTER HOLIDAYS. MONDAY, MARCH 29TH, EVERY EVENING at 8, WEDNESDAY & SATURDAY MATINEES at 2.

GRAND PRODUCTION OF HERNE'S HEARTS OF OAK. HEARTS OF OAK, THE GREAT REALISTIC HOME DRAMA.

BIJOU OPERA HOUSE, Broadway, BIJOU OPERA HOUSE, NEAR 31ST ST.
FORD & McCAULL.....Lessees and Managers.
Genuine and assured success of OPERA DI CAMERA,
AGES AGO, by GILBERT and CLAY, and
CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME,
by ROWE and CELLIER.
The box office for the sale of seats is now open.
Performance commences every evening at 8:10. Saturday Matinee at 2 o'clock.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.

Positively only Five Nights longer of THE

ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY,
ROYAL MIDDY.

Positively last ROYAL MIDDY Matinee,
WEDNESDAY, at 2; SATURDAY at 2.
SATURDAY NIGHT, April 10th, first production of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY'S NEW CONTEMPORANEOUS COMEDY OF SOCIETY, AS IT IS and MIGHT BE, entitled, THE WAY WE LIVE,
WAY WE LIVE,
WAY WE LIVE,
In which the Entire Comedy Company will appear.
Sale of seats begins Wednesday, April 7th.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON, Proprietor and Manager.

First appearance in New York of
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
MISS ANNIE PIXLEY,
The charming Vocalist and Actress, as
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
M'LISS!
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
CHILD OF THE SIERRAS,
in which character she has received the indorsement of the press throughout the country.
She is supported by the J. E. McDonough and Bob Fulford Combination.
SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:30 and EVENING AT 8.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER.
After months of most elaborate preparation,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
WITH ENTIRELY NEW SCENERY,
with entire NEW COSTUMES and with a GREAT CAST, the grandest dramatic work of this century,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS,
THE TWO ORPHANS.

MONDAY EVENING, April 12th, reproduction of Bartley Campbell's successful American play,

MY PARTNER,

With the Original Cast.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.

HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
"WIDOW BEDOTT."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop't & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
SAULSBURY'S TROUBADOURS IN "THE BROOK."
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop't.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera Stars (with or without company). Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

"All Women May Become Beautiful!"

Our Illuminated Cream Silk Japanese Portfolio of "BEAUTIFUL" sent free. Address, EMIL BERGHOLT & CO., 83 Nassau St., New York.

NIGHT SCENES, 5 for 25c. Sent by mail, sealed. GILBERT & CO., North Chatham, N. Y.

25 SCROLL CARDS (no two alike), name in colors and gold, 13c. M. F. TAGGART, Castile, N. Y.

$125 OUTFIT free to Agents and all expenses paid. Address H. B. Shaw, Alfred, Maine.

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c 40 all chromos, 10c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

Digitized by Google

H.W.JOHNS' ASBESTOS ROOFING

The Asbestos Roofing (with white or light gray Fire-proof Coating) is now in use in all parts of the world, and is the only reliable substitute for tin. It is adapted for steep or flat roofs in all climates. It costs only half as much as tin, and can be easily applied by any one.

☞ Name the address, send for samples, and be sure and get the genuine, which is manufactured only by

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO.,
87 Maiden Lane, New York,

Sole Manufacturers of genuine Asbestos Liquid Paints, Boiler Coverings, etc.

Descriptive Price Lists free by mail.

KEEP'S SHIRTS

ARE THE VERY BEST.

KEEP'S PATENT PARTLY-MADE SHIRTS, only plain seams to finish. 6 for $7.

KEEP'S CUSTOM SHIRTS, very best, MADE TO MEASURE, 6 for $10. Fit guaranteed.

An elegant set of extra heavy gold-plated Buttons presented to purchasers of six shirts.

KEEP'S KID GLOVES (FOR GENTS),

The very best, plain or embroidered, 50c. to $1.25.

KEEP'S UMBRELLAS.

BEST GINGHAM, Patent Protected Ribs. Each Warranted. Fifty per cent. stronger than any other umbrella. REGINA and TWILLED SILK UMBRELLAS.

KEEP'S UNDERWEAR,

For Spring and Summer wear, 50c., 62½, 75c., $1, $1.25, $1.50. Very best. Peppered Jean Drawers, &c.

KEEP'S COLLARS AND CUFFS

in all the latest styles; also Gents' Silk and Linen Cambric Handkerchiefs, Scarfs, &c.

Shirts only delivered free.

Merchants will be furnished with Trade Circulars on application, as we furnish the trade on the most favorable terms.

Samples and Circulars mailed free.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY
631, 633, 635 & 637 Broadway, New York.

$10,000. SAFETY LAMP.

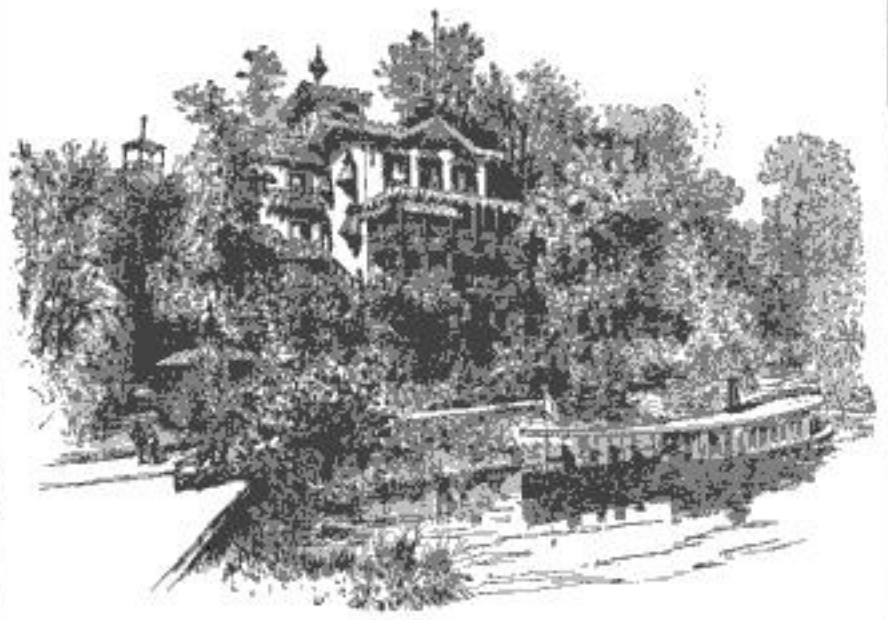
AGENTS WANTED

Mailed Free for 35 Cts. Four for $1.

$10,000 will be paid to any person who can explode a Lamp filled with our PATENTED SAFETY ATTACHMENT.

May use any lamp or burner. Prevents dropping and hanging. Send for samples, with size of collar and depth of your lamp.

S. S. Newton's Safety Lamp Co., 12 West Broadway, New York.



Factory and Office, Binghamton, N. Y.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Mme. Julian's Specific is the only unfailing remedy for removing radically and permanently all annoying disfigurements from the Lips, Cheek, Chin, Brow, Arms, etc., without injuring the Skin; no acids used. Ladies may address or apply to Mme. JULIAN, No. 48 East 20th St., New York.

20 New Style Chromo Cards, 10c. Best ever sold. Stamps taken. J. B. HUSTED, Nassau, N. Y.

"INTERLAKEN" FOR SALE.

THE COUNTRY HOME OF

THE LATE FRANK LESLIE, ESQ.,

Consisting of 92 acres, situated on LAKE SARATOGA, and extending back to Lake Lonely.

The house contains twelve rooms, gas and water.

The stable, finished in fine woods, has six box-stalls.

Finely appointed billiard-room, and three handsomely furnished sleeping-rooms over coach-house.

Gardener's cottage.

Conservatories profusely stocked with rare plants.

The furniture, steam-yacht, sail and row boats, French omnibus, etc., will be sold with the place.

Apply to

HOMER MORGAN, 2 Pine Street; or,
V. K. STEVENSON, 1 Pine St., and 35 E. 17th St.

Nasal and Bronchial Catarrh.

Can you comprehend in its terrible significance that this disease is more fatal to mankind than all the fevers and other ailments we know of? or the millions of people that labor under it? Many often are unconscious of its ravages until the discharge from the nose and throat brings it painfully home to them. In the ineffective effort to cough and expectorate the offensive matter. Can anything be more disgusting to the on-looker than this spectacle? Yet none are so frequent. You will find it in every street-car, in every public conveyance. This is only the beginning of the disease. It requires instant scientific treatment. From the delicate organization of the parts affected, there is no time to lose; nothing but the most decided measures will arrest the silent progress of this cruel malady. There must be no neglect.

Catarrh Eighteen Years!

Terrible headache, disgusting nasal discharges, dryness of the throat, acute bronchitis, coughing, soreness of the lungs, raising bloody mucus, and even night-sweats, for Eighteen Years, incapacitating me for my professional duties, and bringing me to the verge of the grave—all were caused by, and the result of, Nasal Catarrh. After spending hundreds of dollars, and obtaining no relief, I compounded my CATARRH REMEDY AND COLD AIR INHALING BALM, and wrought upon myself a Wonderful Cure. Now I can speak for hours with no difficulty, and can breathe freely in any atmosphere. At the calls of numerous friends, I have given my cure to the public.

It is Certain, Thorough and Perfect, and is indorsed by SUNDRY PHYSICIANS who has examined it.

T. P. CHILDS.

Many of our leading divines, lawyers and prominent business men have tried this remedy with wonderful success. We know Mr. Childs as an honest Christian man."—Cincinnati Daily Gazette.

CATARRH COMPLETELY RID OF.

103 E. FAYETTE ST., BALTIMORE, MD., Dec. 20, 1879.

REV. T. P. CHILDS—I have the pleasure of informing you that, after a faithful use of your remedy for eight weeks ending March 28, 1879, I am completely rid of a stubborn case of Catarrh of three years' standing—breathing takes clear as a whistle, appetite and digestion good. Yours, THOMAS H. MAHONE.

The Family of a Missionary Cured.

REV. THOS. ALLEN, of Dayton, Ohio, after six years' service in India, accepted the position of Secretary of the Am. Bible Union for Ohio. The latter contracted Catarrh while in India.

REV. T. P. CHILDS—Dear Sir: My son, now in Madison University, New York, was so badly afflicted with Catarrh, I feared for a time that he was incurable; which I applied to you for medicine my hope was built, but I believe it saved him from an early grave. He is now perfectly cured. My wife, who had become very much reduced by a residence in Farther India, has derived great benefit from your Inhaling Balm. Yours, ALLEN, Dayton, Ohio.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA CURED.

DR. FAIRFIELD is well known all over the United States as a man of high standing, learning, and great eloquence in the pulpit. He is at present the Chancellor of the University of Nebraska. Prior to the use of Childs' Catarrh Specific he had utterly lost the use of his voice, and was compelled to suspend his daily lectures.

REV. T. P. CHILDS—Dear Sir: I think you have the true theory and practice for the cure of Nasal Catarrh, and, for the treatment of the respiratory organs. My throat is now so well restored, that I lecture daily without any difficulty, and I find no discomfort whatever in preaching. You are at full liberty to use my name for the benefit of others. Yours, very truly, E. H. FAIRFIELD, D.D., LL.D., Lincoln, Neb.

UNITED STATES EXPRESS AGENT CURES HIS DAUGHTER.

T. P. CHILDS & CO.—Dear Sirs: About three years ago a severe attack of Measles left my daughter with Catarrh of the head. A severe cold aggravated the disease. I commenced using your treatment, and she recovered so rapidly as to astonish us all. Now my daughter is entirely well—all the horrid disagreeables. Your treatment is marvelous in its effects. JOHN W. RILEY, U. S. Express Agent, Troy, O.

HOME TREATMENT

Childs' treatment for Catarrh and diseases of the Bronchial Tubes can be taken at home with perfect ease and safety to the patient. No expense need be entailed beyond the cost of the medicine. Unlike a patent medicine, or the many so-called Catarrh cures advertised, Childs' Catarrh Treatment must be adapted to the wants and condition needs of each individual patient. A knowledge of this is of the first importance, and of this we make a thorough study.

☞ Send a 3 cent stamp, and obtain the details of this treatment. Name FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER. Address,

T. P. CHILDS & CO., Proprietors, Troy, Ohio.

Ask Your Merchant for

LANDRETH'S GARDEN SEEDS

They are NOT sent out all over the country to be sold on commission.

They are NOT put up in Fancy Picture Papers, illustrating improbable vegetables.

They are NOT to be found for sale in grog-shops.

They ARE grown by the Subscribers on their own farms in Pennsylvania, Virginia, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

They ARE put up in plain paper, at the lowest cost. The purchaser, therefore, pays for seed, and not for fancy paper and printing.

They ARE sold by respectable Merchants, Druggists, Grocers, etc., who buy them outright, because they know they will prove satisfactory to their customers.

They ARE to be had in any quantity in papers, in 5 lb. packages, in pints of Peas, Beans and Corn, or ½ bush.

If your Merchant does not keep them, send for Landreths' Rural Register and Almanac, containing catalogue and prices, and order them direct from headquarters. DAVID LANDRETH & SONS, 21 and 23 South 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Mention this paper.

YOUNG MEN And Older People—We send on 30 DAYS' TRIAL our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Tension, and other appliances, to those suffering from Nervous Debility, Kidney Troubles, Rheumatism, Paralysis, Lost Vitality, or Kindred troubles. Also for many other diseases. Write us at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

TAPE-WORM

INFALLIBLY CURED with two ounces of medicine in 2-3 hours. For particulars, address, with stamp, H. BICKHORN, 4 St. Mark's Place, New York.

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED Everywhere, to sell the Best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. Will knit a pair of Stockings, with heel and toe complete, in 20 Minutes. Will also knit a great variety of fancy articles, for which there is always a ready market. Send for Circular and Terms to The Twombly Knitting Machine Co., 400 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WE WANT A FEW MORE SALESMEN To Sell to Dealers | Samples free. CIGARS! | Send 3c. stamp to (name above) S. FOSTER & CO., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. Now Price Last. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich.

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—To best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS Catalogue free. $7 per day made easy. J. F. GAGE & CO., Boston, Mass.

BIG PAY to sell our Rubber Printing Stamps. Samples free. Taylor Bros. & Co., Cleveland, O.

Read the New Book, THE CANARY. MATING and BREEDING, Varieties, Care, Management, Diseases, etc. Handsomely bound and Illustrated. Price, 30c., by mail, 35c. Published by the SINGER GRAVEL PAPER CO., 2nd Hudson Street, N. Y.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery AND Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 158—168 East Fifty-ninth Street, Ice-houses and Rock-vaults, Fifty-ninth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate ice months and years.

DE VENOGE & CIE CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOCE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. For sale by Grocers. H. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 243 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

Imitation Gold Watches.

$5, $12, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $1 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 425 Broadway, N. Y. Box 5086.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF By sending 33 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

SUFFERERS from Nervous Debility, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, Dr. Jayne & Co., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

CARDS—10 Lily of the Valley, 10 Scroll, 10 Engraved, 10 Transparent, 1 Model Love Letter, 1 Card Case. Name on all, 15c. WEST & CO., Westville, Conn.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Brewer & Co., Portland, Maine.

40 ELEGANT CARDS, all Chromo, Motto and Glass, name in gold and jet, 10c. West & Co., Westville, Ct.

52 Gilt, Crystal, Lace, Perfumed & Chromo Cards name in Gold & Jet, 10c. Clinton Bros., Clintonville, Ct.

5:4 gilt-edge, chromo, snow flake, gems, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING Co., Fair Haven, Ct.

18 Elegant New Style Chromo Cards, with name, 10 cts. postpaid. GEO. I. REED & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

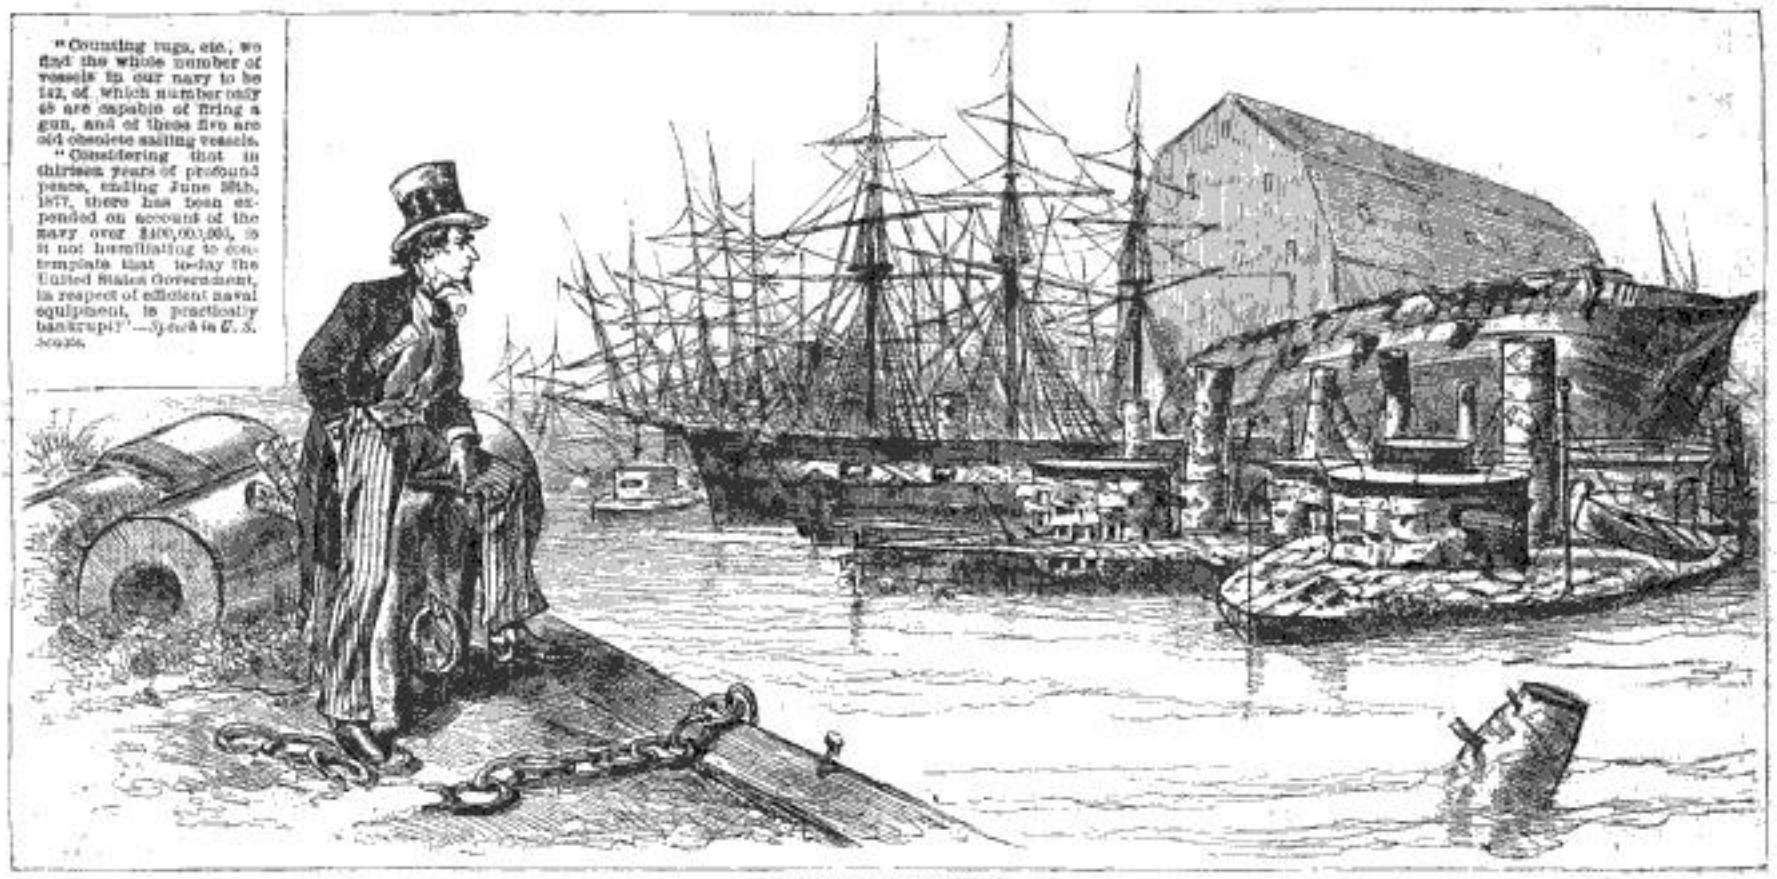
$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

ELEGANT AUTOGRAPH ALBUM, bound in Gilt, 48 pages, Engraved in Colors, and 54 select Quotations for same, 25c. 12 Photograph Cards, name and photo on, 25c. Send photograph. Clinton Bros., Clintonville, Ct.

CUT THIS OUT—IT IS VALUABLE

YOUR LAST CHANCE

PLAIN 18K. SOLID ROLLED GOLD RING,



IN A HANDSOME, VELVET-LINED CASE. Below we repeat the Grand Offer, which we made in the readers of this paper once before this winter, but as the time has lapsed, and many subscribers have not taken advantage of our first advertisement, and as we have received so many liberal orders for our other goods from those who have received the beautiful ring, we have concluded to extend the offer made these subscribers, as it will positively not appear again. A Beautiful and Valuable Gift for a Lady, Gentleman, or Child. We will forward, post-paid, to any address in the United States, One of our Heavy Plain Band Rolled Gold Rings, enclosed in a very fine Velvet-lined Case, postpaid, on receipt of only 25 three-cent postage stamps, and agree to exchange any ring, for other goods of equal amount desired on the finds of the ring, provided you do not satisfy yourself, after you have received the ring, and five days' time in which to examine it, that you have got the best bargain at the same price you would find, and feel sure you will not be disappointed. We will also send you a box of our Celebrated Cloth Cleaning Compound, which we manufacture from new and original designs, and which we guarantee to give satisfaction. Remember, the Ring we send you is a Genuine, Solid, 18 K. Rolled Gold, of medium width, and that this extraordinary offer is made only to introduce our goods and catalogues in your vicinity. Our firm is well established and reliable, manufacturing first-class goods from the precious metals. We can only send out a limited number of Rings at prices named, and do not expect to realize from this investment more than the cost of the Rings, as we depend on selling our goods to dealers after they have introduced them to you. We do not claim this to be the best bargain in the world, but we do claim that we must know you are entitled to the benefit of this offer. Under no circumstances will we send more than one Ring to any person, unless by express and at their expense. Should you not be satisfied with this advertisement, but, after you receive it, if others are desired, we will furnish them at 25 cents each, according to size, as per our Illustrated Catalogue, varying from $2.75 to $10 each, according to size and style. Be sure to send size of finger, and when you write enclose one of the Rings. Remember the Rings will be sent by mail to any one. Yalen Manufacturing Co., 126 S. 6th St., Philadelphia.

"OUR LABOR AND FUTURE SALES OUR PROFIT!!"

YOUR LAST CHANCE

NOT GOOD AFTER MAY 15TH 1880

OUR NAVAL SERVICE.

UNCLE SAM—"Good gracious! is that the Navy on which I have spent so many millions of good money?"

Persons at a distance should write for Samples and Directions for ordering

MEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. H. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

NICOLL THE TAILOR.

SPRING & SUMMER STYLES.

Diagonals, Worsteds, English Tweeds and Cassimeres,

MADE TO ORDER.

620 BROADWAY,

AND

139 to 151 Bowery, New York.

Samples and Rules for Self-Measurement

SENT BY MAIL.

A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $4.00.

ABSOLUTELY CURES

Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,

DETROIT, MICH.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price list.

CHAS. W. COPELAND,

Sole Manufacturer,

BOSTON, MASS.

FISHERMEN!

TWINES AND NETTING!

MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md.

☞ Send for Price-List, naming your County and State.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Over One Thousand Royal Octavo Pages, nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. Amusing, Instructive and Religious. The cheapest, largest and best selling book ever published. Agents wanted. Exclusive territory given. For terms, circulars and territory, address the Publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Copies mailed on receipt of retail price, Three Dollars.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, April 8, 3 P.M.
CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, April 17, 11 A.M.
CITY OF CHESTER.....Thursday, April 22, 3 P.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, April 29, 9 A.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $60, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, staterooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 32 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New Styles 19 Stops, 3 set Golden Tongue Reeds, 2 Oct's, 5 Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $90. New Pianos, Stool, Cover & Book, $143 to $285. Before you buy be sure to write for Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

PENN MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF PHILADELPHIA.

Purely Mutual. ASSETS, $7,031,318.84.

SAMUEL C. HUEY, Pres't.

Dividends annually. Insurance at net cost. Rates and 32d Annual Statement furnished. Agents wanted.

Apply to H. S. STEPHENS, V. P.

MABIE, TODD & BARD.

GOLD PENS.

Pencils, Holders, Cases, etc.

180 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for Price-List.

Our Goods are for sale by First-class Dealers in U. S.

THERMOMETERS,

Spectacles, Eye Glasses, Field Glasses, Opera Glasses, Microscopes, Barometers, Compasses, at greatly reduced prices. R. & J. BECK, 1016 Chestnut St., Phila. Send 3 stamps for Illustrated Catalogue of 146 pages, and mention this paper.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 18 larger sizes for business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 3 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

A. T. Stewart & Co.

ARE EXHIBITING a RICH and ELEGANT COLLECTION of IMPORTED and DOMESTIC

DRESS FABRICS

For SPRING and SUMMER, INCLUDING

Satin Striped Crepe Bareges,

Brocade Grenadines,

Silk and Wool Novelties,

In CHOICE ORIENTAL DESIGNS

Printed Challies

In SILK and WOOL.

Fancy Bordered Buntings, Silk Brocades and Handkerchief Robes

IN ALL COLORS.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

$10,000 Cash!

THE KANSAS CITY WEEKLY TIMES will distribute the above amount to its subscribers April 30th, 1880. One Grand Premium of $5,000, gold or greenbacks. Premium List and specimen copies free.

SPECIAL RATES to agents and getters up of clubs.

Address, THE TIMES, KANSAS CITY, MO.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.

Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

For Ten Cents: One hundred page Pamphlet with Lists of Newspapers and Advertising Rates.

For Ten Dollars: Five lines inserted one week in Three Hundred and Fifty Newspapers.

10 Spruce St., N. Y.

THE CHEAPEST MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD!

Frank Leslie's

POPULAR MONTHLY.

THE

April Number Now Ready,

WITH THE FOLLOWING BRILLIANT TABLE OF

CONTENTS:

"THE NEW IRISH MOVEMENT." By Nugent Robinson. 15 Illustrations.
"SKETCHES OF HIGHLAND CHARACTER—SHEEP FARMERS AND DROVERS."
"GENTLEMAN GEORGE—A STORY OF THE QUEEN'S TRIAL." By Alfred H. Guernsey. 10 Illustrations.
"NYLGHAU-HUNTING IN CANDEISH, INDIA." Illustrated.
"HOW I GOT INTO THE HALL OF ST. PETER'S." By Frank Leslie. 3 Illustrations.
"OPOSSUM-HUNTING IN THE SOUTH." 4 Illustrations.
"HOW THE JAPANESE AMUSE THEMSELVES—THE SHIBAI (THEATRE)." By Edward Greey. 5 Illustrations.
"HEARING WITH THE TEETH." Illustrated.
SERIAL AND SHORT STORIES, Etc.—"Nor Guilty," by Ella W. Pierce (Chap. XI.-XIII.); Illustrated. "Poor Harry"; Illustrated. "Mary Brand"; Illustrated. "Our Disaster," by Eleanor Grantham; Illustrated. "The Price of a Pair of Ears"; Illustrated. "The Sting of the Serpent"; Illustrated.
SKETCHES, Etc.—"Our Church Festival." "A Terrible Experience"; Illustrated. "A Desperate Boat Fight"; Illustrated. "The Goblin's Kitchen"; Illustrated. "Strange Archery—The Fish and Turtle of the Amazons"; Illustrated. "A Fishing Adventure"; Illustrated. "Some Dogs that I have Known"; Illustrated—etc., etc.
POEMS.—"An Alter Ego," by G. A. Davis. "The Lifeboat," by the Author of "Mary Powell"; Illustrated. "Staley and '45'," by Bret Harte—etc., etc.
MISCELLANY.—"The Most Northern Point of the United States." "A Curious Pleasure Yacht." "Voice in Fish." "The Vestal Tuccia"; Illustrated. "Ants and their Ways—The Farmer Ant"; Illustrated. "Recent Progress in Science." "Entertaining Column," etc., etc.

128 QUARTO PAGES—100 ILLUSTRATIONS

AND A

Handsome Chromo Frontispiece, entitled "Happy Days."

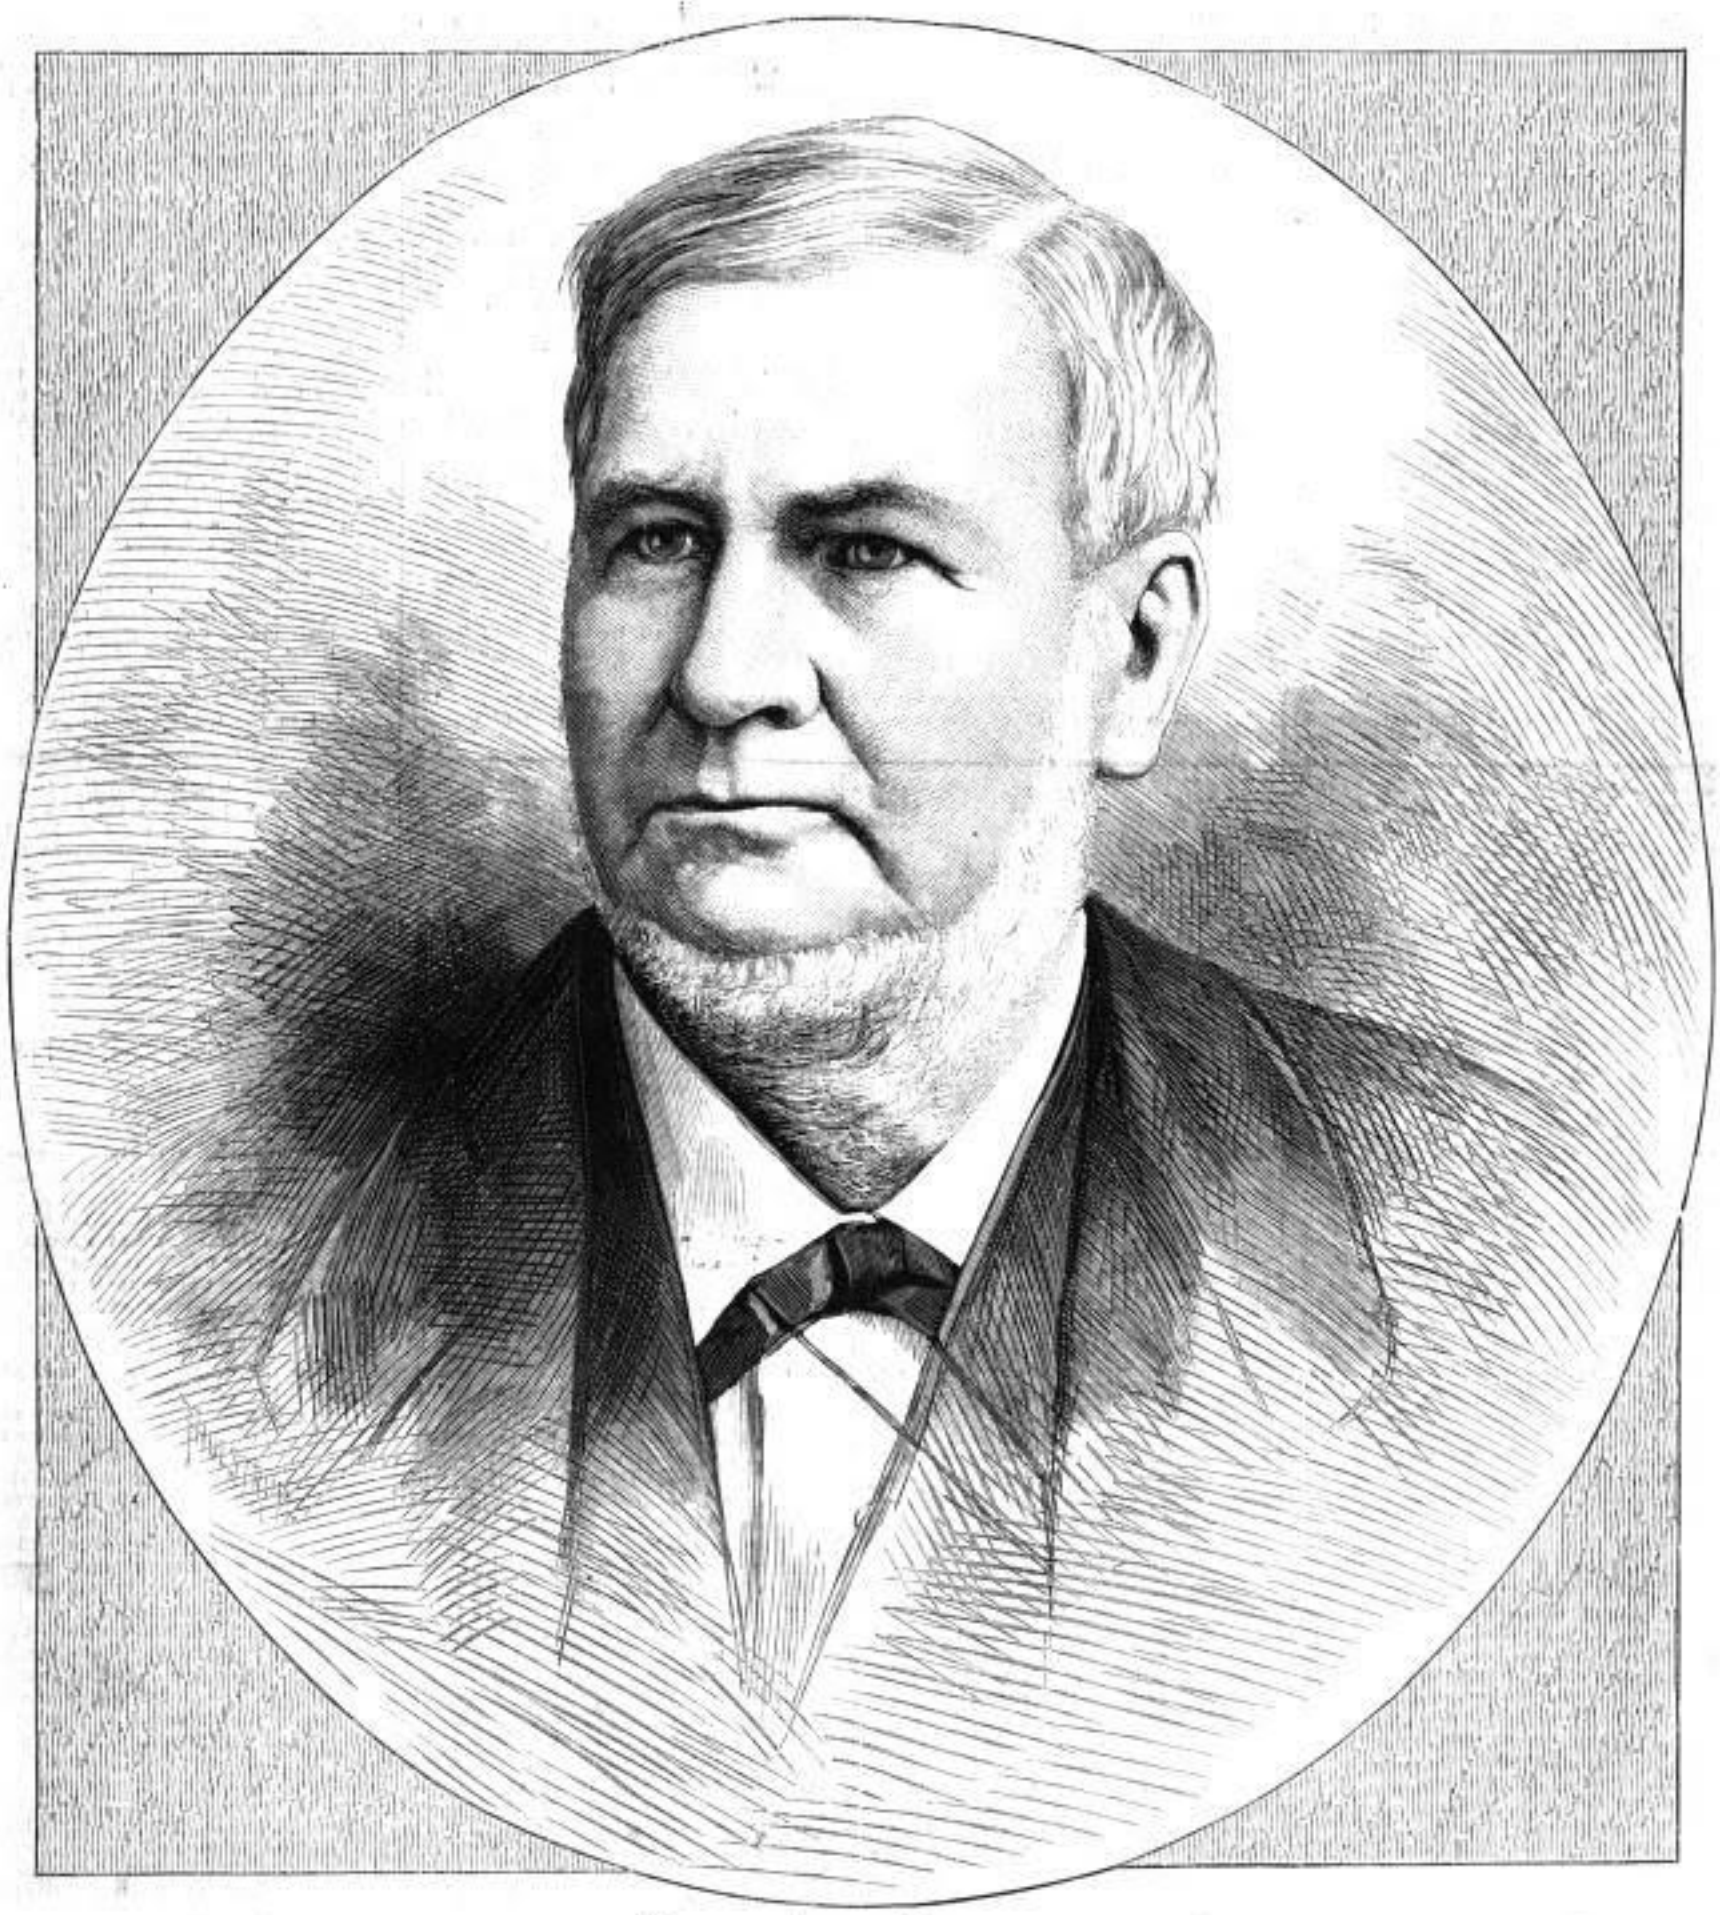
Single copies, 15 cents each. Annual subscription, $3; six months, $1.50—postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Read the New Story!

"The Magic of a Face,"

IN



Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by F. W. Ehland, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,282.—Vol. L. NEW YORK, APRIL 24, 1880. [Price 10 Cents.

David Davis.

No. 2.—Hon. David Davis, United States Senator from Illinois.

Gallery of Possible Presidential Candidates.—See Page 118.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
55, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, APRIL 24, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4121.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4121, New York City, N. Y.

I. W. ENGLAND, Assignee

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

THE PARTY CHAOS.

WE offered last week some observations on the wary reticence practiced by the managers of both the great leading parties of this country, lest, forsooth, an exposure of the varieties of opinion entertained by the nominal adherents of each, on such living issues as Honest Money and Tariff Reform, might lead to an open rupture within the limits of the organization, and thus impair its efficiency in the coming Presidential election. Since we wrote, the reticence has been broken. Mr. Weaver has at last been "recognized," and Mr. Townshend has procured an honest show of hands on the merits of the Tariff measure which he at first had surreptitiously caused to be referred to an inappropriate committee.

The result is before us in the shape of an open eclasion of parties on these two important questions. The resolution of Mr. Weaver declares that the Government alone should issue all forms of money; that the maturing bonds of the United States should not be refunded, but should be paid off as rapidly as possible, and that to this end the mints of the country should be worked to their full capacity to coin silver dollars to be used in liquidating the maturing obligations of the Government. It will be seen that this policy contemplates an unlimited inflation of the currency by coining the present depreciated silver dollar. We say an "unlimited inflation," for such would be the effect of the Weaver resolution in its practical application. The Secretary of the Treasury stated in his last annual report that the bonds maturing in the years 1880 and 1881 amount to $782,000,000. It is this amount which Mr. Weaver proposes to pay in depreciated silver dollars within the next twenty months. In order to raise the money with which to buy silver bullion for this purpose, the Government would have to resort to excessive taxation, thus depleting, to that extent, the productive forces of the country. In the wake of such a depletion would follow the further depletion and derangement caused by the use of a dollar whose purchasing power is about eighty-seven cents. Gold would disappear, and the greenback would sink to the level of the silver dollar, thus causing an immense depreciation in the existing accumulated wealth of the country.

It is impossible to conceive of a proposition embracing a larger assemblage of financial heresies—heresies, too, as destructive as they are unscientific. And yet, to this mass of crudities, as many as seventy-three Democrats, chiefly from the South and West, were found ready to give in their adhesion, by voting in common with the Greenbackers for the resolution of Mr. Weaver, while of the Republican Party only two, Mr. Belford, of Colorado, and Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, parted from their political associates on this question. The result, therefore, discloses the fact that the great majority of the Democrats in the present House of Representatives are at variance with the Democrats of the North and East in the matter of this vital issue, while the Republicans, if slow to take some needful step forward, are at least firm and united in their refusal to take any steps backward with regard to the resumption and maintenance of specie payments in gold.

On the motion of Mr. Townshend to suspend the rules and pass the Bill amending the tariff, so as to place on the free list printing type, printing paper and the chemicals and materials used in the manufacture of such paper, one hundred and twelve Representatives voted affirmatively, comprising fifteen Republicans and five Greenbackers. The remainder, or the great body of those voting in the affirmative, were Democrats of the South and West. Eighty Democrats of the South and West voted against the proposition, comprising thirteen Democrats, mainly from Pennsylvania, and one Greenbacker. The remainder, or the great majority of those voting in the negative, were Republicans.

In the face of this statistical exhibit it is plain that the friends of Honest Money predominate in the Republican Party, and that the Democracy, in spite of the lessons taught by their coquetry with "the Ohio idea," are still honeycombed with the infection of false doctrines on the currency. It is equally clear, on the face of this comparative view, that the friends of tariff revision have little or nothing to hope from the Republican Party, and that when this question comes to the front it will be left for the Democratic Party to bear the brunt of the contest.

To those who look beneath the surface of these facts they make a painful exposure of the haphazard contradictions which regulate the competitions of party at the present day. There is no logic in the attitude of either party on these questions. The Democrat who votes for tariff revision, but who at the same time favors a fluctuating currency, either does not know what he is doing, or is voting to defeat his own aspirations. For there is always a necessary and intimate relation between the tariff rates imposed by Congress and the existing state of the currency, insomuch that the former can never be consistently regulated or readjusted except with reference to an assumed stability of the latter. With a currency subject to alternate expansions and contractions at the will of Congress, it is idle to attempt a revision of the schedules or rates of our imports according to any arithmetical reduction or increase, for such reduction or increase may be neutralized from time to time by the fluctuations of the currency.

According to all logic and common sense, therefore, the friends of tariff revision should be the friends of a sound and stable currency, and, vice versa, the friends of a sound and stable currency should be the friends of tariff revision, unless they wish to commit themselves to the maintenance of the exploded doctrine of "protection for protection's sake." But instead of this, we find, in the actual state of parties, a precise inversion of the ideas which should give consistency to their attitude and direction to their activity. It is as if the two great parties were adrift at sea, and had floated into their present antagonisms at the beck of wind and wave, rather than in obedience to the laws of public economy or the dictates of a well-considered expediency. It is futile for the Democrats to offer themselves as the exponents of tariff reform until they can offer themselves as the exponents of a stable currency. It is hazardous for the Republicans to offer themselves to-day as the champions of tariff rates which were established years ago on the basis of an inflated currency, unless they expect the currency to be inflated again, for it is only such a currency that can explain or justify the existing schedules and rates of our revenue system.

If the old Swedish Chancellor could return to life again, and could mark the kaleidoscopic views of our current politics, would he not find in them a fresh illustration of "the little wisdom with which the world is governed"?

DOES CIVILIZATION CIVILIZE?

THE story in the Scandinavian Sagas that Lief Ericsson and his followers discovered New England as early as the year 1,000, and formed a white settlement in Massachusetts or Rhode Island which lasted for two centuries, receives strong confirmation from the method in which the stranger is said to have treated the Indians. Landing on Cape Cod, the historian tells us, the Norseman discovered nine "sauvages" asleep under a bark canoe; and feeling that they had no business to thus intrude upon him, he attacked them with his crew and slew them all but one. This one escaped, rallied his tribe, and fell upon the vessel in the river, and the assailants killed the commander with their arrows. Thus was brilliantly inaugurated the Indian policy of the United States, and it has been persistently followed up to the present hour—a system of mingled treachery, brutality and stupidity. If Lief or Thorwald had lived 800 years later, they might have distinguished themselves as Indian agents, or, perhaps, as members of Congress. We have treated the red occupants of the soil of this continent as fierce animals are in the habit of treating each other in the cruel struggle for life; have made lying and stealing the chief weapon of our aggression; have disregarded treaties whenever it was inconvenient to observe them; have butchered when we could not wheedle; and have protected every white murderer when an Indian was the victim.

Let Congress think seriously before rejecting the overtures which the Utes have offered at Washington. They include the banishment from Colorado of the White River band, the surrender of the wanton murderers of Meeker and his men, the transfer to the white settlers of the rich parts of the reservation, and, more important than all else, the partial abandonment of tribal habits by a large portion of the tribe, who accept half a section of land to each head of a family, to be inalienable for twenty-five years. The terms are easy of execution, and substantially just; and their acceptability is increased by the fact that a pension of $500 annually is provided for the family of each white man murdered at the agency, to be taken from the annuity payable to Utes.

It is equally imperative that the great outrage which we have inflicted on the innocent, long-suffering and peace-loving Poncas should be atoned for without further delay. Our "mistake," as the Indian Commission calls it in the velvet vernacular of the Administration, has cost the lives of more than three hundred men, women and children. That "mistake" was in driving them from homes they had built with their own toil, from fertile land which had been theirs by inheritance for hundreds of years, and, recently, by additional purchase, and, recently, by additional purchase, driving them thence in obedience to a "request" which unscrupulous contractors forged for the purpose of getting pay for transporting them; and the additional "mistake" of locating them on a strip of barren soil, which is so miasmatic that, on the testimony of Commissioner Hayt, "Missouri cattle cannot live there." Hundreds of the harried and persecuted tribe have died; scarcely any of the children have survived the second Summer. It is not claimed that these persons have committed any offense, or that they had invaded anybody's rights; but they have been dragged from their homes to die, and Congress hesitates to restore their beloved heritage, but turns one ear to the vicious voices of thieves, who ask for an appropriation of $150,000 to keep the Poncas where they now are, that they may be the more easily plundered. There is no more terrible tragedy in our annals than this; no more hideous crime has been laid at our door.

The treatment of the Northern Cheyennes is about equally disgraceful; it is enough to make every decent American blush. In 1868 the United States made a treaty, under which the Indians surrendered the Black Hills and removed to the Indian Territory. The Government violated the treaty systematically, failed to pay annuities, failed to furnish rations, and cooped the Cheyennes up like sheep to die of disease and starvation. Ninety "braves," with their wives and children, revolted and started back north. They were pursued and finally captured and imprisoned, and, breaking out of the barracks, seventy-six of them were shot down in cold blood by the soldiers.

There is only one way to settle the Indian question: break up their tribal habits, give to each Indian a farm in fee-simple and stock it for him, prohibiting its sale, and then compel every Indian to obey the law of the Territory, and secure to him the protection of the law. Most of the plunder is made possible by the necessity of providing for the Indians in a body. Let habits of industry be encouraged and roving habits be prohibited, and the Indian problem will solve itself. It will not do to say that Indians are lazy and will not work, as long as 5,000 full-blooded Indians in Wisconsin and Michigan are self-supporting, live in their own homes, till their own fields, and prove themselves peaceful neighbors and good citizens.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

THE Liberal Party, after having remained out in the cold for six years, is now about to retaste the delicious sweets of power—a power it might have held without a break had it not been for a caprice of the eminent individual who has just so successfully wooed and won the heart of Midlothian. "I wonder," said Mr. Winkle, on the morning that ushered in the memorable trial of Bardell vs. Pickwick, "what the foreman of the jury had for breakfast." "I wonder," said Mr. Disraeli, when he learned that Mr. Gladstone had flung up the reins of office, "what Gladstone partook of at breakfast that disagreed with him." Whether Mr. Gladstone's political stomach is in better condition, or whether the quasi-rest of six brief years has proved a mental tonic, it is difficult to determine; but certain it is that the exalted position which he held in 1874 is open to him in 1880, and the great tidal wave which has swept over the length and breadth of the land, to the swamping of the Conservative Party, bears the "people's William" to the most coveted of all political offices, namely, that of the leadership of Her Majesty's Government in the Lower House of Parliament.

The Earl of Granville in the Lords, and the Marquis of Hartington in the Commons, would seem to be the programme prepared by the Reform Club—Mr. Gladstone to take a seat in the Cabinet under the ægis of a minor office. However this arrangement may chime in with the views of the section of the party which believes in the ability of the heir to the dukedom of Devonshire, the voice of the Liberals of England calls one man to the helm, and that man is William Ewart Gladstone. Much of the difficulty—not that Mr. Gladstone shrinks from hard fighting—that lay in the path of the Liberal Party has been removed by the acquirement of the majority which it now commands, exclusive of the Home Rule vote. The Liberal Party can meet the Conservative Party on any open question of policy, and beat them at their own weapons, while the Home Rulers, like the Clan McDonald at the battle of Culloden, may stand sullenly aside, unwilling to wield their claymores for the party with which they are naturally en rapport because of the slight put upon them.

It would be worse than a crime, however—a mistake—were the incoming powers to ignore the importance of the Home Rule vote. A crisis may, and will, arise when that vote, thrown into the scale, will upset the beam. The Home Rulers may choose to forget the "incendiary proclamation" of Lord Beaconsfield, and, for spite's sake, turn out the party which coquetted with them solely for the purpose of gaining office. As, according to Lord Beaconsfield, the unexpected always happens, it will be within the realms of possibility that the Conservatives may bid for the Home Rule vote, and astonish the country by promises of concessions in the way of local self-government which may bring the party back in triumph. A coup like this would be entirely in accord with the proclivities of the author of "Tancred."

The Liberal Party has its work cut out for it. Germany, so assured of the triumph of Beaconsfield, viewing his defeat with considerable concern and fearing that the Czar may be encouraged to re-enter upon his traditional policy of aggrandizement, prepares for action. Russia hopes to be enabled to resume her "inch by inch" Asiatic policy. Italy is of opinion that the change of Government means "a war somewhere." The "irrepressible Turk" fears for Constantinople; the Greek clamors for boundary, while in South Africa the Boers are bumptious; a sense of disquietude prevails in India, and the colonies demand representation in the Imperial Parliament. The policy of the Gladstone Government—for Gladstonian it must be, even if Mr. Gladstone holds no portfolio at all—if honest, must, inevitably, be based upon the tone of the party while in Opposition. The Berlin Treaty, which the Liberals denounced in the wildest language, will be overhauled; the white elephant, Cyprus, sold, if a purchaser can be found for it; the territory annexed in South Africa re-distributed—in a word, every act of the Conservative Government, upon which it so bombastically prided itself, turned inside out and possibly repealed so far as non-interference with the prestige of the Empire will admit.

Such a campaign will demand an able, experienced and daring general, and a vigorous action all along the line.

OLEOMARGARINE vs. BUTTER.

"EVERY tub upon its own bottom" is a good adage at all times, but especially applicable to a tub of butter, or what purports to be butter. The people who are manufacturing oleomargarine, and endeavoring to promote its acceptance and use as a substitute for butter, have, therefore, no good ground for complaint against laws and ordinances which require them, in severe penalties, to offer their product for what it is and not for what it purports to be. We have too much adulteration and deterioration of articles of food not to strike a blow for the maintenance of their purity whenever it can be done.

The dairies of the United States are of great and still growing importance as a branch of trade, involving interests that should not be trifled with. Nothing should be permitted of a character to weaken the confidence in the character of their products. It is true that the quality of butter is very much a matter of taste, and that there is little uniformity in this respect is shown by the wide range of prices in the wholesale markets. The figures last given are from twenty to thirty-five cents per pound, and the range in former years was much wider. The best trade in New York requires butter of a fine golden yellow, freshly made, but well salted. But in many of the best French and German restaurants guests are served with butter nearly white or quite so, and perfectly free from salt. For export to the West Indies, the quality required is that which would be wholly intolerable on our tables. Unless so strong as to be useless with us, except for cooking purposes, it would be pronounced insipid and flavorless by our customers in the tropics. Our exports to Great Britain are composed mostly of the poorer sorts of table grades. Indeed, it may be doubted whether the average English consumer knows what really fine butter is.

The preference of American consumers for yellow butter has caused an extensive use to be made of coloring matter. Indeed preparations for this purpose are openly advertised. Annotto and carrot-juice are largely employed. Besides, butter is in other ways a good deal "doctored" and adulterated. It would be a long story, foreign to our purpose, to detail the various manipulations; but it may be mentioned that recently, when white butter from Winter-fed cows was very plenty, it was discovered that many invoices had been mixed with lard. Adulterated and artificial butters have, however, been much more common in Europe than with us, and have been the subject of frequent expositions and discussions in foreign journals.

Digitized by Google

It is not necessary to go so far as to accept the Jewish proscription of dairy products as "unclean," to admit that butter is not a healthful article of food. Americans use altogether too much of it. It is on our tables morning, noon and night. It is exceedingly heating in its nature. It promotes and aggravates bilious disorders, and tends to open the system to malarial influences. Its use should be greatly curtailed in the Spring and Summer. Cheese is a cooling article and may well be largely substituted for butter. It is no wonder, when we see the large consumption of butter, that dyspepsia and indigestion are so prevalent. The well-to-do families of Europe do not usually put butter on the table when meats are served, and their example may be followed with advantage.

To return to oleomargarine. Some person with more learning than tact coined this word. The answer to Juliet's query, "What's in a name?" was never more aptly illustrated. The word is suggestive of a repulsive compound. It alarms people, and they turn from it with a feeling of repulsion. Suppose the article it describes had been introduced as "suet butter," or something of the sort, many would have been inclined to give it a trial. Now it can only be introduced surreptitiously. The best of it is said to be better than poor butter, and its future may not be hopeless. It is extraordinary to what an extent a person's taste may be vitiated. Give the average coffee drinker pure Mocha or Java coffee and he will dislike it; he must have the flavor of the chicory to which he is accustomed. The finest Oolong teas would not suit at all the customer of the "corner grocery." People have become so accustomed to syrup without a particle of saccharine in it, that they prefer it on their buckwheat to honey or the finest New Orleans molasses. Sugars, refined and large, mixed with flour or chalk, are preferred to finest Muscovados. The catalogue of these might be extended. The agitation against oleomargarine need not stop here, and probably will not. Adulteration of food is a great offense, which must be exposed and punished.

THE "HOME JOURNAL."

GOTHAM society has its Koran in its bright, crisp, newsy Home Journal, which possesses all the chic of the Boulevard, with the exclusive information of a Court gazette. It is the mirror in which Society beholds herself, the faithful chronicler of her sayings and doings, of her sorrows and, more especially, of her joys. In its columns the débutante seeks for the first mention of her name in print, the fiancée for the all-important announcement of her engagement, the bride for the ecstatic "Mrs.", the young mother for the notice of the birth of her darling. Mankind look to it for the winner at Jerome Park or "across the pond," for the yacht which has done wonders at Newport, for the polo pony, for lawn-tennis and racquets, for club receptions, and especially for "Lady day" doings; while Society, generally, finds in its columns glittering details of banquets, balls, afternoon teas, surprise parties, Germans, hops, amateur theatricals, charades, concerts, receptions, wedding breakfasts, fairs, lectures, anniversaries, and the thousand and one occupations by which the crême de la crême succeed in gilding the scythe of old Father Time. The Home Journal contains poetry written specially for its columns; original stories, admirable selections from the magazines of the upper-tendom all over the world, and able reviews of books. It tells the fagged-out votary of pleasure where to recruit during the Summer and the Fall, where to seek the "leaf shade by the river" or to inhale ozone to the music of the roar of the breakers. It lectures on art in the homestead from the cellar to the garret, and it reveals to its lady patronesses many of the priceless secrets of "Ce cher Monsieur Worth." Edited in a right masterful manner, the Home Journal, of New York, takes front rank with its confrères of Society, and in its especially bright mode of telling bright things is far in advance of all.

THE National Republican Convention will consist of 756 delegates, making 379 necessary to a nomination. Mr. Blaine's friends claim that he will have within twenty of this number on the first ballot. The advocates of General Grant, on the other hand, maintain that some of the States claimed by Mr. Blaine will support their favorite, securing his nomination beyond all peradventure. In 1876, Mr. Blaine's vote, starting at 285, reached 351, or within twenty-eight of the number required to nominate

SEVERAL important amendments to the Constitution of Indiana were adopted at an election held last week. One of these amendments provides that the State election shall be held in November instead of October, as heretofore, while another establishes a residence qualification for voters, thus insuring a purer ballot-box by eliminating the opportunities for illegal voting. A third amendment strikes the word "white" from the Constitution. Still another prohibits political or municipal corporations incurring any debt exceeding two per cent. of the value of its taxable property.

CONGRESSIONAL manners do not improve The House, one day last week, was entertained by the spectacle of one irate Representative—Mr. Sparks, of Illinois—thrusting his fist into the face of another, and accompanying the insult by denouncing the object of his wrath—Mr. Clymer, of Pennsylvania—as a liar. Nothing but Mr. Clymer's stoical indifference prevented an exhibition of downright ruffianism, if not of bloodshed. Of course, the fiery Illinoisan finally apologized for his unseemly conduct; but there are some offenses against decency which no apology can obliterate from the public memory, and this brutal defiance of all parliamentary propriety by Mr. Sparks will probably prove one of them.

THE next opera season in New York promises to be an exceptionally brilliant one. Mr. Mapleson has effected engagements with Mme. Gerster and Mlle. Christine Nilsson, both of whom will appear in connection with Campanini, Galassi, and others. The Academy of Music will be altered so as to enlarge its capacity, and the directors have made an arrangement with Mr. Mapleson under which he will occupy the building five seasons. One night each season he is to have the absolutely free use of the building for his benefit. In return he binds himself to procure grand opera on a generous scale, and for the period named to have no connection with any other house in New York City, in the way of giving operatic performances.

THE General Term of the Superior Court has rendered a decision, in a case against the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Company, to the effect that, while the charters of the "L" roads may bar the city from securing compensation for the occupancy of its thoroughfares, they do not bar private property-owners from recovering damages on account of injuries inflicted on their individual estates. The Court holds that to deprive a house-owner of light and air in his dwelling is to invade his property, in whose use and enjoyment the law is intended to protect him. The case will now go to the Court of Appeals, and it is intimated that it may be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States for a final decision of the points involved.

THE itinerary of the proposed journey of the King of Siam is at length published. He will first visit Marseilles, going thence to Berlin, where he will be received by the German Emperor. He will then go to Brussels and London, and on the 1st of July will embark at Southampton on an American man-of-war for this country. He will be accompanied by a splendid retinue, among whom will be several royal princes, the Ministers of War and Foreign Affairs, and a dozen prominent noblemen. He will remain in the United States for three or four weeks, going South as far as Richmond and West as far as Chicago. He will return to Siam in December. His visit to America is the result of an earnest invitation extended by ex-President Grant when he was the King's guest in Siam.

THE outrage upon the colored cadet, Whittaker, at West Point, has elicited almost universal expressions of indignation both in and out of Congress. In the Senate, Mr. Voorhees expressed what is no doubt the popular feeling when he said that "if this unspeakable and infernal outrage had been committed by the cadets, it should be made impossible to repeat it, or the school should be abolished." Mr. Hoar, echoing this sentiment, said that "unless this system of ostracism and assault was destroyed, a nation containing 4,000,000 colored people would grind the school to powder." It is to be hoped that the official inquiry ordered by the military authorities may result in fixing definitely the responsibility for this outrage, to the end that the perpetrators may be punished as they deserve.

A MANIFESTO of Prince Jerome Napoleon, declaring in favor of the Government decrees against the Jesuits and other religious Orders, has created a considerable sensation in France. The Prince says: "The decrees in question do not constitute a persecution, they merely return to an indispensable rule of public right. The principle which subordinates the existence of a religious Order to the surveillance and authority of the political power is to be found in all forms of society. The Bourbons themselves recognized it. To abandon it would be to destroy the State and to place it under the feet of the theocracy." The clericals and legitimists denounce the course of the Prince with great emphasis, and the only persons who seem to regard the manifesto with complacency are those members of the Government who have favored the decrees.

THE German Government evidently means to be prepared for any contingency which may threaten the peace of Europe. Extraordinary activity everywhere characterizes the military service. The railway system is receiving special attention, with a view, no doubt, of facilitating the transportation of the troops and munitions of war. In the great artillery workshops of Spandau unusual activity has also prevailed, and the manufacture of guns and projectiles for 12-pounder pieces of the new model is pushed with the greatest energy. The workmen are employed night and day, and the number at work is every day increasing. Another significant fact is that the Army Bill, now before the Reichstag, fixes the peace strength of the army until March, 1888, at 427,270 men. Should Russia, counting upon the change of rulers in England, resume an aggressive Eastern policy, possibly these extraordinary German preparations may be found not to have been premature.

THIS is the day of great enterprises. One of the latest, of a local character, is that of the New York Central Railroad Company for the enlargement of its terminal facilities on the water front between West Sixty-fifth Street and West Seventy-second Street, North River. Under an arrangement with the Dock Commissioners, the company proposes to take a forty years' lease of all the land under water at a yearly rental of $15,000 per year for the first ten years; to fill in such land and erect thereon storehouses, wharves, bulkheads, etc., all of which improvements will revert to the city at the expiration of the lease unless it be renewed. Piers about four hundred feet long will be run out obliquely from the intervening streets into the river, upon which tracks will be laid to discharge Western grain and other products directly into the vessels for shipment to foreign ports. It is said that the water front proposed to be filled in will be equal to about one thousand city lots. It is expected that the improvements will be pushed to completion at once, and that in a few years the entire freight for European ports arriving by the Central road will centre at that point.

THE Senate having approved the Franco-American treaty, the President of the United States, the Government of France and the Emperor of Brazil will each appoint a commissioner to adjudicate conjointly upon claims presented by citizens of the two countries. These claims are grounded on acts committed by the civil or military authorities of the treaty-making countries against the subjects of either during the French campaign in Mexico, the Franco-German war, the insurrection of the Commune, and the civil war in this country. No claims based upon the emancipation or loss of slaves, or which have been disposed of by the competent authorities, are to be considered. The commission will be bound by the canons of international law, and only give attention to cases where acts have been committed on either side against the persons and property of citizens who were not in the service of the enemies of the other country, or who refrained from giving them voluntary aid and comfort. The commission will meet in Washington early next Fall, and it is to be hoped that its decisions will be mutually satisfactory.

THE triumph of the law and order sentiment in San Francisco appears to be complete. Encouraged by the result of the recent city election, the Board of Supervisors have taken steps looking to the impeachment of Mayor Kalloch on the ground that his incendiary speeches have endangered the public peace, and it is now regarded as certain that the influence of the Citizens' Protective Union will be paramount in all municipal matters. The proceedings of the supervisors appear to be prosecuted strictly within the provisions of the law, and the escape of Kalloch under a technical plea is believed to be altogether improbable. His offense is the same precisely as that of which Kearney was convicted, but has a special element of aggravation because of his official position, and it is difficult to see how there can be any other result than a conviction when the case comes into court. The attempt of the Workingmen's Party, under Kearney's lead, to annul the verdict of the late election has resulted in failure, the board of election commissioners having decided that it has no power to go behind the returns, and formally declared that the Citizens' candidates must receive certificates of election.

A NUMBER of prominent Mexicans embraced the opportunity afforded by General Grant's recent visit to consult him as to the best means of developing the waste places of the Republic, asking especially that he would point out to American capitalists the great advantages which would result from the construction of railroads to connect with lines on the American side of the frontier. In reply to a letter from a number of these wealthy Mexicans, General Grant promised his hearty co-operation in the plan suggested, writing as follows:

"The building of the proposed roads would employ many thousands of hands of families; it would open fields for the production of food which would find a home market; for the cultivation of sugar, coffee and tobacco, and many other things valuable in commerce, and make mines, now practically inaccessible, of value. Thus employment would be given to all who choose to labor, and fields would be opened for millions yet to come. To my own country it would be of inestimable importance. Mexico could furnish all those articles which we now import from tropical countries, which receive but little from us in return except specie, and take advantage of our necessity to fill their treasuries, by charging export duties upon all we buy from them. These roads would bring the two Republics in very quick and healthy communication at all seasons of the year; would lead us to know each other better; to appreciate each other more highly, and strengthen the bonds of friendship between us. Each nation would become interested in the progress of the other, and both would be benefited by whatever advanced the other."

It is understood that the Mexican gentlemen who have interested themselves in this matter propose to form a syndicate to solicit the necessary grants from the Mexican Congress, and then to transfer the enterprise for execution to American capitalists. It is said they have strong hopes of securing the favorable concessions which they desire.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE Irish Rifle Association has invited the National Rifle Association to send a team to Ireland in June.

SAMUEL GOUVERNEUR, a grandson of President Monroe, and the last male member of a very old family, died in Washington last.

MRS. LYDIA DICKENSON, widow of the late Senator Daniel S. Dickinson, died in this city, April 8th, aged seventy-seven years.

GENERAL GRANT spent last week in New Orleans, paying a day's visit to Mobile, where he was warmly received by the colored population.

THE River and Harbor Bill now before the House of Representatives, appropriates about $6,000,000. The estimates amounted to $18,000,000.

THE amendment to the Army Bill, to prevent the use of troops on election day, gave rise last week to a partisan debate, to the exclusion of more pressing business.

THE House Committee on Banking and Currency has decided to report a Bill repealing that portion of the internal revenue laws requiring two cent stamps upon bank checks.

THE exodus from the maritime provinces of Canada to the United States continues. On Thursday left a party of 200, a majority of whom are young men, left Halifax for Boston.

THE annual meeting of the Society of the Army of the Potomac will be held at Burlington, Vt., June 16th. Secretary Evarts has been invited to deliver the address. Joaquin Miller will read a poem.

EUGENE FAIRFAX WILLIAMSON, the persecutor of Rev. Dr. Dix, is discovered to have been a swindler as well as a forger, having bedecked himself with jewelry obtained by forged indorsements.

THE United States Senate has confirmed the nominations of James B. Angell, of Michigan, for Minister to China; and of John F. Swift, of California, and William H. Trescot, of South Carolina, for Commissioners to negotiate by treaty with China.

AN appeal to members of the Protestant Episcopal Church for aid in establishing an endowment fund of $200,000 for the General Theological Seminary has been prepared by the committee which was appointed some time ago to consider how to secure the needed aid.

ON April 7th, Johnson C. Whittaker, the colored West Point cadet, was found in a bleeding and semi-conscious condition tied to his bed, with his ears wounded and otherwise injured. An examination of the cadets has shown that none of them were responsible for the deed.

ON Wednesday, April 7th, the corner-stone of the Channing Memorial Church was laid at Newport, the Revs. Dr. Bellows and William H. Channing, of London, participating in the exercises. Appropriate exercises were also held at Boston and Washington. There were also afternoon and evening memorial services held in Brooklyn in Channing's memory.

THE second pedestrian contest for the O'Leary belt began at midnight on April 4th, at the Madison Square Garden, New York, with eighteen entries, of which number five were without record. As the walking continued through the week, seven contestants fell out, and in the last three days the struggle was between Hart, Pegram and Dobler. At three o'clock on Saturday afternoon the score stood as follows: Hart, 540; Dobler, 511; Pegram, 527; Howard, 515; Allen, 497; Krohne, 497; Williams, 493; Hanwaker, 422.

A BILL has been reported in the House of Representatives appropriating $677,000 for the completion of the Washington Monument. The commission charged with the construction proposes to carry the monument 500 feet in masonry and to cap it with a pyramidal structure of iron and glass fifty feet in height. The foundation will be sufficiently strong to sustain its weight, and its total cost will be within the $677,000 appropriated.

Foreign.

THE wife of President Diaz, of Mexico, died April 9th.

FRESH Nihilists plots are reported in Russia, and outbreaks are feared at Moscow and St. Petersburg.

IT is announced that Russia is about to dispatch five large war vessels to Chinese waters for the protection of Russian interests.

A DEMOCRATIC manifesto has been published at Madrid demanding religious liberty, liberty of the press, universal suffrage and economy in the public service.

THERE is a terrible famine in Mosul, Turkish Kourdistan. Four thousand of the inhabitants have fled to Bagdad, and hundreds died on the road.

THE attempt to form a Bulgarian coalition Ministry has failed, and a Ministry will be formed from the opposition which is strongly supported by the Russian representative.

THE Spanish Cortes has adopted the clause of the Cuban budget providing for the liquidation of the debts of the Cuban Treasury. The strength of the permanent army in Cuba is fixed at 40,000 men.

THE bishops at the head of the Paris Catholic University have decided to conform to the law, as embodied in M. Jules Ferry's Educational Bill, by altering the name of the institution to that of "the Catholic Institute."

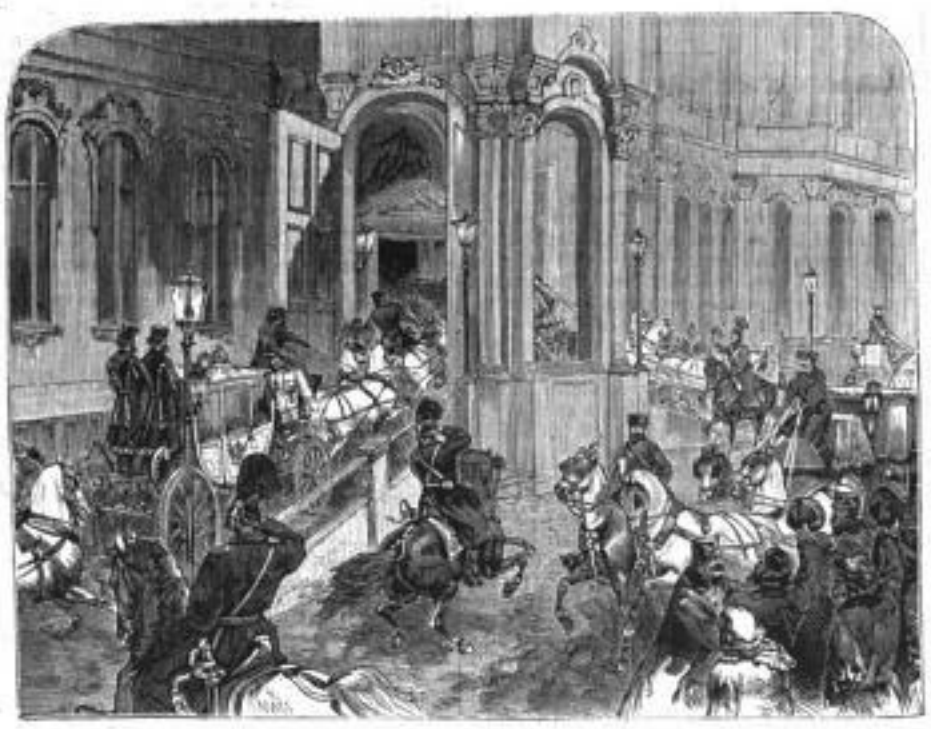
AN industrial exhibition was opened at Osaka, Japan, on February 15th, 1880. The exhibitors are said to have numbered 7,000. There were 6,000 exhibitions of cotton and 1,000 of sugar. About forty provinces were represented.

PRINCE BISMARCK last week resigned the Chancellorship of the German Empire on account of the dismissal in the Bundesrath of the vote of some minor German States of a Bill imposing imperial stamp duties. The Emperor refused to accept the resignation, and it is thought that the Bill will be again submitted to the Bundesrath and a majority secured in its favor.

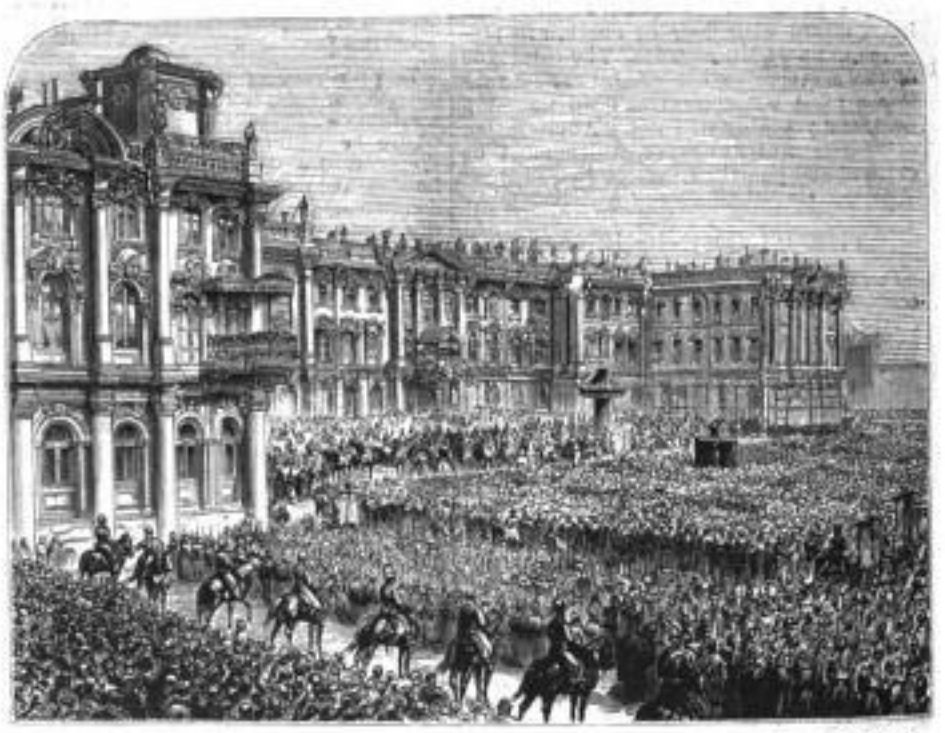
THE Chilians have been surprised at Moquegua, where they had a force of 2,770 men, by a strong Peruvian force. The Chilian loss in killed and wounded was reported at 1,200 men, over thirty-three per cent. of the number engaged. As a result of this check, it was reported in Valparaiso that Mr. Solomayer, Chilian Minister of War, had telegraphed to his Government for 10,000 more men.

THE English elections, up to April 9th, resulted in the election of 321 Liberals, 256 Conservatives, and 39 Home Rulers, a net Liberal gain of 97. The Liberals will have in the next Parliament a majority quite equal to that of the Conservatives in the last. Mr. Parnell has been elected from Cork, defeating a Liberal. The O'Conor Don has been beaten in Roscommon, but will be a candidate for a vacancy in Dublin County.

Digitized by Google

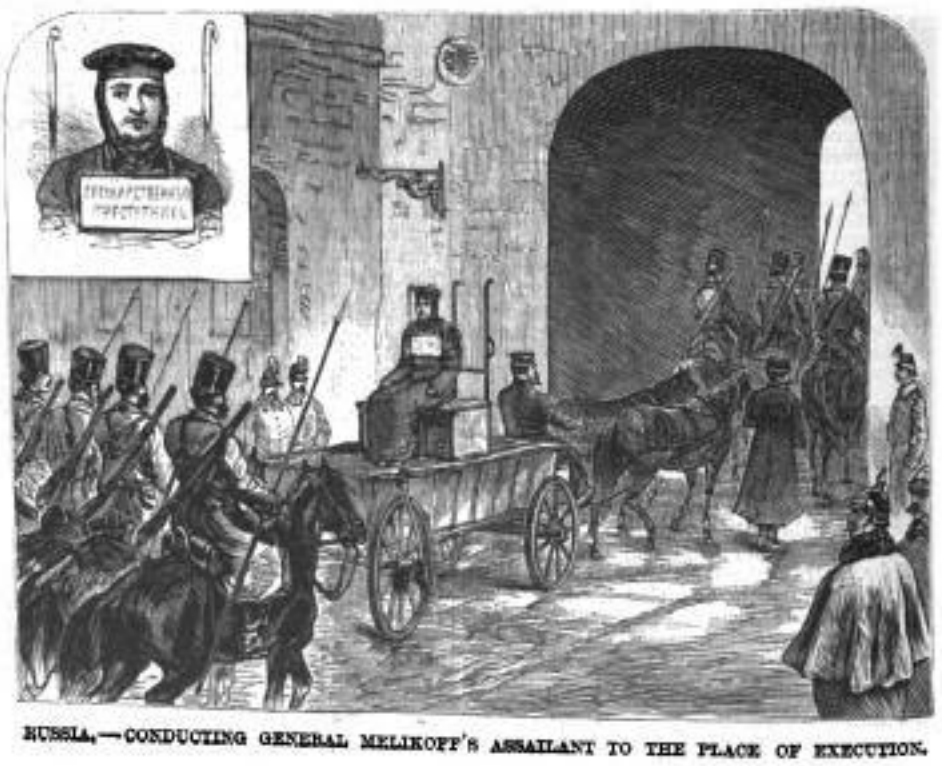


The Pictorial Spirit of the Illustrated Foreign Press.—SEE PAGE 119.



GERMANY.—THE OLD MINER'S PETITION TO THE EMPEROR.

GERMANY.—CAVALRY OFFICERS RIDING IN COSTUME FOR THE POOR, HANOVER.



RUSSIA.—ARRIVAL OF THE MEMBERS OF THE IMPERIAL FAMILY AT THE WINTER PALACE.

RUSSIA.—PERFORMANCE OF THE NATIONAL ANTHEM IN FRONT OF THE WINTER PALACE.

IRELAND.—THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH'S RELIEF COMMITTEE IN SESSION, DUBLIN.

RUSSIA.—CONDUCTING GENERAL MELIKOFF'S ASSAILANT TO THE PLACE OF EXECUTION.

Digitized by Google

THE RT. HON. WM. E. GLADSTONE.

THE eyes of political Europe, if not those of the entire civilized world, are at present turned towards one man—the man who in 1874, in a fit of indigestion, flung up the Premiership of England—William Ewart Gladstone. To-day Mr. Gladstone is the most popular man in Great Britain. By his silvern tongue he has succeeded in wooing and winning the heart of Midlothian from the "Bold Buccleuch," assailing single-handed a fortress hitherto deemed impregnable, and carrying it by a daring assault. Mr. Gladstone's majority is 221 votes. His opponent, the Earl of Dalkeith, is the son and heir of the Duke of Buccleuch, the owner of nearly the whole of the Midlothian, and the patron of twelve livings. The contest was the most spirited one fought in Edinburghshire since the passage of the Reform Bill. Each party used its utmost endeavors, and 2,947 voters came to the polls. In his time Gladstone has played many parts, from pulling down the Irish Church Establishment, to inscribing Greek verse on a postal card, and although in his seventy-first year, his rest during the Beaconsfield administration would seem to have infused him with new life. If he is destined to lead the House of Commons, as in all probability he will, the great issues now at stake will be handled by a very Titan. He steps into office on well defined lines, lines outside of which he could not if he would retreat. The most remarkable man of the period, he takes the helm with a bold, unflinching grip; and if the Liberal ship be well manned, it will take considerable raking fore and aft ere it hauls down its flag to its Conservative opponent.

William Ewart Gladstone, the fourth son of Sir John Gladstone, of Fasque, Kincardineshire, was born in Liverpool (Eng.), December 29th, 1809. From a very tender age young Gladstone exhibited a wonderful aptitude for learning, and an almost superhuman industry, which age, instead of abating, seemingly increases. His daily autograph correspondence with high and low, rich and poor, conducted chiefly by the much-derided post-card, would afford ample employment for about six Somerset House clerks working at their usual pace. He possesses, without exception, the most omniverous and untiring brain in England, possibly in the whole world. No wonder that his course at Eton and at Oxford was marked by the highest distinction. A student of Christ Church, he graduated "double first," in his twenty-second year, a superlative master of the language and literature of Greece and Rome. He availed himself of every advantage the university could bestow, and, unlike most other scholars who subsequently became politicians and men of the world, he has never ceased to add to the immense store of his academic acquirements. He has published Latin sacred verses not appreciably inferior in grace to those of Buchanan and Milton, and, as a Homeric student, his "Studies of Homer and the Homeric Age" entitle him to a place among scholarly critics. In 1832 he was returned for Newark in the Conservative interest, and in 1834 Sir Robert Peel made him a Junior Lord of the Treasury. In 1835 he found himself Under-Secretary for the Colonies. Shortly after Sir Robert's Administration fell, and Mr. Gladstone, in the cool shade of Opposition, found leisure to write his oft-quoted works, "The State in its Relations with the Church," and "Church Principles Considered in their Results." In 1841 Sir Robert Peel came back to office, and Mr. Gladstone was made Vice-President of the Board of Trade. In 1843 he became President of the Board, and for the first time his wonderful genius for finance had full scope. In 1845 he resigned office rather than be a party to adding to the endowments of Maynooth, which he had condemned in his work on "Church and State." In the Budget of 1845 he defended a proposal to put slave-grown sugar on a less favorable footing than free, and when the Corn Law question became a "burning" one he resigned his seat for Newark because of the anti-repeal views of the Duke of Newcastle. His powerful pen was, however, at the service of the repealers, and when the battle was fought and won he was returned in 1847 for the University of Oxford. About this time his strong Tory proclivities, which had hitherto led him to oppose all measures of reform, began to moderate.

Although he did not formally separate himself from the great body of Conservatives till 1852, yet during these five years his advocacy of university reform and of the removal of Jewish disabilities alienated from him many of his former supporters. A striking evidence of his growing liberalism was exhibited in 1850 on a visit which he made to Naples for the benefit of his children's health. While on this unofficial errand, he learned that Ferdinand II., better known as the infamous "Bomba," had immured in state dungeons more than thirty thousand of his subjects on charges of political disaffection. Among them were many members of the opposition in the Neapolitan Chamber of Deputies, of whom Baron Charles Poerio, the veteran patriot, was the most prominent. These outrages on humanity roused Gladstone's sympathy, and, burning with indignation against the tyranny that perpetrated them, he wrote an earnest appeal to Lord Aberdeen, urging his interposition in behalf of the victims. The expostulations of the earl being unheeded by the Neapolitan Government, Gladstone wrote a second letter to the noble lord, demanding that the Cabinet should exert its influence for the release of the prisoners. The publication of these letters created a deep impression throughout Europe. None of his elaborate works touched the world's heart so deeply as this vigorous plea for human rights. Copies of the pamphlet were sent by Lord Palmerston to all British Ministers on the Continent, with instructions to submit it to the attention of the Governments to which they were accredited. Translated into several European languages, and widely circulated by the press, this appeal undoubtedly set in motion the agencies which resulted in the overthrow of "Bomba" and his system. The pen of Gladstone prepared the way for the sword of Garibaldi.

Soon after his return to England, in 1851, Gladstone, who had voted for Disraeli's motion of inquiry into the agricultural distress, was solicited by Lord Derby to join the protectionist administration; but he not only refused to do so, but in the following year signalized his opposition to his old Conservative friends by making a scathing attack on Disraeli's maiden budget. The conflict between the two leaders was one of the most brilliant displays of parliamentary eloquence that this generation has witnessed; and the combination of argument and invective with which Gladstone replied to the vigorous but desperate assault of his opponent proved that he was more than a match for the dexterous Tory. In fact, the downfall of the Derby ministry was undoubtedly precipitated by the searching criticisms on its financial policy, made in this great speech.

The formation of the coalition ministry under Lord Aberdeen, in 1852, again brought Gladstone into office. He was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, a position for which he was peculiarly qualified by his intimate acquaintance with the theory and practice of finance. In introducing his celebrated Budget, in 1853, he delivered a series of addresses, which were highly praised by Cobden, and pronounced by Lord John Russell to "contain the ablest expositions of the true principles of finance ever delivered by any English statesman." When the Aberdeen ministry was broken up by the retirement of its chief, in 1855, Gladstone was retained as Chancellor of the Exchequer in the reconstructed Cabinet of Lord Palmerston. On learning, however, a few weeks afterwards, that the Premier had determined not to oppose Mr. Roebuck's motion of inquiry into the conduct of the Crimean War, which was construed as a censure on his colleagues, the Duke of Newcastle and Mr. Sidney Herbert, Gladstone sent in his resignation, but, though out of office, continued for some time from his seat among the back benches to give Lord Palmerston's ministry an independent support.

On Lord Derby's second accession to power, in 1859, though declining a seat in the Cabinet, Gladstone accepted a special diplomatic mission to the Ionian Islands, with the title of Lord High Commissioner, to arrange the difficulties between that dependency and the mother country.

On the return of Lord Palmerston to office, in 1859, Gladstone resumed the position of Chancellor of the Exchequer, and signalized his administration by the repeal of the paper duty, and the negotiation, through Mr. Cobden, of the commercial treaty with France. In 1861 the Liberal electors of his native county of South Lancashire solicited him to become their candidate; but this gratifying offer was declined, from unwillingness to sever his connection with his academic constituents. It was not, however, till 1856 that he was rejected by his beloved University, whose antiquated conservatism could not brook his liberal views. He was, however, again offered the nomination from South Lancashire, which he accepted, and continued to represent that county till the election of 1868, when he was again defeated. This was almost as great a blow to his sensitive temperament as his rejection by Oxford, and was the more unfortunate as it left the Gladstone party in the House of Commons without their leader. Luckily, however, the metropolitan constituency of Greenwich at once put him in nomination. This action, followed as it was by the triumph of his cause throughout the country, was particularly gratifying as coming after two almost simultaneous defeats, the second being his rejection as a candidate for the Lord Rectorship of the University of Edinburgh, which he had held for six preceding years.

On the resignation of Mr. Disraeli's Ministry in December, 1868, Mr. Gladstone succeeded that statesman as First Lord of the Treasury. The principal events of his administration were the passing of the Irish Disestablishment Act in 1869; of the Irish Land Act and the Elementary Education Act, 1870; the negotiations of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama claims, 1871; the passing of the Ballot Act, 1872; and the Judicature Act, 1873. On March 11th, 1873, the University Education Bill was rejected, and Mr. Gladstone immediately tendered his resignation. The Queen summoned Mr. Disraeli, but as he declined to take office, Mr. Gladstone was induced to undertake the reconstruction of the Cabinet, and in August the new Ministry was announced. On the 24th of January, 1874, Mr. Gladstone gave official notice of the immediate dissolution of Parliament. This surprise was followed by his issue of an address to his Greenwich constituents, in which he promised to abolish the Income Tax. The returns of the general election, completed on February 27th, showed a most disastrous defeat of the Liberal Party. Mr. Gladstone at once resigned and Mr Disraeli became Prime Minister. During the ensuing session, although he had been re-elected for Greenwich, Mr. Gladstone was seldom seen in the House. In January, 1875, he formally announced his determination to retire from the leadership of the Liberal Party, and soon after the Marquis of Hartington was chosen his successor.

In September, 1876, he published a pamphlet on "Bulgarian Horrors and the Question of the East," and in March following another, described in its title as an exposition of the conduct of the Porte in and about Bulgaria since May, 1876. Both in and out of Parliament he strenuously opposed the policy of the Conservative Government, which resulted in the Treaty of Berlin and the signing of the Anglo-Turkish Convention. He was presented with the freedom of the City of Dublin in the Fall of 1877, and on November 13th of that year he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow, succeeding Lord Beaconsfield. Just before the late general election he issued the following address to the electors of Midlothian, who have returned him:

"In an electioneering address issued by Lord Beaconsfield, the attempt is made to work upon your fears by dark allusions to the repeal of the union and abandonment of the colonies. Those who endangered the union with Ireland were the party that maintained there an alien church, an unjust land law, and franchises inferior to ours.

"As to the colonies, Liberal administrations gave them popular and responsible governments, undertook to defend Canada with the whole strength of the Empire, and organized the great scheme for uniting the several settlements of British North America into one dominion.

THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE, IN HIS ROBES, AS LORD RECTOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

Digitized by Google

"The present Ministry have neglected home legislation, aggravated public distress by continued shocks to confidence, and augmented public expenditure and taxation abroad. The Ministry have endangered the prerogative by gross misuse, weakened the Empire by needless wars, dishonored it in the eyes of Europe by filching Cyprus from the Porte under a clandestine treaty, aggrandized Russia, lured Turkey to dismemberment and ruin, and loaded India with the cost of an unjustifiable war.

"The Ministry have done nothing to improve our social condition. You are promised the advantages of ascendency in the councils of Europe. The word "ascendency" is best known to us by its baneful connection with the history of Ireland. I must assert the coequal rights of the independent allied powers, but in the mouth of the present Ministry the claim is ridiculous. You have great issues before you, and I do not doubt that Midlothian will nobly discharge its duty.

SAIDEE.

"SAIDEE."

"At your service, Sir Wilfred." From the gay worsteds she was sorting, she looked up with a mischievous expression befitting her words, yet underlying it a goodly measure of the rare tenderness that only a woman's face can wear.

Hers seemed a strange face for a lover to frown upon; but frown he did—uglily, emphatically.

"I am in no mood for jesting, Saidee," he continued, glumly, "nor probably will you be when I tell you that what we have so long debated must be decided between us now."

The sunny smile died from her countenance; the rare tenderness seemed but the rarer for its gravity.

"I am sorry, Wilfred," she answered softly; "I so hoped you would see its impossibility and agree with me."

He could but read how she loved him, but he read something else now in look and tone—something that momentarily banished the frown and paled his handsome face. With a passionate impulse he arose, and, crossing over to where she sat, took hers in his hands, and gazed down into her brown eyes long and steadily.

"Saidee, do you care at all for me?" he asked, finally.

"Do I care for you, Wilfred?" she murmured, reproachfully, yet with the rapture of his touch reflected in her face—"do I care for you? Oh, how can you ask me that, when you know that there is only you—only you in the whole wide world for me!"

His hands fell; he turned away from her impatiently, with a bitter smile.

"If I am all the world to you, Saidee, you certainly have a strange way of showing it. Your words are pretty, but they do not weigh at all with me. If you would have me believe you, come and promise to obey me as a woman should the man she loves."

He extended his arms towards her as he spoke; there was a look on his face she could not mistake. She knew it would be the last, last time, but still she took no step forward; she simply stood terrified, appealingly gazing up at him.

"Wilfred——"

He was frowning again, now deeper than before.

"I know what you would say, Saidee," he interrupted, "and it is only a waste of words. As I said before, your words have no weight with me; it is enough for me that you are ready to have me go away alone. And as, now, I shall go to-morrow, we may as well say good-by."

She had not taken her eyes from his face, and he still looked back at her steadily, relentlessly. At his last word she shivered, a death-like pallor spread over her countenance, and she answered, brokenly:

"Wilfred——"

He did not interrupt her now; he bent forward with conscious eagerness for her words. His own were honest, but he felt certain of their effect; he did not doubt that, in this decisive moment, he would gain her to his will. She would surely not let him go; she was about to yield to him, to say that there could be no good-by between them; that, sooner than this, she would abjure all and follow him. And so he bent forward for the answer, eagerly, with a certain hope.

"Wilfred, if you so will, you must go, but I can never say good-by to you."

That was what she said, brokenly, tenderly, yet with the gentle firmness that had so startled him just now.

"If you so will, you must go."

They were little words, but he did not mistake them; the fullest judicial sentence never weighed more heavily. A moment he stood regarding her, shaking with pain and disappointment; a moment passion swayed him, a fleeting, wavering impulse, but he quickly crushed them down.

"I do so will, Saidee," he replied, with scornful emphasis; "and since you object to good-by, let us make it good-afternoon."

This was their parting; so he left her, striding out and past the window by which she sat. She did not turn; she sat, fixed and rigid, listening to his retreating footsteps, each of which was a knife stabbing deep down in her heart. As they died away she started up as if to follow him, her lips parted with a passionate cry; but as suddenly his cutting words floated back to her it sank into a moan.

"And this is the end of it all," she murmured; "when he knows how I love him, when he knows I would die for him. Oh, Wilfred! my love, my dearest, how could you leave me so!"

It was not strange that that other time should rise vividly before her; that day, six months ago, when, in this very room, in the first blissful realization of their mutual passion, he had fallen on his knees before her, and solemnly affirmed that, come what would, no power on earth should ever separate him from her.

"If ever a woman was sure of a man, Saidee, you are sure of me!"

What music the words were, though neither of them could foresee the future and the sore test that awaited them. All seemed bright ahead; they were to be married in six months' time, and she was to go away with him to Brazil, where he had secured a Government appointment.

There seemed no need of the passionate protestations, the solemn oath of this fond lover; their truth was to be tried. In the fifth month of their engagement, Aunt Ruth—of whom Saidee was the especial pet and protégé—was thrown from her carriage and received injuries which, though it was not believed they would prove fatal, left her in a very critical and apprehensive state.

True, the wedding-day was named and Wilfred must go; true, there were loving hearts besides Saidee to care for poor Aunt Ruth, but it seemed to her tender nature most a crime to leave her, at least, until danger was positively past. And when, one morning, the old lady drew down the fair face to hers, and whispered, imploringly, "You will not leave me, pet, while there is a doubt of my getting well?" she promised unhesitatingly that she would not.

Perhaps if she had known Wilfred Hare better, she could not have promised so readily. But she knew him only as the tender lover, the man who had sworn that, come what would, no power on earth should ever separate him from her. It could be easily settled, she thought; he, as she, would feel very sad and disappointed, but he, as she, must see the impossibility of her going now. They could be married, and, as soon as Aunt Ruth was decided out of danger, she would go to him.

All this in full trust and faith she confided to Wilfred Hare. She was ill-prepared for the reception her words met, the imperious workings of this man's will. What right had she, without consulting him even, to make a promise to any one that conflicted with her own to him? His love gave him the right to command her; if she loved him she would obey. She must marry him and go away with him, else their present relations must cease.

In vain she pleaded her promise, her tender affection for Aunt Ruth; he would yield nothing to an old woman's whim. So he remained imperious, persistent; she troubled, yet hopeful, thinking that finally he must yield, neither believing that separation was possible when the testing time should come.

Saidee strove to smile; she took up her worsteds and continued sorting them, as if thus to begin disciplining herself for the burdens of her new life. It could not be otherwise, she thought—she could not break her promise to Aunt Ruth, she could not leave her now. And as Wilfred willed she must submit. Amid her pain arose a sudden, keen feeling of disappointment; it vanished almost immediately in a realization that was born from it.

"I am so glad," she said, softly, "that I am not one of those who think a perfect object is necessary for loving; I do not think a perfect object is a test of love. I am not blind; Wilfred is very tyrannical, selfish, very, very unkind, but, as never till to-day have I fully realized it, so never has he been so dear to me."

This realization awoke a tender resolve.

"I can never let him go away so; I must prove to him how dear he is and must ever be to me."

From this came the tender note that found its way next morning to Wilfred Hare.

"I cannot let you go away, dear, without one little word. I know you are angry with me, and I am very, very unhappy, for never, since our engagement, have I loved you as to-day. My little word is that I must always, always love you, and that I will never marry any man but Wilfred Hare. Perhaps some day you will understand and forgive me, and then you will be glad to think of this."

There was a great hope in Saidee that this last would be. But it would not be yet, she knew. He would go away, he would not write to her. Very sadly she dropped the tender little note in the mail-box, very drearily she went back the familiar road to her home.

It seemed but yesterday that she had walked here with Wilfred, so happy and confident. How sad and dark the road seemed now! So absorbed was Saidee, that she did not see the man walking ahead, who suddenly turned and paused, as if awaiting her. She started as she drew closer and perceived him, her first impulse was to flee; she shrank from the sad face that she felt now was so like hers.

But it was too late. He had retraced his steps to meet her, and was now walking at her side.

"Saidee," he said, softly, "there are not many days now. Do not send me away from you."

He made no effort to cloak his tenderness, either in word or look. He had loved her from the happy time when, as children, they had walked this road together; she knew it, and it had once been the great sorrow of her life that she could not return this love.

Despite the sting of his words, there awoke in her heart a pity for him, such as she had never known before; a wild, regretful longing that she could not have loved him; a sudden, strange realization that she had wasted her affection, that this man's staunch, loyal heart was worth an hundred such as Wilfred Hare's.

This last she battled quickly down, not so the pity or the longing. Strangely moved, scarcely knowing what she did, she placed her hand on his arm, and answered, gently:

"There will be many, many days for us to walk together, Mark!"

He could but have a presentiment of her meaning, so sadly earnest was her tone.

"What do you say, Saidee?" he asked, with pity for her, and a joy he could not repress mingling oddly in his look and tone.

"That I am not going to be married, Mark—that is, not yet a while. Wilfred is angry with me; but I must not tell you—I do not know why I so forget myself. It is only that I am to stay with Aunt Ruth for the present—that is all, Mark."

She truly said she did not know why; she felt a very traitress thus openly to blame Wilfred Hare. She did not realize, poor Saidee! how pleasant Mark Vale's devotion had suddenly become to her—how plain she was making this.

But he could not see. He walked on beside her silently, little dreaming he was aught to her to-day beyond what he had been before. Never had life seemed so dreary to Mark Vale—not even that black morning when he learned she was to marry Wilfred Hare. Then his unselfish soul found solace in the thought that she was happy; now he stood in presence of her misery—he, who, had he the power, would not have permitted the winds to blow roughly on her—and could not save her its least pang.

He understood he—knew Wilfred Hare better than she; it would have been easier, perhaps, to resign her to any other man. It was not strange that, in this hour, realizing his own loyalty and tenderness, he should rail at right and justice as the veriest of myths.

He could not see! He walked on beside her silently, little dreaming he was aught to her to-day beyond what he had been before. Whilst she, looking up timidly at him, was beginning to think if he would only take her hand and speak one little word of sympathy, life would not seem quite so bare.

The days passed slowly, drearily, to Saidee; with each, her love for Wilfred Hare growing deeper, her grief sharper—more unendurable.

"Come what will, no power on earth shall separate me from you!"

Morn, noon and night these words came back to her, and with them a hope to feed upon. Surely all would be right, she thought. He could not so give her up; he was only angry with her; he would come to understand and forgive her, and then all would be well again.

These were uneventful days, till, one morning, the news was brought to Saidee that Aunt Ruth could not live; that, contrary to expectation, the peculiar troubles that had resulted from her injuries were developing fatally. Her gentle heart smote her, for often, often, this later time, she had regretted her promise; in her anguish, wished she had broken it. A while remorse banished all else from her thoughts; but love is a mighty king, and poor Aunt Ruth had not been long under the sod ere it regained the mastery.

He would surely write, now that Aunt Ruth was dead; he would surely understand.

So she was musing one twilight, when there came a knock at the door, and a letter was handed in to her. At the sight of the familiar writing, she could not repress a rapturous cry, despite the presence of the new servant, who knew nothing of Wilfred Hare; her trembling fingers could scarcely break the seal. And when she did—

Only a wedding-card, the little note she had written him, and the line:

"It is but right I should restore to you your pledge."

Wilfred Hare had proven himself.

She read it, she broke into a fit of hysterical laughter, and then, not knowing what she did, she dropped it, and went down and out over the lawn, far into the maple-grove. Looking ahead dreamily, she saw Mark Vale coming towards her. He had heard of this; he was coming vaguely, with only the thought that he must comfort her.

She waited for him; she stretched out the hand which still held the card, with a dreary smile.

"Mark," she said, "did you know Wilfred was married? Did you know——"

She could say no more, the full reality had broke.

He had endured much, he could not endure the look now on her face. With a sudden, uncontrollable impulse, he threw his arms around her and drew her to his breast.

"Oh, Saidee! forgive me, forgive me, but I cannot see you so!"

So cried Mark Vale, quite terrified at his act, striving vainly to loose his arms. To his surprise she did not resist him. He even fancied she clung to him.

"Do not send me away!" a voice floated up to him. "I have only got you to love me, and I know you love me very much."

Was this a delusion, or was she mocking him in her despair?

"Saidee," he murmured, bewilderedly, "do you mean that—that you could marry me?"

He was all she had. Hers was a nature to crave a prop; it seemed to her that moment, that never a love was so sweet to woman as Mark Vale's was to her.

"I love Wilfred," she answered, brokenly, "I must love him till I die. But I have lost love, and I must have love or my heart will break. Dear Mark, if you can marry me so, I will be a good wife to you."

"Saidee!"

With the one word wherein lay his soul, he drew her gently, almost reverentially, closer to his madly-beating heart.

And so he married her, and he is content. For she never repulses him; his love seems always sweet to her, and, sometimes, of her own will, she comes and, twining her arms about his neck, kisses him almost tenderly.

Sometimes he fancies she is beginning to love him—just a little—and that little is heaven for Mark Vale.

She has lost love—she must have love. I think it will be well with him.

GRAND CHARITY BALL IN BALTIMORE.

ONE of the most notable social events which has occurred in Baltimore for some years took place on the evening of April 6th, being a grand charity ball in aid of the Nursery and Child's Hospital. The affair had from the first enlisted the sympathy and encouragement of the best circles of Baltimore society, and the result was wholly satisfactory to everybody concerned. The Academy of Music—the scene of the ball—was a blaze of beauty and splendor. The dancing-stage, 32 by 60 feet, was brilliantly lighted, and the interior decorations of both the main auditorium and concert-hall were elaborate and tasteful. Viewed from the proscenium boxes, stalls and loges, the stage resembled a beautiful garden in the tropics. The scenery at the sides of the stage was a rich setting of foliage, plants and shrubbery. These, extending to the rear, connected with a beautiful drop scene of a palace surrounded by terraces of flowers, walks and statuary. In front of this picture was a balcony occupied by the orchestra, partly concealed by the magnificent collection of growing plants and flowers arranged in the most artistic style at the base of the balustrade. On either side of the stairway leading to the music balcony were profusions of rare tropical plants. There were lovely drooping calla lilies, roses and azaleas, which were interspersed among fan palms, date palms, sago palms and other species of unique shape and foliage. The snow-pine, the stellizia nicolaii, the pandanus utilis and pandanus veitchii, strange-looking plants, reared their heads far above the balcony and appeared to blend with the stately trees portrayed upon the painted scene.

When the orchestra struck up a brilliant lancers, shortly after 10 P. M., there was a general move towards the main auditorium, which appeared to be the favorite resort of the dancers, who, by common consent, relegated the concert-hall to the use of those desiring tête-à-tête and promenades. In the hall the decorations were also uniquely picturesque. The floor was covered with rich carpets and mats, and scattered with ottomans and divans, while from the galleries were hung the flags and colors of all nations. The stage was also set with a garden scene and embellished with natural plants and flowers.

"When the long-anticipated ball was fairly under way," we quote the Baltimore Gazette, "the scene was one that has never been equaled on any similar occasion in this city. From box, loge, stall and gallery, hundreds of richly-attired ladies, who fairly represented that feminine beauty for which this city is justly noted, looked down upon their many fair prototypes who thronged the ballroom floor below. On all sides brilliantly-attired ladies were filing about with their escorts, or, seated in the quiet retirement of the ante-rooms, viewed the scene with interest and admiration."

The ball was pecuniarily, as in all other respects, a great success, having realized between $5,000 and $6,000 for the institution in whose behalf it was given. Some 2,000 persons in all participated in the festivities.

FOSSIBLE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

HON. DAVID DAVIS, OF ILLINOIS.

HON. DAVID DAVIS, United States Senator from Illinois, was born in Cecil County, Md., March 9th, 1815. He was graduated at Kenyon College, Ohio, in 1832, and afterwards studied law in Massachusetts and at the Yale Law School, from which he took his degree. He began the practice of law in Bloomington, Ill., in 1835. He had early political aspirations, and in 1844 was sent to the Legislature of Illinois, and three years later was a member of the State Constitutional Convention. In the following year, 1848, he was chosen to one of the district courts, to which judicial position he was twice re-elected—once in 1853 and again in 1861. Judge Davis was a personal and intimate friend of President Lincoln, was a member of the Convention in Chicago which named Mr. Lincoln for President, and afterwards (in 1862) received the appointment to the United States Supreme Court. In 1865 he became the administrator of Mr. Lincoln's estate. As a jurist, Judge Davis was somewhat careless of subtle distinctions or legal precedents, and looked to broad, general principles and the equities involved in a case. When the legal-tender cases first were decided (February 7th, 1870), Judge Davis held with the minority that the Acts of Congress making paper money a legal tender were constitutional, and must be applied to debts existing before greenbacks were given a forced currency by Congress. Before the meeting of the next term two new Associate Justices (Strong and Bradley) were appointed. The opinion of the court was then reversed, and the minority opinion was announced as the decision of the Court.

In February, 1872, the National Convention of the Labor Reform Party nominated Judge Davis for President of the United States on the second ballot. The platform of the party declared, among other things, in favor of a national currency "based on the faith and resources of the nation, and made a legal tender for all debts," and interchangeable for 3.65 bonds of the Government. The platform also demanded the establishment of an eight-hour law throughout the country, and the payment of the national debt "without mortgaging the property of the people to enrich capitalists." In answer to the letter informing him of the nomination, Judge Davis replied: "Be pleased to thank the Convention for the unexpected honor which they have conferred upon me. The chief magistracy of the Republic should neither be sought nor declined by any American citizen." Judge Davis was prominent also before the Liberal Republican Convention at Cincinnati, his friends being chiefly from Illinois. He received his highest vote (92½) on the first ballot. The following month (June, 1872) he sent a final answer to the Labor Reformers, declaring that he deemed it proper to retire absolutely from the Presidential contest and allow the party to choose between the Liberal and Administration nominees.

In January, 1877, Judge Davis was elected United States Senator from Illinois by the votes of Independents and Democrats, and two months later resigned his seat as Judge. As a member of the Supreme Court, he pronounced some important decisions, one of which affirmed the constitutionality of the Enrollment Act of 1863. Another was in the trial of Mulligan by a Military Commission in Indiana, which he held to be illegal. He also affirmed the judgment of the Court of Claims in the case of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Upon his entrance into the Senate he was promptly placed on the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on the Revision of Laws. He is also a member of the Committee on Private Lands and of the Special Committee on the Census.

Senator Davis is a punctual attendant of the sessions of the Senate, though he rarely participates in general debate. He is more of a worker than a talker. He zealously watches all legislation affecting the interests of the country, and does much work in committee. He took an active part with Judges Thurman and Christiancy in committee on what is known as the Thurman Funding Bill, which forced the Pacific railroads to provide a sinking fund for the payment, at maturity, of their obligations to the Government. He made an argument on the power of Congress to enact the required legislation, and the Supreme Court has since sustained the constitutionality of the Bill. His speeches, like his opinions, are remarkable for their clearness, brevity and vigor. The learned and unlearned can readily comprehend their meaning.

Senator Davis is a man of active habit and most cordial manners; he has a Roman cast of features, with blue eyes, which are shaded by bushy iron-gray eyebrows. His cheeks are fringed with gray whiskers, and his lip is clean shaven. His head is thatched with straight gray hair. He is always plainly dressed, and has the appearance of a well-to-do farmer, rather than that of a Judge or Senator.

Although holding moderate Republican views when chosen to the Senate, Mr. Davis gradually drifted into sympathy with Democratic principles and policy, and into association with Democrats. With old-fashioned Republicans in Illinois, he is still a great favorite on account of his close association with Lincoln, and among the farmers and the laboring classes he is popular, although a man of wealth, for his well-known bias in favor of the ma-chanic as against the capitalist, and the individual as against the corporation.

Digitized by Google

During the last few months, Senator Davis has been frequently named in connection with the Democratic nomination for President, and the indications are that he will have a warm support in the Cincinnati Convention. His nomination would be popular at the West, and would command a large conservative vote in all parts of the country. It would, moreover, tend to allay growing dissensions in the Democratic ranks, since no member of that party could object to a candidate who is entirely independent of all rings and factions, and whose election would result to the advantage of the party as a whole rather than to that of any one set of individuals in it.

POLITICAL NOTES.

THE Connecticut Republican State Convention has elected an uninstructed delegation to Cincinnati.

EX-GOVERNOR SEYMOUR again announces that he cannot and will not allow his name to be used as a Presidential candidate.

THE Iowa State Democratic Convention held last week was anti-Tilden in sentiment, as resolutions were adopted in favor of the two-thirds rule in selecting a Presidential candidate.

IN the State election in Rhode Island, April 7th, there was no choice for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. The Republicans succeeded in electing a Secretary of State, Attorney-General and Treasurer.

THE anti-third-term Republicans of New York are organizing in all parts of the State. It is expected that a strong delegation of influential Republicans who are in sympathy with the movement will attend the Chicago Convention.

MR. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR and other prominent Massachusetts Republicans have issued a circular calling for the election of anti-third-term delegates to the State Convention. Many of the delegates so far elected favor Senator Edmunds.

THE Republicans carried Cincinnati by a large majority at the municipal election, April 5th. They elected the entire School Board of 12 members, 16 out of 25 Councilmen, and 12 out of 14 Aldermen. The township elections in Michigan, April 5th, showed Republican gains.

A Great Transaction.

THE syndicate which in November last bought 250,000 shares of New York Central stock from William H. Vanderbilt has completed successfully the marketing not only of its own stock, but also of 100,000 shares sold for the personal account of Mr. Vanderbilt. The transaction was concluded by the sale of a little more than 100,000 shares, the remainder in the possession of the syndicate, to prominent bankers and capitalists in this country and England. The stock was sold at 131, and the purchase money, amounting to about $14,000,000, has been paid. This sale completes within five months the largest sale of stock ever made by a private person. Mr. Vanderbilt has received from it over $42,000,000. The syndicate has gained a profit on the transaction of nearly $1,000,000, subject only to the cost of marketing the stock. The terms of the agreement between the members of the syndicate gave it until the close of the present year in which to dispose of the stock. The operation is noteworthy, both on account of its magnitude and of its speedy conclusion.

The Process of Electing a New Parliament.

WHEN a new Parliament is to be summoned, the Lord Chancellor receives a written command from the Sovereign in Council to that effect, and directs the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue writs to the returning officer of each electoral district. Elections are now regulated by the Ballot Act, 1872, and the Act is to continue in force until the 31st of December, 1880. The returning officer of each county must, within two days of the receipt of the writ, give public notice of the time and place of the said election, which must not be later than the ninth nor sooner than the fourth day after such notice. In boroughs the officer must proceed with the election within four days after the receipt of the writ, having first given two clear days' notice. The show of hands is abolished; and election is now by nomination in writing. If at the expiration of one hour after the time appointed for the election no more candidates are nominated than there are vacancies to be filled up, the officer declares those candidates elected, and returns their names to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But if the candidates nominated exceed the vacancies the officer adjourns the election, and takes the poll, by ballot papers, according to a prescribed form. The officer at the close of the poll opens the ballot boxes and counts the papers, and returns the names of those who have the majority to the Clerk of the Crown as elected candidates. In a contested election polling stations are provided, with compartments to enable voters to mark their votes, screened from observation. Each of these is presided over by officers appointed by the returning officer. The polling is commenced and carried on simultaneously at all the stations. It commences at eight A. M. and closes at four P. M. in boroughs, and five P. M. in counties. In boroughs the polling must take place within three clear days, and in counties within the third and the sixth day, after the day fixed for the election. The returning officer is to give public notice "as soon as possible" of the names of the elected candidates, and of the total number of votes given for each candidate. The officer then returns the writ, with the name or names of the person or persons elected indorsed thereon, "To the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery," to whom also all the documents relating to the election are delivered. Immediately after a public notice of election an elected candidate is considered to be a member of Parliament, but cannot act as a legislator until he has taken the oaths. If any military be stationed in a place where an election is taking place, they are obliged to be withdrawn until the proceedings have closed.

Diving for Amber.

THE costume of the diver for amber is as follows: A woolen garment covers the entire body. This is again encompassed in an india-rubber dress, made in one piece, but differing in shape from the old-fashioned diving dress and allowing the diver to lie at full length. The helmet is also of a novel construction. Firmly fastened to it and resting on the shoulders is a small air chest made of sheet iron. This chest is connected with the air pump in the boat above by an india-rubber tubing forty feet long, and with the diver's lungs by another india-rubber tube, the mouthpiece of which is held by the diver between his teeth; the whole apparatus being scientifically arranged so as to admit a sufficient supply of pure air from above and means of exit for the expired breath. This helmet is provided with three openings, covered with glass and protected by wire, for the use of the eyes and mouth. When this contrivance has been secured on to the person of the diver, a rope tied round his waist and half a hundred pounds of lead attached to his feet, shoulders and helmet, he is ready for the plunge. Down fathoms deep, he descends into the amber world—he says there, maybe, for five hours at a time, hooking, dragging, tearing the amber from its bed with his heavy two-pronged fork. Often it resists his utmost efforts. However cold the weather may be, these men of iron strength will come up from their submarine labors steaming with perspiration. The overseer stands in the boat to receive the amber from their pockets. In case he should wish to ascend before the usual time, the diver has to close his mouth and breathe five or six times through his nostrils, by this means filling the apparatus with air, which will bring him to the surface without other assistance. The diving boats are manned by eight men each—two divers, two pairs of men who work the air pumps alternately, with their eyes fixed on a dial plate, by which the supply of air is nicely regulated, one man to hold the safety rope attached round the diver's body and haul him up at the slightest sign from below, and the overseer.

Capital Punishment in Central Africa.

DR. SCHWEINFURTH, in a lecture which he recently delivered at the Berlin Geographical Society on the subject of his latest explorations in Central Africa, gave his hearers a thrilling account of the mode in which capital punishment is inflicted upon criminals by the Al-Quadjis, a small tributary offshoot of the great and powerful Djour people. The malefactor condemned to die is bound to a post firmly driven into the ground in some open place where no trees afford a shade, and is there slowly roasted to death—not by any artificial means involving a waste of fuel, but the natural heat of the sun's rays as they reach our earth in its equatorial regions. To protract his sufferings and to avert his too speedy end by sunstroke, the ingenious Al-Quadjis cover their erring compatriot's head with fresh green leaves, which effectually shield his brain from Phœbus's darts. No such protection is, however, accorded to his body, which gradually dries up, shrinks together, and ultimately becomes carbonized. One chance of salvation is open to the roasting man, while as yet he is not completely "done to death." If a cloud pass between the sun and his place of torment he is at once cast loose from his post and becomes the object of popular reverence, as a mighty magician in whose behalf the supernatural powers have deigned directly to intervene. But clouds seldom interfere with the administration of justice on the days chosen for public executions by the Al-Quadji authorities; at least, that appears to be Dr. Schweinfurth's experience of African weather as far as it bears upon the judicial roasting of malefactors.

PICTORIAL SPIRIT OF THE FOREIGN ILLUSTRATED PRESS.

An Incident of Emperor William's Birthday.

On the 22d of March last—the Emperor's birthday—the space in front of the royal residence at Berlin was crowded with people anxious to see the princes, generals and high functionaries drive up to the imperial palace to congratulate the sovereign. This year, among the incidents of the day was that of a poor old miner from Silesia, who had journeyed to Berlin on purpose to offer a petition to the Emperor. He stood nearly all day in front of the palace holding in his extended hand the letter for the Emperor. Late in the afternoon, as the Emperor went to a window to look down upon the crowd, he happened to see the poor miner, his hand still outstretched and clutching the paper, and he immediately sent one of his servants to inquire after his wishes. The petition was taken by the servant to the Emperor, who, when he learned how long the miner had been waiting to present it, read its contents and forthwith granted the request.

A Riding Fete for the Poor in Hanover.

The officers of the cavalry regiments garrisoned in Hanover, Germany, recently determined to raise a fund to relieve the misery of the poor inhabitants of that city, and to make a very unique display they arranged a riding fête, in which were shown, by uniforms and horse-trappings, the different phases of cavalry life from the day of Augustus, the first Roman Emperor, up to the present time. The largest hall in the city was selected and properly arranged for the occasion, and admission tickets were sold at a high premium. A number of the royal princes, with a splendid suite, arrived by express train from Berlin in time to witness the manœuvres of this extraordinary cavalcade.

The Festivities in St. Petersburg.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Czar's accession was celebrated on March 26, at St. Petersburg, with great rejoicings, and on that day at least there was little appearance of the asserted disloyalty and revolutionary spirit which threatens to overthrow the Czar and his dynasty. The streets were gayly decorated with innumerable flags and busts of the "Little Father," while crowds of people were early seen thronging to the space before the Winter Palace, in order to show their congratulations to their sovereign. Numerous regiments of soldiers had been drawn up in the courtyard, and the combined bands of the forces in St. Petersburg were playing a serenade in the centre, a throne having been erected in their midst for the conductor. Shortly after ten the Czar appeared on the balcony, and was welcomed with great enthusiasm by both soldiers and people, the cheering lasting for some twenty minutes, the military bands playing the national hymn, "God Preserve the Czar," the batteries on the Neva firing a royal salute of 101 guns, and the bells of the various churches ringing forth loud peals of congratulation. Of the other festivities of the day we have already spoken in a previous number, so that we need only say that our second illustration represents the arrival of the Czarowitz and his wife, the Princess Dagmar, and other members of the imperial family, at the Winter Palace, on the eventful day. The road is lined with troops, who salute as the carriages roll past.

The Duchess of Marlborough's Committee.

In this engraving we have a portrait group of the charitable ladies and gentlemen who are actively working with Her Grace the Duchess of Marlborough for the relief of the distressed poor of Ireland. Twice a week the Committee hold sittings at Dublin Castle to vote grants of relief among the fifty-nine local committees, whose administration is supervised through the agency of inspectors, besides being furnished regularly with reports and returns from the local bodies themselves; and the honorary secretaries and other members are also engaged daily, sometimes from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M., in correspondence with the relief centres, or looking after the dispatch of clothing. In the illustration the Duchess is seen at the right hand of the table with pen in hand, with Lady Michel on her right, and Drs. Grimshaw and Meredith facing her. On Friday, April 9th, the Duchess of Marlborough's Irish Relief Fund amounted to $539,455; of which, $433,119 have been expended.

General Skobeleff's Assailant.

While in this country attempts are being made to have the extreme penalty of the law carried out in a private, quiet manner, in Russia great publicity is given to the execution of a condemned criminal, more especially if that person is thought to be a Nihilist. The prisoner is enveloped with a black shroud, only the face being exposed, and, seated upon a peculiar kind of a chair placed on a box wagon with the back towards the horses, he is driven slowly through the streets, preceded and followed by mounted guards. The engraving, besides giving a portrait of General Skobeleff's assailant, shows the method by which prisoners condemned to death are conducted to the place of execution.

NOTES OF INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

EAST TENNESSEE will produce 36,000 tons more of coke iron this year than last.

SWAN skins are a new commodity that is being sent into the larger towns from the western part of Texas. The long feathers are picked off from the skins, leaving only the soft white down.

THE Richmond and Southern Railroad, traversing the best portions of Kentucky and Virginia, will be 500 miles in length, and cost $30,000,000. The company expect to build the road without local aid.

THE activity in railroad building is shown by the statement that the demand for rails so far this season has been far in advance of the corresponding months for the past sixteen years. The prospect is that more miles of railroad will be built in this country this year than in any year since the building of railroads commenced.

THE farmers of Gadsden County, Fla., will plant crops of rice and tobacco this year.

IT has been proposed to form an association at Philadelphia for the raising of silkworms and the reeling of cocoons, by the establishment of a central school of instruction at Philadelphia, with branches throughout the State and the neighboring States. A school to teach boys and girls the art of silk-culture will make a market for cocoons, which it will purchase, selling the reeled silk to the silk mills.

THE orange crop of Sumter County, Fla., will be two-thirds larger this year than last.

NORTHERN capitalists are soon to erect a saw-mill and a large flour-mill at some point on the North-western railroad, near Nashville.

SPECIAL reports from Texas in reference to the coming drive of cattle from that State to Kansas and other States and Territories north, place it at 224,300 head. Of this number about 100,000 have been already disposed of, leaving 200,000 for the open market. The drive will be principally of young cattle, and not more than 20 per cent. will be beeves. There have been good rains in southwestern Texas recently. The grass is growing very fast, and the prospect for an early drive is excellent.

THE carpet manufacturers of Kensington, Philadelphia, are unearthing all the old looms thrown aside three years ago, and even purchasing them in other cities, so great is the revival of the carpet trade in that city.

THE principal portion of the tobacco crop in Crittenden County, Ky., is now stemmed in that county and shipped direct to Liverpool and Bremen.

DURING the last thirty days over 1,000 cars of Wisconsin ice have been shipped South over the Louisville and Nashville and Alabama and Great Southern railroads.

ALTHOUGH the Californians are willing enough to say the Chinese must go, they are more willing to say: "The French Canadians must come," and coming they are, at the rate of from sixty to seventy a day. It is from the districts around Montreal and Quebec that most of the emigrants are arriving, and their exodus is supposed to be caused by discontent with the laws, the cold Canadian Winters and the excellent offers of land made by Western land agents, for they are going to Colorado and Michigan as well as to California.

THE Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association has petitioned the City Council of New Orleans to enlarge the present landing and sugar sheds, and to absolutely prohibit the sale on the landing of all sugars received.

DURING the recent rise in the Greenbrier River, West Virginia, 200,000 feet of walnut lumber were rafted down stream to find a market.

IT is rumored that a scheme is on foot to establish a line of six first-class British steamships between Philadelphia and Liverpool, the vessels to be furnished by English merchants and run chiefly in connection with the Western trade of the Reading Railroad Company.

IT is estimated that the cotton crop of Texas for 1879 will bring into that State $44,000,000.

THROUGH the enterprise of the management of the Louisville and Nashville Railway, a number of new iron-furnaces, rolling-mills, etc., are to be erected in the iron regions of Alabama. Along the line of South and North Alabama road-iron is found in unlimited quantities and of a very superior quality.

ORDERS have been received at the railroad machine shops at Altoona, Pa., for the building of eighty-nine locomotives.

INCREASED enterprise and activity are being manifested in the business of cotton manufacturing in North Carolina. The High Point Company have been forced to run their factory day and night and to increase their capital from $30,000 to $50,000. At Charlotte buildings are being erected for spinning warp and yarns; six thousand spindles will be employed, and a capital of $75,000 invested. In Randolph County two new factories are being built and two others in contemplation. In Alamance a new mill will begin operations during the present month with 5,000 spindles, and arrangements are being made to erect another mill in the same county on Haw River; 120 additional looms have been placed in Swepson's factory, and the Concord factory have discarded their old machinery, substituting the latest and best, at the same time increasing its capacity. In Bertie and several other counties the establishment of cotton mills is looked for at an early day.

NINE new tobacco factories have been contracted for and will be built this year in Danville, Va.

THURSDAY, April 1st, was an eventful day for Chattanooga. It witnessed the commencement of a $1,000,000 railroad from that city to Rome, Ga.

THE Legislature of Virginia recently granted a charter for the incorporation of a company to be known as the "Virginia Angora Company." The capital of the association is placed at $2,000,000, of which amount $1,500,000 is said to have already been subscribed. According to its charter, the company is permitted to hold in fee 200,000 acres of land, and to issue bonds, but not without the consent of nine-tenths of all the stockholders. A contract has been made with California parties to transfer their stock of thoroughbred Angoras to Virginia, and to furnish also 20,000 cwe goats of original Maltese stock, to be purchased in and brought from Mexico. Although the industry has been successful in California, yet the conditions for success are so far superior in the mountains of Virginia as to warrant the transfer of the herds and an expenditure of about $200,000 in making the transfer and in improvements.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

—OVER 4,000 immigrants arrived at this port in one day last week.

—THERE are six ex-Governors of Georgia now living, and all reside within the State.

—THE wages of the employés of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad have been advanced 10 per cent.

—THE contract has been let for the erection of a public library building in Atlanta, to cost $20,000.

—THE Naval Appropriation Bill now before the House of Representatives provides for $14,100,000 of disbursements.

—OFFICIAL statistics show that our total exports of wheat and flour from July 1st, 1879, to April 1st, 1880, amounted to 140,000,000 bushels.

—AIKEN, S. C., is a popular Winter resort. At this time 250 visitors from abroad are lingering there. Another large hotel will probably be erected before next Winter.

—IN round numbers 12,000,000, or one-third, of the French people, live in cities and towns. In the United States the proportion is one-fifth, and is rapidly increasing.

—ATLANTA proposes to donate $18,000 for the erection of a building for the Normal School founded by the Trustees of the Peabody Fund. Dr. Sears says that at least $25,000 must be furnished.

—IN consequence of the famine, 4,000 koords are reported to have descended upon the town of Mardeen, in Asiatic Turkey, where they murdered natives and Europeans and plundered the place.

—THE German Government, by surreptitious methods, is obstructing emigration to America, but the last vessel for Baltimore took out 1,600 steerage passengers, and 8,000 are booked for the month of April.

—A DISPATCH from Mandalay, Burmah, says that the British authorities have suggested to the Burmese embassy an early departure from Thayetmyo, as they have been there many months without offering satisfactory proposals for a new treaty.

—THE United States Government has decided to locate a marine hospital at Blackbeard Island, near Brunswick, Ga. All vessels coming from infected ports will have to touch there, be inspected, fumigated, etc., before being permitted to come up to that town.

—ACCORDING to reports from a large number of points in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, the prospects for large yields of wheat and fruit are unusually good. Unless frost should set in, the abundance of all kinds of fruit will be equal, if not superior, to that of the best previous years.

—DURING the three months ending March 31st 375 new buildings were commenced in this city, 402 were completed, and 1,209 are now in course of construction. As compared with the same quarter last year, there is an increase of 39 new buildings, and an increase of cost of construction of $2,123,689.

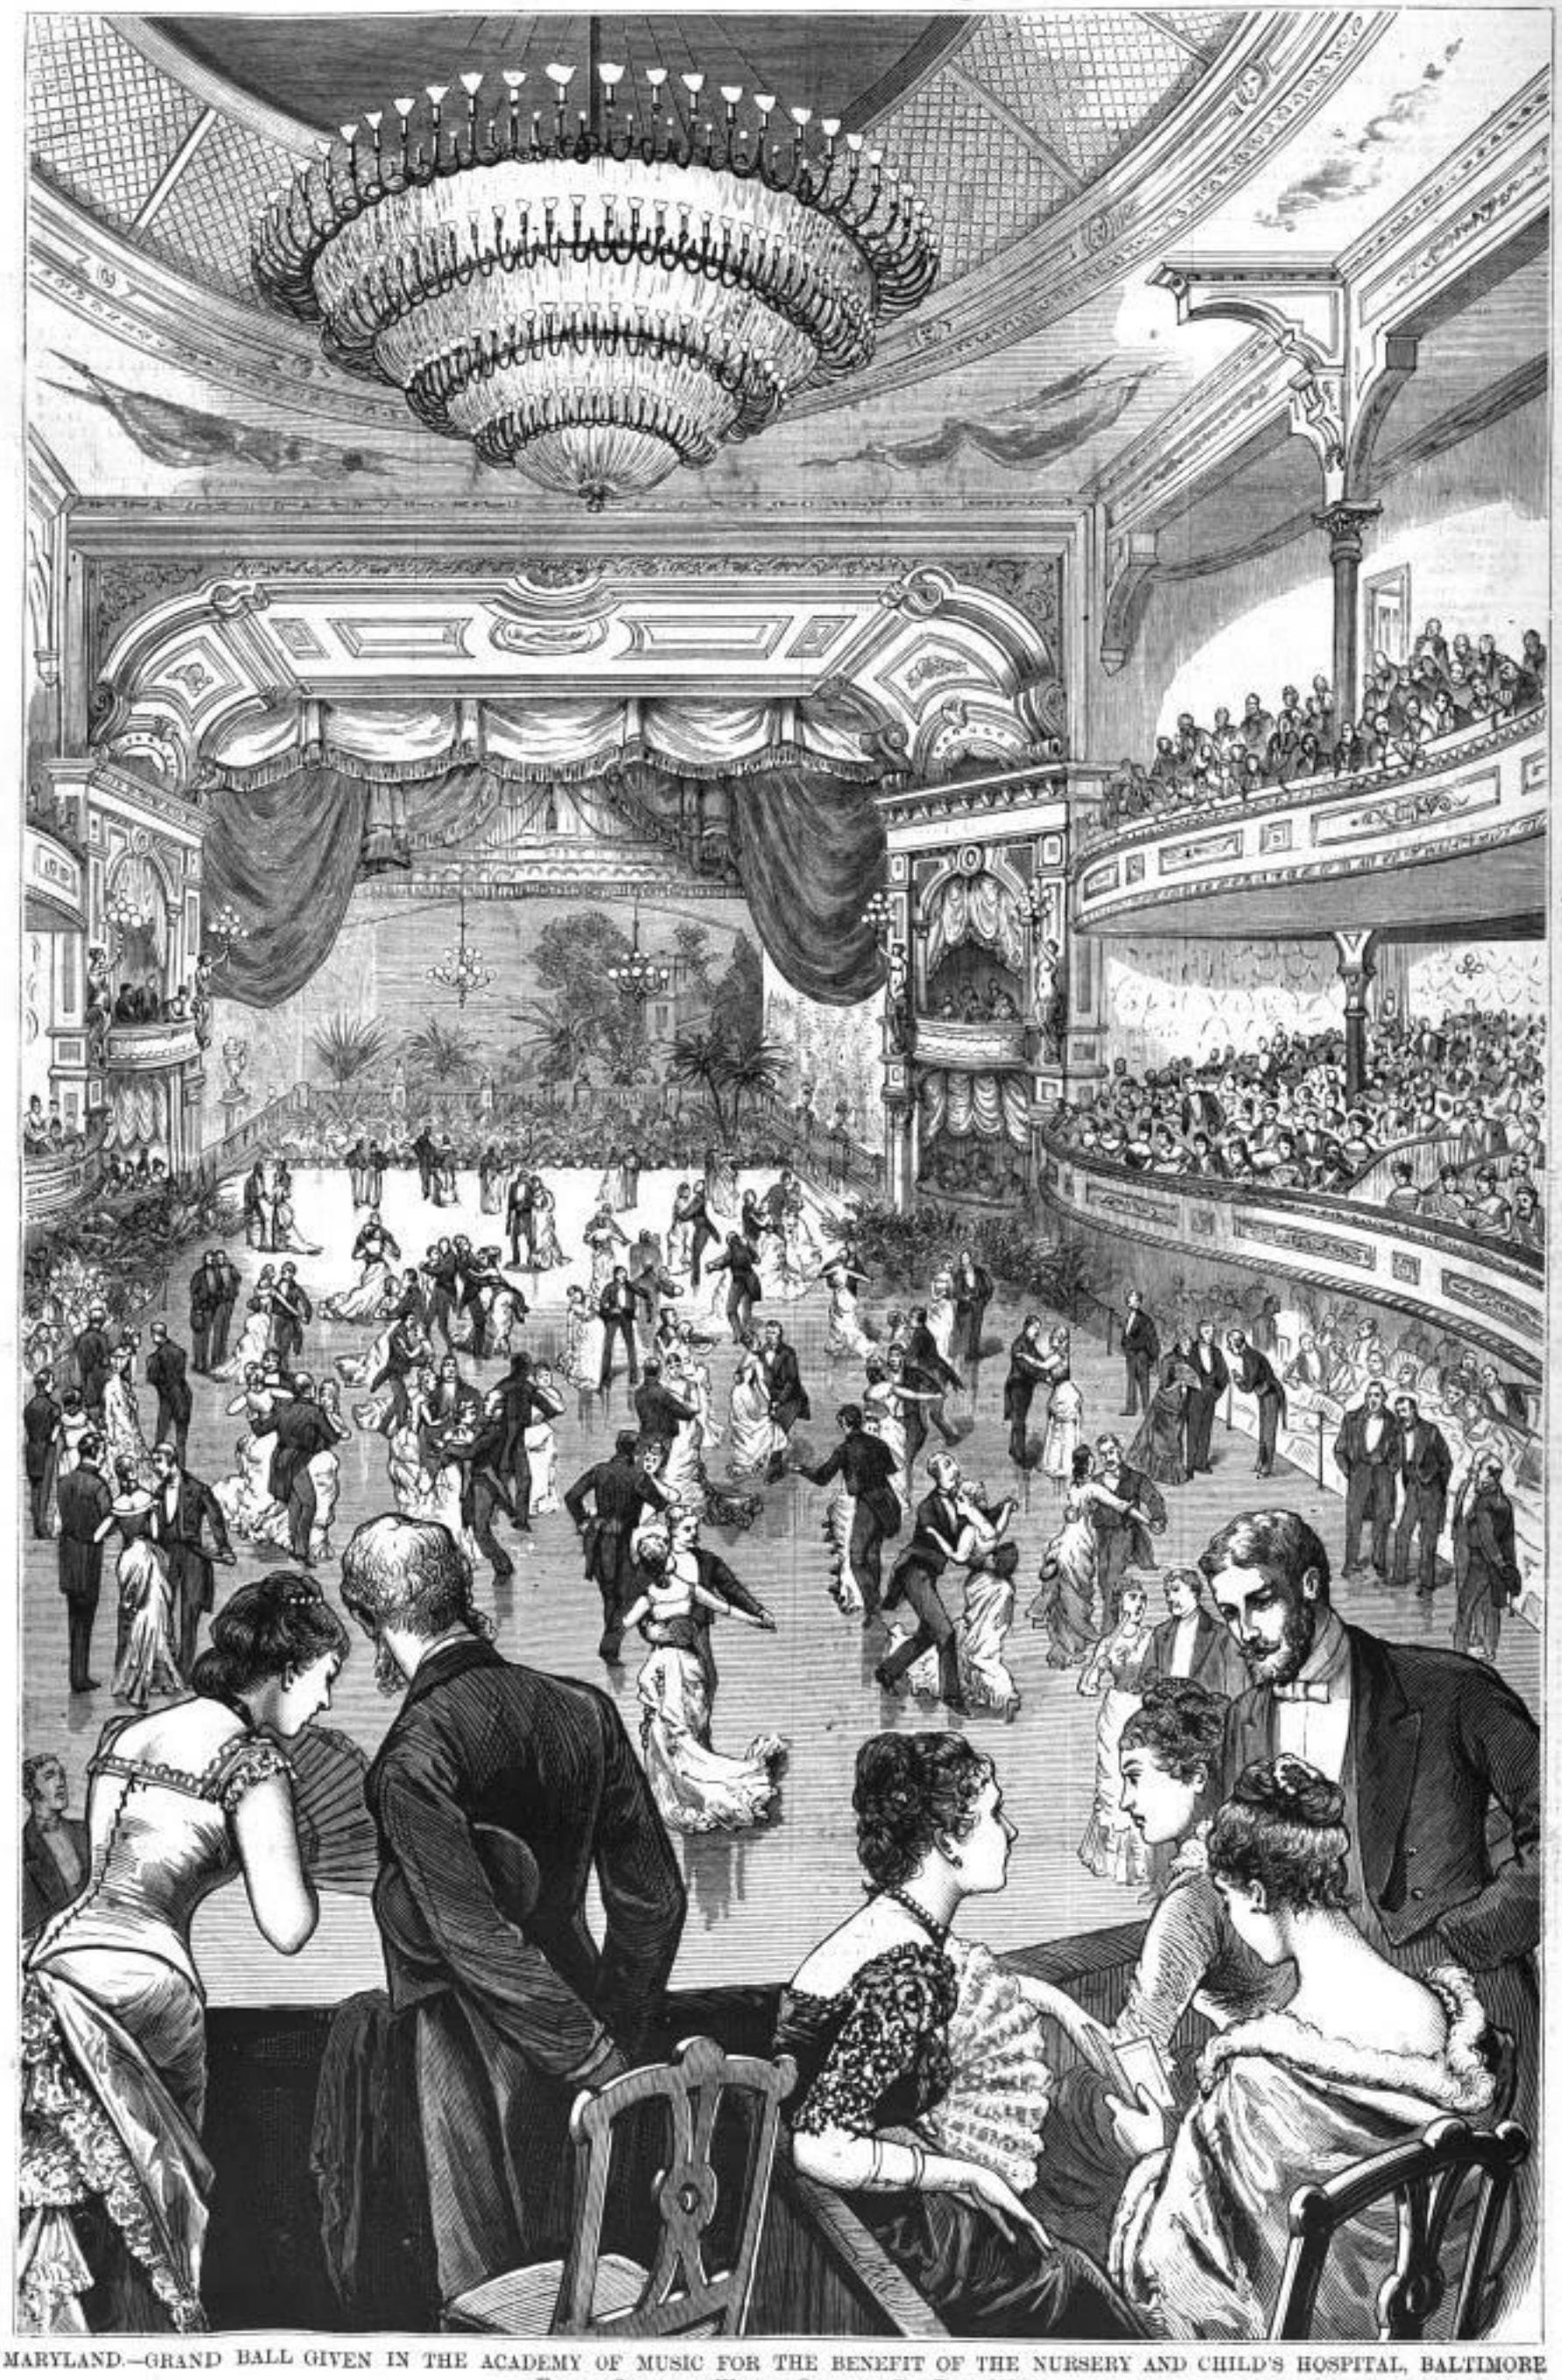
—THE French Government has received a communication from the Vatican expressing regret at the measures taken against the Jesuits, but entering no formal protest. The unauthorized societies of France have decided neither to communicate their statutes to the Government nor to demand authorization.

—THE receipts of the American Bible Society for March were $72,389.94, and the payments $53,242.11. The receipts for the year ending March 31st were $636,342.23. The number of volumes issued in March was 95,036. The whole number of copies issued from the Bible House, during the year, not including those issued in foreign lands, was 1,130,345.

—THE Governor-General of East Siberia has telegraphed to St. Petersburg that they were not Chinese troops, but irregular Tartar hordes, who invaded Russian territory. They attempted to cross the Amoor River, but were unsuccessful. He says the Chinese Government is quite innocent of the invasion, and it is expected it will punish the Tartars sharply.

—ONE of the English election phrases for which there is no equivalent in the United States is "plumping." Wherever a constituency returns two members, each voter can give one vote each to any two candidates, but he cannot give his two votes to any one candidate. If he chooses he can give one vote to only one candidate, and this is termed "plumping."

—THE production of oil in the Pennsylvania region still increases. During the month of March there were 368 wells completed in the old country, with an average of 19 barrels per well, while in February there were 278 wells completed, with a production of 4,853 barrels, and an average of 17 barrels. The wells drilling in March were 572, against 574 in February. The rigs up and building at the close of March were 692, against 648 in February.

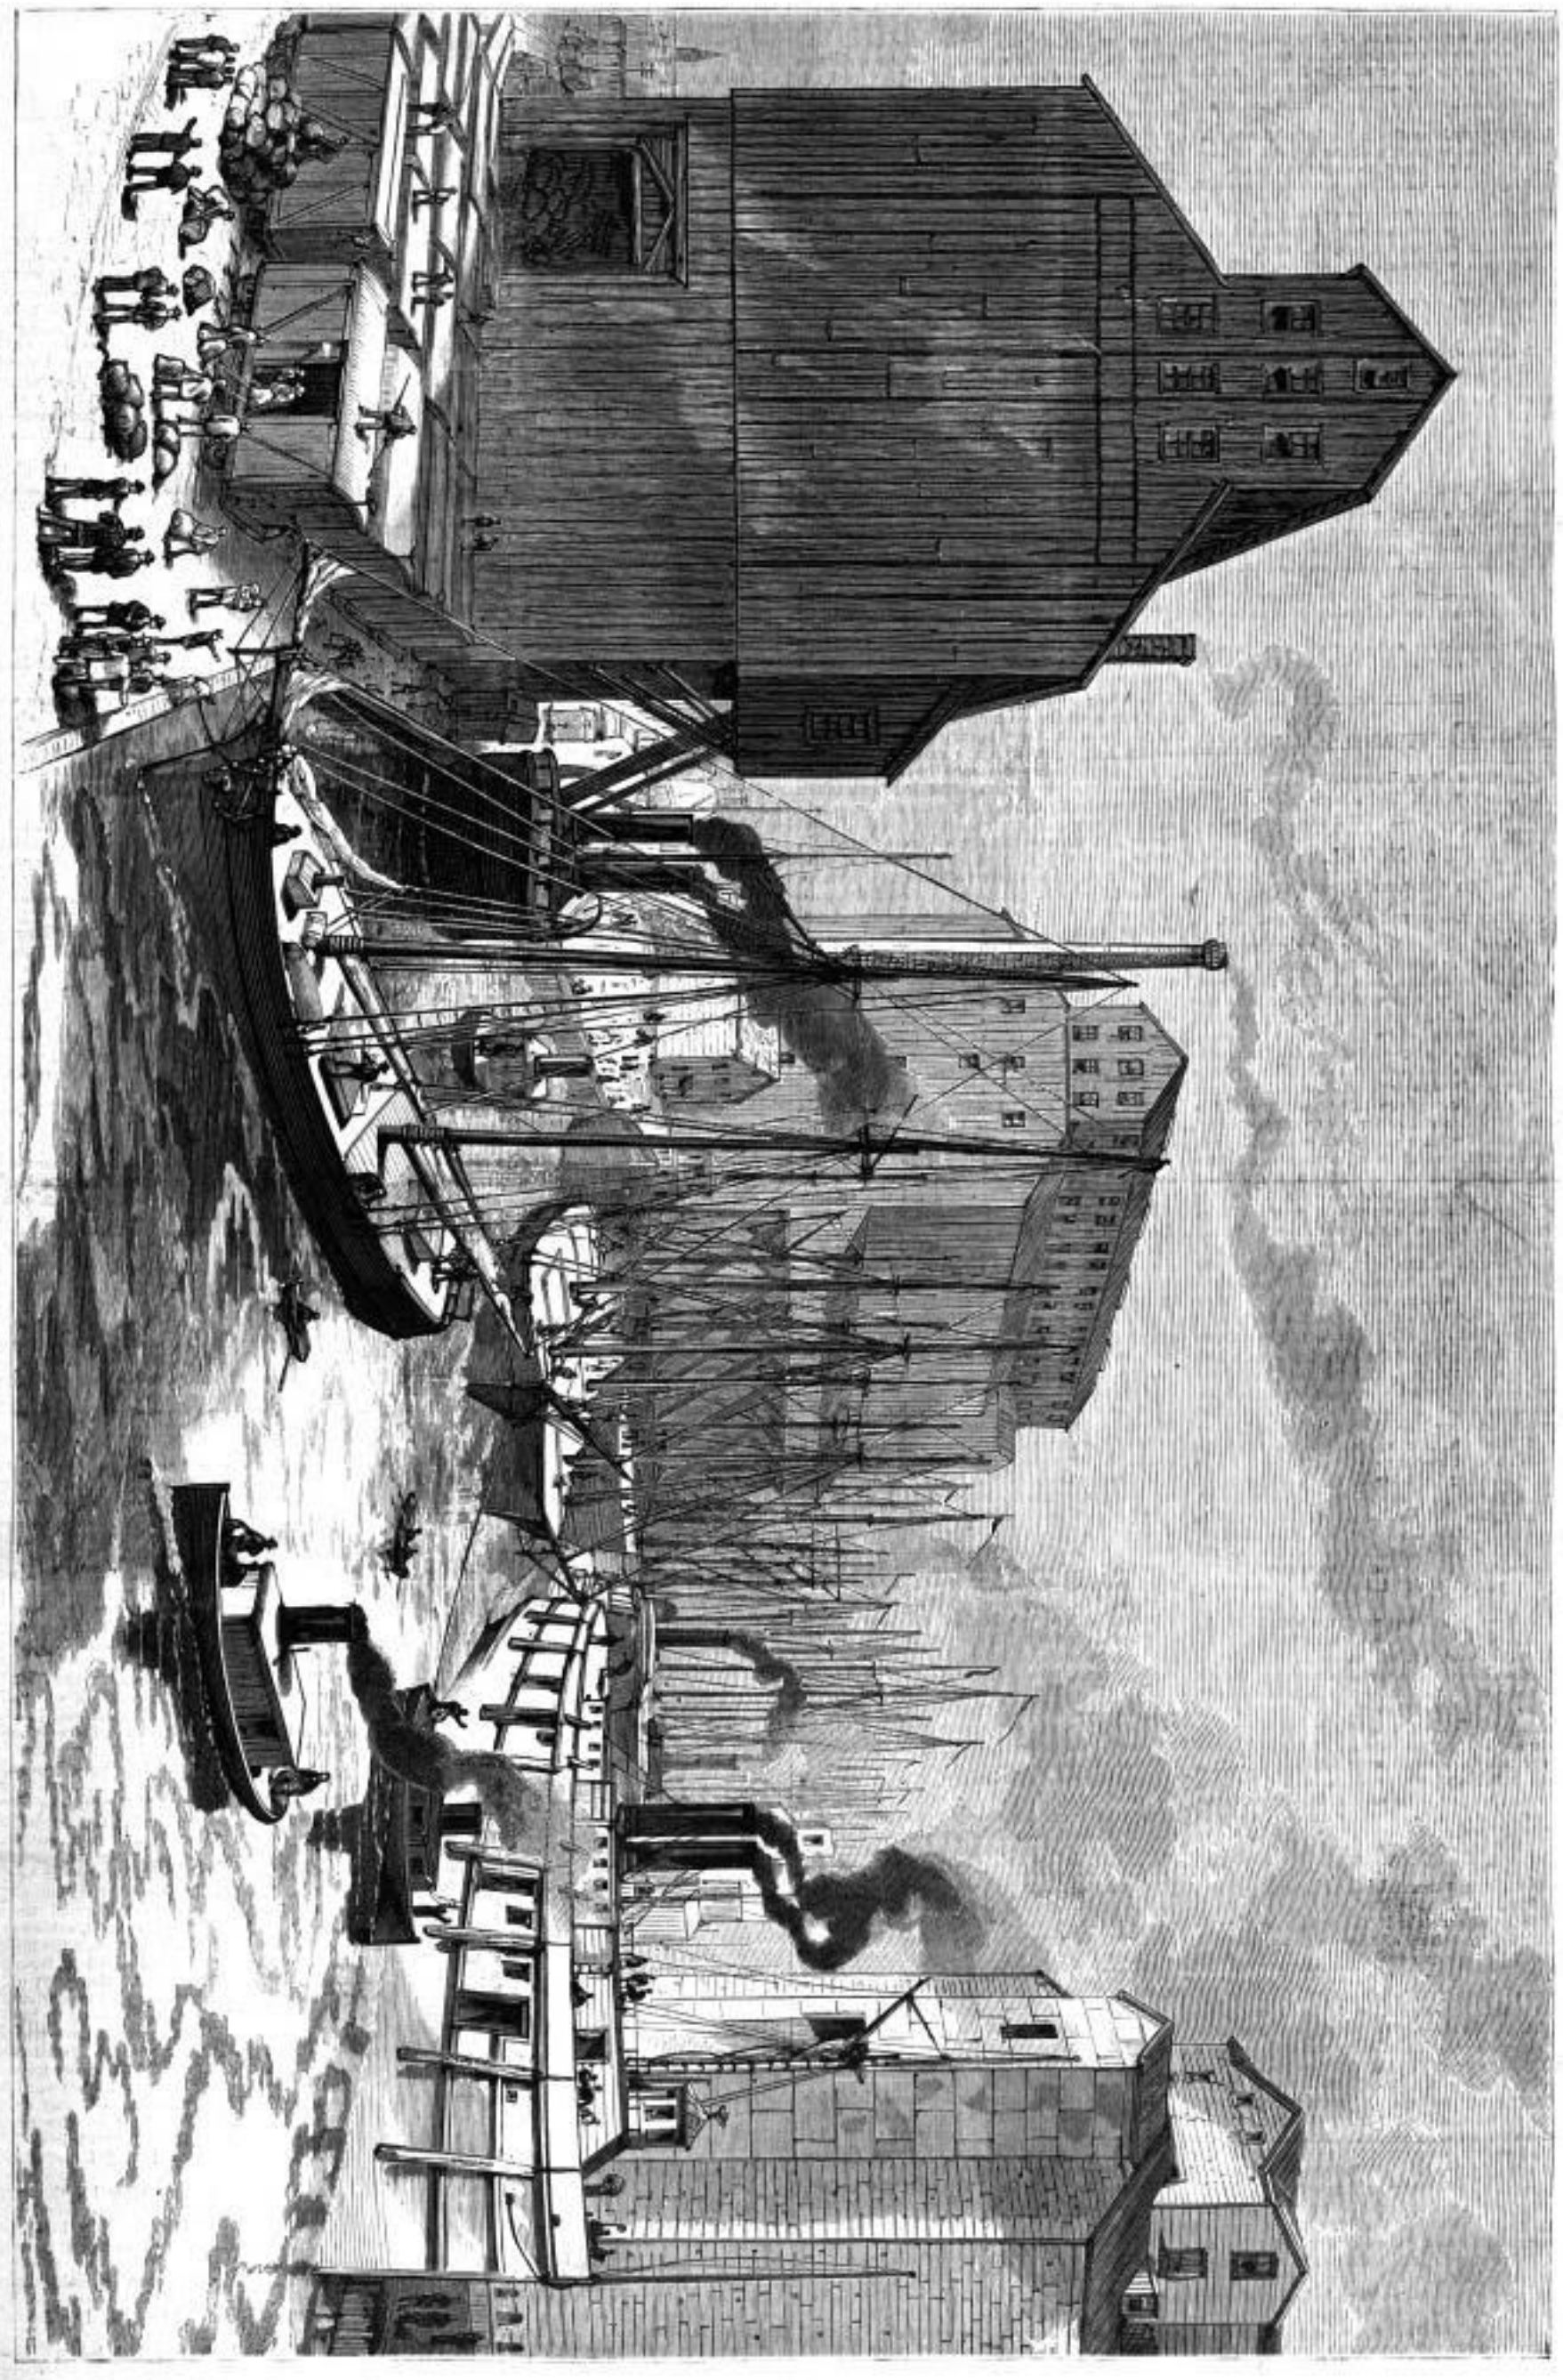


—THE City of Macao, which China is about to claim from Portugal, occupies a peninsula on the south-east side of the Island of Heang-Shang, at the mouth of the Canton River. A low, narrow isthmus joins this peninsula to the main island. The Portuguese territory is three miles in length by three-tenths of a mile in breadth. It was granted to the Portuguese in 1585 by the Chinese Emperor, in reward for their services in repelling the incursions of a Japanese pirate.

—THE Russian Government is considering the expediency of purchasing arms and ammunition in America and shipping them to Vladivostock to equip the army being raised in the lower province for the purpose of withstanding the anticipated Chinese attack. It is also in contemplation to purchase a large quantity of coal in America for shipment to Vladivostock to supply the Russian fleet in the Pacific. Preparations for a formidable Mohammedan movement against China are believed to be already on foot.

—GENERAL BADEAU, the United States Consul-General at London, in a dispatch dated March 12th, calls attention to the enormous increase of exports from London to the United States during the last quarter of 1879, as shown by the invoices passing through his office. For the quarter ending December 31st, 1879, the amount was over $16,000,000. The increase over the previous quarter was about $8,000,000, and over the corresponding quarter in 1878 over $11,000,000. The amount of the present quarter, the Consul states, is likely to exceed the preceding one.

—THE Earl of Dunmore, who owns a property of 30,000 acres in Scotland, and is celebrated as being one of the most extensive cattle breeders in the United Kingdom, has gone to Helena, Montana, where he proposes to start a ranche on a very extensive scale. He intends to buy several thousand head of cattle in Texas and have them transported to his ranche during the coming Summer. It is his further intention to import two or three hundred bulls of his own favorite breed, and he is sanguine of raising a stock of cattle second to none. His ultimate intention is to ship beef to England, preserved by the refrigerating process.



Digitized by Google

MARYLAND.—GRAND BALL GIVEN IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE NURSERY AND CHILD'S HOSPITAL, BALTIMORE

FROM A SKETCH BY WALTER GOATER.—SEE PAGE 118.

Digitized by Google

ILLINOIS—OUR NATIONAL INDUSTRIES—OPENING OF THE GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SEASON AT CHICAGO.—FROM A SKETCH BY JAMES S. WILSON.—SEE PAGE 125.

Digitized by Google

A BETROTHAL.

HAS some rare charm of leap-year wrought the change
By which the Winter and the Spring are one?
Not often down the seasons' iterant range
Note we such tryst of virgin snow and sun.

The white maid smiles in shelter of the wood,
Or skirts the margin of the mottled plain,
The while a red-breast, in expectant mood,
Sings from a barren tree a blithesome strain.

The sun, in nuptial temper of the May,
Rides gayly forth, enlivening hill and dell,
Splendid in courage till, upon his way,
Looms the frost-maiden working still her spell—

A spell of Winter-woven miracle,
When March winds blow, at the last oak-leaf's cost,
And burdened clouds break, frozen in the fall—
The whilom rider from his sun-steed tost!

Vanish his jewels underneath the vail
The maid throws o'er him, bowed now at her feet;
What vows are spoken? Will this warmth prevail?
Or must the eager Spring in shame retreat?

Hush! Wait a little! Sacred are the hours
Of love's first secrets ere they make a sign—
We breathe not yet the breath of bridal-flowers,
Save as arbutus brightens on the vine.

We hear no marriage-music in the air
Save the sweet robin's, brave through whitened mist,
But, by these signs and other signs, we dare
To say the Winter and the Spring have kissed.

MARY E. DODGE.

GOLD DUST AND DIAMONDS.

SHOWING HOW THEY WERE FOUND, HOW THEY WERE LOST, AND HOW, AFTER MANY YEARS, THEY WERE FOUND AGAIN.

A NOVEL.

BY CHARLES DEMITRY.

CHAPTER I.—AT THE PALAZZO ALBERGATI.

AS the clock struck four the next morning Melchior and Reginald emerged from the hotel and passed into the street. The atmosphere was soft and pure, and the pearly tints of the eastern sky were streaked with the early day's first faint crimson, against which the masses of the distant mountains drew long shadows with undulating lines for summits. On their way to the place where, under directions given the previous night, a carriage was waiting for them, they crossed the spacious square of the ancient cathedral, whose countless statues of saints and martyrs gleamed vaguely in the dawn from their niches in their white marble walls, and along the Corso with its avenues of trees. When they had left the hotel the streets were comparatively deserted, but as they went on to their destination, the early risers of the city population—the men and women employed in the various factories—with their usual look of having been snatched from an unfinished sleep, began to appear in increasing numbers.

They had ordered the coachman to await them at a certain spot at a distance from the hotel, their purpose being that he should remain in ignorance of their identity; and when they drew near the designated place, they found him walking up and down near his horses' heads, looking anxiously around him in the dawning light for his approaching fares.

"Ah, the signori are here!" he exclaimed, touching his hat as Melchior and Reginald came up. "Are the signori ready to start?"

"Yes," replied Melchior. "Drive to the Palazzo Albergati. You know where it is?"

"Oh, yes, signor! I know the place very well."

The two friends entered the carriage, the coachman jumped on his box, and in a little while they had left the more thickly settled suburbs behind them, and had reached the old diligence road to Varese that winds through the fertile plain of Lombardy. As they progressed they encountered wine-venders, with their carts dragged by oxen, coming into the city from the neighboring vineyards; other carts filled with vegetables, and peasants, men and women, half-antique in their apparel and appearance, with their market-stock of fruits, butter, eggs and honey. These were trudging along the road with the grave step of the Italian contadini, the women among them bearing their wares in baskets skillfully poised on their heads.

The road stretched through a region in which the monotony of vineyards and fields of growing corn was rarely broken. The picture presented to the eye was one of farmhouses, some of them built of brick and surrounded with gardens inclosed with brick walls on which grew vines and ivies, each house with its vineyards or its field of corn and other grains, and with rows of closely trimmed poplars separating the fields. Before them, in the distance, fifty or sixty miles away, rose the confused summits of the Alps, their peaks and ridges lost in rose-tinted clouds. Behind them, the gilded statue surmounting the spire of the cathedral, towering above the domes and belfries of Milan, gleamed faintly against the opaline sky as it caught the first rays of the rising sun. They had ridden for nearly an hour, when a few yards in front of them appeared on their right the walls of a large, dilapidated structure.

A single glance at the building showed clearly that it was given over to decay and solitude. What had once been its garden, vast in extent in its days of cultivation spread on either side of it, and in front of it up to the road, a distance of nearly a quarter of a mile. The wall that had surrounded this inclosure had crumbled away in places, leaving wide gaps through which could be seen cows, sheep and goats grazing in the field. The stone-work of what remained of the wall was invisible, for a thick growth of ivy had enveloped the fragments so completely that they resembled mounds of dark green foliage. Here and there isolated poplar and mulberry-trees rose from the rank and tangled wilderness of grass and weeds that grew even up to the streaked and mold-stained walls of the old palazzo, and around the sculptured coat-of-arms, above the arched sallyport leading to the courtyard, the ivy had twined and wound in such shape as to give to itself the outlines of a monstrous green serpent.

A few hundred yards below the gate that gave ingress to the garden, near the roadside, was an albergo. At a word from Melchior, the coachman drove up to this inn and the two friends descended. In answer to their inquiries the innkeeper informed them that he had not seen any other gentlemen in a carriage pass the house that morning, and satisfied from this that Vellani and his friends had not yet arrived at the palazzo, they ordered breakfast to be prepared as speedily as possible. In a few minutes the meal, consisting of a cold fowl, eggs, bread, butter and wine was brought in, and after hastily dispatching it, they ordered the coachman to await their return and pursued their journey to the palazzo on foot.

The gate, once massive in proportions, but now with its sculptured marble posts crumbled and broken, stood near the road. From this entrance a long, straight avenue, bordered with poplars, most of them mere decayed trunks and branches, led up to the ruin.

Melchior and Reginald entered the garden and followed the avenue. The path was paved in places with large, square slabs of marble, which had sunk into the ground; in other places it was bare—the slabs that had formerly occupied the vacant spaces having been taken away, probably by the peasants of the neighborhood to repair their humble cottages—and grass had grown thickly wherever it could find an inch of soil in which to take root. And yet, with all this evidence of decay, the avenue showed traces of usage, for a broad footpath had been trodden into the grass by going and coming pedestrians—visitors from the city, perhaps, or peasants from the farms of the vicinity who had entered the garden to drive their straying cattle home.

The venerable building, irregular in construction, was of massive architecture, and bore the impress of eight or nine centuries. There were apertures in the walls for windows, but no sign of window or shutter remained; the great doorway likewise represented merely a great black opening, and that was all. In many parts the walls had fallen in, exposing their prodigious thickness.

After examining the ruins from the outside, Reginald and Melchior passed under the enormous coat-of-arms that crowned the arch of the sallyport and emerged into the courtyard. The yard was of vast extent, and was paved, like the avenue, with marble flags. Scattered about were pieces of stone and other débris that had fallen from the walls, and the picture of desolation was completed in many parts of it by the presence of weeds and grass springing up through the interstices. Here, as on the outside, the casements and doorways were windowless and doorless, affording glimpses into the gloomy chambers.

Curious to inspect the interior the two friends entered the building from one of its sides. The ground-floor was composed of a multitude of rooms; the second floor comprised several suites of apartments, of four or five rooms each, with lofty ceilings, while the upper part was a single immense garret. The wide stone steps of the interior, which they ascended with difficulty, were so worn away that they were compelled to exercise great caution in their ascent. Everywhere the floors were of inlaid brick of various periods and different colors, producing an incongruous effect, and great rafters stretched across the ceilings, from which hung draperies of spiders' webs. Among these rafters swallows and other birds had built their nests, and, as the friends invaded their solitude, they circled about their heads with shrill cries, and flew out of the windows and through the gaping crevices of roof into the open air.

Returning to the courtyard they made a closer examination of its aspects. At the further end was a space about twenty yards square, which was less grown with weeds than the rest of the inclosure. Several fragments of stone lay about in this space, and the presence of numerous empty sardine-boxes and wine-bottles, together with bits of stale bread and scraps of paper, that evidently had been used as wrappers for luncheon, suggested the idea that the palazzo was resorted to at times by visitors, who had selected this locality as the scene of their repasts.

"Here," said Melchior, "is an admirable place wherein gentlemen may settle their difficulties."

"I wonder what detains Vellani?" replied Reginald, speaking abstractedly.

Melchior rolled up a cigarette and lighted it.

"He will come soon enough," he said. "See, the sun is well above the horizon at last; but the height of the walls throws a cool shadow where we are standing."

Reginald looked up. The sky was of a deep, clear blue, and the atmosphere, charged with the golden light of morning, was so pure and limpid that it seemed a delight simply to breathe the air. As he turned his eyes away from this inspection of the heavens, he sighed:

"You still are anxious, mio caro?" said Melchior, placing his hand on his shoulder.

"If I stood here alone awaiting Vellani I would not sigh, Melchior. But when I think that you are to be exposed to danger on this beautiful morning, I confess that I feel oppressed with the uncertainty of life."

"True, life is made up of chances," Melchior said, thoughtfully; "and to provide for what may happen, let me again call your attention to the package which, in case of necessity, you will find in this pocket of my coat. As I have already informed you, it will tell you what to do."

"I shall remember. But the more I reflect on the purpose that has brought us here, the more earnest becomes my hope, for your sake, my dear boy, that Vellani may not come. Pray heaven that something may intervene to stop this duel!"

"Then heaven does not smile on your wish," said Melchior, pressing his hand affectionately; "for look! here are Vellani and his friends!"

His ear had caught the sound of voices in the direction of the sallyport, and as they turned and gazed towards that side of the yard, the figures of four men appeared emerging from the shadow of the arch into the court. Two of them they at once recognized. They were Vellani and Rodolfi. The other two were unknown to him; but as one carried a large package under his arm and a pail of water in his hand, they judged him to be a servant, and surmised that the package contained the swords and the surgeon's implements.

They advanced to meet the newcomers who, at the sight of them, had ceased their conversation. Formal salutes were exchanged, and, after a rapid introduction of the unknown gentleman of Vellani's party, who proved to be a surgeon of Rodolfi's regiment, Melchior and Vellani stepped aside, one to the right and the other to the left; the surgeon proceeded with professional indifference to unwrap the package, displaying a small mahogany case of surgical instruments and two pairs of dueling-swords wrapped in buckskin; and Reginald and Rodolfi entered into conversation.

"The understanding, signor," the former observed, "is that you are to place the combatants in position. It is not necessary to toss up for places. We relinquish the arrangement of all these matters to you."

Rodolfi beckoned to the servant, who was standing near by with the swords, the slender blades of which glistened with a brightness which bore testimony to their newness. He selected two of them and held them with the handles turned towards Reginald.

"You pleases makes your choices, signor," he said, in his Italian-English.

Reginald took one of the weapons and ran his eye along the blade, which he bent slightly.

"Thank you for your attention," he said. "A better weapon could not be found in Milan."

With a mutual bow they separated, Reginald assuming his position near Melchior and Rodolfi joining Vellani on the opposite side of the open space, where the latter was slowly pacing to and fro with his hands behind his back and his eyes fixed on the marble slabs at his feet, as if he were counting them.

"So far, Melchior, all is well," said Reginald. "Here is your sword. May your good genius give you the necessary skill to use it to save yourself from harm!"

"A good blade," replied Melchior, as he received it from his friend. "But I must prepare myself, for Vellani has set me the example."

The Italian had removed his coat and waistcoat. He had dispensed for the occasion with a linen shirt, and he now wore one of woolen texture. In his turn, Melchior dropped his coat. He, too, had provided himself with a shirt of similar material. The only difference between the two garments was this: that whereas Melchior's was of a brown hue and loose to his figure, Vellani's was gray and fitted him somewhat closely.

When the combatants had thus prepared themselves for the encounter, Rodolfi advanced towards Reginald, who went forward to meet him.

"We are at a your services, signor," he said.

"And we, signor, at yours."

The seconds led their principals to a spot which Rodolfi already had marked out as the place of combat. Then they handed them their weapons and the antagonists placed themselves in position with their blades crossed.

Vellani, despite a certain effort to appear indifferent, showed a degree of nervousness which was in contrast to Melchior's coolness; for while the former's hand trembled slightly and his lips wore a forced smile, the latter's hand and arm were firm and motionless, though his face was pale.

The surgeon, with his case of instruments lying open beside him, stood with folded arms gazing unconcernedly at the preparations, and a few steps behind him the attendant followed the movements of the principals with breathless attention. As for Reginald, the intense anxiety with which he watched the proceedings was plainly reflected in his countenance.

Rodolfi had taken the swords between his fingers, holding them at the junction.

"Are you ready, signor?" he first asked Melchior.

"I am ready."

Then he looked at Vellani and repeated the question.

"Ready, answered Vellani.

CHAPTER II.—THE DUEL.

FOR a space of time in which one might count three Rodolfi held the swords between his fingers. Then he exclaimed, "Go signori!" and moved to one side. In the same moment the combatants retreated a pace or two, looking steadily into each other's eyes.

The first to advance to the attack was Vellani. As the swords met a smile appeared on Melchior's face, which brought consolation to Reginald, although he knew not why.

"Melchior has some good reason to feel satisfied," he thought.

"The American gentleman smiles," whispered the surgeon to Rodolfi.

"Yes. Vellani is nervous, and he has perceived it by the touch of his sword," replied the officer.

During this brief colloquy the antagonists had been engaged in beating on each other's blades, as if each were securing time preparatory to availing himself of any opening that might offer.

Suddenly Vellani disengaged and thrust rapidly. His blow, had it taken effect, would have reached Melchior's breast. Reginald saw the danger and a sickening sensation crept over him. Involuntarily he turned his gaze in another direction. An instant later his ear caught the sharp sound of the clash of steel.

Melchior had parried the thrust as it was delivered, and, without removing his sword from Vellani's, had pressed forward on the latter's blade, turned his hand with a lightning-like twist, twining the two swords, as it were, in a single glittering coil, and wrenched the Italian's weapon from his grasp. The sword fell with a shivering clang on the marble at their feet, and its owner, uttering a half-articulated imprecation, glanced irresolutely from it to Melchior's face.

Both were breathing heavily, for though they had been scarcely two minutes in action, the excitement of the last few seconds had told severely on them.

"You have dropped your sword, signor," said Melchior, with a gesture of disdain. "Take it up. I do not practice upon a defenseless man."

Vellani stooped and lifted his weapon from the flagging.

"Cospetto!" ejaculated Rodolfi, who had just recovered from the astonishment into which this feat had thrown him.

"This American is made rather to grace a lady's boudoir than to fight with men," observed the surgeon to the officer; "but Adonis though he be, our friend Vellani has found him a Hercules! Per Dio! What a form—what a face—for a sculptor's chisel!"

As if by a simultaneous impulse, Reginald and Rodolfi advanced to the combatants, who stood on guard, panting and watching each other—Melchior with a smile of confidence, not unmingled with derision, and Vellani with a scowl on his face of blended mortification and rage.

"You are fatigued, signori," said the officer, raising his hand. "Rest yourselves a moment."

They dropped their swords slowly, and retired to the positions they had occupied previous to the assault.

"A narrow escape, my dear boy!" exclaimed Reginald. "I shuddered when I saw Vellani's vicious thrust. But your return was splendid, indeed!"

"Yes, splendid in its results; but half a second's delay, and it would have been too late."

"Melchior, this affair has gone far enough. You have shown yourself generous with this man. I feel it to be my duty to make an effort to bring about a cessation of the duel."

"To gratify you I give my consent to what you propose. But you will find that he will refuse, for I shall make no apology."

He had spoken prophetically, for, when beckoning Rodolfi to one side, Reginald broached the subject, the officer replied that, having questioned his principal with the same view of bringing about an accommodation, he had answered that nothing short of an apology would satisfy him.

"Then the duel must continue, for we have no apology to make," said Reginald.

Rodolfi bowed.

"I am sorry, signor," he answered, as he walked back to his principal.

Again were the antagonists placed face to face. Melchior exhibited an easy self-possession which Vellani, evidently controlled by his passion, plainly lacked.

The result of this second assault was not long delayed, for, pressing his antagonist vigorously, Melchior threw him off his guard by a few rapid feints, spared the life that was at his sword's point, and for the second time disarmed the now furious man.

For a moment Vellani stood as if transfixed. Then suddenly, to the consternation of the witnesses of the scene, with a swift bound he sprang for his sword, and, almost before the lookers-on could comprehend his full purpose, he had recovered it and was lunging savagely at Melchior.

Reginald and Rodolfi rushed forward to intervene between the duelists, the former with a cry of "Shame!" and the latter with the articulation of some indistinct Italian term expressive of contempt; but before they could reach them, the human tiger into which rage had transformed the Italian was tamed; for, parrying his blows and slowly retreating as if to postpone the necessity that self-preservation seemed to force on him, Melchior finally reached that part of the cleared space at which the first straggling growth of weeds began. Then ceasing to fall back, he stood at bay for a second or two, and, gathering his strength, he parried Vellani's cuts, and, before the latter could recover from the impetus of his attack, crossed his sword, held his own fixed to it, and with a strong revolving movement of his wrist, threw his antagonist's weapon sufficiently out of line to enable him to deliver a telling blow that ended the combat.

As Melchior leaped back after his thrust, Vellani staggered, his sword dropped from his hand, and with a cry of "maledizione!" he fell, with a pale face, helplessly into the arms of his second.

Melchior leaned for support on Reginald, who had come up.

"Do not be alarmed," he panted. "I am untouched!"

"And Vellani—have you killed him?" he asked, hastily.

"Probably not," replied Melchior. "The blade entered his sword-arm. Ugh!" he exclaimed, with a shudder, as he looked at his sword which he had not yet relinquished, and which was dripping with blood.

Digitized by Google

Reginald took the crimsoned weapon from his hand and gave it to the servant. Rodolfi and the surgeon in the meantime had seated Vellani on a block of stone and were examining the wound. In a little while the former joined Melchior and Reginald.

"Signor Vellani," he said, "is cut in the arm—a bad wound, but not necessarily dangerous. He has fainted from the shock." Then he added, as he shook hands with Melchior: "You have behaved like a brave man and a gentleman, and I give you my hand as testimony to your conduct as a man of honor. Signor Vellani—I say it with a blush, for he has been my friend—has acted the part of a cutthroat, and when he recovers, I, for one, shall decline any further acquaintance with him. You twice gave him his life, and he sought to assassinate you!"

"Thanks, signor, for your sympathy," returned Melchior. "It was my skill and coolness alone that saved me. I saw his purpose soon enough to defeat it, and when he forced me to the weeds, where I should have fallen had I attempted to retreat further, he would have completed his work unless I had incapacitated him from inflicting on me a mortal wound."

"Could I have foreseen that he would so dishonor himself——"

"Say no more, Signor Rodolfi. I shall never forget your kindness and generosity."

In a few words Melchior informed the officer of Reginald's purpose to challenge Vellani and of the circumstances that had led to that determination; and while the two conversed on this subject, the surgeon bared Vellani's arm, washed it and applied bandages to it. The Italian, as they could see from where they stood, still lay in a trance-like condition, and the attendant was engaged in washing up the blood that had dropped on the dingy marble flagging and had stained it in many places.

The conversation between Melchior and Rodolfi had been carried on in Italian, and at its close the former said to Reginald:

"Signor Rodolfi tells me that it is the opinion of the surgeon that Vellani will be unable to use his arm for several weeks. I have just informed him of your intention to call Vellani to account for that letter, and he agrees with me that, after what has occurred, no gentleman need feel himself aggrieved by anything he may have said or done."

"I certainly would not meet him in honorable combat after this exhibition," replied Reginald, "but it seems to me that I might obtain satisfaction in some more summary way."

"And wait a month or two for the pleasure of cudgeling him? I agree with Signor Rodolfi. Vellani is henceforth beneath your notice. Pocket your resentment and let the matter drop. What say you?"

"I suppose it must be as you say," Reginald answered, as he glanced at Vellani, who was beginning to gain consciousness, and to whose lips the surgeon held a flask of brandy. As the wounded man made an effort to straighten himself in his seat, Rodolfi walked to him and assisted the surgeon in making him comfortable; but while he performed this service for his late principal his bearing was cold and unsympathetic.

"I have a word or two to say to Vellani," observed Reginald to Melchior. "And when I shall have spoken to him I shall dismiss him and his letter from my mind."

"Sir," he said, approaching the Italian and taking from his pocket the note the latter had written on the steamer Ville de Paris, "I am Mr. Reginald Grey, of New York. Chance—or rather your own malevolence—brought about a meeting between you and my friend, Mr. Melchior Waring. You first owed me an apology for this letter, which you safely wrote to me on the morning of your departure from New York. I came to Milan to demand of you an apology or satisfaction. However, before I could present this demand, circumstances threw you and Mr. Waring together at the house of the Marchesa di Lupo. Instead, therefore, of bearing a message from me to you, Mr. Waring became involved in a difficulty with you. Doubtless, presuming on his youth and probable inexperience, you provoked him to this combat, thus robbing me of my right to a first meeting. In the course of this duel Mr. Waring twice gave you your life. As the reward of his merciful forbearance you violated all the rules of honor recognized by gentlemen in such circumstances and treacherously sought to assassinate him. These witnesses, your own friends, denounce you. Gentlemen, am I not right?"

He turned to Rodolfi and the surgeon. They both inclined their heads silently as if in acquiescence.

"And now, sir," he resumed, "with the opinion of your second, Signor Rodolfi, to justify me, I must decline to recognize you as a responsible person. You have put yourself beyond the pale of recognition by your conduct to a brave and magnanimous adversary, and as a mere pretender to the character of a gentleman. I shall treat you hereafter with the contempt you deserve."

He bowed to the officer and the surgeon as he ceased and turned on his heel. Vellani's face, pale with the loss of blood, seemed to grow white under Reginald's words, and his dark eyes flashed with a strange lustre which was heightened by the surrounding pallor of his countenance.

"If I were not a wounded man," he exclaimed, smiling savagely and showing his teeth, "perhaps you would be more discreet in your language."

Reginald paused for a moment and, without noticing Vellani's remark, addressed himself to the latter's two friends.

"You will pardon me, gentlemen," he said, "if my language has seemed a little violent. While I recognize the fact that something may be due to a consideration of this man's helplessness, still I must maintain that all I have said is warranted by the truth. Mr. Vellani, however, may congratulate himself on the punishment that my friend, in defending his life against a treacherous attack, has inflicted on him, for it has saved him at least from the further disgrace of a horsewhipping. When a man has been outraged as I have been, he does not stop to pick phrases. Nevertheless, I owe it to your courtesy to apologize for the warmth of my language."

Having thus spoken, he saluted Rodolfi and his companion and rejoined Melchior.

A minute later Rodolfi followed him.

"Let me advise you, signor," he said, in a friendly tone to Melchior, "to leave Milan as soon as possible. Otherwise the authorities may decide to inquire into this affair. If you are out of the way nothing will be done, probably."

Melchior thanked him for his advice and informed him that he and Reginald had no intention of delaying their departure from the city, their mission there having ended with the events that had just taken place.

Then, with the utterance of mutual good wishes and with a last expression of regret from Rodolfi for the conduct of Vellani, the friends crossed the courtyard, walked under the archway, and emerged into the long avenue.

The carriage that had brought Vellani and his companions stood near the gate. A few peasants, residents of the neighborhood, had gathered around it and were conversing with the driver. As Reginald and Melchior passed them, they turned their expressive black eyes on them with a look of wonderment in their faces. It was very evident that their curiosity had been aroused by the spectacle of the two vehicles standing in the road at so early an hour of the morning, and it was not impossible that they more than suspected the truth and were aware of the cause of the unusual gathering at the palazzo.

(To be continued.)

THE GRAIN FLEET AT CHICAGO.

THE extent of the grain trade of Chicago, and the important relations which that city holds to the agricultural interest of the country, are but inadequately appreciated by the general public. As early as 1854 Chicago was declared to be the greatest primary grain depot in the world, collecting more grain from the producers than even the Russian ports. Since that date the city has become the greatest grain market in the world. The growth and extent of the trade is shown by the fact that her shipments of breadstuffs increased from 16,632,780 bushels in 1855 to 83,364,234 bushels in 1872. As to the immense business which now centres at that port some idea may be gathered from the fact that on the 3d of April there was in port a fleet of eighty-eight vessels loaded with 2,375,000 bushels of corn, 189,000 bushels of wheat, 77,000 bushels of oats, and 18,000 bushels of rye.

In addition to this great fleet, there were thirty-five other vessels, with a carrying capacity of 909,000 bushels, awaiting cargoes. The fleet includes steamers, barks, propellers and schooners, many of which are already en route for lower lake ports, Buffalo being the destination of most of them.

The total amount of grain in store at Chicago, March 28th, amounted to 15,166,422 bushels. This did not include the amount afloat in the harbor.

It may be stated as a fact of interest that the visible supply of grain in this country and Canada at this time as stated at 47,752,000 bushels. It is estimated that the wants of Great Britain, Northern and Atlantic France, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Spain and Portugal, up to August 1st, will amount to 96,000,000 bushels, of which this country must supply, if it can, 48,873,000 bushels.

COLORED EXODUS FROM ARKANSAS.

A COLONY FOR LIBERIA.

AN exodus of colored people from Arkansas for Liberia has recently commenced; 150 persons—who are said to be the forerunners of a host—having arrived in this city, week before last, with a view of sailing for their remote destination at the earliest opportunity. Most of these are now quartered at Mount Olivet Baptist Chapel, 228 West Thirty-seventh Street, where they are cared for by friends, reception and sleeping-rooms having been arranged for their accommodation. The majority, both of men and women, are scrupulously neat and clean, and seem anxious to depart to their new home in Liberia, where they anticipate leading independent and happy lives. They already have an agent in Liberia, who has made all necessary arrangements for the establishment of a colony. The regular packet for Liberia, the bark Liberia, which sails May 1st, has had all her passenger accommodations engaged by the American Colonization Society of Washington, and it is probable that another vessel will have to be chartered to take the Arkansas band to the settlement.

It is said that colored men to the number of more than fifty thousand, who are working on land on shares in the Gulf States, are preparing to emigrate to Arizona and New Mexico. Their leadership is their own, but the promoters of this enormous transfer of population from one part of the continent to another are commercial men, who are well-known in New York. They will couple philanthropy and business, and buy vast tracts of land, say from forty to fifty thousand acres in one tract, getting it at forty cents an acre and deeding it to the colored settlers at cost, selling every settler as much or as little as he may be able to pay for.

INSPECTION OF THE MONITORS IN PHILADELPHIA SHIP-YARDS.

THE merchants and business men of Philadelphia having secured the introduction into Congress of Bills providing for the appropriation of $800,000 for the benefit of the commerce of that port, in opening and deepening river channels and in adding to and improving the light-house system, the Committees on Commerce and Naval Affairs, on the 3d instant, paid a visit to that city for the purpose of obtaining information as to the needs of the port, and also inspecting, incidentally, the naval vessels at League Island and other points. The committees were accompanied by Secretary Thompson and other naval officials. The trip of inspection on the Delaware was made in the steamer Gratitude, and embraced, first, a visit to Cramp's ship-yard, where the hull of the monitor Terror, and other vessels in course of construction, were examined, followed by a visit to League Island, where the party were received with all the honors. At League Island, the sloop-of-war Juniata, which saw rough service during the war, was first inspected. This vessel is of wood, and is being thoroughly rebuilt. Subsequently the party went through the machine shops and the other departments, and visited the low lands back of the island. Thence the party proceeded to Roach's ship-yard at Chester, where the Miantonomah, nearly finished, with her machinery all in, and the Puritan, as yet only a hull, were inspected.

The Terror, at Cramp's yard, has been lying on the ways for five years, and nothing has been done on her since 1877, when Secretary Thompson ordered work to cease on the different ironclads being built for the Government. The Secretary, during this visit, expressed the opinion that all the monitors inspected ought to be finished at once, but he did not believe that Congress would vote the money required—about $3,500,000. He will probably appoint a Board of Officers at once to examine and report upon the vessels for the information of Congress. The visit of the Congressmen was in every way a pleasant one, but the impression made upon them is said not to have been favorable to the large appropriations proposed for the improvement of the navigation of the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers.

A Great Convention of Millers.

THE millers of the West and Northwest are to have a grand international convention at Cincinnati on the 30th of May. Crediting the statements of our esteemed contemporaries in that quarter, it is to be an affair of no ordinary magnitude. "With everybody in this country, and, indeed, throughout the civilized world, at all connected with the grain and flour interests," says a Cincinnati correspondent, "this convention and this exhibition will be the event of a lifetime. Provision has been made for the entertainment of over 50,000 millers and manufacturers from this country, while between 1,500 and 2,000 Europeans engaged in the milling interests have signified their intention of being present." From another source we learn that every State in the Union is to be represented, and every State, it is expected, will make an elaborate display both of cereals and flour. Manufacturers and grain-raisers from Buda-Pesth and Berlin, from England, Switzerland and from along the Danube, are also expected to be on hand, as also many citizens of Russia and from the region of the Rhine. "Even the owners of the Egyptian granaries will send representatives to Cincinnati to learn of American industries and American ingenuity. Ten complete flouring-mills will be set up in the exposition buildings, and two of them will be from Europe."

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

From Observations on the cattle of Brittany, M. Bellamy is led to question the common doctrine that in-breeding is injurious.

The Appearance of the phylloxera in Sicily has been traced to imported French vines. Stringent measures have been taken to prevent its extension.

The Royal Order of the Crown has been bestowed upon Professor Pettenkofer, of the University of Munich, so widely and deservedly known by his researches in chemical hygiene.

According to Professor Church, withered leaves of the usual autumnal colors—yellow, red or brown—can be rendered green again by steeping in water along with a little zinc powder.

The German Savant, Herr Karl Bock, who was commissioned by the Dutch Government to investigate the southern and eastern districts of Borneo, has just completed his first tour in the eastern part of Koti.

From Cooktown, in Queensland, it is announced that some Chinese have formed a company and taken land for growing sugar, rice and coffee. They are thought to have a good chance of success, as the soil is very rich.

A Number of former pupils of Bernhard von Cotta propose to erect a monument in memory of the deceased geologist, and invite subscriptions for this purpose. The Royal Berg-Academie at Freiberg will receive contributions.

A Monument to Dr. August Petermann, the well-known geographer, has just been erected at Gotha. The design, which is very tasteful, is by Herr Eelbo, and the work was executed by the eminent sculptor, Herr Deutschman.

Mr. F. Walters, one of Her British Majesty's Consuls in China, has lately published at Shanghai a work, entitled "A Guide to the Tablets in a Temple of Confucius," which forms a complete key to the official hagiology of China.

The Municipal Council of Paris have decided with respect to the electric lighting of the Avenue de l'Opéra, to continue the agreement with the Jablochkoff Company up to May 1st, 1881. The gas experiments in the Rue de Quatre Septembre are not to be continued.

A Company of Squatters is being formed in Western Australia, with the object of at once occupying the magnificent tract of country on the Fitzroy River, which has recently been discovered by Mr. Alexander Forrest. It is intended to take stock there, and to endeavor to cultivate tropical products.

There is a talk of constructing a crystal palace in the Park of St. Cloud, near Paris. The ruins of the old palace would be removed, and on its site would arise a handsome structure surmounted by a costly dome, and containing conservatories, a gigantic aquarium, a panorama, museums of science and art, and a theatre. Model farms would also be established in the immediate neighborhood, and there would be pigeon-shooting and other pleasure grounds.

The Berlin Society of Commercial Geography is rapidly assuming considerable importance. As we have before recorded, it was started about a year ago, and now numbers some 1,500 members. It already has several affiliated branches among German communities in different parts of the world, and issues two periodicals. One of these, which is of a scientific nature, appears twice a month, while the other is purely commercial, and is published every week.

Doctor Erlenmayer, in the Medical and Surgical Reporter, gives it as his opinion that the Semitic nations, including the ancient Hebrews, were left-handed, and that this peculiarity was the reason why they wrote from right to left. He adduces evidence in favor of his theory both from the Talmud and the Old Testament. We must, however, remember that in one of the earlier books of the latter (Judges, iii., 15) left-handedness is mentioned as a personal peculiarity.

The French Government has appointed M. Hervé-Mangon, the new director of the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, as one of its representatives in the International Metric Commission. The death of General Morin has created a vacancy on the Committee of the Breteuil International Observatory. This observatory has been constructed in the Parc de Saint Cloud on the site of an old imperial mansion, at the expense of the associated nations. The contribution levied is in proportion to the population multiplied by one, if the nation does not make any use of the metric system, by two if the metric system is permissive, as in the United States, and by three if it is only legal measure, as in Belgium, Italy, or France. The president of the Committee is General Ibanez (Spain), the secretary, Dr. Hirsch (Switzerland), and the director of the Breteuil Observatory, Dr. Broch (Norway). England declined to join the Association, Bavaria, Saxony and Würtemburg has each a vote and a representative, as well as Prussia.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

THE Philadelphia friends of Mr. Francis Murphy, the temperance lecturer, have presented him a handsome furnished residence in that city, where he will hereafter reside.

ON March 27th, Mr. George P. Marsh, our Minister to Italy, completed his nineteenth year of consecutive service, during which time he has never visited America.

THE Viceroy of India has officially informed Sirdar Shere Ali, Governor of Candahar, that Queen Victoria has selected him for the sovereignty of that province.

THE marriage of Rudolph, Crown Prince of Austria, with the Princess Stéphanie, the second daughter of Leopold II., King of Belgium, has been fixed for the end of February, 1881.

PRINCE OSCAR of Sweden and Norway is a youth of twenty years, whose beardless face looks even younger than that. He is a handsome boy, gracious and elegant in carriage and manner.

THE venerable Thurlow Weed has written a letter strongly opposing the nomination of General Grant for the Presidency on the ground that it would be contrary to sound political policy.

THE new Chancellor of Central University, Ky., Rev. Rutherford Douglass, was born in Virginia, graduated from Centre College, and married a daughter of the Rev. John C. Young, D.D., of Danville.

THE seventieth birthday of the Rev. Jas. Freeman Clarke, of Boston, was celebrated in the Church of the Disciples on the evening of April 5th, with very affectionate and complimentary exercises.

GENERAL IMBODEN, the ex-Confederate cavalry leader, who represents a large number of Northern capitalists, has purchased 42,000 acres of mining land in Scott County, Va., at fifty-five cents an acre.

PRINCE NAPOLEON is making a tour with his sons through the Democratic towns. He sides with the Government against the Jesuits, who are awakening to the knowledge that the Cabinet is in earnest.

GENERAL LOUIS MELIKOFF, the "dictator," is said to be exceedingly popular in St. Petersburg society. His wife was one of the greatest beauties of her day, and his eldest daughter is a remarkable pianist. His two sons are pages at court.

BEFORE starting for Zululand, the ex-Empress Eugénie presented her Imperial Crown to the Church of Notre Dame des Victoires, Paris. It is of great value, on account of its artistic composition and the number of precious stones it contains.

M. VICTORIEN SARDOU is said to be of a most amiable and benevolent disposition, giving away to poor and struggling authors a reasonable share of the large income his pen has brought him. He has the added goodness of never mentioning his gifts.

PRINCE LEOPOLD will sail direct for Canada on the 29th of April in the Allan Line steamer Sarmatian. From Canada he will proceed through the Western States of America, but will not extend his tour to San Francisco, as was recently contemplated.

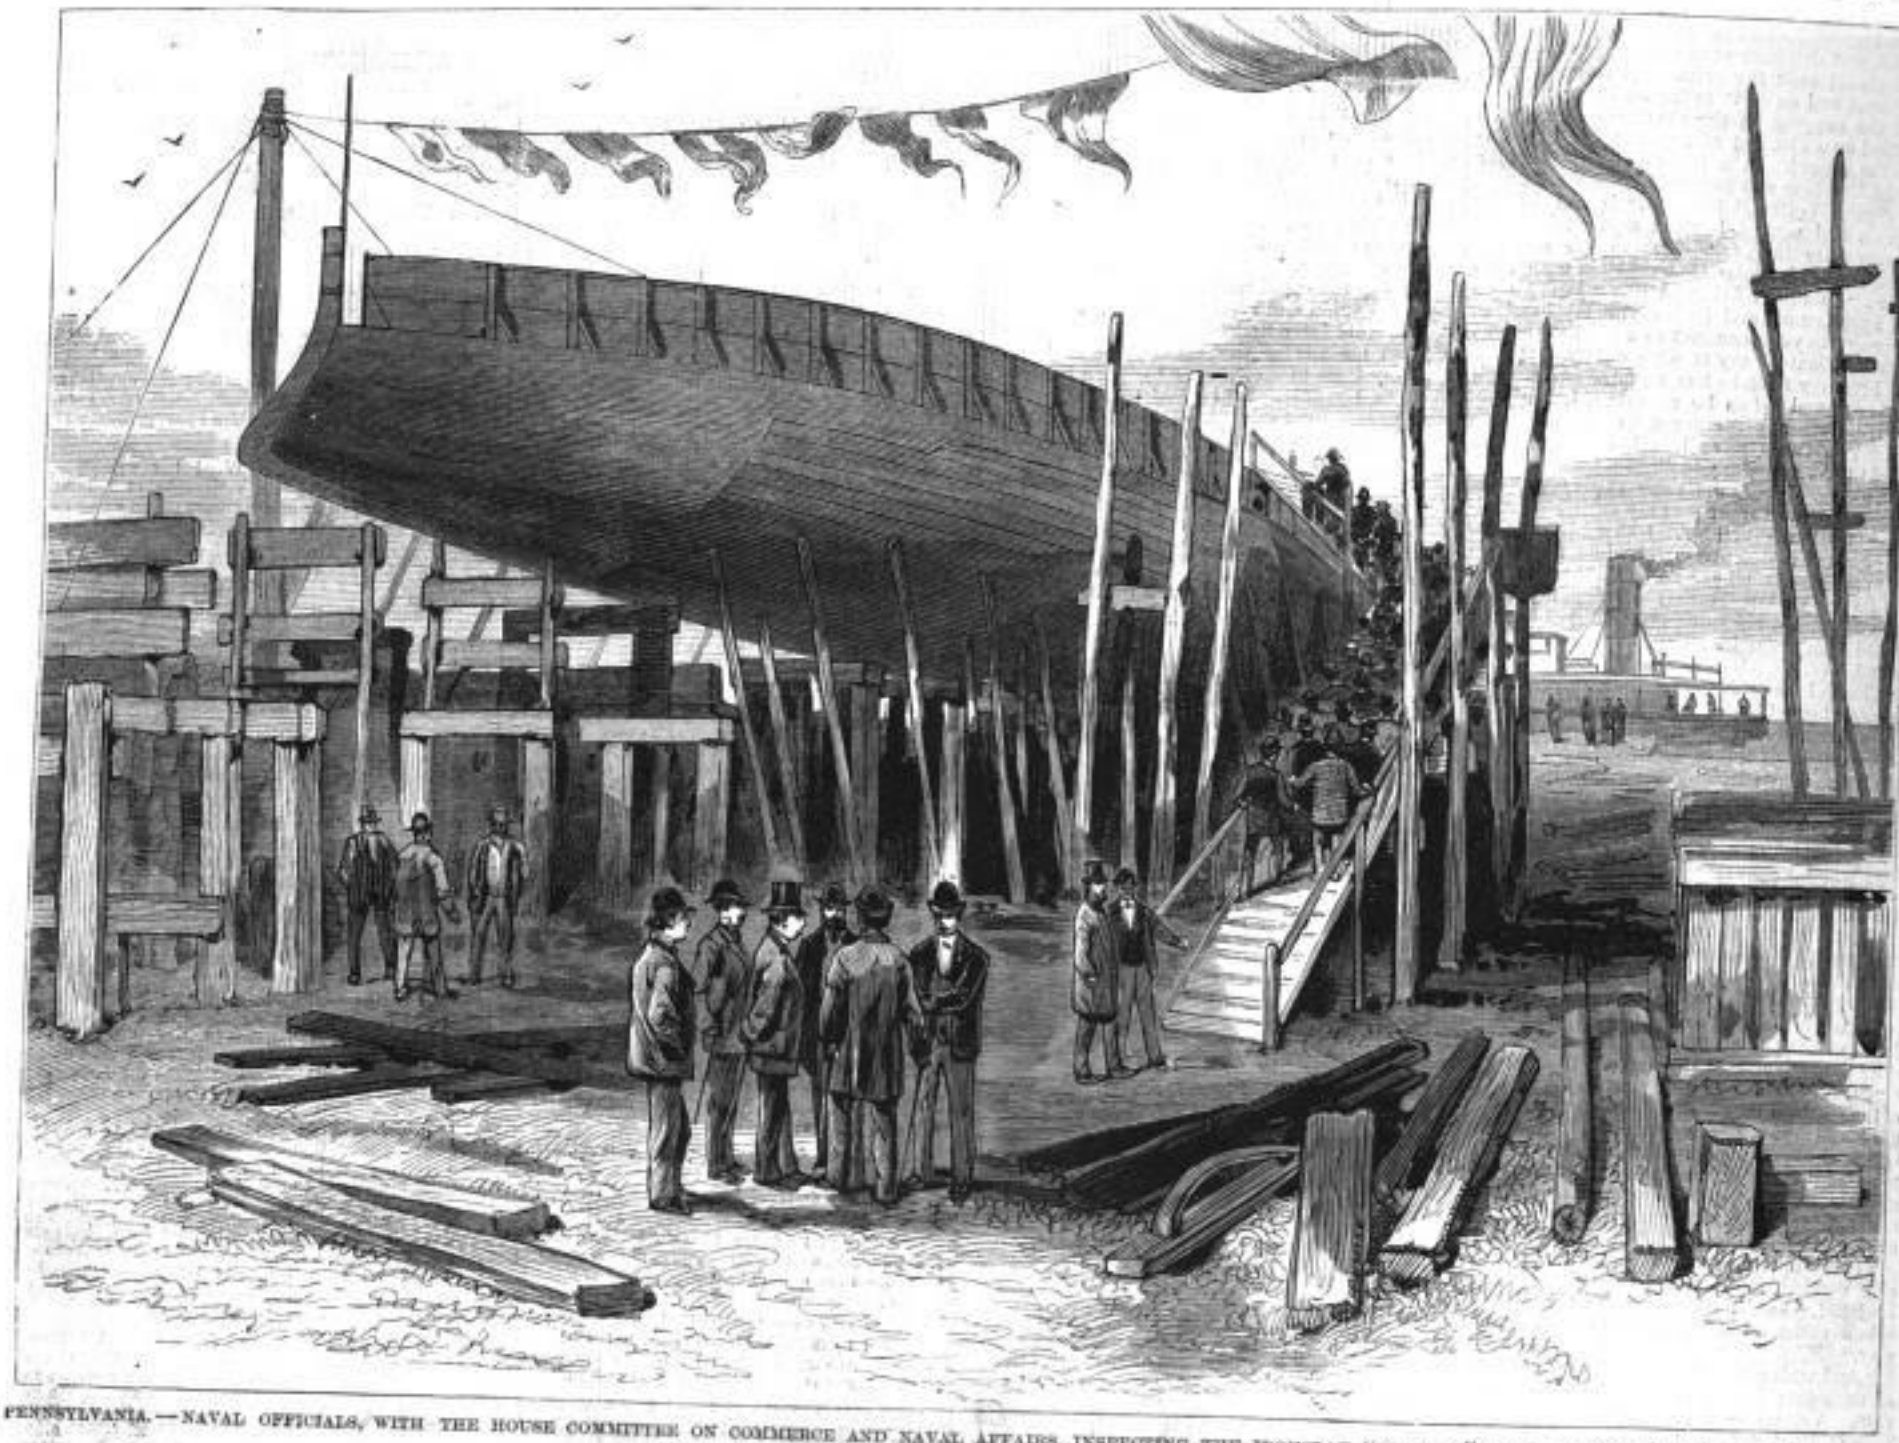
THE report of Mahmoud Jan's death is untrue. Mustaid Hatchulla Khan, who made overtures to the malcontents on behalf of the British, has returned to Cabul, and says that Mahmoud Jan is at Maidan, and is determined to fight if the British do not offer satisfactory terms.

THE French Government hopes to induce M. Léon Say, ex-Minister of Finance, to accept the post of Ambassador to London, but M. Say prefers simply to be nominated an Envoy Extraordinary, to negotiate a new commercial treaty, returning to France when such treaty has been concluded.

HON. MR. BOGOT, aide-de-camp to the Governor-General of Canada, and Mr. Maddox, the groom who rendered such valuable services at the time of the accident to Princess Louise, have received beautiful gold watches, sent by Her Majesty the Queen. The gifts were presented by Princess Louise.

THE banquet given to Professor Samuel D. Gross, M.D., D.C.L., of Philadelphia, on his recent visit to New Orleans, by the Medical and Surgical Association, was the greatest ovation that has ever been given to a member of the profession in the Crescent city. He was presented with a handsome album containing the autographs of all present.

IT is believed at Constantinople that the assassination of the Grand Shereef of Mecca, who was stabbed by a Persian fanatic on the 14th ult., and died on the 21st, was procured by Abdul Mutalib, his successor, who had long been in Constantinople endeavoring to convince the Sultan that Sherif Hussein, the murdered Shereef, sought to free Arabia from Turkish rule. Abdul Mutalib is very hostile to the British nation.



COUNT ORLOFF, the Russian Minister to France, is a picturesque-looking nobleman. He wears a great black band over the left side of his head to conceal the absence of an eye lost in a wild expedition in the Turco-Russian war of 1853, when twenty Russian officers and soldiers attempted to capture the position of Arab-Tabia. His left arm was fractured at the same time and never properly set, and he carries it in a sling. But he is charitable, particularly to sick or infirm workingmen.

IT is seldom that such strikingly coincident circumstances occur as are presented in the lives and almost simultaneous deaths of Mr. Robert H. McCurdy and Mr. Herman D. Aldrich, each of whom closed a career of usefulness and honor in New York last week. Born in adjoining States at about the same time, they first met in this city as boys; commenced the battle of life together under the same employer; ultimately became partners in business together as well as intimate friends; lived side by side for many years after retiring from active life, and finally dying on the same day and of the same malady.

THE Empress Eugénie's large fortune will not, it is said, go to the Bonapartes. Her heir is to be the Duc d'Alba, her nephew, the son of her only sister. The Empress has been accompanied to South Africa by two English ladies—Mrs. Ronald Campbell and Lady Wood. Her voyage has been remarkably comfortable, three large cabins having been so altered as to form a suite, the first—a sitting room—with lounges, davenport and whatnots; the second, a bedroom; the third, a bathroom, wonderfully luxurious for shipboard; the whole suite lined with charming pale green stuff, like silken tapestry, and paneled in places with mirrors.

PRINCE WILLIAM of Prussia, eldest son of the Crown Prince and future heir to the Empire, is now twenty-one years old, a few months younger than his betrothed, Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg. The marriage, which is a love match, is not very much liked by the people, who think the heir-apparent might aspire to a bride of higher rank. The parents of the young man, however, approve the alliance, the Crown Prince having been sorely grieved at Bismarck's harsh treatment of the late Duke, the bride's father, when he attempted to assert his rights of succession to the much-coveted duchies of Schleswig-Holstein.

Digitized by Google

PENNSYLVANIA.—NAVAL OFFICIALS, WITH THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE AND NAVAL AFFAIRS, INSPECTING THE IRONCLAD "TERROR," AT CRAMP'S SHIPYARD, PHILADELPHIA. FROM A SKETCH BY PARKER BOOFISH.—SEE PAGE 123.

NEW YORK CITY.—COLORED REFUGEES FROM ARKANSAS AWAITING TRANSPORTATION TO LIBERIA AT THE MOUNT OLIVET BAPTIST CHAPEL.—SEE PAGE 123.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK.—THE NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT BEDFORD, ERECTED 1872.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT BEDFORD, N. Y.

AN announcement was recently made that the congregation of the Presbyterian Church in the village of Bedford, Westchester County, N. Y., were about celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of the organization of the society. Although Mr. Bolton, in his "History of Westchester County," credits the organization to the year 1680, the Rev. Dr. Baird has recently discovered that the true date was March 23d, 1681. Consequently the very interesting services that had been projected for the 23d of March last were postponed for a year. The first minister of whom there is now any knowledge, who preached in Bedford to then only about eleven inhabitants besides the Indians, was the Rev. Peter Prudden, whom, in 1675, the General Court of Connecticut ordered to resume his settlement in Rye. The first building designed for church purposes was erected in 1680, and was burned to the ground one hundred years later by the British troops. In 1783 Captain Lewis M. Donald gave to the Presbyterian Society the land on which the second house of worship was built, and in 1785 the Legislature of the State of New York incorporated the Presbyterian Society, to be known by the name of the Trustees for the Presbyterian Church and Congregation of Bedford, to be governed in discipline and worship according to the Directory of the now established Church of Scotland.

The building was completed in 1785, and the Rev. John Davenport took charge May 18th, 1786. Among the many pastors of the Society, mention should be made of the Rev. Ebenezer Grant, who preached there seventeen years; the Rev. Jacob Green, who succeeded him and officiated from 1822 to 1848; the Rev. David Inglis, who was installed in October, 1848, preached four years, and, after preaching in Canada for sixteen years, became pastor of the Reformed Church on the Heights, Brooklyn, in 1872; and the Rev. P. B. Hervey, who assumed charge in May, 1857.

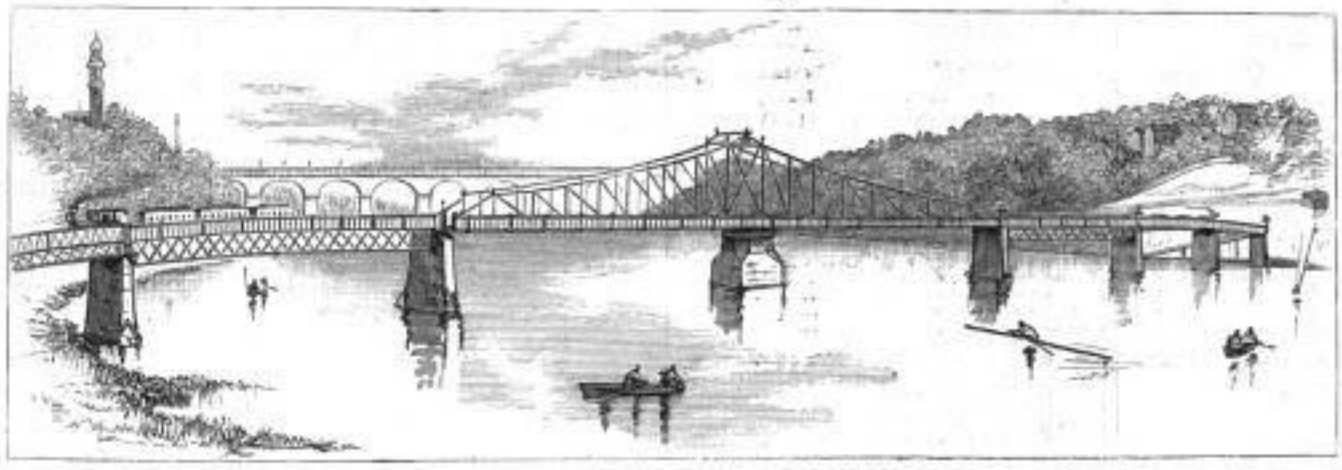
In the Spring of 1871 Francis A. Palmer, Esq., President of the Broadway Bank, offered to build a new house of worship, and to present it unincumbered to the congregation; and, the proposition being accepted, the corner-stone was laid, June 29th following. On the 13th of August, 1872, the edifice, which had been completed from cellar to tower, at a cost of $50,000, was dedicated. The old building was abandoned on the completion of the new one, but about a year ago it was given by the trustees to Mr. Palmer, who had it carefully taken down and re-erected at a distance of over two miles from its former location. In September last it was dedicated as the "Bethany Union Mission Chapel." The present pastor of the Bedford Church is the Rev. J. H. Hoyt.

NEW YORK.—THE OLD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT BEDFORD, ERECTED 1785.

PROFESSOR JAMES B. ANGELL,

U. S. MINISTER TO CHINA.

PROFESSOR JAMES B. ANGELL, now President of the University of Michigan, who was recently nominated as United States Minister to China, to succeed Mr. Seward, has peculiar qualifications for the special work—the negotiation of a new treaty with that country—which will devolve upon him. His career has been from the very outset marked by exceptional successes. He was born at Scituate, in Rhode Island, in January, 1829, and in September, 1845, entered Brown University, whence he graduated four years later with the highest honors of his Class. In 1851 he went to Europe, where he spent two years in study and travel, returning at the end of that time to accept the Chair of Modern Languages and Literature in the university of which he was a graduate, a position which he filled successfully for seven years. The Hon. Henry B. Anthony having been elected United States Senator, offered the editorial charge of his newspaper, the Providence Daily Journal, to Professor Angell, who, in 1860, assumed the duties of editor of that paper. After six years of journalistic labor he returned once more to academic life as President of the University of Vermont. The fortunes of the college were at a low ebb when he assumed its control, but under his skillful management it soon took high rank among the educational institutions of the country. In 1869, he declined the Presidency of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, but subsequently accepted it in 1871, and up to this time has discharged, with eminent success, the duties of the position. His withdrawal from educational pursuits will be seriously felt in that State and throughout the West, but his entrance upon ambassadorial labors will be a positive gain to the diplomatic service of the country, especially as he will represent us abroad not only with ability but with dignity and perfect cleanliness of life.



PROFESSOR J. B. ANGELL, NEWLY-APPOINTED MINISTER TO CHINA.

THE NEW HARLEM RIVER BRIDGE.

THE extension of the elevated railway system is making rapid progress. Among the works now in course of construction for facilitating travel is an iron drawbridge across the Harlem River, designed for the tracks of the West Side and Yonkers Railway. These tracks will extend from Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street to High Bridge, a distance of nearly a mile, connecting the Metropolitan "L" road with the New York City and Northern road, running from High Bridge to Brewster's Station, near Lake Mahopac. The bridge will be constructed of iron, and will be one of the largest drawbridges in the country. The draw will be 300 feet long and swing in the middle of the river. There will be two approaches—one on either side, 100 feet long, making the total length of the bridge proper 500 feet; but the entire length from Eighth Avenue to the opposite side of the river will be 1,600 feet. The structure will be composed of lattice and plate girders. There will be a double track, and the rails will be laid thirty-two feet above mean tide-water. The structure is to be twenty-six feet wide, with footwalks projecting six feet on either side. The work is going vigorously forward. Three engines and two steam pumps, with plenty of pile-drivers, are employed, in addition to a strong force of men. The bridge will cost about $400,000, and the contractors expect to finish it by the 1st of December.

Our illustrations show the bridge as it now appears in course of construction, and as it will be when completed. It may be stated in this connection that a Bill is now before Congress to open the Harlem River for deep sea navigation, from Randall's Island to the Hudson River, at a cost of $1,000,000, the entire work to be completed in three years.

THE BRIDGE, AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.

NEW YORK CITY.—CONSTRUCTING THE NEW BRIDGE OVER THE HARLEM RIVER, AT ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH STREET.

Digitized by Google

Russian Deportation.

BESIDES exiling several thousand Nihilists to Siberia every year, the Russian Government daily deports to the outlying provinces of the European parts of the empire, such as Archangel, Olonitz Oufa or Orenburg, individuals suspected of the revolutionary taint. In many cases the prisoner is taken to a particular district by a gendarme officer, and after having his name inscribed in the local passport register, in the presence of the police inspector or bailiff of the locality, is allowed to go away in peace; the only restriction placed upon him being to remain, until further orders, within the precincts of the province to which he has been deported. Sometimes the Government makes him a small allowance—just sufficient to keep body and soul together. In other instances he has to sustain himself as best he can, which is not a very easy matter in a region where labor is abundant and cheap, and intellectual work at a discount. The result of this is that the "administrative exiles," as they are called, frequently commit suicide to relieve themselves of their misery, or, if of hardier temperament, betake themselves to the road. An instance of this is reported in the Moscow Vedomosti, in which it is stated that a number of political prisoners in the province of Oufa recently committed a series of criminal offenses in order that their position might be improved by the shelter and warmth of prison, and the comfort of a regular supply of prison food.

BOOK NOTICE.

"HISTORIES," says Lord Bacon, "do rather set forth the pomp of business than the true and inward results thereof. But Lives, if they be well written, propounding to themselves a person to represent, in whose actions, both greater and smaller, public and private, have a commixture, must of necessity contain a more true, native and lively representation." Ohio has scored another success in the "Biographical Cyclopedia and Portrait Gallery of the State," just published by John C. Yorston & Co., of Cincinnati, a work whose literary and artistic merit, excellence of design, execution and finish, justly entitles it to take rank amongst the most perfect productions of this, or, indeed, of any other country. Of all species of literary composition, perhaps, biography is the most delightful; but biography has often been allotted to writers who seem very little acquainted with their task, or very negligent about the performance. To the sketches of Ohio men in this very complete work no such objection can be raised, since they are graphic, admirable in style, executed in the best possible taste, and absolute in their fidelity. "A true delineation of the smallest man," says Carlyle, "is capable of interesting the greatest man"; and the Messrs. Yorston, taking the "sage of Chelsea" at his word, have presented to the great men of America life-like portraits, in words as well as in steel engravings, of brothers who have "borne the heat and burden of the day," and who "made no outcry by the way." Ohio is to be congratulated upon a work at once valuable as a reliable State biographical history, and as a cherished addition to the library of every true American.

NEW MUSIC.

"MAY-BE-SO," words by Josephine Pollard, and "Harold on a Summer's Day," words by Louise Chandler Moulton, are the titles of two graceful songs by William Fullerton, Jr., recently published—the former, by the firm of E. Schuberth & Co., of New York; and the latter, by Chappell & Co., of London. The melodies in these songs are finent and attractive, while the piano accompaniments are written with taste and appropriateness. The composer has avoided the too frequent fault of striving to overwhelm the singer with an elaborate descriptive accompaniment. "Harold on a Summer's Day" was composed expressly for Mrs. Ronalds, who sang it before the Prince and Princess of Wales with such effect that the Prince made a special request for a copy of the song. Both compositions will commend themselves to lovers of refined, graceful melodies, and are well worthy of frequent hearing in the parlor and in the concert hall.

Exhibition at the Art Students' League.

THE monthly reception of the Art Students' League was rendered exceptionally brilliant by the exhibition of pictures from the easels of H. Humphrey Moore and Eastman Johnson. Mr. Moore sent only four pictures, but they were veritable gems from his treasure-casket—"Blindman's Buff," "After the Hunt," and two glittering studies of Moorish interiors. This gifted artist has made the Alhambra all his own, and we long for some page in the romantic history of that wondrous palace illuminated in the glowing colors so dazzling, yet so true, which come, as if by inspiration, from the brush of Mr. Moore. Mr. Johnson contributed sixty-six studies, all after his best manner, the much-admired "A Glass with the Squire" eliciting an unstinted praise from the assembled connoisseurs.

FUN.

YEARS ago people were gazing in wonder on their first gaslight. To-day they are gazing in wonder on their last gas bill.

ALL IN THE DAY'S WORK.—"Oh—a—James! You can take the dog out for a walk." "If you please, ma'am, the dog won't follow me!" "Then you must follow the dog, James!"

HOW ARE THE MIGHTY FALLEN!—Mistress (haughtily): "Has the General returned yet?" Page (with ill-concealed glee): "Oh, m'm, please, cook says she's just seen him slip down on a bit o' horange-peel."

THE CARDINAL VIRTUES.—Old Parson (who had once been curate in the parish): "How do you manage to get on in these bad times, Mr. Johnson?" Farmer—"Well, sir, about as bad as can be. Last year we lived on Faith; this year we're livin' in Hope; and next year I'm afraid we shall have to depend on Charity!"

AN American newspaper submits to its readers the following calculations respecting the number of apples that Adam and Eve ate. Some say Eve 8 (ate), and Adam 2,000, total 10; others Eve 8, and Adam 8, total 16; others say if Eve 8, and Adam 82, the total is 90; but if Eve 81, and Adam 82, the total is 163; if Eve 81, and Adam 812, the total is 893; if Eve 81 186 ate one first, and Adam 812, the total is 1,623; if Eve 814 Adam, and Adam 8124 Eve, the total is 8,938; if Eve 814 Adam, and Adam 81242 oolige Eve, the total is 82,006. Still wrong; Eve when she 81612 many, and probably felt sorry for it, so Adam in order to relieve her grief 812; therefore, if Adam 8181424 0fy Eve's depressed spirits, they both ate 81,826,864 apples.

PATRICK'S EXPERIENCE WITH THE ELEVATOR.—"Sez I, 'Is Misther Shmith in, surr?' Sez the man wid the soger cap, 'Will yez slip in?' So I slipe intil the closet, and all of a suddint he pulls at a rope, and, it's the trooth I'm tellin' yez, the walls of the building begin runnin' down cellar as though the divil was after them. 'Holly murther!' sez I, 'what'll become of Bridget and the childer which was left below there?' Sez the soger-cap man, 'Be aisy, surr; they'll be all right when yez come down.' 'Come down is it?' sez I; 'and is it no closet at all, but a bathenish balloon that yez got me in?' And with that the walls stopped stock still, and he opened the door, and there I was wid the roof just over me head! And that was what saved me from goin' up till the hivins entirely?"

WE have received from Messrs. Wm. E. Hooper & Sons, of Baltimore, Md., their price-list for 1880. The firm manufactures and deals in Twines, Nettings, Cordage and Woodbury Cotton Duck of every description. Dealers in such goods should communicate with this extensive firm, it being the largest in the line in this country.

SCROFULOUS swellings, carbuncles and boils, blotches, pimples and eruptions, enlarged glands, internal soreness, torpid liver, and general clogged condition of the system, all yield in due time to nature's sovereign remedy—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Sold around the world by druggists and chemists. Foreign trade supplied from London branch. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y., R. V. Pierce, President.

WEST BLUE MOUND, Wis., March 8th, 1879.
DR. R. V. PIERCE:
Dear Sir—Having suffered many weary months from liver complaint without relief, I was last Summer induced to try your Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets. At the time I was scarcely able to walk. Owing to their effect I commenced to improve rapidly and am now as well and strong as ever. I thank you from the depths of my heart for the good they have done me and wish you all success.
Yours truly,
MRS. S. STAGNER.

A MILD, healthful and thoroughly safe tonic, is at this season a prime necessity, even for many who enjoy ordinary good health. Such a stimulant is "THE AMERICA" Extra Dry Champagne of MESSRS. A. WERNER & Co., 308 Broadway, New York. Analyzed and commended by the highest medical authority, its claims are reinforced by the very best testimony, that of years of practical use and thorough satisfaction. It is a pure wine, and in its purity lies the secret of its success and popularity.

DR. ISABEL M. MITCHELL, 419 Arch Street, Philadelphia, has achieved wide reputation in her application of CURATIVE REMEDIES to a great variety of diseases. Her treatment is simple and direct, and intended to cure disease by attacking the cause without drugs. External and internal means are employed in baths and liquid ozone preparations, and she has many testimonials from responsible persons in all parts of the country who have been materially benefited by her specifics. Agents are given liberal terms.

THE ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, Broadway, New York, so long the leading hotel of the great city, fully maintains its high standard of excellence, and in comfort and luxury has no superior in this country or in Europe. Its location, for healthfulness and the convenience of travelers, is the very best. On account of its thorough good order, safety and superior rooms, it is especially adapted for families and ladies traveling without escort, who are treated with every respect and consideration. The proprietor, with his family, resides in the Hotel, giving to it his constant personal supervision; the result is that the ST. NICHOLAS is, in every respect, the Model Hotel.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE counteracts the immediate ill consequences of the use of tobacco.

HALFORD TABLE SAUCE.—A genuine relish exactly suited to all tastes and all conditions of people.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES," when allowed to dissolve in the mouth, have a direct influence on the inflamed parts, allaying Pulmonary Irritation, and giving relief in Coughs, Colds, and the various Throat troubles to which singers and public speakers are liable.

NOT a day passes but many people are killed or disabled by accidents. Insure in THE TRAVELERS.

To beautify and dress the hair and restore it to its natural color, and impart that beautiful gloss, etc., use MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Sold by Druggists.

THE ASBESTOS ROOFING is the only reliable substitute for tin; it costs only about one half as much, is fully as durable, is fire-proof, and can be easily applied by any one. H. W. JOHNS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, 87 Maiden Lane, New York, are the sole manufacturers.

Fever & Ague Remedy.
SURE CURE.
Price, 75c. Stamps received. Send for circular.
PODOLSKI, Druggist, cor. Sixth and Poplar Sts., Phila., Pa. Mention this paper.

CHEAP MUSIC

Just published—100 comic songs, with music	30c.
100 sentimental songs, with music	30c.
100 Ethiopian songs, with music	30c.
100 Scotch songs, with music	30c.
100 Irish songs, with music	30c.
100 old favorite songs, with music	30c.
Recollections of the "Pirates of Penzance"	40c.
Emma C. Thursby Waltzes (Beautiful Portrait on each title page)	50c.
Emma C. Thursby Lancers	50c.
Emma C. Thursby March	40c.
Emma C. Thursby Galop	40c.
Emma C. Thursby Schottische	40c.
Potpourri of the "Sea Cadet" (Royal Middy)	20c.
Potpourri of "Patience," 16 pages	20c.

Any of the above mailed on receipt of price.
HITCHCOCK'S MUSIC STORE, No. 32 Park Row, N. Y.

An Indispensable Work in every Library, School, Office, Counting-Room and Family.

NOW READY,
—AN—
Entirely New and Revised Edition
—OF—
LIPPINCOTT'S
Gazetteer of the World.
A COMPLETE PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER
—OR—
Geographical Dictionary of the World.
Containing Notices of OVER 125,000 PLACES
—WITH—
Recent and Authentic Information respecting the Countries, Islands, Rivers, Mountains, Cities, Towns, etc., in every portion of the Globe.
NEW EDITION.
Thoroughly Revised, Entirely Reconstructed, and Greatly Enlarged.
One Volume. Imperial Octavo. Embracing 2478 Pages. Bound in Library Sheep, $10; Half Turkey, $12; Half Russia, $12.
 For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.
Published by J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

UNITED STATES TYPE & ELECTROTYPE FOUNDRY
JAMES CONNOR'S SONS,
PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
28, 30 and 32 CENTRE STREET,
Bet. Reade and Duane Sts. New York.

J. & J. DOBSON,
Manufacturers and Retailers
OF CARPETS,
Offer an immense and elegant assortment of New and Desirable Styles of Wiltons, Axminsters, Velvets,
BRUSSELS, THREE-PLYS,
Ingrains, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths,
ETC., ETC.,
Including all popular varieties of Floor Coverings, at
UNUSUALLY LOW PRICES.
Special Inducements to Steamers, Churches and Hotels.
40 & 42 West 14th St., New York
(Near 6th Ave. Elevated R. R. Station).
JOHN VAN GAASBEEK, Manager.

TO THE PUBLIC.
BOKER'S BITTERS.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS
In accordance with the desire frequently expressed, both in the United States and abroad, these Bitters, so long and justly celebrated for their fineness as a cordial, and for their medicinal virtues against all diseases of, or arising from, the digestive organs, will henceforth be put up and sold not only in quart, but
ALSO IN PINT BOTTLES,
for medicinal, family, traveling, and other purposes. To be had at all the principal druggists', grocers', liquor-merchants', etc. L. FUNKE, Jr., Sole Agent, New York, 78 John Street. Post Office Box 1,029.

Frank Leslie's
SUNDAY MAGAZINE.
Each Number contains
128 PAGES QUARTO. 100 BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS.
Published on the 10th of every month. Annual subscription, $3. $1.50 will be received for six months; $1 will be received for four months. 25 cents per number, sent postpaid.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for March is a very interesting number of this attractive household monthly. The great variety of reading matter embraces tales, historical articles, sketches, poems, etc., which are both entertaining and instructive. $3 a year."—Christian Secretary, Hartford, Conn.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE comes again this month replete with excellent reading, and is profusely illustrated. Three dollars a year is a very low rate for the vast amount of valuable family reading, and hundreds of engravings this magazine contains."—Auburn (N. Y.) Auburnian.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE holds the position as the best magazine of its kind in this country, if not in the world. $3 yearly, 25 cents a number."—North Carolina Presbyterian.

"FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for the present month shows a large and varied table of contents, including many illustrations. It is one of the most acceptable periodicals that reach our table. 25 cts. single copy; $3 a year."—Hamilton (Can.) Christian Advertiser.

SEND 25 CENTS FOR A SPECIMEN COPY.
Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES,
COMPOSED OF THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN AND WHEAT-GERM.
Physicians have prescribed 200,000 packages with the best results in all forms of impaired vitality, mental exhaustion, or weakened digestion. It is the best preventive of Consumption and all diseases of debility. It gives strength, rest and sleep, by feeding the brain and nerves with their necessary food. For sale by druggists, or by mail, $1. F. CROSBY, 666 Sixth Ave., New York.

1854 THE ORIGINAL 1880
GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED AT
610 Chestnut St., Philad'a. 610
Are now GIVING AWAY to PURCHASERS of Books Gold Watches, Silk Dresses, Mantel Clocks, Silverware, Jewelry, and a large variety of useful and valuable articles—FREE! We sell at the LOWEST PRICES all the New and Standard Books in sets or single volumes, and give a Handsome Premium with each book.
☞ Pleasant and profitable employment for everybody. Send for our New Catalogue of Books and Gifts for 1880. Terms to agents and persons forming clubs.
C. M. GILBERT, President. PHILAD'A PREMIUM BOOK CO., 610 Chestnut St., Philad'a.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM
GOUT OR GRAVEL. Schlumberger is the only patentee in France. 6 A. Paris, 102 W. 14th St., N.Y., his only agent for the celebrated French Salicylates, which relieve at once, cure in four days, without dangerous consequences, their purity being controlled according to French laws by the Board of Pharmacy of Paris. Beware—The genuine has red seal and signature of agent on each box. $1, postpaid. Send stamp for pamphlet. Thousands of references.

CANDY
Send one, two, three, or five dollars for a sample box, by express, of the best Candies in America, put up elegantly and strictly pure. Refers to all Chicago. Address
C. F. GUNTHER,
Confectioner,
78 MADISON STREET, CHICAGO.

NEEDLES
10 Dozen for 25 Cents.
Including Darners, Worsted, Motto, Carpet, Yarn, Bodkins, Button Needles, etc. We pay postage. LONDON NEEDLE CO., 24 and 26 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Agents' Circular free.

Friedrichshall
BITTERWATER.
To be had of all Dealers in Mineral Waters.

Amusements.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE. THIRD WEEK.
RICE & NUNNEMAHKER, Lessees and Managers.
MATINEE at 2. EVENING at 8. Houses Crowded. Everybody Delighted with the great realistic home drama,
HEARTS OF OAK,
HEARTS OF OAK,
With its powerful cast, superb scenic effects, lovely music, etc.
Seats should be secured in advance to avoid the crowd at night.

BIJOU OPERA HOUSE, Broadway.
BIJOU OPERA HOUSE, NEAR 21ST ST.
FOSD & McCAULL.....Lessees and Managers.
Genuine and assured success of OPERA DE CAMERA,
AGES AGO, by GILBERT and CLAY, and
CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME,
by ROWE and CELLIER.
The box office for the sale of seats is open all day.
Performance commences every evening at 8:10. Saturday Matinee at 2 o'clock.

DALY'S NEW THEATRE, Broadway and Thirtieth St.
The only Theatre under the Management of MR. AUGUSTIN DALY.
Every Night at 8,
MR. AUGUSTIN DALY'S NEW PLAY,
THE WAY WE LIVE,
THE WAY WE LIVE,
THE WAY WE LIVE,
THE WAY WE LIVE,
THE WAY WE LIVE.
A COMEDY OF CONTEMPORANEOUS SOCIETY.
Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

STANDARD THEATRE, BROADWAY AND 33D ST.
WILLIAM HENDERSON....Proprietor and Manager.

PIXLEY	Fourth week and increasing success of Miss ANNIE PIXLEY ANNIE PIXLEY as M'LISS! M'LISS! CHILD OF THE SIERRAS, supported by J. K. McDONOUGH and ROB FULFORD'S Combination. Every evening at 8 SATURDAY MATINEE AT 1:30. SUNDAY EVENING NEXT, PROF. COOK'S Great Expose of SPIRITUALISM, Materialization and table-tipping exposed.	M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS
PIXLEY		M'LISS

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager.....MR. A. M. PALMER.
MONDAY, APRIL 12TH, will be produced, with all its beautiful original Scenery, Bartley Campbell's splendid American play,
MY PARTNER,
MY PARTNER,
MY PARTNER,
MY PARTNER,
MY PARTNER,
in which Mr. Louis Aldrich, Mr. Charles T. Parsloe, Mr. Frank Mordaunt, Mr. Harry Crisp, Mr. J. W. Hague, Miss Dora Goldthwaite, Miss Josephine Laurens, Miss Laura Thorpe and others of the original cast will appear.
Seats for MY PARTNER now on sale.

J. H. HAVERLY'S AMUSEMENT ENTERPRISES.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth St., New York.
"WIDOW BEDOTT."
HARRY MANN, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Propr & Mgr.
HAVERLY'S BROOKLYN THEATRE,
FANNY DAVENPORT.
CHAS. L. ANDREWS, Mgr. J. H. HAVERLY, Prop'r.
HAVERLY'S THEATRE,
Corner Dearborn and Monroe Streets, Chicago, Ill.,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor and Manager.
HAVERLY'S CHICAGO CHURCH CHOIR PINAFORE COMPANY, J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S JUVENILE PINAFORE COMPANY,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S UNITED MASTODON MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
HAVERLY'S GENUINE COLORED MINSTRELS,
J. H. HAVERLY, Proprietor.
Also controlling, at all times, a large additional number of Leading Attractions, and always ready to negotiate with Grand Opera, Stars (with or without company), Combinations and Amusement Enterprises generally.

PHOTO-PANORAMA | NEW YORK | BROOKLYN & VICINITY

An Album in Russia cloth cover, 12x4x7 inches wide, gotchic gold title, containing two accurate photo-views of New York and Brooklyn, taken from the two piers of the East River Bridge, showing the Great Bridge already finished, according to authentic plans. Length of Panorama, 6 feet 6 inches. By mail, in East coast, prepaid, to any part U. S., Canada, or Europe, for $1. (Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.) Refer by permission to the leading publishers of New York. NEW YORK PANORAMA CO., —Mention this paper.— 707 Broadway, New York.

DR. BROWNING'S

C. & C. CORDIAL

For Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Tickling or Dryness of the Throat, Sore Throat, Cold in the Head, Cold in the Bowels, Asthmatic Coughs, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Hoarseness, and Relief of Consumptives.

Dr. BROWNING is a regular graduate of medicine, a skillful pharmacist and a thorough chemist. His "C. & C." (Cough and Cold) CORDIAL is not the result of mere chance, but of long scientific research in chemistry and medicine, as is very plainly seen by the rapidity of its action and its unparalleled efficacy. The expense of its manufacture is at least five times as great as that of any other medicine upon the market, and yet it is sold at the exceedingly low price of 50c. Sample bottles (for a short time only), 25c. For sale by all druggists and by the proprietor,

W. C. BROWNING, M.D.,
1117 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

FREE BY MAIL.

12	Roses, all of the best named sorts, including Duchess of Edinburgh, Niphetos or Cornelia Cook,	$1.00
12	Greenhouse, including New Life and Happy Thought,	1.00
16	Cute Stones,	1.00
16	Gladiolus, all flowering bulbs,	1.00
8	Of each of the above two,	1.00
4	Palms, nice plants, all different,	1.00
12	Begonias, all different,	1.00
10	Ferns, all different,	1.00
6	Crotons, the best sorts for high colors,	1.00
12	New Fancy Coleus, all different,	1.00
6	Fancy Caladiums, in sorts,	1.00
6	Dahlias, in sorts,	1.00
24	Sorts of Annual Flower Seeds,	1.00
18	Sorts of Perennial and Greenhouse Seeds,	1.00

One $5.00 Collection of Fancy Plants for the Conservatory is unsurpassed.

To clubs we make special rates. 6 of the above collections for $25.00; All sent by mail. Send for Catalogue. R. P. CRITCHELL, 197 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

KNOW THYSELF.

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; Or, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail, postpaid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers, by permission, to JOS. S. FISHER, president; W. I. P. INGRAHAM, vice-president; W. FAINE, M.D.; C. S. GAUNTT, M.D.; H. J. DOUCET, M.D.; R. H. KLINE, M.D., J. R. HOLCOMB, M.D., N. R. LYNCH, M.D., and M. R. O'CONNELL, M.D., Faculty of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; also the Faculty of the American University of Philadelphia; also Hon. P. A. BESSELL, M.D., president of the National Medical Association.

Address, Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

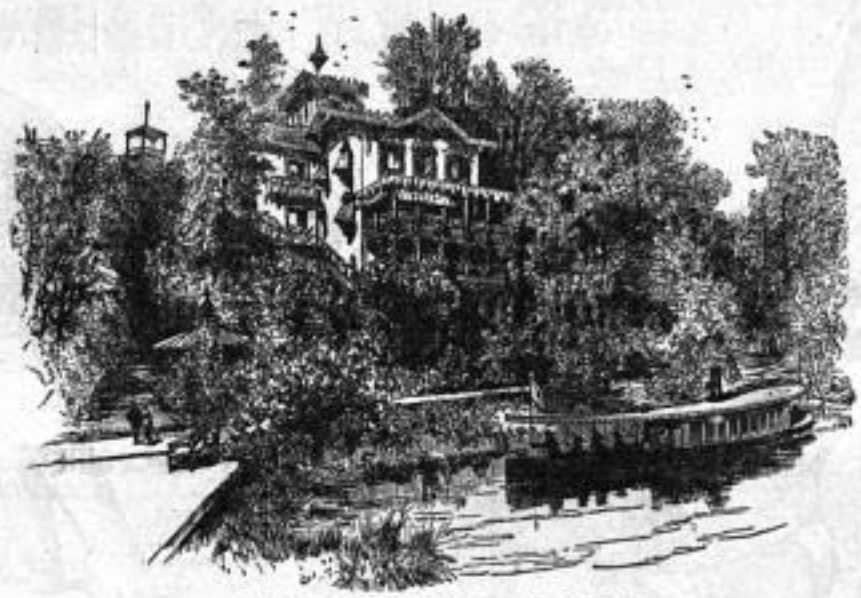
NATIONAL DISPENSARY

419 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

N. D. OZONIZED REMEDIES for all Diseases Permanently cures Paralysis, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Liver Complaint, Cancers and Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Tumors and all Blood Diseases, Nervousness, Baldness and Grayness, Tape Worm, etc. Our Practice is Eclectic. Patients can be treated successfully at their homes, if they will describe their symptoms carefully. Also, will be provided with Hygeian Board. Electricity a specialty. Ozone Inhalations. Agents wanted. ISABEL M. MITCHELL, M.D., Prop'r.

---

20 LOVELY ROSEBUD CHROMO CARDS, or 20 with Floral Motto, with name, 10 cts. NASSAU CARD CO., Nassau, N. Y.



MANMARIAL BALM restores and develops the bust. Warranted sure and safe. Price, $1. NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 24 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF | By sending 25 cents, with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive by return mail a correct picture of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address, W. FOX, Box 38, Fultonville, N. Y.

---

50 Elegant Scroll, Motto, Wreath, etc., Cards, all new styles, name on, 10c. CARD MILLS, Northford, Ct.

"INTERLAKEN" FOR SALE.

THE COUNTRY HOME OF
THE LATE FRANK LESLIE, ESQ.,

Consisting of 92 acres, situated on LAKE SARATOGA, and extending back to Lake Lonely.

The house contains twelve rooms, gas and water.

The stable, finished in fine woods, has six box-stalls.

Finely appointed billiard-room, and three handsomely furnished sleeping-rooms over coach-house.

Gardener's cottage.

Conservatories profusely stocked with rare plants.

The furniture, steam-yacht, sail and row boats, French omnibus, etc., will be sold with the place.

Apply to

HOMER MORGAN, 2 Pine Street; or
V. K. STEVENSON, 1 Pine St., and 35 E. 17th St.

H.W. JOHNS' ASBESTOS

LIQUID PAINTS,
ROOFING,
Boiler Coverings,

Steam Packing, Sheathings, Coatings, Cements, etc. Send for Descriptive Price List.

H. W. JOHNS M'F'G CO., 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Read the New Book, THE CANARY, MATING and BREEDING, Varieties, Care, Management, Diseases, etc. Handsomely bound and illustrated. For sale at all Book and Bird Stores. Price, 25c.; by mail, 28c. Published by the SINGER GRAVEL PAPER CO., 682 Hudson Street, N. Y.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Mme. Julian's Specific is the only reliable remedy for removing radically and permanently all annoying disfigurements from the Lips, Cheek, Chin, Brow, Arms, etc., without injuring the Skin; no acids used. Ladies may address or apply to Mme. JULIAN, No. 48 East 20th St., New York. Send postage for circular.

DE VENOGE & Cie. CHAMPAGNE EPERNAY.

The Purest Champagne imported in the United States.

L. DE VENOGE, General Agent,
37 South William Street, New York.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE | THE FAMILY WASH BLUE, For Sale by Grocers. D. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 223 N. Second St., Philadelphia.

Imitation Gold Watches.
$8, $10, $15, $20 and $25 each; Chains $2 to $12 to match. Jewelry of the same. Sent C.O.D., by Express. Send stamp for Illustrated Circular. COLLINS METAL WATCH FACTORY, 128 Broadway, N. Y. Box 3096.

---

50 Chromo, Snowflake and Lace Cards, with name, 10c. 40 all chromos, 15c. Star Printing Co., Northford, Ct.

KEEP'S SHIRTS,

Gloves, Umbrellas, Underwear, Etc.

SAMPLES AND CIRCULARS MAILED FREE.

KEEP MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
631, 633, 635, 637 Broadway, N. Y.

FINE TROUT TACKLE.
We offer a fine 3 Joint Fly Rod, 12-yard Brass Reel, 100 ft. Linen Line, 3 Flies, 3 Hooks to gut, and Leader, complete, by express for $5.00; by mail, postpaid, $5.50; sample Flies by mail, postpaid, 10c. each; per doz., $1.00. Complete Catalogue Free. PECK & SNYDER, Manufacturers, 124 and 126 Nassau St., N. Y.

YOUNG MEN

And Older People—We send on 30 DAYS' TRIAL our ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELTS, BANDS, Suspensories, Trusses, and other appliances, to those suffering from Nervousness, Nervous Debility, Weaknesses, or Lost Vitality, from any cause; or to those afflicted with Rheumatism, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Liver or Kidney Troubles, &c., or Ruptures. Speedy Cures Guaranteed. Send at once for our Illustrated Pamphlet. Address VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

SCHMITT & KOEHNE.

Central Park Brewery

AND

Bottling Company.

Brewery, Bottling Department and Office, 159—165 East Fifty-ninth Street. Ice-house and Rock-vaults, Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street, Avenue A and East River, N. Y.

BOHEMIAN and LAGER BEER.

The finest Beer for family use. The best Shipping Beer in bottles, warranted to keep in any climate for months and years.

SUFFERERS from NERVOUS DEBILITY, etc., can learn of a certain and speedy remedy, free. Address, DR. JAQUES & CO., 130 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

Dr. Clarke's PERIODICAL PILLS. | A Blessing to Womankind. Price $3 per box, by mail. DR. CLARKE MEDICINE CO., New York.

CARDS—10 Lily of the Valley, 10 Scroll, 10 Engraved, 10 Transparent, 1 Model Love Letter, 1 Card Case, Name on all, 15c. WEST & CO., Westville, Conn.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

---

18 Elegant New Style Chromo Cards, with name, 10 cts. postpaid. GEO. I. REED & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

---

50 Elegant Cards, New Chromo, Shells, Gilt-edge, etc. with name, 10c. G. A. SPRING, E. Northford, Ct.

---

40 ELEGANT CARDS, all Chromo, Motto and Glass name in gold and jet, 10c. West & Co., Westville, Ct.

---

75 gilt-edge, chromo, snowflake, glass, lace, &c., cards, with name, 10c. FRANKLIN PRINTING CO., Fair Haven, Ct.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address, P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell the NEW BOOK,

FARMING FOR PROFIT

TELLS HOW TO
Cultivate all the Farm Crops in the Best Manner; Breed, Feed and Care for Stock; Grow Fruit; Manage Farm Business; Make Happy Homes, and
How to Make Money on the Farm.
Every Farmer should have a copy. 800 Pages. 140 Illustrations. Send for circulars to
J. C. McCURDY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

AGENTS WANTED to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. New Price List. You double your money. Address, Dr. CHASE'S PRINTING HOUSE Ann Arbor, Mich

---

$350 A MONTH—AGENTS WANTED—75 best selling articles in the world; 1 sample free. Address Jay Bronson, Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS Catalogue free. $1 per day made easy. J. F. GAGE & CO., Boston, Mass.

EDUCATE Your Boys! Give them a Printing Press. All prices, from $1.50 up. Business Men do your own Printing. Economy is wealth. The best presses made by J. F. W. Dorman, Baltimore, Md. Price List Free.

RELIABLE.  DYKES' BEARD ELIXIR will, and will do it in the smoothest face, more than 50,000 young men ALREADY WEAR BEAUTY MOUSTACHE AND BEARD, using and these Unsolicited Testimonials. Each medical Device is effect. Perfect genuine guarantee paper with Elixir. Sent by mail, L. L. DYKES & CO., Sole Agts., Palestine, Ill.

---

40 PAGE BOOK OF WONDERS for a 3-cent stamp. Address, H. FOX & CO., 391 Canal St., N. Y.

Photos of Actresses 4 for 25c. Special subjects, 3 for 25c. Catalogue of Photos and Books, 5c. FRANK D. TOREY, 228 State St., Chicago.

Frank Leslie's

POPULAR MONTHLY.

The Best and Cheapest Magazine in America.

128 PAGES QUARTO. OVER 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Published on the 15th of each month. Price 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

THE POPULAR FAMILY JOURNAL.

Frank Leslie's

CHIMNEY CORNER.

A Constant Succession of New Literary and Artistic Attractions!

This favorite publication has, for the past fifteen years, continuously enlarged its popularity, and is now admitted to be the

LEADING LITERARY FAMILY JOURNAL.

It is the ONLY weekly that gives, with Healthy Fiction, Attractive Novels and Stories, Biography, Travels, Incidents of all Times and Countries, Foreign Manners and Customs, Essays, Well-chosen Matter for Young Readers, Examples for the Aspiring Youth of Both Sexes, Natural History in a popular form, the Wonders of Nature, Science, Art, and Human Ingenuity, Adventures with Wild Men and Beasts, Narratives of Daring and Peril, Social Hints, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner

Is thus, from week to week, a Library for a Household that forms a perfect museum of attractions, the illustrations being of the highest character.

Each Number contains sixteen pages, eight of which are embellished with beautiful engravings.

Published every Monday. For sale by all newsdealers. Price, single copies, 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4; three months, $1—postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

The Extraordinary & Startling Events of the Day Are vividly portrayed in the

NEW YORK

Illustrated Times.

PROMINENT EVENTS OF ROMANTIC INTEREST, DEEDS OF HEROISM, REMARKABLE ADVENTURES, ACCIDENTS, CRIMINALITIES, Etc., Etc.,
Are fully detailed in its columns.

All the Prominent Sporting Events of the Day, THEATRICAL NEWS, CRITICISMS, Are given, together with FAITHFUL PORTRAITS of PUBLIC NOTABILITIES, Etc., Etc.

Published every Friday. Price 10 cents a copy at all newsdealers'. Annual subscription, $4, postpaid.

Address, 55 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

How a rich criminal enjoys himself at the seaside, while

JUSTICE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The poor criminal is dragged to prison.

Persons at a distance should write for Samples and Directions for ordering

MEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF WIT AND WISDOM

Over One Thousand Royal Octavo Pages, nearly Ten Thousand Anecdotes and Illustrations of Life, Character, Humor and Pathos, in One Hundred Classifications,

Among which are found those of Clergymen, Physicians, Attorneys, Statesmen, etc. Amusing, Instructive and Religious. The cheapest, largest and best selling book ever published. Agents wanted. Exclusive territory given. For terms, circulars and territory, address the Publishers, BRADLEY & CO., 66 North Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Copies mailed on receipt of retail price, Three Dollars.

COLUMBIA BICYCLE

A practical road machine. Indorsed by the medical profession as the most healthful of out-door sports. Send 3c. stamp for 34-page catalogue with price list and full information, or 10 cts. for catalogue and copy of "The Bicycling World." THE POPE MFG. CO., 59 SUMMER St., Boston, Mass.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS

For QUEENSTOWN and LIVERPOOL.

NOTICE.—The steamers of this line take Lieutenant Maury's lane routes at all seasons of the year.

CITY OF RICHMOND.....Saturday, April 17, 5 P.M.
CITY OF CHESTER.....Thursday, April 22, 3 P.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Thursday, April 29, 9 A.M.
CITY OF BERLIN.....Saturday, May 8, 3 P.M.
CITY OF MONTREAL.....Thursday, May 13, 8 A.M.

From Pier 37, North River, foot of Charlton St.

Cabin, $80 and $100. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $28. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, state-rooms, smoking and bathrooms amidships.

These steamers do not carry cattle, sheep or pigs.

JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 31 and 33 Broadway, New York.
G. A. FAULK, 105 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia.
L. H. PALMER, 3 Old State House, Boston.
F. C. BROWN, 32 South Clark Street, Chicago.

GREAT CURIOSITY!

FOR SALE,

Price $2,500.

THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT
OF
Charles Dickens's

"CHRISTMAS CAROL."

The above Manuscript, and one other (which is already in America), are the only ones of this popular author that can ever come for sale, all the rest having been left to the Kensington Museum by Mr. Forster.

Address "SCROOGE," P. O. Box 4121, New York City.

A KEY THAT WILL WIND ANY WATCH AND NOT WEAR OUT.

SOLD by Watchmakers. By mail, 50 cents. Circulars free. J. BINGU & Co., 39 Dey St., N.Y.

THE Admiration
OF THE
WORLD.
Mrs. S. A. Allen's
WORLD'S Hair Restorer
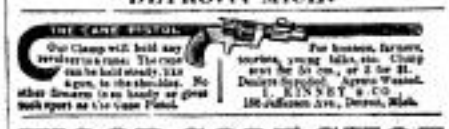
IS PERFECTION!

FOR its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and QUICKLY CHANGING GRAY OR WHITE HAIR to its natural youthful COLOR and BEAUTY.

IT IS NOT A DYE.

It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful color and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. DANDRUFF is quickly and permanently removed. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.



A Positive, Effectual and Radical Cure.

Sold by Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, $5.00.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Chest.

THE ONLY LUNG PAD CO.,
DETROIT, MICH.

One Clamp will hold any revolver in case. The case can be held steadily with 4 fingers, in the shoulder. No other fixtures in as handy or good with case as the Case Pistol.

For hunters, farmers, tourists, young folks, etc. Clamp sent for 50 cts., or 2 for $1. Descriptive Circular. Agents Wanted. I. KINNEY & CO., 156 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Mich.

WOOD SOLE SHOE

The cheapest, most durable, best-looking and thoroughly waterproof shoe made. For farmers and laborers it is without an equal. Wears three times as long as leather. Send stamp for circular & price list. CHAS. W. COPELAND, Sole Manufacturer, BOSTON, MASS.

ORGAN BEATTY PIANO

New ORGANS 13 Stops, 3 sets Golden Tongue Reeds, 5 Oct's, 2 Knee Swells, Walnut Case, warr'd 6 years, Stool & Book $98. New PIANOS, Stool, Cover & Book, $210 to $1,600. Before you buy be sure to write me. Illustrated Newspaper sent Free. Address DANL. F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

$3 Printing Press

Prints cards labels &c. (Self-inker $5) 18 larger sizes. For business or pleasure, young or old. Do your own advertising and printing. Catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., for 2 stamps. Kelsey & Co. Meriden, Conn.

FISHERMEN'S TWINES AND NETTING!

MANUFACTURED BY
WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md.
☞ Send for Price-List, naming your County and State.

N.Y. Central & Hudson River R.R.

THE BEST ROUTE EAST OR WEST.

Through Cars between New York or Boston and Chicago or St. Louis.

See NIAGARA FALLS, SARATOGA and the HUDSON.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

NICOLL THE TAILOR.

SPRING & SUMMER STYLES.
Diagonals, Worsteds, English Tweeds and Cassimeres,
MADE TO ORDER.

620 BROADWAY,
AND
139 to 151 Bowery, New York.

Samples and Rules for Self-Measurement
SENT BY MAIL.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.

Newspaper Advertising Bureau,

10 SPRUCE ST., NEW YORK.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO. conduct an agency for the reception of advertisements for American newspapers. The most complete establishment of the kind in the world.

Eight thousand newspapers are kept regularly on file, open to the inspection of customers.

Every advertisement is taken at the home price of the paper, without any additional charge or commission.

An advertiser, in dealing with the Agency, is saved trouble and correspondence, making one contract instead of a dozen, a hundred or a thousand.

A book of 120 pages, containing lists of best papers, largest circulations, religious, agricultural, class, political, daily and country papers, and all publications which are specially valuable to advertisers, with some information about prices, is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents.

Persons at a distance wishing to make contracts for advertising in any town, city, county, state or territory in the United States, or any portion of the Dominion of Canada, may send a concise statement of what they want, together with a copy of the ADVERTISEMENT they desire inserted, and will receive, by return mail, an estimate of the cost.

For such information and estimate there is no charge.

Orders are taken for a single paper as well as for a List; for a single dollar as readily as for a larger sum.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co. also publish the American Newspaper Directory (price $5), in which will be found a complete list of all American Newspapers, and a Gazetteer of the towns in which they are issued.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

Look Out for the New Story,

"A ROSE in THORNS,"

Which will begin in

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,

No. 780, ready April 26th.

SILKS

A. T. STEWART & CO.

HAVE JUST RECEIVED AN ELEGANT ASSORTMENT
OF

Real India Printed Corahs

SPECIALLY ADAPTED for SUMMER WEAR.

Also, a SUPERB COLLECTION of

LOUISINES

In BLACKS, COLORS and FANCIES.

And are OPENING DAILY the LATEST PARIS and LYONS

Novelties in Silks, Satins, Velvets & Grenadines,

MANY DESIGNS BEING EXCLUSIVE.

Broadway, 4th Ave., 9th & 10th Sts.

FIRM'S

Can for Explosive Fluids.

PATENTED JAN. 21st, 1879.
P. O. Box 4272, New York.

THE LATEST SPRING FASHIONS.

Beautiful Colored and Plain Fashion Plates
OF THE
PREVAILING PARISIAN STYLES OF LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S COSTUMES;
HOUSE, PROMENADE AND CARRIAGE TOILETS;
HATS, BONNETS, ETC., ETC.,
Imported monthly exclusively for

Frank Leslie's

LADY'S MAGAZINE

—AND—

Gazette of Fashion,

Universally regarded for nearly a quarter of a century as the

FASHION STANDARD OF AMERICA

The Reports of the various changes in the style of European toilets appear simultaneously with those in the Paris journals.

The Letter-press is of an exceedingly varied character, affording not only entertainment, but conveying much useful information. The Serial and Short Stories, Sketches, Poems, etc., are by celebrated writers, and beautifully illustrated. The cartoons are highly amusing, and the miscellany is abundant and interesting.

Each Number is Profusely Embellished.

Published on the 15th of every month. Annual subscription, $3.50, postpaid.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Frank Leslie's Budget.

96 QUARTO PAGES—NEARLY 100 HANDSOME ILLUSTRATIONS.

Annual subscription price, $1.50, postpaid. Send 15 cts. for a specimen copy.

Frank Leslie's Publishing House,
53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1880, by J. W. England, Assignee, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.—Entered at the Post Office, New York, N.Y., as Second-class Matter.

No. 1,283.—Vol. L. NEW YORK, MAY 1, 1880. [Price, with Supplement, 10 Cents. $5.00 Yearly. 13 Weeks, $1.00.

No. 3.—Hon. James G. Blaine, United States Senator from Maine.

Gallery of Possible Presidential Candidates.—See Page 134.

Digitized by Google

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
53, 55 & 57 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, MAY 1, 1880.

NOTICE.

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE,
53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, N. Y.
P. O. Box 4125.

NEW YORK, January 17th, 1880.

Under the assignment, and with the assent of Mrs. Miriam F. Leslie, the widow of Frank Leslie, and his sole legatee under his will, the publications of the House will be continued as heretofore under the management of the undersigned.

All communications should be addressed to 57 Park Place, or to P. O. Box 4125, New York City, N. Y.

J. W. ENGLAND, Assignee.

CAUTION.

Subscribers, in sending subscriptions for any of our publications, should be careful to direct their letters plainly to FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, 57 Park Place, New York, in order to insure their safe delivery.

RACE PROBLEMS.

IT is well, perhaps, that the people of the United States are sustained by a good degree of optimism in the presence of the social and political problems by which they are confronted from time to time. It was the custom of our elder statesmen to speak of slavery as the vulnus immedicabile, the incurable wound, of the Republic, and yet the popular faith in the "manifest destiny" of our land, as the land of liberty, was never extinguished even by this dark blot on our national escutcheon. It was a sublime faith in the auspicious star of our country which carried us through the dim eclipse of our late civil war, and on emerging from that conflict our statesmen bravely bent their backs to carry the heavier burdens imposed upon them by the problems of civil and social reconstruction at the South.

It greatly adds to the difficulty and complexity of some of the questions now pending before the American people that they are questions of race even more than questions of politics. And questions of race always lie deeper than questions of politics. The "negro question," for example, considered in its deep and comprehensive relations as a factor of American society and politics, is a much more intractable one than "the slavery question," for the slavery question simply lived and moved in the sphere of municipal and constitutional law, while the negro question plants its roots in the natural distinctions of color and race. With a change in the municipal and constitutional law of the country, the question of slavery, as a divisive element in our political history, has dropped as thoroughly and as finally from the forum of discussion as if we had been separated from it by the lapse of ages instead of a decade and a half. But "the negro question," as a mixed question of race and politics, is seen to be endowed with a vitality dependent on other than the conventional arrangements of men in the figure of civil society. And it is the permanent characteristics of race which gives to the question its strong hold on the passions and prejudices of men.

Nor is this the only question of the kind with which we are called to deal at the present time. Besides the negro question we have the "Indian question," and besides the Indian question we are threatened with still another question of race in the matter of "the Heathen Chinee," whose presence is such an offense to California Christians of the Kearney and Kalloch stripe.

The history of the Indian question places in our hand a useful standard by which to measure the difficulties of any problem which implicates itself in the antagonisms of races. The Indian question dates from the advent of the European colonists on the shores of America. Between the frontiersman and the savage we are as far to day from having discovered a modus vivendi as our Puritan ancestors were in the days of Governor Winslow and King Philip. And yet, as if to place clearly before our eyes the indestructibility as well as the complexity of any problem which involves a question of race, we are given to understand, on the best authorities at the present time, that the Indian race is not "dying out," as many suppose, but comprises to-day as large a population on American soil as when the continent was first discovered by the European white man. On this point the Bureau of Education at Washington has published some very suggestive statistics.

We have then, at present, three race problems which, in different degrees and in different stages of progress, have come to complicate the politics of the United States. One of these, the negro problem, is to-day the touchstone of parties in all that pertains to the wide sphere of emotional politics. It is this question which gives the greatest degree of compactness to political organization, which invests the decisions of our Federal judiciary with an interest that is partisan as well as legal, and which stirs in the bosoms of our colored fellow-citizens that undefined feeling of unrest which feeds the "exodus" movement, and which, with fear of change, is perplexing at once our politicians and our political economists. If the Chinese question has not yet come to plague the whole country, and is still a question of the Pacific States rather than of national politics, it is because the Chinese immigration has not yet assumed such proportions as to give it national significance; and if the Indian question has not yet come to mark a dividing line between the parties of the country, it is simply because the Indian is neither a voter, like the colored man, nor a laborer like the industrious and frugal Chinaman.

If questions of race are endowed with such a vitality in the history of nations, and if they are the fruitful sources of an angry controversy which admits of less mitigation than pure and simple political issues, it remains to inquire if there is any exit from the embarrassments of the race problems with which we are at present environed?

It is more than probable that these questions will long survive to test the spirit and temper of the American people. They are questions which do not admit of composition or postponement, and they are questions which cannot be settled except on the principles of equity and justice. Under the Constitution and laws of the land, the negro has to-day the same civil rights as the white man. Those rights must be protected and respected on a footing of perfect equality between the two races. The color line, as a line of partition between civil and political rights, has been legally abolished, and the sooner it is abolished as a line of partition between parties and their politics the better it will be for the parties and politics of the country. The Indian, too, has his rights—rights which have been secured by a thousand treaties only to be a thousand times violated by the cupidity of the white man—and the Indian question will not "down" until these rights are placed under the ægis of a jurisprudence which is no respecter of persons where the principles of right are concerned. And the "Heathen Chinee" has rights which have been placed under the sanction of treaties between the United States and China; and it is a satisfaction to know that those rights are protected by the Federal judiciary, even to the extent of saving the Chinaman's queue from mutilation and curtailment. A treaty is the supreme law of the land, and becomes the standard of justice for its beneficiaries, as truly and really as the statutes of the United States are standards of justice for our own citizens. The United States Circuit Court in California has just given a fresh authentication to this principle of constitutional law, which is also a principle of universal jurisprudence, and under this decision the illiberal provisions of the new California Constitution are declared to be null and void. This is not so much the triumph of "cheap Chinese labor" over the monopolists of the "Sand Lots," as it is a triumph of justice over demagogy, and a new vindication of man's universal right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

DIVERSITY IN AGRICULTURE.

THERE is reason to apprehend that the need of greater diversity in the agricultural pursuits of the United States will be demonstrated in a manner that will involve serious embarrassment to important interests. There is real danger of an overproduction of cotton, wheat and corn, followed by such a decline in values as will bankrupt their growers. It is not many years since that, on the Western prairies, corn was used as fuel, and it was mathematically demonstrated that, at the prices then current, it was cheaper than coal, while of its excellence for the purpose of fuel experience left no sort of doubt. Accounts from the South agree that the cultivation of cotton will be prosecuted this season with the greatest activity. Some estimates of the area to be planted make the increase twenty to thirty per cent. This seems almost incredible, and yet it is by no means impossible, for heretofore not more than one-tenth of the lands available for growing cotton have been planted. Our capacity for producing this staple may be estimated from this simple fact. But is it advisable to push it beyond the needs of the world and cause a decline in prices below the cost of growing? Such a course will prove disastrous.

